CITIZENS FOR A STRONG DEMOCRACY

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

Since the Second World War, the United States has led the world's nations to unprecedented levels of prosperity, security, and respect for human dignity. Those achievements have all reinforced one another, and they have required a continuous commitment. While still imperfect, they reflect the best overall social endeavors and outcomes that the world has ever seen. The imperfections do not merit, and they must not impel us to, a radical break from our continuing post-war vision.

Citizens for a Strong Democracy (CSD) is a group of voters dedicated to preserving America's constitutional democracy, fighting hatred and bigotry, and maintaining a secure and just international order. Our mission is to urge members of Congress to remain united in advancing those goals.

CSD is comprised of Republicans, Democrats and Independents – conservatives, centrists and progressives. It was conceived and formed directly after the presidential election in November 2016 by a small group of Americans in Southeastern Pennsylvania who for many years had devoted themselves to advancing human rights overseas, and who now saw a new need to safeguard human rights at home.

CSD seeks principally to monitor, and to address with members of Congress, the following actual and potential activities of high-level federal government officials – activities that CSD believes are abhorrent to and perilous for our nation's democracy, well-being, stability and global leadership:

Threatening Civil Liberties

1. Intimidating, restricting or categorically denigrating the mainstream press.
2. Influencing, disparaging or restricting our independent judiciary.
3. Restricting or discrediting the right of peaceable assembly and protest.
4. Denying the legitimacy of free and fair elections.
5. Inspiring or inciting civil violence.
6. Inspiring or inciting religious, racial, or gender-based bigotry.

Disdaining Empirical Truth

7. Routinely making false statements, exaggerations, or innuendos.
8. Disregarding the value of scientific endeavor, or selectively rejecting established scientific data for political purposes.

Behaving in an Authoritarian, Erratic, and Unsound Manner

9. Demagogic manipulation, power seizure. Playing to voters' fear and anger rather than a positive view of America and humanity; diverting attention from controversial activities by creating distractions elsewhere; gratuitously advancing grandiosity, nationalism, and a military and police culture; sowing paranoia and infighting within

- government staff; blaming scapegoats; planting supporters in crowds; quashing administrative dissent; avoiding personal transparency; or seizing extraordinary personal powers contrary to tradition or law.
10. Capriciousness. Ignoring the seriousness and complexities of presidential rhetoric and decision-making, thereby demeaning the office of the presidency, fomenting administrative chaos, jeopardizing international credibility and trust, and diminishing the reputation of America and democracy themselves.
  11. Narcissism, delusion, paranoia. Engaging in continuous self-praise; placing self-image and self-aggrandizement over rational governance and the interests of the nation; adhering to delusional beliefs; acting and communicating impulsively; placing relatives in positions of high authority regardless of qualifications, in part due to suspicions of others; threatening or punishing political enemies, or avenging perceived insults; engaging in sexual abuse or predation; refusing to acknowledge mistakes; engaging in extravagant personal spending with government funds; or otherwise identifying personal interests as national ones.

Jeopardizing National and International Security and Ideals

12. Inexplicably befriending, and tolerating the meddling in American governance by, foreign authoritarian regimes.
13. Endangering American diplomacy, alliances, national security or global stability through rash or ill-considered behavior, or by ignoring inputs from (or by attempting to influence the objective conclusions of) the diplomatic and national intelligence communities.
14. Withdrawing the United States from its international commitments to military security and universal human rights, or threatening to do so.

Engaging in or Facilitating Corruption

15. Compromising national interests for the benefit of, or failing to properly assert federal administrative authority over, the officials' business dealings, or otherwise abiding business conflicts of interest.
16. Engaging in cronyism by appointing supporters to high positions regardless of qualifications, or crony capitalism by assisting the businesses of political supporters.

Complicity

17. Failing to vocally condemn the above activities as practiced by others.

Those behaviors – which CSD has described in extensive detail in an accompanying document captioned "Specific Concerns" – are common hallmarks of dictatorial regimes overseas, both historically and currently. While America may not likely descend into dictatorship, we believe that special vigilance is required at this time to prevent a movement in that direction.

We thus urge our members of Congress not only to exercise their legislative votes in support of our country's democratic principles, and against any executive branch activities as enumerated above that contravene those principles, but to affirmatively lead their communities and their colleagues in Congress in calling out and opposing those activities.

We do not take positions on substantive policy issues on which mainstream voices may commonly disagree, such as governmental regulation, trade policies, tax policies, workers' rights, reproductive rights, gun owners' rights, health insurance, and the particulars of international diplomacy or national defense.

CITIZENS FOR A STRONG DEMOCRACY

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

As of March 20, 2017

Below is CSD's cumulative listing of President Donald Trump's statements and actions since the November 8, 2016 election that CSD believes violate its Statement of Principles for American democracy and national security. The numbers in the right-hand column correspond to the numerical designations of types of undemocratic behaviors set forth in the Statement of Principles, as revised to this date.

CSD does not suggest that all of the behaviors listed below are of equal concern; and some of the high level appointments noted below do or may have mitigating merits. In addition, some previous presidents from both parties likely demonstrated some of the same concerning behaviors (although not necessarily to the same degree). And Mr. Trump, or ranking members of his administration, have seemed to modify or moderate some troubling statements and actions from time to time. CSD is nevertheless disturbed by the overall patterns of behavior on the part of Mr. Trump, which separately and in the aggregate diverge from CSD's principles to a material extent.

Most of the data appearing below was drawn from the reporting by such mainstream press outlets as The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, The Washington Post, CNN and Politico.

The recitation below of false statements made by Mr. Trump is only partial. He has issued countless other falsehoods since the election, and they have been documented by the mainstream press. The Washington Post runs a cumulative listing of Mr. Trump's falsehoods since his inauguration, averaging several per day.

This document will appear highly partisan. It indeed is consistently critical of Mr. Trump, and it does not identify any counter-balancing strengths of his. But as CSD's Statement of Principles makes clear, for the most part the criticisms are not leveled at Mr. Trump's policy positions or those of his party; rather, mainly at what we believe is his alarming tendency toward reckless and authoritarian sympathies and behaviors, which we believe cannot be counter-balanced.

And finally, it is conceivable that this document contains occasional technical errors. We are not scholars or journalists – only women and men who read the news, believe in America, and have what we believe is a fair sense of both history and the present.

Note: CSD changed its recording format at the time of Mr. Trump's inauguration – from a thematic to a sequential presentation – so as to facilitate its own record-keeping and to simplify this document for readers, in the face of an ever greater volume of concerns arising since the inauguration.

I. Between the Election and the Inauguration

Action	Type of Un-Democratic Behavior, from Statement of Principles
A. Democracy and Freedom
Continuously and categorically discrediting the mainstream media.	1
Falsely tweeting that millions of votes for Hillary Clinton were fraudulent.	4, 7, 11
Falsely stating that Mr. Trump won the election by a "massive landslide ... in the Electoral College," and that the Democrats "suffered one of the greatest defeats in the history of politics in this country."	7, 11
Tweeting that Mr. Trump's "many enemies and those who have fought [him] and lost so badly just don't know what to do."	7, 11
Tweeting that flag-burners should be deported or imprisoned. (Flag-burning is reprehensible, but it has been acknowledged as Constitutionally protected speech by the U.S Supreme Court.)	3
Promoting a personality cult, through victory rallies and frequent tweets post-election but prior to inauguration..	9, 11
Encouraging a large contingent of bikers to attend the inauguration ceremony and (implicitly) to intimidate protesters.	3, 5, 9
Failing to condemn fake news on political topics, including the false conspiracy theory that led to the attack on the DC pizzeria on 12-4-16.	17 (5, 7)

Delivering vengeful, irrational and undignified attacks on the character and competence of individuals who had criticized Mr. Trump: Sen. Schumer, Sen. Reed, Jill Stein, Hillary Clinton, CNN's reporter Jeff Zeleny, Vanity Fair's Graydon Carter, Meryl Streep, Chuck Jones (Carrier's local steel union president), the cast of "Hamilton," and civil rights legend John Lewis.	10, 11
Claiming that the exposure of adviser Monica Crowley's massive plagiarism was politically motivated.	7, 11
Refusing to take a question from CNN's prominent reporter Jim Acosta at Mr. Trump's January 11, 2017 press conference (his first in six months), while blaming CNN for "fake news."	1, 10, 11
Packing that same press conference with cheering supporters.	1, 9
Making countless untrue statements and innuendos in that same press conference, as itemized by the Washington Post on the following day.	7
Asserting in that same press conference that Mr. Trump could lawfully and capably run both the country and his business at the same time if he chose to.	10, 11
Determining to continue to use a personal Twitter account as president to disseminate provocative and often ill-considered content.	9, 10, 11
Failing to denounce new waves of Islamophobic hate crimes and bomb threats to synagogues.	17 (6)
Publicly humiliating Al Gore and Mitt Romney, by parading them through the lobby of Trump Tower, and then apparently ignoring what they had to offer.	11
Conducting the post-election transition in a divisive rather than unifying manner.	9, 10
Casually articulating and then often modifying positions on major policy issues.	10
Hinting at the militarization of our civilian government, by appointing multiple career military officers to high civilian positions (including within the Cabinet and the National Security Council), considering (at least briefly), selecting most of the inaugural parade's contingents from among military-related, police and border security organizations, and contemplating the inclusion of heavy military ordinance in the inaugural parade.	9

B. Diplomacy and Security
Long denying that the Russian government had attempted to influence the presidential election, until the national security briefing on that topic occurred in early January; continued denying thereafter that Russia intended to help Mr. Trump win the election; continued praising the Russian interference for exposing Democratic Party confidences; characterizing the intelligence community as antagonistic to Mr. Trump personally and as using tactics comparable to those used in Nazi Germany; originally blaming the Clinton campaign and Democrats for the allegations against Russia; falsely tweeting that the Obama administration had taken no action against Russia prior to the election; originally trusting Julian Assange's and Vladimir Putin's views over those of the FBI and CIA; insinuating that CIA director John Brennan had leaked to the press certain classified but unverified material concerning Mr. Trump's ties to Russia; and in general being willing to excoriate everyone, on anything – from our intelligence agencies to foreign allies to popular entertainers to the mainstream press – except for Vladimir Putin and Russia.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13
Instructing or permitting Michael Flynn (National Security Advisor) to secretly speak to Russia's ambassador about sanctions recently imposed by President Obama, in violation of protocol and in possible violation of the Logan Act that bars unauthorized U.S. citizens from negotiating with foreign governments with which the U.S. has disputes. (See also the February 2017 entries below regarding the subsequent revelation of Mr. Flynn's actions.)	17 (12)
Instructing or permitting White House Adviser Anthony Scaramucci to meet privately with a sanctioned Russian investment fund manager prior to the inauguration.	17 (12)
Abiding or encouraging fundamental differences with senior advisors on key international issues, such that our global strategies and operations could become disadvantaged or even dysfunctional, including in the event of an international crisis.	9, 10, 13
Foregoing daily CIA intelligence briefings, while categorically disparaging the CIA's integrity and capability.	7, 9, 10, 11, 13

Attempting to influence American foreign policy before being sworn in as President and without having been prepared or monitored by the State Department or other pertinent agencies, via discussions with leaders of Egypt, Taiwan and Japan, and via tweets and interviews on subjects such as Islamic terrorism, our nuclear weapons program, Israeli settlement policies, the Chinese seizure of an American drone, America's traditional "one-China" policy, North Korea's nuclear ambitions, the worth and future of NATO and the EU, Germany's refugee policy, the comparative trustworthiness of Angela Merkel and Vladimir Putin, Russian sanctions, and the strength of the dollar.	9, 13, 14
Tweeting that the British government should name Brexit leader Nigel Farage as Ambassador to the U.N.	10, 13
Abruptly firing all U.S. ambassadors before naming their replacements, including for key countries.	9, 10, 11, 13
Proposing to broadly purge the national intelligence agencies' respective headquarters of politically distasteful staff.	9, 10, 11, 13
Tweeting from an un-secure electronic device.	10, 13
Confusing the identities of two top EU diplomats when reporting pertinent conversations to the press.	10, 13
C. Free Enterprise
Strong-arming individual businesses to comply with Mr. Trump's trade agenda. (Carrier, Boeing, Lockheed-Martin, Ford, GM, Toyota, BMW.)	9
Inflating the number of jobs Mr. Trump had created or saved through his one-off interventions. (Sprint, Carrier, Ford.)	7
Proposing a weaker dollar, contrary to the presidential practice of not advocating on such matters, and with the immediate result of roiling currency markets.	9, 10

D. Ethics
Refusing to acknowledge and crisply resolve vast foreign and domestic business conflicts of interest. The conflicts include Mr. Trump having partners, lenders and investors which are closely associated with foreign governments that have sensitive relations with the U.S.; doing ongoing hotel and golf club business in countries having sensitive relations with the U.S.; selling and leasing rooms and other space in the U.S. to wealthy and well-connected individuals and enterprises from the U.S. and such countries; promoting the Trump brand by hosting foreign dignitaries at Mr. Trump's properties; implicitly and explicitly associating his company's business development activities with the power of the presidential office; and leasing a hotel building from the U.S. government in Washington, D.C. Concerns include Mr. Trump (whether during or after his presidency) bestowing political or diplomatic favors in exchange for hotel patronage , commercial payments or other transactional concessions; bestowing political or diplomatic favor so as to retain and grow client goodwill; and extracting concessions from the U.S. landlord relative to the administration of the Washington, D.C. hotel lease. In addition to the direct conflicts, Mr. Trump and his family can be expected to profit handsomely – for possibly decades or generations to come – from the enhancement of the Trump brand associated with the Trump presidency, and from the enormous political connections that that presidency will have generated for them. Shortly after the election, Mr. Trump boasted that "the brand is certainly a hotter brand than it was before." In late January, a Trump Organization executive would say that the company could open new Trump-branded hotels in up to 26 large U.S. cities, a multiple of the current five such hotels. On February 10, the New York Times would report that the Trump business is launching a new hotel brand, Scion, which it hopes will develop about 30 hotels around the U.S. All new hotels would require approvals from local governments, many of which may rely on federal aid. On February 6, Melania Trump would file a defamation suit claiming $150,000,000 in damages to her own hoped-for brand (for apparel, accessories, shoes, jewelry, cosmetics, hair care, skin care and fragrance), based on the unique business opportunity that being married to the president had presented her.	9, 15

Continuing to refuse to disclose tax returns. And stating in a January 11, 2017 press conference that Mr. Trump didn't have to disclose because he had won the election -- implying (as President Nixon had done) that the president is beyond the reach of ethics and the law.	9, 15
Attempting to place cabinet nominees before the Senate for approval before allowing the Office of Government Ethics to fully vet them for conflicts of interest.	9, 10, 17 (15)
Continuing to refuse to disclose complete and credible medical records.	9
Falsely tweeting that the Trump Foundation had given 100% of its funds to charities, thus disregarding its documented self-dealing.	7
E. Cronyism and Crony Capitalism.
Rewarding ultra-wealthy individuals, large campaign donors, Trump Foundation donors, family members, and other supporters with high level administrative positions, sometimes regardless of qualifications, sometimes with apparent conflicts of interest relative to their respective administrative portfolios, and sometimes (like Mr. Trump himself) with reputations for engaging in brutal business practices. Prizder (Labor secretary), DeVos (Education secretary), Ricketts (Deputy Commerce secretary), Mnuchin (Treasury secretary), Ross (Commerce secretary), McMahon (Small Business administrator), Carson (HUD secretary), Kushner (White House adviser and son-in-law), Scaramucci (White House adviser), others.	16
Including multiple family members – who shared family business interests with Mr. Trump but had no pertinent qualifications or security clearances – in high level international meetings and disclosing high level information to them.	10, 11, 15, 16
Publicly promoting the retail brand of L.L. Bean after receiving campaign contributions from one of its key shareholders.	16
Soliciting and accepting unprecedented levels of corporate contributions for the inauguration festivities, in explicit exchange for access to Mr. Trump and other administration officials.	16
G. Through High Level Appointments
Rashness: Michael Flynn (National Security Advisor). Flynn is known for anti-Muslim rhetoric, spreading conspiracy theories about the Clintons, Benghazi and Sharia law, and hot-headed intemperance.	17 (6, 7, 13)

Bigotry: Stephen Bannon (chief strategist and senior counselor), Ben Carson (HUD secretary), and Jeff Sessions (Attorney General). Bannon officiated at Breitbart News, a racist publication; Carson repeatedly denigrated Muslims during the campaign; Sessions was once denied a federal judgeship for having made racist remarks.	17 (6)
Foreign Conflicts of Interest: Rex Tillerson (Secretary of State), Michael Flynn (National Security Advisor), Jared Kushner (White House adviser and son-in-law). Tillerson was professionally friendly with Vladimir Putin and Russian oligarch Igor Sechin (Rosneft chief), and will likely remain at least psychologically, if not professionally, tied to Exxon's interests in Russia despite divesting his Exxon interests. Before and during the campaign, Flynn was a paid lobbyist for a firm closely allied with the Turkish government, and (it would be publicly revealed in March 2012, well after the campaign) for the Turkish government itself; also, he was paid to appear regularly on Russia Today, a state-sponsored, English-language propaganda unit, as well as at an RT celebration in Moscow. The real estate and other investments of Kushner and his family, and their resulting ability to access business and governmental leaders, span the globe.	17 (12, 15)
Domestic Conflicts of Interest: Cong. Tom Price, nominee for HHS secretary, was alleged to have purchased stock in a company just days before introducing legislation that would have directly benefited it; to have received campaign money from that company's PAC after the legislation was introduced; and to have traded in the stock of dozens of companies while sponsoring or co-sponsoring legislation involving them. Sonny Perdue, nominee for Agriculture secretary, was the subject of numerous ethics complaints while serving as governor of Georgia, mainly regarding business conflicts of interest; and in two instances the Georgia State Ethics Commission fined him – unusual with respect to a sitting governor there.	17 (15)
Authoritarian Behavior: Appointing son-in-law Jared Kushner, who had no relevant experience, as a senior White House advisor, arguably in violation of pertinent anti-nepotism laws.	11

Irregularities in Confirmation Processes: Many top appointees contributed to the political campaigns of Senators who would conduct their confirmation hearings: Sessions, Price, Pompeo, Mulvany, Coats, DeVos, McMahon. Several others perjured themselves during sworn testimony before the confirmation committees. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson falsely denied that Exxon had lobbied the federal government to reject sanctions against Russia. EPA administrator Scott Pruitt falsely denied having used a private email account for official business while serving as Oklahoma's attorney general. Treasury secretary Steven Mnuchin initially hid $100 million in real estate holdings and in a Cayman Islands tax shelter enterprise from the confirmation panel, and he spoke untruthfully about his mortgage company's practice of "robo-signing" mortgage foreclosure documents. HHS secretary Tom Price spoke untruthfully about his trading in the stock of a biomedical company. Several other nominees were found during the confirmation process to have acted illegally in the past. Labor secretary Andrew Puzder (who was later to withdraw from consideration for unrelated reasons) for hiring an undocumented household worker, and budget director Mick Mulvaney for having failed to pay nanny tax – offenses that had sunk presidential nominations in previous decades. Army secretary nominee Vincent Viola and (in February, after the inauguration) Navy secretary nominee Philip Bilden withdrew themselves from consideration once a serious examination of their backgrounds and conflicts of interest began. A February 10 New York Times article would reveal that Mr. Trump simply had foregone the usual vetting process before putting forth most or all of his nominations.	10, 17 (7, 15, 16)
Human Rights Abuse Denial: Rex Tillerson refused to acknowledge during his confirmation hearing for Secretary of State that well-documented human rights abuses exist in Russia, Saudi Arabia and the Philippines.	17 (14)
Science Denial: Vaccination: Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. Climate change (although several, for the first time, moderated their science denial during their confirmation hearings) : Scott Pruitt (EPA secretary), Ryan Zinke (Interior secretary), Rick Perry (Energy secretary), Ben Carson (HUD secretary), Mike Pompeo (CIA director), Jeff Sessions (Attorney General), Tom Price (HHS secretary), Sonny Perdue (Agriculture secretary), Mick Mulvaney (director of Office of Management of the Budget).	17 (9)

Spousal Abuse: Both chief strategist Stephen Bannon and labor secretary Andrew Puzder (later to withdraw), like Mr. Trump himself, had been accused of spousal abuse in court documents.		17 (11)

II. During and Since the Inauguration

1-19-17	Hotel promotion. Both Mr. Trump and press secretary Sean Spicer praised the beauty of the Trump International Hotel in Washington, and encouraged inauguration travelers to patronize it.	10, 11, 15
1-19-17	Unknown Soldier ceremony boasts. At the traditional, pre-inauguration laying of the wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, Mr. Trump boasted of the large attendance at the event, rather than meditating on the sacrifice of American soldiers.	10, 11
1-20-17	Inauguration: rejection of global responsibilities. In his inauguration address, Mr. Trump expressly and categorically rejected America's responsibilities to other peoples and nations.	14
1-20-17	Inauguration: demagoguery. In his inauguration address, Mr. Trump stoked popular fear, anger, and perceptions of rampant crime, unemployment, privation and powerless – i.e., implicitly, he stoked jealousy, paranoia, and potential scapegoating – all in the name of extreme nationalism; and deploying factual exaggerations in doing so.	7, 9
1-20-17	Inauguration: claim to rule. In his inauguration address, Mr. Trump declared that "the people" would now "rule," through him, even though only a minority of "the people" had voted for him, and many with strong misgivings. (CSD's concerns include Mr. Trump's delegitimizing the majority of voters and all opposition, as well as implying that the people's will would be manifested within his every personal whim.	9, 11
1-20-17	Inauguration: militarism. In his inauguration address, Mr. Trump excoriated civilian government while belligerently promoting the military and law enforcement authorities as America's protectors.	9

1-20-17	Rush to denial of environmental science. Immediately post-inauguration, Mr. Trump's staff changed the White House Web site to delete climate change and to list law and order among the administration's principal themes.	8, 9
1-20-17	Imperial White House. On inauguration day, Mr. Trump's staff installed imperial gold-colored curtains in the Oval Office.	9, 11
1-20-17	Festive attacks. At an inaugural ball, Mr. Trump attacked his "enemies" and the "dishonest press."	1, 10, 11
1-20-17	Festive boasts. At an inaugural ball, Mr. Trump boasted about the many service men and women who had voted for him, rather than praising them for their service and sacrifice.	9, 11
1-20-17	Festive dancing. At an inaugural ball, Mr. Trump led the first dance with the song, "My Way."	11
1-20/21-17	Festive self-regard. Overall, throughout the inaugural weekend, Mr. Trump engaged in non-stop self-promotion (as opposed to the more typical presidential expressions of gratitude and humility on that occasion) – on topics such as crowd size, TV ratings, supportive voters within the CIA staff, the beauty of the Trump International Hotel, the IQ scores of his cabinet appointees, and his electoral triumph contrary to statisticians' predictions.	11
1-21-17	Wishful war crimes. Mr. Trump reiterated to the CIA a campaign statement that the U.S. should have seized and exploited Iraqi oil during its occupation, contrary to international law.	10, 13, 14
1-21-17	Inauguration crowd size claim. Mr. Trump falsely said that the media had intentionally understated the popular attendance at his inauguration; and he said that the media would "pay a big price" for that. (Press Secretary Sean Spicer then joined in the allegation for several days.)	1, 7
1-21-17	Falsehood re media. Mr. Trump falsely stated to the CIA that the press had concocted his previous "feud" with the CIA.	1, 7

1-21-17	Boasts at the CIA Memorial Wall. During the CIA meeting, before a wall honoring the CIA's fallen, Mr. Trump extolled his popularity, fame and intellect rather than the service and sacrifice of CIA staff.	10, 11
1-23-17	Presidential "sacrifice." Press secretary Sean Spicer, possibly at the instance of Mr. Trump, stated that Mr. Trump had made a "sacrifice" in "leaving" his business to become President of the United States. (In fact (1) few people on the planet would consider it a sacrifice to serve as President of the United States, (2) Mr. Trump has not in fact left and has vowed not to leave his business, and (3) Mr. Trump's business is likely, whether sooner or later, to grow materially as a direct consequence of his having served as president.)	7, 11
1-23-17	Fraudulent voting claim. Mr. Trump reiterated, in a private session with Capitol Hill leaders, his post-election canard that 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 "illegals" (a derogatory term) voted for Hillary Clinton and thus cost him the popular vote by way of fraud.	4, 6, 7, 11
1-23-17	Government defense of private lawsuit. Mr. Trump directed that the Justice Department, at the taxpayers' expense and with the full weight of the United States' government's authority and resources, defend a lawsuit brought against him personally which alleged that his business dealings presented conflicts of interest and thus violated the Constitution. (Using government resources to defend a personal lawsuit would itself appear to be a conflict of interest and an abuse of power.)	9, 11, 15
1-24-17	Fraudulent voting claim reaffirmed. Press secretary Sean Spicer said repeatedly that Mr. Trump genuinely believes that 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 "illegals" voted for Hillary Clinton, even without supporting evidence. (If Mr. Trump's claim is thus not an intentional falsehood, it would appear to be delusional – a different hallmark of some authoritarian leaders, which not only corrupts democracy but can drive a nation to ruin. The alternative possibility of delusion is thus raised relative to some or all of the other statements described in this document as intentional falsehoods.)	10, 11
1-25-17	Bannon on the press. Chief strategist Stephen Bannon labeled the media "the opposition party" and said that it should "keep its mouth shut."	1

1-25-17	State Department purge. Mr. Trump's administration abruptly purged much of the State Department's senior leadership, without notice and without having identified replacements for them.	9, 10, 11, 13
1-25-17	Call for voter fraud investigation. Mr. Trump called for a major investigation of voter fraud, despite no evidence that fraud occurred to any material extent in this or any other recent state or national election, with the possible intent of encouraging voter suppression efforts. (On February 1, Politico would release a new poll showing that 25% of voters had been convinced of those baseless allegations by Mr. Trump.)	4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
1-25-17	Draft travel ban. Mr. Trump released a draft directive that individuals from certain Muslim countries be barred from the U.S., whether as refugees or through visas, thus risking radical Islamist propaganda gains.	6, 13, 14
1-25-17	Refugee curtailment. Mr. Trump announced his intention to radically curtail our nation's refugee program in general.	14
1-25-17	Torture proposal. Mr. Trump reiterated to ABC news his campaign statement that he would like to resume waterboarding as an interrogation technique, contrary to international law.	13, 14
1-25-17	Mar-a-Lago windfall. CNBC reported that Mr. Trump had doubled the membership fees for his Mar-a-Lago club in Palm Beach since being elected president.	15
1-25-17	Stock market commentary. Mr. Trump tweeted positively about the stock market's record-breaking close, contrary to prior presidential policy of not commenting on short-term market moves.	10
1-25-17	Chicago military threat. Mr. Trump tweeted an ambiguous and possibly unconstitutional threat to send federal forces into Chicago to contain street violence there.	9, 10
1-25-17	Un-vetted immigration orders. Mr. Trump issued a series of provocative and disruptive executive orders regarding immigration (the Mexican wall, sanctuary cities, increased law enforcement) without having consulted with or informed members of his own party in Congress.	9, 10

1-25-17	Draft of UN cuts. Mr. Trump released a draft executive order to substantially de-fund various United Nations operations, including peace-keeping, and to consider withdrawing from various multilateral treaties.	13, 14
1-26-17	Mexican consternation. Mr. Trump reiterated his insistence that Mexico pay for the proposed border wall, whereupon Mexico's president cancelled a meeting with Mr. Trump, whereupon Mr. Trump publicly proposed a 20% import tax, then promptly walked back that proposal due to Republican backlash.	10, 13, 14
1-26-17	Untrue crime statistics (Philadelphia). Mr. Trump falsely stated that homicides in Philadelphia were steadily increasing.	6, 7
1-27-17	Travel bans issued. Without cabinet or Congressional consultation, Mr. Trump issued the previously proposed travel directive, which radically and immediately curtailed refugee admissions generally, refugee admissions from Syria specifically, and the issuance of visas to citizens of majority Muslim countries – thus creating humanitarian havoc, angering Muslim allies, threatening to undo years of trust-building efforts with the Muslim American community, and enhancing the lure of radical Islamist hatred toward the U.S. overseas. In the directive, exceptions to the ban were made for Christians and other religious minorities. (On January 30, the Washington Post would report that jihadists rejoiced in their propaganda windfall.) Within days, several Muslim American organizations that had been awarded federal grants to fight extremism here would reject the grant money and forego the federal program. On February 3, the Wall Street Journal would report that the executive order was now causing millions of Middle Eastern Christians to fear for their safety. On February 4 the New York Times would report that many Iraqi soldiers fighting ISIS alongside American troops in the Mosul offensive felt insulted and disheartened by the executive order. Within a week after the issuance of the executive order, over a dozen American courts would issue their own orders to the effect that the executive order was unconstitutional and should not be enforced.	6, 10, 13, 14

1-27-17	Inaccuracies re refugees. In connection with that order, Mr. Trump falsely stated that under the previous administration it was almost impossible for Christians to be admitted to the U.S. as refugees, when in fact almost as many Christians as Muslims had been admitted in 2016.	7
1-27-17	Travel ban conflicts of interest. The travel ban did not pertain to any Muslim-majority countries in which Mr. Trump had business interests, even though some of those countries have been the source of many international terrorists.	15
1-27-17	Flurry of inexpert orders. Mr. Trump ended a week of creating extraordinary upheaval and uncertainty within the government by issuing major directives on healthcare, trade, abortion, the environment, immigration, national security, housing and other areas, all without having studied their implications, consulted the pertinent implementing agencies or Congress, or coordinated internal communications among senior White House staff. The decisions appear to have been made by only a handful of men, none with previous government experience.	9, 10
1-27-17	Fraudulent voting – the source. Mr. Trump, in a tweet, cited Gregg Phillips, a discredited conspiracy theorist, as his source for allegations that over 3,000,000 votes for Hillary Clinton were fraudulent.	4, 7, 10, 11
1-27-17	Attacking the media. Mr. Trump, echoing chief strategist Stephen Bannon, referred to the media as "the opposition party."	1
1-28-17	Untruth about The New York Times. Mr. Trump repeated his falsehood that his nemesis, The New York Times, is losing readership, when in fact subscriptions had reached an all-time high.	1, 7
1-28-17	Bannon to the National Security Council. Mr. Trump added chief strategist Stephen Bannon (a political operative) to the National Security Council while demoting two of the NSC's most important security experts – the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the director of national intelligence.	9, 10, 13

1-28-17	Border patrol defiance of court orders. Border patrol officials defied court orders to release, or to allow lawyers to visit, travelers who had been detained at several airports in connection with Mr. Trump's sudden travel bans – possibly at the direction of the White House.	17 (2)
1-28-17	Negotiation with information. In a phone call with Vladimir Putin, Mr. Trump criticized a current nuclear arms reduction treaty without being aware of its contents. (Details of the conversation would emerge on February 9.)	10, 13, 14
1-29-17	Attack on The New York Times. Mr. Trump tweeted that the New York Times traffics in "fake news."	1, 7
1-30-17	Attack on Sen. Schumer. Mr. Trump mocked Senator Chuck Schumer for choking back tears over the plight of refugees and others affected by Mr. Trump's travel bans.	7, 10, 11
1-30-17	Dismissal of Sally Yates. Mr. Trump fired Acting Attorney General Sally Yates for declining to defend the court actions against his travel bans, even though she had been expressly cautioned by Senator Jeff Sessions, during her 2015 confirmation hearing, to follow principle over commands under President Obama. (Senator Sessions subsequently became her replacement as Attorney General.) (Mr. Trump's action, while probably legal, was compared in spirit to President Nixon's 1973 "Saturday Night Massacre" of the Watergate prosecutor and the subsequent resignations of top Justice Department officials, thus precipitating President Nixon's impeachment. Concerns arose that the Justice Department under Mr. Trump could become uniquely unable to enforce laws and the Constitution objectively.)	9
1-30-17	State Department dissenters invited to resign. Press secretary Sean Spicer urged dissenting State Department officials to quit their jobs, even though the participation in a "dissent memo" (here relating to Mr. Trump's travel ban) was until then an accepted practice.	17(9, 10)

1-31-17	Supreme Court nomination spectacle. Mr. Trump named Neil Gorsuch as his nominee to the Supreme Court in an ostentatious, live, prime-time televised spectacle, following a guessing-game build-up that he had boasted about before and during the announcement. He also began the announcement by stating that he was the first president "in a very, very long time" to be "a man of his word." (So altogether, Mr. Trump undertook to (a) humiliate prior administrations; (b) accentuate the association between his personal executive authority and the shape of the high court, although the Constitution intends the opposite; and (c) tarnish the sanctity of the Constitutional process with personal vanity and reality show glitter.)	9, 11
2-1-17	Attack on CNN. Mr. Trump attacked CNN as trafficking in "fake news" and the media as "the opposition party."	1, 7
2-1-17	Insulting the Australian prime minister. In a rude telephone call with the Australian prime minister, during which Mr. Trump abruptly hung up, Mr. Trump disrupted a U.S.-Australian agreement for the admission to the U.S. of a group of refugees under Australian control.	10, 13, 14
2-2-17	Threat to U.C. Berkeley. Mr. Trump threatened to pull federal funds from the University of California Berkeley because the university – out of concern for further violence – had cancelled an appearance by a notorious Breitbart News provocateur that had already generated rioting. (The provocateur was later fired by Breitbart for an unrelated reason – publicly condoning pedophilia.)	9, 10
2-3-17	Conflicts in bank de-regulation. Mr. Trump promised to deregulate banks (i.e., to eviscerate the Dodd-Frank Act that attempted to rein in deceptive and reckless lending practices such as had caused the Great Recession in 2007-2008) because his many "friends" in the business world were unable to get loans. (The de-regulation could also be expected to materially benefit Mr. Trump's own real estate enterprises, in terms of both easier credit for commercial borrowers generally and favorable lending terms that Mr. Trump could enjoy as a personal "thank you" from the banks.)	15, 16

2-3-17	Attack on Schwarzenegger. Mr. Trump gratuitously tweeted insulting remarks about former California governor Arnold Schwarzenegger, now hosting the television program Celebrity Apprentice in which Mr. Trump had retained a financial interest, due to his dissatisfaction with Mr. Schwarzenegger's performance and politics.	10, 11, 15
2-4-17	Attack on travel ban judge. Mr. Trump tweeted insulting personal criticism of a federal district court judge in Washington State who had ordered a nationwide halt to the enforcement of a travel ban contained in Mr. Trump's recent executive order – including by referring to him as a "so-called judge," and "ridiculous." (On February 12, the Associated Press would report that the judge subsequently experienced threatening messages on social media.)	2, 10, 11, 17 (5)
2-4-17	Denial of courts' right to review presidential action. Later, in seeking to overturn that judicial order, Mr. Trump's attorneys at the Justice Department filed pleadings that argued that the courts have no authority to review presidential decisions "to suspend the admission of any class of aliens," and thus that the court itself injured America and violated the Constitution.	2
2-4-17	Conflicts at Mar-a-Lago. Mr. Trump attended charity events at two of his resort properties in Florida, thus promoting the properties and drawing paying attendees, all to Mr. Trump's personal profit.	15
2-4-17	Attack on New York Times. Mr. Trump tweeted that the New York Times traffics in "fake news."	1, 7
2-4-17	Minimizing Russian political killings. In a Fox News interview, Mr. Trump declined to comment on extrajudicial killings of Vladimir Putin's opponents in Russia, except that "there are a lot of killers" in America also, thus politically and morally equating the two countries in that regard.	10, 12, 17 (1, 4, 9)
2-4-17	Scapegoating a travel ban judge. Mr. Trump tweeted that if a terrorist enters the U.S. and causes injury because the federal judge in Washington State had suspended Mr. Trump's travel ban, Americans should "blame [the judge] and the court system." (Observers feared that Mr. Trump was setting up the judiciary as a scapegoat, should terrorist attacks – almost inevitably – materialize in the future.)	2, 9, 11

2-4-17	Plan for voter fraud investigation. Mr. Trump told Fox News that he planned to establish a commission to investigate what he had repeatedly alleged was massive voter fraud in the election, while still failing to offer any evidence for that charge.	4, 7, 9
2-6-17	Attack on opinion polls. Mr. Trump tweeted that "any negative [opinion] polls [about his presidency] are fake news, just like the CNN, ABC, NBC polls in the election." (Most of the election polls had actually been accurate within the statistical margin of error.)	1, 7, 11
2-6-17	Attack on the press re reports on terrorism. Mr. Trump said that the (generic) press was intentionally not reporting on (unspecified) instances of terrorist attacks. (Most of the attacks had in fact been reported, many at great length. Observers feared that Mr. Trump was setting up the press as a scapegoat, should terrorist attacks – almost inevitably – materialize in the future.)	1, 7, 9, 11
2-6-17	Attack on New York Times. Mr. Trump tweeted that the New York Times was "failing" and was "making up stories and sources" about him in a display of "total fiction."	1, 7
2-6-17	Campaign-style address at Tampa air base. Mr. Trump delivered a campaign-style address at an Air Force base in Tampa, praising his own popularity with the military. (Observers feared that Mr. Trump could be seeking to politicize the military in his favor, contrary to American political and Constitutional tradition.)	9, 11
2-7-17	Texas vendetta. Mr. Trump publicly and casually threatened to "destroy [the] career" of a Texas state senator who had disagreed on a routine matter with a political ally of Mr. Trump's (possibly as a joke, but if so, a chilling one).	9, 10, 11
2-7-17	False murder rate. Mr. Trump repeated his previous falsehood that the nation's murder rate is the highest in 45 years. (In fact it is near its lowest in decades.)	6, 7, 9
2-8-17	President not subject to courts. During oral argument before the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, the Trump administration's attorney argued that the president's authority on national security issues is never reviewable by the judiciary.	2, 9

2-8-17	Attack on Nordstrom. Mr. Trump publicly attacked Nordstrom for dropping his daughter Ivanka's fashion line – thus seeking on the one hand to bolster her business by having her line reinstated, or on the other hand to punish Nordstrom by depressing its retail sales, and in any event marking Nordstrom as a political enemy.	10, 11, 15, 16
2-8-17	Attack on travel ban judges. Mr. Trump publicly insinuated that the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals judges were behaving politically, improperly and incompetently ("a bad high school student would understand" Mr. Trump's statutory and constitutional authority to control immigration) in their review of the lower (Washington State) court's order halting the presidential travel ban – and all in the midst of the appellate hearings themselves. He called the proceedings "disgraceful." He also tweeted: "If the U.S. does not win this case as it obviously should, we can never have the security and safety to which we are entitled. Politics!" (He thus positioned the court as a scapegoat relative to all future terrorist attacks on our soil).	2, 9, 10, 11
2-9-17	Promotion of Ivanka's fashion line. Presidential counselor Kelly Anne Conway explicitly promoted Ivanka Trump's fashion line on television, drawing a recommendation for disciplinary action by the Office of Government Ethics and a promise for an ethics investigation by the Republican chair of the House Oversight Committee. (But no investigation was to materialize, and Mr. Trump declined to discipline Conway.)	17 (15, 16)
2-9-17	Attack on Sen. Blumenthal. Mr. Trump attacked Senator Richard Blumenthal's overall integrity after the Senator publicly reported the displeasure of Supreme Court nominee Neil Gorsuch with Mr. Trump's recent attacks on the judiciary.	10, 11
2-9-17	Attack on travel ban appeals court. After the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals sustained the Washington State federal district court's order staying the president's travel ban, Mr. Trump again castigated the appeals court as being "political."	2, 10, 11
2-9-17	New Hampshire voting fraud claim. Mr. Trump alleged, without offering evidence, that he had lost the popular vote in New Hampshire due to massive voter fraud, by way of voters being bused in from Massachusetts.	4, 7

2-11-17	Mar-a-Lago security breach, conflicts. At Mar-a-Lago, an exclusive resort in Palm Beach owned and frequented by Mr. Trump, Mr. Trump reviewed sensitive intelligence reports on a North Korean missile launch with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe at an outdoor patio table while surrounded by resort guests and in an unsecured environment – an apparently unprecedented and possibly illegal break with diplomatic and security protocols. Mr. Trump contemporaneously succeeded in promoting Mar-a-Lago as a commercial enterprise. (On February 14, the House Ethics Committee would announce an investigation of the breach of security protocols.)	10, 13, 15
2-12-17	Miller on voting fraud, court authority, more. Stephen Miller, Mr. Trump's senior advisor, forcefully repeated the canard that 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 fraudulent votes were cast for Hillary Clinton (while still offering no evidence for the claim). He also forcefully insisted that the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals had no right to rule on the constitutionality of Mr. Trump's recent travel ban, and that the president's authority is absolute. He also forcefully and inaccurately stated that Mr. Trump had accomplished more in his first three weeks in office than other presidents had accomplished in an entire administration. Afterwards Mr. Trump tweeted his praise for Miller's performance.	17 (2, 4, 6, 7, 9)
2-13/15-17	Flynn's discussions with Russians, misstatements to administration. On February 9, American security officials had finally acknowledged that National Security Advisor Michael Flynn had indeed discussed President Obama's Russian sanctions and other sensitive aspects of the U.S.-Russia relationship with the Russian ambassador while Mr. Obama was still the president – contrary to prior denials by Mr. Flynn to the White House and to Vice President Pence. The discussion(s) may have amounted to subversion under the Logan Act. On February 13, Mr. Flynn admitted his prior misstatements and resigned his position. Mr. Trump had been told of the affair some weeks previous and had sought Flynn's resignation only after the matter had been leaked to the public; and after the public revelation, Mr. Trump's only public comments were to denounce the leak; denounce the affair as a purely political distraction brought by Democrats in retaliation for their having lost the election; fault Flynn for lying to Pence; and support Flynn for having spoken to the Russian ambassador. [ Continued below. ]	7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 17 (7, 9, 12)

2-13/15-17	[ Continued. ] (On February 15 the press would report that Mr. Flynn had initially lied to the FBI about the matter as well, which would constitute a separate felony.)	7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 17 (7, 9, 12)
2-14/15-17	Russian campaign contacts exposed, denied. During the election campaign (and prior to the start date of this document), Russian intelligence and/or other governmental officials had had extensive contacts with Mr. Trump's high level advisors and campaign staff, including then campaign manager Paul Manafort and campaign advisor (later named National Security Advisor) Michael Flynn. American intelligence agencies had monitored the calls, particularly in view of Mr. Trump's expressed admiration for the Russian prime minister Vladimir Putin, Mr. Trump's public invitation for Russians to hack Democratic emails, and the actual Russian hacking of Democratic emails that ensued. Two days after the election, Russia's deputy foreign minister had then openly revealed, in general terms, that such broad contact had occurred – a statement which Mr. Trump's campaign promptly denied. On or around December 31, the American intelligence agencies communicated their findings about the contacts to the FBI, which in turn shared them with President Obama and President-elect Trump. On February 13, the New York Times and CNN made those general findings public, based on leaked information. Press secretary Sean Spicer promptly denied that the communications had occurred. On February 15, Mr. Trump criticized the leaks, but not the conversations; and he proposed appointing a billionaire financier, friend and supporter with no intelligence experience to oversee all the national intelligence agencies. (Mr. Trump's criticism of the leaks contradicted his own prior embrace of leaks relative to Hillary Clinton's behavior as Secretary of State and relative to Democratic Party emails. While President Obama during his tenure had himself quashed leaks on policy issues, Mr. Trump appeared now to seek to quash leaks to protect himself legally and politically.)	9, 12, 13, 17 (7, 9, 12)
2-15-17	Refusal to discuss hate crimes. In a joint news conference with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, Mr. Trump – who is not anti-Semitic – nevertheless refused to respond to an Orthodox Jewish reporter's question about the torrent of anti-Semitic episodes that had arisen during and after his election campaign, and he delivered that refusal in rude terms.	1, 10, 11, 17 (6)

2-15-17	Foreign policy without advice. Mr. Trump softened or dropped the U.S.'s long-standing commitment to a two-state solution for Israelis and Palestinians without having consulted with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson or other cabinet members. Similarly, it was reported on that date that Mr. Trump had appointed many ambassadors without Tillerson's approval.	13
2-16-17	Unusual first press conference. Mr. Trump devoted much of a his first (and very lengthy) news conference as president to attacking the honesty of the press and to blaming it for recent setbacks in U.S.-Russian relations. He also denied the reports of intelligence agencies that his campaign staff had been in contact with the Russian government, and that his administration was suffering from internal chaos – proclaiming instead that his White House team was running like a "fine-tuned machine." He also blamed Democrats for creating an impression that anti-Semitic acts had flowered since his election; and again, although himself not anti-Semitic, he refused to condemn that anti-Semitism. He also vastly exaggerated the size of his Electoral College victory, as he had done repeatedly in the past. And he stated that National Security Advisor Michael Flynn did nothing wrong by speaking to the Russian ambassador about President Obama's sanctions prior to the inauguration, even going so far as to say: "I would have directed him to do it if I thought he wasn't doing it. I didn't direct him, but I would've directed him because that's his job." (Mr. Trump thus expressly supported Flynn's actions that may have amounted to subversion under the Logan Act.) Altogether the Washington Post identified 15 dubious or false claims made by Mr. Trump during the course of the news conference.	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17 (6, 9, 12)
2-16-17	Travel and security expense; golfing time. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's frequent trips to Mar-a-Lago, his Florida ocean-side resort, his wife's maintenance of a home in Trump Tower on Fifth Avenue in New York, and his sons' many domestic and international business trips, in the aggregate, will cost the government hundreds of millions of dollars in secret service and local police security costs (for the entire Trump family) and direct travel costs (for Mr. Trump and his retinue), far in excess of any other president. Costs for golf trips to Mar-a-Lago and Mr. Trump's golf course in Bedminster, NJ are expected to dwarf the costs of President Obama's golf trips, of which Mr. Trump had been intensely critical during the election campaign.	11

2-17-17	News outlets as "enemy of the people." Mr. Trump tweeted that The New York Times, NBC, ABC, CBS and CNN are all "fake news" outlets, and "the enemy of the American people!" (The phrase "enemy of the people" had been commonly used by Lenin and Stalin to condemn entire classes of people and to send them to their deaths. Nikita Khrushchev abandoned the term in the 1960s.)	1, 7, 9,10
2-17/21-17	Suspect economic projections. The Wall Street Journal reported that the Trump administration had projected economic growth far in excess of that projected by virtually all leading economists, and was seeking to re-calculate trade deficits so as to exaggerate them – all in the service of (dubiously) justifying Mr. Trump's economic and trade policies.	7, 8
2-18-17	Florida rally misstatements. At a "campaign rally" in Florida, Mr. Trump castigated the media to a wildly cheering crowd; condemned a terrorist attack in Sweden that hadn't occurred; and boasted about shaving $1 billion from the price of a new Air Force One airplane (which the Air Force subsequently denied having knowledge of). Altogether the Washington Post identified 13 dubious or false claims within Mr. Trump's statements.	1, 7, 9, 10, 11
2-19-17	Death of qualified staff. A New York Times article confirmed and detailed Mr. Trump's continuing inability to fill top diplomatic and national security positions, due to dissonance between his views and those of most knowledgeable professionals, and to his style of ignoring, overriding and politicizing objective intelligence data.	10, 13
2-21-17	Disparagement of protesters. Mr. Trump insinuated that angry protests against his administration at local Congressional offices and events were centrally manufactured and insincere – "planned by liberal activists. Sad!"	3, 7, 9, 11
2-22-17	Russian critique of American press. The Russian foreign ministry effectively joined the Trump administration in prominently labeling The New York Times "fake news" on the ministry's Web site, by way of a large red "Fake" stamp superimposed on critical news articles.	12, 17 (1)

2-22-17	Amnesty's critique. Amnesty International, in its annual global report, linked Mr. Trump's "poisonous" rhetoric with the wave of divisive authoritarianism sweeping the world. It condemned his "toxic agenda that hounds, scapegoats and dehumanizes entire groups of people." It said that "the narratives of blame, hate and fear took on a global prominence to a level not seen since the 1930s" – i.e., when Adolf Hitler rose to power in Germany.	6, 9
2-23-17	Marginalization of State Dept. The Washington Post reported that since Mr. Trump's inauguration, the State Department had stopped its daily press briefings, secretary Rex Tillerson had been excluded from meetings with world leaders, and the department had generally been sidelined by White House operatives in the conduct of high level strategy and diplomacy.	13
2-23-17	Pressure on intelligence agencies. CNN reported that – contrary to law – the White House had recently attempted to (a) cause the FBI to tell the press its misgivings about The New York Times reports concerning Mr. Trump's campaign staff having communicated with Russian officials, and (b) cause intelligence agencies to conclude that Mr. Trump's travel ban was strategically justified.	9, 13
2-23-17	Bannon on the press. White House chief strategist Stephen Bannon, at a televised conservative conference (CPAC), repeatedly referred to the press as "the opposition party."	17 (1)
2-24-17	Barring the press. Mr. Trump again attacked the "fake news" of major media outlets, again termed it or them "the enemy of the American people," then caused The New York Times, CNN, Politico, the BBC, The Huffington Post, The Los Angeles Times, and other news organs to be barred from an untelevised press conference with press secretary Sean Spicer – an apparently unprecedented act. Several right-wing news outlets, including White House chief strategist Stephen Bannon's former employer Breitbart News, were invited to the event instead. The White House later denied that any of this was unusual.	1, 17 (7)

2-24-17	Pressure on Congressional committees to leak and denounce. The Washington Post reported that, after the FBI had refused to denounce The New York Times to the press for potential inaccuracies regarding the Trump campaign's communications with Russian officials, the White House caused other senior intelligence officials, including members of Congress sitting on intelligence committees, to anonymously denounce The New York Times. Mr. Trump apparently did this on the same day that he decried anonymous, antagonistic government leaks. (Mr. Trump frequently cites anonymous sources when disputing well-established facts.)	9, 13
2-24-17	Multiple untruths at CPAC. The New York Times reported 10 false or misleading statements that Mr. Trump had made during the course of his recent speech to the Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC).	7
2-24-17	Rejection of intelligence findings. Mr. Trump rejected an intelligence report that immigrants from the seven Muslim-majority countries whose travel he had banned do not pose a particular risk of terrorism, insisting that the intelligence agencies match their intelligence conclusions to his political ones.	9, 13
2-26-17	Subordinates' policy corrections. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's prior and continuing pronouncements on foreign policy and security issues had been so disruptive that various top administration officials – with or without authorization – had felt compelled to publicly walk them back. As reported in the Post and elsewhere, the following examples of subordinates correcting Mr. Trump on such matters (and other matters) had appeared. [ Continued below. ]	9, 10, 13

2-26-17	[Continued.] DHS secretary Kelly ("military operations" will not be used in deportations); U.N. ambassador Haley (a one-state solution for Israelis and Palestinians was not being considered by the administration); Vice President Pence (NATO is not obsolete); defense secretary Mattis (the media is not "the enemy of the American people"; the U.S. should not have seized Iraqi oil as spoils of war; security assurances to South Korea, Japan and NATO will remain; torture is not effective in eliciting information); national security advisor McMaster (it is not wise to refer to "radical Islamic terrorism"); CIA director Pompeo (torture is not legal); treasury secretary Mnuchin (China might not be a currency manipulator; the IRS needs more funding, not less); budget director Mulvaney (spending more for military and infrastructure, and continuing the current level of Medicare and Medicare spending, is not fiscally sound). (While previous presidents and their top officials have often disagreed, the torrent of public disagreements within the first weeks of the Trump presidency appeared to be unprecedented.)	9, 10, 13
2-26-17	Cumulative falsehoods. The Huffington Post identified 100 falsehoods that Mr. Trump and his aides had advanced during his first 37 days in office, and characterized the figure as extraordinary relative to previous presidents.	7
2-26-17	Derogatory falsehoods about The Times. The New York Times' executive editor told CNN that Mr. Trump had referred to the Times as financially "failing" 53 times, even though its subscriptions have risen (due to Mr. Trump's candidacy and presidency) and its profits are strong. The same day, Mr. Trump again tweeted that the Times reports inaccurately and unfairly.	1, 7
2-27-17	De-funding diplomacy. Mr. Trump announced a major increase in defense spending, as the White House proposed cutting the State Department's budget by up to 30% – thus suggesting a preference for military solutions to international issues over diplomatic ones. Shortly afterwards, over 120 retired generals and admirals disagreed, writing in a letter to Congressional leaders: "The State Department, USAID, Millennium Challenge Corporation, Peace Corps and other development agencies are critical to preventing conflict and reducing the need to put our men and women in uniform in harm's way."	9, 13

2-27-17	Blaming Obama. Mr. Trump said that President Obama and "his people" were behind the recent, widespread town hall protests against Mr. Trump's policies and practices, and possibly also "some of the leaks" coming out of the White House.	3, 7, 9
2-28-17	Self-enrichment through regulatory roll-back. Mr. Trump directed the Environmental Protection Agency to roll back a federal rule protecting American waterways from pollution, thus benefitting his own golf courses.	15
2-28-17	Shedding responsibility for Yemen raid. Mr. Trump disclaimed all responsibility for the country's first military operation in Yemen, which he had ordered one week into his presidency, and which had resulted in the death of an American SEAL, the deaths of several Yemeni civilians, the loss of an attack helicopter, and the collection of possibly minimal actionable intelligence. Mr. Trump instead blamed former President Obama's administration and the military. (Contrast to the prompt acceptance of responsibility by then President Obama and then Secretary of State Hillary Clinton for the deaths of American diplomats in Benghazi some years previous.) Earlier in February, press secretary Sean Spicer had called the operation a "huge success."	7, 11
2-28-17	Blaming hate crimes on opponents. Mr. Trump, in condemning a recent spate of anti-Semitic bomb threats and cemetery desecrations, insinuated that they were being perpetrated by his opponents to discredit him and his supporters -- an argument consistent with that advanced by three of the country's leading anti-Semites: Andrew Anglin (The Daily Stormer), David Duke (former Ku Klux Klan leader), and Richard Spencer (National Policy Institute).	7, 9, 17 (6, 7)
2-28-17	Inflation of unemployment statistics. In addressing a joint session of Congress, Mr. Trump repeated his charge that 94,000,000 Americans are out of the labor force, when in fact most of those are students, the disabled, the retired, stay-at-home parents, or otherwise not interested in being employed. According to CNN, the meaningful number of unemployed was closer to 12,000,000. The Washington Post documented eleven additional misleading or inaccurate statements in the address.	7

3-2-17	Secret Russian meetings by Sessions, Flynn, Kushner. Attorney General Jeff Sessions was forced to recuse himself from Justice Department investigations of Trump campaign contacts with Russian officials after the Washington Post revealed that he had lied to Congress under oath in denying his own Russian contacts while he was actively advancing the Trump campaign. Mr. Trump said (as he had said when Michael Flynn had been forced to retire) that no wrongdoing had occurred, and that the outcome was the result of an overwrought and embittered Democratic Party. Also in the first week of March, the New Yorker reported that Mr. Trump's then senior advisors Michael Flynn and Jared Kushner had a previously undisclosed (and presumably conciliatory) meeting with the Russian ambassador at the Trump Tower in New York (Mr. Trump's then home) in late December, prior to his inauguration, as President Obama was moving toward sanctioning Russia for interfering with the American election. Mr. Trump continued to deny awareness of contact with Russian officials on the part of any of his pre- and post-election aides, until those contacts were revealed, serially, by the press.	7, 9, 12, 17 (7, 9, 12)
3-2-12	Count of campaign aides who spoke to Russians. The Huffington Post documented that at least five Trump campaign aides had spoken to Russian officials, and that Mr. Trump and his administration, after the election, had repeatedly denied that any had spoken to such officials.	7, 12, 17 (7, 12)
3-3-17	Tillerson skips human rights event. Secretary Rex Tillerson declined to personally present the State Department's annual human rights report to the public, markedly breaking with bi-partisan tradition.	17 (14)
3-3-17	Donald Trump, Jr. and Russia. The Wall Street Journal reported that Donald Trump, Jr., the president's son, was paid at least $50,000 in October to speak to a pro-Russian think-tank in Paris. (Years before he had noted the extensive investments of Russians in Trump family real estate ventures.)	17 (12, 15)

3-3-17	Denial of ethics obligations. NPR reported that the White House had asserted, without citing legal authority, that not just the president, but possibly the entire Executive Office staff, are not bound to a broad range of federal ethics regulations. (Outside ethics experts objected strenuously.)	9, 15
3-3-17	Non-enforcement of acknowledged ethical rules. Pro Publica reported that the White House was not enforcing even its own watered-down ethics rules relating to employing individuals in policy positions relative to which they had recently been paid as professional lobbyists.	17 (15)
3-4-17	Accusation of wiretapping by Obama. Mr. Trump hotly, repeatedly and without evidence tweeted that then President Obama had ordered that Mr. Trump's phones in Trump Tower be tapped during the election campaign; and the following day his staff publicly requested that Congressional intelligence committees investigate Mr. Obama for that. In charging Mr. Obama, Mr. Trump effectively accused Mr. Obama of dire constitutional and other legal violations, and denigrated the vision and the mechanisms of American democracy for the world to see. But within an hour after those tweets – of such grave significance – Mr. Trump casually tweeted his latest disparaging remark about Arnold Schwarzenegger's ratings on the Celebrity Apprentice television program in which Mr. Trump retains a financial interest; and then he went out to play golf. Mr. Obama, his director of national intelligence James Clapper, and then and current FBI director James Comey all promptly denied Mr. Trump's allegation about President Obama. (They did not comment on his allegation about Mr. Schwarzenegger.)	7, 9, 10, 11, 15
3-4-17	Military display without strategy. A New York Times news analysis advanced that Mr. Trump's emerging military plan appeared to be to buy and display large weapons systems, but without having a strategy that such weapons systems would fulfill, other than the display itself; without an understanding of or interest in the military operations in which the U.S. is presently engaged; and all at the expense of diplomacy and foreign assistance, which programs Mr. Trump planned to materially defund, over the protests of most military strategists.	9, 13

3-7-17	Untrue Gitmo data. Mr. Trump falsely tweeted that former President Obama had released 122 prisoners from Guantanamo who had then returned to the jihadist battlefield. In fact Mr. Obama had released only 9; the rest had been released by his predecessor, President Bush.	7, 9, 10, 11
3-8-17	Science skeptics at EPA. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump and EPA administrator Scott Pruitt had filled the top ranks of the EPA with like-minded climate change skeptics.	8
3-8-17	Disparagement of CBO data. Press secretary Sean Spicer disparaged the accuracy of any cost and revenue projections performed or to be performed by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office, in anticipation of the CBO's upcoming scoring of the costs of the new Republican health care bill that Mr. Trump was then supporting. (While imperfect, the CBO's scoring has always been viewed as an essential analytic tool by both Democrats and Republicans, and possibly the best such tool available to Congress.)	8
3-8-17	Chinese trademarks. The Associated Press and the New York Times reported that the Chinese government, in an extraordinary procedural move relative to foreign companies, had recently granted the Trump businesses 38 new trademarks on an expedited basis, shortly after Mr. Trump had pulled back from his challenge to China's policy on Taiwan during a call with Xi Jinping, the Chinese president.	15
3-9-17	Environmental science denial. EPA administrator Scott Pruitt flatly disagreed that carbon dioxide contributes to global warming, contrary to the views of almost all climate scientists.	17 (8)
3-9-17	Growth of Trump business brand. Eric Trump, the president's son, stated that, since the election, the Trump Organization's golf club business "brand is the hottest it's ever been." Mr. Trump had played golf at his Florida golf courses on four out of five of his weekends since taking office, thereby implicitly but very publicly promoting them.	15

3-10-17	Hotel benefiting from presidency. The Huffington Post announced that a wine bar in the District of Columbia was suing Mr. Trump and his Trump International Hotel on grounds of unfair competition, in that patron traffic was being drawn to Mr. Trump's property because of the patrons' desire to curry favor with his administration. According to the report, since Mr. Trump's election and inauguration, the hotel – which had previously been performing below expectations – had seen a considerable boom in business, including on the part of foreign governments, whose officials hotel management have specifically courted for booking events. (Regardless of whether Mr. Trump is violating the law of unfair competition, he would appear to be financially benefitting at the hotel by being president of the United States in a way that he would not have benefited had he not been president.)	15
3-10-17	Fashion line benefiting from presidency. The Huffington Post reported that Ivanka Trump's fashion line sales in February were meteoric, presumably in connection with her visibility as the president's daughter.	15, 16
3-10-17	Dismissal of U.S. attorneys; allegations of "deep state." The Trump administration abruptly fired 46 U.S. attorneys (regional federal prosecutors) without notice, opportunities to personally transition, or opportunities to hand off their open cases. It is common for a new administration to remove politically appointed U.S. attorneys, but not so abruptly. The removal appeared to reflect a growing fear by the Trump administration of what then was being widely referred to as a "deep state" within Washington, a cabal dedicated to undermining the Trump presidency. (The term "deep state" has historically been used in the West to refer to secret, anti-democratic elements within the military and security bureaucracies of democratizing countries. By contrast, the Trump White House has come to allege that pro-democratic bureaucrats within any American agency who disagree with Trump administration outlooks constitute a malevolent "deep state.")	9, 11

3-10-17	Selective praise of labor statistics. The White House embraced and took credit for the Bureau of Labor Statistics' favorable February 2017 jobs report – even while continuing to claim that the bureau's prior favorable jobs reports during the Obama administration were fraudulent (and even though the positive February report more likely reflected a continuation of Obama-era trends than any effect that Mr. Trump's early presidency could have had on the economy).	7, 11
3-10-17	Under-staffing, marginalization of State Dept. A New York Times news analysis reported that under Secretary Rex Tillerson, an unusual number of State Department vacancies for high level administrative and ambassadorial positions remained vacant; that Mr. Trump continued to conduct diplomatic policy-making and meetings without Mr. Tillerson; and that Mr. Trump had otherwise likely caused Mr. Tillerson to stand (or to choose to stand) in the shadows of American diplomacy, contrary to his traditional mandate as secretary.	13
3-11-17	Widespread Russian contacts. Politico published a series of charts showing connections between the Trump administration and the Russian government and its associates. More than a dozen individuals working for or otherwise tied to the administration or the Trump campaign had had direct or indirect connections – not necessarily all damning, but in the aggregate "mysterious."	12
3-12-17	Concentration, control, mistrust in governance. A New York Times news analysis reported that Mr. Trump's failure to fill hundreds of top administrative positions across multiple agencies, including not only State but also Defense and Treasury, was attributable in large part to his highly concentrated, controlling and mistrustful administrative style – a holdover from his style in administering his private business enterprises – and that that failure to grasp and appreciate the complex and collaborative nature of traditional presidential governance would likely hamstring the effectiveness of the Trump administration and thus cause domestic and international injury to the U.S.	9, 10, 11

3-12-17	False health care claims. HHS secretary Tom Price said that under House Speaker Paul Ryan's current bill to repeal and replace the ACA – which Price and Mr. Trump support – "nobody will be worse off financially," thus echoing Mr. Trump's own pledge in January to replace the ACA with a plan that provides "insurance for everybody" and that would be "much less expensive and much better." (In fact any such radical retooling of the nation's health care system will almost necessarily create winners and losers. CSD does not take a position on the merits of any particular plan; but rather is concerned with false representations on the part of the administration.) But the following day, the Congressional Budget Office – generally confirming other independent predictions – projected that under Ryan's plan, 24 million people would lose insurance, premiums would rise by 15% to 20% in the first two years of the plan, and older Americans would pay substantially more than younger Americans, and possibly more than they are now paying. (While the CBO's projections are fallible, they are non-partisan, and what policy makers have long relied on absent any better tests. Secretary Price's prediction, made before the CBO's score was issued and in defiance of calls to wait for that score before issuing the plan, would appear to have been particularly rash in light of the Trump campaign's unremitting criticism of President Obama for having erroneously promised in 2009 and beyond that individuals could keep their then existing insurance policies under the then-prospective ACA.) Both the White House and Price then strongly contested the CBO's projections – even while Ryan defended them.	7, 8
3-13-17	Shifting new health plan criticisms to Obamacare. When the introduction of Speaker Paul Ryan's health care plan resulted in an immediate uproar from both the left and the right, Mr. Trump invited the public to submit grievances on the White House Web site not about that plan, but about President Obama's ACA, in an attempt to further discredit it.	9
3-13-17	Cuts of science leadership and funding. The Washington Post reported that President Trump had filled few high-level agency vacancies for scientists, at the same time as proposing deep budget cuts for science-based agencies such as the EPA, the Energy Department, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.	8

3-13-17	Hate crime growth; tepid criticism. The Wall Street Journal reported that since Mr. Trump's election, hate crimes against religious minorities (including arson at four mosques and bomb threats at dozens of Jewish community centers) have risen over 500% compared to a comparable period in normal times. (Mr. Trump's condemnation of those crimes has been infrequent, perfunctory and tepid – effectively negligible, in comparison to his post-election condemnations of Arnold Schwarzenegger, Meryl Streep, Democratic Senator Chuck Schumer, Democratic Senator Richard Blumenthal, the mainstream press, and many others whom he considers to be his enemies.)	17 (6)
3-15-17	Scapegoating at Nashville rally. A federal district court in Hawaii issued a temporary restraining order barring Mr. Trump's revised travel ban, on grounds of its alleged underlying, unconstitutional intention to discriminate against Muslims. Immediately afterwards, Mr. Trump appeared at a scheduled "campaign" rally in Nashville, where, in criticizing the court's ruling, he was met with – and he appeared to take satisfaction in – a furious chorus from the crowd, chanting "Lock her up! Lock her up!" (The reference to Hillary Clinton's alleged wrongdoing was extraneous to the topic of the travel ban, and to all other topics addressed by Mr. Trump at the rally. Rather, it appeared to amount to the crowd's long-cultivated fury with respect to a scapegoat left over from Mr. Trump's original campaign. CSD observers, watching in real-time, sensed a Lord of the Flies moment of readily exploitable mob frenzy.) At the rally, Mr. Trump also castigated the "dishonest" press, and he criticized the court's ruling as "political."	1, 2, 9, 17 (5)
3-15-17	Culture of paranoia. Politico, in a lengthy analysis, reported that "a culture of paranoia is consuming the Trump administration, with staffers increasingly preoccupied with perceived enemies within their own government." "It's an environment of fear that has hamstrung the routine functioning of the executive branch." "The degree of suspicion [has] created a toxicity that is unsustainable." One Republican insider said: "It's not paranoia if people really are out to get you, and everybody actually is out to get everyone else." While some individuals would appear to fear sabotage and surveillance by Obama-era holdovers, others, including Trump appointees, fear the same by other Trump appointees.	9

3-16-17	Budget cuts for science and diplomacy. Mr. Trump proposed a budget that would radically cut scientific, diplomatic and other traditional programs while allocating significant additional money toward military and security spending. (CSD does not take a position on the budget proposal generally, except insofar as it would appear to fall within specific areas of concern as stated in CSD's principles: a gratuitously militaristic display, and the crippling of diplomatic resources and scientific programs.)	8, 9
3-16-17	Evisceration of State Dept. MSNBC reported on numerous ways in which Mr. Trump was eviscerating the State Department: cutting its budget by 28%; recently arranging for the Mexican ambassador to meet with White House senior advisor and Trump son-in-law Jared Kushner while in Washington rather than with Secretary Rex Tillerson; and arranging for ambassador to Israel David Freedman to report to Kushner rather than to Tillerson.	13
3-16-17	Allegation of British spying; cumulative foreign insults. Press secretary Sean Spicer, based on the reporting of a Fox News commentator rather than on national intelligence, alleged that the British government had spied on candidate Trump at the behest of then President Obama. The British government was infuriated and flatly denied the allegation. The following day, Fox News itself declined to support the allegation. But Mr. Trump and his administration refused to back down, or to apologize to the British government. (The episode thus added the UK to the list of countries and heads of state that Mr. Trump had gratuitously insulted since his election: Mexico, Australia, Sweden, and China. But not Russia.)	7, 10, 11, 13
3-17-17	Invisible diplomacy. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson broke from longstanding tradition by travelling internationally (in this case to South Korea) without press pool coverage, thus continuing a general pattern of opaqueness and/or marginalization relative to the work of the State Department since Mr. Trump's inauguration.	1, 13
3-17-17	Russian investors in Trump Florida properties. Reuters reported that an investigation it had conducted revealed that wealthy Russian individuals had invested at least $100 million in Trump-owned properties in Florida, and conceivably much more.	12, 15

3-18-17	Rejection of international trade and science accords. At a meeting of the G-20 and the EU in Germany, the Trump administration stood against all of the other participants on prospective trade policies, rejected German entreaties to reaffirm longstanding international principles of free trade, rejected traditional condemnations of trade protectionism, and rejected the Paris accords on climate change.	'14

Addendum 1– April 3, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns dated March 20, 2017, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen since that date. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior identified in CSD's Statement of Principles.

3-20-17	Ivanka and Kushner in the White House. Politico reported that Mr. Trump's daughter Ivanka – who has no government or policy experience – had taken or would shortly take a position in the White House, for which she would be granted a top security clearance. Like her husband Jared Kushner, her presence in the White House stood to conflict with common understandings of anti-nepotism standards. Also, like her husband and her father, she had declined to divest her personal business enterprises; and so those enterprises, at a minimum, would seemingly stand to enjoy a branding boost associated with Ms. Trump's position, as well as embodying numerous other conflicts of interest. (The position for Ms. Trump would formally be announced on or around March 29. The details and the considerable magnitude of Ms. Trump's and Kushner's business holdings would be publicly released by the White House on March 31. The variety and extent of Kushner's many conflicts of interest would be reported by The New York Times on April 2.)	11, 15
---------	---	--------

3-20-17	Denunciation of FBI investigation. Shortly prior to FBI director James Comey's testimony before a Congressional committee to the effect that the FBI was in fact investigating Mr. Trump's associates' connections to Russia during the presidential campaign, Mr. Trump issued a barrage of tweets denouncing Democrats, the investigation, Mr. Comey, and leaks from within his administration. Afterwards, press secretary Sean Spicer made similar comments, and added insinuations that Hillary Clinton had colluded with the Russians.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12
3-21-17	Skipped OAS meeting. No representative from the Trump administration attended a hearing conducted by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (part of the Organization of American States) – apparently the first such absence in at least eight years. The absence threatened to chill the forum's credibility and effectiveness as a human rights watchdog.	14
3-21-17	Nunes' White House visit. Devin Nunes is the Republican chair of the House Intelligence Committee. That committee had been in the process of investigating contacts between Russian officials and Trump campaign figures. Nunes had previously been a strong supporter of Mr. Trump's campaign and a leading figure in Mr. Trump's transition team. On the evening of March 21, Nunes secretly met in the White House with several White House officials, who provided him with classified information that was interpreted by those officials as faulting intelligence agency procedures relative to the agencies' own related fact-gathering. The following day, Nunes publicly announced his findings, before and after privately sharing them with Mr. Trump in the White House. He presented those findings in such a manner as was likely intended to discredit the intelligence agencies; to draw a legal, political or moral equivalency between the intelligence agencies' behavior and that of the Trump campaign; and in any event to distract from the media's attention to growing evidence of contacts between Russian officials and campaign figures. Nunes repeatedly declined to acknowledge his White House visit; to identify the White House aides with whom he had dealt there; and to share the data with his fellow committee members from either party. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 12

3-21-17	[ Continued. ] The secret White House visit, the briefing of Mr. Trump, the public announcements, and the protracted withholding of data all were without precedent, violated the committee's protocols, and strongly suggested that the White House was unlawfully attempting to corrupt the committee's investigatory work.	9, 10, 12
3-22-17	Time Magazine interview about "truth." Mr. Trump gave an interview to Time magazine for a cover story about how he had handled truth and falsehood during his career. In that interview he stated that he could "instinctively" and infallibly predict the truth even before verifiable facts had appeared; that the supportive audiences at his continuing campaign-style rallies were demonstrating that he was governing well; and that the Wall Street Journal is "fake news." He went on to extol his recent election success, and he predicted that he would beat Richard Nixon's record as to the number of times an individual would have been featured on the cover of Time magazine. He ended the interview with this statement: "I can't be doing so badly, because I'm president, and you're not."	1, 7, 9, 10, 11
3-23-17	Falsehood tally. The Washington Post documented at least 14 falsehoods contained in Mr. Trump's Time magazine interview.	7
3-23-17	Health care bill threats. Mr. Trump delivered an ultimatum to Republican members of the House of Representatives: that if they did not immediately pass the faltering Ryan-Trump health care bill that undertook to repeal and replace President Obama's ACA, he would walk away from negotiations and let the ACA stand. The move seemed intended to threaten House Republicans with a result so embarrassing to them that it could jeopardize their ability to be re-elected, while allowing Mr. Trump to publicly blame them rather than himself for the lack of Congressional action. Although previous presidents had pressed members of Congress hard, several features of Mr. Trump's behavior seemed extraordinary, as follows. [ Continued below. ]	9, 10, 11

3-23-17	[Continued.] First, he had not shown much knowledge of or interest in the content, complexities or implications of a replacement for the ACA; rather, by admission of his own staff, his goal was mainly to achieve the optics of a legislative "win," regardless of what the "win" consisted of relative to national economic and social impact, both of which would be considerable under any new health care plan. Second, his threat to abandon any attempt to fix, repeal or replace the ACA if he did not get his way with House Republicans appeared not only to forsake his campaign promises on the subject but to demonstrate a complete lack of commitment to actually solving the health insurance issues that were facing the nation. In sum, his entire motivation appeared to be one of self-aggrandizement rather than the public good.	9, 10, 11
3-24-17	Health care bill collapse, blame, further threats. As the Ryan-Trump health care bill continued moving toward failure, Mr. Trump formally withdrew his support, and the measure was not voted upon. After the collapse, which was considered shocking and politically damaging by House Republicans, Mr. Trump blamed House Democrats for not supporting the bill, even though he had never sought their input or support, and even though he had categorically demonized them on that subject and many others. The New York Times identified five additional false or misleading statements within Mr. Trump's post-collapse commentary. In that commentary, Mr. Trump also threatened to let the ACA "explode" (or arguably even to help cause it to explode) rather than deploying various administrative tools available to him to stabilize the health insurance market under that law – as a means explicitly intended to embarrass Democrats rather than to protect the health of Americans. (CSD continues to not take a position on the shape of any health insurance legislation; only on Mr. Trump's style of governing with respect to it.)	7, 9, 10, 11

3-24-17	Cancellation of Yates testimony. Former acting attorney general Sally Yates was an Obama administration appointee who had informed the Trump White House of then National Security Advisor Michael Flynn's misrepresentations relative to his previous contacts with Russian officials, and whom Mr. Trump had subsequently fired for an unrelated matter – refusing to enforce his initial travel ban. Yates was scheduled to testify before the House Intelligence Committee on March 28, on the subject of Russian contacts with Trump campaign figures. During the week before the scheduled testimony, Mr. Trump's Justice Department advised Yates that she could not legally testify without Mr. Trump's permission. On March 24, Yates confirmed her intention to testify, and within hours after that committee chair Devin Nunes cancelled the hearing during which she was scheduled to testify – thus further evidencing a an unlawful attempt by the White House to corrupt the committee's investigation and to protect Mr. Trump and his associates.	9, 10, 12
3-24-17	Continuing involvement with family business. Mr. Trump's son Eric – who with his brother Donald, Jr. had come to manage their father's business after the inauguration – told Forbes magazine that he would be providing financial reports on the business to his father throughout the latter's presidency, despite the president's prior assurances to the contrary.	7. 15
3-25/26-17	Shifting health care bill blame. Having initially blamed Democrats for the crash of the health care bill, Mr. Trump now tweeted innuendos as to others who were to blame: first, House Speaker Paul Ryan (by directing viewers to a Fox news program which would advance that point of view); then the House's conservative Freedom Caucus. He did not blame himself.	9, 10, 11
3-26-17	Golf club outings, promotion. The Washington Post and The New York Times each reported that Mr. Trump had visited hotel and golf club properties that bore his name for eight weekends in a row, and on nearly one out of three days during which he had been president. The reports raised questions as to Mr. Trump's productivity as president during those trips. They went on to conclude that that conduct had materially promoted Mr. Trump's business brand and had implicitly encouraged clients to patronize his properties so as to get visual or personal access to him; that is, that he effectively was using the office of the presidency for personal gain.	10, 11, 15

3-27-17	Icahn conflicts. The New York Times reported that billionaire investor Carl Icahn – Mr. Trump's main advisor working to deregulate the mixing of ethanol with gasoline – was the 82% owner of an oil refiner that would save hundreds of millions of dollars if the regulatory fix he was seeking were to be adopted. Icahn had vocally supported Mr. Trump in the latter's campaign, to which he had also contributed nearly $200,000. Since the election, the stock price of Icahn's refining company had increased by 50%, generating a paper profit of $455 million for Icahn. Icahn had numerous other investments – some presently under federal investigation – that likewise stood to benefit from his relationship with the Trump administration.	16
3-27-17	Disparagement of House investigation. Mr. Trump again sought to obstruct the House Intelligence Committee's Russia investigation by tweeting that the committee should investigate the Clintons, not his campaign or his administration. He wrote that the "Trump Russia story is a hoax."	7, 9, 10, 11, 12
3-27-17	Sessions on sanctuary cities. Attorney General Jeff Sessions, in a news conference, vowed to punish sanctuary cities – those whose police departments do not fully cooperate with federal immigration authorities in reporting or turning over undocumented migrants, so as to preserve community relations and information sources. Sessions falsely implied that his announced policy differed materially from that of the Obama administration, until a reporter's question caused him to concede to the contrary. In addition, he peppered his statements with racist and highly debatable scare-mongering: for example, he blamed sanctuary cities for facilitating "DUIs, assaults, burglaries, drug crimes, gang rapes, crimes against children and murders"; and he said that "[c]ountless Americans would be alive today and countless loved ones would not be grieving today if these policies of sanctuary cities were ended." (CSD does not take a position on sanctuary cities; only on Sessions' disingenuous and demagogic commentary.)	17 (6, 7, 9)

3-28-17	Ford job claims. Mr. Trump tweeted that Ford Motor Company would be investing $1.2 billion in Michigan manufacturing facilities, strongly implying that Ford's plan was the result of Mr. Trump's policies designed to create manufacturing jobs. Several hours later, press secretary Sean Spicer began a news conference by similarly hailing Ford's announcement, and similarly implying that the credit belonged to Mr. Trump. Only when questioned by a reporter did Spicer acknowledge that he was not aware of any causal relationship between administration policies and Ford's plan. The episode followed previous instances since the election in which Mr. Trump had taken credit for instances of saving and creating jobs when the pertinent corporate plans had already been proceeding and were not consequences of his presidency.	7, 11
3-29-17	Rejection of EPA's science. EPA director Scott Pruitt (himself not a scientist) specifically rejected his own agency's scientific findings – that a widely used pesticide endangers farm workers – to justify his rejection of a ban on the pesticide.	17 (8)
3-30-17	Attack on libel law. Mr. Trump, in a tweet, revived his earlier call to change libel laws so that he could sue The New York Times, the quality of whose news he once again criticized. He did not explain how the law could be changed (which in fact would require the overturning of long-established Supreme Court precedent in interpreting the Constitution).	1, 2, 10
3-30-17	Gullibility re Russian falsehoods. In testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee, a senior intelligence analyst from (Philadelphia's) Foreign Policy Research Institute said that Mr. Trump's false tweeting about rigged elections and massive voter fraud appeared to have been at least partly inspired by Russian-disseminated conspiracy theories that had been posted to social media. He said that Russian trolls may have even directed their postings to Mr. Trump's likely attention; and that in any event they had succeeded in fomenting his false public statements, and thereby in injuring the United States and helping Russia.	7, 10, 11

3-30-17	Bannon's continuing Breitbart links. The Daily Beast reported that Mr. Trump's top advisor, Steve Bannon, had continued to communicate about coverage of the administration with editors of Breitbart News, a pro-Trump, white nationalist organization that he previously led, in violation of his ethics pledge.	17 (6, 15)
3-31-17	Depletion of technology office. The New York Times reported that the White House's office for technology had been almost totally depleted of staff under the Trump administration; that the programs it had run were idling; and that the office's input had not been sought for Mr. Trump's harsh environment-related decisions. Under previous presidents, the office had advised on such matters as medical pandemics, nuclear accidents, the impact of robotics on the American work force, internet piracy, the use of commercial drones, oil spills, and other commercial, social and environmental matters.	8
3-31-17	Hollowing out the State Department. The Washington Post reported that Secretary Rex Tillerson – who himself had no foreign policy experience – had appointed political advisors rather than foreign policy experts as his top deputies; that he had isolated himself from the State Department's (expert) career staff; and that the staff in turn had come to feel marginalized and mistrustful. Many staff members were alarmed that Tillerson had not fought to retain the budget and effectiveness of the department that he had come to lead. Foreign diplomats likewise were "rattled," including by Tillerson's failure to appoint senior staff for them to interface with.	13, 17 (13)
3-31-17	Obama spying charged again. Press secretary Sean Spicer again, and without citing evidence, accused the Obama administration of having conducted unlawful surveillance of the Trump campaign.	17 (7, 9, 10, 11)
3-31-17	Lawsuit: incitement to violence. A federal judge in Louisville ruled that a lawsuit brought against Mr. Trump for his having directed a campaign crowd to eject protestors last summer could proceed; specifically, that "free speech" was not a defense to Mr. Trump's intentional incitement to violence.	5

Addendum 2– April 20, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns dated March 20, 2017, and Addendum 1 to that document dated April 3, 2017, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen since the date of Addendum 1. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior identified in CSD's Statement of Principles.

4-3-17	Attack on Congressional investigations. Mr. Trump, in a series of tweets, repeated that (1) the issue properly before the various Congressional investigative committees should not be Russian interference in the American presidential election but alleged spying on him and his campaign associates by Obama administration officials, and (2) Hillary Clinton was a pawn of Russia's president Putin. His information, as in some previous episodes, appeared to have been based on the reporting by right-wing news outlets, rather on any analysis by security experts within his own administration.	7, 9, 10, 11
4-4-17	Initial reaction to Syrian gas attack. Reacting to a horrific poison gas attack perpetrated by Syrian dictator Bashar al-Assad against his own people, Mr. Trump blamed President Obama for not having restrained Assad more forcefully some years previous. In fact Mr. Trump had long urged President Obama not to move militarily against Assad; and just days prior to the gassing Mr. Trump's top staff (Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and UN Ambassador Nikki Haley) had stated that fighting or removing Mr. Assad was not an administration priority. (CSD does not take a position on whether or how the U.S. should respond to Assad's atrocities or otherwise attempt to resolve the Syrian civil war; only on Mr. Trump's disingenuous and demagogic commentary on the latest atrocity.)	9, 10, 11

4-5-17	Kushner's broadening portfolio. A growing number of accounts in The New York Times, The Washington Post and The Wall Street Journal had noted the expanding diplomatic and administrative portfolios of Mr. Trump's son-in-law, Jared Kushner – who had no previous government, policy or diplomatic experience. That expansion was occurring even while countless senior positions for experienced policy and diplomatic professionals within the administration remain unfilled.	11, 13
4-5-17	Abandonment of human rights advocacy. A growing number of accounts in The New York Times, The Washington Post and The Wall Street Journal had noted Mr. Trump's pointed de-linking of human rights advocacy from general foreign policy. Prior episodes, as reported by CSD, had included the administration's controversial absence from a human rights hearing conducted by the Organization of American States, and Secretary Rex Tillerson's distancing himself from the State Department's roll-out of its annual human rights country reports. Other episodes included Mr. Trump's declining to criticize human rights abuses in Russia and the Philippines; more recently his uncritical embrace of human rights-abusing regimes such as those in Egypt and Bahrain; and his de facto acceptance of the continuing atrocities of Syria's Bashar al-Assad. While all previous presidential administrations have felt compelled to deal with, and at times to mute their criticism of, serious rights-abusing regimes, Mr. Trump's early and seemingly wholesale rejection of human rights advocacy had reportedly come to alarm both Republican and Democratic champions of international human rights.	14

4-5-17	Empathy for O'Reilly. Mr. Trump defended Fox News commentator Bill O'Reilly relative to the recent revelation that O'Reilly had settled five sexual harassment claims brought against him – going so far as to say that O'Reilly should have fought the claims rather than settling them. Regardless of what O'Reilly's behavior and legal liability might or might not have been, Mr. Trump's comments were gratuitous, outside the scope of his presidential duties, outside all presidential norms of both decorum and involvement in private citizens' legal battles, reminiscent of Mr. Trump's own history of incurring many sexual harassment allegations, reminiscent of his boasting on an Access Hollywood video of having routinely assaulted women, and, in all, confirming his greater (and possibly visceral) affinity for sexual predators than for their victims.	6, 10, 11
4-5-17	Attacks on Rice, Obama. Mr. Trump, without citing evidence but seemingly relying on reporting from right-wing news outlets, casually told The New York Times that he believed that President Obama's national security adviser Susan Rice committed a crime in leaking names of Trump associates who were under surveillance by U.S. intelligence officials. Current and former intelligence officials from both Republican and Democratic administrations had said that they did not believe that Rice's actions were unusual or unlawful. In the same interview, Mr. Trump went on to repeat his familiar charge that "the Russia story is a total hoax." The episode followed Mr. Trump's having accused President Obama of having criminally surveilled him, again on the strength of right-wing media reports and without evidence from Mr. Trump's own government security agencies.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12
4-6-17	Withdrawal from global commitments. A New York Times op-ed, commenting on Mr. Trump's imminent meeting with Chinese president Xi Jinping, summarized the threats associated with Mr. Trump's serial withdrawal from international commitments as follows: "By undoing American support for an international agreement on climate change, repudiating an Asia-oriented trade deal and calling for funding cuts for the United Nations, Mr. Trump has already ceded leadership in key areas to Mr. Xi, who is eager to expand Beijing's role as an international power and has increasingly positioned his country as a competitor of the United States. It will be disastrous for America and the world if Mr. Trump continues on this disengagement path."	13, 14

4-6-17	Syrian missile strike. [Note: This entry is unusually long, due to the matter's complexity and momentousness.] At 8:40 p.m. Eastern time, Mr. Trump launched a cruise missile strike against Syrian government airfields in retaliation for or protest against the Syrian government's gassing of Syrian civilians two days previous. The gassing had occurred in connection with the six-year-old civil war in Syria, during which up to half a million had died, countless others had been injured or maimed, the surviving population had become wretched, and millions of Syrian refugees had fled to other countries. The Syrian dictator Bashar al-Assad was being supported militarily in the war by the undemocratic regimes of Russia, Iran and Hezbollah. Syria was also, of course, a sovereign nation, and this was the first ever American strike against its government. Mr. Trump claimed that the reason for the strike was his emotional response to the cable television images of the victims of the gassing. The strike represented a reversal of Mr. Trump's policy, publicly confirmed by his administration just days previous, to acquiesce to Syrian president Bashar al-Assad's continuing rule over Syria. It was also a dramatic reversal of his cultivation of Russia and its president, Vladimir Putin. It was also a reversal of Mr. Trump's firm caution over a period of years to then President Obama not to take military action against the Assad regime. And it was a reversal of Mr. Trump's previous and seemingly total disinterest in international human rights and humanitarian issues. Mr. Trump's action did not accompany, nor was it immediately followed by, any articulation of an overall diplomatic, military or strategic plan for dealing with Syrian chemical weapons, the Syrian civil war, Assad's mass murder of his people with non-chemical weapons, the unsavory coalition of Syria's allies (all hostile to the United States), or the advancement of international human rights norms in the world generally. Within the next two days, however, the administration commented variously. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson said that overall U.S. policy toward the Syrian government, including a rejection of U.S.-led regime change, was unaltered. But U.N. ambassador Nikki Haley said that the U.S. now supported Syrian regime change as "a priority." [Continued below.]	9, 10

4-6-17	[Continued.] Mr. Trump had launched the strike without consulting Congress, despite having previously cautioned Mr. Obama not to take any such action without Congressional approval. He launched the strike without the approval of the United Nations Security Council. He launched the strike after having notified U.S. allies only moments previous, and after the strike was set in motion. And he launched the strike after having famously blocked Syrian refugees from entering the U.S. following his inauguration. As the missiles were launching, Mr. Trump, his daughter Ivanka, and his son-in-law Jared Kushner were having an outwardly serene and much photographed dinner with Chinese president Xi Jinping at Mr. Trump's Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida. Immediately after the strike, still at Mar-a-Lago, Mr. Trump announced the strike to television reporters, and it came to dominate the prime time television news. In that announcement, he referred to the suffering of Syrian victims (especially children), and four times to God and prayer – things he had rarely done before in presentations to general audiences. The strike had come after a turbulent period in Washington for the Trump administration (which may have had a bearing on the strike, as noted below). Two days previous, Mr. Trump had restructured the National Security Council, including by purging from it his chief political strategist Stephen Bannon. On the day of the strike, the Senate had terminated the long-established filibuster rule as to Supreme Court nominations so that Mr. Trump's nominee Neil Gorsuch could be approved over Democratic objections. Also on that day, Cong. Devin Nunes had temporarily recused himself from the House Intelligence Committee's investigation of Russian communications with the Trump campaign in the face of imminent calls for an investigation of him by the Office of Congressional Ethics and the House Ethics Committee for possibly having collaborated with Mr. Trump in his capacity as chair of the Intelligence Committee. [Continued below.]	9, 10
--------	---	-------

4-6-17	[Continued.]  As of the date of this Addendum, CSD does not take a position relative to the wisdom, effect or legality of the cruise missile strike. In addition, CSD recognizes that the consequences, policies and perceptions around the strike are likely to develop and change over the coming weeks and months. In any event, CSD amply acknowledges the possibility that the strike may have been well planned and executed, strategically astute, and undertaken in good faith as a wise and heartfelt response to the Syrian atrocity. At the same time, however, in view of (1) Mr. Trump's history of capricious, reckless, opaque and cynical behavior since taking office, (2) his utter disregard for the suffering of Syrian civilians and refugees prior to the strike, (3) the dearth of experienced civilian diplomats and international strategists in his cabinet and inner circle, and (4) the suddenness of his multiple policy reversals in the matter, CSD saw the possibility of impetuosity, strategic rashness and/or unstated motivations as having attended the strike. In particular: 1. The strike, and its television prime-time coincidence and announcement, might have been undertaken to distract the American public from Mr. Trump's many setbacks during the early days of his administration (the failure of the health care bill, the failure of the travel ban roll-out, the continuing investigations of contacts between his campaign staff and Russian officials). The strike and its publicity might also have been undertaken to distract from the past two days' troubling political developments for Mr. Trump (the end of the filibuster rule, the National Security Council shake-up, the recusal of Cong. Nunes); those domestic events, any one of which would ordinarily have dominated the evening news, were simply squeezed out by the coverage of the cruise missile strike. (Observers have frequently noted Mr. Trump's penchant for creating media distractions when distressed; and CSD has long feared that he could create dangerous military and diplomatic distractions if his domestic political fortunes were sufficiently jeopardized.) 2. The strike might have been intended to spectacularly impress American voters with Mr. Trump's seeming boldness, resolve, humanity, righteousness and strength ... even if not changing very much militarily or strategically. [Continued below.]	9, 10
--------	--	-------

4-6-17	[Continued.] 3. The strike might have been intended to distract from, or to cover for, the speculations raised by some Republicans and some Democrats that Mr. Trump's recent announcement that he would abide Assad's rule over Syria may have actually contributed to Assad's decision to mount the gas attack. 4. Mr. Trump might have timed the strike to coincide with his dinner with the Chinese president, so as to impress, intimidate or distract him in the face of what observers had widely anticipated would be a discussion in which Mr. Trump would have been far less experienced, knowledgeable and prepared than his counterpart. 5. The strike might have been intended to demonstrate to the American public Mr. Trump's disregard for Russian interests, relative to the ongoing investigations of Mr. Trump's attraction to those interests, and to win over Democratic and Republican members of Congress who had been suspicious of his Russian ties. 6. Mr. Trump and his inexperienced diplomatic team might or might not have thought through the diplomatic and strategic consequences of the strike – which consequences, as of that evening, stood to range from the minor to the enormous, relative to American relations with China, Russia, Syria, and Iran (all of which countries sharply criticized the strike). Regardless of whether any of the above enumerated irregularities occurred, the mere fact that they seemed reasonably conceivable was highly disturbing to CSD.	9, 10
4-6-17	Kushner disclosure. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner had omitted disclosing dozens of prior foreign contacts of his – some with Russians – when seeking a top-secret security clearance to join the White House staff, and that that failure may have been felonious.	12, 15, 17 (7)

4-12-17	Threat to ACA. Mr. Trump expressly threatened to sabotage the ACA by withholding certain government payments to insurance companies, as a means to force Democrats in Congress to bargain with him relative to his second run at a new health care plan. More directly than most presidential hard bargaining with Congress, the political threat went directly to the ability of Americans to carry health insurance, and thus to their very health; and in that sense it struck CSD as uniquely extortionate, callous and cruel.	11
4-12-17	String of falsehoods. The New York Times reported that within a period of 24 hours, Mr. Trump had repeated several false or misleading claims: among other things, that he had not known his chief strategist Stephen Bannon until recently; that Democrats were to blame for his failure to fill his many administration vacancies; that FBI director James Comey had deemed Hillary Clinton guilty of various charges relating to her handling of classified information; that Mr. Trump himself deserved credit for NATO's counterterrorism efforts; and that former national security adviser Susan Rice improperly surveilled his campaign associates and leaked their identities to the news media.	7

4-12-17	Reversals. [Note: This entry is unusually long, due to the matter's complexity and momentousness.] Over a period of two days, Mr. Trump reversed numerous positions that he had vocally articulated during and after his election camp. In particular, he now said that China was not a currency manipulator; that he favored a low interest-rate policy; that he liked and respected Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen and might re-appoint her at the end of her term; that the Export-Import Bank is valuable; and that NATO is not obsolete. Those reversals came hard on the heels of his reversal of policy on the Syrian civil war. And they followed an earlier series of reversals of his many provocative populist positions (compiled here by CSD): pulling back from harsh threats to punish China for its trade policies; minimizing his proposed modifications to NAFTA; hiring many recent lobbyists to serve in their respective areas of lobbying activity, using lobbyists to select his cabinet, and generally encouraging lobbyist participation in policy formation; courting and accepting massive funding from corporations and billionaires (for his inaugural festivities); relenting in his promise to deport undocumented immigrants who had arrived here as children; adopting policies favorable to Wall Street (including plans to cripple the Dodd Frank financial regulatory rules and to rescind the IRA fiduciary rule); issuing many executive orders (having previously faulted President Obama for issuing such orders); allowing the Keystone XL pipeline to not use American steel in its construction; not moving the U.S. embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem; not tampering with the nuclear deal with Iran; not reversing President Obama's Cuba policy; supporting a health care bill that did not offer affordable care to everyone and that gave large tax breaks to the wealthy; appointing many wealthy figures, including donors, to his cabinet; appointing several alumni of Goldman Sachs (which firm he had demonized during his campaign) to senior administrative positions; hiring a pro-immigration figure as his top White House economist; allowing his cabinet members to confront Russia over its complicity with Syria; apparently abandoning his campaign promise to bring down prescription drug prices after having met with drug industry executives; abandoning his campaign promise to release his income tax returns; waffling on the extent of the wall he planned to build at the Mexican border; not prosecuting Hillary Clinton; not suing the women who had accused him of sexual predation; accepting the advice of generals rather than criticizing them; and retreating from his support of waterboarding and other forms of torture. [Continued below.]	10, 11
---------	---	--------

4-12-17	[Continued.] CSD does not take a position on the respective policies, either before or after the reversals, except to the extent that they may pertain to our democratic themes; and to the extent that through some of the reversals Mr. Trump may have moved toward more moderate or mainstream positions, many of CSD's members could welcome that. But as of the date of this Addendum, there was no assurance that Mr. Trump would not reverse again, or go off in completely different directions. Most importantly, the reversals pointed to Mr. Trump's behavior as capricious (that is, poorly thought out, whether before or after any given reversal); unprincipled; dishonest and manipulative (that is, intended to have deceived voters prior to the election and/or policy makers and others after the election); or some of each. In any event, as of the date of this Addendum, CSD was concerned that both domestic governance and international diplomacy could be jeopardized by an appearance that any one of Mr. Trump's stated positions, on any topic, could be unreliable.	10, 11
4-13-17	Reversal denial. Press secretary Sean Spicer denied that Mr. Trump's policy reversals on the previous day had amounted to reversals.	17 (7)
4-15-17	Visitor logs. Following and despite weeks of criticism by mainstream news outlets, Mr. Trump firmly declined to release logs of visitors to the White House, his Florida resort Mar-a-Lago, and his New York home in Trump Tower. While he was under no legal obligation to release the logs, and while the tradition of releasing logs had begun only under President Obama, in the case of Mr. Trump the suspicions around non-transparency, conflicts of interests, lobbyist access and inappropriate contacts with foreign powers had been so extensive that the refusal to release the logs cast an even greater cloud over the integrity and motives of the current administration. The development was especially notable in that Mr. Trump had repeatedly called on President Obama to release more records, and had campaigned on the slogan "drain the swamp."	9, 11

4-15-17	Carte blanche for military. The Wall Street Journal reported that in Afghanistan, Iraq and Syria, Mr. Trump was giving the military wide latitude to conduct operations; that the president himself was not asserting civilian control over those operations; that no broad or long-term strategies had been articulated relative to those operations; and that State Department officials were concerned that diplomacy was out of favor. One diplomat said that the State Department was being "systematically sidelined."	9, 13
4-16-17	Army nomination. The Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump's nominee for Secretary of the Army has a long history of antipathy toward and disparagement of Muslims.	17 (6)
4-16-17	Campaign funds to Trump businesses. The Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump's 2020 re-election campaign had already paid close to $500,000 to Trump businesses, such as his golf resorts and Trump Tower – thus both immediately enriching Mr. Trump and building his brand for the longer term.	15
4-16-17	Widespread conflicts, opaqueness. The New York Times, with extensive analysis, reported that Mr. Trump "is populating the white House and federal agencies with former lobbyists, lawyers and consultants who in many cases are helping to craft new policies for the same industries in which they recently earned a paycheck. ... In at least two cases, the appointments may have already led to violations of the administration's own ethics rules. But evaluating if and when such violations have occurred has become almost impossible because the Trump administration is secretly issuing waivers to the rules. ... This revolving door of lobbyists and government officials is not new in Washington. Both parties make a habit of it. But the Trump administration is more vulnerable to conflicts than the prior administration, particularly after the president eliminated an ethics provision that prohibits lobbyists from joining agencies they lobbied in the prior two years. The White House also announced ... that it would keep its visitors' logs secret, discontinuing the release of information on corporate executives, lobbyists and others who enter the complex, often to try to influence federal policy. The changes have drawn intense criticism from government ethics advocates across the city."	17 (15)

4-16-17	Russian media faults American media. A New York Times columnist reported that on a recent trip to Russia, the Russian state-controlled media – referencing Mr. Trump's often-articulated point of view – characterized mainstream American news reporting as unreliable and as one of the biggest problems facing America.	7, 13
4-17-17	Praise for Erdogan. Mr. Trump called Turkish president Recep Erdogan to congratulate him on having won a referendum that amended the Turkish constitution in a manner that moved the country further from democracy and closer to dictatorship. The referendum results greatly expanded Erdogan's personal powers; the voting had been highly contentious; nearly half of Turkish voters had opposed it; and voting irregularities favoring Erdogan were reported. The following day, a New York Times news analysis stated: "Mr. Trump and Mr. Erdogan are viewed as ideological bedfellows: They are populist leaders with little patience for the courts or other checks on their power."	14
4-18-17	No tax returns. The New York Times reported that despite a growing call for Mr. Trump to release his tax returns (calls made by participants in "tax marches" across the country two days previous, and by more than a dozen Republicans in Congress), and despite ethical questions as to how Mr. Trump himself might profit from any new tax legislation, Mr. Trump continued to ridicule those calls, having tweeted on the day of the tax marches that the protesters were being paid and were merely resentful that he had won the presidential election.	9, 11, 15
4-18-17	Golf travels. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump, during his presidency to date, had spent seven out of thirteen weekends, and one out of every five minutes (not counting travel time), in Palm Beach, Florida – often playing golf. (The mainstream press had already consistently reported not only that those outings were building the Trump business brand at his Mar-a-Lago resort, and that they may have been distracting Mr. Trump from serious governing time, but that Mr. Trump's recreational outings were far more extensive and expensive than President Obama's, which Mr. Trump had virulently criticized.)	10, 11, 15

4-18-17	Growth of Ivanka's businesses. The Associated Press reported that Mr. Trump's daughter and senior adviser Ivanka had obtained three Chinese trademarks for her fashion brand on the same day that she, her husband Jared Kushner and Mr. Trump were dining with Chinese president Xi Jinping at Mar-a-Lago during the cruise missile strike on Syria. AP did not allege any impropriety in the trademark grants, in that Ms. Trump's company had been applying for and receiving many trademarks globally. But it cautioned that Ms. Trump's growing involvement in Chinese (and other foreign) affairs, combined with the global growth of her business, likely would increase the potential for her conflicts of interest in policy making. AP also reported that Ms. Trump's company's sales had grown dramatically since the presidential campaign and election, likely due to her new political prominence. (That is, she had profited directly and materially from being associated with the office of the presidency). AP also wrote that sales spiked astronomically just after campaign manager Kellyanne Conway publicly encouraged shoppers to buy Ms. Trump's brand in February.	15
4-18-17	Atlanta election commentary. In denouncing a Democratic candidate's surprisingly strong bid in a special Congressional primary in an Atlanta suburb, Mr. Trump tweeted on election day that the candidate "will raise your taxes" and is "very bad on crime." Immediately after the candidate's failure to win the election outright (thus being forced into a run-off with the top Republican vote-getter), Mr. Trump, in a tweet, took credit for the result and denounced the Democrat's "FAKE media support." (CSD does not object to Mr. Trump's having voiced his views on the election; rather to his simplistic fear-mongering during the vote and his attack on the news media afterwards.)	1, 9
4-19-17	Disparate messages on Russia. The Washington Post reported that while Mr. Trump's top foreign policy staff – UN ambassador Nikki Haley, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, CIA director Mike Pompeo, and national security advisor H.R. McMaster – had been highly critical of Russian aggression, Mr. Trump continued not to be. Administration officials and independent commentators alike had found the divide inexplicable, and European allies had found it disturbing. Russian foreign minister Sergei Lavrov too had noted the disjunction, but had expressed his belief and reliance on the still friendly posture of Mr. Trump.	12

4-20-17	Armada to North Korea. Earlier in April, Mr. Trump had prominently announced that he had directed an aircraft carrier group toward – and that it was headed toward – North Korean waters as a show of force in response to that nation's continued testing of ballistic missiles and nuclear weapons. Some days later, news reports revealed that the carrier group did not set out for that destination until several days after Mr. Trump's announcement. Days after that revelation, how and why the misinformation or miscommunication had occurred remained unclear; and press secretary Sean Spicer denied that an error had occurred at all. In an April 20 news analysis, The Wall Street Journal reported that the Trump administration was still working "to quell an international furor and calm questions over its credibility ... after misstating by thousands of miles" the location of the aircraft carrier. (CSD does not currently have reason to believe that Mr. Trump intentionally misled the world on the carrier's location, or that the error was even his fault; but we note from the quoted analysis that the episode appears to have added to the accumulation of worldwide "credibility" issues relative to international diplomacy and strategy that have arisen under his presidency.)	10
4-20-17	Claims of accomplishments. The Washington Post evaluated Mr. Trump's recent statement that "no administration has accomplished more in the first 90 days." In fact, statistics reveal that his administration has accomplished very little relative to other presidents.	7

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 3 – May 7, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior identified in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

4-20-17	Claim that all protests are illegal. In defending a lawsuit brought by protesters who had been roughed up at one of Mr. Trump's campaign events, Mr. Trump's lawyers advanced the unusual argument that the protesters had no First Amendment right of expression because they had violated Mr. Trump's own First Amendment right to speak. If Mr. Trump were to prevail in this defense, all protests at political events could be forever barred. The entry of this element of Mr. Trump's defense followed his original pleading to the effect that Mr. Trump, as president, was immune from any personal lawsuit whatever – an equally unusual position.	2, 3, 9
4-20-17	Real estate sales to foreigners and opaque shells. After conducting a four-month investigation, USA Today reported that since beginning his presidential campaign, and again since being elected president, Mr. Trump had sold tens of millions of dollars in residential properties, much of it to individuals connected with foreign governments or to shell companies with unidentifiable ownership. Many more residential units remain for sale, under like circumstances.	15

4-20-17	Colombian favors at Mar-a-Lago. McClatchey News reported that, a week previous, Mr. Trump had secretly met at his Florida resort, Mar-a-Lago, with two Colombian ex-presidents, who lobbied him against the current Colombian president's peace plan relative to that country's long insurgency – a highly sensitive and significant topic. The ex-presidents appeared to have been invited to Mar-a-Lago by a dues-paying member of that resort with no position in the American government, who thus had used his or her commercial relationship with Mr. Trump (from which Mr. Trump benefited financially) to advance a point of view on international policy. The State Department appeared to have not been aware of the discussion in advance, and the White House denied that it had occurred.	7, 13, 15
4-21-17	Support for French ethno-nationalist. Mr. Trump tweeted that a recent shooting in Paris was a terrorist attack and would and should affect the imminent French presidential election. French investigators had not yet concluded that the shooting was by a terrorist; and the tweet was widely interpreted as constituting support for the candidacy of the pro-Russian, Russian-financed, ethno-nationalist candidate, Marine Le Pen, whose National Front Party had begun as (and still retained material indications of being) a racist and anti-Semitic organization. The National Front and Le Pen are largely reviled by both Democratic and Republican voices in the U.S. Le Pen had previously praised Mr. Trump broadly; former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke had praised both Mr. Trump and Le Pen; and so the circle of affinities as among Putin, Le Pen, Duke and Mr. Trump seemed to be nearly complete.	6, 9, 10, 13
4-21-17	Deletion of refugee resettlement site. In an address at the University of Pennsylvania, Samantha Power – President Obama's ambassador to the United Nations – reported that the government's Web site that she had created, advising American citizens as to how they could help refugees who had been legally admitted to the U.S., had been taken down by the Trump Administration. CSD views this development as further evidence of Mr. Trump's disdain for international norms and commitments to receive and resettle refugees. (That disdain was originally embodied in Mr. Trump's executive order banning travel from Muslim countries and cutting worldwide refugee admissions to the U.S. by more than 50% – all in the midst of the world refugee crisis, which has generated more refugees and internally displaced people than at any time since World War II.)	14

4-23-17	Denial of praise for Wikileaks. The Associated Press released the full transcript of a recent interview with Mr. Trump. In the interview, Mr. Trump made numerous false statements, including that he had never supported WikiLeaks, the anti-American, tell-all Web site that traffics in misappropriated documents. (His previous support for WikiLeaks, vocalized during his campaign, had been based on WikiLeaks' revelation of confidential and embarrassing Democratic Party emails. That support appears on video clips that have been widely distributed. Mr. Trump came to his reversal on WikiLeaks only after public revelations of the role of WikiLeaks in helping Russia influence the presidential election.)	7
4-24-17	Disparagement of opinion polls. Mr. Trump criticized a recent set of opinion polls (conducted by ABC News and The Washington Post, and by NBC News and The Wall Street Journal, respectively) as "fake news." The polls had given him historically low voter approval ratings.	1, 7
4-24-17	Government advertisement for Mar-a-Lago. After an outcry on ethical grounds, the State Department removed from its Web site a glowing photo-essay about Mar-a-Lago, Mr. Trump's for-profit Florida resort and sometimes home. Whether the article had been purposely intended to promote Mr. Trump's business interests is unknown; but at a minimum, it suggested an unusual lack of sensitivity within the Trump administration to conflict of interest questions.	17 (15)
4-25-17	Attack on the press over the Mexican wall. Facing the likelihood that ear-marked funds for the proposed Mexican border wall would not be included in an emergency spending bill that had to proceed in Congress in order to avoid a federal government shut-down, Mr. Trump had indicated that he would likely sign the bill without the earmark. When the mainstream press widely reported that concession, Mr. Trump inaccurately tweeted that the "fake media" were untruthfully reporting that he had "changed [his] position on the WALL."	1, 7
4-25-17	Investigation stand-off. The leadership of the House Oversight Committee revealed that the White House had refused to release documents relating to the hiring and resignation of national security advisor Michael Flynn, who had come under intense scrutiny for his pre-inauguration dealings with Russian officials.	12

4-26-17	Blaming ethics office for slow appointments. In a Fox News interview, White House chief of staff Reince Priebus blamed the unusually slow pace of high-level presidential appointments on delays on the part of the Office of Government Ethics in their vetting of nominees for conflicts of interest. As reported by HuffPost the following day, the OCE responded in an email to a top White House lawyer that the blame-shifting was inaccurate; that, to the contrary, and as supported by statistical data, the White House had seriously lagged in submitting nominees to the OCE; that (also statistically supported) the OCE was clearing its reports unusually quickly; and that some of the submitted nominees "have pushed back against the government's ethics requirements 'with a ferocity we've not previously seen.'"	17 (7, 15)
4-26-17	NAFTA threat. Mr. Trump abruptly and publicly threatened to withdraw from NAFTA without having given that notice to the Mexican and Canadian governments. Those governments' leaders then telephoned Mr. Trump and asked for a renegotiation rather than a withdrawal. By the end of the day, Mr. Trump relented, and agreed to negotiate. One news analysis stated that his initial position and his quick reversal appeared to reflect conflicting inputs from various advisers. Other analyses stated that Mr. Trump had relented simply because of the other leaders' demonstrations of deference. CSD does not know if the events reflected capriciousness or an exercise in inter-personal dominance.	10, 11, 13
4-26-17	Attack on California courts. Mr. Trump and the White House publicly objected to the ruling of a federal district court sitting in San Francisco. The previous day, that court had issued a nationwide preliminary injunction staying part of Mr. Trump's January executive order that had undertaken to strip federal funding from sanctuary cities. The White House wrote hyperbolically that the court's ruling "empower[ed] the worst kind of human trafficking and sex trafficking, and [put] thousands of innocent lives at risk." Mr. Trump himself tweeted a categorical criticism of the quality of the decisions of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals (the court to which any appeal of the San Francisco district court's ruling would be taken). [Continued below.]	2, 6, 9

4-26-17	[ Continued. ] CSD does not take a position on the district court's ruling; but we object to the White House's fear-mongering and to Mr. Trump's categorical and gratuitous condemnation of a particular court.	2, 6, 9
4-26-17	Legal pleadings versus previous statements. The Washington Post, in a news analysis, reported that the federal injunctions against Mr. Trump's several attempts at travel bans and against his move to de-fund sanctuary cities shared a commonality. In each case (the pertinent courts had stated), the administration's outwardly rational and reserved legal pleadings had masked what was likely his true unconstitutional intent, which had been publicly vocalized by Mr. Trump and his aides prior to issuing the subject orders – an intent to bar Muslims for their religion and to punish sanctuary cities for their law enforcement practices. The dissonance between pleadings and reality thus appeared to evidence both a late acknowledgement on the administration's part of the unconstitutionality (and ill-advisedness) of the earlier vocalizations, and a disingenuousness in the subsequent legal pleadings.	6, 7, 9, 10
4-26-17	Threat to Ninth Circuit. Angered by the recent rejections of his executive orders by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and its subsidiary district courts, Mr. Trump told The Washington Examiner that he was "absolutely" considering proposals to split up the appeals court into multiple geographical jurisdictions because of what he perceived to be its liberal bias.	2
4-27-17	Tax Plan. Mr. Trump released a one-page plan to cut business and personal income taxes. Among other things, the plan called for various tax reductions that would materially benefit Mr. Trump, his family, and his wealthy friends, associates and high-ranking advisers – by lowering marginal tax rates, eliminating the Alternative Minimum Tax, eliminating the ACA's 3.8% surcharge on investment income for high earners, repealing the estate tax (which applies only to large estates), and allowing a (low) 15% tax rate for individual profits from "pass-through" businesses such as Mr. Trump's real estate companies. [ Continued below. ]	9, 15

4-27-17	[Continued.] The plan was skeletal, and in its infancy. In addition, the above benefits would accrue to many individuals outside of Mr. Trump's circle. And in any event, CSD does not take a position on the plan with regard to fairness, fiscal soundness or economic consequences. We do, however, note the impossibility of evaluating either specific or overall benefits to Mr. Trump without him having released his tax returns.	9, 15
4-27/28-17	Korea confusion. Within the space of a day, Mr. Trump publicly and casually threatened war with North Korea (even as Secretary of State Rex Tillerson was tamping down the threat of war); publicly and casually threatened to make South Korea pay for an anti-missile system that the U.S. was installing there (without having previously informed the South Korean government); and publicly and casually stated that he wanted to renegotiate or terminate America's "horrible" trade agreement with South Korea (also without prior notice to the South Korean government). All of this reportedly puzzled American policy makers, rattled South Korea in the midst of its presidential election, and was of unknown effect in North Korea.	10, 13
4-28-17	Tax plan versus tax promise. In a news analysis, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's recently announced tax plan, however sparse in detail, almost certainly promised "a multitrillion dollar shift from federal coffers to America's richest families and their heirs," in radical conflict with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin's promise the previous November that the administration would provide "no absolute tax cut for the upper class." Mr. Mnuchin in recent days had also declined to promise that, under the new tax plan, everyone in the middle class would receive tax relief; and the news analysis demonstrated that many middle class members might in fact see a tax increase – all contrary to Mr. Trump's previous assurances to the middle class. CSD does not take a position relative to the substance of Mr. Trump's tax plan; only to any deceptions that may have preceded it or that may have become inherent in it.	7

4-28-17	NRA speech. In a presentation to a National Rifle Association convention, Mr. Trump excited the crowd by demonizing and ridiculing former president Barack Obama, Hillary Clinton and Senator Elizabeth Warren (to whom he referred demeaningly as "Pocahontas," as he had done often during his campaign); by catastrophizing the flow of drugs and criminals from Mexico; and by proclaiming that "freedom is a gift from God." CSD does not take a position on Mr. Trump's support of gun-owners' rights; but it does take issue with the continuation of his demagogic style.	9
4-28-17	Removal of EPA data. The Environmental Protection Agency removed most of its climate change data from its Web site, stating that it was going to change the data to conform with the administration's policies.	8
4-28-17	Wish to eliminate filibuster. Mr. Trump told Fox News that the Senate should eliminate the filibuster, so that he could more easily achieve his legislative goals. That is, with the Republican Party currently in control of the House of Representatives, the Senate and the White House, he would like to remove from Congress the last remaining procedural protection for the minority party and consensus decision-making. While some members of the Senate may have also been inclined to eliminate the filibuster, the prospect of that occurring under Mr. Trump's presidency is particularly concerning to CSD in view of his authoritarian tendencies generally.	9
4-28/29-17	100-day evaluation. In a radio address on April 28, Mr. Trump claimed that the first 100 days of his presidency were "the most successful in our country's history." The following day he accused the "fake media" of refusing to report on his administration's achievements during that period. (Mr. Trump had shown considerable concern in recent weeks about his 100-day scorecard, to the point of – unsuccessfully – attempting to hurry-through legislation as a means of building his record.) [ Continued below. ]	1, 7, 9, 11

4-28/29-17	[Continued.] In fact CNN, The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, The Washington Post and Politico had all amply credited Mr. Trump's successes – in appointing a Supreme Court Justice of his choice, signing a record number of executive orders, and withdrawing the U.S. from the TransPacific Partnership. At the same time, they had regarded many or most of the executive orders as having been of limited effect; they had pointed to Mr. Trump's failure to pass any major legislation in Congress; they had pointed to even his articulation of policies as shifting and confused; they had reported that even politically he had lost ground (at least as measured by voter approval); and they had documented much of that statistically as having been less "successful" than most or all other recent presidents during their correlative first 100 days. Whether Mr. Trump's first 100 days had been "successful" is not of concern to CSD. His false and boastful commentary about them, however, is.	1, 7, 9, 11
4-29-17	Global reactions. A New York Times news analysis indicated that governments and peoples across the globe were reacting to Mr. Trump's foreign and domestic policies variously. Ethno-nationalist political figures, governments and movements were feeling strengthened. But many others, particularly democratic ones, were reacting with puzzlement and concern over Mr. Trump's unpredictability and policy reversals, as well as the loss of American reliability and leadership – including relative to diplomatic competence and the protection of democratic principles. The analysis indicated that relations with democratic allies were degrading, if anything, rather than improving.	9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

4-29-17	Harrisburg rally. At a rally in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania celebrating his first 100 days in office, Mr. Trump spent the first 12 minutes pillorying "fake news" outlets, singling out CNN, MSNBC and the "failing" New York Times – and those attacks drew excited cheers. He invited and elicited jeers for Hillary Clinton – evoking repeated chants of "Lock her up!" He gratuitously and personally attacked Democratic Senator Chuck Schumer as a "bad leader, not a natural leader." When protesters appeared in the crowd, he commandingly directed the police to "get 'em out of here," and then praised the police after the protesters were ejected. He boasted that his first 100 days were immensely successful, that he was keeping all of his campaign promises, and that his progress on his agenda was "historic." He spent approximately half the speech vowing to protect Americans from the viciousness of Hispanic gangs, other criminals that he associated with undocumented immigration, refugees, and Islamist terrorists; in that regard he read a lengthy poem about a poisonous snake – a metaphor for malicious migrants – who prevailed on a woman to take him into her home and then mortally bit her; and he repeatedly evoked the chant, "Build that wall!" He also spent a good deal of time promising jobs for manufacturing, mining and construction workers, implying that he had already done so, and that these were the only (or most) important segments of the American work force and citizenry. He said that he had established "great relationships" with many countries, including Germany. He said that he was succeeding in "draining the swamp" – his campaign phrase referring to the influence of lobbyists, corporations and financiers on the government. He asked the crowd, "Is there any place like a Trump rally?" He referred to God twice. Afterwards, Republican commentator David Gergen (former adviser to four presidents), normally not given to excessive on-air partisanship or to superlatives, said on CNN that it was "the most divisive speech I've heard from a sitting American president." Watergate investigative reporter Carl Bernstein said it was "the most venomous speech by an American president that I've heard in more than 50 years of reporting."  [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 11

4-29-17	[Continued.] A CSD observer – who had grown up in the Harrisburg community in the years after World War II and who had found that community to be tolerant, peaceable, humane, wholesome and sustaining – now found a number of Mr. Trump's statements to be patently untrue, and his presentation in general to be bullying, xenophobic, preening, manipulative, historically uninformed, and frighteningly demagogic.	1, 7, 9, 11
4-29-17	Duterte invitation. In the late evening hours shortly after his Harrisburg rally, and continuing his embrace of foreign leaders known to abuse human rights, Mr. Trump invited to the White House Philippine president Rodrigo Duterte, who had been roundly condemned in the West for his acknowledged direction of and participation in widespread extra-judicial killings of suspected drug traffickers and users. A few months previous, Duterte had publicly called President Obama a "son of a whore"; and so Mr. Trump's invitation added a note of insult to the office of the presidency. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had offered the invitation without having consulted with the State Department or the National Security Council, which agencies were shocked when they learned. Not incidentally, Mr. Trump enjoys lucrative royalties from a Trump-branded hotel in the Philippines.	12, 13, 14, 15
4-30-17	Plan to change libel laws. Chief of staff Reince Priebus told ABC News that Mr. Trump and the White House were considering proposing a constitutional amendment to make it easier for the president to sue the press for defamation. This was a reiteration of Mr. Trump's own repeated calls for the same.	1
4-30-17	Denial of Russian interference. Mr. Trump, in a CBS News interview, continued to support Russia's statements to the effect that Russia had not interfered in the American presidential election to favor Mr. Trump's candidacy – notwithstanding extensive intelligence agency findings to the contrary.	7, 12

5-1-17	Reiteration of Obama wire-tap claim. In a subsequently aired CBS News interview, Mr. Trump continued to maintain that President Obama had ordered the wire-tapping of Trump Tower in New York, despite the continuing absence of evidence to that effect. When asked by the interviewer to offer evidence, he declined.	7, 9, 11
5-1-17	North Korea overtures. A day after publicly praising North Korean leader Kim Jong-un as a strong and successful leader and as a "smart cookie," Mr. Trump told Bloomberg News that he "would be honored" to meet with Kim. Kim is a notorious human rights violator who has violently assassinated his political opponents, and no sitting American president has met with a North Korean president since the Korean War. Promptly after the Bloomberg interview, the White House walked back Mr. Trump's remarks. While new diplomatic approaches to resolving the current American stand-off with nuclear-armed North Korea may well be appropriate, it is not clear that Mr. Trump was aware that, ordinarily, radical breaks from established diplomatic practices are carefully and discretely thought-out and prepared in advance, then announced to diplomatic counterparts before being announced to the press. (Mr. Trump's remarks had come amid a flurry of other unconventional praise on his part for human rights violators and strongmen around the world.)	10, 13, 14
5-1-17	Praise for Andrew Jackson. Mr. Trump, unschooled in American and world history, continued to publicly venerate nineteenth century President Andrew Jackson as a populist, disrupter and deal-maker akin to himself – in this instance by speculating at length that Jackson could have prevented the Civil War had he been president then (a commentary that was promptly questioned by many leading historians). [ Continued below. ]	10, 11, 13, 17 (6)

	[Continued.] CSD is not in the position to evaluate Mr. Trump's views of political history or what might have been. But in his categorical praise of Jackson, Mr. Trump, as in the past, failed to acknowledge that Jackson owned 150 slaves; once published an advertisement urging slave-catchers to apprehend and viciously torture one of Jackson's own runaways (promising "ten dollars extra, for every hundred lashes a person will give him, to the amount of three hundred"); and ordered the winter death march of thousands of Cherokee Indians on the notorious Trail of Tears. CSD would not expect Mr. Trump to acknowledge Jackson's shortcomings with every mention of him; but given the many recent mentions, we would expect at least one acknowledgement. Possibly of greater significance, as conservative columnist George Will was to write in the Washington Post on May 3, was Mr. Trump's statement or implication that no one had previously explored the causes of the Civil War – when in fact those causes had been explored exhaustively for over 150 years. Will placed the Jackson comments within a long list of other historically uninformed outlooks that Mr. Trump had evidenced during and since his campaign: that abolitionist Frederick Douglass was still alive; that Mr. Trump's February address to Congress was the best ever made there; Mr. Trump's casual unawareness of the basic underpinnings of America's Middle East and China policies; and potentially of most dire consequence, his casual unawareness of the premises of America's nuclear capabilities and strategy. [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13, 17 (6)

5-1-17	[Continued.] Will wrote: "It is urgent for Americans to think and speak clearly about President Trump's inability to do either. This seems to be not a mere disinclination but a disability. It is not merely the result of intellectual sloth but of an untrained mind bereft of information and married to stratospheric self-confidence. ... What is most alarming (and mortifying to the University of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated) is not that Trump has entered his eighth decade unscathed by even elementary knowledge about the nation's history. As this column has said before, the problem isn't that he does not know this or that, or that he does not know that he does not know this or that. Rather, the dangerous thing is that he does not know what it is to know something. ... Americans have placed vast military power at the discretion of this mind, a presidential discretion that is largely immune to restraint by the Madisonian system of institutional checks and balances. So, it is up to the public to quarantine this presidency by insistently communicating to its elected representatives a steady, rational fear of this man whose combination of impulsivity and credulity render him uniquely unfit to take the nation into a military conflict." * (See endnote for a link to Will's complete column.)	10, 11, 13, 17 (6)
5-1/2-17	Spending bill. On May 1, through Vice President Mike Pence and budget director Mick Mulvaney, Mr. Trump claimed credit for and victory in an emergency bi-partisan spending bill that had been negotiated in Congress the previous evening so as to avoid a government shut-down. But The Washington Post reported on the following day that the outcome was in fact much more a victory for Democrats and moderate Republicans, and had been negotiated within Congress rather than by Mr. Trump. Mr. Trump's disappointments included the bill's provision for continued subsidies of insurance companies under the ACA, increased funding for the National Institutes of Health and an energy research project (both of which Mr. Trump had sought to cut), only very minor reductions in funding for the Environmental Protection Agency, only modest increases in military funding, a modest increase in overall non-defense spending, no withholding of funds for sanctuary cities, no cut of Planned Parenthood funding, and no funding for the Mexican border wall. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11

5-1/2-17	[Continued.] Within a day, after the Democratic leadership (perhaps injudiciously) had spoken triumphantly about its claimed victory, Mr. Trump appeared to reverse his view of the funding bill; blamed the minority Democrats for obstructionism; and tweeted that the Senate should abolish the filibuster rule for legislation or that a government shut-down should be forced on the Democrats in the fall – either of which measures, if adopted, would serve to aggrandize his control of the government. Many Republican and Democratic senators (including majority leader Mitch McConnell) promptly spoke out against the idea of eliminating the filibuster for legislation. As for the shut-down, no sitting president had previously suggested it; and by broad Congressional Republican consensus, a shut-down had historically been and would now again be fiscally expensive and politically toxic for Republicans. In fact Mr. Trump himself was now able to cause a shut-down by simply vetoing the spending bill; but that presumably would prove toxic for him as well. So in all, the tweet seemed to amount to a radical and peevish caprice, to no American's advantage.	7, 9, 10, 11
5-2-17	Spending for Trump family security. The New York Times reported that the recently negotiated federal spending bill includes $120 million in extraordinary funding to physically protect Mr. Trump and family members, mostly in connection with Mr. Trump's frequent visits to Mar-a-Lago (his Florida residence and resort) and Mrs. Trump's continuing residence at Trump Tower in New York City.	11
5-2-17	Ethics waivers. The New York Times reported that Walter Shaub, the director of the Office of Government Ethics, had become sufficiently concerned about the Trump administration's secret waivers of the conflicts of interest rules pertinent to its political appointees that he had requested copies of those waivers. (While President Obama's administration had issued waivers, they were not kept secretly.)	17 (15)

5-2-17	Commentary on Comey testimony, in advance. On the evening prior to FBI director James Comey's much-anticipated public hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Mr. Trump tweeted: " FBI Director Comey was the best thing that ever happened to Hillary Clinton in that he gave her a free pass for many bad deeds!" It was unusual, if not unprecedented, for a sitting president to so publicly and vengefully attempt to influence a Congressional hearing on such grave matters as were to be discussed.	9, 10, 11
5-3-17	Kushner disclosures. The Wall Street Journal reported that Jared Kushner, who is Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser in the White House, after months in his advisory position had failed to disclose certain investments that could create conflicts of interest for him.	17 (15)
5-3-17	Real estate promotion in the Philippines. The Washington Post reported that a video that promoted sales of condominium units in a Trump-branded building in the Philippines and that prominently featured Mr. Trump and his daughter Ivanka had continued to be used in promotions for more than three months into Mr. Trump's presidency, thus luring buyers on the strength of the Trumps' White House positions. (Mr. Trump's Philippine business partner in the venture was appointed to be his country's trade representative after Mr. Trump's election by Rodrigo Duterte, the Philippine president and notorious human rights violator whom Mr. Trump has sought to befriend.)	15
5-3-17	Transition team lobbyists. Politico reported that at least nine people who had worked on Mr. Trump's transition team had since registered as lobbyists, notwithstanding Mr. Trump's own prior pledge to forbid that. According to the report, many of the people will be lobbying the very agencies or on the very issues with which they had been involved during the transition.	17 (15)

5-3-17	Abandonment of human rights advocacy. As reported in the Wall Street Journal, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson told an assemblage of diplomats and department employees in the clearest terms yet that the U.S. would no longer formulate its approach to other countries based on their human rights records. Breaking from decades of American policy and practice, he said that the U.S. would advocate for rights and serve as an exemplar of (unspecified) values but would not let that affect America's pursuit of its self-interest. The director of Amnesty International USA said that the Trump administration is "literally trying to erase human rights before our own eyes."	14
5-5-17	South Korea election. A New York Times news analysis stated that of all the crises facing South Korea, one of the biggest issues in its current presidential election is how to deal with Mr. Trump. The article said, in part: "In his first months in office, Mr. Trump's contradictory statements about the Korean Peninsula have shattered South Koreans' image of the American leader as a symbol of stability in their 60-year alliance with Washington. Mr. Trump has threatened to end what he called a 'horrible' free-trade agreement with South Korea. He has said the country should pay for an American advanced missile defense system, contradicting an earlier commitment from Washington. He has warned of a 'major, major conflict' with North Korea, while also saying he would be 'honored' to meet with the North's leader, Kim Jong-un, under the right circumstances. How to manage 'the Trump risk,' as local news media put it, has become a major campaign issue. The candidates are falling over themselves to show they would be the best at handling him, either by drawing him closer or by being tougher. ... At the least, many South Koreans fear a rift in the close relationship with Washington. At worst, some fear Mr. Trump could do something impulsive, like ordering a military attack on North Korea, with little regard for the devastation it would cause here in the South. ... Mr. Trump's rough diplomacy could shake a delicate balance in northeast Asia, prompting South Korea to redefine its alliance with Washington and move closer to China, analysts say." (See CSD's 4-27/28-17 entry above regarding the conflicting Korea messaging, and its 4-29-17 entry regarding loss of faith on the part of foreign allies.)	10, 13, 14

5-5-17	Family planning chief. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had appointed Teresa Manning to be deputy assistant secretary for population affairs for the Department of Health and Human Services – the position in charge of the government's family planning initiatives. Manning had long been opposed to government assistance in family planning, which was her right to be. But contrary to scientific data cited by the Post, her position had been based on her belief that contraception "doesn't work," and doesn't prevent unplanned pregnancies.	17 (8)
5-6-17	Kushner real estate promotion in China. At a private promotional session in Beijing, the sister of Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner encouraged the Chinese attendees to invest in a Kushner family property so as to (lawfully) obtain green cards. In the promotion, she touted her company's connection to the Trump administration through her brother (who had divested his interest in the property that was the subject of the solicitation, but who had declined to divest from most of his other family business interests, and had declined to make public a complete list of his partners and lenders.) Kushner's White House portfolio includes Chinese affairs.	17 (15)
5-6-17	Promotion of Ivanka's book. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's daughter and senior adviser Ivanka is actively promoting her recently published book on career advice for women by way of social media. That promotion – fortified by her stature as the president's adviser – is expected not only to enhance book sales (she has millions of social media followers) but her fashion brands generally.	17 (15)
5-8-17	Ethical complaints. The New Yorker (reiterating data first reported by NPR on April 17) reported that between October and March, the Office of Government Ethics had received more than 39,000 public inquiries and complaints about conflicts of interest within the Trump administration, an increase of 5,000% over the same period at the start of the Obama administration. CSD does not know if those complaints were justified, whether they issued from a coordinated political campaign, or neither, or both. But the number is startling, and at a minimum it evidences a previously unheard-of level of public suspicion and allegation regarding conflicts of interest surrounding a sitting president.	15

Addendum 4 – May 31, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

4-27-17	Fake news. The New York Times counted 18 instances since Mr. Trump's inauguration in which he had used the word "fake" in his tweets to attempt to discredit the mainstream press.	1, 7
5-1-17	Falsehood tally. The Washington Post reported that in the first 100 days of Mr. Trump's presidency, he had made 492 false or misleading claims, at an average rate of 4.9 per day. On five of those days, he had made at least 20 false claims.	7
5-8-17	McCain on human rights. In a New York Times opinion piece, Senator John McCain wrote a pointed rebuke to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson's recent vow to remove human rights considerations from American international policies. McCain argued that American leadership in human rights is essential not only to America's conscience, but also to its prosperity and power. He wrote: "To view foreign policy as simply transactional is more dangerous than its proponents realize. Depriving the oppressed of a beacon of hope could lose us the world we have built and thrived in. It could cost our reputation in history as the nation distinct from all others in our achievements, our identity and our enduring influence on mankind." The complete column appears at https://www.nytimes.com/2017/05/08/opinion/john-mccain-rex-tillerson-human-rights.html?ref=todayspaper .	14

5-8-17	Yates testimony. Mr. Trump, via Twitter, attacked the credibility of former acting Attorney General Sally Yates – and thus effectively attacked Congressional committee process – just hours before she was scheduled to testify before the Senate Intelligence Committee on the subject of Russian influence on the presidential election. Her testimony was expected to address, among other things, her warnings to the administration about renegade national security adviser Michael Flynn's Russian contacts – warnings she had shared several weeks before Flynn was ultimately fired. Mr. Trump's tweet compared to his disparaging tweet on May 3 about FBI director James Comey, posted shortly prior to Comey's testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee. In her testimony that ensued, Yates indeed related the urgent warnings she had given to the White House in late January about Flynn's Russian contacts, including that Flynn was at risk of being blackmailed by the Russians. (Press secretary Sean Spicer had previously dismissed the urgency of Yates's warnings.) The White House appeared to have ignored those warnings, and to have continued to allow Flynn to receive top secret information – even to participate in a highly sensitive telephone call with Russian president Vladimir Putin. After her testimony, Mr. Trump tweeted that the "fake news" had found nothing new in the testimony; that the Russia investigation remained a "hoax"; and that President Obama was to blame for having some years earlier given Flynn a security clearance. Yates's testimony coincided with revelations by the press, the same day, that President Obama had personally cautioned Mr. Trump about Flynn shortly after the election in November and had recommended that Mr. Trump not hire Flynn as national security adviser. Mr. Trump did not heed that advice.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12
---------------	--	-------------------------

5-8-17	Dismissal of science advisors. Leading news outlets reported that on May 5, contrary to custom, the Environmental Protection Agency had dismissed half the members of its Board of Scientific Counselors – a major scientific review board – as of the end of their then-current terms and without offering them renewal terms. The EPA was expected to name industry representatives to replace them. Calling upon the regulated to help advise on regulation is not uncommon or inappropriate; but in a task allocated specifically to scientific advice, the EPA's move suggested to many observers another step toward facilitating science denial on the part of the Trump administration.	8
5-9-17	HHS censorship. The Washington Post reported that Republicans Chuck Grassley (Senate Judiciary Committee chairman) and Jason Chaffetz (House Oversight Committee chairman) had sharply rebuked HHS Secretary Tom Price for forbidding his department's staff from communicating directly with Congress, contending that the directive was possibly illegal and unconstitutional.	17 (9)
5-9/10-17	Comey dismissal. On May 9, Mr. Trump, abruptly and without notice, dismissed FBI director James Comey, nominally because of Comey's erratic public disclosures during the election campaign regarding the FBI's investigation of then-candidate Hillary Clinton's email practices. But the dismissal came in the midst of Comey's investigation of potentially treasonous collusion with Russia on the part of Mr. Trump's presidential campaign to influence the election in Mr. Trump's favor. It came after weeks of Mr. Trump's denunciations of the investigation as a waste of taxpayers' money. And it came a day after Mr. Trump called the investigation a "hoax"; a day after Comey reportedly asked the Justice Department for additional funding to support that investigation; and a day after former acting Attorney General Sally Yates testified before the Senate to the effect that Mr. Trump had ignored her urgent cautions about former national security advisor Michael Flynn's Russian contacts. No mention was made by Mr. Trump or his administration of the Russia investigation as grounds for Comey's dismissal, even though that investigation appeared to be one of the most critical and visible issues currently before Comey. And no assurance was offered that the investigation would continue without Comey. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11, 12

5-9/10-17	[Continued.] Leading Senate Republicans and Democrats expressed concern that the dismissal could compromise, and could have been intended to compromise, the Russia investigation. In response to Majority Leader Chuck Schumer's criticism of the dismissal, Mr. Trump tweeted a personal attack on "Cryin' Chuck Schumer," a reference to Schumer's emotional response to Mr. Trump's travel ban several months previous. In response to Richard Blumenthal's call for a special prosecutor, Mr. Trump brought up Blumenthal's long-ago acknowledged misrepresentation of his military service and said that he had "cried like a baby" when apologizing for that. The dismissal appeared to have come for many as a surprise. Comey learned of it only through the news media, while giving a presentation on the West Coast. Press secretary Sean Spicer was widely reported to have hidden in the bushes at the White House for several minutes before agreeing to speak to reporters, and then only on the condition that they not video-record him. In response to their questions about Comey's dismissal, Spicer had no answers. In the hours and days following, White House details on the motivations and process relative to the dismissal were confusing and contradictory.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12
5-10-17	Russia meeting. The day after Mr. Trump dismissed FBI director James Comey, seemingly at least in part for continuing to investigate links between the Trump campaign and the Russian government, Russian foreign minister Sergey Lavrov and Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak met with Mr. Trump to discuss how to improve American-Russian cooperation. Lavrov stated afterwards that he agreed with Mr. Trump that the various investigations into Russian election tampering and the associated publicity amounted to "false news." Russian state media had been given access to the meeting while the American press corps had been barred – a circumstance that commentators found unprecedented relative to American press access, as well as a potential security breach. [Continued below.]	12

5-10-17	[Continued.] The Russian press access resulted in Russian media publicizing photos of Lavrov, Kislyak and Trump in a festive and jocular mood, which troubled some commentators in that the photos appeared to "normalize" American-Russian relations, and to evidence American acquiescence to Russia's gravely anti-democratic and inhumane behavior in recent years: its annexation of Crimea, its military support of secessionists in eastern Ukraine, its commission of atrocities in support of the Syrian regime's war against rebel forces, and its interference with the American presidential election.	12
5-11-17	Comey dismissal: White House reversal. After several days of White House denials, deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Saunders acknowledged that terminating the FBI's Russia investigation had been at least one reason for Mr. Trump's dismissal of director James Comey. She said: "We want [the investigation] to come to its conclusion with integrity. And we think that we've actually, by removing Director Comey, taken steps to make that happen."	9, 10, 11, 12
5-11-17	Voter fraud, voter suppression. Mr. Trump created a commission to investigate voter fraud and voter suppression. He had previously maintained, without evidence, that millions of fraudulent votes cast for Hillary Clinton had cost him a popular vote victory. To date, no evidence had ever emerged of any recent, material voter fraud in the U.S. Meanwhile many state laws had been manifestly designed and enacted in recent years to suppress the votes of minorities, the poor and the elderly; and some of those laws had been overturned by federal courts as being unconstitutional. Mr. Trump named as chairman of the new commission a Kansas functionary who had been responsible for imposing in his state a series of voter identification laws that came to be criticized as highly restrictive and intentionally discriminatory, and many of them were barred by federal courts. Thus concerns arose that the new nationwide investigation could promote voter suppression in the name of fraud protection. CSD has long been appalled by any attempts by state legislatures to discriminatorily suppress voting. We have not previously commented on state voter suppression laws, because they did not fall within the province of President Trump's activities; but now they do.	4

5-11-17	Comey dismissal: White House pattern. The Huffington Post called attention to what would appear to be a concerted and less-than-forthright pattern on the part of Mr. Trump to compromise investigations of Russian interference in the American election (each episode was previously described in this document): the stealth enlisting of Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr to rebut negative press stories; the stealth invitation of House Intelligence Committee Chairman Devin Nunes to view classified documents in the White House and then to publicly comment on them while withholding them from his committee colleagues; and, most recently, the dismissal of FBI director James Comey under at least partially false pretenses.	7, 9, 10, 12
5-11-17	FBI reaction to Comey dismissal. In justifying Mr. Trump's dismissal of FBI director James Comey, the White House had said that Comey was unpopular among staff at the FBI. On May 11, newly designated acting director Andrew McCabe, a career professional at the agency, told the Senate Intelligence Committee the opposite – that Comey was and remained highly regarded at the agency. The same day, The New York Times reported that it was Mr. Trump's abrupt firing of Comey that was demoralizing for the agency's staff and that could jeopardize the agency's overall effectiveness. The Times wrote: "Agents said they were stunned that Mr. Trump would fire Mr. Comey in the midst of an F.B.I. investigation into whether any of the president's associates had conspired with Russia to swing the election in favor of Mr. Trump. Some said in interviews that news of the firing felt like a gut punch. Others wondered whether they would be able to continue the inquiry. One senior F.B.I. official said that the president had severely damaged his standing among agents, many of whom are conservative and supported Mr. Trump as a candidate. Agents were angered by the way Mr. Trump fired Mr. Comey, who learned of his dismissal from television reports while he was in Los Angeles. They called it disrespectful. And agents flatly rejected the assertion Wednesday by a White House spokeswoman, Sarah Huckabee Sanders, during a briefing with reporters that the F.B.I.'s rank-and-file supported the sudden firing of Mr. Comey. A strained relationship with the F.B.I. can make life difficult for a president. The White House relies on the bureau for regular security updates and for unvarnished information during crises."	7, 9, 10, 11, 12

5-11-17	Comey dismissal – NBC interview. Mr. Trump told an NBC News interviewer that, prior to dismissing FBI director James Comey, he had asked Comey three times if Comey was investigating Mr. Trump personally, and that three times Comey had said no. The FBI subsequently stated that Comey did not and legally would not have responded to those questions, thus implying that Mr. Trump was likely not telling the truth. But the mere fact that Mr. Trump had asked the questions (if indeed he had done so) would appear to constitute an obstruction of any pending investigation, and a possible attempt to intimidate Comey by implicitly threatening his job. In the same NBC interview, Mr. Trump effectively retracted his earlier statement that he had dismissed Comey on the recommendation of deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein – after the press had revealed that Rosenstein had denied that, and thus had exposed Mr. Trump's falsehood. Rather, Mr. Trump now admitted that he had long intended to dismiss Comey, prior to directing Rosenstein to memorialize a rationale. The initial falsehood could have amounted to an unconstitutional interference with the investigation.	7, 9, 10,11, 12
5-11-17	Request for Comey loyalty pledge. The Washington Post reported that in January, Mr. Trump had invited then FBI director James Comey to a private dinner, at which he had twice asked Comey to pledge his loyalty to Mr. Trump. Comey had twice declined, thus conceivably setting the stage for his subsequent dismissal. Mr. Trump's request had defied the mandate of the FBI to operate independently.	9, 10, 11
5-11-17	Economic incoherence. The Economist published an interview with Mr. Trump in which, as subsequently characterized by The Atlantic, he betrayed near illiteracy about key economic issues facing the White House and his own proposed policies on them.	10
5-12-17	Business with Russians. Mr. Trump released a letter from his attorneys that was intended to prove that he had no business dealings with Russians, but that was then widely ridiculed for demonstrating the precise opposite.	7, 10, 11, 12, 15

5-12-17	Allusion to taping Comey. Mr. Trump tweeted a veiled threat to former FBI director James Comey – that if Comey spoke to the press in the wake of his recent dismissal, Mr. Trump would publicize conversations between Comey and Mr. Trump that Mr. Trump had surreptitiously recorded. Having secretly taped the then FBI director (if that in fact had occurred) would have been of questionable propriety. But actually threatening to intimidate Mr. Comey from speaking would constitute a federal crime (blackmail), plus possibly an unconstitutional interference with any potential Congressional testimony on Comey's part. In addition, the tweet put foreign dignitaries on notice that they too could be taped and blackmailed in the White House. And possibly of greatest concern, a sitting president issuing those threats publicly seemed to bypass rational behavior.	9, 10, 11, 12
5-9-17 5-12-17	Replacing Comey. Attorney General Jeff Sessions, having been prominent in Mr. Trump's election campaign and later having misled Congress about his own contacts with Russian officials, had recused himself from participating in any matters involving the investigation of Russian election tampering. But on May 9 he had participated in the decision to dismiss FBI director James Comey in connection with Comey's investigation of the Russian matter; and on May 12 he participated in the naming of candidates to replace Comey as director, including for the continuation or other disposition of that same investigation.	17 (9, 12)
5-12-17	Unreliable press briefings. In the wake of the repeated misstatements made by Mr. Trump's press officers since his inauguration, and particularly their very recent statements about his motivation for firing FBI director James Comey, Mr. Trump tweeted: “As a very active President with lots of things happening, it is not possible for my surrogates to stand at podium with perfect accuracy!” That acknowledgement put the country and the world on notice, or on further notice, that nothing the press office under Mr. Trump might articulate might ever be accurate.	7

5-13-17	Religious pandering. At a commencement address at Liberty University, a religiously-based institution, Mr. Trump – not known for his righteousness in word or deed – said, “In America, we don’t worship government. We worship God.” But during his election campaign and especially following the release of the "Access Hollywood" video in which Mr. Trump had boasted about sexually assaulting women, thousands of Liberty University students had signed a petition excoriating Mr. Trump for his spiritually bereft behavior. They wrote of him: "He has made his name by maligning others and bragging about his sins. Not only is Donald Trump a bad candidate for president, he is actively promoting the very things that we as Christians ought to oppose. ... A man who constantly and proudly speaks evil does not deserve our support for the nation’s highest office." (A link to the complete text of the petition appears at this endnote.*) CSD, whose members include persons of faith, does not presume to evaluate the depth (or existence) of Mr. Trump's religious beliefs; it does not judge anyone by their beliefs; it does not fault other religious voters for supporting Mr. Trump; and it does not object to public figures sincerely invoking the name of God in their expressions of goodwill. But we object to Mr. Trump's casual promotion of his personal and political agenda as being faith-driven or in any way righteous – the sort of insincere and manipulative maneuver that autocrats the world over have routinely deployed.	9
5-14-17	Promoting Mar-a-Lago. The Washington Post reported that bookings and revenues for organizational events at Mar-a-Lago, Mr. Trump's Florida resort and sometimes home, have increased since Mr. Trump's election, on the strength of attendees' association of the venue with the office of the presidency, and with the hope – sometimes realized – of encountering the president in person. (Mr. Trump had attended at least nine charity events there during that period.) The Post also noted the disjunction between the resort's wealthy clientele, on the one hand, and the low wages of its staff and Mr. Trump's populist political message, on the other.	15

5-14-17	Job creation claims. The New York Times listed 11 instances since Mr. Trump's election in which he had explicitly or implicitly taken credit for creating or saving jobs at specific companies, then documented that those companies had already planned those actions long before Mr. Trump's election – with one exception: in November, Carrier had agreed to keep 800 jobs from migrating to Mexico, in exchange for receiving $7,000,000 in tax incentives from Indiana (then Vice President-elect Mike Pence's state).	7
5-15-17	Russia advantaged by Comey dismissal. The Washington Post quoted several experienced diplomats to the effect that Mr. Trump's firing of FBI director James Comey, and the ensuing American political firestorm, had generated internal American weakness and discord to an extent far greater than Russia had ever hoped for or anticipated when tampering with the American election.	9, 10, 11, 12
5-15-17	Hiding data. The Washington Post reported that The Trump administration had removed or hidden from the Internet many types of information that until recently had been provided to the public, such as disclosures about workplace violations, energy efficiency, and animal welfare abuses.	8, 9
5-15-17	Consuming inaccurate news. Politico reported that Mr. Trump's staffers were deliberately and routinely passing him inaccurate news stories, both to manipulate him and to avoid angering him with the truth. Politico wrote that Mr. Trump believed the inaccurate stories.	10, 11
5-15/16-17	Sharing classified information with Russia. The Washington Post reported that during Mr. Trump's meeting with the Russian foreign minister and ambassador in the White House on May 10, Mr. Trump casually, personally, boastfully, and without guidance from his national security and diplomatic advisors had shared highly classified information relating to ISIS operations that had come from a secret source (a then unnamed American ally – later identified by the press as Israel), in utter breach of security standards, and to the detriment of the ally. The following day, Mr. Trump acknowledged the disclosure, and tweeted that as president he had the absolute right to disclose classified information at will. [ Continued below. ]	10, 11, 12, 13

5-15/16-17	[Continued.] The development alarmed members of both parties. For some it advanced the narrative of Mr. Trump's long-running disdain for the intelligence community; the narrative that he had compromised and would continue to compromise American interests in favor of Russian ones; the narrative that he had no understanding of and no will to understand governance; and yet another narrative that he would say anything to anyone (in this case top Russian officials) to encourage them to love and admire him. It also revived an earlier question as to whether he should be entrusted with classified information. According to CNN and the Associated Press, several American allies afterwards expressed concern about their sharing sensitive information with the U.S. going forward. During his election campaign, and even since then, Mr. Trump had relentlessly criticized opponent Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server relative to its potential to enable a compromise of classified information; and since his inauguration he had relentlessly criticized leaks of information from within his own administration. Remarkably, the White House's defense to the revelation of Mr. Trump's disclosure of the American ally's secret data was that Mr. Trump could not injure America or its allies because he was too inept to learn or retain pertinent details of national security. Specifically, The Times wrote that unnamed White House sources had said that "Mr. Trump, a hasty and indifferent reader of printed briefing materials, simply did not possess the interest or knowledge of the granular details of intelligence gathering to leak specific sources and methods of intelligence gathering that would do harm to United States allies." For CSD, whether doing harm or being too inept to do harm would constitute the more troubling phenomenon was unclear. And in yet another interpretation of the Russian episode at the White House, the Russian foreign ministry characterized the reports that Mr. Trump had shared classified information with the diplomats as "fake." A day later, Russian president Vladimir Putin would offer to produce his own record of the discussion to that effect.	10, 11, 12, 13
------------	---	----------------

5-16-17	Turkish brutality. Mr. Trump warmly welcomed Turkish president Recep Erdogan to the White House, but he did not discuss Erdogan's authoritarian crackdown on dissidents – which had included tens of thousands of arrests and dismissals from governmental, military, diplomatic and university positions; intimidation of the Turkish press; a declaration of a state of emergency; blocking of access to Wikipedia; and structural changes in Turkish governance to consolidate presidential power – including gaining the right to rule by decree. That evening, outside the Turkish embassy in Washington, as Erdogan watched, his security guards brutally attacked protesters, Secret Service agents and local police officers, sending many to the hospital; the State Department, members of Congress and the Washington police department all objected; but the White House was silent. CSD presumes that Erdogan was satisfied with all of the immediate outcomes.	14, 17 (3, 5, 9)
5-16-17	Requests of Comey to drop Flynn investigation, imprison reporters. The New York Times reported that in February, Mr. Trump had pointedly asked then FBI director James Comey to end the investigation of then national security advisor Michael Flynn regarding Russian meddling in the election. Mr. Trump had put the question to Comey after asking Attorney General Jeff Sessions and Mike Pence to leave the room, thus raising a suspicion after the report emerged that Mr. Trump had known that his request of Comey could be unethical or illegal. The revelations were widely viewed with alarm by members of Congress, commentators and others as a possible indication of criminal obstruction of justice. Some compared Mr. Trump's previous campaign promise that, if he were elected, he would have the Justice Department appoint a special prosecutor to investigate his opponent Hillary Clinton. In that promise he had likewise demonstrated an ignorance about or a disdain for the independence of the department's investigative mandate, and had demonstrated an eagerness to use or refrain from using federal investigations politically. CSD sees a related comparison in Mr. Trump's request in January for a loyalty pledge from Mr. Comey. [Continued below.]	1, 9, 10, 11, 12

5-16-17	[ Continued. ] In the same February conversation, Mr. Trump had suggested to Comey that he prosecute and imprison reporters who had published leaked classified information – something that has never occurred in the U.S.	1, 9, 10, 11, 12
5-17-17	Flynn's early admission to the president. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had hired Michael Flynn to be his national security adviser in January even after Flynn had told White House counsel that he (Flynn) was under FBI investigation for accepting payments from the Turkish government during Mr. Trump's campaign. The revelation appeared comparable to Mr. Trump's failure to dismiss Flynn – after then acting Attorney General Sally Yates had delivered her stern caution about Flynn regarding his contacts with Russian officials – until 18 days later, when the matter was leaked to the press.	10
5-17-17	Russian business dealings. Fortune Magazine detailed Mr. Trump's long-standing and extensive business dealings with Russian investors, including a number of corrupt ones. A link to the article appears at this endnote.	12, 15
5-17/18-17	Advice to Coast Guard graduates. On May 17, in addressing the graduating class at the U.S. Coast Guard Academy – young men and women prepared to place their lives on the line for America – Mr. Trump said that “no politician in history, and I can say this with great surety, has been treated worse or more unfairly” than himself, including at the hands of the press. The following day, Senator John McCain stated in several venues that he (McCain) had been treated worse (presumably referring to his having been tortured as a war prisoner in Vietnam, and to Mr. Trump having mocked him during the recent election campaign for having been captured). Further to Mr. Trump's complaint about unfair treatment – and just limiting the following list to presidents -- many previous commanders in chief had been mercilessly criticized (Lincoln, Obama, countless others), rebelled against (Lincoln), impeached or nearly impeached (Johnson, Nixon, Clinton), shot (Reagan), and even assassinated (Lincoln, Garfield, McKinley, Kennedy).	1, 7, 11

5-17/18-17	Russian glee at American chaos. The New York Times quoted a Russian political analyst closely tied to the Kremlin: "Of course, from Moscow, we look at this chaos with a bit of a smile. ... So many Americans used to look at the chaos in Russia that way. It is a kind of psychological revenge." The following day, The Wall Street Journal quoted a Russian political analyst: "Personally, Putin likes the situation – he likes the chaos, and the chance to see a Western leader as a weakling. To a Russian, everything that is happening in Washington shows the weakness of Western democracy." The Journal went on to report: "Russian analysts say the controversy in Washington gives the Kremlin a freer hand in foreign policy. They say U.S. foreign-policy disarray gives Moscow more space to pursue its own policies in the Middle East and consolidate its diplomatic gains." CSD notes that American commentators had long maintained that all of this was precisely the Russian objective in tampering with our presidential election.	10, 13
5-18-17	Count of Russian contacts. Reuters reported that the Trump campaign had had at least 18 undisclosed contacts with Russian officials and agents. (In January, the Trump White House had denied that there had been any such contacts whatever.)	17 (7, 12)
5-18-17	Undermining the new special counsel; "witch hunts" in American history. With regard to acting Attorney General Rod Rosenstein's appointment on May 17 of the highly respected former FBI director Robert Mueller as special counsel to investigate the Trump campaign's connection to Russian interests – an appointment that had generated bipartisan Congressional support – Mr. Trump tweeted on May 18: "This is the single greatest witch hunt of a politician in American history!" Later in the day, he repeated the "witch hunt" allegation; said that Democrats' retribution for their loss of the presidential election was the only reason the investigation was proceeding; denied that he had asked former FBI director James Comey to drop his own investigation; and reverted to his original, discredited claim that he had dismissed Comey because of Rosenstein's legal memorandum regarding Comey's handling of the Hillary Clinton probe rather than because of Mr. Trump's own pre-existing decision to dismiss Comey due to the Russia investigation.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12

5-19-17	European Fears. In its most extensive reporting on the topic to date, The Washington Post found widespread fear among European diplomats and leaders around the chaos that they viewed as characterizing the Trump presidency. The Post wrote: "In conversations with more than two dozen current and former European ministers, lawmakers, diplomats, intelligence officials and military officers in recent days, there was a common theme: After nearly four months of the Trump administration, many fear that mounting domestic scandals could sap Washington's ability to respond to challenges ranging from Russia to terrorism to North Korea. ... ." But the concerns were not just about scandals: they were also about Mr. Trump's capriciousness, unreliability, inattention, and sloppiness with classified information. "The vacuum may encourage people all over the world to seize the moment of an absent United States," one said. A minister added: "I'm getting increasingly worried that this internal chaos in the United States is growing to an unimaginable scale. ... And that may grow into security and defense policy. If you are only fighting about tweets, if you don't have time to follow what's happening in the world, that's really disturbing. ... To regain a kind of moral leadership will be extremely difficult. Because now every guy around the world will point their fingers and say, look at your own history."	10, 13, 14
5-19-17	Disparaging Comey and the media to Russians. The New York Times reported that during his meeting on May 10 at the White House with Russian foreign minister Sergey Lavrov and Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak, Mr. Trump had told them: "I just fired the head of the F.B.I. He was crazy, a real nut job. ... I faced great pressure because of Russia. That's taken off." [Continued below.]	1, 10, 12, 13

5-19-17	[Continued.] Although all of the implications of Mr. Trump's statements to the Russians are not clear, CSD will assume some seemingly obvious ones: (a) that Mr. Trump (despite subsequent dissembling) had indeed dismissed Comey because of Comey's pursuit of the investigation of Russia's tampering with the American election; (b) that in the White House session Mr. Trump divulged confidential information (his relationship with a ranking subordinate and the investigation's impact on the president) to America's chief antagonist, Russia; (c) that he gossiped casually and disdainfully about a leading figure in American intelligence to America's most dangerous rival in the intelligence wars; (d) alarmingly, that he assumed a fraternity and a commonality of outlook and interest as between himself and Russian officials on the activities and dismissal of Comey; (e) more alarmingly, that he sought to comfort the Russians about a problem he shared with them (Russia's interference with the American election); and (f), perhaps most alarmingly, a possible transactional element: that he had dismissed Comey (or had boasted of dismissing Comey) in exchange for a past or future favor from Russia. The Times also reported that, during the meeting, Mr. Trump denounced the American media's "fake" coverage of the Russian interference allegations, and Lavrov jokingly concurred.	1, 10, 12, 13
5-19-17	Potential challenge to special counsel. Reuters reported that promptly after the appointment of Robert Mueller as special counsel to investigate Russia's meddling in the election, White House attorneys began researching whether Mueller could be legally restricted in his investigation because his law firm had represented two of the possible investigation subjects – Paul Manafort and Jared Kushner. CSD acknowledges Mr. Trump's right to explore such legalisms; but we believe that his desire to do so further betrays his deep unhappiness with the appointment and the independent investigation that will ensue, and spotlights his potential for trying to undermine them.	9, 12
5-19-17	Cuts for environmental science. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's proposal for the fiscal 2018 budget, consistent with his prior indications, would cut funding for the EPA's Office of Science and Technology nearly in half, among other radical funding slashes for the EPA.	8

5-20-17	Gala Saudi visit. Mr. Trump and a large retinue of his senior officials and family members travelled to Saudi Arabia in an unprecedented American display of friendship toward that country. The country is notorious for its authoritarian, religiously intolerant, corrupt, plutocratic, misogynistic monarchy; its refusal to accept refugees; its often harsh exploitation of foreign guest workers; its repression of its Shiite minority; its imprisonment of government critics; its being the source of one of the largest contingents of foreign fighters within ISIS; its tacit alliance with Al Qaeda; its being the birthplace of most of the 9/11 terrorists; and its status as perhaps the world's largest funding source for radical anti-Western terrorism and religious zealotry generally. As Fareed Zakariah subsequently wrote in The Washington Post, almost every terrorist attack in the West has had some connection to Saudi Arabia. Mr. Trump nevertheless was met there with a gala and literally royal welcome, in which, among other festive displays, he and his aides participated in a traditional Saudi sword dance – a male-only celebration of brutal tribal warfare. And substantively, his words and deeds were materially more favorable to the Saudis than had been those of previous American presidents. He identified Saudi Arabia as America's unshakeable friend; and he identified Shiite Iran (Sunni Saudi Arabia's arch-enemy) as the source of terrorism and Middle East instability, while being silent on Saudi contributions to the same. (Similarly, despite the country's distinction as a source of anti-American terrorism and radical religious zeal, Mr. Trump had not included Saudi Arabia in the list of Muslim-majority nations that were the subject of his ill-fated travel ban in January.) He also fortified the massive arms sales to the Saudi kingdom that former President Obama had slowed due to the Saudis' unrestrained use of American ordnance in killing civilians in its still-raging proxy war in Yemen. The new arms sales, at over $100 billion, represented the largest in U.S. history. As a matter of American geo-strategic interest, American commentators' views of the wisdom of the Saudi embrace were mixed. But in addition to the human rights issues, the shadow of Mr. Trump's potential personal conflicts of interest appeared. During his election campaign, he had sought to develop substantial business transactions in Saudi Arabia. After the election he paused that pursuit, but he remained able to revive it at any time, either during or after his presidency.	15, 17 (6, 9)
---------	--	---------------

5-21-17, 5-25-17	Kushner Conflicts. The Washington Post reported on May 21 that Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior White House adviser Jared Kushner had not divested most of his considerable real estate holdings, despite their potential to create conflicts of interest for him (including by their being subject to the rules of regulatory agencies that Kushner was in the position to influence); that he had not disclosed the owners or activities of various shell companies in which he had investments; that by his own admission his mandatory disclosure forms were incomplete and erroneous; and that he had not publicly disclosed his private ethics agreement with the White House. After taking his White House position, for purportedly ethical purposes Kushner had sold some of his assets to a trust controlled by his mother. On May 25, ArtNet.com reported that Kushner and his wife Ivanka Trump had failed to disclose over $1,000,000 in fine art holdings, even though Ivanka had previously publicized the fact that she collected art for investment purposes and had used the collection for promoting her business brand.. Unlike Mr. Trump himself, Kushner was bound to the ethics requirements that by law applied to White House staff. Ethics experts argued that because of his familial relationship with Mr. Trump and his broad White House portfolio, he ethically should disclose and divest even more than is required, rather than less.	17 (15)

5-22-17	More reversals. The Washington Post published a new list of recent reversals on Mr. Trump's part versus his campaign statements. Many of those reversals reflected a moderation welcomed by CSD. Others, CSD does not take a position on. In any event, they suggested that Mr. Trump had been insincere during his campaign, was being insincere now, was simply following the advice of his handlers (whoever they might have been at the moment), or was and remained bereft of beliefs and/or understanding. A partial list follows: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Preparing to propose a budget that contains radical cuts to federal entitlement spending, despite his campaign promises to the contrary.</li> <li>2. Moderating his tone on Saudi Arabia and Islam, while in Saudi Arabia: specifically, referring to Islam as "one of the world's great religions," despite having previously demonized that faith; lavishing praise on Saudi Arabia, after having blamed the country for perpetrating the 9-11 attacks; allowing or directing his wife and daughter to not cover their heads while visiting Saudi Arabia, despite having criticized Michele Obama for that; not using the incendiary term "radical Islamic terrorism" while in Saudi Arabia, despite having pledged to always do so; and .bending or bowing to the Saudi king to receive a medal, after having excoriated President Obama for having done the same.</li> <li>3. Abandoning his promise to move the American embassy in Israel to Jerusalem.</li> </ol>	7, 10
5-22-17	Flynn's untruths, stonewalling. The ranking member of the House Oversight Committee revealed that former national security adviser Michael Flynn, when renewing his security clearance in 2016, had lied to Pentagon officials about the source of funds he had received for traveling to Russia. The source was RT, the Russian government's propaganda arm. Hours earlier, Flynn had pleaded the Fifth Amendment in defying a subpoena to testify before the Senate Intelligence Committee.	17 (7, 12)

5-22-17	Pressure to deny evidence. The Washington Post reported that in late March, Mr. Trump had asked Director of National Intelligence Daniel Coats and National Security Agency Director Michael Rogers to publicly deny that there was any evidence linking Mr. Trump's campaign and Russia; that is, to issue false statements about the existing FBI investigation. They declined. Commentators compared the circumstances to Mr. Trump's pressure on leading Congressional investigators in February to seek to dampen the press's reporting on their investigations, to which pressure those investigators had succumbed. Other commentators drew a comparison to President Richard Nixon's unsuccessful efforts to use the CIA to shut down the FBI's investigation of the Watergate break-in.	9, 10, 11, 12
5-22-17	Soliciting funds to defend investigations. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's 2020 re-election campaign – already unprecedented for its having been launched directly after the 2016 election – had invoked the alleged "witch hunt" against Mr. Trump in soliciting money from small donors. The Post said that the campaign money possibly could be used to defend Mr. Trump in certain governmental investigations of him (investigations for which The Post reported Mr. Trump was already seeking to engage private counsel). In that event, all funds collected to date could presumably be used to defend charges such as obstruction of justice, bribery and treason, even if the donors had not specifically authorized that use. While the circumstances would appear to present a legal and ethical question of first impression in American history, CSD is concerned that, at a minimum, some sort of conflict of interest, or personal use of others' entrusted funds, could arise.	11, 15

5-22-17, 5-26-17	Ethics blockage. The New York Times reported on May 22 that the White House had asked the Office of Government Ethics to withdraw its April 28 request to see the ethics waivers that the White House had issued relative to the former lobbyists it had hired. Veterans of the agency characterized the White House's move as unprecedented. Walter Shaub, the OGE's director, responded with a scolding, 10-page denunciation of the White House's request. The Times wrote: "Dozens of former lobbyists and industry lawyers are working in the Trump administration, which has hired them at a much higher rate than the previous administration. Keeping the waivers confidential would make it impossible to know whether any such officials are violating federal ethics rules or have been given a pass to ignore them. ... In many cases, they appear to be working on the exact topics they had previously handled on behalf of private-sector clients — including oil and gas companies and Wall Street banks — as recently as January." On May 26, in response to the pressure brought by the OGE and the press, the White House reversed itself and announced that it would disclose the ethics waivers. The New York Times wrote: "Former senior officials with the Office of Government Ethics said that in the 39-year history of the agency, which was created in the aftermath of the Watergate scandal, they could not remember an instance in which the White House had similarly tried to block, or even to discourage, an effort to collect ethics compliance data." (See CSD's initial report of 5-2-17 on the OGE's original request for the waivers.)	17 (15)

5-23-17	Budget cuts for science. The Washington Post reported the following: "President Trump's 2018 budget request ... has roiled the medical and science community with a call for massive cuts in spending on scientific research, medical research, disease prevention programs and health insurance for children of the working poor. The National Cancer Institute would be hit with a $1 billion cut compared to its 2017 budget. The National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute would see a $575 million cut, and the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases would see a reduction of $838 million. The administration would cut the overall National Institutes of Health budget from $31.8 billion to $26 billion. The National Science Foundation, which dispenses grants to a variety of scientific research endeavors, would be trimmed $776 million, an 11 percent cut."	8
5-23-17	Budget cuts for State Department. Further on Mr. Trump's budget request, CNN reported: "Funding for the State Department and US Agency for International Development would drop by about 32%, with broad cuts to programs focused on security, economic growth, humanitarian aid and disaster response, as well as in contributions to international organizations like the UN." Bi-partisan critics charged that the cuts would imperil lives, empower America's competitors such as Russia and China, and increase the likelihood of wars.	13, 14
5-23-17	Budget cuts for refugees. In the face of the world refugee crisis, Mr. Trump's budget proposal contemplated the admission of only 50,000 refugees in the next fiscal year, down from 110,000 in the current year, and down from an average admission allowance of 95,000 since 1980. The proposal also contemplated slashing refugee resettlement expenditures by 31%, thus virtually assuring that many of those refugees and asylum seekers who were in fact to be legally admitted would experience greater misery, less productivity, and slower integration into American society.
5-23 17	Green light for Bahrain's repression. Bahrain's security forces launched their bloodiest attack on minority Shiites in years, killing five and arresting hundreds. The attack came two days after Mr. Trump, in Saudi Arabia, had pointedly told the king of Bahrain that the U.S. would discontinue the Obama administration's criticism of the regime's endemic repression in that country.	14

5-23-17	Philippine butchery praised. The Washington Post reported that, based on a newly leaked transcript, Mr. Trump had begun his April phone call with Philippine president Rodrigo Duterte by praising the latter for his extra-judicial killing of thousands of suspected drug dealers and users. (Duterte had previously compared himself to Adolf Hitler, on a mission to kill millions of drug addicts.)	14
5-25-17	NATO shaming. Meeting with NATO leaders in Brussels, Mr. Trump declined to assure them of America's commitment to the mutual defense obligations of the alliance; declined to assure them relative to his friendly posture toward Russia; publicly scolded them, during a media event at which they stood before him, for not sufficiently funding the alliance's operations (even while he appeared to continue to misunderstand the nature of the funding mechanism); and threatened Germany with punitive tariffs for exporting cars to the U.S. At one point Mr. Trump was filmed pushing a European minister out of his way so that he (Mr. Trump) could be front and center in a photo op. The entire encounter with the democratic, tolerant, free-market countries of NATO appeared to have been chilly-to-hostile, and in stark contrast to the reciprocal warmth that Mr. Trump had shared not only during his recent meeting with senior Russian diplomats in the White House, but also during his immediately pre-NATO visit with the leaders of authoritarian and intolerant Saudi Arabia. In Saudi Arabia, he had pledged his unqualified and uncritical support; at NATO, he did not.	11, 14
5-25-17	Judicial rebuke. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in Virginia largely upheld a Maryland district court's blockage of Mr. Trump's second, revised attempt at a travel ban directed at certain Muslim countries, on grounds that Mr. Trump's previous statements patently demonstrated the religiously discriminatory intent of the ban. The development followed a similar decision by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in February.	6
5-26-17	Ramadan outlook. Mr. Trump issued a Ramadan greeting to the world's Muslims that focused largely on defeating terrorism – a far darker statement about Islam than had appeared in the Ramadan greetings of previous presidents. For his part, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson broke from a 20-year, bi-partisan tradition and directed the State Department to not host its annual Ramadan celebration.	6

5-26-17	More Kushner contacts with Russia. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner had asked the Soviet ambassador in December to establish a secret, secure line of communication between Kushner and the Kremlin through Russian facilities in the U.S. that would bypass American diplomats and intelligence agencies – an unprecedented request for an individual not yet in the government, or even for anyone in the government. The Russian ambassador himself reportedly was taken aback, because of the security risks that the proposed back-channel would pose for both countries. Kushner's motivation was not known. But it appeared to reflect a stunning ignorance and naiveté relative to U.S. security protocols, the limits of executive power, and Russia's appetite for and ability in manipulating its targets; a stunning disdain and hostility for American governmental institutions and the rule of law; a stunning infatuation with the Russians; or some combination of the foregoing. In any event, the overture made clear that Kushner had sought to discuss with the Kremlin one or more things that he did not want the American government to know about: whether regarding the Trump transition team's policy views, personal business matters, Russian interference with the American election, all of the above, or something else. Shortly after the Post's release, Reuters reported that Kushner had had at least three previously undisclosed contacts with the Russian ambassador during and after the election campaign but prior to the inauguration. Thus Kushner was now reported to have failed to honestly and completely disclose his investments and his Russian contacts repeatedly.	17 (7, 12, 13)
5-27-17	McMaster's support of Kushner. National security adviser H.R. McMaster said that the attempt to open back-channel communications with the Kremlin via Russian diplomatic facilities by Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner was routine and not troubling.	17 (7, 12)
5-28-17	Kelly's support of Kushner. Homeland Security secretary John Kelly said that the attempt to open back-channel communications with the Kremlin via Russian diplomatic facilities by Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner was admirable and perfectly normal.	17 (7, 12)

5-28-17	Post-travel tweets on Kushner and Montana election.  Promptly after returning from his overseas trip, Mr. Trump – presumably referring to the recent leaks that had exposed the alarming, pre-inauguration overtures to the Kremlin on the part of his son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner – tweeted that the "fake news" media may have fabricated the leaked material. He added that "fake news" "is the enemy." Also via Twitter, Mr. Trump touted the victory of his avid admirer Greg Gianforte in a special Congressional election in Montana, despite and without referring to Gianforte's having gained national notoriety for body-slaming a respected reporter from The Guardian on the eve of his election. (The Huffington Post had reported on May 24 that the Guardian reporter had been the fourth political reporter to have been arrested or manhandled by government officials in May.)	1, 7, 12, 17 (1, 5)
5-28-17	Merkel commentary on NATO visit. German chancellor Angela Merkel said in a public address that Europe could no longer rely on others. The strong, and extraordinary, implication was that, since Mr. Trump's meeting with NATO days earlier, Europe could no longer rely on the United States.	14

5-29-17	Militarization of the National Security Council. The Washington Post reported that, in a departure from precedent, Mr. Trump had increasingly staffed the National Security Council with military figures. The Post wrote: "Current and retired military officers not only hold positions at the highest ranks of government but also fill senior staff jobs in the White House that have traditionally been the purview of civilians or experienced diplomats. ... The shift in staffing reflects Trump's faith in the nation's warriors and his delight in shows of military force. ... The NSC was created after World War II to harmonize national security decision-making amid competing departments with different agendas. It was set inside the White House, and not the Pentagon, to ensure that the military, with its massive resources and personnel, would not dominate foreign policy planning. Although there is a long tradition of military personnel serving on the NSC, ... the staff has typically been dominated by career civil servants and experts from outside of government. ... One worry among some current and former White House officials is that the heavy military presence might make it harder for the Trump administration to effectively oversee the vast swath of nonmilitary agencies involved in foreign policy. Others fret that the military officers might go easy on the Pentagon." A third concern articulated by The Post was that the military members of the NSC may be unduly wedded to views formed by their own earlier experiences in America's Middle Eastern wars, to the detriment of more current or geographically diverse realities – a bias that civilians might be less likely to harbor.	9
5-30-17	Murder of Good Samaritans. On May 27, a white supremacist had taunted two young women on a train in Portland, Oregon, because one of the women was wearing a hijab; and when three men who knew neither the women nor one another came to the women's defense, the supremacist stabbed the men, killing two. On May 30, Mr. Trump tweeted from his presidential Twitter account that the murders were "unacceptable." But the tweet came three days after the event, following 21 tweets on other topics, including "fake news"; its language was perfunctory, and not suggestive of sincerity; and Mr. Trump did not tweet the message to his 30,000,000 personal followers, in whom for years he had undertaken to cultivate an ethno-nationalist rage. One grieving mother's moving letter to Mr. Trump – calling for him to be the president of all Americans – appeared widely in the press later that day, and can be viewed at this endnote.

5-30-17	Filibuster criticism, again. In a tweet, Mr. Trump again called for the Senate to abolish its filibuster rule, so that it could pass his health care and tax bills with only 51 votes rather than the customary 60 – thus again seeking extraordinary means to eliminate consensus, eviscerate dissent, and consolidate his power.	9
5-31-17	Cell phone access. Time Magazine reported that Mr. Trump had been encouraging world leaders to call him on his unsecured cell phone; and that the use of that form of communication would amount to a radical breach of both diplomatic protocol and national security. (Compare Mr. Trump's relentless attacks on Hillary Clinton for her use of an unsecured email server.)	10, 13
5-31-17	Green light for Egypt's repression. The Washington Post, in an editorial board column, reported that immediately after – and likely because – Mr. Trump had told Egyptian dictator Abdel Fatah al-Sissi in Saudi Arabia earlier in the month that the U.S. would no longer criticize human rights abuses in Egypt, Sissi "doubled down" in his repression. Specifically: "More than 20 news sites were shut and dozens of secular liberal political activists arrested, including Khaled Ali, a human rights lawyer who had said he might run against Mr. Sissi in the 2018 presidential election. [Then] Mr. Sissi ratified a new law imposing unprecedented restrictions on civil society groups. The new rules essentially make it illegal for Egyptians to form independent associations without the government's permission, and give the regime's intelligence and security services authority to control all foreign funding for them. Human rights groups, among others, said it will become impossible for them to legally operate inside the country. Egypt could soon resemble nations such as Cuba and North Korea, where only state-controlled civic groups exist." (Compare to the May 23 entry above in this document, where related outcomes of Mr. Trump's contemporaneous blessing of Bahrain's repression are described.)	14

5-31-17	Exiting the Paris climate accord. Many major news outlets reported that Mr. Trump planned imminently to withdraw the U.S. from the Paris climate accord on limiting climate-changing carbon emissions. The move would defy the recommendations of climate scientists worldwide. Only Syria and Nicaragua are not now party to the accord; and for the U.S. to join them would establish our country as a rogue nation relative to protecting the planet from climate disaster. It would also likely diminish respect for America and its system of governance generally, remove America from influencing the implementation of the accord, cede that influence to rivals such as China, cause America to lose access to fast-growing clean energy markets, and invite foreign tariffs on American goods. Regardless of whether or when Mr. Trump in fact withdraws, his marked hostility to the accord has roundly disturbed world leaders and people all over the earth who are concerned about climate change; and it may have already come to threaten some of the U.S. interests as described above.	8, 13

Addendum 5 – July 3, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

5-31-17	Mulvaney vs. the CBO. Because the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office had given a poor score to the fiscal consequences of Mr. Trump's proposed health care plan, budget director Mick Mulvaney said that the CBO was partisan, useless, and should be abolished. But commentators said that however inexact the science of economics is, and however imperfect the CBO's performance has been over the years, its abolition would eliminate the most objective evaluative resource for federal budget-making that exists within the government; it would empower partisan policy-makers to promote and enact budgets without an empirical brake; and in periods when one party controls both the executive and legislative branches of the government, it would further consolidate the president's power.	17 (8, 9)
5-31-17 +	The Trump Doctrine for international relations. National Security Adviser H.R. McMaster and National Economic Council director Gary Cohn, in a joint opinion column, wrote in The Wall Street Journal of Mr. Trump's recent trip to the Middle East and Europe: "The president embarked on his first foreign trip with a clear-eyed outlook that the world is not a 'global community' but an arena where nations, nongovernmental actors and businesses engage and compete for advantage. ... Rather than deny this elemental nature of international affairs, we embrace it." [Continued below.]	17 (14)

5-31-17 +	[Continued.] For days afterwards, commentators in major news outlets – The New York Times, The Washington Post, CNN, Politico, The Atlantic – identified that statement as possibly the clearest articulation of Mr. Trump's foreign policy doctrine to date. But they also remarked with alarm that that doctrine represented the opposite of, and a seeming abandonment of, what Western leaders and governments had consistently espoused during the 72 years since World War II and in reaction to that war: a bonding among democracies (which Mr. Trump now appeared be set on abrogating in favor of bonding with authoritarian strong men), and an inspired, if uneven, search for collaborative solutions for the benefit of all peoples (in part through international institutions that Mr. Trump now appeared to be set on dismantling). Some also found the stated policy amoral and dangerous – inviting cut-throat behavior and counter-behavior as an international norm.	17 (14)
5-31-17, 6-2-17, 6-7-17	Conflict of interest waivers. On May 31, the White House released to the press 17 conflict of interest waivers that it had issued to top White House staffers – i.e., documents excusing those staffers from complying with the conflict of interest rules established by Mr. Trump himself. The public release of those waivers came only after pressure from the press and the Office of Government Ethics. Reportedly the number of waivers far exceeded the number of waivers granted by President Obama at the same point in his presidency; and the four-month total of Trump waivers equaled the eight-year total of Obama waivers. Among other implications, under Mr. Trump's waivers, some former lobbyists had become free to influence decisions relating to their former clients; and senior advisers Steven Bannon, KellyAnne Conway and Reince Priebus had become free to do business with their former clients or employers. On June 2, the Office of Government Ethics noted that most of the waivers were unsigned and undated, thus giving rise to the possibility that they had been created retroactively, after the ethics rules had been unlawfully violated. On June 7, Politico reported that at least six former lobbyists with White House positions had not received waivers at all, and thus were likely to engage in conflicted behavior with no scrutiny or transparency whatever.	17 (15)

6-1-17, 6-2-17	Withdrawal from Paris climate accord. After months of promising to do so, on June 1 Mr. Trump announced that he would withdraw the U.S. from the international Paris accord that seeks to mitigate climate-changing carbon emissions. He did so against the diplomatic advice of his secretary of state, the security advice of his secretary of defense, and the business advice of major corporations – but in sync with the advice of those of his domestic advisers who openly are environmental science skeptics or deniers, and who are politicians, not scientists. As CSD had observed in a May 31 entry within Addendum 4 to this document, the enormity of Mr. Trump's then potential abandonment of the accord was apparent in advance: "The move would defy the recommendations of climate scientists worldwide. Only Syria and Nicaragua are not now party to the accord; and for the U.S. to join them would establish our country as a rogue nation relative to protecting the planet from climate disaster. It would also likely diminish respect for America and its system of governance generally, remove America from influencing the implementation of the accord, cede that influence to rivals such as China, cause America to lose access to fast-growing clean energy markets, and invite foreign tariffs on American goods." After the announcement, world leaders and a substantial portion of the American citizenry reacted with shock and dismay. In announcing the withdrawal, and in a show of gratuitous hostility toward the rest of the democratic world (and the entire world), Mr. Trump stated: "I was elected to represent the citizens of Pittsburgh, not Paris." The mayor of Pittsburgh responded by Twitter: "Pittsburgh stands with the world &amp; will follow Paris Agreement." [Continued below.]	8, 13
---------------------------	--	--------------

6-1-17, 6-2-17	[Continued.] Notwithstanding Mr. Trump's fervent, direct, years-long denials that carbon emissions were causing potentially lasting and calamitous world climate change, his withdrawal announcement made no mention of any of that. Rather, the withdrawal was nominally based entirely on economic considerations – purportedly intended to save American jobs (although many commentators believed that it could cause a long-term loss of jobs). In fact according to The New York Times on the following day, Mr. Trump's aides said that they did not know his current perceptions and beliefs on the topic of climate change; and that the topic simply had not been part of the internal White House discussions prior to the withdrawal. Further, because the Paris commitments were only voluntary, Mr. Trump could have readily cut back on American compliance in an attempt to save jobs without withdrawing; and thus the intent and impact of withdrawal seemed more about international pugnacity, unilateralism, isolationism and ethno-nationalism for their own sake, or for the sake of the perceptions of Mr. Trump's political base, than even about the purported (and highly disputed) economic reasons. In a sense, some commentators wrote, the withdrawal simply made the U.S. look contrary and stupid.	8, 13
6-2-17	Oversight requests restricted. Politico reported that the White House had ordered federal agencies to not respond to oversight requests from any members of Congress other than (Republican) committee chairs. Thus ranking committee members, as well as other Democrats (and Republicans), were losing the ability to help monitor and check the authority of the executive branch of government; and Mr. Trump, through agency leadership appointed by him, was increasing his control over the country's governance.	9
6-2-17	Inflated number of new jobs from Saudi arms sales. The New York Times evaluated Mr. Trump's claims that his recent arms sale commitments with Saudi Arabia would generate "hundreds of thousands" and "millions" of new jobs for Americans. It concluded, based on research, that many or most of the sales might not go through; that some had already been agreed to before Mr. Trump's ascendancy; and that many of the new jobs might be for Saudis within Saudi Arabia. In the course of that research, the White House had declined to furnish The Times with its own math.	7

6-3/4/5-17	London terror attack. In the immediate aftermath of a terror attack at London Bridge, Mr. Trump – rather than limiting his remarks to expressions of sympathy for and unity with the British people (as had long been customary in such circumstances by statesmen worldwide) – tweeted that the tragedy was the fault of London's mayor and of "politically correct" thinking; that he himself had been proven correct about the terror threat; that American courts had been wrong to bar his executive orders restricting travel from Muslim-majority countries; and that Americans should be frightened (this last sentiment and statement being precisely what the terrorists would have hoped for). The following day, in a string of tweets that were soon set to dramatic music on Mr. Trump's Facebook page, Mr. Trump re-characterized his executive orders of the past winter in which he had undertaken to restrict travel from certain Muslim-majority countries. Specifically, he pointedly and pugnaciously referred to the orders collectively as a "travel ban" – a term that his administration had consistently eschewed for legal reasons after the orders were blocked by a series of federal courts, and which orders at Mr. Trump's instance were now on appeal to the Supreme Court. Similarly, he wrote that the first executive order (including its explicit religious discrimination) should never have been "watered-down" and made "politically correct" by the second, thus bizarrely attacking his own Justice Department, and implying that the intent of the second order (which the Justice Department had designed to be corrective of the first) was tantamount to that of the first. Mr. Trump also tweeted that the courts were "political." The content of the tweets was itself constitutionally problematic: first, for possibly evidencing a discriminatory intent in the orders; and second, quixotically, for attempting to influence the Supreme Court through public bombast. But the tweets were troubling in additional ways. They were demagogic (especially as set to music). They were also wildly undisciplined relative to the conduct of the court cases, and possibly even driven largely by emotion. Such indiscipline and emotion on the part of our commander in chief as reactions to episodes of terrorism were themselves frightening.	2, 9, 10, 11

6-5-17	Delayed appointments. Via Twitter, Mr. Trump again blamed the Democrats in Congress for the delay in approving top executive branch appointments, when in fact (as was statistically demonstrable) it was Mr. Trump who had been dilatory in putting forward nominees, or who had failed to vet them prior to naming them.	7
6-6-17	Inflated coal employment claims. The Washington Post reported that Scott Pruitt, the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, had stated or strongly implied in multiple television interviews that 50,000 coal mining jobs had been created since Mr. Trump became president, when in fact the actual number was 1,000 to 4,000.	17 (7)
6-6-17	Surprise omission of NATO Article 5 from address. Politico reported that in his recent address to members of NATO, Mr. Trump had declined to endorse Article 5 of the NATO charter (which pledges mutual defense among members) contrary to the advice of and his agreement with his senior strategic advisers – deleting the endorsement from his prepared remarks at the last moment. The omission gave rise "to the surprise and consternation of his own blindsided national security team" and "hours of what aides are openly calling 'cleanup duty' on the part of top advisers including Vice President Mike Pence, national security adviser H.R. McMaster, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis and others." That cleanup duty was to last for weeks.)	10, 13
6-6-17	Saudi Payments to Trump Hotel. The Wall Street Journal reported that the Saudi Arabian government had paid $270,000 to the Trump International Hotel for lodging, meals and parking in connection with a campaign to lobby against certain American anti-terrorism legislation. While some of the spending occurred last year, some of the actual payments were received after Mr. Trump became president.	15
6-6-17	Trump sons mix business and politics. Politico reported that Donald Trump, Jr. and Eric Trump – Mr. Trump's sons and the care-taker executives of his business during his presidency – on "Good Morning America" had contemporaneously touted the family business and the Trump presidency. They went so far as to gratuitously join in a number of Mr. Trump's most controversial commentaries – calling the Russia election-tampering investigations a "hoax," and attacking London's mayor for his handling of that city's security relative to terrorist attacks.	15

6-6-17	Qatar confusion. Mr. Trump tweeted his approval of, and took credit for, the previous day's move by Saudi Arabia and other Gulf Arab states to cut diplomatic, commercial and travel relations with Qatar – a country that hosts the largest U.S. military base in the region. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, Secretary of Defense James Mattis, other Pentagon officials, other American diplomats, and the government of Qatar were reportedly taken aback by both the cut-off and Mr. Trump's supportive tweets. Tillerson and Mattis leapt into a damage-control diplomatic effort, which continued for weeks.	13
6-8-17, 6-9-17	Comey testimony. On June 8, former FBI director James Comey's much-anticipated testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee corroborated previous reports that Mr. Trump – inappropriately, extraordinarily, and possibly illegally – had urged Comey to drop the FBI's investigation of former national security adviser Michael Flynn's contacts with Russian officials; had fired Comey when Comey had continued to assert his investigative independence; and had spoken falsely to the public about all of that. Afterwards, Mr. Trump's lawyer (whose current clients included Russia's largest state-owned bank and a Russian oligarch close to Russian president Vladimir Putin) said that Comey both had lied and had vindicated Mr. Trump; and on the following day Mr. Trump stated the same. Their claim added to the long list of generally respected public figures and institutions that Mr. Trump had characterized as liars, and it gave rise to a straightforward question as to which of Mr. Trump and Comey was telling the truth. CSD believes that in a hypothetical forensic proceeding that was not political and in which relative credibility was being weighed, Comey's reputation for truth-telling would readily overcome Mr. Trump's reputation for falsehoods. (Incidentally, or otherwise, Comey studied religion and taught Sunday school as a young man; Mr. Trump did not.) Comey also testified that Mr. Trump had never asked him about the Russian interference in the election campaign – only about various matters relating to the investigation. That is, in private as well as in public, Mr. Trump appeared never to have shown an interest in what the intelligence community believed by consensus to be an unprecedented intrusion by Russia into the American electoral process; rather, his only interest appeared to lie in the domestic political implications for himself that might arise from the investigation.	7, 9, 12

6-11-17	Influencing a U.S. attorney. Preet Bharara, the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York who had had jurisdiction over many of Mr. Trump's business affairs and whom Mr. Trump had fired without notice in March, revealed that Mr. Trump had attempted, inappropriately, to form a personal relationship with him before he was fired, and that he was fired promptly after Bharara had stopped taking Mr. Trump's calls out of wariness about such a relationship. Bharara said that Mr. Trump's attempt to form a personal relationship appeared to be similar to that which had befallen former FBI director James Comey. (Comey too was fired after he had resisted forming that relationship.)	9
6-11-17	Influencing witnesses. The New York Times reported that Marc Kasowitz – Mr. Trump's long-standing personal lawyer who was now representing him relative to Russia's interference with the presidential election in Mr. Trump's favor and Mr. Trump's subsequent behavior relative to the various governmental investigations of that interference – had recently been visiting the White House and speaking with White House staff there. Reportedly, and extraordinarily, Kasowitz had done so without the involvement of the White House Counsel's Office and without the staff having engaged their own attorneys; indeed, he had suggested to staff that they not engage their own attorneys in the pertinent matters, such that he could continue to speak with them directly. Potential consequences included influencing, for Mr. Trump's personal benefit, both the behavior of the staff in the discharge of their governmental duties and any testimony that they might eventually be compelled to give in matters affecting Mr. Trump.	9
6-12-17	Conflicts re-framed. The Washington Post reported that the attorneys general for the District of Columbia and the state of Maryland had sued Mr. Trump, in a federal district court in Maryland, for violating two anti-corruption clauses in the Constitution by accepting millions of dollars in benefits from foreign governments since the inauguration: a clause forbidding the acceptance of emoluments from foreign governments, and another clause forbidding the acceptance of emoluments from a particular state. The suit followed the initiation in January of a similar private lawsuit by Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics. But it added materially to the characterization of the issues, by addressing such items as the following: [Continued below.]	15

6-12-17	[Continued.] 1. The Trump International Hotel in the District of Columbia – where Mr. Trump frequently had been greeting his guests – having hosted such patrons as the governments of Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Turkey and Georgia since the inauguration. 2. That same hotel – the lease for which from the Government Services Administration prohibits elected officials from being tenants – having received a waiver of that prohibition after Mr. Trump proposed increasing the GSA's budget (thus, in CSD's view, effectively after Mr. Trump had bribed the GSA's administrators). 3. The Trump Organization's announcement the previous week that, contrary to prior statements, it would begin building new hotels in the U.S., and mostly in states where Mr. Trump had won the presidential election – thus favoring some states over others in exchange for receiving political benefits and/or state and local regulatory benefits, to the competitive disadvantage of other jurisdictions such as the District of Columbia and Maryland. The Post wrote: "[The two attorneys general] say that unless Trump is reined in under the emoluments clause, Americans can never be certain that 'underlying his travel ban, withdrawal from the Paris Accord climate deal or proposed tax cuts' ... he is acting in the country's best interest and not his own. Strict adherence to the emoluments clauses, [they] argue, ensures 'that Americans do not have to guess whether a President who orders their sons and daughters to die in foreign lands acts out of concern for his private business interests; they do not have to wonder if they lost their job due to trade negotiations in which the President has a personal stake; and they never have to question whether the President can sit across the bargaining table from foreign leaders and faithfully represent the world's most powerful democracy, unencumbered by fear of harming his own companies.'" The Post also quoted the plaintiffs' co-counsel, a former chief White House ethics lawyer, as follows: "Trump is the [Constitutional] framers' worst-case scenario; a president who would seize office and attempt to exploit his position for personal financial gain with every governmental entity imaginable, across the United States or around the world."	15
---------	--	----

6-12-17	Degradation of inspectors general. The New York Times editorial board wrote that the Trump administration was seeking to cut funding for the offices of the inspectors general of many federal agencies. The inspectors are independent officials who investigate waste, misconduct, mismanagement and criminal activity within their respective agencies. Prior to his inauguration, Mr. Trump had threatened to fire the inspectors general en masse; but then he had relented, in favor of attempting to starve them of resources. If they were to be rendered less effective, federal officials (including in the White House) could more easily engage in self-serving and other corrupt behavior.	9, 15
6-12-17	Cabinet flattery on live TV. In a highly unusual move, Mr. Trump invited the television press to film the beginning of his first full cabinet meeting. He started the meeting, inaccurately, by touting the “record-setting pace” of his legislative agenda and claiming that “never has there been a president, with few exceptions” who had accomplished more while in office. Each cabinet member was then invited to thank and praise Mr. Trump, which he or she – startlingly and obsequiously – did. The seemingly staged demonstration of obeisance and servility drew widespread ridicule, and comparisons to the mechanisms and messaging of totalitarian regimes.	7, 9, 11
6-13-17	Criticizing the press; feeling insulted. In a series of early morning tweets, Mr. Trump wrote: “Fake News is at an all-time high. Where is their apology to me for all of the incorrect stories??? ... The Fake News Media has never been so wrong or so dirty. Purposely incorrect stories and phony sources to meet their agenda of hate. Sad!” It was unclear what prompted this particular attack on the news media. But conceivably it was the press having reported that Mr. Trump was considering firing special counsel Robert Mueller (who had only recently been appointed to investigate Russian interference in the presidential election) – even though one of Mr. Trump's own friends had very deliberately announced that potential firing on television.	1, 11

6-13-17	Virginia island assurance. Following a CNN report that Tangier Island in the Chesapeake Bay would soon be submerged due to global climate change, Mr. Trump reportedly called the town's mayor and said (according to the mayor), “not to worry about sea-level rise. ‘Your island has been there for hundreds of years, and I believe your island will be there for hundreds more.’” The mayor himself, despite being a Trump fan, had acknowledged the island's likely submergence due to climate change.	8
6-13-17	Cabinet misstatements. The New York Times reported that at least four members of Mr. Trump's cabinet had inaccurately stated or implied that the administration's budget proposal will not cut certain spending items: Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price (Medicaid), Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross (the 2020 census), Housing and Urban Development Secretary Ben Carson (rental assistance), and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt (toxic waste clean-up).	17 (7)
6-13-17	Sessions' Senate testimony. In testifying before the Senate Intelligence Committee, Attorney General Jeff Sessions corroborated significant elements of former FBI director James Comey's recent testimony to that committee concerning Comey's uncomfortable dealings with Mr. Trump in connection with the FBI's investigation of Russian interference in the American election. But Sessions denied all personal wrongdoing relative to that interference and the administration's handling of it; he claimed to not remember details of his own admitted contacts with Russian officials; and he refused to answer any questions about his conversations with Mr. Trump about the interference or the subsequent investigations. He also said that he had never been briefed on the interference, and that all his information on that topic had come from reading the newspapers – even though he had not recused himself from the FBI's investigation until March 2, six weeks after he had taken office, and while that investigation by his own department (the Justice Department, of which the FBI is a part) was in full flower. [Continued below.]	17 (7, 12)

6-13-17	[Continued.] Altogether, Sessions' testimony exhibited an apparent lack of candor. But if his claim of having never been briefed on the Russian interference happened to be true, that would have demonstrated a seemingly willful disinterest in the matter (matching Mr. Trump's own seeming disinterest) – that is, a dereliction of duty – on the part of the nation's chief law enforcement officer, relative to one of the major political, strategic, constitutional, and potentially criminal issues of our time.	17 (7, 12)
6-15-17, 6-16-17	Witch hunting, revisited. On June 15, in response to the previous day's revelation that Mr. Trump himself was now under investigation for obstruction of justice by special prosecutor Robert Mueller, Mr. Trump tweeted: "You are witnessing the single greatest WITCH HUNT in American political history". Mr. Trump made no mention of the two political undertakings that had come to be uniquely, widely, and notoriously condemned as "witch hunts" during his own lifetime, and with which he had been connected to the hunters. The first hunt, for communists within the American government and media, had been that conducted in the early 1950s by Senator Joseph McCarthy and his counsel, Roy Cohn, who was later to become Mr. Trump's attorney and mentor and who was eventually disbarred. The second hunt, for all manner of dissidents, had been that conducted in the early 1970s by President Richard Nixon, another mentor of Mr. Trump, who resigned from the presidency in disgrace and was also disbarred. (As reported by CSD in an entry dated May 18, Mr. Trump had first alleged a "witch hunt" against himself immediately following the appointment of Mueller.) CSD believes that Mr. Trump's seeing himself as the victim of "the single greatest" witch hunt reflected some combination of his failure to appreciate historical reality; his storied narcissism; a would-be autocrat's instinctive blindness to the transgressions of other would-be autocrats and fear-mongers who had happened to be his friends; but most importantly, an attempt – in and of itself – to further block Mueller's investigation and the quasi-independence of the Justice Department by arousing popular sympathy in Mr. Trump's favor. Subsequent tweets that day faulting the FBI for failing to pursue Hillary Clinton on various accounts seemed directed to the same end. [Continued below.]	9, 11

6-15-17, 6-16-17	[Continued.] Mr. Trump also tweeted that day that the "witch hunt" was being "led by some very bad and conflicted people!" – seemingly referring to Mueller. A number of Mr. Trump's surrogates also questioned Mueller's motivations and objectivity. All of this came only a month after the near-universal, bi-partisan acclaim that had greeted Mueller's appointment as special prosecutor. As to Mueller's "bad" character generally, CSD notes that he had served for many years as a law enforcement official with a reputation beyond reproach, and had been a decorated Vietnam veteran; while Mr. Trump, his contemporary, had long been a businessman of questionable ethics, was previously the target of at least one federal lawsuit, and had avoided military service. On June 16, Mr. Trump rejoined his previous tweets about witches with the following: "I am being investigated for firing the FBI Director by the man who told me to fire the FBI Director! Witch Hunt". Here the added hunter appeared to be deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, whom Mr. Trump had hired for that position, and who had named Mueller as special prosecutor after Mr. Trump had fired FBI director James Comey for continuing the Russia investigation. Implicit in the "witch hunt" allegations were two continuing themes in Mr. Trump's apparent outlook. First was that while he was entitled to routinely and viciously attack others, any criticism or examination of him was "unfair" and unjust. Second was that as president he was not subject to the rule of American law, and was entitled to insult, intimidate, undermine and even dismiss any law enforcement officials who crossed him.	9, 11
6-16-17	Growth of business revenues. After Mr. Trump released a report of his companies' revenues for purposes of complying with federal ethics requirements, The New York Times observed that those business holdings whose revenues had most flourished in the past year appeared to be those most directly linked to his campaign and presidency: his airline company that had hosted campaign flights; the Trump International Hotel in the District of Columbia that foreign and domestic favor-seekers had been viewed as patronizing; and Mar-a-Lago, his Florida resort that he had been promoting through his frequent visits there as president.	15

6-16-17	Cuban reversal, human rights. Mr. Trump announced that he would reverse parts of President Obama's agreement to open commercial and diplomatic ties with communist Cuba. CSD does not take a position relative to Mr. Trump's decision, nor to the support of the decision by some Americans. But we object to two elements of his announcement, made in Miami to a cheering crowd of voters who favored the decision. First, he hyperbolically and deceptively claimed to be "canceling" the agreement – when in fact he was only reversing parts of it. Second, he claimed that his decision was based on his concern for human rights in Cuba – when in fact in recent months he had acquiesced to and even praised human rights abusing regimes virtually everywhere else in the world.	7, 9
6-16-17	Unqualified HUD Administrator. The New York Times reported that Lynne Patton, a woman who had organized golf tournaments on Mr. Trump's courses and planned his son Eric's wedding, was appointed as head of HUD's New York and New Jersey office, where she will oversee billions of dollars in federal spending. Except for a recent and brief position in public relations at HUD, she had had no prior experience in housing policy or administration. The appointment followed Mr. Trump's pattern of appointing under-skilled but highly loyal servants to significant governmental positions, such as his golf caddie becoming his director of social media, and his bodyguard becoming a leading White House aide.	11, 16
6-18-17	Conflicts of Interest in Russia and the Middle East. The New York Times reported, in two separate articles, that the Russian government had recently extended several Trump enterprise trademarks (thus materially enabling Mr. Trump to brand hotels there in the future); and that Mr. Trump's recent siding with Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates against Qatar mirrored his having done substantial business in Saudi Arabia and the UAE but having been rebuffed in Qatar. While the trademark extensions would have been unremarkable in the ordinary course, and while navigating America's strategic path among various terror-supporting Middle Eastern countries has defied obvious resolution, the unprecedented level and variety of Mr. Trump's business conflicts of interest continued to invite concern.	15

6-19-17	Perry on climate change. Defying scientific consensus and the views of the staff of his own department, Energy Secretary Rick Perry said that human-caused carbon dioxide emissions were not the primary cause of global climate change. (The statement echoed a similar statement in March by Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt. Neither man is a scientist.)	17 (8)
6-20-17	Spicer on Russian election interference. In recent weeks, press secretary Sean Spicer had increasingly responded, to reporters' inquiries, that he didn't know Mr. Trump's positions, awareness, beliefs or activities on specific matters. On June 20, Spicer took that approach to the extreme, telling reporters that he had never discussed the Russian election meddling with Mr. Trump, and did not know Mr. Trump's views on it. If Spicer's statement was accurate, it would be remarkable, and comparable to Attorney General Jeff Sessions' statement of June 13 about not having discussed the Russian meddling with Mr. Trump. Spicer is tasked with knowing and reporting Mr. Trump's views on the most important policy matters before the president; and Spicer's lack of knowledge on this matter would appear to further indicate, on Mr. Trump's part, a deep disdain for transparency; a deep disinterest in how and to what extent Russia had tried to undermine American democracy; or both.	9
6-21-17	Skewed data on refugee economics. Reuters reported that the White House, in attempting to build an economic argument against refugee admissions, was assembling data on the cost of the admissions but not on their benefits (e.g., income tax revenues). The State Department was objecting, in that the costs and economic benefits of immigration are commonly cited together and netted out, for purposes of policy discussions.	17 (8)

6-21-17	Iowa rally. At a campaign-style rally in Iowa (as reported by The New York Times), Mr. Trump repeated his allegation of a "witch hunt" against him; repeated his attacks on the "fake news" media; and boasted of his political prowess ("All we do is win, win, win," referring to the results of two recent special Congressional elections). He made untrue statements about the level of his accomplishments as president, the current status of welfare benefits for new immigrants, the non-binding nature of the Paris climate agreement that he had withdrawn from, the level of taxation in the U.S. compared to that in other countries, and eight other matters. He evoked heated chants of "Lock her up!" – which referred to Hillary Clinton, were extraneous to Mr. Trump's subject matter, arose half a year (still) after he had defeated her in the election, and, ironically, suggested a genuine and continuing effort to scapegoat imputed witches. He also referred once more to Washington as a "swamp," despite his own broad and unprecedented introduction of billionaires into the cabinet and ethically unconstrained lobbyists into the White House.	1, 7, 9, 11
6-22-17	Comey tapes. Mr. Trump denied having taped his discussions with former FBI director James Comey prior to firing him, notwithstanding having publicly hinted at the existence of those tapes almost six weeks previous, and having since then tempted the public with a forthcoming revelation as to whether the tapes in fact existed. Following Mr. Trump's denial, it was unknowable whether the denial was truthful; whether it had been artfully and legalistically crafted to evade the complete truth; or why it had taken so long for Mr. Trump (presumably with the help of his lawyers) to issue the denial. If the denial was true, the initial threat of releasing tapes appeared to constitute both an attempt to mislead the public and to (emptily) intimidate Comey. Either Mr. Trump was not telling the truth before, or he was not telling the truth now. But most certain was that – given the seriousness of the questions as to whether the tapes existed and what they may have contained – Mr. Trump's initial hint that they existed, and his subsequent game show style of touting the upcoming revelation as to whether they existed, were demeaning to the office of the presidency.	7, 9, 10

6-25-17	Tweets as food for spies. A former CIA analyst, writing in The Washington Post, detailed how Mr. Trump's impulsive, emotional and frequent tweets almost certainly were revealing to the spies of hostile nations a trove of data about his perceptions, motivations, insecurities and malleability that was not available from any other head of state; that spies ordinarily expended enormous efforts to gather but in Mr. Trump's case was being handed to them; and that could easily be used by foreign powers against him and the United States. A link to the full article appears at this endnote.*	13
6-26-17	Pressure on EPA science testimony. The New York Times reported that in May, the Environmental Protection Agency's chief of staff had pressured the top scientist on the agency's scientific review board to alter her Congressional testimony and play down the dismissal of the board's many expert advisers, even after she had submitted her testimony in writing. The attempts to thus politicize science, and to corrupt Congressional testimony generally, were both apparently extraordinary.	17 (8)
6-26-17	America's standing overseas. A Pew Research Center statistical study of respondents in 37 foreign countries revealed that since Mr. Trump's election, confidence in and approval of America's president, and America itself, had plummeted – particularly within allied democracies such as Sweden, South Korea, the Netherlands, Spain, Germany, France, Mexico, Canada, Australia, Japan and Britain. Many survey respondents considered Mr. Trump to be arrogant, intolerant, unqualified, uncaring, and dangerous. One of the few countries in which the American president's standing grew was Russia. The study was reported upon in many major news outlets. The Washington Post's version is particularly telling relative to the implications for America's world leadership role, and is linked to at this endnote.	All
6-27-17	Time Magazine counterfeits. As Mr. Trump unleashed a torrent of attacks on the mainstream media for disseminating "fake news," The Washington Post reported that a counterfeit image of Time Magazine's signature cover format, featuring Mr. Trump as the subject of a purported cover story (which cover and story never in fact existed), were being displayed at at least four of Mr. Trump's golf courses, and apparently not as jokes.	1, 7

6-28-17 - 7-1-17	Requisition for voter data. On June 28, Mr. Trump's newly created Election Integrity Commission requested the governors of all 50 states to send it the names, addresses, voter IDs, political parties, partial social security numbers, voting participation history and dates of birth of each of their registered voters for the past ten years, which data it said it would make public. The commission had nominally been created to investigate all manner of voting issues in the U.S. But in truth, Mr. Trump had appointed as co-chair of the commission a notorious advocate for (discriminatory) voter suppression; and the commission's creation had been widely feared by civil libertarians as being a vehicle to advance rather than to restrain suppression efforts. An additional expectation was that the commission would attempt to corroborate, or at least to keep alive, Mr. Trump's spurious claim that 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 fraudulent votes had been cast for his presidential opponent Hillary Clinton in the general election. (See CSD's entry of May 11, 2017 on the creation of the commission.) Since its inception, the commission had shown no interest whatever in investigating voter suppression, or the widely reported efforts by Russia to hack state electoral systems during the last election, or to protect electoral systems from future hacking. As of the date of the request for state voter data, the commission had not meaningfully articulated what its areas of interest in fact were; its plans for pursuing those areas; how it intended to use the newly requested data; or why the data was requested before a plan existed for its use. Some of the data was already available to and routinely used by political parties in the lawful course of political campaigns; other data was not. In any event, officials of several states promptly refused to comply with the request, on grounds that there had been no evidence that significant voter fraud of the type likely being investigated had ever occurred in recent decades; and thus that the request was a political ploy and a waste of taxpayers' money. 6-28-17 - 7-1-17	[Continued.] As reported by The Washington Post on June 29, civil libertarian organizations feared even worse outcomes than the initial states had cited should the requests be honored: that voters' privacy could be unnecessarily compromised, and that partisan actors could actually use the data to suppress voting or to otherwise unlawfully influence elections. In fact the electronic facilities and transmission mechanisms through which the data was requested to be loaded were insecure, and thus susceptible to hacking by criminals and foreign governments – all as called out by multiple news outlets, including Politico on July 1. Politico quoted a cyber-security expert: "It is beyond stupid." By July 1, as reported by The Post, more than two dozen states had refused to comply or to fully comply. On the same day, Mr. Trump tweeted an innuendo that the dissident states were complicit in widespread voter fraud.	4, 9, 10, 11
6-29-17, 6-30-17	Body-shaming a prominent journalist; possible blackmail. On June 29, Mr. Trump tweeted a crude attack on MSNBC's talk show host Mika Brzezinski that both disparaged her intelligence and ridiculed her in a grotesque episode of body-shaming. Previous female targets of Mr. Trump's body-shaming attacks had included journalist Megan Kelly, Republican primary contender Carly Fiorina, a Venezuelan Miss Universe contestant, and celebrities Kim Kardashian and Rosie O'Donnell. (A somewhat different but related attack on a woman by Mr. Trump had been, during a campaign rally, his extended expression of physical disgust that Hillary Clinton may have taken a bathroom break during the course of a Democratic primary debate.) A public outcry against Mr. Trump's MSNBC tweet ensued, including on the part of Republican members of Congress. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 10, 11

6-29-17, 6-30-17	[Continued.] The following day, Brzezinski and her co-host Joe Scarborough alleged in a Washington Post column that the White House had previously threatened to allow the Trump-friendly National Enquirer to run a scandalous story about them if they did not apologize to Mr. Trump for their critical views on his presidency. Blackmail is a federal felony, punishable by imprisonment. Both Mr. Trump and The National Enquirer denied any knowledge of the alleged threat. But The National Enquirer, with whose owner Mr. Trump reportedly was personally friendly, like Mr. Trump himself was widely regarded as a consistent purveyor of preposterous untruths; and CSD believes their credibility in this matter to be limited. The allegation of the White House's threat both informed and was informed by Mr. Trump's previous threat addressed to former FBI director James Comey: implicitly, that Mr. Trump would release secret tapes of his conversations with Comey if Comey continued to speak negatively about Mr. Trump's behavior. That episode would appear both to corroborate the Scarborough/Brzezinski allegation and to suggest that the Comey threat likewise had had the smell of blackmail.	1, 6, 7, 10, 11
7-1-17	Kennedy Center rally. At a campaign rally for "veterans and the faith community" at New York's Kennedy Center, Mr. Trump excoriated the "fake media," to enthusiastic cheers: "[They] tried to stop us from going to the White House. But I'm president, and they're not." He spoke eight times about "winning," and extensively about military valor, praising at length not only contemporary wounded veterans but also the exploits of General George Patton – (oddly) likening to Patton his own defense secretary, whom he referred to as "Mad Dog Mattis." Also to cheers, he boasted of his success in protecting the Mexican border and in beating "radical Islamic terrorists" so as to protect Americans' religious freedom (as opposed to our general security). Further on the extended theme of religious freedom, and consistent with prior addresses to religious audiences, he made numerous – and thunderous – mentions of the role of God in American life, such as "We love our freedom, and we love our God!" and "In America, we don't worship government, we worship God!" By CSD's count, he mentioned God at least 16 times. (CSD had commented more fully on Mr. Trump's suspect religious rhetoric in our entry in this document of May 13, 2017.)	1, 9

7-2-17	Wrestling video. Mr. Trump tweeted an old, comic video of himself pretending to tackle and beat up a professional wrestling business magnate at ring-side, but now with the logo of CNN superimposed on the man's head as Mr. Trump punched and punched him. Commentators widely interpreted and condemned the tweet as an incitement to violence against mainstream journalists – an incitement that had already resulted in such violence during and after Mr. Trump's election campaign. But even if the tweet were interpreted as strictly humorous, CSD found it to be expressive of a juvenile, brutish and artless humor that embarrassed the United States before the other nations of the world. Mr. Trump had justified both his missile strikes against Syria and his withdrawal from the Paris climate accord as preventing other countries from laughing at the U.S. But George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, John F. Kennedy, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Ronald Reagan, both Presidents Bush, and Barack Obama would not have remotely sought to portray themselves or their notions of humor as appeared in the wrestling video. It is difficult to imagine how its display of narcissism, sadism and vulgarity could help solve any of our country's many domestic and international problems, and easy to imagine how it could compound them.	1, 5, 10, 11
7-3-17	Ethics lawyer quits administration. Multiple news outlets reported that a Justice Department attorney serving as a watchdog for corporate crime had resigned, saying it was impossible to hold suspected lawbreakers to standards that Mr. Trump was not meeting himself. She cited possible violations of the Constitution and conflict of interest rules, possible treasonous conduct, and possible obstruction of justice. “Those are conducts I would not tolerate seeing in a company,” the attorney wrote, “yet I worked under an administration that engaged in exactly those [conducts]. I wanted no more part in it.”	9, 12, 15

Addendum 6 – July 28, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

7-3-17	Illegal suspension of federal rules. A federal appeals court in the District of Columbia held that the Trump administration's attempt to suspend existing Environmental Protection Agency rules – regulating emissions from oil and gas wells – without submitting the move to the normal rule-making process of public (and in this case scientific) comment exceeded the limits of executive authority. Many other Trump administration efforts to suspend existing regulations instantaneously and by fiat appeared to be jeopardized by the decision as well.	17 (8, 9)
7-6-17	In Poland, for the G-20. Press conference. During a press conference in Warsaw on the eve of the G-20 summit in Germany, Mr. Trump continued to question whether Russia had interfered with the American presidential election – publicly flaunting and expressly disparaging the convictions and the reliability of America's intelligence agencies. He sought to deflect the entire controversy by (extensively) blaming former President Barack Obama for having failed to timely react to the Russian interference. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 10, 12

7-6-17	[Continued.] In addition, Mr. Trump attacked the mainstream American media, while standing in a country (Poland) whose government had gained notoriety in recent years for attempting to throttle its own free press. He went so far as to ask Poland's president Duda, at the lectern, eliciting sympathetic laughter, whether he had had the same problem with Polish media – thus suggesting a fraternity between them in that area. Mr. Trump's comments on both topics were notable not only for their substance, and for being delivered to a cheering crowd of ethno-nationalist supporters that had been bused-in by the Polish government, but for disparaging and embarrassing our country on foreign soil. Principal address. Also in Warsaw, in his prepared public address that was characterized by one Washington Post commentator as purveying "blood-and-soil nationalism," Mr. Trump fiercely decried the mortal perils posed to Western values, civilization and religion by other peoples – implicitly Muslims – much as he had stoked fear about the destruction of America in his inaugural address. As to "values," Mr Trump made repeated references to God, faith, tradition, national sovereignty and family, but he said little if anything about democracy, human rights or the rule of law. And it was unclear whether he saw Russian values as falling within those of "the West."	1, 7, 9, 10, 12
7-7-17, 7-8-17, 7-9-17	In Germany, for the G-20. [CSD Note: Mr. Trump's performance at the G-20 summit was so radical by historical standards and so disturbing, in so many ways, that we have determined to report on it extensively below.] Mr. Trump's Tweets. Shortly prior to meeting with the world's G-20 leaders and Russia's President Putin in Hamburg on July 7, and in an unusual showcasing of intra-American discord while abroad, Mr. Trump tweeted – presumably for the benefit of his American supporters – an error-filled attack on a Democratic party leader, John Podesta, faulting him for being passively victimized by Russian election tampering (rather than blaming the perpetrators). He also tweeted an attack on the "Fake News Media." [Continued below.]	1, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

7-7-17, 7-8-17, 7-9-17	[Continued.] American Isolation. Substantively, the first day of the G-20 gathering was summarized by The Wall Street Journal as follows: "President Donald Trump faced off with world leaders over trade policy on Friday, positioning the U.S. as the most vocal critic of the international economic order and leaving it largely isolated. The Group of 20 summit, long a platform to tackle common problems for leaders presiding over 80% of the world economy, split in two at its outset, with Mr. Trump adopting defiant opening positions toward the rest of a group largely united on the issues of trade and climate change." The New York Times wrote: "For years the United States was the dominant force and set the agenda at the annual gathering of the leaders of the world's largest economies. But ... when President Trump met with other leaders at the Group of 20 conference, he found the United States isolated on everything from trade to climate change." The Washington Post wrote: "The growing international isolation of the United States under President Trump was starkly apparent Friday as the leaders of major world economies mounted a nearly united opposition front against Washington on issues ranging from climate to free trade." Russia: Substance. An exception to that opposition lay in an apparently warm private meeting between Mr. Trump and Putin, which came to dominate the international press coverage of the G-20 summit. In that meeting, after reportedly squabbling about Russia's meddling in the American election, the parties agreed to put their countries' past differences behind them – what would almost have to be considered a colossal concession on the part of America, even as CNN was reporting that Russian spying efforts in the U.S. had actually grown since the election, and that Russia was hacking companies that operate our electric grid. The parties also agreed to partner in developing cyber-security for their respective countries, including relative to their election systems. Afterwards, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson (who had joined in the private meeting) praised Mr. Trump's "positive chemistry" with Putin, despite Putin's standing as a near-dictator and one of America's chief antagonists. And in what would appear to be a strategic act of flattery (Mr. Trump's known weakness), Putin praised Mr. Trump as a strong negotiator who quickly grasps various issues. Mr. Trump later said it was a "tremendous meeting." [Continued below.]	1, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
---------------------------------------	---	----------------------------------

7-7-17, 7-8-17, 7-9-17	[Continued.] Russia: Alternative Facts. Also afterward the private meeting, Putin and his foreign minister Sergey Lavrov each claimed that Mr. Trump had "accepted" Putin's denial of election interference; Tillerson lightly contested that claim; neither view was reliable. But despite Mr. Trump's bravado as a self-identified counter-puncher, with Russia he continued to seem not to have been one. Quite possibly in his forbearance he was exhibiting a canny diplomatic strategy. But just as likely (according to various commentators), he may have been intimidated, or tricked, or genuinely pursuing a friendship with Putin as a fellow ethno-nationalist strongman and/or a potential business partner. In any event, because Mr. Trump continued to be deeply divided from Congress, from his own advisers and from most of the American people relative to Russia, Putin appeared both to be able to exploit that weakness and to lack an incentive to concede anything material. Other American competitor nations, such as China, likely noted that opportunity and outcome. Russia: Sideshows. Famously, in a photo op just prior to the private Putin meeting, Mr. Trump had said before television cameras that it was "an honor to meet with" Putin – the very man who American intelligence agencies had concluded had personally directed Russia's tampering with our election. Also at that time, Mr. Trump and Putin had publicly joked and commiserated about the reporters in the room who had "insulted" Mr. Trump – with a chilling undertone suggestive of Putin's reputation for having secretly ordered the murders of numerous Russian reporters critical of himself. As though to twist that last dagger, at the conclusion of the summit, Putin joked about a reporter's complaint that the White House had not provided more details about the private discussion between Mr. Trump and Putin. "We are going to punish them [the reporter] very strictly, very severely," Putin said. [Continued below.]	1, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
---------------------------------------	--	----------------------------------

7-7-17, 7-8-17, 7-9-17	[Continued.] Ivanka. Ivanka Trump gained attention for securing from her father and announcing at the summit a pledge of $50 million in government funds to support a women's empowerment program in developing countries. CSD (which very much favors America's post-World War II tradition of international engagement, including development and women's empowerment) suspects that that move may have been designed as a promotion of Ms. Trump's general fortunes, and mere window-dressing for Mr. Trump's own misogyny and aversion to international development. Indeed, the sum was paltry, and was taken from other State Department development programs – robbing Peter to pay Paul. In a second flourish, Ms. Trump startled and insulted the other G-20 leaders by taking Mr. Trump's seat at one of the main summit meetings. According to The Washington Post, many in attendance considered the action to be nepotistic and to violate both democratic and diplomatic norms. Conclusion. When the G-20 summit ended, French President Emmanuel Macron said, presumably referring to Mr. Trump, "Our world has never been so divided. Centripetal forces have never been so powerful. Our common goods have never been so threatened." German Chancellor Angela Merkel said, "Unfortunately, and I deplore this, the United States of America left the climate agreement." Meanwhile, Mr. Trump and the Russian government appeared to be jubilant in their budding alliance. How America's rupture with an earnest, forward-looking and democratic Europe and our embrace of a mendacious, reactionary and authoritarian Russia amounted to a defense of "Western civilization" remained a mystery to CSD. Meanwhile Europe and Japan had announced that they were moving ahead with their own free trade agreement. Aftermath. Back home, Mr. Trump tweeted that the summit had been a "wonderful success." But few others appeared to have thought so. An uproar among Republican senators over his agreement for a joint cyber-security project with the Russians – as allowing the fox into our hen-house – forced him to promptly withdraw that idea. And the overall summit was summarized thus by Australian journalist Chris Uhlmann, known for his centrist outlook: "We learned that Donald Trump has pressed fast-forward on the decline of the United States as a global leader. He managed to isolate his nation, to confuse and alienate his allies and to diminish America."	1, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
---------------------------------------	--	----------------------------------

7-8-17, 7-10-17, 7-11-17	Undisclosed campaign meeting with Russian. On July 8, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's son Donald Jr., his son-in-law Jared Kushner, and his then campaign manager Paul Manafort had met on June 9, 2016 with a Kremlin-linked Russian attorney expressly to hear her offer to reveal damaging information about then candidate Hillary Clinton. On July 10 The Times added that Trump Jr. had been told that the Kremlin was behind the attorney's overture. On July 11 The Times revealed the email chain in which the offer had appeared, including Trump Jr.'s response to the offer, "I love it." On the same day Trump Jr. himself acknowledged that he had been given to understand that the meeting would be with an attorney for the Russian government in connection with a concerted Russian government effort to influence the campaign against Clinton, which effort he had welcomed. The attorney had also proposed to discuss at the meeting the lifting of the Russian ban on American adoptions of Russian children. But she had long been a leading advocate for the cancellation of America's Magnitsky Act, which had imposed sanctions on Russia for certain human rights abuses; and in fact she had spent most of the time at the meeting railing against the Magnitsky Act; by July 11 she had acknowledged that her mission at the meeting was the cancellation of the act should Mr. Trump become president; and presumably, at the meeting, Russia canceling the adoption ban stood to be linked to the U.S. canceling the Magnitsky Act. More importantly, the meeting appeared now to commentators to have had the potential for a different quid pro quo: negative data on Clinton in exchange for canceling the Magnitsky Act and lifting sanctions against Russia. [Continued below.]	17 (4, 7, 12)
---	---	----------------------

7-8-17, 7-10-17, 7-11-17	[Continued.] While the revelations about the meeting may or may not have evidenced or been part of a broader Trump campaign collusion with Russia, at a minimum they revealed yet another instance of Russian contacts that senior Trump campaign advisors had failed to properly disclose or detail. On July 10, in one article, the Washington Post recounted eight instances in which Mr. Trump or his senior advisors (including Trump Jr.) had denied any meetings between the campaign and Russians; and, in another article, at least three more. Prevaricators included Trump Jr., Kushner, former national security adviser Michael Flynn and Attorney General Jeff Sessions, all of whom had eventually acknowledged that they themselves had had such meetings. Kushner, and possibly some of the others, had obtained high-level security clearances on the strength of forms they had submitted that had omitted their Russian contacts. As Politico would report on July 10, the newly revealed meeting was far beyond the bounds of typical campaign opposition research; and the invitation to a campaign to participate with an associate of (let alone an attorney for) a foreign power would ordinarily prompt the recipient to contact the FBI immediately, rather than participate. Both Democratic and Republic lawyers and political operatives told Politico that Trump Jr. may have violated federal criminal statutes prohibiting "solicitation or acceptance of anything of value from a foreign national, as well as a conspiracy to defraud the United States." Politico also reported that on July 9, Richard Painter, the former George W. Bush White House ethics lawyer, wrote of the newly revealed meeting: "This is treason." Painter also wrote: "In the Bush administration we could have had him [Trump Jr.] in custody for questioning by now." On July 11, Republican Senator John McCain said that if one of his sons, in the military, had held such a meeting, he would probably have been court-martialed. Also on July 11, Mr. Trump (the president) repeated by Twitter his previous canard: "This is the greatest Witch Hunt in political history." (See CSD's commentary of May 18, 2017 and June 15-16, 2017 on Mr. Trump's selective sensitivity to witch hunts.) [Continued below.]	17 (4, 7, 12)
---	--	----------------------

7-8-17, 7-10-17, 7-11-17	[Continued.] As a final riposte to ethics, truth and convention, Trump Jr. claimed that his revelation of the meeting's details evidenced his "transparency" – and Mr. Trump (the president) lauded that transparency – when in fact Trump Jr. had come forward with the details only after The New York Times had told him that it was about to publicly reveal the same. And just days earlier, when The Times had first broken the story of the meeting, Trump Jr. had untruthfully claimed – reportedly under the coaching of Mr. Trump (the president) – that the purpose of the meeting had been to discuss Russian adoptions.	17 (4, 7, 12)
7-8-17	Illegality alleged re voter roll request. The Huffington Post reported that the recent request for state voter rolls by Mr. Trump's Commission on Election Integrity had been challenged by various parties as being illegal on multiple statutory grounds: the Paperwork Reduction Act (re OMB's requirement that all new data gathering initiatives be carefully justified vs. their potential harm), the 2002 E-Government Act (re data privacy), the 1974 Privacy Act (re personal privacy), and the Hatch Act (re co-chairman Kris Kobach's contemporaneous campaign to become governor of Kansas). The possible executive overreach and statutory breaches stood in addition to what many state governments and commentators perceived as the request's unconstitutional intent – to corrupt the American voting system.	4, 9
7-10-17	HUD conflicts. The New York Times reported that the ranking member of the House Oversight Committee had sent a letter on July 7 to Mr. Trump's real estate company, seeking information that could point to Mr. Trump improperly making millions of dollars from a subsidized rental program funded by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Mr. Trump was and remained part owner of the country's largest subsidized rental property, located in Brooklyn, and he had already long benefited handsomely from the government program. But as president, he was now in the position to benefit more: by retaining the program's funding while cutting other housing program funding (as he had previously proposed); by approving the sale of the complex when HUD had previously denied such approval for the protection of the tenants; by allowing himself to raise rents; or by approving lucrative refinancing with undue favor. The HUD official with jurisdiction over the project was by then Mr. Trump's son's former wedding planner, who had had no experience in government or housing programs.	15, 16

7-10-17	Voter integrity commission sued. The New York Times reported that four public interest organizations had brought four separate lawsuits against Mr. Trump's Commission on Election Integrity, for violating a range of statutes protecting citizen privacy on the one hand and transparent administrative procedures on the other. The common theme was executive overreach.	4, 9
7-10-17	Inaccurate accusation of Comey. Mr. Trump picked up from Fox News and then re-tweeted a misleading report that former FBI director James Comey had included top secret information within a memorandum about his discussions with Mr. Trump that Comey had shared with the press several months prior. In fact Comey had shared only a memorandum that he had carefully purged of classified information. Mr. Trump's tweet was presumably intended to disparage or to compromise the various investigations of his campaign and himself, to the extent those investigations turned on Comey's ethics and credibility. Using Twitter (as opposed to law enforcement mechanisms) to accuse a former top security official of deliberately leaking top secret information was in and of itself remarkable; and making the accusation on the basis of a highly partisan news program (as opposed to serious governmental intelligence), likewise.	7, 9, 10, 11
7-11-17	Trail of incompetence. Dana Milbank, a Washington Post columnist, reported that senior presidential advisers were explaining away Donald Trump Jr.'s now notorious meeting last year with a Russian attorney to get negative data on then candidate Hillary Clinton as an innocent "rookie mistake" that could be overcome by more experience. Milbank responded by listing dozens of significant, and significantly embarrassing, "rookie mistakes" that the administration had made over just the previous three weeks, many of them on the world stage. He concluded that "it looks [less] like growing pains than incompetence and mismanagement aggravated by nepotism and dishonesty." Milbank's breathtaking listing of three weeks' worth of mistakes (many but not all of which have previously been logged by CSD in this document) appear in the link at this endnote.*	10, 11

7-11-17	Conflicted de-regulators. The New York Times reported that although the White House had attempted to keep secret the identities of new federal agency advisers tasked with aggressively de-regulating multiple industries, The Times had identified 71 such advisers, and had found 28 of them to be industry insiders who were positioned to (secretly) profit from their de-regulation efforts.	17 (15)
7-11-17	The Trump family business in Russia. During his campaign and after his election, Mr. Trump had consistently downplayed his business connections with Russia, despite widespread journalistic reports to the contrary. On July 11, New York Magazine summarized those connections, in reporting on how they had led eventually to the controversial meeting among three top campaign aides and a Russian lawyer in June 2016 to gain negative data on opponent Hillary Clinton from the Russian government. That summary included the following passage: "[T]hroughout the '90s Trump proposed ... building projects in Russia, filed at least eight trademarks in the country, and sold many condominiums in Manhattan's Trump World Tower to 'wealthy people getting their money out of what had been the Soviet Union,' as Bloomberg reported. Over the years, Trump's business, personal, and political ties to Russia became so extensive that Politico needed seven charts to map them out." Also on July 11, and then again on July 12, Michael Issikof, the chief investigative reporter for Yahoo! News, said on MSNBC that in 2014 Mr. Trump's daughter Ivanka had gone so far as to sign a letter of intent with a Russian partner to develop a Trump Tower at a specific property in Moscow. But shortly after that signing (Isikoff continued), Russia had annexed Crimea, then the U.S had imposed sanctions on Russia, then the value of the ruble had plummeted against the dollar – and as a consequence Ms. Trump lost her deal. Issikof suggested a connection between that bitter experience and the subsequent, fervent efforts of the Trump family to cancel the sanctions. [Continued below.]	12, 15

7-11-17	[Continued.] (Issikof had reported in Yahoo! on June 1: "In the early weeks of the Trump administration, former Obama administration officials and State Department staffers fought an intense, behind-the-scenes battle to head off efforts by incoming officials to normalize relations with Russia, according to multiple sources familiar with the events. Unknown to the public at the time, top Trump administration officials, almost as soon as they took office, tasked State Department staffers with developing proposals for the lifting of economic sanctions, the return of diplomatic compounds and other steps to relieve tensions with Moscow.")	12, 15
7-12-17	Government funds to and for Trump businesses. The Washington Post reported that that the State Department – presumably to provide security services – had spent $15,000 on rooms at a Trump-branded hotel in February in connection with a gala opening of the hotel which Trump family members had attended. The Post added that the Secret Service likely paid additional sums for its own rooms. The Post also reported that the Secret Service had spent $88,320 for lodging in Uruguay to protect Eric Trump (Mr. Trump's son) during a trip to promote another Trump property; and the State Department paid $9,510. The Trump administration had not been responsive to The Post's inquiries for further details.	15
7-13-17	Approving the campaign meeting with Russia. Speaking to reporters in Paris, Mr. Trump said that "most people would have taken that meeting." He was referring to the recently disclosed meeting of three of his top campaign figures with a Russian lawyer in June 2016 to receive from her the Russian government's negative data on then candidate Hillary Clinton. Mr. Trump thus appeared to have quickly pivoted from denying his campaign's contacts with the Russian government's associates to blessing at least one of those contacts. [Continued below.]	4, 11, 12, 17 (11, 12)

7-13-17	[Continued.] As for his belief as to what "most people" would have done, CSD can only speculate that Mr. Trump may have meant or believed that "most people" in his own real estate and entertainment circles might have done it. But "most people" engaged in an American presidential campaign would not have done it, based on the outraged commentary by campaign professionals of both parties that had followed the recent disclosure. Mr. Trump's phraseology is significant in its continued demonstration of his unawareness of and indifference to both the law and the ethical responsibilities of running for and serving in high office, and of his general outlook that if something serves him (but not others) personally, it is alright. Mr. Trump's phraseology echoed that of his son, Donald Trump, Jr., who on July 11 had told Fox News with regard to the campaign's Russia meeting: "That's what we do in business," he had said indignantly, without the slightest regret, circumspection, moral misgiving or appreciation of custom or law. "If there's information out there, you want it. And then you [decide] what you do with it."	4, 11, 12, 17 (11, 12)
7-13-17	Intimidated voters un-register. CNN reported that voters in Colorado, Florida and North Carolina had begun to deregister to vote, for fear that Mr. Trump's Commission on Election Integrity would violate their privacy as a consequence of its plan to acquire their personal data from states. Multiple other reports confirmed the Colorado phenomenon. Whether the trend would continue if and when states were to begin turning over their voter information was unknowable. But if so, the commission would have succeeded in actually chilling the voting process.	4
7-13-17	McMaster and Cohn write of the G-20 meeting. National security advisor H.R. McMaster and National Economic Council director Gary Cohn, in an op-ed in The New York Times, extolled Mr. Trump's performance at the recent G-20 summit as advancing American interests and "values." They went on to list those "values"; and the list did include freedom of speech and religion. But it notably excluded truth, a free press, tolerance, fair elections, humanitarian action, non-corrupt governance, and – above all – democracy, a "value" that Mr. Trump had barely mentioned in his own remarks at the summit.	17 (1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16)

7-14-17	Second Russian agent attended meeting with campaign officials. Multiple news organizations reported that a Russian-American lobbyist tied to the Kremlin and trained in counter-intelligence had also attended the June 2016 meeting with a Kremlin-associated Russian lawyer and three Trump campaign officials – Jared Kushner, Donald Trump, Jr. and Paul Manafort. None of the three had previously disclosed that. In April 2017, Republican Senator Chuck Grassley had identified the lobbyist as a likely Russian agent in connection with an investigation into potential violations by the lobbyist of the Foreign Agents Registration Act.	17 (4, 7, 12)
7-14-17	Body-praising French first lady. After sight-seeing with French president Emmanuel Macron and his wife Brigitte in Paris, Mr. Trump looked her up and down, and twice said she was "in good shape." Although the comment might have been innocuous coming from another person, it gained international press attention because of Mr. Trump's history of lecherous behavior and remarks, now magnified in significance due to the stature of and the diplomatic context with the Macrons.	10, 11
7-16-17, 7-17-17	Updates on Russia-campaign meeting, from the administration. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. On July 16, Mr. Trump tweeted twice that the "fake news" media was unfairly picking on his son, Donald Trump, Jr., relative to the recent disclosures about the latter's meeting with two Kremlin-associated figures and two other top Trump campaign officials in June 2016.</li> <li>2. Also, in one of those tweets, he sought to divert attention and blame to unrelated alleged wrong-doings by his former rival Hillary Clinton.</li> <li>3. Contemporaneously, one of Mr. Trump's attorneys blamed the meeting with the Russian figures on the Secret Service – for having allowed the Russians to enter Trump Tower in New York, at Trump Jr.'s invitation.</li> <li>4. On July 17, Mr. Trump, via Twitter, apparently without regard to custom, prudence or law, repeated his spurious claim that "most people" in politics, given the opportunity, would have taken the meeting with the Russians.</li> <li>5. Also on July 17, press secretary Sean Spicer maintained that the meeting was substantively about the Russian adoption law and the American sanctions law – that is, the original untruthful claim of Trump Jr. that had been debunked both by Trump Jr. himself and by Mr. Trump (the president) a week prior to Spicer's statement. 7-16-17, 7-17-17	[Continued.] 6. Mr. Trump appeared to decline to entertain the growing calls for revoking the security clearance of his son-in-law Jared Kushner for having likewise attended the Russian meeting and having failed to fully disclose and describe it (and many other foreign meetings) in his security filings. (By all accounts, such a revocation would have been perfunctory under those circumstances had Kushner not been a family member, and/or had Mr. Trump not been the president.) 7. A growing chorus of critics was also voicing concern that the fees of the attorneys recently engaged by Trump Jr. to defend him relative to the meeting were being paid by the re-election campaign of his father, the president. Trump Jr. is a multi-millionaire, and the election and re-election campaigns had been largely funded by small donations from working men and women. 8. The attorneys were paid $50,000 for that engagement weeks prior to the first public revelation of the meeting by The New York Times. Mr. Trump (the president) had said that he had learned of the meeting only at around the time that it had been reported in the news. Based on the earlier payment of the legal fees, he was likely not being truthful.	17 (4, 7, 12)
7-17-17	Ethics: worldwide toll. Walter Shaub, the director of the Office of Government Ethics who had recently announced his resignation out of despair over the Trump administration's defiance of ethical norms with respect to business conflicts of interest, shared his thinking with The New York Times. He said: "It's hard for the United States to pursue international anticorruption and ethics initiatives when we're not even keeping our own side of the street clean. It affects our credibility. ... I think we are pretty close to a laughingstock at this point." The Times wrote: "Every other president since the 1970s, Republican or Democrat, worked closely with the ethics office, [Shaub] said. [But a] White House official dismissed the criticism, saying ... that Mr. Shaub was simply promoting himself and had failed to do his job properly."	15, 17 (7)

7-17-17	Legislative output. Mr. Trump said that he believed he had signed more Congressional bills than any other president. In fact, according to The Washington Post, he had signed fewer than most over the course of the last 100 years; and 60% of those he signed had been one-page documents of limited consequence. The New York Times was more charitable, calculating Mr. Trump's legislative record as having been only slightly below average.	7, 11
7-17-17	Made in America. Mr. Trump bombastically ushered in a week of advocacy and celebration around American-made goods, as distinguished from the foreign-made goods that the Trump family businesses routinely and notoriously dealt in. CSD does not resent either American or foreign-made goods; but it resents hypocrisy, which it believes in this case soared beyond the morally deficient to the demagogic. A comparable level of hypocrisy (and callousness to the human condition) lay in the self-promotional claims of Mr. Trump's daughter and White House adviser, women's clothing manufacturer Ivanka Trump, to be an advocate of women's empowerment – when in fact her company relied entirely on overseas subcontractors that commonly and harshly exploited their female workers. A July 14 exposé by The Washington Post had detailed those labor abuses, noting that the workers suffered "exhausting hours, subsistence pay and insults from supervisors if they don't work fast enough." The Post also reported that many American garment manufacturers who subcontract overseas seek to monitor and avoid such conditions, but that Ms. Trump's company has turned a blind eye. The complete Post article is linked at this endnote.	9
7-18-17	Pruitt under investigation. The Huffington Post detailed an investigation of and the potential disbarment of Environmental Protection Agency director Scott Pruitt by the Oklahoma state bar association, and the support of that investigation by a Democratic member of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. The matters pertained to Pruitt's alleged stonewalling and lying before that committee, during his confirmation hearing this year, about his ties to the energy industry and his use of a private email service for official Oklahoma government business when he was attorney general there. (Pruitt, an environmental science denier, has focused his activities as EPA director on deregulating the fossil fuels industry, which had handsomely funded his political campaigns in Oklahoma.)	17 (7, 15)

7-18-17	Sabotaging health care. Frustrated by the inability of the Republican-controlled Congress to agree on a new health insurance bill, Mr. Trump cynically and puzzlingly blamed the Democrats. As for the existing health insurance law, the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"), he vowed to "let it fail," having already, earlier in the year, taken several administrative measures to precipitate such a failure. By letting Obamacare "fail," he meant that neither he nor the Republican Congress should try to shore up its deficiencies, essentially causing premiums to further rise and insurance companies to further drop out of the health care exchanges. Mr. Trump's wish (or dare) was viewed as creating such systemic uncertainty for insurers that many of them might further scale back their offerings on the strength of it. The consequence of such developments risked not only tens of millions of Americans losing their health insurance, but possibly hundreds of thousands becoming sick, or becoming sicker, or dying, for want of insurance. Mr. Trump's peevish wish (or dare) evidenced no concern for that consequence. To the contrary, he said that if the insurance system collapsed, he himself "won't own it." To encapsulate CSD's view: a vaulting egotism had dismissed all regard for Americans' welfare; and casting blame had overridden taking responsibility and solving problems.	7, 9, 10, 11
7-18-17	More facts emerge on campaign officials' secret 2016 Russian meeting. News media investigations revealed that a fourth Russian had been present at the June 2016 meeting which Jared Kushner, Paul Manafort and Donald Trump, Jr. had convened so as to gather damaging data on then candidate Hillary Clinton from the Russian government. The fourth Russian represented a billionaire Russian oligarch, Aras Agalarov, who in 2013 had partnered with Mr. Trump (the president) in producing the Miss Universe pageant in Moscow and who was close to Russian President Vladimir Putin. When The New York Times had first uncovered the meeting in early July 2017, Trump Jr. had said or implied that only one Russian, an attorney close to the Kremlin, had been present – leaving three others out of the count: her translator, a former spy, and Agalarov's representative. Implications of the new revelation – both the attendance and the misinformation about it – included an ever-greater likelihood of a mixing of business and governance on the part of the Trump family; and an ever-greater likelihood that nefarious discussions had occurred at the meeting.	17 (7, 15)

7-18-17, 7-19-17, 7-20-17	Unreported meeting with Putin at the G-20. On July 18, various news outlets reported that – after Mr. Trump's two-hour meeting at the recent G-20 summit with Russian President Vladimir Putin, Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov and U.S. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson – Mr. Trump and Putin had had an additional one-hour side meeting at the end of a dinner for heads of state. No other American was present at the side meeting; the sole interpreter was Mr. Putin's. The Wall Street Journal reported that the talk (which had been observed from a distance by other world leaders sitting at dinner) was "very animated" and "very friendly." According to The New York Times, some heads of state, notably those of America's allies, had been startled that Mr. Trump had ignored them at dinner in favor of Putin. The White House would not immediately reveal what Mr. Trump and Putin had discussed. But it was seen by news media as highly unusual for the president of the United States to have met with a foreign adversary in the midst of diplomatic crises relative to that adversary and without alerting Congress or the press. In addition, because no national security or diplomatic personnel had accompanied Mr. Trump in the meeting, there had been no brake on his potential to reveal classified information (as he had done when meeting with Lavrov and the Russian ambassador on May 10), make misstatements, make miscalculations, discuss personal business goals, acquiesce to Russia's interference in the American presidential election, discuss something over which he could be blackmailed, cede influence to Russia in Ukraine or Syria, or otherwise wittingly or unwittingly compromise American interests or democratic values. A senior fellow at the Brookings Institution told The Times: "If I was in the Kremlin, my recommendation to Putin would be, 'See if you can get this guy alone,' and that's what it sounds like he was able to do." [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13

7-18-17, 7-19-17, 7-20-17	[Continued.] On July 19, Mr. Trump told the New York Times that the side meeting with Putin had lasted only 15 minutes rather than an hour, that the topic had been child adoptions, and that it was an "interesting" coincidence that that had likewise been the topic of his son Donald Trump Jr.'s discussion in Trump Tower with four Kremlin-linked Russians in June 2016. The first of these statements contradicted the observations of multiple heads of state; the second too seemed far-fetched; and the third had already been debunked by Trump Jr. Collateral damage from the side meeting may well have included another blow to America's reputation within the West. On July 20, Politico wrote that Mr. Trump, far outgunned in terms of wits and experience by Putin, had "committed several cardinal sins of diplomacy: [the meeting] was unplanned, unstaffed, undocumented, unending and undisclosed. ... [The other G-20 leaders] probably observed [Mr. Trump's] chat with Putin as one views a colleague embarrassing themselves at the office Christmas party." But CSD expects that Mr. Trump was not embarrassed. By all indications, he almost certainly would like the U.S. to ally with an amoral, ruthless, mercantile, oligarchic, kleptocratic, ethno-nationalist, authoritarian Russia and not with what he considers to be a feckless, sentimental and culturally arrogant Europe. Democracy is not on his mind.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13
7-18-17	Border wall construction begins. The Department of Homeland Security announced that it had begun to build Mr. Trump's wall at the Mexican border. The wall concept had long been criticized as expensive and useless, as well as unwelcome by the states in which it would rise. Its principal demonstrated utility appeared to continue to be a prop for, or a monument to, Mr. Trump's ethno-nationalist invective.	6, 9
7-19-17	Russia prevails in Syria. The Washington Post reported that the U.S. had ended its covert support of moderate anti-government rebels in Syria, thus handing a significant geopolitical victory to Russia's President Putin in his brutal military backing of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad – and with no known concessions from Putin in exchange. [Continued below.]	12

7-19-17	[Continued.] CSD does not take a position on how to end the calamitous civil war in Syria. But we are concerned that Mr. Trump's surrender to Russian aggression there could bespeak the beginning of what we have long feared to be a plan on his part to allow that country to expand its sphere of influence, out of personal affinity for Putin's authoritarian and corrupt model of governance and/or in pursuit of Mr. Trump's personal gain. We are also concerned that Putin had now – masterfully, ruthlessly and without penalty – at least twice materially undermined the U.S. within the past year, the first instance having been his creation of constitutional turmoil here by having meddled in our presidential election.	12
7-19-17	Voter fraud investigation. Mr. Trump personally appeared at the inaugural meeting of his Commission on Election Integrity to promote his unfounded theory that the nation is being subjected to massive voter fraud, and to encourage the commission to prove that unprovable claim at taxpayer expense. Implicit in his message was his long-advanced charge that fraud had cost him a popular vote victory in the November election. He repeated his accusation that any state government that was not cooperating with the commission apparently had something to hide (i.e., along the lines of voter fraud). He showed no concern for voter privacy, the security of state voting systems (including as against Russian hacking), or the potential political abuse of the data to be collected by the commission .	4, 7, 9, 11, 12
7-19-17	Disparagement of Justice Department officials. In an interview with The New York Times, Mr. Trump disparaged several top Justice Department officials relative to their handling of the department's investigation of Russia's meddling with the American election: Attorney General Jeff Sessions for having recused himself (Mr. Trump said he viewed Sessions' behavior as disloyal, disingenuous and "unfair"); special prosecutor Robert Mueller for alleged conflicts of interest within his investigative team; Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein for having appointed Mueller; and former FBI director James Comey for alleged perjury and (for the first time) blackmail. In the interview, Mr. Trump also cautioned Mueller to not investigate the Trump family's personal finances, (seemingly) under pain of being fired. Apparently Mr. Trump feared a corruption probe. [Continued below.]	9, 11, 12, 15

7-19-17	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's naming of enemies was reminiscent of President Richard Nixon's Watergate-era paranoia. His public and casual allegation of blackmail by a government official was extraordinary. His charges against Sessions were seen as a gratuitous public humiliation of a senior official that compared to his public firing of Comey. And his overall allegations seemed to amount to a wholesale undercutting of the Justice Department – a bridge not far from obstruction of justice, and an endeavor comparable to his undercutting of American intelligence agencies, American courts, the American press, the American electoral system, the American diplomatic community, the American scientific community, and the rule of law itself. As before, Mr. Trump had placed his own claimed infallibility, and his own personal interests, above all of those institutions.	9, 11, 12, 15
7-19-17	Foreknowledge of June 2016 campaign meeting with Russians. In the same New York Times interview, Mr. Trump appeared to admit that, prior to the June 2016 meeting between his top campaign advisers and four Kremlin-linked Russians, he had known about and acquiesced to the email that had indicated a Russian governmental offer of damaging information about then candidate Hillary Clinton as the subject of the upcoming meeting.	4, 12
7-19-17	Great speeches. In the same New York Times interview, Mr. Trump said that his July 6 speech in Poland had been “the greatest speech ever made on foreign soil by a president.”	11
7-19-17	Manafort debts. The New York Times reported that Paul Manafort, through a series of evasive and mysterious offshore transactions and bank accounts, had owed $17 million in debt to pro-Russian interests shortly before becoming Mr. Trump's original campaign manager in 2016. The revelation added to Manafort's known record of having bedded with Russian interests, including his having worked at considerable profit for an unsavory and corrupt figure who at the time was Ukraine's anti-democratic and pro-Russian president.	17 (12, 15)

7-20-17	Poland crippling its judiciary. Poland's lower chamber of parliament approved a bill that would allow the government to replace every judge on the supreme court – a starkly undemocratic move that was decried by European leaders and large numbers of street protesters, but (to public knowledge) not by Mr. Trump, and only barely by the State Department. The move followed several years of growing restrictions on the Polish press, as reported by CSD in this document on July 6 in connection with Mr. Trump's visit to Warsaw and his praise of the ethno-nationalist regime there. In addition, it appeared to be a re-play of what had happened in Bahrain, as reported by CSD on May 23: in Saudi Arabia, Mr. Trump had told the government of Bahrain that the U.S. would not criticize its human rights abuses; and within days that government committed a new and bloody atrocity. Also at that time, Mr. Trump had promised Egyptian President Abdel Fatah al-Sissi that he wouldn't "lecture" him, and within days al-Sissi had closed 20 news sites, rounded up dozens of secular liberal activists, and severely restricted civil society organizations – making it nearly impossible for human rights groups to operate there. (Remarkably, on July 24, and due to the protests of others, the Polish president would veto parliament's bill.)	14
7-20-17	Retaliatory action against Interior Department scientist. A senior environmental scientist at the Interior Department wrote a column in The Washington Post alleging that he had been unlawfully demoted to a position in which he would collect accounts receivable – with the intent by department leadership to force him out of the department – because he had spoken out about how climate change was affecting Alaska Native communities. Contemporaneously, 50 other scientists had been re-assigned to unrelated positions as well.	17 (8, 9)
7-20-17	Tillerson's company violated Russia sanctions. CNN Money reported that ExxonMobil "blatantly violated U.S. sanctions on Russia when Secretary of State Rex Tillerson led the oil company," for which the maximum fine of $2,000,000 had just been imposed by the Treasury Department. That department said that "the violations were 'egregious' and 'caused significant harm' to the objectives of the punishment on Russia." CSD believes that a fair inference from the affair is that Tillerson is likely to oppose all sanctions that would impede the profits of energy companies – including, eventually, for his own financial benefit.	17 (12, 15)

7-20-17	Investigation shut-down and pardons contemplated. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's lawyers were exploring whether he could block the investigation of Russian election tampering being conducted by special prosecutor Robert Mueller, and/or fire Mueller, and/or pardon himself (as well as pardoning others, presumably his son Donald Trump, Jr. and his son-in-law Jared Kushner). CSD believes that any of those actions would amount to an attempt to insulate Mr. Trump and his associates from all accountability, and thus be tantamount to imposing a dictatorship on the United States. The mere fact that Mr. Trump had contemplated and casually hinted at those actions has raised in CSD the utmost alarm.	9, 11
7-21-17	Former intelligence chiefs voice dismay. Former CIA director John Brennan and former director of national intelligence James Clapper for the first time jointly, publicly and at length condemned Mr. Trump's expressed disdain for American intelligence agencies and his manifest coddling of Russia. No such rebuke of a sitting president by senior intelligence veterans had ever before occurred. A link to a more complete summary of their extraordinary remarks appears at this endnote.	9, 10, 12, 13
7-21-17	Sessions' campaign talk with Russian ambassador. The Washington Post reported that in communications of Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak that had been intercepted by American intelligence agencies during the 2016 election campaign, the ambassador had reported to his superiors that he had had substantive talks about the campaign with campaign figure Jeff Sessions (now Mr. Trump's embattled Attorney General). Sessions had consistently denied such talks, including in his sworn testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee. Before that he had lied to Congress under oath about other Russian contacts of his, which lies, when discovered, had forced him to recuse himself from Justice Department investigations of Russian interference. See CSD's reports of March 2 and June 13.	17 (7, 12)
7-21-17	Non-scientist will head science at USDA. CNN reported that Mr. Trump planned to name a campaign loyalist and former talk-radio host as chief scientist at the Department of Agriculture, even though he had no background in science, and even though a statute provides that nominees for that position must be scientists.	8, 16

7-21-17	Physical brawn. In promoting Made in America Week, Mr. Trump demonstrated his physical strength by way of a test of American-made unbreakable glass that was staged by its manufacturer on-camera at the White House. After the test, the manufacturer's CEO flattered Mr. Trump for having displayed the strength of a "professional boxer." Mr. Trump reveled in the machismo, as he had done days earlier for Made in America Week by serially posing in a Stetson hat and sitting in a fire truck. (He did not pose in a garment factory.) For CSD, the episodes called to mind the multitude of manly, often bare-chested photographs of Russian President Vladimir Putin that had captured his athletic and outdoor pursuits and were subsequently publicized by the Russian government. More importantly, they called to mind Mr. Trump's commanding and physically threatening directives during several campaign rallies to "Get 'em out of here," referring to protesters. Physical strength is of course admirable; but our concern lies in its projection in politics by crudely authoritarian men as having a historical association with mob violence, domestic repression, sexual assault, and international aggression.	9, 11
7-21-17	Kushner omits, revises again. The Washington Post reported: "Jared Kushner failed to disclose dozens of financial holdings that he was required to declare when he joined the White House as an adviser to President Trump, his father-in-law, according to a revised form released [that day]. A separate document ... also showed that Kushner's wife, presidential daughter Ivanka Trump, had been paid as much as $5 million from her outside businesses over an 84-day span this spring around the time she entered the White House as a senior adviser and pledged to distance herself from her private holdings. Kushner's new disclosure, released by the White House, detailed more than 70 assets that his attorneys said he had inadvertently left out of earlier filings. The new document comes as the presidential aide faces increasing scrutiny as part of investigations into alleged Russian influence in the 2016 campaign."	17 (7, 15)

7-22-17	Eye on pardons. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump doubled-down on, and made more explicit, his ability and willingness to pardon anyone in his administration who might be found guilty of a crime – seemingly in connection with the Russian election interference or otherwise. As his supporters had argued in recent days, implicit was the possibility that he might also pardon (or seek to pardon) himself. In the same series of tweets, Mr. Trump alleged "many Hillary Clinton and Comey crimes." CSD regards the tweets as diversionary demagoguery; unseemly, very public and casual accusations of crimes by a president rather than by a prosecutor; and above all, as we observed in our entry of July 20, a threat to hold his administration and himself unaccountable to the rule of law.	9, 11, 12
7-22-17	Voting suggestions to Navy personnel. In an address to some 6500 Navy personnel (many of them in uniform) at the commissioning of a new aircraft carrier in Norfolk, Virginia, Mr. Trump urged them to encourage their members of Congress to pass a pending health care bill that he had endorsed. That urging, by their commander in chief, was highly unusual, and possibly illegal. During the formal commissioning ceremony, Mr. Trump said that the new warship would cause America's enemies to "shake with fear," echoing the martial expressions of such unusual heads of state as the late Saddam Hussein. "May God bless and guide this warship and all who shall sail on her," he also said.	9
7-23-17	Seeking protection from the Republican Congress. Relative to the investigations of Russian election interference, Mr. Trump tweeted: "It's very sad that Republicans, even some that were carried over the line on my back, do very little to protect their President." The tweet elicited a firestorm of Twitter responses, condemning the President not only for his ignorance of Congress's role under the Constitution to check him rather than rubber-stamp him, but also for his self-pity. Notably Mr. Trump was silent about his own many disloyalties to and failures to protect his own advisers and staff – most recently his Attorney General Jeff Sessions, whom he had publicly disparaged only days previous for having recused himself from the Russia investigations. (Observers have said many times since Mr. Trump's election that his notion of loyalty is unusually one-way – something owed absolutely to him, but not at all by him.)	9, 11, 12

7-24-17, 7-27-17	Political speech at the Boy Scouts. On July 14, Mr. Trump, as honorary president of the Boy Scouts of America, addressed some 40,000 young scouts at the 2017 National Scout Jamboree by raining blows on his enemies and on what had always been the apolitical protocol of that annual gathering. His targets included Hillary Clinton, former President Obama, the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare), specific Republicans who might not advance the repeal of that law, pollsters and news commentators, the "fake news," and those in government whom he considered to have been disloyal to him. He also boasted about his successful election campaign, and about the large attendance at the Jamboree – as though the scouts had come to see him. Consistent with the campaign-style nature of the address (which the Jamboree's organizers had not anticipated), he elicited from the assembled scouts (mostly children) a chant, "USA! USA!" and boos for Clinton. Turning an honorable, wholesome and non-partisan event into a platform for self-praise and vicious demagoguery was consistent with Mr. Trump's performances earlier in the year at CIA headquarters and the Coast Guard Academy. The Washington Post contrasted the worthy addresses given at the Jamboree by all previous presidents, as linked at this endnote.* Many former Eagle Scouts expressed outrage. At least one of CSD's members is a former Eagle Scout, and he found the episode disgraceful. On July 27, the Scouts' Chief Scout Executive issued a public apology for Mr. Trump's behavior.	9, 11
7-24-17	Accusing The Post. Mr. Trump twice tweeted an insinuation that The Washington Post's antagonistic and allegedly false coverage of him was motivated by the desire of The Post's owner, Jeff Bezos (also the founder and CEO of Amazon.com) to evade taxes. The reasoning was cryptic, but the scapegoating and paranoia were evident.	7, 9, 11

7-25-17	More attacks on DOJ heads. Mr. Trump continued his attacks on his own top Justice Department officials, now tweeting that Attorney General Jeff Sessions and acting FBI director Andrew McCabe were ignoring criminal activities that he attributed to Hillary Clinton. The attacks appeared intended to divert attention from and subvert the investigation of Russia's interference in the American election; undercut the traditional semi-independence of the Justice Department; encourage high-level department resignations so that more compliant replacements could be installed; scapegoat Clinton; and position the president (rather than law enforcement officials) as prosecutor. At a minimum, the attacks succeeded in demeaning the office of the presidency and the very notion of justice, by Mr. Trump's continuing to hurl the highest criminal accusations against his enemies casually and via Twitter. But most disturbingly, his call to criminally prosecute a former political rival (Clinton) – routine during his election campaign and now revived – had been previously unheard-of on the part of a sitting American president, however common it may have been among overseas dictators.	9, 11, 12
7-25-17	Being presidential. At a campaign-style address in Youngstown, Ohio, Mr. Trump countered criticisms that he was "not presidential" by stating: "With the exception of the late, great Abraham Lincoln, I can be more presidential than any president that's ever held this office." Presumably that comparison extended to the likes of George Washington, Franklin Roosevelt and Ronald Reagan.	11
7-25-17, 7-26-17	Continued pressure on Sessions, Mueller; threat to Clinton. Making ever more explicit his threats to emasculate the Justice Department, on July 25 Mr. Trump told The Wall Street Journal that he was considering removing special prosecutor Robert Mueller; and he declined to express confidence in Attorney General Jeff Session, whom he had earlier in the day continued to publicly belittle. He added that he owed Sessions nothing for his considerable support of Mr. Trump during the election campaign. On the following day, The Journal's (conservative) editorial board wrote that Mr. Trump's demeaning of Sessions, his threat to fire Mueller, and his threat to prosecute Hillary Clinton "crosses a red line." The board went on to write: "Mr. Trump's suggestion that his Attorney General prosecute his defeated opponent is the kind of crude political retribution one expects in Erdogan's Turkey or Duterte's Philippines." [Continued below.]	9, 11

	[Continued.] Also on July 26, Mr. Trump tweeted attacks against Sessions (for the third consecutive day) and against acting FBI director Andrew McCabe. Even before that episode, in its morning addition, The Washington Post had written about the Sessions attacks: "It is unheard of for a Cabinet-level official to be subjected to such visceral and public criticism, which has now gone on for a week." CSD observes that of course cabinet members are not infrequently dismissed; but that it is more commonly under foreign dictatorships that they're humiliated.
7-26-17	Voters believe falsehoods. A new poll conducted by Morning Consult and Politico revealed that 47% of Republican voters had come to believe that Mr. Trump won the popular vote over opponent Hillary Clinton. The chilling revelation exemplified the vulnerability of even the American people to demagoguery and cynical falsehoods.	7, 9
7-26-17	Transgender ban. Surprising even the Pentagon, Mr. Trump tweeted in the morning that he planned to ban all transgender people from the military. According to the Rand Corporation, as many as 11,000 active and reserve troops at that time were currently transgender. There had been no governmental finding that transgender people were not effective in performing their military duties. In addition to bespeaking intolerance, capriciousness and a likely political motive (as opposed to a motive of maintaining military strength), Mr. Trump's idea was possibly illegal. The many voices objecting to the tweet included that of a highly decorated transgender Navy Seal veteran; Republican Senator and Vietnam war hero John McCain (whose war record Mr. Trump had disparaged during the presidential campaign); and other Republican leaders. In Mr. Trump's tweet, he had said that he had come to his conclusion after discussions with military figures. But that evening, CNN reported that each of the heads of the military services serving on the Joint Chiefs of Staff -- from the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines -- disavowed Mr. Trump's position on transgenders.	6, 7, 9, 10

7-27-17	Scaramucci tirade. The New Yorker magazine published an on-the-record interview with Mr. Trump's new communications director, financier Anthony Scaramucci, in which Scaramucci criticized and humiliated fellow top White House aides Steven Bannon (senior adviser) and Reince Priebus (chief of staff) in vile terms, and in which he mused about murdering White House staff leakers. In addition to highlighting the chaos, dysfunction and cannibalism within The White House that have been widely attributed to Mr. Trump's governing style, Scaramucci's remarks were distinctive for their self-importance, crudity, injudiciousness and misanthropy – in many ways comparable to Mr. Trump's own earlier, recorded boasts to an Access Hollywood figure about assaulting women. They suggested that Mr. Trump had so desensitized the American public to the norms of decency that anyone in his administration could say anything; or, as Mr. Trump had gloated during his campaign, that he was so adulated that he could walk down Fifth Avenue and shoot someone with impunity.	17 (9, 10, 11)
7-28-17	Health care sabotage. After the Senate failed to pass a so-called "skinny repeal" of the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"), an enraged Mr. Trump tweeted, "[L]et Obamacare implode" – evidencing his affirmative intention, for political reasons, to undermine insurance markets and to allow massive suffering among the American people. Mr. Trump had made similar statements before (see, for example, CSD's entry of July 18), but – at least for now - the threat had come to seem more dire. CSD does not take a position on health insurance legislation; only on Mr. Trump's wanton disregard for the well-being of Americans, in the service of his own political stature.	11

Addendum 7 – August 12, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

7-25-17 to 7-28-17	Threat to Alaskans. On July 25, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, at Mr. Trump's direction and totally extraneous to his duties at the Interior Department, privately threatened Alaska Senator Lisa Murkowski that he would cut Alaskan energy development programs if she did not vote for the health care bill then pending in Congress that Mr. Trump favored and the passage of which was hanging in the balance. Murkowski refused, she publicized the episode, and Zinke's threat was quickly and widely viewed as a political blunder. In the ensuing days, as the event was digested, it also came to be viewed by critics as an ethical and legal offense. On July 28, President George W. Bush's ethics counsel called for the dismissal of Zinke for extortion.	9
7-28-17	Encouragement of police brutality. In an address to Long Island law enforcement officers, Mr. Trump encouraged them, illegally and unconstitutionally, to brutalize criminal suspects upon arrest. The local police department, many other local police departments, the Major Cities Chiefs Association, the National Association of Police Organizations, and the International Association of Chiefs of Police promptly issued contravening policy statements. (Many additional law enforcement offices would join the criticism in the coming days.) Mr. Trump's remarks had echoed his urgings at several campaign rallies the previous year that protesters there be beaten up.	9

7-28-17	Mar-a-Lago security costs. The Washington Post reported that the Coast Guard had spent $6.6 million so far in 2017 securing Mr. Trump's visits to his Florida resort, Mar-a-Lago. The Post continued: "The Coast Guard's spending accounts for a fraction of the military security apparatus that has encircled Trump during journeys to his private clubs and golf courses. Congress this year allocated roughly $120 million in additional funding to help cover the Secret Service's presidential travel and protection, as well as 'extraordinary law enforcement personnel costs' incurred by local governments during Trump's trips."	11
7-28-17, 7-29-17	Against the filibuster, again. For two days after the collapse in the Senate of the health care bill that Mr. Trump had supported, he resumed his call for the abandonment of the Senate's 60-vote filibuster rule – a move, which effected, would consolidate his power, harden partisanship in Congress, have long-lasting and unpredictable effects beyond his tenure, and contravene the wiser wishes of Senate leadership. (Mr. Trump had defended the filibuster rule four years earlier, when it had suited his interests.)	9
7-30-17	Revisionist museum at EPA. The Washington Post reported that, going a step beyond science denial, the Trump administration is purging the EPA's small in-house museum of exhibits describing previous administrations' efforts to stem climate change.	8
7-31-17	Shaub alleges "kleptocracy." Walter Shaub, who had recently resigned as head of the Office of Government Ethics out of despair of the ethical behavior of Mr. Trump and his associates, told The Guardian that there was an "ethics crisis" in the White House because of Mr. Trump's many domestic and foreign conflicts of interest. He called Mr. Trump's leasing of Washington hotel space to himself as "wildly inappropriate"; he said that Mr. Trump's placement of his assets into a trust controlled by his sons and for his own benefit was "meaningless"; he said that Mr. Trump, in his frequent visits to his resorts, was "giving free advertising to his properties"; he condemned foreign governments booking events at Mr. Trump's properties and his softness toward foreign regimes where he had business interests; and he termed "shocking" Mr. Trump's recent statement that a typical politician would have participated in the June 2016 meeting in Trump Tower with four Kremlin-linked Russians, as Mr. Trump's top campaign advisers had done. [Continued below.]	15

7-31-17	[Continued.] Shaub said: "[Mr. Trump's behavior] risks people starting to refer to us as a kleptocracy. That's a term people throw around fairly freely when they're talking about Russia, ... and we run the risk of getting branded the same way. America really should stand for more than that. ... We're running around the world trying to promote anti-corruption measures and we don't even have our own house in order. So it's an embarrassment." The full Guardian story is linked at this endnote.*	15
7-31-17	Threat to insurance companies. Mr. Trump repeated his frequent threat to insurance companies that he would cut their subsidies under the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"), thus driving up their premiums or forcing them to exit the ACA's exchanges, and in turn causing millions of Americans to become uninsured. (CSD does not take a position on health care legislation; only on Mr. Trump's wanton and extortionate threats to deprive Americans of health insurance.)	9
7-31-17	Dictating false account of June 2016 meeting. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump, while flying home from the G-20 summit in Hamburg aboard Air Force One on July 8, had personally dictated to his son Donald Trump Jr. the untrue text of the statement that Trump Jr. would soon release to explain the June 2016 meeting in Trump Tower among several Kremlin-linked Russians and Trump Jr., Mr. Trump's son-in-law Jared Kushner, and then campaign manager Paul Manafort. The statement (as authored by Mr. Trump, the president) said that the purpose of the meeting was to discuss American adoptions of Russian children; but Trump Jr. days afterwards admitted that the purpose was to discuss obtaining damaging information on opponent Hillary Clinton from the Russian government. (That Mr. Trump had more generally approved Trump Jr.'s statement had been reported by The New York Times on July 11 and noted by CSD in this document in an entry dated July 8 through July 11.) The Post wrote that the revelation placed Mr. Trump in further legal peril, relative to the existing investigation of obstruction of justice by special prosecutor Robert Mueller.	7, 12

7-31-17, 8-1-17	White House chaos. On July 31, Mr. Trump fired his communications director Anthony Scaramucci after only ten days on the job, and had him escorted from the White House grounds. Scaramucci's departure followed those of top aides Michael Flynn (national security advisor), Sally Yates (acting Attorney General), Mike Dubke (previous communications director), James Comey (FBI director), Reince Priebus (chief of staff), Sean Spicer (press secretary), and various second-tier officials. Others who to that date had been threatened with dismissal included senior advisor Steven Bannon, Attorney General Jeff Sessions, acting Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, and special prosecutor Robert Mueller. Those in the Justice Department (Comey, Yates, Sessions, Rosenstein) were accused by Mr. Trump of disloyalty. Most of the others, whether dismissed or at risk of dismissal, had come to be widely perceived by the mainstream media as reckless, ineffective, back-stabbing, and/or (in the case of Flynn) possibly criminal. Those not yet threatened with dismissal included senior son-in-law Jared Kushner and daughter Ivanka Trump, both senior advisers and protected by blood ties. The following day, a news analysis by Gerald Seib in The Wall Street Journal enumerated the global threats that had flowered during Mr. Trump's presidency amid the White House's descent into apparent dysfunction: the alarming growth of North Korea's and Iran's weapons capabilities, the deterioration of relations with Russia and China, and the collapse of the government of nuclear-armed Pakistan. Seib wrote: "When a president appears weak, distracted or in trouble, as President Donald Trump does right now, the effects on international affairs can play out on many fronts. First, adversaries may feel more emboldened to challenge a besieged American leader. ... Second, there always is the suspicion that a president embattled at home is looking for a distraction abroad. Even if there's a real crisis, there would be charges the White House is pumping it up to divert attention. ... In any case, the president's pattern of engaging in exaggerations and outright misstatement has downside risks in a dangerous environment. When the leader of the free world speaks in a time of genuine crisis, he needs his countrymen to believe him and the rest of the world to take him seriously."	10

8-1-17	White House advisors selling insights. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's former campaign manager Corey Lewandowski and multiple other current, informal White House advisers were engaged in private businesses from which they could profit by way of presidential insights and access. Lewandowski, for example, was selling advisory services to private clients, presumably based on his White House knowledge and connections. Because (he claimed) he would not be directly advocating with government officials, he believed he was not bound by the disclosure rules that pertain to lobbyists; and so his clients, his compensation, and the subject matter of his work would remain secret.	16, 17(15)
8-1-17, 8-2-17	Double foray on color. The New York Times and The Washington Post revealed that the Justice Department had initiated a plan to investigate colleges' race-based admission standards (implicitly affirmative action), and Mr. Trump announced that he would seek to halve the number of legal immigrants admitted annually to the U.S. Both endeavors fell legitimately within the purview of the president; the ethical, economic and cultural arguments could be debated pro and con; the Justice Department denied any design against affirmative action; but an uncomfortable common animus, with demagogic implications, seemed likely to CSD.	6, 9
8-2-17	Conflict with Congress over sanctions. Mr. Trump reluctantly signed a bill imposing sanctions on Russia. But he said that it unconstitutionally deprived him of executive authority, and that as a billionaire businessman he could negotiate better international deals than Congress could. Notable in his remarks were his disdain for Congress's powers; his public disparagement of American policy toward our antagonist Russia; his decision to complain about the bill's constitutionality rather than to object on those grounds through legal means; and his presumption that his business career (which had included multiple bankruptcies) had prepared him for international diplomacy. In sum, he maintained his pretense to infallibility. CSD does not take a position on the substance of the sanctions, and it acknowledges that the law's pointed restriction on presidential discretion was extraordinary and not without pitfalls. But we note with approval that Congress apparently had determined that it simply, remarkably and properly did not trust Mr. Trump to wisely and disinterestedly conduct America's affairs with Russia.	9, 10, 11, 12

8-2-17	Wall Street Journal interview. Politico published the full transcript of an interview that Mr. Trump had given to The Wall Street Journal the previous week. In the interview Mr. Trump: fabricated praise from the Boy Scouts of America for his recent speech to the Jamboree, when in fact the organization had publicly apologized for that speech; boasted at length, and irrelevantly, about his electoral win in Ohio; far inflated his success in passing legislation relative to the success of previous presidents; falsely promised no imminent White House staffing changes (within days he would fire both his press secretary and his chief of staff); repeated his threat to fire special prosecutor Robert Mueller relative to the investigation of Russian meddling in the November 2016 election; and repeated his long-standing but widely debunked denial that any of his campaign staff had dealt with Russian figures.	7, 9, 11, 12
8-2-17	Tillerson waives Russian propaganda. Politico reported: "Secretary of State Rex Tillerson is resisting the pleas of State Department officials to spend nearly $80 million allocated by Congress for fighting terrorist propaganda and Russian disinformation. It is highly unusual for a Cabinet secretary to turn down money for his department." Reports suggested that Tillerson's motive was to shrink the State Department's influence and/or to mollify Russia.	17 (12, 13)
8-3-17	Serial misstatements, confessions. A Washington Post columnist assembled nine instances since Mr. Trump's election in which he or one of his aides had spoken falsely about significant presidential activities then later confessed to the truth. The complete article is linked at this endnote. Curiously, the column appeared on the same day as a Post analyst's summary of a recent Sports Illustrated article revealing that Mr. Trump routinely lied about his golf scores (but did not confess). The golf article is linked at this endnote. On the previous day, CNN and The New York Times had reported that twice in the past week Mr. Trump had fabricated stories of having received congratulatory phone calls – from the Boy Scouts of America and the president of Mexico – and his staff had subsequently confessed. None of those news outlets (on those dates) detailed the hundreds of other documented episodes since the 2016 election when Mr. Trump had spoken falsely and did not subsequently confess.	7

8-3-17	Russian delight in American "chaos." The Wall Street Journal reported that the state-controlled media in Russia – which had openly favored Mr. Trump's candidacy over that of his opponent Hillary Clinton in 2016 – was now delighting in the "chaos" that was besetting the American government, by virtue of the "persecution" of Mr. Trump by his enemies, the investigations being conducted relative to his campaign's activities, and the growing split between him and Congress. One policy scholar in Russia wrote that his government was using "Washington for propaganda purposes, to show everyone how awful it is. ... Everyone in the Kremlin is having great fun watching this chaos unfold... ."	10, 12
8-3-17	West Virginia rally. At a campaign-style rally in Huntington, West Virginia, and just hours after The Wall Street Journal had reported that special prosecutor Robert Mueller had empanelled a grand jury to investigate the Trump election campaign's involvement with Russian interference, Mr. Trump said that his former rival Hillary Clinton should be investigated instead, fomenting the customary "Lock her up!" cries from the raucous crowd. He boasted repeatedly about his large electoral victory in West Virginia. He said, "The Russia story is a total fabrication," and he boomed: "Have you seen any Russians in West Virginia or Ohio or Pennsylvania? ... They're trying to cheat you out of the future and the future that you won! They're trying to cheat you out of the leadership you won, with a fake story!" His demonization of insidious forces that were allegedly bent on victimizing Americans (the "they" to which he referred) prompted Washington Post and MSNBC commentator Eugene Robinson to liken the speech to the speeches of demagogic populists Huey Long of Louisiana and Juan Peron of Argentina.	7, 9, 11
8-3-17	Rent dispute at Trump Tower. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's company had terminated the Secret Service's lease of space at Trump Tower, his New York home, seemingly at least in part over the rental price. That is, if The Post's suspicion was correct, it was insufficient for Mr. Trump that taxpayers were paying large sums to guard one of the billionaire's several homes; rather, the taxpayers were not paying enough, and to him. The Secret Service determined to relocate its command center to a trailer located on the street. (Separately, The Post wrote, but also for the Trump family's protection, the U.S. military continued to sublet space in Trump Tower at above-market rates for $1,560,000 per year.)	11, 15

8-6-17	State Department dysfunction. The New York Times reported that as Secretary Rex Tillerson was exploring a much-needed reorganization of the State Department, his inexperience and his micro-management style had generated dysfunction, loss of morale and loss of seasoned diplomats – all at a time of heightening international tensions. The full article is linked at this endnote.*	17 (13)
8-7-17	Scale of falsehoods. The New York Times compared Mr. Trump's unrelenting stream of falsehoods with those of other politicians, and found Mr. Trump's to be unprecedented. The Times wrote: "The glaring difference between Mr. Trump and his predecessors is the sheer magnitude of falsehoods and exaggerations; PolitiFact rates just 20 percent of the statements it reviewed as true, and a total of 69 percent either mostly false, false or 'Pants on Fire.' That leaves scholars like [presidential historian Doris Kearns] Goodwin to wonder whether Mr. Trump, in elevating the art of political fabrication, has forever changed what Americans are willing to tolerate from their leaders. 'What's different today and what's scarier today is these lies are pointed out, and there's evidence that they're wrong,' she said. 'And yet because of the attacks on the media, there are a percentage of people in the country who are willing to say, "Maybe he is telling the truth.'" Later that morning, Mr. Trump – vacationing at one his resorts – launched a five-message tweet storm against The Times, "fake news" generally, and the political polls that continue to show his popularity as abysmal.	1, 7
8-7-17	Hotel trading on president's reputation. The Washington Post reported that the management of the Trump International Hotel in the District of Columbia had described to The Post "its strategy to capitalize on the president's popularity. It markets the hotel to Republican and conservative groups that embrace Trump's politics." Substantial business was coming from Republican party events, political and business figures, foreign interests (including Turkish and Saudi Arabian), and pro-Trump tourists. The Post wrote: "This is nothing Washington has ever seen. For the first time in presidential history, a profit-making venture touts the name of a U.S. president in its gold signage. And every cup of coffee served, every fundraiser scheduled, every filet mignon ordered feeds the revenue of the Trump family's private business."	15

8-7-17	Reversal on voting rights. As reported in The Huffington Post, for the second time since February the Department of Justice reversed its position in a pending federal lawsuit that challenged state laws restricting voter rights. The February case had involved a Texas voter I.D. law. The new reversal pertained to an Ohio procedure for purging voter rolls, where the Trump administration, in a matter pending before the U.S. Supreme Court, now effectively came to support enfranchising fewer voters rather than more. DOJ reversals of position on pending cases were reportedly rare; and critics viewed the Ohio matter as a politicization of federal voting law.	4
8-7-17	Re-tweeting adulatory bots. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump, a few days previous, had tweeted a response to an adulatory message about himself that may have come from a Russia-associated bot (a fraudulent Twitter user), thus "magnifying her praise of him to his 35 million followers." The Post wrote: "As a candidate, Trump became known for amplifying tweets from accounts of dubious origin, including one under the name @WhiteGenocideTM, and for disseminating anti-Semitic memes that bubbled up from some of the darkest corners of the Internet. As president, not much has changed. Trump still routinely hits the retweet button if a Twitter user echoes his criticism of his adversaries or showers him with praise — regardless of who that user is or what his or her motives may be." Mr. Trump's apparently heedless practice ran the by now well-known peril of advancing a foreign power's disinformation. The Post continued: "'Nineteen to 20 percent of the messages in the month before the election were originated by bots,' said ... a researcher at the University of Southern California who conducted research on the impact of bots on the 2016 election. 'About 400,000 accounts that posted tweets related to the political conversation we believe were bots.' If anything, these accounts have found an even greater foothold since the election among Trump's most ardent supporters online. In the past week, a virtual army of accounts identified as having ties to Russia-backed disinformation campaigns targeting the U.S. political system zeroed in on efforts among Trump's supporters to attack his national security adviser, H.R. McMaster, over the firing of two Trump loyalists from the National Security Council."	11

8-8-17	Hypocrisy rising to demagoguery. The Wall Street Journal reported that Mr. Trump was struggling with the same quandaries in Afghanistan for which he had condemned the past two administrations; multiple news outlets commented on his mockery of Senator Richard Blumenthal's Vietnam war falsehoods without acknowledging his own avoidance of military service in that war; he re-tweeted a Fox News story that contained leaked classified information, even while he was fulminating about government leaks; and he did that from the latest of his many golf vacations at one of his resorts, having previously derided President Obama for taking vacations and playing golf. This was all in one day, and it represented only a small sampling of Mr. Trump's participation in activities that he had excoriated in other people. More significant examples had included his many broken campaign promises, such as to "drain the swamp" of the influence of lobbyists and the wealthy in Washington, and to replace the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") with less expensive health care for all (see the April 12 entry in this document titled "Reversals").	9
8-8-17	North Korean nuclear threat. Responding to a report of North Korea's enhanced nuclear weapons capabilities and to other nuclear provocations by North Korea, Mr. Trump, at a press conference at his New Jersey golf club, announced that the U.S. would respond to further threats by North Korea with "fire and fury like the world has never seen." Those remarks were widely interpreted as a threat to launch a preemptive nuclear strike against that country. Later that day, by Twitter, Mr. Trump re-tweeted a video of that statement, and he boasted about America's nuclear capabilities. His aggressive rhetoric would continue and escalate over the ensuing days. Such threats by an American president were unprecedented. Mr. Trump had not been advised on his messaging in advance by his senior aides – who subsequently, amid the domestic and international alarm that ensued, scrambled to spin and defend them. Indeed, the threats had followed months of confusion and vacillation about North Korea on Mr. Trump's part, and he had not previously formulated or articulated a clear North Korea policy. Rather, in dealing with the renegade country, he had erroneously expected China's help, which hadn't materialized; and he had praised and expressed a willingness to meet with North Korea's dictator Kim Jong-un before now threatening to obliterate his country. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 13

8-8-17	[Continued.] In any event, within hours after Mr. Trump's initial comments, North Korea made its most specific threat ever against the U.S: that it might fire nuclear-armed missiles at Guam. The 200,000 American citizens living in Guam took note. CSD is not in the position to second-guess the president on strategy or rhetoric in such a matter; and at the time of this entry we expected both strategy and rhetoric to develop and shift in the days and weeks that would follow. We hoped and believed that the risk of war, if indeed it existed, could quickly abate. But we were concerned that the Korean threat could stand as the first true crisis that this heretofore impulsive, uninformed, unpopular, undiplomatic, pugnacious, self-serving, inexperienced, and often irrational president might face. And we feared that The Wall Street Journal's warning about Mr. Trump's ability to lead under such circumstances (see our July 31-August 1 entry above) may have been prescient. With the deepest and most sincere conviction, we hoped – and we will continue to hope – that Mr. Trump will demonstrate the competence, temperament and credibility that are necessary to manage the North Korean challenge and any other international crises that may arise.	9, 10, 13
8-9-17, 8-10-17	Damage control epidemic. On August 9, The Washington Post's columnist Dana Milbank recounted the following major episodes in which Mr. Trump's senior advisers and representatives had felt compelled to correct his impulsive statements: his recent threat to North Korea of a pre-emptive nuclear strike; his threat to deploy the U.S. military to round up and deport Mexican migrants; his decision not to pledge mutual protection at a NATO meeting in Brussels; his stated ambivalence about a two-state solution for the Israeli-Palestinian conflict; his call for a government shut-down if the federal budget were not resolved to his satisfaction; his allegation that President Obama had tapped his telephone in Trump Tower; his allegation that the news media were "the enemy of the American people"; his statement, in a trade context, that "the Germans are bad, very bad"; his calls for Japan and South Korea to pay more for certain elements of their defense; and his identification of Qatar as a state sponsor of terrorism. Milbank wrote that this was only a partial listing of the high-level damage control efforts. [Continued below.]	10, 13

8-9-17, 8-10-17	[Continued.] The following day, The Huffington Post reported a somewhat comparable governmental response to Mr. Trump's actual directives when they had seemed particularly preposterous: the implementing agencies flat-out ignoring the directives. Examples of such directives included: converting aircraft carrier catapult engineering from electromagnetics to steam; banning transgenders from the military; calling for the end to the investigations of Russian election-tampering by labeling them a "hoax"; implicitly encouraging Attorney General Jeff Sessions to resign; renewing investigations of Hillary Clinton; and claiming that torture of prisoners of war is effective; HuffPost wrote: "Agency heads and lower-level bureaucrats appear to have concluded that the combination of Trump's impulsive nature and short attention span means that the president's sometimes random commands can – and should – be safely ignored. ... Norm Ornstein, with the conservative-leaning American Enterprise Institute, said experts in the various agencies are left with no choice when presented with unreasonable demands. 'We've never had a president like this. We've never had a president with no knowledge base. Who's not interested in developing a knowledge base. With no impulse control,' Ornstein said."	10, 13
8-10-17	Hypothetical postponement of 2020 presidential election. The Washington Post reported that in a poll it had conducted, half of Republican voters would favor postponing the 2020 presidential election (thus, presumably, keeping Mr. Trump in power indefinitely) if the potential for widespread voter fraud that he had spuriously alleged had not by then been eliminated. The survey results paralleled and amplified those recorded in this document on July 26; and they again pointed to Mr. Trump's apparent success in preparing a substantial portion of our population for at least some aspects of dictatorship. Of course, opinion polls frequently reveal that large portions of the population believe preposterous things. But CSD finds these particular poll results to be both unusually menacing and reflective of a concerted effort on the part of Mr. Trump and some of his supporters to undermine elements of our democracy.	4, 9

8-10-17	Thanking Putin for stripping American embassy. In response to Russian President Vladimir Putin's cutting of 755 permitted U.S. embassy staff positions in Moscow in retaliation for sanctions and other punitive measures recently imposed on Russia by the U.S., Mr. Trump extensively and without apparent irony thanked Putin for facilitating American diplomatic cost-cutting. Mr. Trump's expressed gratitude, even if sarcastic (as he later claimed it was), not only pandered to one of America's greatest adversaries in a moment of spiraling tensions, but disparaged the mission and utility of the Moscow embassy – and, by extension, of all American embassies and the committed individuals who staff them. It also highlighted Mr. Trump's disturbing refusal to even mildly rebuke Putin, while hastening to condemn countless other foes and allies, both foreign and domestic.	10, 12, 13
8-10-17	Basking in leakers' love. Mr. Trump told reporters that although all government leaks are bad, he was "somewhat honored" by White House leaks "where people want to love me and they're all fighting [one another] for [my] love."	9, 11
8-10-17	D.C. hotel bonanza. The Washington Post detailed the first financial figures made available for the Trump International Hotel in the District of Columbia by the General Services Administration, which leases the building to Mr. Trump's company. Room rates were the highest in the city, and revenues had far surpassed the hotel's initial projections – reflecting large profits rather than large losses. The success appeared to be attributable at least partly, and maybe materially, to patronage on the part of groups and individuals, both domestic and foreign, who were politically supportive or solicitous of Mr. Trump.	15
8-10-17	Negotiating with China over Korea through reporters. While increasing the temperature of his military threats toward North Korea, and having long and strongly criticized China's trade policies with respect to the U.S., Mr. Trump told reporters at his New Jersey golf club: "[If] China helps us, I feel a lot differently toward trade, a lot differently toward trade." China's state media meanwhile had been condemning Mr. Trump's fiery rhetoric toward North Korea that risked a range of outcomes which could be devastating for China. How Mr. Trump expected his public pronouncements to play internationally, and why he seemed to be sorting out (or not sorting out) his North Korea and China strategies on the fly with reporters, mystified and troubled CSD.	10, 13

8-11-17	Blaming enemies. CNN summarized the progression in recent weeks of Mr. Trump's campaigns to divert attention from his own failures by faulting and blaming other leading American political figures, including some from his own party and some who no longer held office: first Attorney General Jeff Sessions, then election opponent Hillary Clinton, [then Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell – CSD's contribution to the list,] and (both first and last) President Obama. CNN wrote that Mr. Trump "seems to rotate through perceived enemies every few weeks," but that he also appeared to have a particular vendetta against (and possibly an obsession with) President Obama, whom he had attacked since the election overseas as well as at home.	9, 11
8-11-17, 8-12-17	Possible military intervention in Venezuela. On August 11, Mr. Trump threatened to intervene militarily in Venezuela as that country moved increasingly toward authoritarian rule, civil disorder and economic melt-down. But it was unclear to CSD what the goals or the mechanisms of an intervention might be; what risks an intervention might generate; whether Mr. Trump had discussed pertinent strategy and messaging with the Defense and State Departments; how intervention would serve American interests; why the U.S. should intervene on behalf of human rights in that country but not in dozens of others having comparable human rights issues; whether the threat of intervention might actually bolster the position of the Venezuelan regime; and how the U.S. could operationally and diplomatically manage a new intervention in addition to its existing and potential military undertakings around the world, including in various Middle Eastern and East Asian theatres. In fact the following day, The Washington Post reported that the Venezuelan regime was fiercely exploiting Mr. Trump's remarks as a confirmation of America's imperialistic designs on that country; that numerous mainstream Latin American leaders had condemned the remarks as well; that the remarks threatened the unity that regional governments had begun to assemble to pressure the Venezuelan regime to change course; and that a polling organization had reported that fewer than 10% of Venezuelans would support American military intervention.	10, 13

8-11-17	North Korea and domestic politics. In the midst of the North Korean nuclear crisis, and by way of a telephone call with the governor of Guam that the governor subsequently posted on Facebook, Mr. Trump appeared to blame his presidential predecessor(s) for the crisis and his domestic political opponents for undermining his response to it. Separately, The New York Times reported anecdotally on the embrace of Mr. Trump's bellicose threats by some of his Main Street supporters. They seemed generally to express a desire for vengeance against North Korea; satisfaction that geographic distance would insulate them personally from any military conflict; and little or no concern for the massive death and suffering that Koreans, and that Americans in South Korea and Guam, would experience should war ensue – all points that Mr. Trump had not articulated to the public. Peggy Noonan, a conservative columnist at The Wall Street Journal, detailed President Kennedy's measured public statements during the Cuban Missile Crisis, and his quiet, painstaking, and ultimately effective outreach to key American voices – Congressional leaders, former President Eisenhower, top presidential advisers, and the American press (The New York Times, The Washington Post, and Time magazine). She implicitly questioned whether Mr. Trump was capable of comparable undertakings. What then was Mr. Trump's political calculus, if any? Noting the perils surrounding his colorful threats, their ambiguous strategic intent, and the highly uncertain mechanisms and outcomes of any potential U.S. deployment, The Wall Street Journal reported: "Asked about the strategy underlying Mr. Trump's comments targeting North Korea in recent days, a senior administration official said, 'The president tweets for his own purposes and reasons.'"	9, 11, 13

8-11-17	EPA in lockdown. The New York Times reported that, under administrator Scott Pruitt, the Environmental Protection Agency had come to impose a radical secrecy around its high level deliberations and a radical hostility toward its own mission and staff. The agency had also been avoiding oversight questions from Congress; taken down over 1900 agency Web pages on topics such as climate change; ordered fact-less policy conclusions; and directed the elimination of inconvenient data from analytic reports. Pruitt appeared to The Times to be advised not by climate scientists or policy experts, but by political appointees and lobbyists from regulated industries. Remarkably, one quoted transition official seemed to equate climate scientists with "leftists" – that is, it would seem, to equate climate science with communism.	17 (8, 9)
8-12-17	White supremacist violence in Virginia. A white supremacist march through Charlottesville met with counter-protests and erupted in violence. It was the largest such march that the country had seen in decades. Mr. Trump reacted by condemning "hate" and "violence," but not the supremacists. Nevertheless David Duke – the former Ku Klux Klan leader and a still prominent supremacist – criticized Mr. Trump for his remarks, tweeting that “it was White Americans who put you in the presidency.” Duke added: “We are going to fulfill the promises of Donald Trump. That’s what we believed in. That’s why we voted for [him], because he said he’s going to take our country back.” During a speech on another topic, Mr. Trump then condemned the "egregious display of hatred, bigotry and violence on many sides – on many sides" – thus implying an equivalence between the white supremacists and those who had opposed them. He pointedly ignored reporters' questions about whether he would specifically condemn the supremacists who claimed to have supported him.	17 (6)

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 8 – September 11, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

8-12-17	Foreign Service loses applicants. Politico reported that in June the number of applicants to take the Foreign Service examination – the entry point for the most prestigious positions in the State Department – had dropped by 26% from the previous year, to the lowest level in nearly a decade. Politico's sources attributed the drop variously: to Mr. Trump's plans to radically downsize the State Department, to his disinterest in diplomacy generally, and to young people's dislike for his often radical international decisions. Politico wrote that sufficient applicants will still exist to fill all available slots at the department; but that the best and brightest may be turning away. Veteran diplomats said that losing top recruits could impair the pipeline for senior diplomats for years to come.	13
8-13-17	Potential pardon for Arpaio. Mr. Trump told Fox News that he might pardon Joe Arpaio, the anti-immigration former Arizona sheriff who had recently been convicted of contempt of court – a constitutional offense, and an anomaly for an official tasked with enforcing the law – for his continued racial profiling of Latinos after having been directed by the court to stop it. [Continued below.]	2, 6, 9

8-13-17	[Continued.] Arpaio had gained notoriety for, among other things, making detained Latinos wear pink underwear, feeding them inedible food, placing them in tents where the temperature reached 145 degrees (from which mistreatment at least three had suffocated), referring to his detention centers as “concentration camps,” parading women and children in chain gangs before journalists’ cameras, arresting two reporters for investigating his suspect personal finances, riding a giant tank in local parades, and being a prominent and unrepentant “birther.” For the avoidance of doubt, CSD notes that “birtherism” was the racist, seditious, demagogic, personally vicious, and utterly unfounded allegation – advanced unrelentingly by Mr. Trump, Arpaio and others for years – that Barack Obama had been born in Kenya, not Hawaii, and thus was constitutionally barred from serving as president. Mr. Trump and Arpaio were prominently allied in this effort. Presidents often grant pardons, and sometimes controversially; but ordinarily not for policy-based reasons (here, enforcement of immigration laws); ordinarily not early in their presidential terms (typically instead at the end); ordinarily not shortly after the pertinent convictions (Justice Department guidelines call for a five-year wait); ordinarily not without the convict having expressed remorse (again per Justice Department guidelines, and which Arpaio had not done); ordinarily not without Justice Department review (which in Arpaio's case had not occurred); ordinarily not unless the criminal would have submitted a request for a pardon (which Arpaio had not done); and ordinarily not to criminals who are best known for, and whose misdeeds are tied to, their racism. Regardless of whether Mr. Trump would in fact pardon Arpaio (which he shortly would do – see the August 25 entry below in this document), CSD believed at the time of the Fox News statement that for Mr. Trump to have even announced the possibility of a pardon was both a dog-whistle for racial enmity and an extraordinary challenge to his own Justice Department (it had prosecuted Arpaio), to established civil rights laws, and to the nation's judicial system.	2, 6, 9

8-13-17	Early campaign ad attacks "enemies." Mr. Trump launched the first television advertisements for his 2020 reelection campaign. The ads were unprecedented in how early they were relative to the election, suggesting the possible onset of the sort of continuous propagandizing that characterizes authoritarian regimes overseas. They were also unprecedented in explicitly denouncing the candidate's "enemies," who were depicted as recognizable members of the Democratic Party and the press. The divisiveness was especially remarkable, coming on the heels of the fatal white supremacist march in Charlottesville, after which Mr. Trump had publicly called for national unity, "love for our nation, and true affection for each other." But it was also reminiscent of Mr. Trump's having focused his presidential campaign on those groups and individuals whom he had characterized as America's enemies. And keeping track of presidential "enemies" was reminiscent of the widely discredited and ridiculed anti-democratic behavior of the Richard Nixon presidency.	9
8-14-17	Charlottesville: retaliation against Merck CEO. After the CEO of Merck resigned from the American Manufacturing Council (a presidential advisory group) because of Mr. Trump's failure to quickly and explicitly condemn white supremacists for their fatal Charlottesville march days earlier, Mr. Trump retaliated: not by rebutting the executive's comments on policy grounds, but by tweeting that the executive's company was engaged in price-gouging; that is, by publicly attacking a private enterprise as a political vendetta. Merck had not been seen as particularly extreme in its pharmaceutical pricing practices relative to the rest of the pharmaceutical industry. And Mr. Trump had not taken any steps to rein in pharmaceutical pricing. But the Merck CEO was African American. When two white CEOs then resigned for the same reason, Mr. Trump was silent.	6, 9, 11

8-14-17, 8-15-17	Charlottesville: denunciation, or not. On August 14, two days after the white supremacist march and murder in Charlottesville, and after incurring intense bi-partisan criticism for not having quickly and clearly condemned the supremacists, Mr. Trump read a prepared statement containing an explicit condemnation. But many mainstream voices noted his dispassion and delay in comparison to his countless spontaneous tweets denouncing other people and groups. Alt-Right leader Richard Spencer said that the condemnation was "hollow" and not serious. And even David Duke, the former Ku Klux Klan leader and a principal actor in Charlottesville – who had expressed solidarity with Mr. Trump during the two-day period – now claimed that it was the media that had forced Mr. Trump to condemn the supremacists, against Mr. Trump's will. Within hours, Mr. Trump appeared to concur with Duke, tweeting “Made additional remarks on Charlottesville and realize once again that the #Fake News Media will never be satisfied...truly bad people!” As if to reinforce that point, shortly afterwards Mr. Trump re-tweeted a posting by a notorious Islamaphobe and "Pizzagate" conspiracy theorist (a purveyor of the canard about the Democratic Party's child sex-trafficking ring allegedly based in a District of Columbia pizza parlor) that called out black-on-black crime in Chicago and concluded, "No national media outrage. Why is that?" The following day, never one to be comfortable admitting error, Mr. Trump continued his back-sliding. Now unscripted, from the lobby of his New York building Trump Tower, he remarked at length about the violence of the anti-racist protesters in Charlottesville; defended his initial comments blaming "many sides"; and asserted that many of those marching with the white supremacists who were brandishing swastikas and chanting anti-Semitic slogans were "very fine people." Duke, by way of Twitter, promptly thanked Mr. Trump for his "honesty and courage." [Continued below.]	1, 6, 11
-----------------------------	---	-----------------

8-14-17 - 8-15-17	[Continued.] Also on that day, Mr. Trump re-tweeted to his 36 million followers an image of a train running over a CNN reporter. The image recalled the episode in Charlottesville, only days earlier, when a white supremacist had run over dozens of pedestrians, killing a young woman. It also recalled Mr. Trump's July posting of a video in which he was shown beating up a CNN-identified figure, causing an uproar at that time. In addition to the anti-democratic themes on which those tweets were built, CSD notes in the tweets Mr. Trump's persistent and unrepentant motifs of violence, rage, ethnic and religious insensitivity, puerility, impulsiveness, and hostility to criticism – characteristics that we feel are unseemly, repugnant and perilous when appearing in the person of America's head of state and commander-in-chief.	1, 6, 7, 11
8-15-17	DOJ seeks identities of thousands of protesters. The Washington Post and other news outlets reported that the U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia had subpoenaed the identities and other information of tens of thousands of individuals who had visited a Web site in January that was then organizing a protest of Mr. Trump's inauguration. The grounds for the subpoena were that some of the protesters had behaved violently on Inauguration Day. CSD of course fully supports the investigation and prosecution of criminal behavior. But we caution against any precedents that the Department of Justice may establish in investigating categorically those who wish to protest Mr. Trump's presidency. CSD finds a parallel in the FBI's massive, secret surveillance of anti-war activists and demonstrations in the late 1960s and early 1970s under then President Richard Nixon, an operation that the government eventually renounced as being unconstitutional and comparable to the activities of a police state.	17 (3)

8-16-17, 8-17-17	Charlottesville: outrage from business and the military.                  On August 16, additional CEOs defected from Mr. Trump's two business councils over his defense of the white supremacist marchers in Charlottesville; and as the members were moving to dissolve the councils altogether, Mr. Trump declared them dissolved. Also, in a remarkable rebuke to the president, the chiefs of the five armed services branches posted condemnations of the supremacists; but, to the nation's good fortune, Mr. Trump was not empowered or inclined to dissolve the military. The heads of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars also condemned the supremacists. Notable was the continuing loss of presidential support (as in the case of the recent purported ban of transgender people from the military) on the part of three of the country's most reliable institutional bastions of Republican Party sentiment – business, the armed forces and veterans. The following day, the leaders of several additional major American corporations, in written memoranda, expressly criticized Mr. Trump for his remarks equating white supremacists with the anti-racist counter-protesters. The Wall Street Journal wrote: "Beyond the sheer number of prominent CEOs taking such public action, the memos are noteworthy because they don't address administrative policy positions that affect day-to-day business, but rather rebuke the president on his leadership approach on a broad social and moral issue. ... " A Harvard Business School professor was quoted: "I've never seen this before."	6
8-17-17	Praise for defilement of Muslim bodies. Quickly responding to an atrocity in Barcelona for which radical Islamists had claimed responsibility, Mr. Trump tweeted – with apparent favor – the canard that, during America's occupation of the Philippines in the early 20th century, General John Pershing had executed Muslim rebels with bullets coated with pigs' blood. (Mr. Trump had told the same story during his campaign.) Politico then explained that the account was untrue; and CSD believed that it was religiously insulting, gratuitously cruel, and pointlessly incendiary.	6, 7,10

8-18-17	More business leaders resign, re Charlottesville. Politico reported that more than half the members of the Commerce Department's Digital Economy Board of Advisors – comprised of prominent business executives – had resigned in the wake of Mr. Trump's failure to denounce the white supremacist march in Charlottesville.	6
8-22-17	Senior figures question Trump's stability. Former director of national intelligence James Clapper publicly questioned Mr. Trump's mental stability. "Downright scary and disturbing," he said. His comments followed by several days Republican Senator Bob Corker's public questioning of Mr. Trump's "stability" and "competence."	10, 11
8-22-17	White House reliant on generals. The Washington Post reported that three current and former generals were rapidly consolidating their power in the executive branch of the government. James Mattis (Defense Secretary), H.R. McMaster (national security adviser), and John Kelly (chief of staff) had come to appear to be the administration figures most trusted not only by Mr. Trump but by both parties in Congress, and possibly also by members of both parties within the electorate – many of whom seemed to see the generals' wisdom, coherence, restraint and professionalism as one of the few things standing between Mr. Trump and national calamity, including nuclear war. (CSD and others have noted in this a remarkable development: that even many of those on both the left and the right who would ordinarily fear military dominance of civilian functions now welcomed it, under the circumstances.) The Post analysis included commentaries to the effect that Mr. Trump reveres the men whom he refers to as "his generals" out of a swaggering and adolescent urge to play soldier (frightening); but that he meanwhile appears to defer to them (comforting); although, yet again, that he could dismiss them abruptly if he felt he was seen as their puppet or as upstaging him (unnerving all around).	9, 10, 11

8-23-17	Phoenix rally. At a highly charged campaign rally in Phoenix, Arizona, Mr. Trump defended his response to the Charlottesville protests and violence, extensively blaming the “crooked media” and the “fake news” for misinterpreting his words. He also predicted, to enthusiastic cheers, that he would pardon former Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio relative to his recent conviction for contempt of court in connection with racial profiling (see the August 13 entry in this document above regarding Arpaio's background and potential pardon).	1, 2, 6, 9
8-23-17	Phoenix rally: Hatch Act. Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Ben Carson spoke at Mr. Trump’s campaign rally in Phoenix. For a cabinet member or any other federal employee to speak at a presidential campaign rally was highly unusual, and likely a violation of the Hatch Act, which bars most executive branch employees from participating in campaign activities. (Foreign dictators, by contrast, often deploy staff to aid their campaigns.)	4, 9
8-23-17	UN condemns Trump re Charlottesville. The United Nations’ Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination – tasked with issuing early warnings of potential large-scale ethnic violence – condemned the white supremacists’ march in Charlottesville and Mr. Trump’s response to it. The last such warning the committee had issued was in 2016, relative to ethnic strife in Burundi. While the UN historically has been highly uneven in its pronouncements on human rights issues, and while the statement was only the output of a minor UN committee, at a minimum it indicated how Mr. Trump’s behavior had damaged American credibility as a force for human rights worldwide.	6, 10

8-24-17	Possible politicization of CIA. The Washington Post reported that Central Intelligence Agency director Mike Pompeo – who had repeatedly played down Russia’s interference in the 2016 election, had defended Mr. Trump’s remarks about the protests and violence in Charlottesville, and had otherwise “demonstrated a willingness to engage in political skirmishes” for Mr. Trump, had now ordered the agency’s Counterintelligence Mission Center – a unit closely tied to the election investigation – to report directly to him. CIA staff told The Post that they feared Pompeo could restrain, politicize or scuttle their findings, and that “they could not recall a time in the agency’s history when a director faced a comparable conflict.” Quoting former CIA officials, The Post wrote that previous directors too had had to balance the CIA’s objectivity with the sitting president’s desires; but that Pompeo “clearly has a more difficult challenge ... than his predecessors given ... this president’s unique personality, obsession with charges against him, lack of knowledge and tendency to take impulsive action.”	9, 10, 11
8-25-17, 8-26-17, 8-27-17	Arpaio pardon. On August 25, Mr. Trump pardoned former Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio relative to his conviction for contempt of court in connection with his racial profiling activities, as Mr. Trump had recently hinted he would do. (See the August 13 entry above in this document for Arpaio’s profile and the implications of his then possible pardon.) CSD believes that the pardon reflected not only Mr. Trump’s embrace of an avatar of racism, but an extreme politicization and subversion of the judicial system, and the possibility that Mr. Trump might subsequently pardon any political ally, regardless of the crime, thus nullifying the independence and efficacy of the pertinent prosecutors and courts, and for specifically political and self-serving purposes. On August 26, Republican Speaker of the House Paul Ryan called the pardon an abuse of power, and Republican Senator John McCain said that it “undermined [Mr. Trump’s] claim for the respect of rule of law.” [Continued below.]	2, 6, 9

8-25-17, 8-26-17, 8-27-17	[Continued.] Also on that day, both The New York Times and The Washington Post reported that in the spring, Mr. Trump had asked Attorney General Jeff Sessions and chief White House Counsel Donald McGahn to drop the then pending federal charges against Arpaio. (The Post compared Mr. Trump’s request to his earlier attempt to cause the Justice Department to drop the federal investigation of former national security adviser Michael Flynn relative to possible collusion with Russians in tampering with the 2016 election campaign – for which action Mr. Trump later appeared to have come under scrutiny by special prosecutor Robert Mueller for obstruction of justice.) When Sessions and McGahn refused on legal grounds to close the Arpaio case, Mr. Trump asked them if he could lawfully pardon Arpaio should he be convicted; and when they answered yes, he appeared to plan on granting a pardon upon any such conviction. That is, the eventual pardon of Arpaio was not impulsive, but was a long-planned subversion of the court system and the Constitution – possibly the first time an American president had undertaken such a scheme. On August 27, The Wall Street Journal’s conservative editorial board wrote: [P]ardoning Mr. Arpaio sends a message that law enforcers can ignore court orders and get away with it. All you need is a political ally in the White House or Governor’s mansion. Down that road lies anarchy.”	2, 6, 9
8-27-17	Militarization of local police. USA Today reported that Mr. Trump planned to fully restore transfers by the Defense Department to local police of surplus military ordnance such as large-caliber weapons, grenade launchers, bayonets and armored vehicles. Following a series of killings by police of innocent minority citizens, President Obama had cut back the transfers, believing them to be unnecessary for law enforcement and unnecessarily intimidating to and provocative for racial minorities. Mr. Trump’s motives for resuming the sales were not reported, but CSD suspects that they were political (as opposed to security-based) – intended to please law-and-order voters and to intimidate minorities.	6, 9

8-28-17	Russian business dealings during campaign. The Trump Organization (Mr. Trump’s real estate company) delivered to the House Intelligence Committee several emails indicating that, during Mr. Trump’s election campaign, senior Trump Organization counsel and Trump campaign surrogate Michael Cohen had corresponded with his friend Felix Sater (a Trump Organization broker with a violent and criminal past) and with a senior adviser to Russian President Vladimir Putin in attempting to revive a stalled endeavor to develop a Trump Tower in Moscow. CSD had described the Moscow endeavor in an entry within this document dated July 11. But material new information had now emerged, in The Washington Post, The New York Times, and The Wall Street Journal: that Mr. Trump had personally signed a (non-binding) letter of intent to proceed with the project as recently as October 2015 (the same day he was engaging in a Republican candidates’ debate); that Cohen had attempted to expedite the project as recently as January 2016; that Sater had boasted that he could get Putin to assist with the project, which Sater believed would somehow help Mr. Trump’s presidential campaign; and that Cohen had discussed the project with Mr. Trump three times during the campaign. The new revelations belied Mr. Trump’s persistent public denials during and since the campaign that he had had current or recent business dealings or interests in Russia.	12, 15
8-28-17	Cabinet disturbed by Charlottesville. The Washington Post summarized the reports of recent days to the effect that three of Mr. Trump’s top advisers had publicly rebuked the divisiveness he had tolerated or sown in connection with the Charlottesville white supremacist march. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, on Fox News, had declined to support Mr. Trump on the matter and had spoken of the values of America and the State Department as diverging from those of the president; Secretary of Defense James Mattis had told an assemblage of troops overseas that their mission would prevail over the divisions at home; and chief economic adviser Gary Cohn had said that he had nearly resigned over the affair. The Post acknowledged that top advisers sometimes disagree with the president on policy matters; but it wrote that for three at once to criticize the president’s overall vision and governing style was unique.	6, 10

8-29-17	Hurricane Harvey: a personal response. A Washington Post analysis noted that after three days of devastation wrought by Hurricane Harvey in Texas, Mr. Trump’s Twitter and in-person statements had been disturbingly self-aggrandizing. He had communicated much about the enormous size of the storm and what he saw as the effective governmental response to it. He had worn his campaign hats during a number of public appearances. At one point he had pointed to the size of the crowd that he had drawn at a Texas firehouse, and at another point he had boasted of his election victory in Missouri. But as of the publication of The Post’s analysis, he had not mentioned the storm’s death toll, the suffering of the hundreds of thousands of survivors, or any appeal to Americans to contribute to relief efforts. CSD fully expected that in time Mr. Trump, following the advice of his aides, would fill those gaps (and he did). But we were reminded of his visits in January to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and CIA headquarters (see above in this document), where his instinctive braggadocio was ascendant and his empathy for the fallen negligible. The actual operational response to Harvey would fall to security staff and administrative mechanisms that were already in place; rather, it was the immediate conceptual and rhetorical response that newly fell to Mr. Trump, and that was tellingly indicative of his attitudes toward Americans and himself. Further, and without in any way ourselves derogating from the devastation and the suffering in Texas, CSD was reminded of what had appeared – in Mr. Trump’s “America First” outlook, in his plans to cut funding to the United Nations and the U.S. Agency for International Development, in his denial of climate science, and otherwise – to be his utter disregard for, if not contempt for, the populations of foreign countries, many of them struggling in subsistence mode in the best of times, who often experience devastating storms, flooding and consequent loss of life in magnitudes far greater than what was happening in Texas.	11
8-30-17	“Duck” fighter sales to Finland. After Mr. Trump publicly boasted that Finland planned to purchase a number of fighter jets from Boeing – even while Finland was still considering multiple proposals from both American and European aircraft manufacturers – the Finnish president called the statement a “duck” (a lie). Lockheed (a Boeing competitor still in the bidding) also objected.	7, 10

8-30-17	UN human rights chief decries Trump. As reported by The New York Times, the United Nations’ High Commissioner for Human Rights, reacting to Mr. Trump’s recent incendiary rally in Phoenix, said that Mr. Trump’s war on the mainstream media “could amount to incitement of violence.” For a ranking UN official to so explicitly criticize American internal politics was probably unprecedented. The official said, “It’s really quite amazing when you think that freedom of the press, not only a cornerstone of the Constitution but very much something that the United States defended over the years, is now under attack from the president himself. It’s a stunning turnaround.” He cited Cambodia as an example of a country that had already cited Mr. Trump’s example as its inspiration for clamping down on press freedom. He also condemned Mr. Trump’s disparaging comments regarding Muslims, minorities and transgender people as “grossly irresponsible” and likely to engender violence – citing, for example, a dramatic rise in anti-Semitic incidents in the U.S. since the election. He compared Mr. Trump to a driver “careening down a mountain path.”	1, 6, 10
8-30-17	Egypt’s license to repress. The Washington Post reported that Egypt had experienced a dramatic spike in extrajudicial killings and other forms of state human rights abuses since Mr. Trump’s visit to the Middle East in May, when he had said that he was unconcerned about such abuses. (See CSD’s entries of May 31 and July 20.) The Post wrote that dozens of oppositionists had been arrested during that period, and more than 100 websites had been shuttered – in a country that had not previously been known to widely censor the Internet. (A lengthy report by Human Rights Watch dated September 6, 2017 would subsequently detail the excruciating tortures to which detained oppositionists in Egypt are routinely subjected: https://www.hrw.org/news/2017/09/06/egypt-torture-epidemic-may-be-crime-against-humanity .)	14
8-30-17, 8-31-17	Hurricane Harvey puffery. On August 30, Mr. Trump tweeted that during his first visit to flood-ravaged Texas, he had “witness[ed] first-hand the horror and devastation.” The following day, the Washington Post reported that that was not true – that he had only received reports of the ruin from government officials. When confronted with the falsehood, his press secretary replied, effectively, that second-hand was equivalent to first-hand. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11

8-30-17, 8-31-17	[Continued.] CSD expected that Mr. Trump would shortly experience the devastation first-hand (and in fact he did, on September 2). But at the same time we believed that the significance of this seemingly harmless misstatement was five-fold, evidencing: Mr. Trump’s continuing pattern of untruths; his (and his staff’s) seeming inability to distinguish truth from untruth, or to respect the difference; his refusal to admit error; the new “normality” through which his falsehoods were seen; and – most importantly – his having likely convinced his tens of millions of Twitter followers that he had been more personally aware of and engaged with the devastation at that point than he actually had been. None of this was indeed harmless. CSD (like some other commentators) also noted that the devastation in Texas did not, at least immediately, cause Mr. Trump or his environmental advisers to acknowledge, in the slightest way, the possibility of a connection between global warming and the increasing size and frequency of calamitous storms – contrary to the near universal view of climate scientists. Bemoaning traumatic destruction without even considering its possible causes and future remedies seemed contrary to all other exercises in policy-making, by all rational peoples, in all times. That is to say, frankly, it seemed insane.	7, 8, 9, 11
8-31-17	Mnuchin junket to Ft. Knox. The Washington Post reported that the U.S. Treasury’s Office of Inspector General, on ethical grounds, was investigating Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin’s recent flight with his wife to Fort Knox, Kentucky, largely at government expense, to view the solar eclipse. Mr. Mnuchin was quite wealthy, and thus amply able to afford to fly to see the eclipse at his own cost. Indeed, the trip had previously drawn media attention not only as a taxpayer-funded junket, but for the public boasting by Mnuchin’s wife about her wealth and designer clothing in connection with the trip.	17 (11, 15)

8-31-17, 9-4-17	ACA sabotage. On August 31, The New York Times reported that the Trump administration was slashing spending on government efforts to inform Americans about their opportunities to sign up for the Affordable Care Act (“Obamacare”), in an apparent effort to sabotage the program’s fiscal viability by depleting the subscriber base. Public advertising of the program, for example, was being cut 90%. On September 4, The Times followed with a report that Mr. Trump had been sabotaging the ACA in additional ways as well, and with the use of funds from the Department of Health and Human Services – the very agency tasked with upholding and administering the law. The sabotage included posting on YouTube video testimonials by subscribers critical of the ACA; using Twitter and news releases bearing the official logo of HHS to discredit the ACA; and deleting from the department's Web site both instructions on how to obtain coverage and positive subscriber views of the law. The Times wrote: "Legal experts say that while it is common for a new administration to reinterpret an existing law, it is unusual to take steps to undermine it." A legal ethics expert also was quoted: "[The sabotage] is inconsistent with the constitutional duty to take care that the law is faithfully executed." (On April 12 and July 28, CSD had reported on yet additional threats by Mr. Trump to sabotage the ACA – for example, to withhold pertinent subsidies from health insurance companies. We noted that to destroy the ACA before a viable substitute program was in place would come at dire expense to Americans’ health, and could likely kill many Americans; that is, that lives stood to be sacrificed for Mr. Trump's personal political benefit.)	11
9-1-17	Inflated crime figures. The Washington Post reported that Attorney General Jeff Sessions in recent weeks had repeatedly claimed that violent crime – particularly in urban areas – was skyrocketing, when in fact data demonstrated that violent crime had experienced only a slight uptick two years ago and had nevertheless remained at a 40-year low.	17 (6, 7, 9)

9-2-17, 9-4-17	Politicians appointed to science jobs. On September 2, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump was planning to nominate Jim Bridenstine, a Republican Congressman and environmental science skeptic with no scientific or management experience, to head the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. On September 4, The Washington Post reported that the Environmental Protection Agency had placed John Konkus, a former Trump campaign aide with no scientific or environmental policy experience, in charge of approving hundreds of millions of dollars annually in EPA grants. Both postings appeared to be unusual by virtue of the respective individuals' professional deficiencies.	8
9-2-17, 9-6-17	Crises with both Koreas. The Washington Post reported on September 2 that Mr. Trump had begun to withdraw the U.S. from its current free trade agreement with South Korea. The move came amid the continuing nuclear crisis with North Korea: on the following day, North Korea would test its largest nuclear weapon ever; and only days before, that country had fired a ballistic missile over Japan. Mr. Trump was opposed in the trade move by three top aides: national security adviser H.R. McMaster, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis, and National Economic Council director Gary Cohn. But only when opposed by business groups and Congressional leaders as well, Mr. Trump told Congress that he would not press to end the trade agreement, as reported on September 6 by The Wall Street Journal	10, 13
9-5-17, 9-6-17	Mystifying Congress. On September 6, Mr. Trump suddenly supported Congressional Democrats' proposal to fund relief for Hurricane Harvey and to grant a three-month extension for increasing the government's borrowing limit so as to avoid what could have been a calamitous fiscal default – after having never before in his tenure accommodated Democrats – thus shocking, embarrassing and mystifying the leadership of his own party and his Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin. (The Republicans had sought a longer borrowing limit extension, in hopes of avoiding Democratic leverage over a convergence of multiple major legislative issues at year-end and prior to the 2018 Congressional elections.) [Continued below.]	6, 10, 11

9-5-17, 9-6-17	[Continued.] The previous day, Mr. Trump had had Attorney General Jeff Sessions announce a presidential executive order ending President Obama's prior executive order creating the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program. DACA had allowed undocumented individuals who had arrived in this country as children ("dreamers") to study, work and live freely here; but Sessions had announced that President Obama's original executive action was unconstitutional. Likely in response to the public outcry that his own new anti-DACA order evoked, Mr. Trump then promptly urged Congress to enact legislation allowing the dreamers to remain here; and he indicated that if Congress would not protect the dreamers, he would do so himself (presumably by way of an "unconstitutional" executive order) – thus embarrassing Sessions (as he had done on previous occasions), while mystifying everyone. Whether the mystery of these actions was carefully calculated or purely spontaneous and capricious was impossible to evaluate; but that mere question – which was based on Mr. Trump's governing history – was unnerving for CSD. As to the DACA episode, far more unnerved was the "dreamer" community – now frantically confused as to whether they would be deported, when, under what circumstances, and on which of Mr. Trump's whims.	6, 10, 11
9-7-17	Fallacious voter fraud allegations. Writing in Breitbart for a fee, Kris Kobach – the Kansas secretary of state and the vice-chair of Mr. Trump's Commission on Election Integrity whose unspoken mission was widely viewed as being to "prove" (untruthfully) that massive voter fraud had occurred in the 2016 presidential election to the detriment of Republican candidates, and to make it more difficult for the young, the elderly and minorities to vote – alleged such "proof" relative to New Hampshire voters with out-of-state drivers' licenses. He further alleged that the Democratic contender who had won election to the Senate in New Hampshire had thus "stolen" her seat. The Washington Post (and on September 10, The New York Times) discredited the "proof": most of the cited out-of-state licenses appeared to belong to college students, who had lawfully voted in New Hampshire. Kobach meanwhile was under scrutiny for being paid for his views by Breitbart while serving in official capacities directly related to his columns.	17 (4, 7, 15)

9-7-17, 9-9-17	Saudi-Qatar mediation: a failed boast. On September 7, Mr. Trump arranged a telephone mediation between Saudi Arabia and Qatar in an attempt to resolve their recently escalated and strategically perilous feud. Mr. Trump had appeared to inflame that escalation at its outset this summer over the objections of Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, as reported in CSD's entries above dated June 7 and August 9-10. Now, while still stoking enmity toward Qatar, Mr. Trump predicted of the imminent mediation, "I think you'd have a deal worked out very quickly." On September 9, The New York Times reported that the mediation had collapsed in rancor.	10, 11, 12, 13
9-8-17	Loss of American credibility as a democracy. At a symposium at the University of Pennsylvania on the topic of the successes and failures of developed nations' efforts to encourage the growth of democracy in less developed nations, several panelists noted Mr. Trump's defiance of America's democratic principles at home. Most tellingly, Thomas Carothers, senior vice president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and a noted authority on international democratization efforts, said that the Trump administration had clearly damaged America's international image as an exemplar of democracy; such that American democratization professionals can no longer easily purport to advise other governments on how to democratize, but must now instead invite them to discuss collaboratively how we can all improve democracy in our respective countries.	1 through 17
9-9-17	Company profits match politics. The New York Times reported that (with certain exceptions) Mr. Trump's golf, hotel and other consumer-facing properties that were located in voting areas where Mr. Trump was politically popular had shown better financial returns than those located in areas where he was unpopular. Although he could be viewed as a passive beneficiary or victim (as the case may be) of that phenomenon, CSD sees in it a direct and intentional linkage of his political and commercial aspirations: the more votes, the more money; and the more marketing, the more votes. Indeed, The Times report went on to observe that in June, The Trump Organization had "introduced a line of budget-conscious hotels – the first are planned for Mississippi, which Mr. Trump won by an overwhelming margin – with a name, American Idea, that echoed the president's campaign themes."	15

9-9-17. 9-11-17	Science denial round-up. On September 9, The New York Times editorial board recapped the many ways in which Mr. Trump had mounted a "war on science" since his election – to the benefit of commercial interests and to the detriment of the health and safety of Americans and the world's population. The wide array of examples included appointing multiple anti-science cabinet members and their subordinates; and cutting, ignoring and politicizing medical and environmental research – including coastal research programs that prepare communities for rising seas and worsening storms. CSD – which condemns in the Trump administration its science denial per se more than particular health, safety and environmental decisions if those decisions at least acknowledge and embrace empirical data – had already logged many of the episodes cited by The Times, in previous entries to this document, when those episodes had first arisen (see, e.g., the September 2-4 entry above in this Addendum). But we now encourage readers to examine The Times' complete recap, at this endnote.* Two days later, The Times' columnist, the economist and Nobel laureate Paul Krugman, ominously wrote on a similar theme: "The bottom line is that we are now ruled by people who are completely alienated not just from the scientific community, but from the scientific idea — the notion that objective assessment of evidence is the way to understand the world. And this willful ignorance is deeply frightening. Indeed, it may end up destroying civilization."	8

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 9 – October 10, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

9-12-17, 9-14-17	Malaysian dictator visits White House, Trump Hotel.                  On September 12, Mr. Trump hosted Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak at the White House. The Washington Post's editorial board wrote: "Not only is Mr. Najib known for imprisoning peaceful opponents, silencing critical media and reversing Malaysia's progress toward democracy. He also is a subject of the largest foreign kleptocracy investigation ever launched by the U.S. Justice Department. U.S. investigators have charged that Mr. Najib and close associates diverted $4.5 billion from a Malaysian government investment fund for their own uses, including $730 million that ended up in accounts controlled by the prime minister.... [T]he U.S. investigation prompted speculation in Malaysia that he could be arrested if he set foot on American soil ... . [But with] his White House invitation, Mr. Trump has neatly gotten Mr. Najib off that hook and provided him with what the regime will portray as a tacit pre-election endorsement." The Post saw no likely strategic advantage for America in Mr. Trump's act of hospitality that would mitigate the optics of a disdain for democratic rule. 9-12-17, 9-14-17	[Continued.] In a separate news article on the same day, The Post reported that Najib and dozens of members of his retinue had patronized the Trump International Hotel during their visit, earning Mr. Trump possibly several hundred thousand dollars in revenue. On September 12, The Wall Street Journal reported that the $10-$20 billion sale of Boeing aircraft to Malaysia that Mr. Trump had touted at the time of the meeting actually had a value of $3 billion.	7, 12, 15
9-13-17, 9-14-17. 9-15-17	Flynn promoted private Middle East nuclear project while head of NSC. The Wall Street Journal reported that Michael Flynn had been promoting a private sector nuclear energy development project in the Middle East that had once involved Russian companies and Flynn's own for-profit services and that was worth hundreds of billions of dollars – during his tenure with the Trump election campaign, his tenure on the Trump transition team, and his brief tenure as national security adviser. He did not disclose his continuing activities on his federal security clearance forms, and he did not stop those activities even after National Security Council ethics advisers told him to. The revelation followed previous, widely published reports that Flynn had failed to disclose payments he had received from various Kremlin-linked Russian enterprises and the Turkish government, and had failed to disclose his discussions with Russian officials during the campaign about lifting U.S. sanctions against Russia. None of that behavior had appeared to have troubled Mr. Trump, who only reluctantly fired Flynn (and who later said he regretted having fired him) after Flynn had been found to have lied to Vice President Mike Pence about his campaign contacts with the Russians. [Continued below.]	17 (7, 12, 15)

9-13-17, 9-14-17. 9-15-17	[Continued.] On September 14, CNN reported that in December 2016 the Crown Prince of Abu Dhabi had secretly met in New York with Flynn and transition team advisers Steven Bannon and Mr. Trump's son-in-law Jared Kushner. On September 15, Buzzfeed reported that in early January 2017 the King of Jordan had secretly met in New York with the same three advisers. Secret meetings with foreign powers by transition team members are abnormal. Both countries had an interest in Flynn's nuclear project. Buzzfeed wrote that although the three advisers denied it, they discussed the nuclear project with at least the King of Jordan. NBC News repeated the story.	17 (7, 12, 15)
9-13-17	Mnuchin sought Air Force jet for honeymoon. ABC News reported that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin had formally requested free use of an Air Force jet to fly him and his wife to Europe for their honeymoon in June, purportedly so as to ensure secure telecommunications in-flight. Use of the jet would have cost taxpayers $25,000 per hour; it would have defied the reservation of such aircraft for use by ranking national security personnel; the request was reportedly eye-popping within the government; it was rejected; and a secure communications facility was readily furnished to Mnuchin for use on a non-government airplane. The honeymoon revelation followed an earlier report that Mnuchin had flown his wife to Fort Knox on a government airplane to witness the solar eclipse, as posted by CSD on August 31. Both episodes were being investigated by the Treasury Department's Office of the Inspector General. Before all of that, Mnuchin had drawn scrutiny for failing to disclose $95 million of assets in connection with his initial ethics clearance as Treasury Secretary; then again, while serving as Secretary, for publicly promoting a Hollywood film in which he had a financial interest. Mr. Trump's response to the honeymoon matter on the following day was to praise Mnuchin as a "straight-shooter" and an "honorable man." (Mnuchin, whose net worth is in the hundreds of millions of dollars, meanwhile was spearheading efforts to rein in government waste, and to reduce income taxes on the wealthy.)	17 (11)

9-14-17	Charlottesville equivalence, again. Mr. Trump repeated his provocative statement that both the white supremacists marching in Charlottesville and the protesters opposing them had been at fault, and that the anti-racist protesters had included "some very bad people." Notwithstanding the firestorm of bipartisan criticism that his original remarks equating the two sides had elicited, and notwithstanding the unanimous Congressional resolution condemning (only) the white supremacists that he signed on the day of the above statement, he appeared neither to repent, nor to relent.	6, 11
9-14-17	Mexican opinion turns against U.S. The New York Times reported that a Pew Research Center survey had revealed that 65% of the Mexican population had come to disapprove of the U.S. generally since the beginning of the Trump administration, double the disapproval rating of two years ago, and reaching the lowest point since Pew began the survey 15 years ago. In recent decades Mexico had been an American friend and ally, as well as a substantial trading partner. CSD believes that while negative grassroots sentiment in a foreign country does not establish national policy toward the U.S., it cannot be a good thing for us, especially so close to home.	6, 13
9-14-17	CBO confirms ACA sabotage. The non-partisan Congressional Budget Office confirmed that Mr. Trump was succeeding in sabotaging the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") by withholding subsidies to insurance companies and by cutting advertising efforts to reach potential subscribers – all as he had threatened to do, and as CSD had reported multiple times in the past (see, e.g., our entry above of August 31 and September 4). The CBO expertly projected that because of Mr. Trump's concerted actions, three million fewer people will have health insurance. CSD inexpertly projects that thousands of people may die as a result.	11
9-14-17, 9-15-17, 9-16-17	Disdain for diplomacy and the UN. In sequential articles in advance of the United Nations' annual General Assembly meeting, The New York Times reported on Secretary of State Rex Tillerson's seeming disdain for diplomacy, and the world's troubled view of American leadership. CSD considers the matters sufficiently serious that we have drawn and quoted from the three articles at length. [Continued below.]	10, 13, 14

9-14-17, 9-15-17, 9-16-17	[Continued.] From The New York Times: September 14. Tillerson said that the most important thing he could do during his tenure was to make the State Department more efficient, focusing on operational reorganization and staffing cuts rather than on any particular global policy or diplomatic issues. "It's really unfortunate that that is the secretary's highest priority," said John Negroponte, a career diplomat who was President George W. Bush's ambassador to the United Nations. ... 'I think he has it all wrong.' ... John Kerry, Mr. Tillerson's predecessor, exhorted [America's diplomats] to save the planet from climate change. Condoleezza Rice charged them with fulfilling the human yearning for freedom and democracy. Mr. Tillerson wants to fix their email system. ... To be sure, the flights of rhetoric of Mr. Tillerson's predecessors sometimes fell with a thud. And the State Department's email system is truly horrible .... But employees yearn to be part of something bigger than a bureaucratic Gordian knot, and Mr. Tillerson rarely even tries to speak of a larger purpose." September 15. Tillerson had chopped the U.S. delegation to the General Assembly meeting in half. "The Africa bureau, for instance, was initially told to slash its delegation of 30 top diplomats to 10 and then to reduce that number to just three .... A host of bureaus had their delegations eliminated entirely, including those for democracy and human rights, human trafficking, oceans and the environment, cyberissues, military issues and foreign assistance .... For the department's diplomats – already deeply skeptical of Mr. Tillerson's lack of foreign policy experience, his inability to make timely decisions, put a leadership team in place or express a global strategy – the cuts are further evidence of his lack of understanding of what the department does. ... 'These cuts are needlessly stupid,' said Eliot A. Cohen, a top department official during the administration of President George W. Bush. 'So much of what diplomacy is about is building and maintaining relationships.' ... Even Mr. Tillerson's claim to bring more efficiency to the department has been questioned by many. Decision-making at the department has slowed to a crawl because he failed to hire a full complement of leaders and had revoked or re-examined the decision-making authorities of those he has hired." He meanwhile had absented the U.S. from many international meetings, or had otherwise chilled them. [Continued below.]	10, 13, 14
--	---	-------------------

9-14-17, 9-15-17, 9-16-17	[Continued.] September 16. World diplomats had been kept in the dark as to the positions that the U.S. would be advancing at the General Assembly meeting. For example, by way of preview, the U.S. had said nothing about the world's various social crises and needs. "In some places, there has been an instinct to dismiss Mr. Trump as a bombastic, Twitter-obsessed political and diplomatic neophyte"; but the president of the United States cannot easily be dismissed. And while world leaders' worst fears about Mr. Trump's erratic behavior had not yet materialized, a British diplomat said, "...America's friends still see dysfunctionality at the heart of the Trump administration, as key advisers come and go through the revolving door. ... They remain disheartened by Trump's announcements on climate change and trade policy. [And] they fear that the fighting talk of this impulsive president could make things worse rather than better on the Korean Peninsula."	10, 13, 14
9-15-17	London subway attack tweet. Shortly after a suspected terrorist attack in a London subway injured 29 people, Mr. Trump tweeted furiously that the perpetrators were terrorists and that Scotland Yard was at fault for having failed to prevent the episode. (He did not tweet sympathy for the victims.) It was the most recent of many episodes since campaigning for and becoming president that Mr. Trump had either publicly blamed terrorists for overseas attacks before local police had concluded that terrorism was at play, or had delayed or avoided criticism of anti-Muslim terrorism – all as detailed by The Washington Post in the link at this endnote.* It was also the most recent of multiple episodes in which Mr. Trump had offended British officials by publicly inveighing against British developments that fell outside his prerogatives and expertise – as detailed by The New York Times in the link at this endnote. British Prime Minister Theresa May expressed her displeasure. CSD does not recall an American president in recent history having so frequently and gratuitously insulted a close ally.	6, 9, 10, 11, 13

9-15-17	Mar-a-Lago bills taxpayers, withholds visitor list. The Washington Post reported its discovery that, on at least one occasion since Mr. Trump was inaugurated, an American government official had stayed at his Florida resort Mar-a-Lago and had paid the full luxury room rate, at taxpayer expense. The amount of the payment was not material; but the discovery suggested to The Post the possibility that Mar-A-Lago and Mr. Trump were directly profiting from government spending there in more substantial ways that have been kept opaque from the public. (Mar-a-Lago, like other resorts, does not voluntarily reveal its overall visitor lists.) Separately, The New York Times reported that the Justice Department had declined to comply with a federal court order requiring that it release the names specifically of Mr. Trump's presidential visitors at Mar-a-Lago. The court order had been based on a private watch-dog organization's lawsuit alleging potential conflicts of interest on the part of Mr. Trump. That Mr. Trump's Justice Department was both shielding him from a personal conflict of interest investigation and defying a court order on his behalf was, for CSD, remarkable.	15
9-17-17	Re-tweet of violent anti-Hillary joke. Mr. Trump re-tweeted a doctored video depicting him slamming Hillary Clinton with a golf ball that he had hit. The Huffington Post characterized the original tweeter, named @Fuctupmind, as an established homophobe, anti-Semite and conspiracy theorist. (During the election campaign, Trump supporters had sometimes worn shirts depicting violence against Clinton. Since becoming president, as reported above in this document, Mr. Trump himself had re-tweeted images of himself physically pummeling an imaginary CNN figure and a train running over an imaginary CNN reporter.)	5, 6, 9, 10, 11
9-17-17	Politicization of Trump properties. The Washington Post reported that, based on an extensive survey of golf clubs and hotels owned by Mr. Trump that it had conducted, many events were being canceled by groups opposed to Mr. Trump's behavior as president, while many new events were being scheduled by Republican Party organizations and business trade associations. That is, customer appeal for (and the profits of) Mr. Trump's business operations had become inextricably tied to his presidency.	15

9-18-17	Doctored refugee data. The New York Times reported that a government analysis showing that refugees helped the U.S. economy more than they cost it was quashed through pressure from Mr. Trump's anti-immigration senior White House aide, Stephen Miller. The Times also reported that the figures that the administration sought to release instead showed only refugees' social program costs but not their offsetting income tax payments.	17 (8)
9-18-17	Plans for military parade. While meeting with French President Emmanuel Macron, Mr. Trump reiterated and expanded upon his hopes (now seemingly plans) to mount a military parade in Washington that would feature heavy ordnance – a dream he had spoken about and tested repeatedly since before his inauguration. Such a parade, though uncommon in the U.S., would not be without precedent. But CSD believes that, both domestically and internationally, it would project an intimidating, martial image of our country at a moment that did not merit it. The Washington Post cited one of Mr. Trump's inspirations as his attendance at the Bastille Day parade in Paris in July: "The lengthy parade seemed to thrill the president, who has long held a fascination with military force." Mr. Trump is not a veteran, and has no experience in or dealing with armed conflict.	9, 11
9-18-17, 9-19-17	At the UN: "me," "sovereignty," and the annihilation of "Rocket Man." On September 18, at the very outset of his initial, brief address to the United Nations General Assembly on the occasion of its annual meeting in New York, Mr. Trump boasted about and promoted the commercial success of his Trump World Tower residential skyscraper, which is proximate to the United Nations complex. That is to say, he took the opportunity of speaking at the world body on behalf of the people of the United States to both flatter himself and to encourage countries and individuals to patronize that and other Trump properties. On September 19, Mr. Trump began his major address to the General Assembly by boasting gratuitously of America's economic and military strength, seeming to take personal credit for those decades-long developments. [Continued below.]	11, 13, 14, 15

9-18-17, 9-19-17	[Continued.] He continued his address by laying out his philosophical vision for the world order: that every nation should dedicate itself to protecting its own "sovereignty" (21 mentions) and interests, while only incidentally (and perhaps transactionally) cooperating with one another – such that all nations would somehow, inexplicably benefit. Pleading "sovereignty" had long been the defensive UN rhetoric of human rights abusing countries such as Russia, China, Iran and North Korea. The New York Times called Mr. Trump's idealization of such a level of sovereignty a radical departure from all post-World War II U.S. precedent. But oddly, Mr. Trump also lauded at length, albeit secondarily, America's historically selfless humanitarian and collaborative endeavors. So in all, it was not clear to CSD how he reconciled those two opposing propositions; how the principal premise of each-nation-for-itself would not inherently tend toward anarchy and calamity (as it had done in the 20th century, before the UN's creation); how the unbridled self-interest of America's antagonists in North Korea and Iran could be justified by that philosophy; obversely, how Mr. Trump could rail at those countries without railing at their sovereignty; how Russia's tampering with the last American election did not grievously compromise our own sovereignty; how Mr. Trump's incessant hectoring of other countries (including in this speech) to do more to support American goals squared with his call for every nation to go it alone; or how, moving forward, an international posture based principally on direct self-interest would not likely cause weaker states, poorer populations, and thus world stability to degrade. Mr. Trump continued, with unintended irony, by cautioning against authoritarianism, praising post-World War II systems and alliances, and promoting the eradication of "poverty ..., violence, hatred, and fear." He then extolled America's Constitution – and America's commitment to "democracy," "human dignity" and "the rule of law" – as providing a "way of life" that would "shine as an example for everyone to watch." "We the people," he proclaimed – as CSD itself proclaims in our logo. But in all of this, it was not clear to CSD how Mr. Trump was able to reconcile his stated aspirations with his personal, concerted, daily assault over a period of years on the very ideals he was purporting to honor. 9-18-17, 9-19-17	[Continued.] Consistent with his ongoing, dark theme that others treat him unfairly and that other countries treat America unfairly, Mr. Trump added: "[We] can no longer be taken advantage of or enter into a one-sided deal where the United States gets nothing in return." He also said that the U.S. would abide and partner with countries having different "values" and "systems of government" than ours – that is, non-democracies. But he selectively excoriated the regimes of North Korea, Iran, Syria, Cuba and Venezuela for oppressing their own people, pledging America's humanitarian duty to correct that ... while giving a pass to countless other non-democracies. Presumably for domestic consumption, Mr. Trump cited the need to "respect borders"; he advanced the factually questionable claim that refugees and other migrants steal American jobs; he said that refugees could be cared for less expensively near their countries of origin than in the U.S. (after having sought to substantially cut U.S. support of overseas relief efforts); and he implied that refugees should stay home and commit to reforming their governments rather than fleeing repression, torture and death – or even be forced to stay home to face repression, torture and death. He invoked his phrase "America first," and he said that international rules and bureaucracies had destroyed American jobs. He also mentioned God five times. But most disturbingly, he threatened to "totally destroy" North Korea and the "depraved regime" of its leader, Kim Jong-un – whom he referred to disparagingly as "Rocket Man," as he had done some days earlier. Several major news outlets interpreted the threat to pertain even if North Korea would not first attack the U.S. but instead merely continued its nuclear program and its hostility toward the U.S. He also threatened to withdraw from the UN-sponsored nuclear agreement with Iran, calling it (and implicitly calling the Obama administration that had mid-wifed it) "an embarrassment to the United States." 9-18-17, 9-19-17	[Continued.] The Wall Street Journal reported that many in attendance at the General Assembly were alarmed by the statements on North Korea and Iran. The Associated Press wrote that there were "audible gasps." The Washington Post reported that the governments of Japan and South Korea appeared to have been "blindsided." The New York Times reported: "The bombastic flourishes that generate approving roars at [Mr. Trump's] political events were met by stony silence." Its editorial board wrote: "In all this fury, before a world body whose main purpose is the peaceful resolution of disputes, there was hardly a hint of compromise or interest in negotiations." For its part, CSD notes with concern, at a minimum, Mr. Trump's marked departure from typical Western diplomacy at such a forum in favor of belligerence and personal insult, as well as his even arguable threat to preemptively obliterate a country of 25,000,000 people. (Some 80,000 had died at Hiroshima, and some 75,000 at Nagasaki.) That evening, shortly after having threatened a nuclear holocaust, and perhaps to unwind, Mr. Trump tweeted a disparaging comment about the poor television ratings of the annual Emmy Award program, as then hosted by his critic Steven Colbert. At bottom, CSD questions whether, as a practical matter, any foreign powers were in fact either impressed or intimidated by Mr. Trump's bluster at the General Assembly session, or whether instead he had merely humiliated himself and his country.	9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15
9-19-17, 9-20-17	At the UN: Africa. During his major speech at the United Nations General Assembly on September 19 in which he called many times for countries to "respect" one another, Mr. Trump's sole, brief mention of Africa lauded intergovernmental efforts to stabilize conflict and American efforts at humanitarian assistance. The following day, possibly in an attempt to overcome that negative view of the continent, at a lunch meeting with African leaders he said, to the surprise of many, "Africa has tremendous business potential, I have so many friends going to your countries trying to get rich. I congratulate you, they're spending a lot of money." He also mispronounced the name of an African country, Namibia. [Continued below.]	6, 10, 11, 16

9-19-17, 9-20-17	[Continued.] Whether the business interests of Mr. Trump or his friends were driving or might drive his policies toward Africa was unclear. But he had never himself visited Africa. He currently had no golf clubs or other investments there. He had rarely mentioned sub-Saharan Africa during the previous eight months of his presidency. His Secretary of State Rex Tillerson had appeared to ignore that vast region. And he had not appointed an assistant secretary of state for Africa or filled four of the other top seven positions within the State Department's Africa Bureau. The "respect" which he had professed the previous day was notably invisible relative to that continent. Several of CSD's members have themselves spent time in sub-Saharan African and continue to be involved with issues involving African development and democracy. They have found the vacuum of top staffing at the State Department, and Mr. Trump's overall disinterest in the region, to be an impediment. And his remarks at the lunch reminded them of his having once pointed out during a campaign rally a lone figure in the crowd, "There's my African American!"	6, 10, 11, 16
9-19-17, 9-20-17	Erdogan friendship. On September 19, Turkish President Recep Erdogan told PBS News Hour that Mr. Trump had recently apologized to him for the altercation in Washington in May between people protesting his regime and his security guards. Erdogan, who had grown increasingly authoritarian in recent years, and who had imprisoned and purged tens of thousands of Turks on political grounds, had watched with satisfaction as his guards beat the Washington protesters. The beating of peaceful protesters on American soil by agents of an authoritarian government had prompted the outrage of the State Department and a condemnatory resolution by the House of Representatives, but nothing from Mr. Trump. The White House promptly denied that Mr. Trump had apologized to Erdogan. But the following day, at a joint appearance in New York, Mr. Trump said: "It's a great honor and privilege – because he's become a friend of mine – to introduce [Erdogan]. He's running a very difficult part of the world. ...[F]rankly, he's getting very high marks." Erdogan responded by calling Mr. Trump "my dear friend, Donald." Meanwhile a dozen Americans sat in Turkish jails as political prisoners.	12, 17 (5)

9-20-17	Cabinet spending. Multiple news outlets reported that Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price, a long-time fiscal conservative who had been calling for deep cuts in the budget of the National Institutes of Health as well as the repeal of the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") on fiscal grounds, had broken cabinet-level norms by repeatedly traveling on private jets at taxpayer expense. News outlets also reported that Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt, another fiscal conservative, had broken norms by tripling his personal security detail. (Revelations of abusive expenses on the part of senior Trump officials would mushroom in the coming weeks, and a seeming pattern would emerge; see below.)	17 (11)
9-20-17 +	Puerto Rico hurricane response. On September 20, Hurricane Maria devastated Puerto Rico. The entire electrical grid was disabled; most ports, roads and cell towers were destroyed; most homes were damaged or ruined; forests and farms were decimated; residents lost access to food, clean water and hospitals. Those conditions promised staggering economic losses and jeopardized the health of millions. But unlike his speedy assistance and positive messaging with regard to the recent devastation wrought by Hurricane Harvey in Texas and Hurricane Irma in Florida, Mr. Trump was slow to react, and his initial tweets simply faulted Puerto Rico (and implicitly its people) for the territory's poor infrastructure and high debt load. In addition, unlike in the case of Texas and Florida, he refused to immediately waive the federal Jones Act, which allowed only American ships to carry cargo between U.S. ports – stating that he wanted to protect the interests of American shipping companies (rather than saving Puerto Rican lives). Puerto Ricans are U.S. citizens; there are more citizens there than in some 21 states on the mainland. But they do not have the right to vote in presidential elections, and that may have been a factor in Mr. Trump's response. Given his statements and actions relative to non-whites historically, many mainstream commentators speculated that race may also have been a factor in his disdain for the island's dire needs. Under pressure, Mr. Trump would come around and attend to the island. But his initial, instinctive response was telling.	6, 11, 16

9-21-17, 9-22-17	Dueling madmen? On September 21, two days after Mr. Trump's address to the United Nations General Assembly in which he had referred to North Korean leader Kim Jong-un as "Rocket Man ... on a suicide mission" and threatened to obliterate his country, Kim wrote of Mr. Trump: "I will surely and definitely tame the mentally deranged U.S. dotard with fire." Kim then threatened to test a hydrogen bomb over the Pacific Ocean. The following morning, Mr. Trump responded by Twitter: "Kim Jong Un of North Korea, who is obviously a madman who doesn't mind starving or killing his people, will be tested like never before!" Apparently satisfied with the drift of the dialogue, at a campaign rally that evening in Alabama for a senatorial candidate whom he had been fondly referring to as "Big Luther" Strange, Mr. Trump railed at length against the North Korean "madman," capping his invective and his attraction to personal physical dominance by referring to Kim now as "Little Rocket Man." – an insult ordinarily more likely to inflame than to subdue.	9, 10, 11, 13
9-22-17 +	Attacks on protesting athletes. At the same Alabama rally, Mr. Trump attacked the (mostly black) National Football League players who had been protesting perceived racial injustice and police brutality by kneeling or sitting during the national anthem. He shouted to the seething crowd: "Wouldn't you love to see one of these NFL owners, when somebody disrespects our flag, to say, 'Get that son of a bitch off the field right now? Out! He's fired. He's fired!'" Mr. Trump would continue the attacks for days via Twitter and would urge fans to boycott the league, drawing widespread, dramatic and multi-racial protests and expressions of solidarity in the media and on the field by owners, coaches and players. On September 25, Mr. Trump praised NASCAR owners for vowing to fire any of their own drivers or other employees who joined in the NFL-initiated protests. He seemed at the moment to be improperly lending presidential support to one sports enterprise over another. And his sport of choice was one populated by owners, drivers and fans of a demographic more purely consistent with much of his political base, thus making his choice seem all the more politically driven and ethically suspect. [Continued below.]	3, 6, 9, 11, 16

9-22-17 +	[Continued.] CSD does not take a position on the substance or the propriety of the NFL players' protests. That would appear to involve a complex political, ethical, legal and business matter as among the NFL, its players and its fans. But Mr. Trump's passionate, impetuous, preening, trivial, partisan, simplistic, gratuitous and vulgar insertion of himself into that matter suggested to us not only his deficits as a leader but his eagerness to play to racial animosities at large gatherings (he had done that often before) and his own racial animus (he had not so viscerally objected to the white supremacist protesters in Charlottesville). CSD is also disturbed that Mr. Trump had urged a consumer boycott of a private business enterprise, the NFL, over a dispute about a political matter (or even a merely symbolic matter). Such public partisanship relative to specific enterprises on matters not directly affecting major American economic or policy issues was unusual for a sitting president – except for Mr. Trump, who had earlier criticized Nordstrom's for dropping his daughter Ivanka's fashion line, and had praised and disparaged various industrial companies relative to domestic hiring versus overseas outsourcing. And Mr. Trump did appear to have some leverage in the NFL matter: on September 25, The Wall Street Journal wrote that "a prolonged dispute over whether players are respecting the flag is almost sure to drive away some viewers." Whether Mr. Trump's attacks violated the First Amendment rights of owners, coaches and players was unclear to commentators, because the government did not directly punish the protesters for expressing their views. But CSD believes that if any players were to be fired or otherwise penalized due to the inherent power of a presidential objection, a violation would have occurred; and that, given that potential, one should not have to wait for such unfortunate outcomes to consider Mr. Trump's outbursts to have been constitutionally objectionable. In that regard, we see the offense as being substantively similar to, but in some ways potentially more injurious than, his November 29, 2016 call – properly ignored by law enforcement officials – for flag-burners to be prosecuted in contravention of established constitutional law. [Continued below.]	3, 6, 9, 11, 16
------------------	--	------------------------

9-22-17 +	[Continued.] CSD would add that Mr. Trump's divisive NFL outbursts occurred in the middle of the North Korean nuclear crisis, a potential healthcare melt-down, the ruination wrought by three deadly hurricanes, Russian assaults on our electoral process, and the fall-out from Mr. Trump's other recent racially divisive statements and actions – among countless other challenges confronting America's security and well-being that cried out for concerted attention, sober leadership and a unifying call to the American people. On September 27, The New York Times' conservative columnist Ross Douthat wrote, without taking sides on the substantive NFL issues, that Mr. Trump had caused those issues to be eclipsed by issues of patriotism, free speech and (especially) American culture. He wrote: "A good culture war is one that, beneath all the posturing and demagoguery and noise, has clear policy implications, a core legal or moral question, a place where one side can win a necessary victory or where a new consensus can be hashed out. A bad culture war is one in which attitudinizing, tribalism and worst-case fearmongering float around unmoored from any specific legal question, in which mutual misunderstanding reigns and a thousand grievances are stirred up without a single issue being clarified or potentially resolved. "Unfortunately for us all Donald Trump is a master, a virtuoso, of the second kind of culture war — and a master, too, of taking social and cultural debates that could be important and necessary and making them stupider and emptier and all about himself. "He is not the only figure pushing American arguments in that direction — cable news, reality TV, campus protesters and late-night political “comedy” all have a similar effect these days. But he is the president, which lends him a unique deranging influence, and he is unique as well in that unlike most culture warriors — who are usually initially idealists, however corrupted they may ultimately become — he has never cared about anything higher or nobler than himself, and so he’s never happier than when the entire country seems to be having a culture war about, well, Donald Trump."	3, 6, 9, 11, 16
------------------	---	------------------------

9-22-17	Encouraging football brain injuries. Yet again at the Alabama rally, Mr. Trump inveighed against the National Football League's efforts to protect its players from the epidemic of brain injuries that had come to light in recent years, including by its penalizing of hard hits. He roared, "Today if you hit too hard – 15 yards! Throw him out of the game! They're ruining the game! They're ruining the game. that's what they want to do. They want to hit. They want to hit! It is hurting the game." CSD saw no obvious political point other than projecting the image of a violence-prone strongman, at the expense of the players' health and safety.	9, 11
9-22-17	State voting systems hacked. The Department of Homeland Security, after careful study, officially informed election officials in 21 states that hackers had targeted their systems prior to the November 2016 election. Previous accounts had indicated that at least some of the hacking attempts were perpetrated by Russian agents. Mr. Trump continued to show no interest in the matter – only in chasing abstract and manufactured allegations of widespread ballot-box fraud on the part of Democrats and immigrants. One of the victimized states newly identified by DHS was Pennsylvania, CSD's home. For us, the assault on the electoral system seemed neither abstract nor manufactured.	4, 12
9-22-17	Yet more ACA sabotage. The Department of Health and Human Services announced that it would shut down the online federal insurance exchange for the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") on nearly every Sunday morning during the upcoming open enrollment period. Nominally, the reason was "maintenance." But the maintenance downtime would be far greater than under the previous administration. More likely, in the view of many commentators, the move was intended to depress enrollments in yet another way – that is, in addition to HHS having halved the enrollment period and slashed funding for enrollment advertising and "navigator" assistance groups (see, e.g., CSD's entry in this document of August 31 and September 4). And likely the end goal was to cripple the ACA for political reasons, and before a replacement program had been enacted – all at great peril to Americans' health, and their very lives.	11

9-22-17	Russia "hoax," again. Mr. Trump tweeted that the recent revelation that Facebook had posted more than 3,000 Russia-paid advertisements promoting his election campaign was a "hoax." His appeared to be the lone voice in the federal government expressing that view. Contemporaneously, as though to distract from the Russia investigations, Mr. Trump tweeted extraneous insults about "Crooked Hillary Clinton" and the "Fake News Media."	1, 7, 9, 11, 12
9-22-17	Another Mnuchin travel episode. ABC News reported that Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin had come under investigation within the Treasury Department for spending $25,000 of taxpayers' money to fly in a private jet from New York to Washington on August 15. The episode added to his actual and attempted travel adventures with his wife, to Fort Knox and Europe respectively, which were romantically commendable but ethically questionable, as recorded by CSD above in this document on September 13.	17 (11)
9-23-17	New North Korea bombast. Mr. Trump said that North Korea "won't be around much longer" if it continues its provocative behavior. The North Korean foreign minister responded that Mr. Trump had declared war on his country, and that it would shoot down American bombers in international waters.	9, 10, 11, 13

9-24-17	The "deacon of divisiveness." A New York Times news analysis placed Mr. Trump's then ongoing tirades against the National Football League and its players who had protested racial inequality within the larger context of his persistent belligerence and divisiveness. The Times wrote: "Over the course of just 17 hours this weekend, President Trump assailed [Republican Senator] John McCain, [Democratic Senator] Chuck Schumer, [basketball star] Stephen Curry, the National Football League, [NFL commissioner] Roger Goodell, Iran and [North Korean leader] Kim Jong-un — the 'Little Rocket Man.' And that was on his day off. ... Never in modern times has there been an occupant of the Oval Office who seemed to reject so thoroughly the nostrum that a president's duty is to bring the country together. Relentlessly pugnacious, energized by a fight, unwilling to let any slight go unanswered, Mr. Trump has made himself America's apostle of anger, its deacon of divisiveness. ... "In his brief career as president and a candidate for president, Mr. Trump has attacked virtually every major institution in American life: Congress, the courts, Democrats, Republicans, the news media, the Justice Department, Hollywood, the military, NATO, the intelligence agencies, the cast of "Hamilton," the cast of "Saturday Night Live," the pope and now professional sports. He has attacked the Trump administration itself, or at least selected parts of it (see Sessions, Jeff), and even the United States of America ('you think our country's so innocent?'). ... Which, of course, is one reason so many wonder why he makes certain exceptions to his lash-out-at-everyone rule, particularly President Vladimir V. Putin in Russia and white supremacists in Charlottesville, Va." The Times acknowledged that other recent presidents too had generated or presided over significant political and cultural divisions. "But neither Mr. Bush nor Mr. Obama overtly aspired to division, and each found the polarization of his time dispiriting. ... Mr. Trump seems wholly uninterested in trying ...."	3, 6, 9, 10, 11, 13

9-26-17	Ivanka's business in China. The Associated Press reported that the Chinese procurement operations of the fashion business of Mr. Trump's daughter Ivanka had become materially less transparent since she had been installed as his adviser in the White House the previous winter. Despite Mr. Trump's exhortations against Chinese and other foreign imports, the heavy reliance on Chinese suppliers on the part of the licensees of Ms. Trump's brand name had already been well known. But the AP revealed that since her Washington debut, her brand business and its licensees had masked the identities of the brand's suppliers, thus secreting potential conflicts of interest relative to Chinese government and business actors – including with respect to her role, and the role of her husband Jared Kushner, as important White House conduits to ranking Chinese officials. The AP noted the possible harm: in exchange for administration favors to the Chinese government on such matters as trade policy or geopolitical security, her licensees could purchase goods from Chinese government-owned or -subsidized businesses at a discount, and to her profit, without the American public knowing. The secrecy could also mask procurement from sweatshops and other human rights violators.	16, 17(15)
9-26-17	Zinke and Pruitt versus staff. In two separate news articles, The Washington Post reported, respectively, that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, during a speech to the oil industry, had threatened to eliminate up to 30% of his department's staff for being "not loyal to the flag" (i.e., not loyal to Mr. Trump's pro-business philosophies on federal land use); and that Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt was building, for $25,000, a secure, sound-proof chamber in his office to shield his communications. Pruitt had already raised transparency and management concerns by requiring employees to abide by strenuous secrecy protocols. It was now unclear whether the two cabinet members' activities reflected paranoia, or legitimate fears of unlawful mutinies, or (in Zinke's case) illegal restrictions on staff's enforcement of federal law, or (in Pruitt's case) a desire to inappropriately continue close relationships with members of regulated industries. But at a minimum, the developments appeared to speak to unprecedented divides that the two men had generated among committed professionals within their departments.	17 (9, 11)

9-26-17	Refugee limit lowered. Mr. Trump announced his plan to set the maximum number of refugees admissible to the U.S. in Fiscal Year 2018 at 45,000 – the lowest level since 1980, when presidents had first gained the authority to set the number. (By way of reference, for FY 2017, President Obama had set the number at 110,000. and Mr. Trump had subsequently reduced it to 50,000.) Both the State Department and the Defense Department had asked Mr. Trump to set a higher cap. But they were overruled by anti-immigration voices in the White House, who had long discounted all arguments that taking in refugees both helps the economy and advances America's image for international strategic purposes. The move came at a moment when there were over 65,000,000 displaced people in the world, more than 22,000,000 of them refugees living outside their countries of origin – the highest numbers since World War II. The U.S. was not obligated by treaty to take in any particular number. Rather, it was a matter of wisdom, and of conscience.	6, 14
9-26-17	Hurricane bluster. A New York Times news analysis recounted the many boasts that Mr. Trump had made about how well his administration had been handling the recent hurricane relief efforts in Texas, Florida and Puerto Rico. While all politicians of course are politicians, his concerns for his popular image had seemed often to overtake his objective analyses and his concerns for the storm victims. The Times wrote: "From the start, Mr. Trump has had trouble separating himself from the story." (See CSD's early report on this topic of August 29.)	11
9-27-17	Russian hijack of Twitter re NFL, election. The New York Times reported that researchers at Alliance for Securing Democracy, a public policy group, had revealed that Russian-controlled Twitter accounts were advancing both sides of the current controversy surrounding on-field protests of police brutality on the part of National Football League players. That is, Russia again was seeking to divide America, and baldly in the face of continuing revelations about its notorious intrusion in the November election. The researchers also said that Russia's secret Twitter activities in connection with that election may have been far more extensive than its activities on Facebook that had recently come to light. Notably, Mr. Trump did not comment.	12

9-27-17, 9-28-17, 9-29-17, 10-5-17	Pruitt's travels, and Price's, and Zinke's. The Washington Post reported on September 27 that Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt had been traveling on private and military jets at government expense. Pruitt thus joined Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price in having come under scrutiny for enjoying taxpayer funded travel in irregular ways. Pruitt was already under investigation by the EPA's inspector general for having flown (commercially) at taxpayer expense to his home state of Oklahoma, where he had spent some 43 days over three months earlier in the year. Many of those trips had taken him to meetings with oil and gas executives whom his department was regulating; and many had facilitated extended weekend stays at his Tulsa home – all giving rise to speculation that he was considering running for senator in Oklahoma. (Pruitt had also drawn scrutiny for spending lavishly and unusually for a round-the-clock security detail and for a sound-proof chamber in his office. See CSD's entries of September 20 and 26, above.) On the following day, Politico and The Washington Post revealed that a fourth cabinet member, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, had engaged in seemingly inappropriate (that is, expensive and indulgent) travel behavior. In June, Zinke had spent $12,000 of taxpayer's money on a private jet owned by oil and gas executives in order to fly from political events in Nevada to his home in Montana. On October 5, Politico reported that in fact many of Zinke's taxpayer-funded trips had combined official work with political fundraising – potentially its own legal violation. Price in particular had been a loyal acolyte to Mr. Trump amid considerable policy controversy. During his tenure as HHS Secretary, he had repeatedly and untruthfully denied the harsh consequences of the Trump-backed health care plans raised in Congress. Through administrative actions, he had also single-mindedly followed Mr. Trump's instructions to sabotage the current health care program before a replacement was enacted, thus jeopardizing countless American lives (as recounted by CSD above in this document). Nevertheless on September 27, Mr. Trump publicly, albeit belatedly, expressed his anger about Price's travel expenses (which had first been reported by the press and recorded by CSD on September 20). Price was now on notice relative to his job. [Continued below.]	17 (11, 15)

9-27-17, 9-28-17, 9-29-17, 10-5-17	[Continued.] CSD notes that Price's offenses were eventually tallied in the $1,000,000 range, and that they had brought him convenience and a simulacrum of status but not monetary profit. Mnuchin's, Zinke's and Pruitt's travel expenditures were smaller; and here too there was indulgence and entitlement, but no apparent profit. By comparison, Mr. Trump and his family spent far more on luxury travel and security; and worse, they stood to eventually gain hundreds of millions if not billions of hard dollars by his having served as president, through the many conflicted situations described above in this document. In July, Mr. Trump had jokingly threatened to fire Price if Congress did not pass a new health care bill. Congress did not. But because of the travel expenses, on September 29, Price resigned. Mr. Trump did not.	17 (11, 15)
9-28-17	Tax fables. The Washington Post reported that in characterizing his new tax proposal during a speech in Indianapolis the previous day, Mr. Trump had made eight exaggerated or outright untrue claims, including as to the benefits for middle class taxpayers. Meanwhile several elements of his proposal – including the elimination of the estate tax, the elimination of the alternative minimum tax, the lowering of corporate tax rates, and the lowering of taxes on pass-through business income – would almost certainly save him and his family hundreds of millions if not billions of dollars; although his continuing refusal to release his tax returns had enabled him to mask that result; and he explicitly stated in his speech that he and other wealthy taxpayers would not benefit from his proposal. As to the overall effect of the proposal, a New York Times news analysis was more pointed: "The tax plan that the Trump administration outlined on Wednesday is a potentially huge windfall for the wealthiest Americans. It would not directly benefit the bottom third of the population. As for the middle class, the benefits appear to be modest. ... While some [middle class] households would probably get tax cuts, others could end up paying more." The Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post and the non-partisan Tax Policy Center would all shortly come to similar conclusions. The Times estimated that the plan could save Mr. Trump himself (not counting his family members) over a billion dollars per year. [Continued below.]	7, 11, 15

9-28-17	[Continued.] CSD does not take a position on the tax plan; only on Mr. Trump's breathtaking lack of candor and his attempt to gull the American people. We believe more than ever that Congress should make him produce his tax returns.	7, 11, 15
9-28-17	Another tax fable. The Wall Street Journal reported that the Treasury Department had taken down from its Web site its own 2012 non-partisan study that – consistent with the work of many other economists – disproved Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin's then current claim, in promoting Mr. Trump's tax proposal, that corporate tax cuts mostly benefit workers rather than shareholders. Many other legacy studies generated by the department remained posted. The Journal was skeptical of the motives for the removal. The removal echoed the Environmental Protection Agency's removing from its own Web site many pages of inconvenient climate study data, as reported by CSD on April 28 and August 11.	8
9-28-17, 10-2-17	The Kushners' hidden emails. On September 28, CNN reported that Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner had failed to disclose to the Senate Intelligence Committee a private email account, as recently discovered by news media to have been used by him to conduct government business. His attorney maintained that the government-related messages had been few, unclassified, and properly forwarded to his government account. But the episode reflected Kushner's indiscretion in view of the savagery with which Mr. Trump had attacked candidate Hillary Clinton for using private emails and now continued to attack her in tweets and at rallies ("Lock her up!"). And it was the latest instance of Kushner's non-disclosures to the government: previous failures to disclose had pertained to his assets (for ethical requirements) and his Russian meetings (relative to the election investigations). For these legal lapses his lawyers had offered the excuse of innocent sloth, even though he had been advised by top-flight attorneys when making the filings. He nevertheless was fined for his repeated lapses. The Republican and Democratic leaders of the committee – now apparently doubting anything that Kushner had ever told them – demanded in writing that he come clean with respect to all of his email accounts. [Continued below.]	17 (7, 11)

9-28-17, 10-2-17	[Continued.] Five additional senior White House officials – contrary to earlier White House representations – had recently been exposed by the press as having used private email accounts for government business: Mr. Trump's daughter Ivanka, chief economic adviser Gary Cohn, former chief strategist Stephen Bannon, former chief of staff Reince Priebus, and anti-immigrant adviser Stephen Miller. Their email abuses did not appear to approach those of Clinton; still, in light of the notoriety of hers, they were astonishing. On October 2, Politico reported the revelation of yet a third Kushner family email account – this one owned by both Kushner and Ms. Trump – to which hundreds of White House emails had been sent.	17 (7, 11)
9-28-17 +	Puerto Rico hurricane – the sound and the fury. Elaine Duke, the acting secretary for the Department of Homeland Security, told television reporters that the government's "amazing" response to Hurricane Maria was a "good news story," promptly evoking outraged rebuttals by such voices as CNN, NBC, The New York Times, The WashingtonPost, and the mayor of San Juan, who pleaded for help. They said that, after eight days (the hurricane had struck on September 20), effective relief efforts had barely reached the island's interior, where victims still lacked food, water, fuel, shelter, telecommunications and working medical facilities. Some of them noted that for the first four days after the storm, Mr. Trump had seemed engaged principally (and viscerally) with name-calling relative to the National Football League players' protests about racism, and not with Puerto Rico. Ken Keen, the general who had commanded U.S. relief efforts following Haiti's 2010 earthquake, said that the federal response in Puerto Rico inexplicably lagged that supplied to Haiti. Russell Honoré, the general who had successfully turned around the Hurricane Katrina relief efforts in New Orleans in 2005, told CNN that the government's current self-congratulatory messages were "bullshit." "[T]hey're trying to put lipstick on a pig," he said. "When we should have been moving the military [five days ago], the president was out playing golf and Twittering." The following day, even Duke and General Jeffrey Buchanan – who had come to lead the U.S. relief effort in Puerto Rico – said that the federal response to date was unsatisfactory. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 15

9-28-17 +	[Continued.] The U.S. Virgin Islands were reportedly experiencing similar post-hurricane conditions, and federal responses. Heedless of Duke's and Buchanan's admissions, on September 30 Mr. Trump,, by way of Twitter, denounced the reporting by CNN and NBC as "fake news"; the mayor of San Juan as a poor leader and a puppet of the Democratic Party; and the Puerto Rican people as "want[ing] everything to be done for them." October 1 brought from him more tweets in the same vein. In Puerto Rico on October 3, Mr. Trump at last did praise the island's government for its emergency response. And he acknowledged the vast devastation. But he also hectored it for its financial problems, saying "you've thrown our budget a little bit out of whack"; and he dismissed the island's trauma as not a "real catastrophe" like Hurricane Katrina in New Orleans because far fewer Puerto Ricans had died. He had launched no such barbs relative to the recent hurricane damage in Texas and Florida – states he had visited more promptly after their respective calamities. But in Puerto Rico, much as in Texas and Florida, he boasted about the "unbelievable" and "incredible" job that his administration was doing in providing relief – deploying those words numerous times. He also invited (induced) the island's non-voting representative to Congress to praise him on-camera, and he told reporters how so many Puerto Ricans had thanked him for his efforts. Mr. Trump had limited his visit to San Juan, the most prosperous, least damaged and most recovered part of the island. He was greeted by well-wishers in a prosperous and minimally damaged residential neighborhood there and at an Evangelical church that had received large shipments of relief supplies from private sources on the mainland. He had no exposure to the interior, or to residents who might not be his natural allies. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 15
------------------	---	---------------------------

9-28-17 +	[Continued.] On October 1, at a golf tournament in New Jersey, Mr Trump had dedicated a trophy to the hurricane victims in Florida, Texas and Puerto Rico, and he had lauded the success of the government's relief efforts. The move had drawn wide criticism as an empty gesture, and as a recreational absence, in the face of the ongoing crisis and suffering in Puerto Rico. But other presidents as well have been criticized for relaxing during a crisis; so CSD's concern was somewhat different: that Mr. Trump was implicitly using the event, the suffering and the trophy to promote his considerable business interests in the golf industry. CSD would also emphasize that Mr. Trump's behavior in San Juan – boasting as to the success of the relief efforts, inducing others to praise those efforts, exulting in the size of audience crowds, slamming critics as "ingrates," positioning government aid as a magnanimous gift to the undeserving – was not merely a display of an unfortunate personality trait (as many observers had charged), but a classic exercise in demagogic rhetoric – designed to distract from grievous suffering and to amplify the speaker's grace. But above all, as for the temporal overlap between Mr. Trump's NFL donnybrook and his inattention to Puerto Rico, CSD saw not just a capriciousness, or an indifference, or an immaturity, or a skewing of priorities – that is, a skewing of egotism masquerading as patriotism (NFL) versus saving real American lives (Puerto Rico) – but a coherent and well-worn theme: Mr. Trump's seemingly innate disdain for people of color.	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 15
10-1-17 +	Disparaging Kim and (mostly) Tillerson. On October 1, as Secretary of State Rex Tillerson was returning from China after having sought direct negotiations with the North Korean government over the escalating nuclear crisis, Mr. Trump tweeted that Tillerson was "wasting his time trying to negotiate with Little Rocket Man" – that is, with North Korean leader Kim Jong-un. He added: "Save your energy, Rex. We'll do what has to be done." [Continued below.]	1, 9, 10, 11, 13

10-1-17 +	[Continued.] The remarks stunned diplomatic observers. They wondered how the U.S. could possibly conduct foreign affairs if the president continued to publicly disagree with and humiliate his own top diplomat; and how the nuclear crisis could be resolved by his continuing to insult Kim. But critics speculated that even if Mr. Trump were to fire Tillerson or Tillerson were to resign, his replacement would likely be as hamstrung and marginalized as Tillerson had been, as would the entire State Department. Many news analyses followed, portraying Tillerson's multitude of policy differences with and slights by Mr. Trump. Since his appointment Tillerson had been a voice for diplomatic reason and moderation, but that had apparently antagonized Mr. Trump and neutered Tillerson. Areas of discord had included Mr. Trump's parceling out of major foreign policy portfolios to his son-in-law Jared Kushner, UN ambassador Nikki Haley and other senior aides; his initial refusal to affirm America's mutual defense treaty obligations with NATO; his threat of military action to stop Mexican migration; his support of the Saudi Arabian-led blockade of Qatar; his desire to exit the Iran nuclear accord; his withdrawal from the Paris climate accord; his record low cap for refugee admissions; his desire to limit troop levels in Afghanistan; his rejection of the Trans Pacific [trade] Partnership; his inappropriate discussions with Russian officials; his not having timely denounced the white supremacist march in Charlottesville; and in many of those instances his not having appropriately communicated and coordinated with Tillerson. (CSD had reported on those episodes as they had arisen.) On October 4, NBC reported that in July Tillerson had in fact nearly resigned over multiple disagreements with Mr. Trump – most recently over Mr. Trump's demagogic speech at the national jamboree of the Boy Scouts of America (see CSD's entry of July 24 and 27), an organization that Tillerson had once headed. NBC also reported that a few days earlier in July, at a meeting with Mr. Trump's national security team and Cabinet members, Tillerson had openly referred to Mr. Trump as a "moron." [Continued below.]	1, 9, 10, 11, 13
------------------	--	-------------------------

10-1-17 +	[Continued below.] At a hastily called and (for Tillerson) unprecedented press conference, Tillerson then told television reporters that he was loyal to Mr. Trump and that Mr. Trump was "smart." Contrary to his own prior preferences, he also pledged fealty to Mr. Trump's "America first" and "make America great" themes. That evening, Republican Bob Corker, chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said that he hoped Tillerson would stay on. He said that Tillerson, Defense Secretary James Mattis and White House chief of staff John Kelly "help separate our country from chaos" – presumably referring to Mr. Trump's leadership style, which Corker had recently hinted was not marked by competence. But Tillerson was not viewed by all as an admirable leader and an innocent victim. To the criticism of virtually the entire foreign policy community, he had collaborated with Mr. Trump in what was widely characterized as the evisceration and demoralization of State Department staff, and as the disregard for the staff's deep substantive expertise in favor of political officials with no foreign policy experience. All of that was reported previously by CSD in this document, and was narrated most recently by Politico on October 4 at the link appearing at this endnote. The Washington Post, also on October 4, reported that Tillerson had developed a reputation for being dictatorial, abrupt, aloof and isolated – in addition to tangling with Mr. Trump and ignoring State Department staff. Adopting several of those competing views of Tillerson, on October 2, Eliot Cohen – former counselor to President Bush's Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice – wrote in The Atlantic that Mr. Trump had come to publicly "emasculate" Tillerson as no other president had previously done with respect to his chief diplomat; that Tillerson meanwhile had "taken a pickaxe to the department entrusted to his care"; and thus on both counts that Tillerson should resign. The complete article appears at this endnote.* Richard Haass, another Republican and former top State Department official, voiced a similar conclusion on October 4. [Continued below.]	1, 9, 10, 11, 13
------------------	--	-------------------------

10-1-17 +	[Continued.] But the flap between Tillerson and Mr. Trump bespoke a far broader instability in governance. On October 4, The New York Times wrote: "Indeed, the news conference was the latest rupture in an administration consumed by palace intrigue from the start. Just last week, Tom Price resigned as secretary of health and human services after being publicly scolded by Mr. Trump for using chartered flights. Mr. Trump has lost a chief of staff, a national security adviser, a chief strategist, a press secretary and two communications directors. He has fired the F.B.I. director, belittled his attorney general and publicly assailed the deputy attorney general. That turnover is one reason Mr. Trump has not pushed Mr. Tillerson out, according to advisers Mr. Trump would respond to the viral ridicule and criticisms, at least in part. On October 4 he countered NBC's "moron" report by denouncing the network as "fake news" and "a disgrace," disparaging its television ratings, and demanding an apology. A Washington Post commentator then quoted Mr. Trump in a March 2017 interview with Fox News, indicating what was perhaps his underlying animus toward NBC: "I made a fortune for NBC with 'The Apprentice' ... . I had a top show, where they were doing horribly. And I had one of the most successful reality shows of all time. And I was on for 14 seasons. And you see what happens when I am not on. You saw what happened, and the show was a disaster. I was on. I was very good to NBC, and they are despicable — despicable in their coverage." Also on October 4, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump, by way of Twitter, had himself called people "morons" more than 50 times since 2012. On October 10, Mr. Trump told Forbes magazine that the "moron" story had been "fake news"; but that if true, he would compare his IQ to Tillerson's, and beat him.	1, 9, 10, 11, 13

10-2-17	Las Vegas massacre. Mr. Trump's televised speech to the nation following the massacre at a country music concert in Las Vegas – the worst mass murder in our country's recent history – focused largely on hope, faith, prayer and "pure evil." He also praised law enforcement officers and called for national unity. Absent was any suggestion of cause-and-effect or problem-solving, as (CSD believes) likely would have arisen had the shooter been Mexican or Muslim. Indeed, in response to the massacre at the Pulse nightclub in Orlando in June 2016, Mr. Trump had instantly blamed a "radical Islamic terrorist" and had used that alleged causal connection to promote his restrictive immigration positions. He had also quickly blamed "Islamic terrorism" after the earlier December 2015 mass shooting in San Bernardino.	6, 9
10-3-17	Pruitt's industry informants. The New York Times reported that since taking office in February, Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt – a climate science denier – had met almost non-stop with executives of the industries he was tasked with regulating, but rarely with environmental protection groups. The Times wrote: "Many of [the industry] players have high-profile matters pending before the agency, with potentially hundreds of millions of dollars in regulatory costs at stake. Some of these same companies and trade associations were allies of Mr. Pruitt when, as Oklahoma's attorney general, he sued the E.P.A. at least 14 times to try to block rules Mr. Pruitt is now in charge of enforcing." The Washington Post, in a follow-on story, reported that several times the EPA had ruled favorably on regulatory issues favoring the executives shortly after Pruitt's meetings. As recorded by CSD on September 20 and on September 27 through 29, Pruitt had already come under investigation by his own department for his extensive government-paid travel. The Times now reported that much of the travel had involved meetings with regulated companies that presumably used the opportunities to advocate against their regulation and the EPA's mission.	17 (11, 15)

10-3-17	Nepotism rationale. On October 3, Politico reported that the Justice Department had released the internal memoranda of numerous previous presidential administrations in which lawyers had determined, and the presidents had accepted, that they could not retain relatives as either paid or unpaid appointees. In January, at the request of Mr. Trump's White House counsel, his Justice Department had reviewed those memoranda and had (as though on command) reversed the department's own prior conclusions – now opining that a 1978 statute had empowered the president to hire anyone he wanted to. Mr. Trump had then appointed his daughter Ivanka and his son-in-law Jared Kushner to senior White House advisory positions, despite their total lack of qualifications. They were also granted security clearances. Taken to its logical conclusion, CSD believes that the Justice Department's new opinion would appear to empower the president to fill hundreds of senior positions inappropriately – an unsupportable conclusion with dangerous potential. In fact the following day, Ms. Trump wrote in a New York Post op-ed that tech education in schools was part of her White House portfolio – arousing broad criticism to the effect that she had no background in either technology or education.	11
10-4-17	Call for investigation of media. In a tweet, Mr. Trump called for the Senate Intelligence Committee to investigate "the Fake News Networks" – that is, presumably, those (and only those) networks that had been critical of him. As then recollected by MSNBC that day, Mr. Trump earlier this year, in the style of an autocrat, had called for investigations of other political enemies – President Obama, former opponent Hillary Clinton, Connecticut Senator Richard Blumenthal, and former FBI Director James Comey. He meanwhile had never endorsed the committee's investigation of Russia's well-established interference in the November election, which he repeatedly had called a hoax.	1, 7, 9, 11, 12

10-5-17	The calm before the storm. At a dinner attended by the country's uppermost military officials, Mr. Trump – standing before the officials, and lauding their military prowess – cryptically told reporters, then repeated, then refused to explain, an ominous statement that the country was experiencing "the calm before the storm." A reporter persisted in asking, "What storm, Mr. President?" "You'll find out," Mr. Trump replied. Afterwards the White House continued to decline to explain. Whether the storm might amount to a war with North Korea, China, Venezuela. Iran or Syria (all of which Mr. Trump had previously threatened), or some other storm, or no storm at all, was indeterminable. But he seemed to delight in confusing or even unnerving the American citizenry.	9, 10, 11
10-5-17	ACA: More sabotage. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had intervened in a number of states to block those states from adjusting their health insurance markets in order to restrain premium increases. The intent and the effect were widely perceived as being to increase premiums under, depress enrollments for, and further undermine the viability of the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"). That is, as now reported, Mr. Trump had undertaken not only to withdraw federal support for the program (as described by CSD in numerous entries above), but to prevent states such as Iowa, Oklahoma and Minnesota from helping themselves. All of this appeared to be a concerted political strategy, and to the considerable detriment of Americans' health. Mr. Trump and his administration continued to publicly claim that the ACA was failing, without acknowledging their own role in causing or magnifying that failure.	11
10-5-17	Reneging on Iran agreement. Mr. Trump announced that he planned to decertify Iran's compliance with the multilateral agreement pursuant to which that country had paused its nuclear weapons program in exchange for a lifting of economic sanctions. Decertification could lead to abandonment of the agreement. The announcement alarmed America's allies that had participated in the agreement, and it was opposed by Mr. Trump's senior diplomatic and security advisers. CSD does not take a position on the Iran agreement. But we are disturbed by Mr. Trump's rejection of expert advice, and by his casual and repeated breach of our country's treaty obligations. Even for a transactionally oriented business person, breaking agreements is known to destroy trust, and to chill future deals.	13, 14

10-5-17, 10-6-17, 10-8-17	More travel issues: Chao, Mnuchin, and everyone. On October 5, The Washington Post reported in two separate articles that Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, respectively, had incurred unusually large taxpayer-funded travel expenses since taking office, by flying on government aircraft as opposed to commercial craft. Mnuchin, who is worth hundreds of millions of dollars, ran up a tab of $800,000. The revelations added to previous ones about his lavish travel behavior; and they added Chao to the list of recently exposed travel offenders, already populated by Mnuchin, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt, and former Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price – all avowed fiscal conservatives. (See CSD's entry above of September 27-29.) The Post recapped and graphically illustrated the pattern of questionable Cabinet member flights on October 6, in an analysis linked at this endnote. On October 8, The Post published an even more extensive exposé, decrying what appeared to be a systemic culture among top administration officials (beginning with Mr. Trump himself) of taxpayer-funded travel on private or government jets, often with spouses, and often combining political or leisure activities with official business. Many of the officials were wealthy. At least five government ethics investigations were in progress. The exposé appears at this link.	17 (11)
10-8-17	Staged NFL counter-protest. Vice President Mike Pence, attending a National Football League game in Indianapolis, on Mr. Trump's instructions walked out when players mounted a by now predictable on-field protest against racial injustice; then he criticized the protesters at length. An analysis in The Washington Post concluded that Pence's attendance and behavior had been carefully staged, had been designed specifically to stoke political and cultural (if not racial) divisions, and had cost taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars in travel and security expenses.	17 (3, 6, 9 )

10-8-17, 10-9-17. 10-10-17	Corker pops. On October 8, Senator Bob Corker, a highly influential Republican and the chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, told The New York Times that Mr. Trump routinely tweets false statements and that his tweets have injured international negotiations. He also said that Mr. Trump has to be carefully minded by his advisers so as to prevent World War III, and that virtually all the members of the Senate know it. Such damning criticism of a sitting president by a credible leader of his own party seemed beyond extraordinary. On October 9, based on interviews with many White House aides, Politico provided detail as to how the aides go about managing Mr. Trump's moods and decision-making – which indeed appeared from the interviews to be impetuous, if not infantile. The Politico article appears at this link. On October 10, Mr. Trump tweeted that the "failing" New York Times had tricked "Liddle Bob Corker" into criticizing him and looking like "a fool" – thus both slurring the newspaper and demeaning Corker because of his height.	1, 11, 13
10-10-17	Falsehood tally. The Washington Post – which had been keeping a log of Mr. Trump's false and misleading statements since his election – wrote that the tally had reached 1,318 over 263 days, or an average of five per day.	7

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 10 – November 12, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

Throughout October, 2017	Ethics round-up. On October 10, The New York Times reported that David Apol, the acting head of the Office of Government Ethics, had sent a letter the previous week to the heads of all federal agencies warning of widespread ethical abuses by "government leadership" – presumably referring to Mr. Trump's cabinet members and other top aides some of whose recently discovered ethical offenses are described above in this document. The Times wrote: "Mr. Apol suggested that public confidence in the government could be undermined if federal employees — and ethics officers at each agency charged with overseeing them — do not take steps to strengthen their commitment to ethical governance." Last summer, Apol had succeeded to the position of Walter Shaub, who had famously resigned in disgust or despair (also as described above). CSD does not have the detail on the incidents of which Apol was concerned. But throughout the month we collected the following specific public reports. Some of the ethically questionable activities appeared to have been more aggressive, others merely thoughtless; some of the actors incidental offenders, others perennial. But in the aggregate they portrayed a profile of a group that had struggled (or not) to separate its personal gain from its public service. [Continued below.]	15, 17 (15)

The contractor, Whitefish Energy Holdings, was minuscule, was run by a resident of Zinke's small home town in Montana by a man who had once employed Zinke's son, had no previous qualifying experience, and was funded by a major Trump campaign donor. In addition, the contract provided, unusually, that the Puerto Rican government would have no right to audit the contractor's profits on the work or to make a claim for delayed performance. As the controversy swelled, Whitefish was fired. The Daily Beast, 10-24-17; The New York Times, 10-29-17. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	15, 17 (15)

The campaign also paid for hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York for Zinke's family and friends, and it committed other possible infractions. The allegations were brought before the Federal Election Commission by the Campaign Legal Center, a private watchdog organization. As reported by CSD above in this document, Zinke was already under investigation over his questionable travel expenditures and his having attended political events while on official business. Politico, 10-30-17.</li> <li>• Betsy DeVos (Education Secretary) was causing the government to spend up to an annualized $6.5 million to have federal marshals accompany her on her travels – a highly unusual benefit for an education secretary. 	Politico, 10-30-17.
10-10-17	Maria propaganda. The White House produced, and Mr. Trump tweeted, a video about the effectiveness of the federal response to Hurricane Maria in Puerto Rico. The Washington Post characterized the video as not objective; that is, as extolling Mr. Trump's successes and largely ignoring the continuing devastation. CSD regards the rosy video as amounting to campaign-style, wartime-style, or dictator-style propaganda, developed at taxpayer expense, and passed off officially as fact.	7, 9
10-10-17	Tax Threat to NFL. Mr. Trump suggested that certain tax exemptions enjoyed by the National Football League's central office be eliminated so as to force it to require protesting players to stand for the National Anthem. The statement directly threatened a private enterprise for seeking to honor individuals' civil rights.	3, 9
10-11-17	Why a moron? NBC revealed the episode in June that appeared to have prompted Secretary of State Rex Tillerson to refer to Mr. Trump afterwards as a "moron": a high-level military briefing in which Mr. Trump, apparently devoid of understanding, proposed increasing America's nuclear arsenal ten-fold. The ranking military and security personnel at the meeting were reportedly stunned, in view of the legal, diplomatic, operational and financial challenges that such a move would entail, and the absence of any strategic benefit in it.  Mr. Trump responded promptly by tagging the report as "fake news," and by suggesting that NBC's broadcast license be revoked (which would be both illegal and unconstitutional). Later that evening he repeated that the licenses of "unfair" networks should be pulled.	1, 9, 11
10-11-17	Russia targeting Democrats. Politico reported that bipartisan leaders of the Senate Intelligence Committee feared that Russia could corrupt the 2018 elections, as they had corrupted the 2016 elections, and that the Trump administration was showing little interest in stopping that. Democratic Party candidates were especially concerned that they would be targeted by Russian interests.	4, 12

10-11-17	Tax fables, again. At a speech outside of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania for truck drivers and business groups, Mr. Trump repeated his false statements that America's tax rates are the highest in the world and that his tax plan would benefit everyone in the middle class. (Harrisburg had been the site of his disturbingly demagogic rally the previous spring, as reported by CSD on April 29.)	7
10-12-17	Withdrawal from UNESCO. Mr. Trump caused the U.S. to withdraw its funding and membership from UNESCO, the United Nations' cultural and educational organization, due UNESCO's long-held anti-Israel bias. Previous presidents have similarly withdrawn from biased UN bodies, and subsequent administrations have rejoined. But the new move was notable for its place within a unique pattern: it followed Mr. Trump's withdrawal from the Paris climate accord and the Trans Pacific [trade] Partnership, and his questioning of America's commitments to NATO, the North American Free Trade Agreement, the Iran nuclear accord, and the United Nations Human Rights Council. In all cases, Mr. Trump had deemed those international endeavors to be unfair to the U.S. or its allies. (UNESCO is perhaps best known in the U.S. for designating World Heritage Sites that preserve historical structures and promote tourism.)	14
10-12-17	No science for weather. Mr. Trump appointed Barry Myers, a businessman – the CEO of the weather forecasting company AccuWeather – to head the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. Among other things, according to The Washington Post, NOAA "oversees the National Weather Service, conducts and funds weather and climate research, and operates a constellation of weather satellites as well as a climate data center. It also has critical responsibilities in monitoring and protecting the nation's coasts, oceans and fisheries." According to The Post, all recent NOAA heads had been scientists. In addition, The Post wrote, NOAA was expected to continue to have material commercial dealings with AccuWeather, which was owned by Myers' family, such that a conflict of interest would inhere in his governmental duties.	8, 15

10-12-17	Threat to pull aid from Puerto Rico. Mr. Trump tweeted that he would pull federal aid from storm-ravaged Puerto Rico if it did not improve its fiscal condition. The Washington Post wrote that the island remains in a "staggering humanitarian crisis." Mr. Trump's volatile tweets contradicted the previously expressed sentiments of Vice President Mike Pence, House Speaker Paul Ryan, and Mr. Trump himself in support of the island. CSD believes that the threatened move would be discriminatory, brutal, political, and violative of Mr. Trump's constitutional duty to protect the American people. We do not know if Mr. Trump would have so threatened a majority-white state or territory.	6, 9, 10, 11
10-12-17 +	More blows to the ACA. On October 12, Mr. Trump, unable to induce Congress to pass comprehensive health care legislation, signed an executive order intended to create a parallel insurance market that would bypass the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"). Specifically, he lengthened the allowable terms of certain short term insurance policies, and he relaxed the ACA requirements for "association plans" used by small businesses and some individuals. In both cases, new offerings could now provide lower premiums and less coverage than those mandated under the ACA. Many younger and healthier people were seen as likely to opt for the less expensive plans, thus shrinking enrollment and raising premiums under the ACA. The order represented Mr. Trump's latest move, chronicled extensively above in this document, to cripple the ACA before an alternative program for all Americans was established. CSD does not take a position on the ACA or alternative health insurance proposals; only on Mr. Trump's efforts to sabotage the ACA for personal and political purposes – thus risking the lives and well-being of millions. Later that day, Mr. Trump announced his intention to cease subsidizing insurance companies, which could deprive lower and middle income families of the ability to purchase insurance, and destabilize large portions of the health insurance market. In his announcement he made clear that this was still only the beginning of his plan to systematically dismantle the ACA without a replacement program being in place. [Continued below.]	9, 11

10-12-17 +	[Continued.] Also on October 12, The New York Times published an article listing 12 ways in which Mr. Trump had now unilaterally, by executive authority, acted to eviscerate the ACA without a replacement plan in place. Most of those ways had been described above in this document. The link to The Times' article appears at this endnote.* On October 16, according to The Huffington Post, Mr. Trump told his Cabinet: “Obamacare is finished. It’s dead. It’s gone. You shouldn’t even mention it. It’s gone. There is no such thing as Obamacare anymore.” Mr. Trump was thus effectively directing his senior-most advisors categorically to ignore, dishonor, not publicize, and not enforce the law of the land – and just in advance of the 2018 enrollment period, when the viability of the program would turn in part on enrollments. On October 17, The Philadelphia Inquirer reported that health insurance premiums in Pennsylvania would increase by an average of 30.6% in 2018. One critic blamed the increases directly on Mr. Trump's deliberate "sabotage" of the ACA. Many conservatives were pleased by the prospect of the ACA's demise, and many progressives (plus most of the insurance and health care industries and professions) were appalled. But CSD is appalled for a different reason than the loss of coverage per se: the piecemeal and chaotic disruption of a major portion of our country's economic activity and quality of living without any apparent overall evaluation of or solutions for that disruption's fiscal, economic and medical implications. We believe that instead Mr. Trump's actions have been brutally self-serving: driven by his desire to be seen as fulfilling a campaign promise; a desire to spite the Republican Congress for having failed to pass a health care bill; a desire to spite former President Obama and his supporters for anything they had ever accomplished; and his willingness to use old and sick people as human shields to force Congress to accede to his own vague and shifting health care whims. [Continued below.]	9, 11
-------------------	---	--------------

10-12-17 +	[Continued.] In fact on October 14, Mr. Trump had boasted that the stock prices of several insurance companies had dropped as a consequence of his announcements. As described above in this document, Mr. Trump – for political gain, financial gain and/or emotional expression – had earlier publicly delighted in, and had even sought to cause, damage to selected private business enterprises. CSD believes that that behavior too represented an unconstitutional abuse of power.	9, 11
10-13-17	Iran nuclear agreement decertified. Mr. Trump carried through on his threat to decertify Iran's compliance with the multinational Iran nuclear accord. The decertification did not cause the U.S. to immediately withdraw from the accord, which action would fall to Congress, but it clearly imperiled America's participation. CSD does not take a position on the substance of the accord. But the announcement was manifestly part of Mr. Trump's broader rejection of international collaboration generally and standing treaties in particular (see CSD's posting of October 12 regarding Mr. Trump's withdrawal from UNESCO). A Washington Post news analysis said: "What has ... happened is a widening chasm of mutual disdain between the United States and its traditional allies. ... They see him as an erratic force who must be managed as he squanders American leadership."	14
10-16-17	Consoling the families of the fallen. Mr. Trump, after being questioned about his tardiness in consoling the families of several soldiers who had recently been killed in Niger, falsely stated that it was President Obama and other previous presidents who had been delinquent in military consolations. As the controversy escalated and an angry widow was supported in her complaints by her congresswoman, Mr. Trump's chief of staff, John Kelly, falsely accused the congresswoman of unrelated, earlier bad behavior, thus further stoking the controversy. [Continued below.]	7, 11, 17 (7)

10-16-17	[Continued.] CSD does not offer a view on the timing and quality of Mr. Trump's actual consolations; nor do we claim that the behavior was racially motivated, as some others have done. But the impetuous falsehoods, the petty deflection of blame, and the casual and pointless insults directed to former presidents and other political figures were themselves by now routine for Mr. Trump and his staff, and contrary to the norms of our democracy in recent decades.	7, 11, 17 (7)
10-16-17, 10-17-17	Threat to McCain. On October 16, in accepting the prestigious Liberty Medal in Philadelphia and in an apparent allusion to Mr. Trump, Republican Senator John McCain condemned "half-baked, spurious nationalism cooked up by people who would rather find scapegoats" than solve problems. The following day, Mr. Trump responded in a radio interview, "People have to be careful, because at some point I fight back. You know, I'm being very nice. I'm being very, very nice. But at some point I fight back and it won't be pretty." The veiled threat to McCain (a Vietnam war hero who had been tortured by a dictatorial regime for his defense of democracy) on the part of Mr. Trump (who had not served in the military and who appeared to be antagonistic to democracy) attracted national media attention. Whether and how the threat would materialize was unknown, as was Mr. Trump's understanding of the phrase "being very nice."	9, 11
10-17-17	"The most talented cabinet in history." A lengthy New York Times analysis detailed the dysfunctional relationship between Mr. Trump and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, as well as Tillerson's efforts at gutting the State Department and purging it of knowledgeable experts. When the reporter had submitted a series of questions to the White House for use in composing the article, he had received this response: "The president has assembled the most talented cabinet in history ... . Anything to the contrary is simply false and comes from unnamed sources who are either out of the loop or unwilling to turn the country around." The complete Times article is linked at this endnote.	13, 17 (1, 7, 9, 11, 13)

10-17-17	Lost documents. Politico reported that the National Archives had been repeatedly expressing its concerns to the White House that the Trump administration was not preserving its documentary records as mandated by law. Institutional memory and thus effective governance were at risk; and national security concerns and forensic implications abounded.	9, 10
10-17-17	Human shields. Mr. Trump's move to brutally exploit the vulnerability of American citizens in seeking to destroy the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") without an alternative plan in place, as described by CSD in our October 12-17 entry above and elsewhere in this document, became apparent as part of a pattern extending well beyond health insurance. On October 17, a Washington Post columnist wrote: "Trump on [October 13] said he would kill the Iran deal — unless Congress does something to save it. Trump threatened to pull the plug on Obamacare funds, potentially causing millions to lose health care — unless, he said, Congress passes a new health-care program. Before that, he said he would kill the DACA program protecting immigrant 'dreamers' — unless Congress enshrines it in law." A New York Times columnist stated it similarly, that the new "Trump Doctrine" had finally been established: "Obama built it. I broke it. You fix it." To CSD's awareness, this is an unprecedented mechanism of governance in America: for a president, lacking a clear agenda of his own, to threaten to destroy individual lives and international security if Congress does not solve crises of his own making.	9, 10, 11
10-17-17	Claiming victory in Raqqa. Mr. Trump took complete personal credit for the Iraqi army's recent defeat of ISIS at its stronghold in the city of Raqqa and related battlefield successes, including by virtue of his having allowed military commanders greater latitude in their rules of engagement. But CNN said that the core battle plan had been developed by the previous administration. And The New York Times wrote that the 2017 successes were largely incremental relative to those of previous years, also possibly inevitable, and that contributing to the successes had been the Syrian army and dramatically increased civilian casualties attributable to the new engagement rules. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11

10-17-17	[Continued below.] To that CSD would add that deferring to commanders does not make the commander-in-chief a strategist; nor does taking credit for commander-driven wins synchronize with faulting commanders for their losses (as Mr. Trump had done relative to the failed raid in Yemen, reported by CSD above on February 28). Rather, Mr. Trump's off-loading to commanders (and thus his ability to deny responsibility for their failures) compared to his off-loading to Congress in other critical matters, as described above in our entry of October 17 titled "Human shields." CSD also found Mr. Trump's taking sole credit for the successes to be discordant with his lack of military or strategic experience (even though, during his presidential campaign, he had claimed that he knew more about how to defeat ISIS than "the generals.")	7, 9, 11
10-17-17	Fake news charge sticks. A new Politico poll revealed that almost half of American voters had come to believe that the media fabricates news stories about Mr. Trump. And 28 percent believed that the government should have the power to revoke broadcast licenses of major news organizations that the president says are fabricating news stories about him. CSD attributes those results to Mr. Trump's persuasive powers.	1, 7, 9
10-18-17	NFL: the saga continues. Responding to the National Football League's decision the previous day not to discipline players who declined to stand for the national anthem, Mr. Trump tweeted in the morning that the decision had demonstrated "a total disrespect for our great country!" To CSD, Mr. Trump seemed to be gratuitously stirring racial animosity, continuing petulantly to pound on an issue largely so that he could appear to "win," unlawfully interfering in a private sports enterprise, almost commanding that the players be disallowed from expressing their political views (which would entail a First Amendment violation), and offering an unsupported and likely inaccurate evaluation as to who (including himself) respects our country and who does not. Later that day, he tweeted a similar statement.	3, 6, 7, 11

10-19-17	Puerto Rico response ranking. Mr. Trump said that he would give himself 10 out of 10 points for his response to Hurricane Maria in Puerto Rico. Most of the island remained without electricity, and much without clean drinking water; meanwhile Puerto Ricans were leaving their island for the mainland in droves. CSD would not have expected of Mr. Trump, or any president, a miraculous performance in the face of such an immense natural disaster; yet he appeared to believe that he had achieved one.	11
10-19-17	Russia; and still .... Mr. Trump tweeted that the FBI may have paid to commission the negatively sensational but not fully corroborated "Steele dossier" about his activities in and with Russia that had emerged during the election campaign. Such a serious allegation against the law enforcement agency would ordinarily be dealt with by conducting an investigation and prosecution, rather than by flippantly tweeting about it – if it had had any basis in fact. Without basis, CSD believes, it was rank demagoguery, intended to discredit special prosecutor Robert Mueller's probe of the Trump campaign's possible participation in Russia's election interference, or associated obstruction of justice.	7, 9, 11, 12
10-19-17	Bush and Obama finally speak. In a public address, without mentioning Mr. Trump's name, former President Bush (43) blasted Mr. Trump for his conspiracy theories, general untruths, isolationism, bullying, cruelty and bigotry, as well as for his challenges to the post-World War II liberal international order. Hours later, also in a public address, former President Obama blasted the again unnamed Mr. Trump for his "politics of division," his "politics of fear," and his presentation to the world of an America without ideals. Criticisms of a sitting president by former presidents had been rare in modern times, and had been limited to policy disputes. But these criticisms were not limited to policy; they addressed Mr. Trump's nativist, authoritarian outlook and his demagogic method of governing. (Until this point, the two former presidents had refrained from responding to Mr. Trump's repeated attacks on and scapegoating of them.)	6, 7, 9, 11, 14

10-19-17	Pompeo as partisan. At a security conference in Washington, CIA director Mike Pompeo untruthfully said that the country's intelligence agencies had concluded in January that Russia's meddling in the 2016 election had not affected the outcome of that election. To the contrary, the CIA's report expressly stated that it was withholding judgment on that question. As CIA director, Pompeo's mandate was to be above politics; and his partisan outlook and utterances stood to diminish both the credibility of his agency and the rule of law.	17 (7, 12)
10-20-17	Inaccurate claim on U.K. crime. Mr. Trump tweeted that a recent increase in the crime rate in the United Kingdom was attributable to "Radical Islamic terror." The Washington Post determined that U.K. security officials had found no such link between the crime rate and terrorism.	6, 7, 9
10-20-17, 10-24-17	Interviewing U.S. attorney candidates. On October 20, Politico and CNN reported that Mr. Trump had been personally meeting with candidates for the positions of U.S. attorney for Manhattan and Washington D.C. – lead prosecutorial positions that would have jurisdiction over some of his own most extensive business and political dealings. Those news outlets reported that it was highly unusual, if not unprecedented in modern times, for a president to interview such candidates. The risk, or the likelihood, was that Mr. Trump could have been seeking to either befriend or intimidate the candidates (as he had tried unsuccessfully to do with former FBI director James Comey), and in either case to prejudice the administration of justice relative to his own affairs. Mr. Trump was not reported to have interviewed U.S. attorney candidates in any jurisdictions where his personal affairs were not so concentrated. On October 24, The Wall Street Journal reported that Mr. Trump had also personally interviewed a candidate for U.S. attorney in Brooklyn, who would have jurisdiction over a current probe of the family real estate business of Jared Kushner (Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor) relative to that company's having facilitated green cards in exchange for receiving cash from overseas investors. The Journal also reported that the Manhattan and Brooklyn candidates were both law partners of close associates of Mr. Trump – former New York mayor Rudolf Giuliani and one of Mr. Trump's personal lawyers, respectively.	9, 16

10-20-17 +	EPA purges science, again. On October 20, The New York Times reported that the Environmental Protection Agency had deleted dozens of online resources and scores of links designed to enable local governments to combat climate change, apparently as part of its campaign to deny the science and threat of global warming. Approximately 15 mentions of the phrase "climate change" had been removed from the main page of the site intended for local governments. The Times wrote: "The report comes on the heels of a four-year blueprint of priorities the E.P.A. issued that does not include climate change. The 38-page draft strategic plan, issued for public comment this month, does not use the phrase. Under the Obama administration's four-year strategic plan issued in 2014, "Addressing Climate Change and Improving Air Quality" was the E.P.A.'s first of five goals. Climate change was cited 43 times." On October 22, The Times reported that the EPA – abruptly and without explanation – had canceled scheduled addresses by three EPA scientists at a conference in Rhode Island in which they would have spoken about the effects of climate change on the Narragansett Bay estuary. On the following day, The Washington Post reported on the outpouring of objections by critics that had ensued, on the basis of science denial generally and the impact on the local environment particularly.	17 (8)
10-21-17	Legal expense round robin. Multiple news outlets reported that Mr. Trump had committed to pay at least $430,000 in legal expenses for his current and former aides who were being questioned by federal authorities with regard to Russian interference in the November election, including in connection with his own suspected wrongdoing. CSD believes that any recipient of those funds would likely feel beholden to Mr. Trump, and thus disinclined to speak truthfully to investigators. In other words, the payments could be viewed as being akin to bribes. The dollar amount was reportedly similar to the amount that the Republican National Committee had agreed to pay to cover Mr. Trump's own legal defense costs, as had been widely reported in September. Mr. Trump's reelection campaign had paid even larger sums for his legal defense. [Continued below.]	Off the chart

10-21-17	[Continued.] (The RNC was also paying legal defense costs for Mr. Trump's son, Donald Jr., in connection with the investigation of Russian election interference. Taxpayers were also directly paying the White House Counsel's office and the Justice Department to defend Mr. Trump against various charges, including business conflicts of interest.) CSD views the decisions of the RNC and the reelection campaign to pay Mr. Trump's expenses as having fallen within their lawful discretion, as private organizations. And we acknowledge that at least one other recent president had offered to pay his aides' expenses in connection with investigations associated with his behavior. But in the aggregate, we find the events to be astounding: that the money of Republican donors (including small grass roots donors) was effectively being treated as Mr. Trump's personal money, and that the testimonies of Mr. Trump's aides could be purchased by Mr. Trump with that money. As a billionaire, of course Mr. Trump could afford to fund his own legal expenses and bribes. During his election campaign, Mr. Trump had attracted scrutiny for having seemingly bribed the Florida attorney general in 2013 to drop her investigation of criminal fraud allegations against his enterprise, Trump University. On October 5, 2017, The New Yorker had reported that in 2012 one of his attorneys had seemingly bribed Manhattan's district attorney to drop his investigation of criminal fraud allegations against his children Ivanka and Donald Jr. in connection with certain condominium sales. With the new revelation of planning to fund aides' legal fees, the pattern of payments intended to corrupt criminal investigations now appeared not to have abated upon Mr. Trump's ascendancy to the presidency.	Off the chart
10-21-17	Russian news vs. fake news. Mr. Trump tweeted that the recently discovered spending by Russia on Facebook advertisements that had advanced his presidential candidacy was insignificant compared to "the billions of dollars of Fake News on CNN, NBC, ABC &amp; CBS" – thus yet again casting his lot with the duplicitous Russian dictatorship and against America's free and scrupulously honest (if opinionated) mainstream press. [Continued below.]	1, 9, 11, 12

10-21-17	[Continued.] Shortly afterwards, in apparent rage, Mr. Trump tweeted that Facebook had been on the "side" of "Crooked Hillary Clinton" during the campaign – thus maintaining his never-ending vendetta against and scapegoating of her.	1, 9, 11, 12
10-25-17	Favored media outlet. Politico reported that Mr. Trump was scheduled imminently to give his 18th interview since his inauguration to Fox News, the only major television network that favored him editorially. He had given only four interviews in the aggregate to NBC, CBS and ABC, and none to CNN – all of which disfavored him, and which he had dubbed "fake news." Mr. Trump's level of favoritism was unprecedented as among recent presidential administrations, and it veered toward the empowerment of a presidential propaganda outlet.	1, 9
10-25-17 +	Russian sanctions delayed. On October 25, Politico reported that several leading Republican and Democratic senators were expressing concern that the Trump administration, without explanation, had missed the October 1 deadline mandated by Congress for imposing economic sanctions on Russia, and that, in defiance of Congress, it was still offering no guidance as to when those sanctions would be implemented. The following day, Foreign Policy reported that the State Department had reacted to the criticism by beginning to implement the sanctions ... and that the cause of the tardiness was that the department had shut down its sanctions coordinating unit.	9, 12, 13
10-26-17	NASA nominee denies science. A prominent Democratic senator exposed Mr. Trump's nominee for director of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration – Congressman Jim Bridenstine of Oklahoma – as an inveterate denier of climate science. Previously, at least one prominent Republican senator had expressed concern that Bridenstine was not even a scientist (scientists ordinarily head the agency). The new criticism also alleged and documented that Bridenstine was radically anti-Muslim and anti-LGBTQ, and that he had made light of the Access Hollywood video (revealed during the presidential election campaign) in which Mr. Trump had boasted about having sexually assaulted women – a problematic record for the proposed leader of a 19,000-employee federal agency.	17 (6, 8)

10-26-17	GAO will investigate voter fraud panel. The Huffington Post reported that Congress's independent General Accounting Office would investigate the activities of Mr. Trump's Presidential Advisory Commission on Election Integrity. As recorded previously by CSD in this document, the unstated aim of the commission had long appeared to be to bolster voter suppression laws by proving the existence of widespread voter fraud, particularly on the part of minorities, in favor of Hillary Clinton during last November's presidential election – a widely discredited conspiracy theory of Mr. Trump's invention. Among other things, the GAO's investigation would examine whether taxpayer funds were being squandered in pursuit of such a highly partisan and fantastical goal. The GAO's investigation would augment several pending lawsuits that had already been brought against the commission by various states and non-profit oversight organizations on transparency and voter privacy grounds. But the investigation reportedly would not begin for five months, because the GAO lacked sufficient staffing (staffing which presumably could be authorized and funded if the administration wished). HuffPost added: "Democrats on the commission have openly expressed frustration they have been kept in the dark about what the panel is working on."	17 (4, 6, 9)
10-28-17	Americans despair of democracy. A new Washington Post poll revealed that seven in 10 Americans believed that the nation was as divided as it had been during the Vietnam War, and that six in 10 blamed the Trump presidency for making the U.S. political system more dysfunctional. The Post wrote that the poll "reveals a starkly pessimistic view of U.S. politics, widespread distrust of the nation's political leaders and their ability to compromise, and an erosion of pride in the way democracy works in America. ... Seven in 10 Americans say the nation's politics have reached a dangerous low point, ... [and] seven in 10 Americans view the Trump administration as dysfunctional. ... Recent surveys have shown consumer confidence is up this year and stands at the highest levels in the past decade, so it does not appear that economic concerns are driving discontent with the nation's political system. Rather, Trump's presidency appears to be a more critical factor in informing the way people feel about the state of American democracy." [Continued below.]	All of the above

10-28-17	[Continued.] To be sure, the survey respondents blamed multiple factors in addition to Mr. Trump, including "money in politics" and social media. But at a minimum, CSD would advance that if Mr. Trump is not the sole cause of the unhappiness, neither is he leading the nation toward a remedy. The complete Post article describing the highly disturbing poll results is linked at this endnote.	All of the above
10-29-17 +	Twitter attacks on Clinton, Democrats; Manafort indictment. Mr. Trump ramped up his attacks on former opponent Hillary Clinton and the Democratic Party, tweeting in a lengthy broadside that they should be investigated for paying for opposition research in the form of the Steele dossier, selling uranium to Russia, deleting emails as secretary of state, and "fixing" former FBI director James Comey's behavior around various events. Mr. Trump also reiterated that special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation of possible collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia in tampering with the November 2016 election was a "Witch Hunt." He ended his broadside with a command or possibly a plea directed to an indeterminable person or group: "DO SOMETHING!" None of this exhortation, distraction and scapegoating appeared to CSD to adhere to appropriate legal process relative to Mr. Trump's grave allegations. But notably, the tweets came amid reports that Mueller had sent his first charges to a federal grand jury, and that some arrests could be imminent. In fact the following day, Mueller released the news that a federal grand jury had indicted Mr. Trump's original campaign manager Paul Manafort on 12 counts, including money laundering, failing to register as a foreign agent, and conspiring against America, all in connection with Manafort's dealings with pro-Russian Ukrainian interests. Mueller also identified two additional Trump campaign aides who had been indicted, including George Papadopoulos, who (Mueller revealed) had already pleaded guilty. Court papers indicated that Papadopoulos had boasted to Mr. Trump and Attorney General Jeff Sessions of his many contacts with the Russians – meaning that Mr. Trump and Sessions appear to have misled the public and the Senate, respectively, when they had denied knowledge of any such campaign contacts. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 17 (12, 15)

10-29-17 +	[Continued.] Manafort promptly surrendered to the FBI. Mr. Trump promptly resumed, for several days, his tweets that Clinton and the Democratic Party should be investigated instead. On October 30, The Washington Post published an interactive graphic showing some 20 individuals close to Mr. Trump and their respective business and/or campaign connections to some 24 Russian individuals or activities. Those in the Trump camp: Mr. Trump, Paul Manafort (indicted), Michael Flynn (dismissed as national security advisor and under investigation), Carter Page (under investigation), Jeff Sessions (Attorney General and recused from the investigation), Jared Kushner (son-in-law and senior advisor), Donald Trump Jr. (son), Rex Tillerson (Secretary of State), Wilbur Ross (Secretary of Commerce), Roger Stone, J.D. Gordon, Michael Caputo, Rick Gates (indicted), Marc Kasowitz (attorney), Michael Cohen (attorney), Ivanka Trump (daughter), Felix Sater, George Papadopoulos (guilty plea), Erik Prince, Brian Benczkowski. The graphic appears at this endnote. * Not mentioned in the list was Sam Clovis, whom a Post columnist characterized on November 1 as "the Trump campaign official who oversaw George Papadopoulos and encouraged his efforts to meet with Russian officials." In a July 21 entry above, CSD had identified Clovis as a non-scientist whom Mr. Trump had nominated to be the Agriculture Department's chief scientist. On November 2, due to Mueller's probe, Clovis – also a notorious "birther" and a climate science skeptic – withdrew his nomination.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 17 (12, 15)
10-30-17	Kelly fanning flames. Mr. Trump's chief of staff John Kelly told Fox News that the Civil War could have been averted had the North and the South engaged in "compromise." Critics charged that the statement was racist and historically vacuous. The episode shortly followed Kelly's participation in an imbroglio – between Mr. Trump, on the one hand, and the widow of a black soldier killed by terrorists in Niger and her black congresswoman, on the other – in which Kelly had falsely lashed out at the congresswoman (see CSD's entry of October 16 above). [Continued below.]	17 (10)

10-30-17	[Continued.] In the same interview, Kelly said that "men and women of good faith" had fought on both sides of the Civil War. The statement was disturbingly reminiscent of Mr. Trump's repeated canards that "both sides" were equally at fault for the recent violence at a white supremacist march in Charlottesville, Virginia, and that there had been "very fine people" on both sides. CSD is not aware of anything in Kelly's history (unlike Mr. Trump's) that would indicate that he was untruthful, or injudicious, or that he harbored racial animosities. But we saw him now twice in a short period having commented thoughtlessly and with racial insensitivity on matters where he need not have commented at all; he had had minimal experience in the pertinent area of discourse; his principal motivation appeared to have been to cover for Mr. Trump's more pointed offenses; and his factual outlook itself appeared to have been colored by that motivation. In sum, he appeared to have been contaminated.	17 (10)
10-31-17	ACA sabotage succeeding. As open enrollment for 2018 under the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") began, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's efforts to sabotage the program, as chronicled repeatedly above in this document, had borne fruit. Among many other disruptive moves, Mr. Trump had falsely stated that the ACA was "dead." Those efforts had "sown confusion and anxiety among the roughly 10 million Americans with coverage through its insurance marketplaces and millions more who remain uninsured. ... Consumers are unclear whether the marketplaces still exist, whether they still have an obligation to get coverage, whether the mandate exists, whether they can get financial assistance." CSD believes that thousands of people could suffer medically, for the sake of Mr. Trump's egotism and vindictiveness devoid of an interest in substantive solutions. (CSD does not otherwise take a position on the merits of the ACA or alternative health insurance proposals.)	11

10-31-17	Another science purge at EPA. Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt announced that three of the EPA's scientific panels could no longer be staffed by individuals who had received research grants from the EPA, but could be staffed by individuals who had received such grants from business interests. The New York Times wrote: "The move will effectively bar a large number of academic researchers, many of them experts in fields ranging from toxicology to epidemiology, from advising the E.P.A. on scientific matters, since the agency is one of the largest funders of environmental research." Pruitt then promptly dismissed the EPA's top science counselors without notice.	17 (8)
10-31-17+	Manhattan terrorist strike. Shortly after an Uzbek immigrant murdered eight people on a Manhattan street by driving a truck through a bicycle lane on October 31, and before evidence emerged, Mr. Trump, on Twitter, blamed ISIS. Early the next morning, he blamed Democratic Senator Chuck Schumer – for having supported the bi-partisan 1990 immigration lottery statute (signed into law by a Republican president) through which the perpetrator had lawfully gained admission to the U.S.; and he (like Schumer himself in recent years) called for that statute's repeal. That is, Mr. Trump did not refrain from scapegoating, writing divisively, or proposing policy solutions freshly after a mass killing, as he had refrained following the recent massacre in Las Vegas at the hands of a white American gunman. Also on November 1, Mr. Trump said (without citing evidence and contrary to immigration process) that the perpetrator had been responsible for the admission of some 23 other immigrants to the U.S. He speculated (yet again without evidence) that the perpetrator's entire family in the U.S. could constitute security risks. And he said that the U.S. needs a system of "punishment that's far quicker and far greater than the punishment these animals are getting right now. ... We need quick justice, and we need strong justice." That last comment contravened the views of the mainstream press, as embodied in The New York Times' reporting of November 4 that "[c]ivilian courts have been ruthlessly effective in bringing terrorists to justice." But beyond that, it was not clear if Mr. Trump was suggesting the imposition of torture (as he had called for during his election campaign) or the abrogation of due process of law. In any event, he had made no such statements after the Las Vegas massacre. [Continued below.]	2, 6, 9, 10, 11

10-31-17+	[Continued.] Mr. Trump also aggressively urged that the perpetrator be executed – an interference with a pending judicial case such as previous presidents had rarely engaged in. He also urged, then shortly and chaotically retracted, that the perpetrator be detained and tried militarily as an enemy combatant at Guantanamo Bay Naval Base in Cuba – a venue to which no terrorists had been sent in nine years. Ironically, Mr. Trump said that the criminal prosecution system in the U.S. was a "laughingstock" for its weakness – despite (or conceivably because of) his having fended off several personal and family criminal prosecutions through highly questionable political contributions (see CSD's entry of October 21, above); his having flaunted various conflict of interest laws as president; his complacency relative to, and sometimes outright defense of, numerous campaign aides under investigation or indictment by special prosecutor Robert Mueller in connection with Russian interference with last year's election; and his continuing excoriation of Mueller's prosecutorial efforts as a "witch hunt." But perhaps most ironically, as reported by The Washington Post on November 2, prosecutors and other government attorneys had found their cases to have been potentially compromised on multiple occasions by Mr. Trump's public imprecations. Examples included the various travel bans and the Bowe Bergdahl army desertion case (see CSD's November 3 entry on Bergdahl, below). The prosecutors had had at times to formally deny before courts the president's impact on their work, or that the president's words even carried the weight of presidential authority. That is, the more Mr. Trump had agitated for a judicial result, the more he may have compromised that result – now including the trial and punishment of the accused Uzbek terrorist.	2, 6, 9, 10, 11
11-2-17	GSA collusion with Trump hotel. Democratic members of the House Oversight Committee sued the General Services Administration for having refused to share documentation about its lease of the Trump International Hotel property in Washington to Mr. Trump's company, in violation of an oversight statute. Mr. Trump had previously overturned longstanding custom and law by directing that minority committee members could not request data from federal agencies, thus leaving them no recourse but a lawsuit.	9, 15

11-2-17	Fed selection drama. Mr. Trump announced his appointment of Jerome Powell as chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank, after mounting a lengthy and public guessing game comparable to what he had deployed when appointing Neil Gorsuch to the Supreme Court the previous winter. The Wall Street Journal wrote in a news analysis: "He infused the search with suspense and showmanship seldom seen in the normally staid business of picking a central-bank leader. He quizzed a TV personality about his preference, consulted a casino magnate, polled senators about their preferences, and teased the public about the outcome. 'People are anxiously awaiting my decision as to who the next head of the Fed will be,' Mr. Trump said last week in a video posted on Instagram. 'I have somebody very specific in mind. I think everybody will be very impressed.'"	11
11-2-17	Disdain for diplomats. Referring to the many unfilled top positions at the State Department, Mr. Trump told Fox News: "We don't need all the people they want us to get. ... Let me tell you — the one that matters is me. I'm the only one that matters because when it comes to it, that's what the policy is going to be."	11, 13
11-2-17	Quitting transparency treaty for oil. The Interior Department pulled the U.S. from the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, an international accord that compelled oil, gas and mining companies to disclose their payments to governments worldwide. The withdrawal stood to facilitate the concealment of government subsidies, tax avoidance and bribery benefiting such companies, and it distanced the U.S. from anti-corruption leadership.	14
11-2-17	Club members win positions. USA Today reported that at least five members of Mr. Trump's golf clubs had won from him senior political appointments, and that yet others had been promised ambassadorships. The report stated: "Presidents often name campaign donors and close allies to administration posts, particularly prized diplomatic postings ... . But never in modern history has a president awarded government posts to people who pay money to his own companies." USA Today also reported that "dozens of lobbyists and federal contractors are paying members of the clubs Trump has visited the most often, a status that could put them in close contact with the president in exchange for payments that enrich him personally."	15, 16

11-2-17, 11-3-17	Wishing for Justice. Mr. Trump said in a radio interview on November 2 that he would like the Justice Department to investigate various allegations against Hillary Clinton as secretary of state and as a presidential candidate that he had been advancing excitedly in recent weeks – but that the law forbade him from directing the Justice Department in those regards. He said: “But you know the saddest thing is that because I’m the president of the United States, I am not supposed to be involved with the Justice Department. I’m not supposed to be involved with the FBI. I’m not supposed to be doing the kind of things that I would love to be doing. And I’m very frustrated by it.” Mr. Trump made similar public remarks that evening and the next day. Knowingly or not, Mr. Trump was referring to the Judiciary Act of 1789 that had created the office of the attorney general and had given it substantial independence from the president. CSD found highly problematic both Mr. Trump's regret that he could not direct the prosecution of his political enemies and (obversely) his not-so-veiled attempts – unlikely limited to his public statements – to influence the Justice Department to do so anyway. We also found it disturbing, possibly unprecedented (except in his own administration, relative to the Departments of State and Defense), that he was publicly assailing his own subordinates – whether to intimidate them and their respective departments, to eviscerate their constitutional duties, to avoid accountability for their actions, or otherwise. And we found it beyond the pale that he seemed to view the overall justice system as a vehicle that should be at his personal disposal and from which he should be immune: as in countless dictatorships worldwide. The New York Times, in a news analysis, wrote on November 3 that Mr. Trump “has made himself into perhaps the most vocal critic of America’s system of justice ever to occupy the Oval Office. ... The repeated assaults on law enforcement cross lines that presidents have largely observed since the Watergate era, raising questions about the separation of politics and the law.”	9, 10, 11

11-3-17	Page folds. Carter Page, one of the Trump campaign's senior foreign policy advisors, admitted to a Senate panel that he had met with Russian officials in Russia during the campaign, contrary to his repeated prior denials; that numerous Trump officials had known about the trip beforehand (despite their denials); and that he had reported to the campaign after his Russia trip.	17 (7, 12)
11-3-17	Bergdahl sentencing. A military judge sentenced Bowe Bergdahl – an Army deserter for whom a rescue mission in Afghanistan had resulted in the serious wounding of two fellow soldiers – to a fine, a demotion, a dishonorable discharge, but no imprisonment. During the previous year's election campaign, Mr. Trump had termed Bergdahl a "traitor" at least 45 times, and had called for him to be executed gruesomely. At trial, Bergdahl's lawyers had argued for a mild sentence in part because of the prejudice that Mr. Trump had inserted into the case by way of his campaign fulminations; the judge had said he might agree; and the final outcome may have reflected such agreement. Upon the judge's announcement, Mr. Trump tweeted that the sentence represented "a complete and total disgrace to our Country and to our Military." Because the ruling stood to be automatically renewed at several levels of the Army, the tweet again threatened prejudice, and thus opened the possibility of even greater lenience, or even reprieve.	2, 9, 10, 11
11-5-17	Politicking with American troops. Wearing a leather bomber jacket, Mr. Trump gave a campaign style speech to American troops at an air base in Japan. The New York Times reported: "Breaking with tradition for American presidents on foreign soil, Mr. Trump used his speech to promote his domestic record with a distinct political edge, asserting that the economy and military were far better off since he became president. 'We are back home starting to do, I will tell you — and you're reading, and you're seeing — really, really well,' Mr. Trump told the troops, noting that the stock market has surged and unemployment has been low, with almost two million jobs added 'since a very, very special day — it's called Election Day.' 'We've dealt ISIS one brutal defeat after another, and it's about time,' he added, then noting that he had proposed increases in the defense budget. 'That's a lot different than in the past.'"	9, 11

11-5-17, 11-7-17	Ross versus reality. On November 5, The New York Times reported that Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross had failed to disclose in ethics filings his sizable investment in a company that was doing a substantial shipping business with a firm owned by Russian President Vladimir Putin's son-in-law and a Russian oligarch. The company had increased its business with the Russian firm "even as the West sought to punish Russia's energy sector over Mr. Putin's incursions into Ukraine." On November 7, Forbes Magazine reported that Ross had long overstated his net worth by a factor of five, and that he was not in fact a billionaire. The magazine wrote: "It seems clear that Ross lied to us, the latest in an apparent sequence of fibs, exaggerations, omissions, fabrications and whoppers that have been going on with Forbes since 2004. In addition to just padding his ego, Ross' machinations helped bolster his standing in a way that translated into business opportunities. And based on our interviews with ten former employees at Ross' private equity firm, WL Ross &amp; Co., who all confirmed parts of the same story line, his penchant for misleading extended to colleagues and investors, resulting in millions of dollars in fines, tens of millions refunded to backers and numerous lawsuits. Additionally, according to six U.S. senators, Ross failed to initially mention 19 suits in response to a questionnaire during his confirmation process."	17 (7, 15)
11-6-17, 11-9-17	Stock market boast. On November 6, Mr. Trump said: "The reason our stock market is so successful is because of me." American presidents had rarely taken credit for positive stock market performance. They had feared being overly associated with the wealth of investors while other citizens were struggling financially; staking their reputations on strong markets when those markets – inherently fickle – could easily reverse direction; and drawing criticism from market analysts for questionable cause-and-effect claims. Mr. Trump evidenced none of those fears. But on November 9, a Wall Street Journal news analysis did question the causal claim: [Continued below.]	11

11-6-17, 11-9-17	[Continued.] "... Mr. Trump should be giving thanks, not taking credit. The entire global economy is picking up steam, and foreign stocks are outperforming American ones. This suggests the U.S.'s good fortune is due less to Mr. Trump's presence than to a broader, global trend. Years of highly stimulative monetary policies by central banks have finally overcome various post-crisis headwinds. ... The stock market initially soared after Mr. Trump's election as investors justifiably anticipated looser regulation, especially of banks, and lower taxes. Yet with time, the 'Trump trade' has faded."	11
11-7-17	Fear-mongering in Virginia. By way of Twitter and automated Election Day phone calls, Mr. Trump urged Virginia voters to support the Republican gubernatorial candidate on grounds that he would reduce crime, and particularly Hispanic crime. 11-7-17	Pompeo pursues conspiracy input. The Washington Post reported that CIA director Mike Pompeo, at Mr. Trump's direction, had secretly met with a purveyor of a discredited intelligence theory: that the Democratic National Committee had leaked its own emails during last year's presidential campaign, rather than Russia having hacked them, even though the publication of those emails had disgraced the Democratic Party. The Post recounted a list of ways in which Pompeo appeared to have politicized his security role in Mr. Trump's favor since his appointment. 11-8-17	Advertising a golf club while abroad. In an address to the South Korean National Assembly (the country's legislative body), Mr. Trump promoted one of his U.S. golf clubs by name, noting that a South Korean had recently won a title there.	15

11-8-17	Science denial at the White House. As reported by The Washington Post, Kathleen Hartnett White – Mr. Trump's nominee to lead the White House's Council on Environmental Quality (its top environmental position) – testified before the Senate's Environment and Public Works Committee that she was uncertain about the extent to which human activity had contributed to global warming. She acknowledged that she was not a scientist, and was not informed on a multitude of environmental matters. But as reported by The Huffington Post, she "has argued that 'carbon dioxide has none of the attributes of a pollutant,' dismissed it as a 'harmless trace gas' and 'plant food,' and compared Pope Francis' public advocacy for action to curb global warming to the Catholic Church's arrest of Galileo for heresy in 1633. She equated the belief in the overwhelming evidence that man-made greenhouse gas emissions are warming the planet to 'paganism,' and accused United Nations leaders calling for climate action of advocating totalitarian communism. Hartnett White deflected those quotes as taken out of context when raised repeatedly by Democratic senators ... ."	8

The commission, seemingly formed to prove Mr. Trump's meritless claim that millions of fraudulent votes had been cast for his opponent Hillary Clinton and to justify voter suppression laws, had already been sued in half a dozen other actions brought on privacy and transparency grounds, all as described above by CSD in our October 26 entry.	17 (4, 6, 9)

11-9-17, 11-10-17	Gutting State. On November 9, Time Magazine reported that the State Department had lost 60% of its career ambassadors since January, in fulfillment of the stated intention of Mr. Trump and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson to shrink the department. The following day, The New York Times reported: "The State Department will soon offer a $25,000 buyout to diplomats and staff members who quit or take early retirements by April ... . The decision is part of Secretary of State Rex W. Tillerson's continuing effort to cut the ranks of diplomats and Civil Service officers despite bipartisan resistance in Congress. Mr. Tillerson's goal is to reduce a department of nearly 25,000 full-time American employees by 8 percent, which amounts to 1,982 people. To reach that number, he has already frozen hiring, reduced promotions, asked some senior employees to perform clerical duties that are normally relegated to lower-level staff members, refused to fill many ambassadorships and senior leadership jobs, and fired top diplomats from coveted posts while offering low-level assignments in their place. Those efforts have crippled morale worldwide. ... Mr. Tillerson has sharply pared down the number of briefings he receives from senior diplomats as well as the number of people who normally travel with the secretary of state. As a result, Mr. Tillerson has had repeated gaffes in foreign capitals. He is also wildly unpopular in the State Department, and the president is rumored to be eager to replace him."	13
11-9-17	Obsequiousness toward Xi. Visiting with Chinese President Xi Jinping in Beijing, Mr. Trump publicly congratulated him on consolidating his dictatorship, commended him (and faulted prior American administrations) for China having bested the U.S. in international trade, called him a "very special man," hailed their "very good chemistry," and refrained from criticizing his odious human rights record. The goals, still elusive, were to enlist China's support in reducing North Korea's nuclear threat, and possibly also to tame China's international trade abuses. Xi, while extending considerable pomp and hospitality, did not appear to publicly reciprocate the verbal flattery. Rather he said, according to The Wall Street Journal, that friction between China and the U.S. was unavoidable. The content of their private conversations was unknown. [Continued below.]	12

11-9-17	[Continued.] The New York Times wrote this analysis: "It was a remarkable moment in the story of China's rise and America's response to it, with Mr. Trump's performance suggesting a tipping point in great-power politics. By concluding that the United States can better achieve its goals by flattering a Chinese leader than by challenging him, Mr. Trump seemed to signal a reversal of roles: the United States may now need China's help more than the other way around." CSD does not purport to second-guess a presidential administration's diplomatic tactics. And we recognize that in extraordinary cases, as in World War II, the U.S. must partner strategically with unsavory allies. But (without wishing to compare Xi to the mass murderer Josef Stalin) we do not believe that President Franklin Roosevelt congratulated Stalin on his dictatorial powers, called him a "very special man," hailed their "very good chemistry," or blamed prior American presidents for Stalin's successes.	12
11-10-17	Inflated Asian deals. The White House said that Mr. Trump, still on tour in East Asia, had signed $250 billion in new trade and investment deals that would generate manufacturing jobs in the U.S. The New York Times reported that many or most of those deals were either tentative or had already been long in the pipeline, and that some would create jobs overseas rather than in the U.S.	7
11-10-17	Rejection of multilateral trade. Speaking to business leaders in Vietnam, Mr. Trump pointedly doubled-down on his previous rejection of multilateral approaches to and institutions for international trade. He said: "We are not going to let the United States be taken advantage of anymore . .... I am always going to put America first, the same way that I expect all of you in this room to put your countries first. ... For the glory of God, protect your home, defend your home." Meanwhile plans for the enormous, multilateral Trans-Pacific (trade) Partnership were rapidly advancing, without the U.S. and with China in the lead. Notably, Mr. Trump demanded of Asian leaders that they join him in countering the North Korean nuclear threat – a dissonance that had characterized his remarks at the UN General Assembly meeting as well. (See CSD's entry of September 18-19.) [Continued below.]	9, 14

11-10-17	[Continued.] Although CSD does not take a position on specific trade arrangements, we continue to be concerned that Mr. Trump's hyper-nationalistic trade philosophy placed demagoguery above reason, invited conflict and chaos, and diminished America's leadership role in world affairs.	9, 14
11-11-17	Allegiance to Putin. Also while in Vietnam, Mr. Trump met with Russian President Vladimir Putin. Afterwards Mr. Trump told reporters that Putin had assured him that Russia did not interfere in last year's American presidential election, and that he believed Putin's sincerity, or possibly even his denial. Mr. Trump's remarks about Putin's bona fides echoed those he had made at the G-20 summit (see CSD's entry of July 7-9). He added that the American intelligence agencies that had determined that Russia had interfered were led by "political hacks" and liars. He also took the occasion to scapegoat former opponent "Crooked Hillary Clinton" for poor relations with Russia; he said that "the whole thing [the election meddling accusation] was set up by the Democrats," and he called the investigation an "artificial Democratic hit job." Putin, for his part, deploying what has been commonly cited as the deft psychology of the former KGB colonel that he was, said that Mr. Trump had behaved at meetings "with the highest level of good will and correctness," and that "he is a cultured person, and comfortable discussing matters related to work." Also, in a chilling joke reminiscent of a nearly identical one that he had made at the G-20 summit, Putin said of his functionaries who had failed to arrange a longer meeting with Mr. Trump, "Well, they will be punished." (See CSD's entry of July 7-9.) In his continuing skepticism of the American intelligence community's findings about Russia and the election, Mr. Trump appeared to stand virtually if not entirely alone as among senior American political figures and government officials. CSD believes that under ordinary circumstances, Mr. Trump's public repudiation of his own intelligence services in favor of the word of a brutal and irredeemably mendacious foreign dictator would be considered delusional, treasonous or both. Indeed, on the following day, in the wake of the firestorm that his remarks had ignited in the U.S., Mr. Trump attempted to walk them back with reporters. But his original statements stood on the record.	7, 9, 12

11-11-17	Back at it with Kim. After North Korean leader Kim Jong-un again referred to Mr. Trump as a "dotard," Mr. Trump tweeted: "Why would Kim Jong-un insult me by calling me "old," when I would NEVER call him "short and fat?""	10, 11

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 11 – December 17, 2017

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

11-13-17, 11-14-17	Friends with Duterte; Asia summation. Completing his extended East Asian journey, Mr. Trump announced that he had formed a "great relationship" with the Philippines' President Rodrigo Duterte – a strongman and fellow populist who the previous year had called President Obama a "son of a whore" and who had been widely condemned in the West for his continuous extra-judicial killings of thousands in connection with his war against drugs. During the Asian tour, and contrary to the at least occasional practice of previous presidents, Mr. Trump had made no public comment about the extensive human rights abuses within such countries as China, the Philippines, Myanmar, Russia and Vietnam, while instead often praising their leaders. Nor, by accounts in The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times and The Washington Post, did he appear to have advanced U.S. interests in forming new bilateral trade alliances (to replace the multilateral Trans Pacific Partnership that he had rejected) or in taming China's unfair trade practices, its territorial claims in the South China Sea, or North Korea's nuclear threat. Still he claimed that the trip was "tremendously successful," "incredible," and "very epic"; and he summarized it by pointing to the hospitality he had received: "It was a red carpet like nobody, I think, has probably ever seen. That really is a sense of respect ...."	11, 12

11-13-17	Trump Jr. , WikiLeaks, and Pence. The Atlantic reported that Mr. Trump's son, Donald Jr., had had lengthy correspondence during last year's election campaign with WikiLeaks – the radical pro-Russian and anti-American transparency organization – pursuant to which WikiLeaks had offered to assist the Trump campaign in a variety of secretive and unsavory ways. Mr. Trump himself (the president) had publicly praised WikiLeaks and had publicized its trove of leaked Democratic Party emails during that period. The Atlantic added that Trump Jr. had informed the campaign leadership of his WikiLeaks contacts. But Vice President Mike Pence then denied having had knowledge of them. As recited by The Huffington Post, that was at least the fifth time that Pence had denied knowledge of extraordinary matters of which a vice presidential candidate would likely have known – including campaign eminence and former national security advisor Michael Flynn's having had a business relationship with the Turkish government during the campaign; communications between campaign leadership and Russian operatives; post-election discussions about lifting Russian sanctions between Mr. Trump's transition team and Russian officials; and Mr. Trump's having fired then FBI director James Comey at least in part because of Comey's investigation of Russia's election interference. Pence thus appeared to have been delinquent out of the loop, uncommonly clueless, or inveterately dishonest.	17 (7, 12)
11-13-17	Zinke – warrior? cowboy? autocrat? thief? The Huffington Post reported that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had fitted out his office with stuffed game animals and his collection of Navy Seal knives; also that he had broken custom by seeking to redesign the Interior Department's flag – enlarging it so that it would be as big as the American flag – and ordering that it fly above the department, military-style, whenever he was in his office. Zinke's colorful persona had first appeared when, after his appointment to his position in March, he had arrived at the office wearing a cowboy hat and riding a horse. [Continued below.]	17 (8, 9, 11, 15)

11-13-17	[Continued.] As discussed in numerous episodes above in this document, Zinke had earlier this year incurred scrutiny for his questionable spending of public funds on personal and political travel; his extortionate political threat to an Alaskan senator over health care legislation; his denial of environmental science; his threat to fire 30% of the Interior Department's staff for being "not loyal to the flag"; his desire to broadly open national lands for mining and drilling; his questionable selection of national lands in his home state for preservation; his possible connection to the terminated and now investigated Hurricane Maria contractor Whitefish Energy; and his suspect purchase and sale of an expensive RV with campaign funds. HuffPost also reported a stark depletion in Interior Department staff morale under Zinke.	17 (8, 9, 11, 15)
11-14-17	Boundless falsehoods. The Washington Post's Fact-Checker reported that Mr. Trump had made 1628 false or misleading claims since becoming president, or an average of 5.5 per day.	7
11-14-17	Sessions revises, again. For at least the third time, Attorney General Jeff Sessions, when confronted with the admissions of other Trump campaign officials, revised his prior denials about his and other officials' contacts with Russian-linked individuals during the campaign. Specifically, he now acknowledged to the House Judiciary Committee having known of George Papadopoulos's and possibly of Carter Page's contacts. Previously, he had been forced to walk back denials of having met with Russians and of having discussed campaign issues with them. Sessions is the uppermost official within the U.S. government tasked with enforcing the law, including the obligation to tell the truth during judicial and governmental proceedings.	17 (7, 12)
11-15-17 +	Elephant trophies. On November 15, the Interior Department, led by hunting enthusiast Secretary Ryan Zinke, announced to the Safari Club that it would rescind an American ban on importing elephant trophies from Zambia and Zimbabwe, thus sparking a bi-partisan domestic outcry and international condemnation. Among other things, critics feared that the move would encourage poaching of the endangered species, in contravention of the international campaign to ban the trade in ivory. [Continued below.]	17 (9, 10, 11)

11-15-17 +	[Continued.] CSD neither embraces nor opposes legal game hunting. But we could not discern in the new policy any benefit to America's security or prosperity, or any material benefit to the two African countries – only a thoughtless international antagonism. Indeed on November 17, submitting to the outcry, Mr. Trump reversed Zinke's department's decision and said that the ban would remain. We also reiterate our observation of September 19-20 that the Trump administration's interest in Africa to date appeared to have been limited to the direct exploitation of the continent for American gain (or now, pleasure) – not the continent's prosperity, democratization or political stability – perhaps consistent with his America First outlook, or perhaps out of a simple (but alarming) absence of empathy and awareness. On November 23, The Huffington Post extensively documented Zinke's close relationship with the Safari Club and the many actions he had taken in support of the club's interests, if not at its bidding. The article is linked in this endnote.* Zinke also had decorated his office with hunting trophies, as reported above in this document on November 13. Of course many, many of our senior political figures are avid hunters, and politicians must be allowed their hobbies. In addition, politicians routinely support the interests of their campaign contributors. But Zinke's ill-considered elephant gambit appeared to CSD to be of a piece with his numerous, seemingly self-absorbed, ethically questionable practices cited above in this document, as well as his attempted magnification of his personal and political profile as a cabinet-level strongman.	17 (9, 10, 11)
11-16-17	Kushner's non-cooperation. The Senate Judiciary Committee protested to the lawyer for Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner that, while professing cooperation with the committee, Kushner had withheld from it numerous troubling documents indicating his awareness of Russian election interference and related matters.	17 (7, 12)

11-16-17 +	Sexual assaults. On November 16, Mr. Trump mocked Democratic Senator Al Franken for his admission of having sexually assaulted a woman in 2006. At the same time he declined to condemn or to withdraw his endorsement of Republican senatorial candidate Roy Moore – twice dismissed from his seat on Alabama's supreme court on ethical grounds – after six women had now credibly alleged that he had assaulted them. Mr. Trump previously had condemned Democrats Bill Clinton, Harvey Weinstein and Anthony Weiner for their improper sexual behavior, and had defended Fox News Republicans Bill O'Reilly and Roger Ailes for theirs. He meanwhile did not now comment upon the allegations as to his own sexual assaults that had been brought by over a dozen women during his election campaign, or of his having boasted on an Access Hollywood tape about routinely assaulting women. On November 21, Mr. Trump effectively re-endorsed Moore, by urging voters to reject Moore's Democratic opponent and pronouncing Moore's denials of the women's allegations to be credible. On November 26, Mr. Trump issued a tweet even more fervently urging a vote against the Democrat. Mr. Trump (at least at that moment) thus stood virtually alone among mainstream Republicans outside of Moore's home state in supporting a man whose character and extreme political behaviors had been rejected by the rest. On December 4 and 8 he expressly endorsed Moore. On December 10 he recorded a robo-call message for Moore's campaign. And on December 8 he held a rally in nearby Pensacola, Florida, largely for the benefit of Moore's campaign (see CSD's December 8 entry, below). Boorishness and hypocrisy as such do not offend our democratic principles. But CSD regards Mr. Trump's casual and selective condemnation of Franken and other Democrats as amounting to a belittling of crimes against women; a scapegoating of perpetrators who were politically antagonistic toward him; and a partisan divisiveness fueled by sexual sensationalism without regard to the suffering of the victims – all comparable to Mr. Trump's tirades against Muslim mass murderers but not white American ones (see CSD's entry of October 31, above). [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 11
-------------------	--	--------------------

11-16-17 +	[Continued.] We also believe that Mr. Trump's apparent view that Moore's (or seemingly anyone's) mere denial of sexual assault is tantamount to an acquittal further indicates Mr. Trump's dispositions that women accusers are not credible and that truth consists of whatever someone (in Mr. Trump's favor) says it is – both of which dispositions we consider to lie within a legal, moral and empirical abyss. In that regard we, like the majority of American voters (according to The Washington Post's report of November 16), also believe that Mr. Trump's earlier denials as to his own sexual assaults were likely false. The Post's stunning November 22 compilation of the many graphic and corroborated sexual allegations against Mr. Trump appears at the link in this endnote.	6, 7, 9, 11
11-17-17	ACA black-out succeeds. Kaiser Health News reported that nearly a third of Americans eligible to enroll in the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") in the then current (and radically shortened) open enrollment period had not heard of the enrollment opportunity. As CSD had previously reported on multiple occasions, Mr. Trump had engineered the gutting of mechanisms for promoting enrollments in an effort to cripple the ACA without having established an alternative program. CSD does not favor or disfavor the ACA. But we believe that the survey demonstrated yet again the success of Mr. Trump's strategy, deployed out of vindictiveness toward President Obama (and other Democrats) and for political gain, and that that strategy will likely be deleterious for many Americans' health.	11
11-17-17, 11-24-17	Palestinian embassy closure – then not. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson abruptly threatened to close the Palestinian embassy in Washington, due to a Palestinian call for the International Criminal Court to investigate certain Israeli activities. According to the Washington Post, diplomatic chaos ensued, including within the U.S. government, and a week later Tillerson reversed.	17 (10, 13)
11-20-17	Trump-branded merchandise. NPR reported that Mr. Trump's company, The Trump Organization, had recently launched TrumpStore.com, which sold articles bearing Mr. Trump's name. Unlike the similar DonaldJTrump.com, by and for his re-election campaign, here the profits from his presidential celebrity would flow entirely to himself.	15

11-20-17, 11-22-17, 11-26-17	Legally disputed orders. As reported by The Washington Post, on November 20, a federal judge in San Francisco issued an injunction to permanently block Mr. Trump’s executive order to deny funding to cities that refused to cooperate with federal immigration officials, after finding the order unconstitutional. As reported by The New York Times, on November 22, a federal judge in Maryland blocked the Trump administration’s ban on transgender troops, ruling that it was “capricious, arbitrary, and unqualified” and that it likely violated equal protection provisions of the Constitution. The ruling mirrored that of the previous month by a federal court in the District of Columbia. On November 26, an official of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau – a federal watchdog agency tasked with monitoring Wall Street – sued the Trump administration to protect the independence of that agency. Specifically, its director, prior to retiring some days earlier, had named his deputy to be his acting successor; but Mr. Trump had countered by naming as acting director the more business-friendly Mick Mulvaney, director of the Office of Management and the Budget (who would retain his current position as well). The lawsuit, brought by the deputy director on statutory grounds, sought to confirm her appointment over that of Mulvaney, pending the appointment of a permanent replacement by Congress. The above episodes followed the many federal court rulings that had limited or struck down Mr. Trump's series of travel bans, some of which cases were still in litigation at the time of this entry. In fairness, previous presidents too have had some of their actions challenged in court, sometimes successfully. But to CSD's knowledge, Mr. Trump's efforts in testing the edges of constitutional and statutory permissibility – and the resulting push-back by plaintiffs and the courts – have been unusually early and routine in comparison to those of recent administrations.	6, 9

11-22-17	Conway versus the Hatch Act. Senior presidential advisor Kellyanne Conway appeared to violate the Hatch Act by making a televised statement condemning the policy positions of sex-scandal-tainted Alabama senatorial candidate Roy Moore's Democratic opponent. It is illegal for most federal employees to participate in partisan political campaigns. This was Conway's second known ethical violation in 2017, the first having been an endorsement of presidential daughter Ivanka Trump's commercial fashion line. While aides to previous presidents had also occasionally violated the Hatch Act, Conway's improprieties and her imperviousness to administrative disciplinary action began to appear habitual.	17 (9)
11-22-17, 11-24-17	Sports fury. On November 22, Mr. Trump continued his public feud with LaVar Ball, an audacious television sports personality for whose son, a college basketball player, Mr. Trump had recently procured a release from shoplifting charges in China. Ball had dubiously and indecorously challenged Mr. Trump's claim to having procured the release. Now Mr. Trump tweeted the following: " It wasn't the White House, it wasn't the State Department, it wasn't father LaVar's so-called people on the ground in China that got his son out of a long term prison sentence - IT WAS ME. Too bad! LaVar is just a poor man's version of Don King, but without the hair. Just think.. ...LaVar, you could have spent the next 5 to 10 years during Thanksgiving with your son in China, but no NBA contract to support you. But remember LaVar, shoplifting is NOT a little thing. It's a really big deal, especially in China. Ungrateful fool!" Both Ball and King were African American. Mr. Trump had most recently condemned an African American football player for not standing for the national anthem on November 20, and had condemned other prominent African American sports figures for criticizing him throughout the fall. CSD believes that Mr. Trump's seemingly instinctive stoking of racial antagonisms, as manifested in the tweet, and particularly his lashing out against African American sports figures, was matched only by the tweet's puerility; and that overall the tweet set a new mark for disgracing the office of the American presidency at home and across the world. [Continued below.]	6, 10, 11

11-22-17, 11-24-17	[Continued.] On November 24, Mr. Trump resumed his angry tweets against African American football players who had protested racism on-field, and against the National Football League which had declined to discipline them.	6, 10, 11
11-23-17	Giving thanks, for one's self. By teleconference on Thanksgiving Day, Mr. Trump boasted to overseas troops about the strong economy and his forthcoming tax cuts, his build-up of military personnel and ordnance, and how his hands-off approach to military command was newly generating victories on the battlefield – all the while repeatedly disparaging former President Barack Obama as commander-in-chief. It was Mr. Trump's most recent episode of denouncing his predecessor, ignoring prior battlefield progress, and politicizing a military event. He also praised the Coast Guard for having improved its "brand" by way of its recent disaster relief operations. Mr. Trump delivered his remarks from his Florida resort Mar-A-Lago and then visited one of his nearby golf clubs. As reported by multiple news outlets, those visits marked the 100th day since his inauguration on which he had spent time at a Trump-owned property. He had done so on nearly a third of the days of his presidency – each time implicitly promoting his own "brand," this after having viciously criticized President Obama for his vacation days while in office. In a separate Thanksgiving Day tweet, Mr. Trump boasted of many other achievements, including by way of the breathtakingly inaccurate statement – as belied by every imaginable poll – that "the enthusiasm in this country has never been higher."	7, 9, 11, 15

11-25-17	Disembowelment of State Department. The New York Times updated reports of Secretary of State Rex Tillerson's determined efforts to eviscerate his department. Those senior officials who had been forced out and not replaced included the director of security (tasked with preventing future Bengazi-type tragedies at American embassies) and 100 senior foreign service officers. Squeeze-outs included "most of the top African-American and Latino diplomats, as well as many women, difficult losses in a department that has long struggled with diversity. ... The number of those with the department's top two ranks of career ambassador and career minister — equivalent to four- and three-star generals — will have been cut in half by Dec. 1, from 39 to 19. And of the 431 minister-counselors, who have two-star-equivalent ranks, 369 remain and another 14 have indicated that they will leave soon — an 18 percent drop. ... "The political appointees who normally join the department after a change in administration have not made up for those departures. So far, just 10 of the top 44 political positions in the department have been filled, and for most of the vacancies, Mr. Tillerson has not nominated anyone." Vacancies included ambassadors to South Korea, Turkey, Jordan, Egypt, Qatar and South Africa, and assistant secretaries of state for Africa, East Asia, the Near East, and the Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration. Meanwhile, many remaining diplomats had had their work redirected to the mind-numbing chore of ferreting out any possibly not-yet-disclosed emails of former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, the target of Mr. Trump's continuing, vicious, and seemingly obsessive scapegoating.	17 (9, 13)
11-25-17, 11-27-17, 11-28-17	Fake news trophy. On September 25, Mr. Trump tweeted: "@FoxNews is MUCH more important in the United States than CNN, but outside of the U.S., CNN International is still a major source of (Fake) news, and they represent our Nation to the WORLD very poorly. The outside world does not see the truth from them!" Two days later, continuing his explicit and exclusive favoritism toward a media outlet such as was without presidential precedent, he tweeted: "We should have a contest as to which of the Networks, plus CNN and not including Fox, is the most dishonest, corrupt and/or distorted in its political coverage of your favorite President (me). They are all bad. Winner to receive the FAKE NEWS TROPHY!" [Continued below.]	1, 9, 11

11-25-17, 11-27-17, 11-28-17	[Continued.] CNN and several of its reporters responded to the effect that their job was to tell the truth, not to disseminate a regime's propaganda; that Mr. Trump's attitude toward the American press stood to jeopardize the free press and the lives of reporters worldwide; and that for America to have lost its claim to the inviolability of its own press freedom "turns the world on its head." In fact on November 28, both The Guardian and CNN reported that some Libyan media and diplomats had questioned a recent, highly praised report by CNN International – exposing the buying and selling of sub-Saharan African migrants in Libyan slave markets – on grounds that Mr. Trump had deemed CNN International unreliable.	1, 9, 11
11-26-17, 11-27-17, 11-28-17	Russia sanctions still nowhere. On at least three successive days, Republican Senator Lindsay Graham objected to Mr. Trump – in defiance of Congressional legislation – having still failed to implement the sanctions against Russia for interfering with the American presidential election that Congress had enacted and that Mr. Trump had reluctantly signed months prior.	9, 12
11-27-17 +	Torching "Pocahontas" at Navajo ceremony. In honoring World War II Navajo Indian code-talkers at the White House, Mr. Trump took a gratuitous swipe at his frequent scapegoat, Massachusetts Senator Elizabeth Warren, ridiculing her (as he had often done previously) as "Pocahantas" for her unsubstantiated claim to having Native American lineage. The National Congress of American Indians, the Navajo Nation and the Alliance of Colonial Era Tribes afterwards all expressed their displeasure at Mr. Trump's callous denigration of their own heritage for political purposes, according to the Huffington Post. Not incidentally, Mr. Trump performed the ceremony and made the statement in front of a portrait of former President Andrew Jackson that he had installed in the White House. President Jackson is notorious for having signed the Indian Removal Act that led to the deaths of thousands of Indians on the Trail of Tears in the early 19th century.	6, 9, 11

11-28-17	Sticking to falsehoods. The New York Times reported that in recent days and months Mr. Trump, in private conversations, was not only denying that the voice in the notorious Access Hollywood tapes (in which he had boasted about sexually assaulting women) was his, but was still maintaining that he had lost the popular vote in his election campaign against Hillary Clinton only due to widespread voter fraud, and was resuming his allegation that President Obama had not been born in the U.S.	6, 7, 11
11-29-17 +	The Sick Puppy. At a rally in Missouri on November 29, Mr. Trump derided North Korean leader Kim Jong-un as a "sick puppy," and – as he had done before – as "Lil' Rocket Man," shortly after Kim had launched a ballistic missile believed to be capable of reaching anyplace in the United States. The following day, he tweeted a criticism of China for having failed to control "Little Rocket Man."	10, 11, 13
11-29-17	Tax myths. At the same Missouri rally, Mr. Trump repeated his previous falsehood that he would lose money under his proposed tax legislation. Time Magazine detailed how he and his family would likely instead save vast sums. (More would be known if Mr. Trump, like all previous presidents in recent times, would release his tax returns.)	7
11-29-17	Murder insinuation. Without any factual basis, Mr. Trump insinuated in a tweet that Joe Scarborough, an MSNBC journalist critical of him, had participated in the murder of a young female aide in 2001 when Scarborough was a member of Congress.	1, 11
11-29-17	Conflicts Galore. A number of Mr. Trump's pending nominees were under scrutiny for possible business conflicts of interest, including the following: Alex Azar – Nominated to be Health and Human Services Secretary, had just spent a decade helping to lead a major pharmaceutical company in its price increases, and now would be tasked with reducing drug prices for the country. Barry Myers – Nominated to head the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, was the CEO of the private forecasting company AccuWeather, and had spent years seeking to cause the government agency to privatize the information that the National Weather Service produces. [Continued below.]	17 (15)

11-29-17	[Continued.] Dana Baicco – Nominated to serve on the Consumer Product Safety Commission, had made a legal career of defending companies against consumer safety lawsuits. Steven Engel – Actually appointed in August as a top Justice Department lawyer – directly after having represented a Canadian payday lender in defending against a consumer fraud charge brought by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau – was now in the news for having orchestrated the takeover of the CFPB by the pro-business director of the Office of Budget and Management Mike Mulvaney (see CSD's entry of November 20-26, above). On October 29, The Daily Beast had written that it had "examined 341 nominations the president has made to Senate-confirmed administration positions. Of those, more than half (179) have some notable conflict of interest, according to a comprehensive review of public records. One hundred and five nominees worked in the industries that they were being tasked with regulating; 63 lobbied for, were lawyers for, or otherwise represented industry members that they were being tasked with regulating; and 11 received payments or campaign donations from members of the industry that they were being tasked with regulating. ... 'The depth of the ties of the industry is pervasive,' said Craig Holman, government affairs lobbyist for the group Public Citizen. 'With the Trump administration we are seeing complete regulatory capture and quite frankly it will be the defining feature of this administration.'" CSD values business inputs to the regulatory process, and we are aware that knowledgeable regulators commonly are and should be drawn from the ranks of those experienced with the pertinent regulatory topics. We and others, however, draw a distinction between expertise and outright conflicts, and particularly now when the latter appear to have pervaded the current administration.	17 (15)
11-29-17, 11-30-17	Bashing Muslims and Brits at once. On November 29, Mr. Trump re-tweeted three incendiary and partially inaccurate videos of Muslims committing violent and anti-Christian acts that had been initially posted by Britain First, a controversial, fringe, Islamophobic and sometimes criminal political party in the U.K. [Continued below.]	6, 10, 11, 13

11-29-17, 11-30-17	[Continued.] According to The Huffington Post, the party had been denounced by every major Christian denomination in the U.K. The Washington Post wrote: "British leaders across the political spectrum said they were amazed and appalled by Trump's tweets endorsing a group that usually draws just a few dozen supporters to its rallies. Some said Trump was trying to legitimize the far right in Britain, while others were so flabbergasted that they wondered whether he was perhaps either naive or ignorant. ... Britain First leaders were ecstatic about the recognition from the U.S. president." Leading American neo-Nazi and former Ku Klux Klan chief David Duke was also ecstatic, crying. "Thank God for Trump! That's why we love him!" But the British prime minister's office promptly said that the party was "prejudiced" and "hateful," and that what Mr. Trump had done was "wrong." Mr. Trump, in response, tweeted to the leader of America's pre-eminent ally: "Theresa @theresamay, don't focus on me, focus on the destructive Radical Islamic Terrorism that is taking place within the United Kingdom. We are doing just fine!" The following day the Prime Minister herself reiterated her criticism; her ambassador to Washington formally complained; and members of multiple British political parties publicly questioned whether Mr. Trump's planned 2018 state visit to the U.K. should proceed. Also on November 30, CNN reported that the State Department had cautioned the White House that his initial anti-Muslim tweet could result in violence against American embassies abroad.	6, 10, 11, 13
11-30-17	Obstructing Senate investigations. The New York Times reported: "President Trump over the summer repeatedly urged senior Senate Republicans ... to end the [Senate Intelligence Committee's] investigation into Russia's interference in the 2016 election ... . Mr. Trump's requests were a highly unusual intervention from a president into a legislative inquiry involving his family and close aides." Those pressured were Intelligence Committee chair Richard Burr, committee member Roy Blunt, and Majority Leader Mitch McConnell.	9, 12

11-30-17, 12-1-17	Slamming a migrant's acquittal. On November 30, after an undocumented migrant was acquitted by a California jury in a high-profile murder case, Mr. Trump tweeted: "A disgraceful verdict in the Kate Steinle case! No wonder the people of our Country are so angry with Illegal Immigration." The following day he added: "The Kate Steinle killer came back and back over the weakly protected Obama border, always committing crimes and being violent, and yet this info was not used in court. His exoneration is a complete travesty of justice. BUILD THE WALL! The jury was not told the killer of Kate was a 7 time felon. The Schumer/Pelosi Democrats are so weak on Crime that they will pay a big price in the 2018 and 2020 Elections." Since his election, Mr. Trump had not commented (nor, under the Constitution, should he have commented) on the outcome of a murder trial. But in this case, the defendant was Mexican; and Mr. Trump had already made much of the accused during his election campaign, as the embodiment of violent criminals who had entered the U.S. illegally from the south. In the new tweets, scapegoats abounded: President Obama, the Democratic Party, the rules of criminal evidence, the mandate of citizen jurors, and seemingly some larger group of Mexicans and migrants.	2, 6, 9, 11
12-1-17	Flynn pleads guilty. Mr. Trump's former national security advisor Michael Flynn pleaded guilty of lying to the FBI in connection with his dealings with Russian officials prior to Mr. Trump's inauguration.	17 (9, 12)
12-2-17	Another treaty dumped. UN Ambassador Nikki Haley announced that the U.S. had withdrawn from the Global Pact on Migration (the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants), which had sought world-wide cooperation to protect the safety and rights of refugees and migrants in the midst of the current refugee crisis. Even though the mechanisms of treaty compliance would be voluntary, Haley claimed that participation in the compact violated U.S. sovereignty. She made no mention of either the humanitarian or security perils associated with the refugee crisis, or of the benefits to be had by collaborating internationally toward solutions.	17 (14)

12-3-17	Trashing the FBI. Commenting on the recently revealed removal of an FBI agent from the team of the special prosecutor investigating Russian election interference, Mr. Trump tweeted: "After years of Comey, with the phony and dishonest Clinton investigation (and more), running the FBI, its reputation is in Tatters - worst in History!" The agent had been removed by special prosecutor Robert Mueller the previous summer because of the agent's texts to a colleague favoring Hillary Clinton over Mr. Trump, which texts had threatened a potential appearance of bias within the special prosecutor's office. To CSD's knowledge, the FBI's reputation for probity and effectiveness across its many areas of operation, while imperfect, is currently quite strong. We believe that Mr. Trump's categorical disparagement of the agency was sparked only by its investigation of his associates and (likely) himself – the typical cry of a guilty man. We also believe that that disparagement represented an attack on the rule of law as an ideal; an incitement for Americans to ignore law enforcement authorities (selectively – Mr. Trump had claimed to be a "law and order" president, particularly when the accused were people of color); an encouragement for criminals and for America's enemies within and without; a probable blow to the morale of many FBI professionals; and an embarrassment for our country internationally. Finally, we believe that the episode should have been grounds to commend the special prosecutor, not attack the FBI.	9, 11, 12
12-3-17	Suing the press. The same morning, Mr. Trump tweeted: "People who lost money when the Stock Market went down 350 points based on the False and Dishonest reporting of Brian Ross of @ABC News (he has been suspended), should consider hiring a lawyer and suing ABC for the damages this bad reporting has caused - many millions of dollars!" Mr. Trump was referring to an ABC reporter who had erroneously reported that Mr. Trump had directed then campaign aide Michael Flynn to collaborate with Russians. [Continued below.]	protec

12-3-17	[Continued.] CSD believes that the suggested cause of action against a news network would amount to a legal novelty, which would open the press to all manner of suits for damages based on plaintiffs' purported reliance on all manner of reported news; and thus – if seriously pursued – would result in both harassment of the press and abuse of the judicial system. We also believe that if the general citizenry were to be as litigious as Mr. Trump had been historically in his business affairs, the court system would quickly collapse from the sheer weight of its caseloads. And we believe that Mr. Trump should have commended ABC for its disciplinary action, rather than calling for citizens to sue the network.
12-3-17, 12-4-17	Getting imperial. John Dowd, one of Mr. Trump's attorneys, reportedly admitted to The Washington Post on December 3 that Mr. Trump likely had known that his campaign aide and later national security advisor Michael Flynn had lied to the FBI about his extra-legal dealings with foreign governments – weeks before Mr. Trump was effectively forced to fire Flynn for lying to Vice President Mike Pence on that subject. But on December 4 Dowd also said that under the Constitution the president is not capable of obstructing justice; that as the county's chief law enforcement officer, his deeds are equivalent to justice. Former President Richard Nixon had made the same argument before he was forced to resign in 1974. Since then, the view that the president is above the law has been widely regarded as dictatorial.	9, 12, 17 (9)
12-4-17, 12-8-17	Another Indian (and constitutional) insult. On December 4, Mr. Trump directed that Bears Ears National Monument in Utah be shrunk in size by 85%, for the benefit of oil, gas, mineral and ranching interests. The monument was known to contain thousands of Native American archaeological sites, and was regarded by surviving tribes members as sacred ground; but, according to The Huffington Post, Mr. Trump had not consulted with the tribes prior to issuing his declaration. The Bears Ears Inter-Tribal Coalition, which had spent decades advocating for and then achieving the monument's protected status, announced plans to contest the decision in court, on grounds that the Antiquities Act permits only Congress, not the president, to weaken protections for national monuments. [Continued below.]	6, 9, 17 (7, 15, 16)

12-4-17, 12-8-17	[Continued below.] Mr. Trump also announced the dramatic shrinking of Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, which action was similarly problematic. On December 8, The Washington Post reported that the announcement had followed a concerted lobbying campaign by a uranium mining company having a nearby processing plant and a desire to grow its mining fields. The lead lobbyist, Andrew Wheeler, was subsequently nominated to become the Environmental Protection Agency’s deputy secretary, and that nomination was now awaiting Senate approval. Wheeler's team had met directly with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's top aides. Zinke had previously denied that the goal of the shrinking was to benefit mining interests, stating that it was strictly for the benefit of Utah's citizens. Native tribes consider uranium mining near their lands to be highly hazardous.	6, 9, 17 (7, 15, 16)
12-4-17	Ukraine: under the bus. NPR reported that during the 2016 election campaign Mr. Trump may have personally directed that the Republican Party platform soften its call for assisting Ukraine in resisting Russian aggression.	12
12-6-17 +	Jerusalem. Mr. Trump abruptly overturned decades of American policy by declaring that the U.S. would henceforth consider Jerusalem – a religiously and ethnically divided city – to be Israel's capital, and would proceed to move the American embassy there from Tel Aviv. The move inflamed one of the most sensitive issues in the long-standing Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and one that previous presidents of both parties had avoided. Predictably, Arab street protests erupted, and many of America's allies expressed dismay. No other country had located its embassy in Jerusalem. While some American commentators supported the move, few appeared to believe that it would advance whatever then remained of the Middle East peace process. Notably, the declaration came without the administration having articulated its goals or progress relative to that process, and without having negotiated any quid-pro-quo that previous administrations had assumed would underlie such a development. [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13

12-6-17 +	[Continued.] CSD does not take a position on the status of Jerusalem or the means for achieving Middle East peace. But we were appalled that Mr. Trump's decision appeared to have flown in the face of the advice of his secretary of state and his secretary of defense; and to have been driven by impulse, by an urge to disrupt for the sake of gaining attention, by a wish to out-do previous presidents (he stated as much in his announcement), and/or by a politically motivated desire to fulfill a campaign promise regardless of consequence for world stability or American interests.	10, 11, 13
12-7-17	Zinke takes – even more. Politico reported that it had uncovered two expensive helicopter flights that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had taken during the summer at taxpayer expense in order to accommodate his personal political schedule. As described above in this document, Zinke was already under investigation for similar acts of grandiosity, self-indulgence and possible graft.	17 (9, 15)
12-8-17	Using and abusing women. At a campaign rally in Pensacola in support of the candidacy of Alabama Senatorial candidate and accused sexual abuser Roy Moore, Mr. Trump mocked one of Moore's accusers and questioned her credibility. (To that date Moore had accumulated at least nine accusers; according to The Atlantic, reporting the previous day, Mr. Trump himself had accumulated 19.) At the same rally, Mr. Trump sought to inflame the crowd by yet again condemning the killing of a young white woman by an undocumented Mexican migrant several years prior. (The woman's family had previously objected to Mr. Trump's exploitation of her death for political purposes.) He also said, without explanation, that Chicago is more dangerous than Afghanistan – presumably referring to violence within the city's minority neighborhoods. Also at the rally, Mr. Trump continued his persistent demonization of former rival Hillary Clinton, evoking (as usual) the crowd's feverish chants of "Lock her up!" [Continued below.]	6, 9

12-8-17	[Continued.] CSD found a coherence among those rhetorical moments: a primal, proprietary, patriarchal and incendiary vilification of the "other" on grounds of his preying on one's "own" women (many a demagogue has done this); and a vilification of women who had taken to accusing the patriarchy (many a predator has done this). We are not anthropologists; only citizens seeking a little decency.	6, 9
12-8-17, 12-9-17	The whole truth. Further at the Pensacola rally, Mr. Trump attacked "fake news" CNN and ABC for a pair of recent reporting errors, committed by them in good faith, relative to their investigations of Russia's interference in the 2016 election. The following day, he condemned a Washington Post reporter for under-reporting crowd size at the rally. All three news outlets had quickly corrected their errors, and at least two had apologized. But Mr. Trump himself had never admitted, let alone apologized for, his 1600 + casual or intentional misstatements since becoming president. (See CSD's entry of November 14, above.) Indeed, the Washington Post found numerous falsehoods, exaggerations and empty boasts in his overall remarks at the Pensacola rally: taking personal credit for the strong economy and stock market; stating that the FBI and our system of governance generally were "rigged" against him; and maintaining inaccurately that black homeownership was at a record high, that Hispanic voters were favoring him, that opinion polls generally were false, that the coal industry was quickly rebounding in West Virginia, and that American companies had stopped moving jobs overseas.	1, 7
12-8-17	Enemies of America. And finally, at the Pensacola rally, Mr. Trump said this: “There are powerful forces in Washington trying to sabotage our movement. These are bad people, these are very, very bad and evil people. . . . But you know what, we’re stopping them. You’re seeing that right now.” The clear implication was that anyone who opposed Mr. Trump should be excised from American governance. That seemed to potentially include Democrats, Republican dissidents, and special prosecutor Robert Mueller.	9

12-12-17	Trashing Gillibrand. Responding to a call by New York Senator Kirsten Gillibrand for Mr. Trump to resign because of the allegations of sexual assault that previously had been brought against him by many women, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Lightweight Senator Kirsten Gillibrand, a total flunky for Chuck Schumer and someone who would come to my office "begging" for campaign contributions not so long ago (and would do anything for them), is now in the ring fighting against Trump. ..." The parenthetical words were widely taken by news media – with outrage – to imply that Gillibrand was willing to sexually prostitute herself for money. The USA Today editorial board wrote: "A president who'd all but call a senator a whore is unfit to clean toilets in Obama's presidential library or to shine George W. Bush's shoes."	6, 9, 11
12-12-17	An infection. The New York Times reported that authoritarian regimes all over the world had come to parrot Mr. Trump's derision of honest press reports as "fake news": Syrian President and war criminal Bashar al-Assad, Venezuelan President and demagogue Nicolas Maduro, a ranking security official in genocidal Myanmar, a spokeswoman for the inveterately dishonest Russian foreign ministry, and political leaders in China, Turkey, Libya, Poland, Hungary, Thailand, Somalia and elsewhere.	1
12-12-17	Korea chaos. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson resumed publicly advocating for direct talks between the U.S. and North Korea – for which advocacy Mr. Trump had publicly chastised him in October. The White House promptly announced its disagreement with Tillerson, as before. By all media accounts, Tillerson remained on the verge of dismissal or resignation. Media commentators noted that Tillerson had by now been utterly discredited overseas as the voice of American foreign policy. CSD does not have a view as to whether the U.S. should negotiate directly with North Korea – only that the U.S. needs a secretary of state who is empowered and supported by the president, a president who is willing to respect the advice of his secretary of state, and a considered and coherent foreign policy.	13

12-14-17	Consequences of Russia denial. In an extended investigatory piece based on interviews with 50 former and current national security officials, The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's denial of Russian interference with the 2016 election was unprecedented, and its consequences significant. The Post wrote: "Nearly a year into his presidency, Trump continues to reject the evidence that Russia waged an assault on a pillar of American democracy and supported his run for the White House. The result is without obvious parallel in U.S. history, a situation in which the personal insecurities of the president — and his refusal to accept what even many in his administration regard as objective reality — have impaired the government's response to a national security threat. The repercussions radiate across the government. "Rather than search for ways to deter Kremlin attacks or safeguard U.S. elections, Trump has waged his own campaign to discredit the case that Russia poses any threat and he has resisted or attempted to roll back efforts to hold Moscow to account. His administration has moved to undo at least some of the sanctions the previous administration imposed on Russia for its election interference, exploring the return of two Russian compounds in the United States that President Barack Obama had seized — the measure that had most galled Moscow. Months later, when Congress moved to impose additional penalties on Moscow, Trump opposed the measures fiercely. "Trump has never convened a Cabinet-level meeting on Russian interference or what to do about it, administration officials said. Although the issue has been discussed at lower levels at the National Security Council, one former high-ranking Trump administration official said there is an unspoken understanding within the NSC that to raise the matter is to acknowledge its validity, which the president would see as an affront. ... His position has alienated close American allies and often undercut members of his Cabinet — all against the backdrop of a criminal probe into possible ties between the Trump campaign and the Kremlin." The complete article appears at the link in this endnote.	7, 12

12-14-17	Most admired leaders. In the same article, the Washington Post reported that, according to one of Mr. Trump's advisors, the world leaders whom he respects most are Chinese President Xi Jinping, Turkish President Recep Erdogan, and Russian President Vladimir Putin – all of them authoritarian, anti-democratic figures.	9
12-12-17, 12-15-17, 12-16-17	Discrediting the investigation. On December 15, Mr. Trump yet again denounced the FBI's investigation of Russian links to his election campaign, calling it "disgraceful" and (as before) a "hoax" – even though by that point two campaign leaders had been indicted and two had pleaded guilty to charges. He also called the FBI's failure to prosecute his perennial scapegoat Hillary Clinton relative to her improper handling of emails a "scam" and a "rigged system." The following day a lawyer for Mr. Trump's transition team, Kory Langhofer, wrote a letter to several Congressional oversight committees alleging that the investigation had unlawfully obtained a large number of transition team emails from the General Services Administration. Other experts refuted that that action had been unlawful. Those episodes followed the call of one of Mr. Trump's personal attorneys, Jay Sekulow, on December 12, for the appointment of a special counsel to investigate alleged corruption at the FBI and the Justice Department. The Washington Post had previously reported that Attorney General Jeff Sessions had contemplated such an appointment in November. Whether in the aggregate the efforts to discredit the investigation were concerted or coincidental, and whether they presaged an even more serious challenge to the rule of law as embodied in the investigation, was not known to CSD.	7, 9, 11, 12, 17 (9)

12-16-17	Invoking the president's name. The New York Times reported (as it and other media outlets had done before) on a statistically significant rise in hate crimes during Mr. Trump's election campaign and under his presidency. It also reported that many of the verbal and physical attacks by white people against brown people were punctuated by references to Mr. Trump himself and often by cries of his name, including taunts at high school sporting events: for example, "Trump! Trump!" to disparage or intimidate minority players. Several presidential historians said that the latter phenomenon was unprecedented, and that it would have been unthinkable for any previous president's name to have been invoked in connection with the perpetration of racial attacks.	17 (6)

Addendum 12 – January 19, 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

12-15-17 to 12-19-17	Monitoring words at EPA and CDC. On December 15, The Washington Post reported that the Environmental Protection Agency had hired a Republican opposition research company to perform news clipping services and potentially additional media services for the agency. On December 17, The New York Times reported that an affiliate of the company had filed some 40 Freedom of Information Act requests to track the emails of EPA employees who had criticized the agency's current leadership. On December 19, The Post reported that the EPA had canceled the contract, due to the outcry it had generated. Also on December 15, The Post reported that the Centers for Disease Control had instructed staff to avoid using the words “vulnerable,” “entitlement,” “diversity,” “fetus,” “transgender,” “evidence-based” and “science-based” in its budget proposals. The following day, The Times wrote that the move may have had less to do with policy bias, censorship and science denial than with an effort to mitigate harsh political scrutiny of the proposals; and that it might not impact the substance or the language of the agency's actual work product. Nevertheless, on December 18, a columnist for The Post reported that the agency had lifted the ban on the specified words, due to the outcry it had generated. [Continued below.]	17 (8, 9)
---------------------------------	--	------------------

12-15-17 to 12-19-17	[Continued.] Together, the two episodes reflected, at a minimum, the agencies' seeming insensitivity to the appearance of mixing ideology with fact; and at worst, outright censorship and intimidation.	17 (8, 9)
12-18-17	Defining, and speechifying, national security risks. For the first time in 20 years, Mr. Trump eliminated climate change from the National Security Strategy Report – a presidential administration's annual description of threats to America's national security. The Huffington Post wrote: "The move dispenses with decades of Pentagon policy. It also contradicts Defense Secretary James Mattis, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Joseph Dunford and four other former top military commanders who were quoted in the defense bill Trump signed last week saying things such as, 'Climate change is a national security issue.'" That bill warned that climate change could create more failed states and terrorism, and could submerge many American military installations. The report was also silent on the risks to national security posed generally by authoritarian, anti-democratic governance overseas – risks that previous administrations had routinely cited. It was silent about Russia's meddling in American elections, past and future. It was silent about reducing stockpiles of nuclear weapons, and nearly silent about human rights. Mr. Trump announced the report in a campaign-style speech in which he promoted his nationalist and protectionist agenda. No previous president had made a public presentation on the occasion of the report's release. Oddly, in the speech, Mr. Trump praised his collaborative and friendly relationships with and hopes for Russia and China, while the report itself (prepared by staff) starkly branded those countries as threats to the U.S. – a disjunction that commentators noted. CSD suspects that the deviation from script may have been a principal reason for Mr. Trump's unusual decision to present the report orally; that is, to orally appease America's enemies, and to have his policies both ways. In addition, wrote The New York Times, Mr. Trump's characterizations of pertinent domestic and international security phenomena were riddled with exaggerations.	7, 8, 12, 13

12-18-17	Train derailment politicking. Shortly after a train derailed in Washington State, killing several people and injuring many more, Mr. Trump tweeted: "The train accident that just occurred in DuPont, WA shows more than ever why our soon to be submitted infrastructure plan must be approved quickly. Seven trillion dollars spent in the Middle East while our roads, bridges, tunnels, railways (and more) crumble! Not for long!" The Seattle Times and other news outlets expressed dismay that his initial reaction was one of politics rather than condolence. Shortly after the Pulse nightclub massacre in Orlando, Florida in June, Mr. Trump had tweeted: "Appreciate the congrats for being right on radical Islamic terrorism, I don't want congrats, I want toughness &amp; vigilance. We must be smart!" Shortly after a terrorist ran over eight people in Manhattan in November, Mr. Trump had tweeted: "The terrorist came into our country through what is called the 'Diversity Visa Lottery Program,' a Chuck Schumer beauty. I want merit based." CNN commented on the insensitivity pervading that pattern of putting politics before sympathy. To our own themes, CSD sees in Mr. Trump's frequent empathic shortfalls a colloquial (if not clinical) narcissism – that is, a fundamental marker of his viscerally authoritarian instinct.	11
12-18-17, 12-19-17	Choosing judges. On December 18, one of Mr. Trump's nominees for a (life-time) appointment as a federal court judge withdrew himself from consideration, following a catastrophic appearance before the Senate Judiciary Committee in which he was widely viewed as having appeared unqualified. That was the third judicial nominee to have withdrawn in recent days, the others having stood down after their radical views on social issues had been publicized. Mr. Trump had nominated the three (and dozens of other candidates) for their ideological views – as many other recent presidents had done. But unlike other presidents, in at least these three instances he appeared to have done so with blatant disregard for judicial competence. Indeed, four of his nominees had been deemed "incompetent" by the American Bar Association. [Continued below.]	2

12-18-17, 12-19-17	[Continued.] On December 19, The Washington Post reported that after nominating Neil Gorsuch as Supreme Court justice the previous winter but before Gorsuch was sworn in, Mr. Trump had voiced outrage that Gorsuch, in conversations with members of Congress, had privately criticized Mr. Trump's public disparagement of certain sitting federal judges. Mr. Trump was reportedly enraged that Gorsuch was not sufficiently loyal to him – notwithstanding the core constitutional precept that Supreme Court justices owe no such loyalty to the president. CSD believes that what all of these episodes had in common was a disdain for judges as independent and capable arbiters of the law. Mr. Trump's vision instead appeared to be that they were simply "his," to do his political bidding, regardless of the sense of it.	2
12-20-17	New Year's with (and for) the president. Politico reported that fees to attend the annual New Year's party at Mr. Trump's Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida increased in 2017 by a factor of 15% to 30%, which Politico presumed was attributable to the guests' hopes that they would meet Mr. Trump there. That is, in an embarrassingly picayune but very real way, Mr. Trump appeared yet again to be profiting directly from his presidential celebrity.	15
12-20-17, 12-21-17	Threatening the world's nations; personalizing diplomacy. Also according to Politico, on December 20, Mr. Trump hinted to his Cabinet that he might cut foreign aid to any country that would vote in an upcoming U.N. General Assembly session, on a symbolic and non-binding basis, to nullify his recent recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital – an announcement of his that had recently been condemned by countless other nations, including many American allies. He also praised his ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, for writing this to all UN member states: “As you consider your vote, I want you to know that the President and U.S. take this vote personally. The President will be watching this vote carefully and has requested I report back on those countries who voted against us. We will take note of each and every vote on this issue.” The previous day she had said even more pointedly that she would be "taking names." [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13, 17 (13)

12-20-17, 12-21-17	[Continued.] To CSD's mind, apart from the substance of dealing with the status of Jerusalem (with respect to which CSD does not take a position), both the original announcement and the subsequent threats seemed to amount to the U.S. gratuitously sticking its thumb in the world's eye. We also felt that the mere suggestion that Mr. Trump would compromise America's national and global interests to satisfy his ego, his peevishness and his impulse to vengeance – as well as his apparent belief that he was free to make that suggestion – were nothing less than shocking. The next day, only nine small countries, many dependent on U.S. aid, supported the U.S in the actual General Assembly vote. Many other countries volubly objected to American "extortion." Yet others commented that the U.S. had foolishly made Jerusalem an issue about the U.S. rather than Israel. Haley complained, without irony, that the U.S. had been "disrespected." But she did not let up. She said: "The United States will remember this day in which it was singled out in this assembly for the very act of exercising our right as a sovereign nation. We will remember it when, once again, we are called up to make the world's largest contribution to the U.N., and we will remember it when many countries come calling on us to pay even more and to use our influence for their benefit."	10, 11, 13, 17 (13)
12-20-17	Tax Praise. At a televised Cabinet meeting celebrating Congressional passage of a major tax bill, Vice President Mike Pence delivered a florid and lengthy encomium to Mr. Trump, praising his many accomplishments as president, as the cameras fixed on Mr. Trump's stern and commanding countenance. Housing Secretary Ben Carson also contributed, as The Washington Post wrote: "As Trump and his Cabinet bowed their heads, Carson thanked God for 'a president and for Cabinet members who are courageous, who are willing to face the winds of controversy in order to provide a better future for those who come behind us.'" Shortly afterwards, at a Congressional rally outside the White House, House Speaker Paul Ryan praised Mr. Trump for his "exquisite presidential leadership." Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell praised him for a "year of extraordinary accomplishment" and said, categorically, "Thank you, Mr. President, for all that you're doing." [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11

12-20-17	[Continued.] "We would not be standing here if it were not for you," said House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy. "But for your leadership we would not be here today," said Rep. Kevin Brady, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. Sen. Orrin Hatch, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, was particularly loquacious. He said, "Mr. President, I have to say that you're living up to everything I thought you would." He added "that this is one of the great privileges of my life, to stand here on the White House lawn with the president of the United States, who I love and appreciate so much ..... All I can say is that God loves this country. ... We're going to ... make this the greatest presidency that we've seen not only in a generation, but maybe ever." Not to be outdone, Pence chimed in again: "I truly do believe, Mr. President, that this will be remembered as a pivotal moment in the life of our nation, a day when the Congress answered your call and made history." To CSD's knowledge, the American public had never been confronted with such demonstrations of official obeisance – at least not since Mr. Trump's televised Cabinet meeting of June 12 (described above in this document) when member after member of the Cabinet had thanked and praised him in front of the cameras. The two Cabinet episodes in particular evoked widespread ridicule, at home and abroad.	9, 10, 11
12-20-17	Tax Profit. The Washington Post reiterated its earlier conclusion that the tax bill, now passed in its final form, would almost certainly benefit Mr. Trump and his family handsomely – by lowering the top marginal tax rate, lowering the tax rate on pass-through business earnings, and expanding the estate tax exemption. The bill "will ensure a financial windfall for the president and his family in a way that is virtually unprecedented in American political history, experts said." Other commentators noted yet additional benefits in the bill for Mr. Trump and his family: the retention of uncapped interest deductions for (only) real estate and hotel businesses; and the radical lowering of the corporate tax rate (which would benefit Mr. Trump's passive investments in corporate securities). [Continued below.]	7, 15

12-20-17	[Continued.] CSD assumes that previous presidents who had presided over tax cuts had personally benefited as well. Uniquely in recent history, however, Mr. Trump had refused to release his tax returns and to speak honestly about the bill's impact on himself.	7, 15
12-20-17	Tax and the ACA. At the same Cabinet meeting described above, Mr. Trump said that the tax bill included the elimination of the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"). But the statement was false: only the "individual mandate" – the requirement that individuals either subscribe or pay a penalty – was eliminated; most other provisions survived; and even the mandate would survive for two more tax years. The statement appeared intended, yet again, to sabotage the insurance program before a replacement plan had been enacted, which was especially notable in that Mr. Trump's previous efforts at sabotage appeared to have largely failed: nearly as many people had signed up for the program in late 2017 as in the previous year, despite Mr. Trump's concerted attempts to prevent that (as recited repeatedly above in this document). The sabotage efforts, unaccompanied by a productive plan, appeared to CSD and some others to have been driven by Mr. Trump's hatred for President Obama and by his determination to honor his campaign promises, rather than by any desire or effort to solve America's health care problems. In any event, due at least in part to Mr. Trump's disruptive measures, insurance premiums were expected to rise dramatically for many Americans, such that many would forego coverage.	7, 9, 11
12-21-17, 12-22-17	Purging environmental knowledge. On December 21, The Washington Post wrote: "Climate-related documents continue to be erased from [the Department of] Interior's website at a rapid clip: This month, the links to 92 national parks' climate action plans disappeared ...." On December 22, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's efforts at radically downsizing the Environmental Protection Agency had so far resulted in squeezing out over 200 scientists (among a total of 700 departing employees).	8

12-22-17	"Challenge coins" ablaze. The Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump's use of challenge coins – collectible metal coins bearing his name, minted by the Republican National Committee, and distributed ad hoc by Mr. Trump to police, military personnel and supporters – deviated from the challenge coins that had been distributed by previous presidents. Unlike his predecessors' somber, bronze-like coins, Mr. Trump's were gaudy (red, white, blue and gold); they replaced "E pluribus unum" with his legally trademarked campaign slogan "Make America Great Again"; they were much larger; and they bore the president's name not one time but three. Some ethics experts objected, on grounds of politicizing the military.	9, 11
12-22-17	Raising the rich. At a holiday dinner for wealthy friends at his Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida, Mr. Trump told them, "You all just got a lot richer." He was referring to the sweeping income tax bill that he had signed hours earlier and that was widely recognized – regardless of its merits and demerits – as delivering the vast bulk of its direct tax relief to those with high incomes. CSD did not and does not take a position on the tax bill, except to the extent that Mr. Trump had been dishonest about its contents and its impact upon his own financial position. But we found his dinner comment, both in substance and in tone, to reflect not only a betrayal of the populist rhetoric and promises that had brought him to the White House, but a stark reminder of what had long appeared to us as his profound unawareness of or indifference to the radically accelerating income inequality that was besetting the U.S. and the world – a condition that was generally regarded by economists and social thinkers as perilous for both democracy and stability. That is to say, his absorption with wealth (his and his friends') seemed to obviate any concern for potentially disastrous domestic and global ferment.	11, 16
12-23-17	Racial fervor underlying anti-immigration measures. In a lengthy news analysis, The New York Times described the extent of Mr. Trump's many anti-immigration measures; the recklessness, haste, dysfunction, fervor and often fury with which he had sought to deploy those measures; and his long-standing, visceral fear of and disgust for people from poor countries. The complete article appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>1</sup>	6, 10, 11, 13

12-23-17, 12-24-17	The Christmas spirit: peace, love, humility and truth. The morning of Christmas Eve, Mr. Trump tweeted: "The Fake News refuses to talk about how Big and how Strong our BASE is. They show Fake Polls just like they report Fake News. Despite only negative reporting, we are doing well - nobody is going to beat us. MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN!" Later that day he re-tweeted an image of a blood-spattered CNN logo on the sole of his shoe, which was reminiscent of his two re-tweets during the summer of people doing violence to the CNN logo. The previous day, he had tweeted: "The Stock Market is setting record after record and unemployment is at a 17 year low. So many things accomplished by the Trump Administration, perhaps more than any other President in first year. Sadly, will never be reported correctly by the Fake News Media!" In addition to disparaging the press, the tweet was exaggerating or misleading: most of the stock market gains and the drop in unemployment had occurred under President Obama; and by all credible accounts other presidents had accomplished more during their first year in office.	1, 7, 11
12-25-17	Visiting one's properties. The Wall Street Journal reported that, since taking office, Mr. Trump – who was then enjoying the Christmas holiday at Mar-a-Lago, his Florida resort – had spent nearly one-third of his days at such properties that he owns and that paying customers also patronized, and that those properties appeared to have profited from his visits. He had traveled to those properties at considerable government expense, and had often played golf there – thus defying campaign promises to the contrary, and thus outdoing President Obama's travel and recreation, which Mr. Trump had often castigated.	7, 11, 15

12-23-17, 12-24-17, 12-26-17	Death by a thousand tweets. Amplifying his long-standing attacks on deputy FBI director Andrew McCabe for having failed to indict Mr. Trump's rival Hillary Clinton relative to her email abuses as Secretary of State, on December 23 Mr. Trump tweeted (here referring to campaign donations that McCabe's politician wife had received and that McCabe had duly reported): "How can FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe, the man in charge, along with leakin' James Comey, of the Phony Hillary Clinton investigation (including her 33,000 illegally deleted emails) be given $700,000 for wife's campaign by Clinton Puppets during investigation." In a single tweet, Mr. Trump thus had managed to disparage three of his regular scapegoats at once – publicly hounding them rather than discreetly pursuing traditional remedies for their perceived wrongdoings. He followed that tweet with a similar one the next day. In fact because McCabe was a civil servant, Mr. Trump was not able to fire him. But reportedly McCabe had yielded to Mr. Trump's onslaught, and he was preparing to resign. McCabe's resignation, however, seemingly wasn't the prize. Mainstream commentators widely saw Mr. Trump's principal motive in battering McCabe as discrediting and distracting from special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation of the Trump campaign's ties to Russia. To that point, on December 26, Mr. Trump tweeted this – referring to a scandalous "dossier" on his Russian ties that had been assembled by a British opposition researcher during the campaign and that so far had been only partially substantiated to the public: "Dossier is bogus. Clinton Campaign, DNC funded Dossier. FBI CANNOT (after all of this time) VERIFY CLAIMS IN DOSSIER OF RUSSIA/TRUMP COLLUSION. FBI TAINTED. And they used this Crooked Hillary pile of garbage as the basis for going after the Trump Campaign!"	9, 11, 12
12-27-17	Ivanka's brand on parade. The Wall Street Journal reported that Mr. Trump's daughter and senior advisor Ivanka Trump had usually been wearing – and thereby advertising – her own clothing brand during public and media appearances, thereby trading on her official celebrity. Her business, from which she had declined to divest, "is valued at more than $50 million in [her] federal [ethics] filing, which reports it paid her an income of between $1 million and $5 million between March 9 through May."	17 (15)

12-28-17	Breakneck staff departures. The Wall Street Journal reported that first-year staff departures from Mr. Trump's administration were the highest on record, at 34%. A Brookings Institution analyst attributed Mr. Trump's turn-over to an inexperienced president hiring inexperienced aides. Another view: "It's hard [for disaffected aides] getting beyond that inner circle because of his lack of trust with people he doesn't know," said one high-level GOP ally who worked on the presidential transition. 'But it's also been the case that he makes snap decisions and winds up with people who are not great fits.'" The Brookings analyst called the net result "destabilizing," and said that, based on statistical presidential precedent, the turnover would likely be even more dramatic in Mr. Trump's second year in office.	10, 11
12-28-17	Cold weather. Mr. Trump suggested by way of Twitter that the unusually cold weather being experienced in the U.S. for the current and coming weeks belied scientific proof of global warming. He had launched similar tweets during cold weather in 2015.	8
12-28-17	Foreign policy re-cap. In a lengthy year-end review in its news section, The New York Times summarized Mr. Trump's radical changes to America's foreign policy. The article began: "Nearly a year into his presidency, Mr. Trump remains an erratic, idiosyncratic leader on the global stage, an insurgent who attacks allies the United States has nurtured since World War II and who can seem more at home with America's adversaries. His Twitter posts, delivered without warning or consultation, often make a mockery of his administration's policies and subvert the messages his emissaries are trying to deliver abroad. "Mr. Trump has pulled out of trade and climate change agreements and denounced the 2015 nuclear deal with Iran. He has broken with decades of American policy in the Middle East by recognizing Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. And he has taunted Kim Jong-un of North Korea as 'short and fat,' fanning fears of war on the peninsula. ]Continued below.]	10, 11, 12, 13, 14

12-28-17	[Continued.] "He has assiduously cultivated President Xi Jinping of China and avoided criticizing President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia — leaders of the two countries that his own national security strategy calls the greatest geopolitical threats to America. "Above all, Mr. Trump has transformed the world's view of the United States from a reliable anchor of the liberal, rules-based international order into something more inward-looking and unpredictable. That is a seminal change from the role the country has played for 70 years, under presidents from both parties, and it has lasting implications for how other countries chart their futures." The article continued by noting Mr. Trump's apparent susceptibility to flattery by foreign autocrats, and it ended by depicting his apparent unawareness of and disinterest in the "rules-based international order" noted above. 12-28-17, 12-29-17	Florida talk. In an impromptu interview with the New York Times at his Trump International Golf Club in West Palm Beach, Florida, Mr. Trump made the constitutionally suspect claim that he had "absolute right to do what I want to do with the Justice Department," apparently claiming the authority to control (or dismiss) the special prosecutor's investigation of his campaign's possible involvement with Russian election interference and of other matters. Mr. Trump also boasted about the grand reception he had received in China by President Xi Jinping ("treated me better than anybody's ever been treated in the history of China"), his campaign victory, his accomplishments as president, and his having won the club's annual golf tournament several times. He blamed Democrats for obstructionism and the media for concocting the Russia election-meddling "hoax." Notably, The Times wrote, Mr. Trump "disputed reports that suggested he does not have a detailed understanding of legislation, saying, 'I know the details of taxes better than anybody. Better than the greatest C.P.A. I know the details of health care better than most, better than most.' Later, he added that he knows more about 'the big bills' debated in the Congress 'than any president that's ever been in office.'" [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11, 12

12-28-17, 12-29-17	[Continued. The following day, The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's White House minders were flummoxed that he had granted the interview. They felt that in general, while visiting his resort properties, a dangerous indiscipline reigned over what he would read, what he would tweet, and with whom he would meet. By way of example, The Post's review of the 30-minute interview's transcript revealed that Mr. Trump had made some 24 false or misleading statements, for an average of one every 75 seconds. The Times' own review counted at least 10.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12
12-29-17	Skewing the census. ProPublica reported that the Justice Department was pressing the Commerce Department to include in the 2020 census – for the first time since the early 19th century – a question about the respondents' citizenship. Census experts warned that the question would likely not have been adequately tested in time for the census; that the defective results would likely depress minority response rates; and that the resulting undercount could skew large swathes of social and economic programs, as well as Congressional apportionment. When the new question had first been proposed earlier in the year, it had been opposed by survey research scientists on the grounds of accuracy – to the disadvantage of communities needing public and private services and of businesses needing sound market data. See the links at this endnote.<sup>3</sup> The inclusion of the new question had originally been advanced by anti-immigration activists. CSD fears not only the compromise of scientific polling and the dysfunctional social and business outcomes that could result, but an abuse of household data for political and law enforcement purposes – uses that are anathema to the spirit and purpose of the census.	17 (6, 8, 9)
12-31-17	A changed presidency. The New York Times, in its news section, posted a lengthy and provocative analysis of how Mr. Trump had changed the American presidency since his election. The analysis posed commentary by his defenders as well as his critics, and both fears that the changes could be permanent and hopes that they would not be. CSD finds the following excerpts to be cautionary but objective, supported by evidence within, and consistent with our own themes. (The complete article, which we commend, appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>4</sup>) [Continued below.]	All of the above

12-31-17	[Continued.] "Mr. Trump is the 45th president of the United States, but he has spent much of his first year in office defying the conventions and norms established by the previous 44, and transforming the presidency in ways that were once unimaginable. ... "He has kept a business on the side; attacked the F.B.I., C.I.A. and other institutions he oversees; threatened to use his power against rivals; and waged war against members of his own party and even his own cabinet. He fired the man investigating his campaign and has not ruled out firing the one who took over. He has appealed to base instincts on race, religion and gender as no president has in generations. And he has rattled the nuclear saber more bombastically than it has been since the days of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. ... "The presidency has served as a vehicle for Mr. Trump to construct and promote his own narrative, one with crackling verve but riddled with inaccuracies, distortions and outright lies, according to fact checkers. Rather than a force for unity or a calming voice in turbulent times, the presidency now is another weapon in a permanent campaign of divisiveness. Democrats and many establishment Republicans worry that Mr. Trump has squandered the moral authority of the office. ... "[H]e has bristled at the restraints imposed on the presidency as few have, lashing out at judges, lawmakers, investigators and journalists who anger him and expressing frustration that he is not supposed to use the F.B.I. as he sees fit. His sense of government is not based on coalition building or a balancing act between equal branches. It is one where he deems what is necessary and the system should fall in line. ... "Mr. Trump essentially calls [presidential decorum] fake, making no effort to pretend to be above it all, except to boast that he is stronger, richer, smarter and more successful than anyone else. To him, the presidency is about winning, not governing." And as for the press, "... since Watergate, no president has waged the sort of sustained public campaign against what Mr. Trump has called the 'enemy of the American people.'"	All of the above

1-1-18, 1-2-18	Another nuclear slam. In a New Year's Day speech, North Korean leader Kim Jong-un said, "The entire United States is within range of our nuclear weapons, and a nuclear button is always on my desk," The next morning, back in Washington from his Mar-a-Lago holiday, Mr. Trump boasted by Twitter that "Rocket man's" soldiers were fleeing North Korea. And that evening he tweeted: "North Korean Leader Kim Jong Un just stated that the 'Nuclear Button is on his desk at all times.' Will someone from his depleted and food starved regime please inform him that I too have a Nuclear Button, but it is a much bigger &amp; more powerful one than his, and my Button works!" The New York Times wrote as news analysis: "The president's tone ... generated a mix of scorn and alarm among lawmakers, diplomats and national security experts who called it juvenile and frightening for a president handling a foreign policy challenge with world-wrecking consequences. The language was reminiscent of Mr. Trump's boast during the 2016 presidential campaign that his hands, and by extension his genitals, were in fact big enough."	11, 13
1-2-18	Times tirade. Mr. Trump began the first working day of the new year by tweeting a lengthy attack on "The Failing New York Times" for not treating him "fairly."	1
1-2-18	Jail for political enemies. Scapegoating at least three named enemies, Mr. Trump also tweeted that day: "Crooked Hillary Clinton's top aid, Huma Abedin, has been accused of disregarding basic security protocols. She put Classified Passwords into the hands of foreign agents. ... Jail! Deep State Justice Dept must finally act? Also on Comey &amp; others." (Abedin had wrongfully sent passwords to a personal email account, but no foreign agents are known to have accessed them.)	7, 9

1-2-18	The remains of the (Twitter) day. On the same day as his North Korea, New York Times and jail-for-enemies tweets, Mr. Trump took to Twitter to threaten Pakistan and the Palestinian Authority with de-funding (with or without having had input from his advisors); encourage the anti-government street protests in Iran (same); blame Democrats for not resolving the DACA child immigrant crisis (although Democrats had been the children's chief proponents); take credit for the recent safety record of American commercial airlines (which had resulted from Obama administration policies); and promise to shortly announce "the most dishonest and corrupt media awards of the year." The many tweets were remarkable for both their capriciousness and their breadth, prompting a CNN commentator to ask: "What would we say if the leader of Germany or China or Brazil posted tweets like Trump's? We'd say: That person is not well."	1, 7, 11, 13
1-2-18	WaPo fact-check tally. The Washington Post updated its tally of Mr. Trump's false and misleading statements since taking office to 1950, for an average of 5.6 per day. Details and patterns appear at the link at this endnote.<sup>5</sup>	7
1-3-18 +	Floating fear. Attorney General Jeff Sessions said that the U.S. was experiencing "rising violent crime [and] a staggering increase in homicides." Two days later, The Washington Post's editorial board disputed that characterization statistically. The Post's column can be found at the link at this endnote.<sup>6</sup> In a news story that made no reference to Sessions and that seemed coincidental, The Wall Street Journal wrote: "Murders fell in America's largest cities in 2017, and the two biggest—New York and Los Angeles—are at or near the lowest levels of deadly violence in their modern histories. In New York, murders dropped to 290, a number not seen since 1951, police say, and killings in Los Angeles were at 281, staying below 300 for the eighth consecutive year, according to data from the police and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Even Chicago, where ragged violence has shocked the nation, saw murders fall to 650 in 2017, down from 771 in 2016, police say. Seven of the 10 largest U.S. cities saw declines in 2017, according to police; one saw an increase, and two didn't have final data."	17 (7, 9)

1-4-18 +	The voter fraud that never dies. On January 4, the day after having suddenly disbanded his notorious Commission on Election Integrity, Mr. Trump tweeted a call for states to adopt enhanced voter ID laws as a means to prevent electoral fraud and "rigged" elections. Critics and some courts had long viewed at least some of those laws as having been intended to suppress voting on the part of the young, the old and the poor – disproportionately constituencies not aligned with the laws' authors or with Mr. Trump. Mr. Trump had formed the commission to prove that Hillary Clinton had stolen the popular vote victory from him in November 2016 by way of electoral fraud, and (seemingly) to promote voter suppression laws. But the commission had quickly fallen into ridicule, disdain and dysfunction due to its anti-democratic intentions, the resistance of and lawsuits brought by oversight organizations and state governments (both red and blue), and the chairman's secretive methods of operating – all as described above in this document. The commission never found any evidence of voter fraud. But pushing on, in addition to Mr. Trump's new call for state voter ID laws, the White House announced that the Department of Homeland Security (the immigration police) would be taking up the investigation of voter fraud. Also, the committee chair said that the committee would pass its findings to DHS, and that he would be advising the agency. But even in its death, there were indications of the committee's dishonesty: DHS shortly announced that it had no plans to take up the matter. And on January 9 The Huffington Post reported that the White House information officer who had custody of the committee's data swore in a court declaration that the committee had no findings to pass on to DHS, that it would not pass any data to DHS, and that DHS would not take up the commission's work. HuffPost also reported that DHS had denied that the committee chairman would be advising the agency. Mr. Trump meanwhile had not yet supported any initiatives to prevent foreign interference in American elections – interference that had occurred to his benefit in the 2016 election – or any other significant measures to actually promote "election integrity."	4, 6, 17 (7)

1-4-18	More servility. Politico reported that at the outset of a White House meeting on immigration, one politician after another publicly thanked Mr. Trump for his glorious leadership: Vice President Mike Pence, Sen. James Lankford, Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen, and even sometimes Trump critic Sen. Lindsey Graham. Politico called it "a scene that is becoming something of a tradition in the Trump White House." CSD has reported above in this document on previous episodes of public gestures of servility toward Mr. Trump at official meetings. To our knowledge, no other modern president had commanded such fawning, or had even wanted it. Most, we expect, would have been puzzled, embarrassed and horrified.	9, 11
1-4-18	Obstruction. The New York Times reported that, in the administration's early months, the White House had sought to prevent Attorney General Jeff Sessions from recusing himself from the Russian election-meddling investigation; that the Justice Department had attempted to dig up dirt on then FBI Director James Comey for use in a public smear campaign prior to his dismissal; and that other specified efforts suggestive of an intent to throttle the investigation had occurred. The Times also reported that Mr. Trump had told aides at the time that he expected the attorney general to protect him above all (that is, above protecting the country or the law). "Where's my Roy Cohn?" he once asked, referring to his one-time personal lawyer – who, as counsel for Senator Joseph McCarthy's anti-communist inquisition in the early 1950s, had been one of the most reviled figures in Washington, and who had eventually died in disgrace.	9
1-4-18 +	Fire and Fury. On January 4, Mr. Trump's attorneys formally demanded that Henry Holt &amp; Co., the publisher of a new book about the Trump presidency titled Fire and Fury, immediately cease its distribution. The book, based on some 200 interviews with White House staffers, was highly critical of Mr. Trump's intellectual, moral and emotional competence. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 11

1-4-18 +	[Continued.] To be sure, the author was controversial, and according to some unreliable. But he had been granted free access to the White House to write the book, which the administration had apparently thought would treat the administration favorably. And his reporting largely confirmed general senior level perceptions of Mr. Trump that had already been widely publicized. In any event, a presidential attempt to block a book's publication was unprecedented in recent history. It was most closely approximated by Richard Nixon's attempt to block the publication of the Pentagon Papers – on national security (not personal) grounds. Mr. Trump's lawyers sent related demands to the book's author and to the author's leading source, former White House senior advisor Stephen Bannon. Mr. Trump also released a written statement disparaging Bannon's performance, motives, character and personal traits, which The New York Times wrote was "unlike any issued by a president against a top adviser in modern times." The following day, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Well, now that collusion with Russia is proving to be a total hoax and the only collusion is with Hillary Clinton and the FBI/Russia, the Fake News Media (Mainstream) and this phony new book are hitting out at every new front imaginable." The notion that the book was not in itself newsworthy was false; the book was newsworthy. Mr. Trump's continuing allegations that the investigation of his campaign's possible collusion with the Russian government had been "proven" to be a "hoax" was also false; the investigation was continuing. But in all, within a short period, Mr. Trump had managed to blame the author, the publisher, Bannon, Clinton, the FBI and the mainstream press for the book and/or for the attention it was receiving – rather than accepting blame for the disturbing portrait of himself that had emerged. Later that evening he tweeted: "Sloppy Steve Bannon ... cried when he got fired and begged for his job. Now Sloppy Steve has been dumped like a dog by almost everyone. Too bad!" [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 11
-----------------	--	--------------------

1-4-18 +	[Continued.] On January 6, seemingly in response both to the book and to independent discussions in Washington of Mr. Trump's mental competence, Mr. Trump tweeted again that the criticisms were intended to distract from recent "proof" that the Russia investigation was a "hoax" perpetrated by Democrats. He then wrote: [T]hroughout my life, my two greatest assets have been mental stability and being, like, really smart. ... I went from VERY successful businessman, to top T.V. Star, to President of the United States (on my first try). I think that would qualify as not smart, but genius....and a very stable genius at that! Commentators observed that any such public statements on the part of a military officer or a corporate executive in themselves would likely have resulted in an immediate mental evaluation, and possibly removal. Later in the day, as on prior occasions, Mr. Trump called for stronger libel laws – presumably such as would enable him to win lawsuits against his critics. (Current libel laws are established by state legislatures, not Congress. And the Supreme Court ruled decades ago that public figures such as Mr. Trump could only prevail on a libel claim if the writer or publisher had recklessly or intentionally lied – a high bar that has, among other things, protected newspapers' ability to criticize national political figures.) On January 7, Mr. Trump's senior policy advisor Stephen Miller defended him against the book's characterizations in an interview by a respected CNN journalist, until the interviewer cut Miller off for speechifying, interrupting and evading. Still Miller wouldn't leave the set, and CNN security had to escort him away. Mr. Trump then tweeted: “Jake Tapper of Fake News CNN just got destroyed in his interview with Stephen Miller of the Trump Administration. Watch the hatred and unfairness of this CNN flunky!”	1, 7, 9, 11
1-5-18	Security Council lobbying. The Wall Street Journal reported that, a year prior, Mr. Trump's transition team had extensively lobbied members of the UN Security Council to withdraw a pending resolution critical of Israel, anticipating (accurately) that the Obama administration would abstain from the vote and thus let the measure pass. Michael Flynn, Jared Kushner and Nikki Haley had all made the calls. Such diplomatic interference by a transition team was uncommon and possibly illegal, wrote The Journal.	9

1-6-18	Trashing trees, getting a job. The Washington Post reported that a National Park Service official who had been disciplined for illegally removing protected trees from a Maryland park to benefit the view of a nearby property owner had now been named as the NPS's deputy director. The property owner, Daniel Snyder, was also the owner of the Washington Redskins, and had contributed $1,000,000 to Mr. Trump's election campaign.	16
1-8-18	Telling it to farmers. At an address to the Farm Bureau (a national trade association) in Nashville, Tennessee, Mr. Trump boasted that he had delivered a $5.5 trillion tax cut in the recent tax legislation, when in fact it was widely understood to have been only $1.1 trillion net of tax increases. He also said, untruthfully, that most of the benefits of the tax bill were “going to working families, small businesses, and ... the family farmer.” He further boasted about having reversed a clean water regulation that many farmers had opposed, thus “setting free our farmers to innovate, thrive, and grow. Oh, you are so happy you voted for me. You are so lucky I gave you that privilege.” Also this, referring to (mainly black) player protests against racism at recent National Football League games, having nothing to do with farming: “We want our flag respected. We want our flag respected. And we want our national anthem respected,” drawing chants of “U.S.A.!” And this: “Farm country is God's country!”	6, 7, 9, 11
1-9-18, 1-10-18, 1-18-18, 1-19-18	The (performance) art of the deal. Amid mounting charges by critics that Mr. Trump was mentally incompetent and emotionally unsound, on January 9 he staged a publicly televised negotiating session with Congressional leaders on the topic of immigration that was widely viewed as an attempt to demonstrate his moderation and effectiveness. Critics promptly charged that during the session he demonstrated confusion, disinterest and continuous self-contradiction with respect to his own policy positions. And a week later, as emergency talks to fund the federal government reached an impasse over the immigration issues, both parties in Congress faulted him for his cluelessness. Yet at a televised Cabinet session on January 10, he touted the "great reviews" and "great ratings" he had received for the previous day's "performance" – "one of the greatest meetings ever witnessed."	11

1-9-18	Earmarking revival. During the meeting on immigration, Mr. Trump proposed the restoration of the fiscally irresponsible and frequently corrupt practice of Congressional earmarking – hiding project-specific dollars within federal budget bills for the political benefit of individual members of Congress – a practice that had previously been engaged in by both political parties but that had been outlawed in 2011.	17 (15)
1-10-18, 1-11-18	Libel laws: what? what? At the January 10 Cabinet meeting, still smarting from the publication of Fire and Fury, Mr. Trump said that current libel laws are a "sham" because they don't allow redress for knowingly false statements on the part of journalists and publishers. In fact they do – for all plaintiffs, including public figures such as himself. The following day he told the Wall Street Journal that he wanted Congress to strengthen the libel laws. But as before he made no mention of the fact that the states, not Congress, establish such laws, and that the Supreme Court had limited the laws' practical scope on constitutional grounds.	1, 7, 9, 11
1-10-18	Tax tricks. Both Politico and The Washington Post reported that the Trump administration appeared to be pressuring the Internal Revenue Service to reduce workers' withholding payroll taxes in 2018 so that they would see larger net paychecks and thus support Mr. Trump's political party in the mid-term Congressional elections – even though lowering withholding could damage the workers' ability to fund their tax obligations and hamper the IRS's tax collection efforts.	9
1-10-18	Urging partisan investigations. Frustrated by Democrats having a voice in the various Congressional investigations of Russian election meddling, Mr. Trump tweeted that Republicans should "take control" of the investigations – which are lawfully required to be bi-partisan, and are theoretically supposed to be non-partisan.	9
1-10-18	Hammering the judges, again. After a federal judge blocked Mr. Trump's attempts to wind down protections for young undocumented (DACA) immigrants, Mr. Trump (rather than merely voicing disagreement) called the court system "broken and unfair."	2

1-10-18	Zinke does a favor. Days after Mr. Trump had issued an order permitting nearly all offshore drilling for oil and gas, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke exempted Florida from the order, in a move that critics suspected was a partisan (and therefore illegal) effort to help the state's Republican governor in his bid for the U.S. Senate. Many, including South Carolina's Republican Congressman Mark Sanford, even speculated that the carve-out was intended to preserve the pristine ocean view of Mr. Trump's Florida resort, Mar-a-Lago – a theory consistent with Mr. Trump's long-running attempt to keep offshore wind turbines from tainting the sea view from his Scottish golf course. In any event, both Mr. Trump's original order and Zinke's subsequent carve-out for Florida generated bi-partisan outrage.	15, 16, 17 (9, 16)
1-10-18	Russia report ignored. The Democratic members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee released an extensive study of recent Russian efforts to undermine democracies worldwide, stating "Never before in American history has so clear a threat to national security been so clearly ignored by a U.S. president." Mr. Trump ignored the report as well, effectively casting the protection of democracy as a partisan endeavor.	12
1-11-18	Clinton, the FBI and the Russians. In an apparent attempt to deflect from the special prosecutor's investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election campaign – an investigation that to date had netted at least four guilty pleas by or indictments of senior Trump campaign officials – Mr. Trump suggested via Twitter that both his opponent Hillary Clinton and the FBI (for her benefit) may have collaborated with Russia during the campaign. He offered no evidence.	9. 11
1-11-18, 1-14-18	Kim's friend: what? what? On January 11, Mr. Trump told The Wall Street Journal, "I probably have a very good relationship with Kim Jong Un. I have relationships with people. I think you people are surprised." How could Mr. Trump square that statement with his continuing and unprecedented exchange of insults with the North Korean leader that most analysts had feared was posing a threat of devastating military confrontation? He explained, by proudly pointing to his unpredictability and insincerity: "You'll see that a lot with me, and then all of the [sic] sudden somebody's my best friend. I could give you 20 examples. You could give me 30. I'm a very flexible person." [Continued below.]	7, 11

1-11-18, 1-14-18	[Continued.] As to whether the appearance of a rapprochement in recent days between North Korea and South Korea was intended by the North to drive a wedge between the South and the U.S., he said: “The difference is I’m president, other people aren’t. And I know more about wedges than any human being that’s lived.” Three days later, after an inexplicable delay, Mr. Trump tweeted that he had actually said “I’d probably have a very good relationship with Kim Jong Un” (rather than “I probably have”), charging The Journal with intentionally misquoting him and dispensing “FAKE NEWS.” The Journal rebutted the allegation by releasing an audio of the interview. Undisputed was Mr. Trump’s boasting of his capriciousness in diplomacy.	7, 11
1-11-18 +	No to "shithole" immigrants. On January 11, Mr. Trump told members of Congress at a White House meeting that the U.S. shouldn’t accept immigrants from "shithole" places such as Haiti, Africa, and (by some accounts) El Salvador, as opposed to worthy places like Norway. Neo-Nazis and other white supremacists promptly praised Mr. Trump’s epithet, gleefully agreeing with "liberals" that Mr. Trump had proven himself to be a racist. Critics, for their part, were quick to fold the episode into, and to recount, the lengthy list of seemingly racially-motivated campaigns and statements that Mr. Trump had engaged in for decades – many of which are reported above in this document. Apart from allegations of racism, the naming of "shitholes" added to the roster of countries that Mr. Trump had gratuitously insulted (previously Australia, the UK, France, Germany, Iran, Mexico, China, North Korea). It even risked turning away African countries, contrary to U.S. interests. In 2017 some 33 of 54 African countries were hosting U.S. special forces troops in America’s fight against Islamist militants; and China had long been strategically developing and aggressively courting such countries. Indeed the revelation of Mr. Trump’s statement brought prompt denunciations from African, Caribbean and Latin American governments (plus the United Nations human rights office), as well as the angry resignation of the U.S. ambassador to Panama. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 11, 13, 14

1-11-18 +	[Continued.] CSD does not consider Mr. Trump's reported use of the word "shithole" to have necessarily been racist, nor his reported comments as such to have disparaged the subject countries on racial (as opposed to economic development) grounds. But as we have previously noted, Mr. Trump did appear to have long feared and disdained people from poor, brown countries (except for those he had chosen to personally employ at his resorts) and to dismiss America's humanitarian obligations toward them. In addition, he now appeared very clearly to have endorsed a race-based immigration system. CSD also does not advocate for unlimited immigration any more than anyone else does. We see proper immigration policies as those that balance the economic benefits and the humanitarian imperatives of immigration against the right of every country to protect its cultural identity. But we also see Mr. Trump's deeply embedded aversion to accepting refugees and to receiving migrants from certain countries (other than his own employees) as evidencing his seeming unawareness or rejection of half the equation (economics and humanitarianism); as dismissive of the gains in science, technology, enterprise, the professions, the arts and the humanities wrought over the years by immigrants from poor countries and without which the American project would be only a shell of its current embodiment; as reminiscent of the ethnically-based, exclusionary immigration policies of the 1920s through the 1940s that resonated with, and that withheld from refugees a haven from, the rise of Nazi Germany; and thus as profoundly inhumane and unpatriotic. We would also note that, by all accounts, in his life Mr. Trump had not spent time, either recreationally or professionally, in any of the places that he had now characterized as "shitholes," or in any similar places; that he had demonstrated no awareness of or curiosity about their circumstances; and that his travels abroad had instead been limited to stays in opulent environments. For all of this we consider his characterization of those countries to be uniquely arbitrary, insulated, and thus devoid of the level of wisdom and empathy that would befit a sitting president. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 11, 13, 14
------------------	--	-------------------------

1-11-18 +	[Continued.] The White House did not initially deny that Mr. Trump had said "shithole," and according to The Washington Post he boasted about it in private. Only vaguely did he deny it the next day, by Twitter. But on January 14, Kirstjen Nielsen, his Secretary of Homeland Security who had been present at the meeting, said that she took "a little offense to allegations that the president is racist"; and she subsequently testified under oath before the Senate Judiciary Committee that she couldn't remember whether Mr. Trump had used the vulgar word. Also on January 14 Mr. Trump explicitly denied having used the word, and he told reporters. "I'm the least racist person you have ever interviewed." The silver lining that CSD perceives in these denials is that, after America's long embrace of a better way of thinking, it is still not generally acceptable in political discourse here to be, or to be viewed as, a racist – even if one is.	6, 7, 11, 13, 14
1-12-18	Zinke takes credit. The Huffington Post reported that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who had famously distinguished himself as an opponent of natural lands protection, in a year-end report on his department's work had taken credit for numerous protection measures that had been initiated and achieved by the Obama administration.	17 (7. 11)
1-12-18	Porn bribe. The Wall Street Journal reported that, during Mr. Trump's election campaign, one of his attorneys had paid a porn star $130,000 to be silent about Mr. Trump's affair with her that had occurred while he was married to current wife Melania and their son Barron was months old. The affair was not illegal; the payment was not illegal; nor did the circumstances amount to Mr. Trump telling a falsehood. But at a minimum, the quid-pro-quo seemed to be of a piece with Mr. Trump's notoriously "transactional" and unprincipled attitude toward individuals and issues; his pattern of seeking to repress the truth; his pattern of bribing law enforcement officials (such as several state attorneys general who had been investigating his businesses); his pattern of paying-off political supporters (as in his presidential appointments of various unqualified individuals to high ranking positions); the possibility of his having excused the Russian government for its interference with the presidential election in exchange for its silence about his past; and his possible susceptibility to blackmail generally.	7, 9, 12, 16

1-16-18	Bannon is gagged. Testifying under subpoena before the House Intelligence Committee about Russian interference with the 2016 presidential election, former senior White House advisor Stephen Bannon – at the direction of the White House – declined to answer questions about conversations he had had while serving on Mr. Trump's transition team and in his administration. That is to say, the White House had ordered him to defy not only Congressional prerogatives but his legal obligations under the subpoena. Both Republican and Democratic committee members were outraged.	9, 12
1-16-18	Zinke goes it alone. The Washington Post reported that nine out of the twelve members of the National Park System Advisory Board – federally chartered in 1935 and advising the Interior Department for over 80 years on the designation and maintenance of national parks – had quit because Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had refused to meet with them or convene a single meeting in 2017. The New York Times said that they had also quit because Zinke had "ignored science, squelched efforts to address climate change and undermined environmental protections." In May, Zinke had suspended the work of all outside committees, including those providing input on matters such as environmental science and public lands protection. CSD has reported on the dishonest and corrupt behaviors of many members of Mr. Trump's cabinet, including Zinke. But we also find Zinke to have distinguished himself in his truculent, self-absorbed and authoritarian style, which has seemed to border on, if not cross into, the illegal. Indeed, citizen advocacy groups that favor the national park system had labeled Zinke as anti-park – a charge, which if true, would cause him to be working in opposition to his legal mandate as Interior Secretary to protect and promote our parks; as though a police chief were working to advance street crime, or an army general were working to advance the cause of a military enemy.	17 (8, 9)

1-16-18	McCain warns on press freedom. In an opinion piece in The Washington Post, Republican Senator John McCain cited a recent report by The Committee to Protect Journalists to the effect that some 21 journalists had been jailed in 2017 by authoritarian regimes overseas on charges of disseminating "fake news." He faulted Mr. Trump for not having discouraged such abuses, and – by way of Mr. Trump's own attacks on the American press – for having implicitly condoned and encouraged them.	1
1-16-18, 1-17-18	Cooking the books on black support. On January 16, Mr. Trump tweeted a Fox News commentator's statement to the effect that his popularity among African Americans had doubled since his election. The following day The New York Times reported that that interpretation of the polling results was devoid of integrity, and that black support for Mr. Trump appeared to have actually declined.	7, 8
1-16-18, 1-18-18	Cooking the books on immigrant violence. On January 16, Mr. Trump tweeted that a study by the Departments of Justice and Homeland Security that he had ordered in March and that had now been released proved that "nearly 3 in 4 individuals convicted of terrorism-related charges are foreign-born." A New York Times analysis stated that the report ignored acts of domestic terrorism (such as those perpetrated by white supremacists); it included episodes that did not amount to acts of terrorism on U.S. soil, or to terrorism at all; and it was otherwise statistically deficient, substantively confusing, and likely concocted to justify barring Muslims from entering the U.S. In addition, the government study pointed to the prevalence of violence against women (including, allegedly, honor killings) among immigrants. But here too – according to The Huffington Post's analysis of January 18 – the methodology and reporting appeared to be wildly unprofessional, including by the authors' having relied on sketchy data and having ignored comparable phenomena among the general American population	6, 7, 8

1-18-18	America disdained. A new Gallup poll of individuals in some 134 countries revealed for 2017 the lowest approval of America's leadership in the poll's 10-year history, now at a mere 30% – a drop of 18% since the previous year, and the biggest yearly drop ever in the perception of any country's leadership. Disapproval was especially high among citizens of U.S. allies. Also studied were the individuals' perceptions of the leadership of Germany, Russia and China, with both Germany and China surpassing the U.S. in the poll, and the U.S. barely surpassing Russia. Gallup attributed the drop in approval to Mr. Trump's presidency. CSD does not place undue credibility in the poll's precise statistics, given the margin for error, the challenges of designing such a survey, and the inherently subjective (if not capricious) attitudes of the survey respondents. Nor do we maintain that the popularity of America's leadership outside of America's borders is necessarily of crucial importance. We nevertheless believe that the dramatic change in survey results was indicative, and that the loss of American prestige is likely deleterious both for American strategic and economic interests and for democracy worldwide. Certainly it is not good.	10, 13, 14
1-18-18	Trading on the presidency. The Washington Post reported that the developer of a Trump-branded apartment building in India was promising purchasers of units the opportunity to travel to the U.S. to meet with Mr. Trump's son, Donald Jr. The Post also reported that the cost of renting the "Ivanka Suite" in the Trump International Hotel in Washington had risen from $914 to $2134 per night since Mr. Trump's election: trivial sums in the grand scheme, but exemplary of a business and political outlook, in CSD's view.	15
1-18-18	Fake News Awards. As he had promised some weeks previous (see CSD's January 2 entry above), Mr. Trump named the winners of his Fake News Awards for 2017. The winners were The New York Times, ABC, CNN, TIME, The Washington Post and Newsweek (all of which news outlets CSD relies on as its news sources). Of the thousands of stories and millions of words about Mr. Trump issued by those outlets in 2017, Mr. Trump was able to specifically identify only ten actual reporting errors – almost all of which the publishers had promptly corrected, apologized for, and/or disciplined its reporters for. [Continued below.]	7

1-18-18	[ Continued. ] Mr. Trump had never corrected or apologized for any of the 2,000 + exaggerations and falsehoods that he had made during the first year of his presidency.	7
January 2018	Freedom House decries decline of American democracy.  In its annual report on the status of freedom in the world, the highly respected, non-partisan, non-profit Freedom House called out the deterioration of democracy in the U.S. under Mr. Trump's presidency. Elements of the decline included Mr. Trump's withdrawal from world leadership in promoting democracy, his embrace of authoritarian regimes, his attacks on the press and the judiciary, his racially-tinged policies, his business conflicts of interests, his nepotism, his non-transparency (including as to his tax returns), his attacks on the investigation of Russian election interference, and his false allegations of widespread electoral fraud. Perhaps most distressingly, the U.S.'s overall rating on Freedom House's index – on a scale of 1 (most free) to 7 (least free) – dropped from 1 to 2. We urge readers to view the U.S. chapter, which can be seen at the link at this endnote.<sup>7</sup>	All of the above
January 2018	The view from abroad. A lengthy news analysis in Politico's magazine reported on the impression that Mr. Trump had made on dozens of foreign leaders and senior diplomats from friendly countries during his presidency. They consistently found him "uninformed," "dangerously unpredictable," "insane," given to "volatility," susceptible to "flattery," "jarring," "disturbing," "unlike anything they've ever heard," filled with "bluster and blasting," "breaking china all over the place," "hair-raising," "catastrophic," "terrifying" and "incompetent," but at the same time "cartoonish" and a "laughingstock." The reporter wrote: "Over their year of living dangerously with Trump, foreign leaders and diplomats have learned this much: The U.S. president was ignorant, at times massively so, about the rudiments of the international system and America's place in it, and in general about other countries. He seemed to respond well to flattery and the lavish laying out of red carpets; he was averse to conflict in person but more or less immovable from strongly held preconceptions. And given the chance, he would respond well to anything that seemed to offer him the opportunity to flout or overturn the policies endorsed by his predecessors Barack Obama and George W. Bush." [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13

January 2018	[Continued.] Meanwhile (wrote the reporter), on the inside, the administration's foreign policy leadership was "plagued by insecurity and infighting" and was only sometimes successful in what it had determined its principal mission to be, a historical first for America: containing and controlling an erratic president. On many of the largest and most sensitive issues, that leadership was often outright ignored. CSD has described this phenomenon extensively before. But the reporter now wrote that foreign leaders perceived all of it as well, and that they were unnerved by their inability to rely on even the efforts of sane and capable senior staff. The complete article appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>8</sup>	10, 11, 13

CITIZENS FOR A STRONG DEMOCRACY

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 13 – February 26, 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

1-17-18 +	Perjury trap. One of Mr. Trump's lawyers said that if Mr. Trump were to agree to be interviewed by special prosecutor Robert Mueller about Russian interference with the 2016 election and other matters, Mueller could set a "perjury trap" for Mr. Trump. News analysts widely interpreted that to mean that because of Mr. Trump's proclivity for falsehood, Mr. Trump could easily lie to Mueller, then be found to have done so, which would be a felony. In subsequent days and weeks, a chorus of Mr. Trump's legal and other advisors urged him not to be interviewed by Mueller, for that reason.	7, 12
1-18-18	Hate crimes soar. The Anti-Defamation League reported that white supremacists had murdered 57% more people in 2017 as in 2016. The report followed ADL's November 2, 2017 report that serious anti-Semitic incidents had increased 67% year-to-date in 2017 versus the same period in the previous year. Mr. Trump himself is not anti-Semitic. Nor has he encouraged or condoned violence against religious, ethnic or racial minorities. But he has explicitly condoned white supremacists (on the occasion of the Charlottesville march in August); supremacists have explicitly praised him as their champion; and commentators have widely drawn a correlation between Mr. Trump's seemingly racist views and the white supremacists' new-found boldness.	17 (5, 6)

1-20-18	Historical firsts. Comparing Mr. Trump to his predecessors in the White House, Sean Willentz, a prominent professor of American history at Princeton University, wrote of Mr. Trump in the New York Times: "[H]e is the first president to fail to defend the nation from an attack on our democracy by a hostile foreign power — and to resist the investigation of that attack. He is the first to enrich his private interests, and those of his family, directly and openly. He is the first president to denounce the press not simply as unfair but as 'the enemy of the American people.' He is the first to threaten his defeated political opponent with imprisonment. He is the first to have denigrated friendly countries and allies as well as a whole continent with racist vulgarities." Although Willentz is partisan, those observations struck CSD as informed, objective, and noteworthy for their conciseness.	1, 6, 9, 12, 13, 15
1-20-18 +	The shut-down: rolling the minority. Scapegoating the opposition. On January 20, the federal government went into partial shut-down because Congress could not agree on a spending bill. Mr. Trump placed all blame on the Democrats, despite widespread, bi-partisan charges faulting his own confusion, indecision, unreliability and even sabotage relative to resolving the immigration issues at the center of the controversy. Accusing the opposition of murder That day, Mr. Trump's re-election campaign accused the Democratic Party of being "complicit in every murder committed by illegal immigrants," for its having negotiated to include relief for undocumented child (DACA) migrants in the federal spending bill. Wrecking the Senate. On January 21, still reacting to the shut-down, Mr. Trump, as he had done before, called for the elimination of the long-standing Senate filibuster rule that requires 60 votes to pass legislation, so that a single party (currently his) could control all governance and render the minority party utterly voiceless. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11, 17(6, 9)

1-20-18 +	[Continued.] Politicizing the troops. On the same day, at an American military base in the Middle East, Vice President Mike Pence told the troops that the Democratic Party was solely responsible for the shut-down and for the resulting impediments it was creating for the military – points with which Democrats of course disagreed – thus continuing the Trump administration's extraordinary and troubling practice of delivering domestic political messages to the armed forces. Trashing Hispanics. Similarly, Secretary of Homeland Security Kirstjen Nielsen, who had been charged with the apolitical task of protecting Americans' domestic safety, gratuitously tweeted relative to the shut-down: "Benefits for millions of illegal immigrants instead of paying Americans who put their lives at risk daily to protect ours? I don't think so." Taunting the vanquished. On January 23, a day after Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer and sufficient additional Democrats had voted to fund the government on Republican terms and thus end the shut-down, Mr. Trump, by way of Twitter, berated "Cryin' Chuck Schumer ... and his humiliating defeat." On January 26, Mr. Trump doubled-down, tweeting that "Cryin' Chuck Schumer took such a beating over the shutdown."	7, 9, 10, 11, 17 (6, 9)
1-20-18, 1-23-18	Profiting from the presidency. On January 20, The Washington Post reported that the Republican National Committee would be holding a gala fundraiser at Mr. Trump's Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida that evening in celebration of the anniversary of his inauguration, and that the RNC was believed to be paying Mr. Trump's company substantial fees for rent and related items. On January 23, Politico reported that Mr. Trump would address the RNC at a February 1 event at his Washington hotel. The RNC of course was free to enrich Mr. Trump if it wished, having reportedly paid his companies millions of dollars in connection with the 2016 election campaign. But CSD nevertheless continued to be alarmed that Mr. Trump, a billionaire, accepted the sums, and that he saw fit to exploit the presidency as a profit center.	15

1-22-18 +	Intimidating Justice. On January 22, The Washington Post reported that Attorney General Jeff Sessions had been pressing FBI director Christopher Wray to fire deputy director Andrew McCabe, due to McCabe's perceived friendships with Trump antagonists Hillary Clinton and fired FBI director James Comey. The pressure had followed Mr. Trump's own many public attacks on McCabe. The following day, The Post reported that shortly after firing Comey, Mr. Trump had summoned McCabe (then acting director) to his office, asked his political preferences, and hinted his expectation of loyalty. On January 24, the Post observed that, cumulatively, Mr. Trump had asked at least six senior Justice Department officials for their loyalty or to act inappropriately, including three FBI directors or acting directors: Comey, Wray, McCabe, Sally Yates (former deputy attorney general), U.S. Attorney for New York Preet Bharara, and Attorney General Jeff Sessions. To this list CSD would add Mr. Trump's pressure on Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein to write a memorandum that Mr. Trump then disingenuously used as cover for firing Comey. In sum: Mr. Trump had wanted Justice Department officials – lots of them – to serve as his handmaidens; much like staff at his Florida resort, Mar-a-Lago. On January 26, CNN reported that Mr. Trump had been venting his anger at Rosenstein, who had appointed and who now continued to supervise special prosecutor Robert Mueller. On January 28, The New York Times reported independently to that effect. On February 1, CNN reported that at a meeting in the White House in December, Mr. Trump had asked Rosenstein relative to the investigation, "Are you on my team?" On January 29, under pressure from Wray, McCabe resigned.	9, 12
1-25-18	Mueller in the cross-hairs. The New York Times reported, and The Washington Post and other news journals then independently confirmed, that in June 2017 Mr. Trump had ordered White House counsel Donald McGahn to direct the Justice Department to fire special prosecutor Robert Mueller. McGahn refused, and threatened to resign. In subsequent months, Mr. Trump and White House staff had publicly stated that he had never considered firing Mueller.	7, 9, 12

1-26-18	Chaos. CNN observed that the threatened resignation of White House counsel Donald McGahn over Mr. Trump's June directive that special prosecutor Robert Mueller be fired fit an alarming pattern: that other senior aides who were known to have threatened to resign during Mr. Trump's first year in office due to his irregular governing style included John Kelly (chief of staff), Jeff Sessions (Attorney General) and Christopher Wray (FBI director). To that list CSD would add Rex Tillerson (Secretary of State). USA Today had previously listed some 15 senior officials who had in fact either resigned or been dismissed, as linked at this endnote.<sup>1</sup> Casualties included those Mr. Trump had perceived as political enemies (FBI director James Comey), weaklings (press secretary Sean Spicer and chief of staff Reince Priebus), and wild embarrassments (senior advisors Stephen Bannon and Sebastian Gorka; national security advisor Michael Flynn; communications director Anthony Scaramucci; and Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price). He had inherited the political enemies from the previous administration; the others he had appointed himself. In any event, instability appeared to have reigned.	9, 10, 11
1-26-18	The whole world is watching (and is fake). Mr. Trump was booed at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland when, in an address, he attacked the "fake" media generally and The New York Times specifically. He particularly denied recent media reports of his attempt in June to fire special prosecutor Robert Mueller.	1, 7, 10
1-28-18	Ice caps "breaking records." In a television interview, Mr. Trump equivocated as to whether climate change was occurring; said that the earth was getting colder (when in fact temperatures are at record highs); and added that the polar ice caps were "breaking records" for their size (when in fact they have been shrinking dramatically).	7, 8
1-29-18, 1-30-18	Defying Congress on Russia sanctions. On January 29, the State Department announced that it would not implement the sanctions against Russia that had been overwhelmingly passed by Congress and reluctantly signed into law by Mr. Trump in August. The announcement came on the date of the implementation deadline. For CSD, Mr. Trump's ongoing coddling of Russia as it continued to look to interfere with our elections, and his open defiance of Congress, were equally disturbing. [Continued below.]	9, 12

1-29-18, 1-30-18	[Continued.] The State Department did, however, meet its deadline for publishing a list of wealthy Russians with close ties to the Russian government. Having had six months to do so, on the deadline date the department released a list of Russian billionaires which, at the last moment, it had taken directly from Forbes magazine, without regard to whether they had political connections. The Russian government and others derided the State Department's sloth; and the next day Russian President Vladimir Putin blamed Mr. Trump's enemies for the U.S. having published anything at all.	9, 12
1-29-18 +	Corrupting the House investigation. The Nunes memo. California Congressman Devin Nunes – who had been a leading member of Mr. Trump's presidential transition team and was now the chair of the House Intelligence Committee that had subsequently undertaken to investigate the Trump campaign's possible involvement with Russian interference in the 2016 election – appeared to sabotage whatever remained of his committee's mandate to conduct a good faith, empirical, bi-partisan inquiry. He released to Mr. Trump, for re-release to the public, a classified memorandum authored by Republican committee members that damned the FBI for its allegedly partisan investigation of one of Mr. Trump's campaign associates, Carter Page, in connection with the election interference. The alleged partisanship involved the FBI's not disclosing to the special Foreign Intelligence and Surveillance Act (FISA) court, which had issued and three times renewed a warrant to surveil Page, that one of its informants – Christopher Steele, of Russian "dossier" fame – was partisan. Nunes meanwhile forbade the committee's Democrats from contemporaneously releasing their own rebuttal. The retort. Those actions – openly encouraged if not actually solicited or directed by Mr. Trump – were condemned by not only the committee's Democrats but by the FBI and the Justice Department, on grounds that Nunes was politicizing his committee and its investigation to an unprecedented extent; distributing classified information and misleading analysis by way of the memorandum in an unprecedented manner; intending to throttle rather than promote transparency; and further intending to discredit all of the work of the FBI and special prosecutor Robert Mueller in their independent investigation of Russian election interference and other matters. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11, 12, 13 17 (7, 9, 12, 13)

1-29-18 +	[Continued.] The fallacies. Nunes's allegation that the FBI had failed to disclose to the FISA court that Steele was partisan was false; and it overlooked the fact that every prosecutor and court may and must take seriously even partisan sources that come forward. In addition, Nunes withheld from his memorandum the fact that the FBI had been tracking Page's unusual Russia connections long before the events in question; that Page had openly boasted of his Russia connections; and that as a campaign figure he thus eminently merited scrutiny. Most notably, Nunes's undertaking to "out" the FISA warrant application as biased appeared in no way to derogate from the significant amount of damning information that had emerged around the Trump campaign's contacts with Russians irrespective of Page; from Mr. Trump's concerted attempts to block the investigation; or from his highly suspect friendship toward and admiration of Russian President Vladimir Putin and his tolerance of past and future Russian election interference. Other irregularities. Nunes himself appeared not to have read the classified information underlying his own memorandum before its release. And the text of the memorandum he had delivered to Mr. Trump was shortly revealed to have been edited versus the text that the committee's majority had approved. These two items were not so damaging, but they were plainly foolish and erratic. The motive. Nunes had previously been forced to recuse himself from his committee's investigation due to his wildly partisan and dishonest activities in that endeavor, as described above in this document on 3-21-17, 4-6-17 and 5-11-17. The new episode seemed of a piece with the original one, and with Mr. Trump's own more direct attempts to discredit the FBI, the Justice Department and Mueller. Indeed, Mr. Trump was widely reported to have told aides that he wanted the memorandum released specifically so as to undermine Mueller's investigation, damage the FBI's reputation, and provide him with grounds for firing Rosenstein. For CSD, the devolution of a select Congressional investigatory body into a fact-challenged political tool of one of the investigation's targets (Mr. Trump), as well as a cover for the hostile and destructive activities of one of America's principal foreign rivals (Russia), as well as a defilement of the independence and authority of the nation's chief law enforcement agency (the FBI), seemed an abomination. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11, 12, 13 17 (7, 9, 12, 13)
-----------	---	---------------------------------------

1-29-18 +	[Continued.] The release, and the tweet. Finally, on February 2, Mr. Trump declassified the memorandum's contents (over the objections of national security staff), released the memorandum to Nunes for publication (which Nunes then leaked to favored media outlets before making it fully public), then tweeted: "The top Leadership and Investigators of the FBI and the Justice Department have politicized the sacred investigative process in favor of Democrats and against Republicans." (In fact Mueller, Wray, Rosenstein and Comey were all understood to be Republicans.) He then hinted that FBI and DOJ leaders should be punished for their "disgrace." Fox. Mr. Trump reportedly took those actions in coordination with Fox News, the cable network that since the election campaign had appeared to serve as his propaganda outlet in the guise of news commentary. No previous president had collaborated with a news outlet in such a continuing and partisan manner, or (to CSD's knowledge) in real-time relative to a major political event. "Transparency?" Vice President Mike Pence, chief of staff John Kelly and press secretary Sarah Sanders lauded the publication of the Nunes memorandum as advancing "transparency," the primacy of which they extolled. But Nunes had blocked the Democrats' rebuttal of his memorandum. Revealing classified information should never be placed in the same basket as other transparency issues. And in fact the Trump administration had been non-transparent about nearly everything else, including Mr. Trump's tax returns; visitor logs for the White House, Mar-a-Lago and Trump hotels; Mr. Trump's golf outings; his agencies' activities; his and his aides' conversations with and about Russia; and other items listed at The Washington Post and The New York Times links at this endnote.<sup>2</sup> "Conspiracy?" The larger theme of the authors and many supporters of the Nunes memorandum had been that the FBI had conspired to throw the presidential election to Hillary Clinton. But in fact the FBI had long been largely Republican-leaning. On February 2, The New York Times' conservative columnist Brett Stephens wrote that it was in fact the Democrats who had complained bitterly toward the end of the election campaign about the FBI's behavior, and we quote him as follows: [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11, 12, 13 17 (7, 9, 12, 13)
------------------	---	---

1-29-18 +	[Continued.] "It has become clear that you possess explosive information about close ties and coordination between Donald Trump, his top advisers and the Russian government," then Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid angrily wrote James Comey in late October 2016. 'The public has a right to know this information.' Maybe so. But the G-Men kept quiet about their investigations, and Trump won the election. How that represents evidence of a sinister deep-state conspiracy is a question for morons to ponder." National security. The thoughtless (or worse) release of classified information by Nunes and Mr. Trump followed Mr. Trump's having casually revealed to Russian officials highly classified information provided by Israel relative to certain Middle Eastern military operations (see CSD's entry of 5-15/16-17). Both episodes were viewed by commentators as having the potential to chill how much classified information foreign governments would share with the U.S. going forward, and how much American intelligence agencies would share with the president – all to the detriment of our national security. In addition, rank-and-file FBI staff were widely reported to have been demoralized by the release of the Nunes memorandum and the associated attacks on the FBI's leadership. McCain's outrage. Immediately after the release, Republican Senator John McCain accused Mr. Trump and Nunes of "manufacturing partisan sideshows" that undermined the rule of law and served Russia's interests. In Philadelphia. On February 1, as Nunes's release was imminent, the Intelligence Committee's ranking member – California Congressman Adam Schiff, who had been publicly and intensively resisting that release, including for its inaccuracies – had spoken similarly to an audience at The University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia. He said, "The threat from Russia to our democracy is now far less than the threat from within." He called this moment an inflection point for the fate of liberal democracy. He observed that countries around the world continued to look to the U.S. as a beacon, but that "now they don't recognize what they see," adding that "the Russians are astounded at how fragile our democracy has turned out to be." "We will get through this," he said, "but it will require all of us to do our part." Schiff was partisan, but correct. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11, 12, 13 17 (7, 9, 12, 13)
------------------	--	---

1-29-18 +	[Continued.] The president's take. On February 3, Mr. Trump tweeted his own summary of the matter: "This memo totally vindicates 'Trump' in probe. But the Russian Witch Hunt goes on and on. Their [sic] was no Collusion and there was no Obstruction (the word now used because, after one year of looking endlessly and finding NOTHING, collusion is dead). This is an American disgrace!" In fact the memorandum had not even remotely addressed any of that; the tweet was simply false, incendiary, demagogic, and directed at discrediting and obstructing the various investigations. Not to leave it at that, on February 5, Mr. Trump tweeted that "Little Adam Schiff... is one of the biggest liars and leakers in Washington," and that Nunes was a "Great American Hero." Catching "them." In a campaign-style speech in Cincinnati, Ohio on February 5, Mr. Trump as much as admitted that he had conspired with Nunes in the memorandum's creation and release – and that it had been a partisan, vengeful, obstructive, and possibly illegal endeavor rather than an objective exercise in intelligence committee oversight – by saying: "Oh but did we catch them in the act or what? You know what I'm talking about. Oh, did we catch them in the act. They are very embarrassed. They never thought they were going to get caught. We caught them. We caught them. It's like so much fun, like the great sleuth." On February 9, Mr. Trump blocked the release of the rebuttal of the Nunes memo authored by the Intelligence Committee's Democratic members, on grounds that it contained classified information. The inclusion of that information had not stopped even Nunes and the other committee Republicans from releasing the rebuttal; and the inclusion of classified information in the Nunes memo had not stopped Mr. Trump from releasing it (the Nunes memo). The end result. On February 5, The Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump had convinced some 74% of Trump voters that the FBI was biased against him, and some 64% that the FBI was not trustworthy.	7, 9, 11, 12, 13 17 (7, 9, 12, 13)

1-30-18, 2-1-18, 2-5-18	State of the Union. On January 30, in his first State of the Union address before Congress, Mr. Trump – in what was likely a distinguishing and unprecedented feature – railed extensively against the violence perpetrated upon Americans by undocumented migrants, effectively echoing his campaign statements that many or most were drug smugglers and rapists. He also sought to distinguish his speech by his call for American "unity;" although commentators widely contrasted that theme to his efforts over the past several years to bitterly malign his enemies, the Justice Department, immigrants, the court system and the free press, and to his having created what polls widely indicated was the most divided environment in this country since at least the Vietnam War. To be sure, he did not celebrate our demographic or ideological diversity. Indeed, CSD believes, one could legitimately speculate that his idea of "unity" was for the entire nation to submit to his authority. Not unexpectedly, The Washington Post counted in the speech some 18 boastful claims about Mr. Trump's accomplishments while in office – many about how he single-handedly had improved the economy – that were untrue, grossly exaggerated or otherwise misleading, all as enumerated at the link at this endnote.<sup>3</sup> The New York Times listed a dozen defective claims.<sup>4</sup> On February 1, Mr. Trump said that his State of the Union address was the most widely watched in television history. It was not: The New York Times reported that eight others had been more broadly viewed, just since 1993; and that Mr. Trump had inflated his media "ratings" and event attendance figures at least four previous times since being elected. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 11
--	---	--------------------

1-30-18, 2-1-18, 2-5-18	[Continued.] On February 5, at the Cincinnati speech noted above, Mr. Trump accused Democratic members of Congress who hadn't applauded during his State of the Union message of "treason" – a crime punishable by death. The Wall Street Journal retorted in a news analysis: "It is common practice for the opposition party to avoid standing or applauding during a president's State of the Union address." To be sure, many Congressional Republicans had declined to applaud President Obama without him having labeled them traitors; to be sure, the right to dissent is protected by the First Amendment; and to be sure, in North Korea, those who fail to applaud are shot. In CSD's view, Mr. Trump's failure to seek to protect American elections from future Russian interference falls far closer to treason than does the failure by a member of Congress to clap.	6, 7, 9, 11
1-31-18	The Carson family business: ours. The Washington Post reported that Housing and Urban Development secretary Ben Carson had included his wife, his son and his daughter-in-law in multiple official meetings, and that his son had recruited potential business associates to attend an official "listening tour" conducted by Carson. (CSD had reported on 8-23-17 about Carson's likely violation of the Hatch Act – forbidding federal employees from politicking – in connection with his speaking at a Trump re-election campaign rally that day.)	17 (15)
1-31-18	CDC director resigns. Brenda Fitzgerald resigned as director of the Centers for Disease Control – the government's principal cancer-fighting agency – after the press's revelation that she had purchased tobacco company stocks while in her current position. The resignation was the latest evidence of a culture of casual conflicts of interest among high-ranking officials within Mr. Trump's administration, as reported on many occasions by CSD.	17 (15)
2-1-18	Migration nominee dislikes Islam, denies climate change. Mr. Trump nominated Ken Isaacs to head the International Organization for Migration, the United Nations' unit tasked with refugee operations. The nomination evoked a firestorm of criticism among refugee advocates, who pointed to previous comments by Isaacs to the effect that Islam is warlike and climate change is non-existent. (Climate change had become widely acknowledged in recent years as a principal driver of global migration, present and future.)	17 (6, 8, 14)

2-1-18	Science deniers dominate Cabinet. ThinkProgress reported that 12 of Mr. Trump's 24 Cabinet members, plus eight additional senior aides who advise on the environment, were client science deniers – more than in any other administration; and that almost all of the rest of the current Cabinet members had dodged the issue of climate change. The remarkable analysis appears at the link at this endnote. <sup>5</sup>	17 (8)
2-1-18	Pilfering waiters' tips – and dumping the data. Vanity Fair reported that the Labor Department generated but then hid data that demonstrated that Mr. Trump's December regulatory move allowing restaurants to require waiters to pool and share their tips in fact could result in the employers' seizure, and the workers' loss, of billions of dollars from those tips. (CSD does not take a position on the regulation; only on the hiding of data, and on Mr. Trump's conflict of interest as the owner of multiple restaurants.)	17 (7, 15)
2-5-18	Cincinnati: the rest of it. At the Cincinnati speech noted above, Mr. Trump complimented himself sumptuously, berated the "fake news," and took credit for (black) football players not having protested on-field against racial inequities during the previous evening's Super Bowl.	1, 6, 9, 11
2-5-18	Trashing the U.K., again. Mr. Trump tweeted that "thousands of people are marching in the UK because their [universal National Health] system is going broke and not working." In fact, according to The Washington Post, the system was extremely popular; the thousands of protestors who had participated in a recent march very much supported it and were merely calling for more funding for it; and the tweet provoked anger across the British political spectrum. Prime Minister Theresa May's office proudly retorted that "the NHS was rated the best in the world for a second time."	10, 13
2-6-18	Now favoring a shut-down. What? What? After having torn into Democrats for (in his view) causing a one-day government shut-down in January, Mr. Trump now said that he would favor such a shut-down if Democrats refused to fund his proposed Mexican border wall. He had previously fulminated that a shut-down by Democrats would amount to a betrayal of America's troops – thus making his new threat magnificent not only in its hypocrisy but in its disregard for America's welfare; and all in the service of building a wall that most Americans did not appear to favor, so that the president personally could "win" that negotiation.	6, 11

2-6-18	The frightened and the lazy. Mr. Trump's chief of staff John Kelly said that many young, undocumented Latin American migrants who were eligible for possible immigration relief but had not registered for it had failed to do so because they were "too afraid to sign up" or "too lazy to get off their asses." The former explanation had been well documented and found credible – in that having registered (in good faith), many of the young individuals had become easy deportation targets (in bad faith). The latter explanation was a racial dog-whistle.	17 (6)
2-6-18, 2-7-18	Military parade ordered. On February 6, the Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had now actually ordered for 2018 the massive military parade in Washington that he had earlier contemplated after attending and admiring the annual Bastille Day parade in Paris, as reported by CSD on 9-18-17. The parade would be the first of its scale in Washington since the parades celebrating the end of the first war in Iraq in 1991 and, before that, the end of the Civil War, World War I and World War II. On February 7, a Post news analysis observed that, given the absence of a victory celebration, there was no apparent predicate for the display that Mr. Trump had now ordered other than to project his personal authority and (as he had acknowledged before) to out-do the French. The Post also noted that the French parade was traditional (dating from 1880), inclusive (sometimes featuring other nations' militaries and flags), and thus distinguishable from the sort of muscle-bound and menacing parades commonly mounted by Russia and North Korea that Mr. Trump likely foresaw. Politico added that the parade would likely promote Mr. Trump's populist-nationalist political agenda, and would give him, at considerable financial expense to the nation (later estimated by the White House at $10 to $30 million), "hours of free air time while men and women in uniform visibly salute him." Numerous commentators also observed, as they had done in September, that Mr. Trump's affinity for the military and his role in commanding it betrayed a boyish fascination with uniforms, weapons and power; belied his having declined to serve in Vietnam; and suggested an insouciance relative to the horrors of armed conflict. [Continued below.]	9

2-6-18, 2-7-18	[Continued.] Politico shortly went on to report that Republicans, Democrats and veterans' organizations all opposed the idea of a parade, on grounds that it would be expensive, pointless, authoritarian, embarrassing, and suggestive of American military insecurity. The leader of the 1991 parade added that it would be unwise and burdensome to take so many military personnel away from their families and duties at a time when our armed forces were already stretched thin. On February 8, Robert O'Neill, the Navy Seal who had shot Osama Bin Laden, said, "A military parade is third world bullshit."	9
2-7-18	No murder. The FBI released a report of its extensive investigation of a border patrol officer's death in November, revealing no evidence of foul play. When the officer's body had first been discovered, Mr. Trump had tweeted that the man had been killed, that justice [vengeance] would be served, and that the episode demonstrated the need for a border wall. Mr. Trump never retracted his accusation.	6, 7, 10
2-7-18 +	Another spouse abuser falls. Porter, and the others. On February 7, a senior advisor to Mr. Trump, White House staff secretary Rob Porter, resigned after allegations of several episodes of his violent spousal abuse were publicized – allegations that had long been known and acquiesced to by his supervisor, chief of staff John Kelly, and by White House Counsel Don McGahn. The development followed the exposure of alleged violent spousal abuse on the part of chief White House strategist Stephen Bannon, Labor Secretary nominee Andrew Puzder, and Mr. Trump himself, all as reported by CSD on p. 12 of this document prior to the inauguration. To CSD's thinking, violent spousal abuse – and the toleration of violent spousal abuse – not only is grotesque in itself, but is authoritarian, period, and may connote a proclivity for authoritarian political behavior as well. We feel that the flow of violent spousal abusers through the Trump administration had not been coincidental, and not indicative of merely personal scandal, but rather reflective of a certain authoritarian affinity among those concerned. [Continued below.]	6, 9, 10, 11, 17 (11)

2-7-18 +	[Continued.] Kelly. As for Kelly, the man's once impeccable reputation for decency and sound judgment had now withered on multiple occasions, as previously reported in this document: his defense of Mr. Trump's harsh statements about a Gold Star widow and Kelly's own attacks on the widow's Congresswoman; his praise of Robert E. Lee and his claim that the Civil War could have been avoided by compromise; his insinuation that many young Mexican migrants were lazy; and now his revealed tolerance and (initial) vocal support of Porter. Staffing, generally. CSD does not fault Kelly because his distinguished military record had proven an imperfect match for running the president's office. Rather, we fault Mr. Trump for his own impulsiveness and ineptitude in staffing the government; for defying the law by allowing such top aides as Porter and son-in-law Jared Kushner to serve in highly sensitive positions for unusually lengthy periods without having obtained security clearances (on February 15, NBC reported that some 130 political appointees had lacked clearances as of November); and for squeezing a compromising obeisance out of his aides such as Kelly as they desperately attempted to flatter, defend and moderate him – all of which could end badly for our country. Not me! For many days following Porter's resignation, the White House appeared to be ferociously consumed with inconsistent (and thus, likely, some untrue) accounts as to who knew what and when about, and which staffers were to blame for, the earlier failure to dismiss Porter and the subsequent cover-up. Defending the accusers. On February 9, Mr. Trump finally commented on the matter, wishing Porter well and emphasizing Porter's claim to innocence. He said nothing about the victims specifically or domestic violence generally. Later that day, White House speech writer David Sorensen resigned when he too was publicly accused of having committed domestic abuse. On the following day, Mr. Trump tweeted a full-throated defense of the accused: "Peoples [sic] lives are being shattered and destroyed by a mere allegation. Some are true and some are false. Some are old and some are new. There is no recovery for someone falsely accused - life and career are gone. Is there no such thing any longer as Due Process?" [Continued below.]	6, 9, 10, 11, 17 (11)
-----------------	--	----------------------------------

2-7-18 +	[Continued.] The long view of abuse. For years Mr. Trump had been quick to allege unethical or criminal activity on the part of his political enemies and selected minorities prior to proof. Specifically as to alleged sexual abuse, he had tarred President Bill Clinton, Minnesota Senator Al Franken, comedian Bill Cosby, and five black men falsely accused of raping the Central Park jogger. But he had argued the innocence of the following men who had allegedly assaulted women and whose interests had aligned with his own: Alabama Senate candidate Roy Moore, RNC finance chair Steve Wynn, Fox News chair Roger Ailes, Fox News commentator Bill O'Reilly, boxer Mike Tyson, campaign manager Corey Lewandowski, and of course himself. On April 5, 2017 and November 16, 2017, CSD had addressed more thoroughly Mr. Trump's proclivity for politicizing abuse allegations, defending male abusers, and disbelieving their female victims – when expedient.	6, 9, 10, 11, 17 (11)
2-8-18	Shooting the investigator. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump accused Senator Mark Warner, the ranking member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, of improperly approaching an attorney who represented a Russian oligarch to seek to contact Christopher Steele, the author of the notorious "Steele dossier" about Mr. Trump's allegedly sordid entanglements with Russia. Mr. Trump's implication was that Warner, Hillary Clinton and other Democrats – not Mr. Trump himself – had colluded with Russia in connection with the 2016 presidential campaign. But it was unclear what he felt was wrongful about Warner's behavior, given Warner's investigatory mandate; plus two Republican senators quickly defended Warner by announcing that they had pre-approved his activities.	9, 11
2-9-18	Brand to resign. Associate Attorney General Rachel Brand – a Trump appointee and the third-ranking official in the Justice Department – announced that she would resign. The move marked yet another senior departure from the department, and the department's intense instability under Mr. Trump's hand. Commentators widely speculated that Brand had feared being placed in the position of supervising and restricting special prosecutor Robert Mueller should Mr. Trump make good on his threats to fire her immediate superior, Rod Rosenstein.	9

2-9-18	Intelligence briefings. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had long been rejecting written daily intelligence briefings in favor of abbreviated, oral ones. The Post also reported that Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner – who lacked a security clearance, lacked any pertinent professional experience, and appeared to be under investigation by special prosecutor Robert Mueller – did read the written daily briefings. Mr. Trump's well-known fondness for watching, drawing insights from and tweeting impulsively upon the observations of notoriously non-objective and conspiracy theory-driven Fox News pundits suggested to some that he literally might have been drawing more from Fox than from his intelligence team. But in all events, the combined circumstance of an uninformed and erratic commander-in-chief and an overly informed and suspect son-in-law concerns CSD.	10, 11
2-11-14, 2-14-14	More travel abuses. On February 11, The Washington Post reported on Environmental Protection Secretary Scott Pruitt's continuing luxurious spending for his official domestic travel. On February 14, The Post reported on Veterans Affairs Secretary David Shulkin having fraudulently induced the government to pay for his and his wife's European vacation travel in 2017.	17 (11)
2-12-18+	White House instability. Further to CSD's January 26 reporting on White House turnover, on February 12 The New York Times addressed the topic extensively. It wrote that after Rob Porter's Wednesday, February 7 resignation as staff secretary under a cloud of domestic abuse allegations, "a deputy chief of staff moved on. A speechwriter resigned. The associate attorney general stepped down. The chief of staff offered to quit. And that was just Friday. ... "More than a year into his administration, President Trump is presiding over a staff in turmoil, one with a 34 percent turnover rate, higher than any White House in decades. He has struggled to fill openings, unwilling to hire Republicans he considers disloyal and unable to entice Republicans who consider him unstable. Those who do come to work for him often do not last long, burning out from a volatile, sometimes cutthroat environment exacerbated by tweets and subpoenas. ... [Continued below.]	10, 11

2-12-18+	[Continued.] " 'We have vacancies on top of vacancies,' said Kathryn Dunn Tenpas, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution who has studied White House turnover over the last six administrations. ... According to a report by Ms. Tenpas, Mr. Trump's 34 percent turnover rate in his first year is more than three times as high as President Barack Obama's in the same period and twice as high as President Ronald Reagan's, which until now was the modern record-holder. "Of 12 positions deemed most central to the president, only five are still filled by the same person as when Mr. Trump took office. Mr. Trump is on his second press secretary, his second national security adviser and his third deputy national security adviser. Five different people have been named communications director or served in the job in an acting capacity. The president has parted ways with his chief strategist, health secretary, several deputy chiefs of staff and his original private legal team. He is on his second chief of staff — and some wonder whether a third may be in the offing soon." On February 13, yet another White House staffer, George David Banks, resigned because his uncompleted (or effectively waived) security clearance had demonstrated prior drug use. The resignation appeared to reflect a hasty catch-up effort relative to the dozens of uncompleted White House security checks.	10, 11
2-13-18	The Russian threat: ignored. Testifying before the Senate Intelligence Committee, the nation's six top intelligence officials concurred that Russia was expected to tamper with the 2018 Congressional elections, and that Mr. Trump had never asked or directed them to address it. The officials were CIA director Mike Pompeo, National Security Agency director Michael Rogers, national intelligence director Dan Coats, FBI director Christopher Wray, Defense Intelligence Agency director Robert Ashley, and National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency director Robert Cardillo. Four of the men had been appointed by Mr. Trump himself.	12

2-13-18	Budget proposal strips climate science. The Associated Press and The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's 2019 budget proposal called for the gutting of numerous programs dedicated to scientifically evaluating climate change. The full article appears at the link at this endnote. <sup>6</sup>	8
2-14-18	No science advisor. Numerous news outlets freshly reported that Mr. Trump had still not appointed a White House science advisor, even though he had made many major science-related decisions: leaving the Paris climate accord, (not) responding to the worst flu outbreak in a decade, responding (tardily and barely) to the raging opioid epidemic, (not) reacting to the public health impacts of a series of calamitous wildfires and hurricanes, and (hotly) addressing North Korea's nuclear program. The vacancy in the position was the longest in over 40 years. In addition, Mr. Trump's Office of Science and Technology Policy had less than half the staff as under President Obama,	8
2-14-18	Pence fibs on investigations. Vice President Mike Pence falsely stated that "it is the universal conclusion of our intelligence communities that none of [the Russian election interference] efforts had any impact on the outcome of the 2016 election." In fact none of the agencies had come to that conclusion at all – at least not publicly.	17 (7, 12)
2-15-18	Bannon stonewalls, again. Mr. Trump's senior campaign strategist and later his senior White House strategist Stephen Bannon, after long delaying his appearance, declined to answer many questions put to him under subpoena by the House Intelligence Committee about the Russian election meddling in 2016, much as he had declined on January 16 to answer the committee's questions. He now answered only a limited number of questions that had been scripted by the White House. Members of both parties considered holding him in contempt of Congress; although the consequences of such a decision were viewed as being potentially toothless.	17 (9, 12)

2-16-18	Yet another affair; more pre-election hush money.                  Following The Wall Street Journal's January 12 revelation that Mr. Trump had paid a porn star on the eve of his election to be silent about their sexual affair that had transpired early in his current marriage (as reported by CSD on that date), The New Yorker reported that Mr. Trump had had a nearly identical and contemporaneous affair with, and that his close associates had arranged for a nearly identical and contemporaneous pay-off to, a Playboy centerfold model. As CSD had written about the earlier episode, the consensual affair was not illegal. But as before, the reported bribery, lack of principle, and suppression of truth struck us as corroborative of many of the far more legally and constitutionally aberrant behaviors described in this document.	7, 10, 11
2-16-18	DACA dead? Blame the Dems. After having a day earlier caused the Senate to kill a compromise, bi-partisan immigration plan that had included relief for young undocumented migrants and even funding for his much-touted border wall, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Cannot believe how BADLY DACA recipients have been treated by the Democrats...totally abandoned! Republicans are still working hard." Of course it had been Mr. Trump who had revoked the previous administration's DACA protections in the first place.	7, 9
2-16-18, 2-17-18	Russian indictments? Blame the Dems. On February 16, after a stunning announcement that special prosecutor Robert Mueller had indicted 13 Russian individuals and three Russian organizations for an aggressive impersonation and disinformation operation in the U.S. to favor Mr. Trump during the 2016 presidential election campaign, Mr. Trump wrote in an astonishing statement: "It is more important than ever before to come together as Americans. We cannot allow those seeking to sow confusion, discord, and rancor to be successful. It's time we stop the outlandish partisan attacks, wild and false allegations, and far-fetched theories, which only serve to further the agendas of bad actors, like Russia, and do nothing to protect the principles of our institutions. We must unite as Americans to protect the integrity of our democracy and our elections." [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11, 12

2-16-18+	[Continued.] Missing from the statement was an endorsement of the investigatory work of Mueller or the Department of Justice; a robust condemnation of Russia; a vow to punish Russia; an acknowledgement that the investigation was not a "hoax" (as Mr. Trump had long maintained); or any reference to Mr. Trump's own role as America's divider-in-chief and principal antagonist to "our institutions." Rather, the statement appeared to blame other, unnamed American partisans, presumably his political adversaries, for causing trouble in the U.S. and empowering Russian wrongdoing. In this his position seemed virtually identical to that of the Kremlin, which blamed Mr. Trump's enemies for the indictments but did not blame Mr. Trump himself. And as on previous occasions, his call for "unity" appeared to be a call for everyone but himself and his supporters to be silent. Over the following days, Mr. Trump tweeted extensively – some 21 times by one count – about how the indictments had proven that he and his campaign had not colluded with the Russians (the indictments had not; the investigation was ongoing); how it was Hillary Clinton and other Democrats who had colluded (they had not); how the "fake news" media had ignored details of the indictments (it had not); and how President Obama had failed to call out or punish the Russians (he had not). Yet he still did not condemn Russia's election interference, past and projected. He also tweeted that the FBI was "spending too much time" on the investigation instead of having prevented the recent mass shooting at a Parkland, Florida high school (citing the FBI's error in not having followed a tip on the perpetrator's violent intentions) – his only initial policy pronouncement addressing the most recent in a spate of school shootings. That is, he exploited the massacre to advance a broader attack on the agency that was attempting to hold him to the rule of law. On February 21, still fuming, Mr. Trump implied in a tweet that his own attorney general, Jeff Sessions, was at fault for failing to investigate President Obama and "Dem crimes" rather than Mr. Trump's campaign and business activities – a message which, CSD expects, observers worldwide may have found vicious yet helpless, petty yet demagogic, calculated yet frantic, and in any event quite remarkable to have come from an American president. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11, 12
-----------------	--	-------------------------

2-16-18+	[Continued.] Where then was Mr. Trump's heart? Remarkably, while much of the nation was absorbed with the Mueller indictments and with the Florida school shootings, he tweeted that television celebrity Oprah Winfrey was "insecure" as host of a "60 Minutes" news program. And he played golf at his Florida resort, Mar-a-Lago.	7, 9, 10, 11, 12
2-17-18, 2-23-18	Profits from India. On February 17, The New York Times reported on the imminent travel to India by Mr. Trump's son and political surrogate, Donald Jr., to promote over $1 billion of sales in Trump-branded luxury residential units in that country, where Mr. Trump (the president) is well known (as president) and politically popular. Donald Jr. reportedly would be accompanied by Secret Service agents, at government expense. But even more significantly, he was expected to use the president's political brand to advance sales, including by offering buyers the opportunity to become "members of the Trump family" and to have dinner with himself (whose celebrity derives entirely from his father's office). The Trump branding had already enabled the units to sell at 30% above market rates, and to move briskly while other luxury buildings were beset with vacancies. The Times wrote: "The idea that the president's son would be going and shilling the president's brand at same [sic] time Donald Trump is president and is managing strategic and foreign relations with India – that is bizarre," said Daniel S. Markey, who helped coordinate South Asia policy at the State Department during the George W. Bush administration." Concerns included not only Mr. Trump's profiting from the presidency, and Donald Jr.'s apparent offering to property purchasers the hope of buying influence with the Trump administration, but also allowing the family's quest for profit to color the conduct of foreign policy. Indeed, Donald Jr. – a man who has no experience in foreign policy and no authority to speak about it on behalf of the American government or people – was planning to deliver a speech, in support of his father's initiative to help India counter China in the Pacific, at a joint appearance with India's prime minister. On February 23, in reaction to the ethical uproar, Donald Jr. canceled his foreign policy speech.	15

2-20-18	Disparaging Florida survivors. Donald Trump, Jr., the president's son and surrogate, "liked" two items tweeted by a far-right conspiracy theorist that accused one of the teen-age organizers of a nationwide protest against gun violence – a survivor of the recent mass killing at the Parkland, Florida high school – of bad faith, on grounds that the student's father worked at the FBI field office to which a threat by the perpetrator had not been reported. In sum, far from showing sympathy toward the survivors, Trump Jr. appeared to be joining in a florid accusation that they were in league with an incompetent, if not treasonous, FBI.	17 (9, 11)
2-20-18	Bankrupting the ACA. Mr. Trump took yet another pass at bankrupting the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare): by proposing new rules that would enable healthy consumers to purchase less coverage less expensively outside of the ACA – by extending the maximum length of permissible "short term" policies – thus magnifying the needs and insurance premiums of those who remained in the ACA and driving it under. Mr. Trump had previously threatened this move, as reported above in this document. CSD does not take a position on the ACA; but we continue to be appalled by Mr. Trump's attempt to drive it into the ground, without a replacement plan being in place; seemingly in part out of sheer hostility toward President Obama; and without regard to the well-being of Americans.	11
2-20-18	Trashing the accuser. Responding to the continuing accusations of one of many woman who had claimed that Mr. Trump had sexually harassed or assaulted them in years past, Mr. Trump tweeted for the world to see: "A woman I don't know and, to the best of my knowledge, never met, is on the FRONT PAGE of the Fake News Washington Post saying I kissed her (for two minutes yet) in the lobby of Trump Tower 12 years ago. Never happened! Who would do this in a public space with live security cameras running." (The actual allegation was that the incident had occurred elsewhere.) CSD's query: Was the president of the United States in this tweet making America great again?	1, 6, 7, 10, 11
2-21-18	Censoring the human rights report. Politico wrote that senior State Department officials had ordered the curtailment of discussions of women's and minorities' rights in the department's annual human rights report.	6, 14

2-21-18 +	Arming teachers. In the wake of the mass shooting at the Parkland, Florida high school earlier in the month, on at least four successive days Mr. Trump called for arming hundreds of thousands of teachers. He did not cite any data demonstrating the efficacy of such a radical and highly martial measure. The concept was promptly rejected as flat-out perilous by at least four organizations representing school administrators and police. According to The New York times, the president of the American Federation of Teachers said after conducting a telephone town hall meeting on the subject with her membership: “The response was universal, even from educators who are gun owners: Teachers don’t want to be armed, we want to teach. ... We don’t want to be, and would never have the expertise needed to be, sharp shooters; no amount of training can prepare an armed teacher to go up against an AR-15.” Separately, individual teachers said that becoming armed would be inimical to their talents and vision as educators; that funding for arms would far better be spent on the country's widespread educational budget shortfalls; that to arm teachers would amount to accepting school shootings as a "new normal"; and that teachers could accidentally shoot students. CSD does not propose a remedy for gun violence or school shootings. But we consider any perfunctory and ill-informed call for armed force as a solution to complex problems to be inherently both demagogic and (as a practical matter) dangerous, as it has found Mr. Trump's previous statements along those lines to have been.	9, 10
2-22-18, 2-23-18	Hate crimes and harassment. On February 22, The Huffington Post, citing statistics supplied by an ethnic advocacy group, reported that hate crimes committed against South Asians and Middle Easterners in the U.S. spiked 45% during the year following Mr. Trump's election, and that 20% of the perpetrators had invoked his name, his administration's policies or his campaign slogans. The group also pointed to 89 episodes of xenophobic political rhetoric during that period, most of it from public officials and candidates, including Mr. Trump himself. The following day, HuffPost reported that the Department of Education had recorded a sharp spike in episodes of racial harassment in schools in 2017.	17 (6)

2-23-18	Mad and madder in Maryland. Mr. Trump delivered a lengthy, campaign-style speech in Maryland to a gathering of the Conservative Political Action Committee, in which he evoked chants of "Lock her up!" in reference to his former rival Hillary Clinton (more than a year after the election); recited the poem that he had often used on the campaign trail – about a venomous snake biting a woman who had cared for it – to viciously demonize immigrants; and claimed that his "administration has had the most successful first year in the history of the presidency."	6, 7, 9, 11
2-24-18	Hunting the witches: Mueller, Sessions and Obama. Notwithstanding (or because of) the accumulating indictments and guilty pleas being secured by special prosecutor Robert Mueller in connection with his investigation of Russia's interference with the 2016 presidential election in Mr. Trump's favor, Mr. Trump – by way of Twitter and a Fox News interview – yet again disparaged Mueller's investigation as a "Witch Hunt"; he again blamed President Obama for tolerating the Russian interference; and he again faulted his own attorney general Jeff Sessions for not investigating the FBI instead of him. He meanwhile continued to show no interest in the actual election interference.	7, 9, 11, 12
2-24-18	House Intelligence: Rebutting the rebuttal. Mr. Trump's remarks cited immediately above were delivered shortly after the release of the Democratic rebuttal to the highly partisan memorandum about the FBI's earlier investigation of the Trump campaign that House Intelligence Committee chair Devin Nunes, with Mr. Trump's active involvement, had previously issued (see CSD's entry of January 29). Mr. Trump had caused the Democratic rebuttal to be reviewed and heavily redacted by intelligence agencies on national security grounds before its release, without having required such review or redaction of Nunes's original memorandum. As expected, after thus having already watered down the rebuttal and delayed its release for several weeks, Mr. Trump, through Twitter, now derided it and its lead Democratic proponent, Congressman Adam Schiff.	7, 9, 11, 12

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 14 – April 1, 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

2-26-18	Courage under fire. Mr. Trump said that had he been outside during the February 14 high school shooting massacre in Parkland, Florida, “I really believe I’d run in there even if I didn’t have a weapon.” Some found the statement dubious, in view of Mr. Trump's acknowledged distaste for blood and his having avoided military service, all as described by The Huffington Post and The Washington Post at the links at this endnote.<sup>1</sup> CSD, for its part, further found the statement dubious, and distasteful, given Mr. Trump's apparent life-long record of having rarely made personal sacrifices of any nature for anyone (even through ordinary philanthropy), and given his preference for golf carts versus walking the fairways. But the statement surpassed mere hollow bluster. We found it to reflect a dispiriting and dangerous lack of appreciation for the duties and deeds of real heroes, who, under fire, had spoken less and done more: President John F. Kennedy, President George H.W. Bush, Senator John McCain, special prosecutor Robert Mueller, and innumerable first responders, service members and ordinary citizens. We also found the notion that the commander-in-chief might properly risk his life under such circumstances to be dangerously cavalier and uninformed, as though drawn by a young boy from a comic book. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11
----------------	---	-----------------

2-26-18	[Continued.] We also found in Mr. Trump's bravado further evidence of his authoritarianism, reminiscent of the machismo of political strongmen whom he appeared to admire: Russian President Vladimir Putin's promotion of his martial arts skills and of his much-ridiculed, bare-chested outdoor exploits; and Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte's boasts about having personally executed drug traffickers. It was also reminiscent of the moment in the 2016 presidential debates when Mr. Trump spoke of the size of his genitals. But above all, we were stunned that Mr. Trump was posturing and preening on the graves of murdered children. We did not understand how such a man could serve as president.	7, 9, 11
2-27-18	State Department withering. The Washington Post reported that Joseph Yun was retiring as special representative for North Korea policy and deputy assistant secretary for Korea and Japan after more than three decades of service, due to Mr. Trump's disempowering of the State Department. The resignation shortly followed that of the department's senior-most diplomat, the widely respected Undersecretary of State for Political Affairs Thomas A. Shannon, Jr., for seemingly similar reasons. No ambassador to South Korea had yet been appointed, despite the ongoing U.S. crisis with North Korea.	13
2-27-18	The price of flying. The Washington Post reported that Boeing's final cost to build two new Air Force One planes – which Mr. Trump had boasted early in his presidency he had reduced from $ 4.2 billion by over $1 billion after only an hour's negotiation – had come in at $3.9 billion.	7
2-27-18, 3-1-18	Carson, although a brain surgeon, is not getting it. On February 27, The New York Times reported that Housing and Urban Development Secretary Ben Carson had spent $31,000 in taxpayer funds for a new dining room set for his office, while slashing programs for the agency's beneficiaries – namely, the poor. (CSD pointed on multiple previous occasions to Carson's ethical lapses.) On March 1, following the public exposure of the plan, Carson undertook to cancel the purchases.	17 (11)

2-27-18, 2-28-18, 3-3-18	Kushner is clipped. On February 27, The White House announced that Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner had been stripped of his temporary top-secret security clearance after over a year of viewing top-secret information. The widely suspected reason for the move lay in his complex foreign business dealings, which he had been reluctant to fully disclose in his ethics filings. The widely suspected reason for the long delay in enforcing security and ethical standards was nepotism. Indeed the standards may have never been enforced at all against Kushner but for the recent scandal involving Rob Porter, the White House staff secretary, having failed his security clearance due to a history of having committed spousal abuse. On the same day as that announcement, The Washington Post reported more specifically. It wrote that national intelligence agencies had determined that at least four countries had considered "playing" Kushner relative to his business affairs (which included his quest for foreign financing to relieve an enormous debt that he owed on a troubled Manhattan property) and relative to his inexperience in foreign policy. Those agencies had also found that Kushner had improperly had meetings with foreign officials without coordinating with or reporting to the National Security Council. CNN then added that Kushner had been meeting with representatives of various countries on behalf of the U.S. at the same time he was running his business during the presidential transition; without having been briefed by American governmental experts; and without being accompanied by other American officials – all in violation of national security protocols. Theoretical concerns articulated by CNN commentators included that Kushner could have been induced to compromise American interests for his personal gain, and/or could have become vulnerable to blackmail by foreign governments in that regard. On February 28, The New York Times reported that in 2017 two major financial institutions – Apollo Global Management and CitiGroup – had advanced large loans to Kushner's businesses after he had met with their top executives in the White House. The Times called the appearance of conflicts of interest unprecedented. [Continued below.]	11, 17 (11, 15)
---	--	------------------------

2-27-18, 2-28-18, 3-3-18	[Continued.] On March 3, The Times' editorial board wrote an extensive summation of Kushner's wide-ranging incompetence and likely corruption within the White House – for which it faulted Mr. Trump's nepotism – as linked at this endnote.<sup>2</sup>	11, 17 (11, 15)
2-27-18, 2-28-18	Hicks out. On February 27, The Washington Post reported that Hope Hicks, Mr. Trump's communications director who had long been privy to many of his crucial conversations and strategies, under direction from the White House and without claim of legal justification or right, refused to answer questions put to her by the House Intelligence Committee in connection with its investigation of Russia's election interference, insofar as those questions related to the period since the presidential inauguration. In the same hearing she admitted to telling "white lies" to defend the president. The next day Hicks – who had been dating White House staff secretary Rob Porter before he was ousted the previous week due to the press's revelation of prior spousal abuse, and who had helped defend him to the press – resigned, adding to the many high-level departures from the administration, including three previous communications directors. The next day, The Post listed the large number of Mr. Trump's immediate subordinates – extraordinary even relative to other presidents under investigation – who had refused to answer Congressional questions, likewise without legal justification: senior White House advisor Stephen Bannon, NSA director Mike Rogers, Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats, Attorney General Jeff Sessions, and one-time campaign manager Corey Lewandowski.	17 (7, 9, 12)
2-27-18, 2-28-18	Sessions vs. Trump vs. the FBI. On February 27, following the lead of House Intelligence Committee chair Devin Nunes in his recent outlandish and corrupt memorandum on the topic (see CSD's entry of January 29), Attorney General Jeff Sessions directed Michael Horowitz – the independent and well-respected Inspector General of the Justice Department who had served the Clinton, Bush and Obama administrations – to investigate the department's handling of a FISA warrant to surveil Mr. Trump's presidential campaign luminary Carter Page relative to his activities with Russians. [Continued below.]	9, 11, 12

2-27-18, 2-28-18	[Continued.] Not to be out-done, on the following day Mr. Trump tweeted that it was "DISGRACEFUL" for Sessions to have entrusted that investigation to Horowitz – whom Mr. Trump accused of being a partisan of President Obama – rather than a regular Justice Department lawyer whom Sessions and/or Mr. Trump would be able to direct.	9, 11, 12
3-3-18 +/-	Isolation; instability. Analysts and commentators at CNN, The Washington Post, The New York Times and Politico all reported that Mr. Trump and/or the White House staff had appeared dangerously unnerved by internal events of recent days and weeks. No new international crises had arisen, only disturbances of Mr. Trump's own making: out-sized turn-over of senior staff (as previously logged by CSD in this document); Mr. Trump's having grown ever angrier at and more isolated from his remaining senior advisors (Attorney General Jeff Sessions, National Security Advisor H.R. McMaster, Chief of Staff John Kelly); his having lost the confidence of such advisors (chief economic advisor Gary Cohn once again threatening to resign); his having lost the reliable comfort of his closest confidantes through resignations, scandal, both, or the prospect of same (bodyguard Keith Schiller gone; staff secretary Rob Porter gone; communications director Hope Hicks going; wife Melania fuming over reports of his tawdry infidelities and pay-offs; daughter Ivanka and son-in-law Jared Kushner reportedly under investigation for corrupt business dealings and now considering resignation, following Kushner's scandalous demotion); his having just advanced several highly impulsive policy positions (abandoning Republican orthodoxy on gun control while zigzagging on the same; and announcing major new tariffs without having consulted his advisors while casually welcoming a "trade war" with American allies); and then, despite it all, and despite new ominous nuclear threats from Russia, having traded insults with TV impersonator Alec Baldwin via early-morning tweets. The Post's version – based on 22 insider interviews, and citing the staff's "anxiety and volatility"; Mr. Trump's "anger," "isolation," "grudges," "suspicions" and "obsessions"; and the concerns for his stability being expressed by personal friends – is linked at this endnote.<sup>3</sup> CSD acknowledges the possible evanescence of that turmoil; Mr. Trump had survived multiple divorces and bankruptcies, and he appeared to have nine lives. But we note it out of our ongoing concern for our national security.	10, 11

3-3-18	Praising Xi, for life. At a fundraising event in Florida, Mr. Trump commended Chinese President Xi Jinping for having abolished term limits for his own tenure, stating, “He’s now president for life, president for life. And he’s great ... . And look, he was able to do that. I think it’s great. Maybe we’ll have to give that a shot someday.” Mr. Trump praised Xi as “a great gentleman” and added: “He’s the most powerful (Chinese) president in a hundred years.” He also boasted that Xi had treated him “tremendously well” during his visit to China in November. The mainstream media expressed widespread concern. In fairness, portions of those remarks drew laughter from the crowd, and those portions may have been intended or interpreted as a joke. Indeed, CSD believes that if any other president had made such jokes, they would not have merited attention. But not all of the remarks were jokes. And given Mr. Trump's authoritarian sentiments and his undermining of American institutions of governance and expression, we found even the jokes disconcerting. Xi is a ruthless dictator who has throttled civil society, imposed mass surveillance on his people, purged thousands of political opponents, crushed any semblance of press independence, built a personality cult, protected nuclear-armed North Korea, shielded Myanmar's genocidal government, weakened his own free market economy, stolen U.S. intellectual property, and aggressively sought to expand China's maritime territory. To the extent these were jokes, we didn't get them. And Mr. Trump's admiration for Xi was clear.	9, 12
3-4-18	No help for democracy abroad. A Washington Post columnist reported that, buried in Mr. Trump's recent budget proposal, was a provision to de-fund the National Endowment for Democracy, an organization chartered by Congress at the urging of then President Ronald Reagan. The NED makes grants to American and foreign organizations to promote fair elections, anti-corruption efforts, and other anti-authoritarian measures, and it has long been widely regarded as a pillar of America's overseas democratization efforts. The columnist wrote: [Continued below.]	14

3-4-18	[Continued.] "Trump officials often affirm the need to support democracy, but the administration's actions tell a different story. The State Department considered removing the reference to democracy from its mission statement. It downgraded U.S. participation in the Community of Democracies. Nobody has been nominated to be undersecretary for civilian security, democracy and human rights or assistant secretary for democracy, human rights and labor. And so on."	14
3-5-18	No help for democracy at home. The New York Times and Politico reported that Secretary of State Rex Tillerson had yet to spend some $120 million in funds granted to him by Congress beginning nearly a year ago to protect American elections from foreign interference. The report followed the acknowledgement to the Senate Armed Services Committee on February 27 by Mike Rogers, the director of the National Security Agency and chief of the U.S. Cyber Command, that Mr. Trump had not instructed him to strike at Russian cyber operations directed at corrupting American elections, that the U.S. was not doing enough in that regard, and that Russian President Vladimir Putin had likely concluded that he "had no price to pay" for engaging in such efforts.	12
3-5-18	Obama did it. Mr. Trump tweeted: "Why did the Obama Administration start an investigation into the Trump Campaign (with zero proof of wrongdoing) long before the Election in November? Wanted to discredit so Crooked H would win. Unprecedented. Bigger than Watergate! Plus, Obama did NOTHING about Russian meddling." None of those allegations were true. In fact, as had been widely reported by the mainstream media and President Obama's staff after the election, he had deliberately not publicized Russia's interference on behalf of Mr. Trump so as to avoid any appearance of exploiting that interference to affect the election. And that forbearance from disclosure may have helped Mr. Trump win.	7, 9, 12

3-6-18	Conway violated the Hatch Act. The Office of U.S. Special Counsel (a permanent government investigatory body unrelated to the office of special prosecutor Robert Mueller) cited Mr. Trump's senior advisor and television surrogate Kellyanne Conway for two violations of the Hatch Act, which statute forbids government employees from engaging in political campaigns. Specifically, Conway had twice praised Roy Moore under her White House colors while he was running in a special senatorial election in Alabama several months ago. The new citation recommended that Mr. Trump discipline her. CSD had previously noted Conway's ethical and legal infractions on February 9, 2017; May 31, 2017; and November 22, 2017. Mr. Trump had not disciplined her on those occasions.	17 (9)
3-6-18	Cohn Resigns. Mr. Trump's chief economic advisor Gary Cohn resigned, at least in part due to his frustration over Mr. Trump's recent, erratic plan to impose protectionist tariffs on metals imports – on which action the advice of Cohn, Secretary of Defense Jim Mattis, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, and Republican leadership had been ignored. Shortly afterwards, in reaction, Mr. Trump told reporters that “everybody wants to work in the White House.” He added: “Many, many people want every single job. ... You know, I read where, ‘Oh, gee, maybe people don’t want to work for Trump.’ And believe me, everybody wants to work in the White House. They all want a piece of that Oval Office. They want a piece of the West Wing. And not only in terms of it looks great on their résumé, it’s just a great place to work. ... So many people want to come in. ... I have a choice of anybody. I could take any position in the White House, and I’ll have a choice of the 10 top people having to do with that position.” None of that appeared to be true.	7, 10, 13
3-8-18	Zinke rides again. Media widely reported that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who had come to work on a horse his first day in office, had contracted to spend $139,000 on new office doors. Zinke had often engaged in politics and fundraising on taxpayer-funded trips contrary to law, as detailed by Politico at the link at this endnote.<sup>4</sup> As of the date of this entry, Zinke remained under investigation for such abuses by his department's inspector general. (CSD had previously called out Zinke's many infractions, above.)	17 (11)

3-8-18 +	Talking to Kim. Through South Korean officials visiting the White House on March 8, Mr. Trump, on the spur-of-the-moment, accepted the invitation of North Korean leader Kim Jong-un to meet directly with him within two months. He then had the South Koreans immediately publicize the agreement at a White House press event. The sudden agreement appeared to have materialized without input from either the State Department or Japan, and contrary to the advice of senior aides. It came on the same day as Mr. Trump had roiled Asian allies by imposing his new tariffs. No other American president had met with his North Korean counterpart, out of concern for being snookered. Just months prior, Mr. Trump and Kim had been trading unprecedented insults and threats of nuclear war. And under Mr. Trump the State Department had been denuded of ranking diplomats and specialists such as would ordinarily be necessary to prepare for or staff negotiations, as reported by CSD on February 27. For all those reasons, a mad scramble within the administration to impose reason and planning relative to the meeting seemed to ensue. Both in the U.S. and abroad, the announcement was greeted with a mixture of shock, puzzlement, cautious optimism, and deep skepticism. Skeptics feared that Kim could be playing Mr. Trump on the basis of the latter's inexperience, vanity, impulsiveness, domestic political and media needs, susceptibility to flattery, and lack of subject knowledge. The benefits of a positive outcome were enormous and obvious. Potential negative consequences for the U.S. included the reckless disclosure of classified information by Mr. Trump, his granting of ill-considered concessions, and – if the talks were to fail – a validation and strengthening of Kim in exchange for nothing, a loss of American stature, and escalated mutual belligerence. The Wall Street Journal's editorial board wrote on March 9: "There is no reason to think that North Korea has changed its long-term goals of becoming a recognized nuclear power, expelling U.S. forces from the Korean peninsula and conquering South Korea." The New York Times wrote on March 10 that the tariff and North Korea moves together alarmed our Asian allies, who had come to fear China's canny and measured ascendance in the face of what they perceived as Mr. Trump's capriciousness. [Continued below.]	10, 13

3-8-18 +	[Continued.] For its part, CSD also questioned whether Kim (or any other leader) would trust the notoriously dishonest, unreliable and often insulting Mr. Trump in any sort of negotiation or agreement of existential proportions. Conversely, we feared the potential for Mr. Trump to embrace Kim as a friend, as he had already done with the authoritarian leaders of Russia, Turkey and the Philippines. But we of course hoped for the best.	10, 13
3-9-18	A climate debate foiled. The New York Times reported that Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt had pressed in 2017 to stage a public debate between mainstream environmental scientists and climate science deniers, but that the idea had foundered due to political considerations. CSD views the concept as akin to a presidential administration staging – and endorsing – a public debate on whether astronauts truly landed on the moon, or whether the Holocaust truly occurred, simply because some fringe elements happen to deny it.	17 (8)
3-10-18	The Pennsylvania campaign (again). At a rally in southwestern Pennsylvania for Republican Congressional candidate Rick Saccone, Mr. Trump held forth with self-absorption, insults and boasts, while speaking little about Saccone. Some of the insults: toward Saccone's rival Conor Lamb ("Lamb the sham"), television personality and potential presidential candidate Oprah Winfrey ("I know her weakness"), NBC news anchor Chuck Todd ("a sleepy son of a bitch"), Massachusetts Senator Elizabeth Warren ("Pocahontas"), California Congresswoman Maxine Waters ("a very low IQ individual"), and CNN ("fake as hell"). Some of the boasts: that he had won 52% of the women's vote (untrue); that he had made the recent Olympic games in South Korea a success (untrue); that he was better looking than the tall, young, fit and photogenic Lamb (difficult to verify); that he had defied polls in winning the presidential election (true); and that his television ratings for "The Apprentice" were better than those of Arnold Schwarzenegger (so what?). To big cheers, he derided past presidents, glorified police officers for brutalizing Hispanic gang members, and proposed executing drug dealers. (CSD does not take a position on capital punishment – but we are outraged by its demagogic invocation.) He also drew from the crowd chants of "CNN sucks!" and "Build that wall!"	1, 6, 7, 9, 11

3-10-18	The Kushner business. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's real estate company was partnering with the real estate company of his son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner in several development projects. Ethics experts cautioned that Mr. Trump's dealing with Kushner over the latter's ever-deepening exposure in the investigations being conducted by special prosecutor Robert Mueller could be compromised by the business connection even more than by the familial one. Blood is thicker than mud; and for some, money is thicker than all.	11, 15
3-11-18	Dueling with Maggie, and with numbers. The New York Times' reporter Maggie Haberman reported that Mr. Trump had interviewed a new defense lawyer. Mr. Trump responded by tweeting that the "Failing New York Times purposely wrote a false story." Haberman tweeted back that she had multiple sources and independent media corroborations. Mr. Trump then tweeted inaccurately and petulantly that his current lawyers "have shown conclusively that there was no Collusion with Russia, just excuse for losing. The only Collusion was that done by the DNC, the Democrats and Crooked Hillary. The writer of the story, Maggie Haberman, a Hillary flunky, knows nothing about me and is not given access." (Mr. Trump would in fact soon change lawyers: see CSD's entry of March 22, below.) On the same day, Mr. Trump tweeted that the current Rasmussen poll had given him a voter favorability rating of "around 50%." In fact the figure was 44%, higher than almost all other polls, and lower than that enjoyed by any other president at this stage in his tenure.	1, 7, 9, 11
3-12-18	Hatch Act cascade. The New York Times reported that at least eight Hatch Act complaints had been filed against Trump administration officials since the inauguration, and that at least three of the complaints had result in findings of violations by the Office of Special Counsel. The Hatch Act forbids most federal employees from participating in partisan politics. The alleged perpetrators included son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner (at least two complaints), senior advisor Kellyanne Conway (at least two complaints, reported by CSD on March 6), and UN ambassador Nikki Haley. The Times characterized the number as large for this stage in an administration's life, and it reported that the White House appeared to have no intention of taking disciplinary action.	17 (9)

3-13-18 +	Tillerson out; also the body man; also everyone else? Mr. Trump tweeted that he had fired Secretary of State Rex Tillerson. Three hours later he called Tillerson to tell him he was out. The move came after Mr. Trump had ignored, blind-sided and demeaned Tillerson for nearly a year, since soon after the secretary's appointment. A former senior diplomat writing for CNN said that no previous president in at least a century had outright fired his secretary of state, and that the firing-by-Twitter was an unprecedented insult. (But compare: Mr. Trump had fired then FBI director James Comey by way of a cable news report the previous year.) Tillerson and Mr. Trump had disagreed on many matters, including Tillerson's condemnations of Russia; his quest for a measured diplomatic approach to North Korea; Mr. Trump's exit from the Paris climate accord and his threat to exit the Iran nuclear accord; moving the American embassy to Jerusalem; how to handle China and the Middle East; the threat of a trade war; and the overall tone of diplomacy. Mr. Trump reportedly found Tillerson "too establishment." Mr. Trump said that he had been considering dismissing Tillerson for "a long time," even though he had previously denounced such rumors as "fake news." He had also publicly ridiculed Tillerson's search for a diplomatic solution with North Korea, before suddenly agreeing to meet with its leader Kim Jong-un – without Tillerson's input. The Washington Post wrote that the suddenness and means of the dismissal had "startled and confused allies around the globe and many throughout the government." It also wrote that Mr. Trump's nominee to replace Tillerson, current Central Intelligence Agency director Mike Pompeo, would not likely be approved by the Senate quickly; and thus that the U.S. would have to manage North Korea, multiple Middle East imbroglios, and fraught trade discussions without a secretary of state for a good bit of time. The Post also wrote that Pompeo was likely to be more of a yes-man for Mr. Trump's authoritarian, nationalistic, truth-bending and impulsive style – having, for example, at times taken Mr. Trump's line on Russian election interference, and supported his seat-of-the-pants agreement to meet with Kim. Other commentators agreed, noting that Pompeo, like Mr. Trump, had opposed the Iran nuclear deal, questioned the existence of global warming, and endorsed the use of torture. [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13
------------------	---	-------------------

3-13-18 +	[Continued.] The undersecretary of state for public affairs who publicly characterized the circumstances of Tillerson's dismissal as he understood them was promptly fired as well. Later that morning Mr. Trump's body man, Johnny McEntee, was abruptly escorted out of the White House. The Wall Street Journal reported that his dismissal arose from his having failed his security clearance due to gambling and tax problems; The Washington Post eventually corroborated the gambling. (CSD does not question the dismissal; rather, why the man had been hired.) A March 14 interactive graphic in The Washington Post identified the many high level departures under Mr. Trump's presidency, as linked at this endnote.<sup>5</sup> On March 15, The Post – on the strength of its interviews with many White House insiders and friends of Mr. Trump – reported that Mr. Trump was on the brink of firing National Security Advisor H.R. McMaster, and was also considering firing or disciplining Education Secretary Betsy DeVos, Chief of Staff John Kelly, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Veterans Administration director David Shulkin, Housing and Urban Development Secretary Ben Carson, Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt, and perhaps many others. (The cases of Zinke, Carson, Shulkin and Pruitt appeared to derive at least in part from their respective, much publicized spending improprieties, as detailed above and below in this document.) For its part, also on March 15, The Wall Street Journal wrote that the following senior aides were at peril for their positions: Kelly, Shulkin, McMaster, Attorney General Jeff Sessions, Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, daughter Ivanka, and son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner. White House staff were reportedly frantic over the situation, but also engaged in doing one another in. The Post wrote: "Trump enjoys watching his subordinates compete for his approval. Many of the rumors are fueled by Trump himself because he complains to aides and friends about other staffers, or muses about who might make good replacements." CSD feared the national security implications of a White House that appeared in such patent disarray – regardless of whether Mr. Trump were in fact to terminate any of those at risk, and regardless of the reasons.	10, 11, 13
------------------	--	-------------------

3-13-18	Torture perpetrator to head CIA. Mr. Trump nominated Gina Haspel to direct the Central Intelligence Agency, in tandem with his nomination to replace Secretary of State Rex Tillerson with current CIA director Mike Pompeo. As deputy CIA director and before, Haspel had gained notoriety for her having supervised the water-boarding of captive Al-Qaeda suspects in Thailand in 2002 – i.e., using an interrogation technique that was subsequently outlawed by presidential order as constituting torture – and for having directed the destruction of video recordings documenting the brutal interrogations. Her nomination immediately raised objections on human rights grounds by members of both parties in Congress. The nomination was particularly disturbing because Mr. Trump on several occasions had called for restoring the practice of water-boarding, contrary to American and international law.	17 (14)
3-14-18	Saccone vs. Lamb. Mr. Trump and his family had intensively campaigned for Republican candidate Rick Saccone in a special Congressional election in a Southwestern Pennsylvania district that had voted heavily for Mr. Trump, urging crowds that the Congressional race was now crucial to protect the president's agenda (see CSD's entry of March 10, above). After Saccone's narrow loss to Democrat Conor Lamb due apparently to voter disillusionment with Mr. Trump, Mr. Trump said that the loss didn't matter, and that Lamb had won only because he had supported Mr. Trump's positions (which for the most part he had not).	7, 11
3-14-18	Getting over on Canada. In a private fundraising speech, Mr. Trump boasted about having lied to Canadian prime minister Justin Trudeau – about America's non-existent trade deficit with Canada – in an effort to trick him.	7, 10, 11, 13
3-14-18	Grifter bring-down. The Washington Post reported that at least six Cabinet members were under investigation for improperly spending taxpayer money on personal luxuries, including Zinke, Pruitt, Carson, Shulkin and Price (since dismissed). CSD had reported on most of the episodes as they had been revealed; but the investigatory round-up is notable, and appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>6</sup>	17 (11)

3-15-18	Sanctions against Russia, slightly. Long after Congress had passed (and Mr. Trump had reluctantly signed) a 2017 law requiring the U.S. to impose a broad range of sanctions against Russia for having interfered with the 2016 American election, and after months of continuous prodding by Congress, the administration did sanction 19 Russian individuals and five Russian organizations. The sanctions were also imposed on grounds of Russian cyber-attacks in the U.S. But senators from both parties said the sanctions were insufficient, one of them telling The Washington Post that the administration forewent imposing six other types of mandated sanctions. And the move came only after Russia appeared to have poisoned one of its former spies in the UK, to the UK's outrage – absent which event the sanctions may have continued to languish. (CSD had reported on Mr. Trump's dislike of the sanctions and his subsequent refusal to enforce them on August 2, 2017; October 25, 2017; November 26, 2017; and January 29, 2018.)	9, 12
3-16-18 +	Sessions fires McCabe. At Mr. Trump's direction, Attorney General Jeff Sessions fired former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe. The FBI's Office of Professional Responsibility had recommended he be fired for his alleged lack of candor during an internal review of how the FBI and the Department of Justice had handled an investigation into the Clinton Foundation. The review itself had addressed McCabe's having authorized an FBI staffer to tell The Wall Street Journal that McCabe had pressed to continue the investigation, so as to counter recent broadsides by the administration that McCabe had been pro-Clinton because his wife was a Democratic politician who had lawfully accepted campaign money from a close Clinton friend. McCabe was a lifelong Republican, and his investigation had seemingly harmed Clinton in her campaign. But Mr. Trump considered McCabe a political enemy for not having indicted Clinton, for having been a friend of fired FBI Director James Comey, and for having corroborated Comey's account that Mr. Trump had fired Comey to quash the FBI's investigation of Russian election interference. McCabe's firing followed Mr. Trump's long, public campaign to disparage him, fire him and strip him of his pension, as recounted above by CSD on July 25, 2017 (two entries); December 23, 2017; and January 22, 2018. [Continued below.]	9, 11, 12

3-16-18 +	[Continued.] McCabe had maintained his silence throughout those events. But directly after his firing, which he had learned of through news reports, he publicly protested that for 21 years he had served the FBI ardently and capably and that the subject press discussions were routine. His attorney said that he had been denied a customary and necessary opportunity to defend himself. And his supporters believed that he had been fired so as to humiliate him, scapegoat him, scapegoat Clinton, punish him by depriving him of his pension (which would have fully vested two days later upon his planned retirement), disparage and intimidate the intelligence community generally, and stain the FBI's and DOJ's investigation of Russian election interference specifically. The morning after the firing, Mr. Trump exultantly tweeted: "Andrew McCabe FIRED, a great day for the hard working men and women of the FBI - A great day for Democracy. Sanctimonious James Comey was his boss and made McCabe look like a choirboy. He knew all about the lies and corruption going on at the highest levels of the FBI!" Regardless of the merits of McCabe's firing – detail was not revealed – such a tirade upon an official's dismissal by an American president was unprecedented; as was the White House's meddling in DOJ's disciplinary proceedings; as was McCabe's humiliating firing-via-media (except for the prior, humiliating media firings of Comey and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson – rule-by-humiliation being a despot's style). Former CIA director John Brennan, normally measured in his comments, tweeted in response to Mr. Trump: "When the full extent of your venality, moral turpitude, and political corruption becomes known, you will take your rightful place as a disgraced demagogue in the dustbin of history. You may scapegoat Andy McCabe, but you will not destroy America. America will triumph over you." Effectively confirming that McCabe had been fired so as to discredit DOJ's Russia investigation, Mr. Trump's attorney John Dowd shortly wrote to The Daily Beast: "I pray that Acting Attorney General Rosenstein will follow the brilliant and courageous example of the FBI Office of Professional Responsibility and Attorney General Jeff Sessions and bring an end to alleged Russia Collusion investigation manufactured by McCabe's boss James Comey based upon a fraudulent and corrupt Dossier." [Continued below.]	9, 11, 12
------------------	---	------------------

3-16-18 +	[Continued.] As for McCabe having allegedly misled FBI investigators, Sessions himself had lied to Congressional investigators under oath on multiple occasions relative to his contacts with Russians during Mr. Trump's campaign, as reported by CSD above on March 2, 2017; June 13, 2017; and July 21, 2017. But Sessions had not been fired. In the following days, Mr. Trump continued repeatedly to tweet attacks against McCabe, Mueller, Comey ("lying James Comey") and Clinton ("Crooked Hillary"), alleging once again a "WITCH HUNT" against himself and assuring that the investigations had proven that there was "NO COLLUSION" between his campaign and Russia. Of course two of the investigations – by special prosecutor Robert Mueller and by the Senate Intelligence Committee – were continuing (the Republican majority in the House Intelligence Committee having recently, and controversially, closed its own investigation). The March 18 Washington Post found Mr. Trump's tweets to be riddled with falsehoods.	7, 9, 11, 12
3-16-18 +	Threats. On March 16, Michael Cohen, one of Mr. Trump's many lawyers, publicly threatened to sue adult entertainment actress and director Stormy Daniels for $20 million – that is, to financially ruin her – if she were to breach her non-disclosure agreement about her prior affair with Mr. Trump (see CSD's entry about Daniels of January 12). The threat appeared extortionate, and in any event an unprecedented attempt to intimidate an individual on the part of a sitting president. On March 25, Daniels re-alleged to Anderson Cooper on CBS's 60 Minutes both the 2006 affair and Cohen's $130,000 "hush" payment to her shortly before the presidential election. Disturbingly, she now added that she had been physically threatened in 2011 when she had tried to sell her story about the affair. Daniels said: "And a guy walked up on me and said to me, 'Leave Trump alone. Forget the story.' And then he leaned around and looked at my daughter and said, 'That's a beautiful little girl. It'd be a shame if something happened to her mom.' And then he was gone." [Continued below.]	9

3-16-18 +	[Continued.] Daniels was not a model of integrity, and CSD would not record the allegation of the physical threat, except that in the following days a spate of news and opinion items offered other evidence of Mr. Trump and Cohen having harshly and routinely threatened individuals, including television reporter Megyn Kelly. Those items appear at the link at this endnote.<sup>7</sup> While not all of the allegations are proven or highly credible, some are. Overall, the likelihood of Mr. Trump and Cohen having acted as ruthless and criminal extortionists, continuing into the Trump presidency, was difficult to escape; and for CSD, it was sickening.	9
3-18-18	NDAs. A Washington Post columnist reported that Mr. Trump had exacted from most of his aides stringent non-disclosure agreements that would survive his presidency and (among other things) prevent them from writing books about it. While previous presidents had (rightly) sought to prevent leaks as to official confidential information, Mr. Trump's agreements with aides seemingly went well beyond that. Critics said they were unconstitutional.	9
3-19-18	"Deep state" poll. Politico reported that a majority of Americans in a new poll had come to believe that government bureaucrats within a "deep state" were or might be secretly manipulating U.S. policy. The breadth of that radical perception followed Mr. Trump's frequent, furious allegations to that effect. CSD is greatly disturbed that so many Americans had come to that view. We would compare the poll results to those we had previously reported, that large numbers of Americans since Mr. Trump's election had become convinced of his views that widespread voter fraud had occurred in the 2016 presidential election (January 25, 2017); that he had beaten Hillary Clinton in the popular vote (July 26, 2017); that he should remain in office without reelection in 2020 if widespread voter fraud were then to threaten (August 10, 2017); and that the media had been fabricating news stories about him (October 17, 2017). [Continued below.]	7, 9

3-19-18	[Continued.] As for the deep state itself, CSD assumes that most federal and state offices likely do have entrenched bureaucracies that on the one hand may be slow to change but that on the other can serve as a highly professional counter to executive malfeasance, ignorance or neglect, and that in any event keep the trains running. We believe that Mr. Trump should thank his great good fortune that the federal bureaucracy can run the country and that the military can protect it even absent a stable, honorable and competent president and commander-in-chief. More urgently, we believe that Mr. Trump's tirades against the deep state are demagogic: that they constitute scapegoating, fear-mongering, and a quest for absolute authority, while betraying his disdain for effective governance and his frustration at what may sometimes be the resistance of patriotic Americans against his anti-democratic agenda. Indeed, we would compare his blaming of secret conspiracies to similar, newly rampant conduct by xenophobic, authoritarian governments and parties in Eastern Europe – a region much of which is now turning away from the democratic and pluralistic promise ushered in by the fall of communism 30 years ago.	7, 9
3-20-18, 3-21-18	The Russian buddy. On March 20, Mr. Trump called Russian President Vladimir Putin to congratulate him on winning his re-election, after Putin had throttled all material opposition. Mr. Trump did not raise with Putin Russia's meddling in the 2016 American election or its recent attempt to assassinate an ex-Russian spy in the U.K.; he instead focused on expressions of warmth and friendship, noting that he expected to meet with Putin soon. The Washington Post reported subsequently that Mr. Trump had ignored express instructions in his daily intelligence briefing paper to not congratulate Putin, but instead to raise the election meddling and the assassination; also that the invitation to a meeting had taken Mr. Trump's advisors by surprise. [Continued below.]	11, 12, 13

3-20-18, 3-21-18	[Continued.] German Chancellor Angela Merkel also congratulated Putin; and President Obama had congratulated Putin on his 2012 election victory. But they were hardly enamored or indulgent of Putin, as Mr. Trump had long appeared to be; and President Obama's gesture had come well before Putin's invasion of Crimea, his propping up of the Syrian regime, his meddling in the American election, and his grand authoritarian swing. Notably, Mr. Trump had also recently congratulated the Turkish and Chinese presidents on the structural consolidations of their respective autocratic powers. He did not congratulate Merkel on her recent election to a fourth term in office. On March 21, Mr. Trump defended the criticisms of his call to Putin by disparaging previous American presidents and effectively boasting about his own intellect and other gifts. He tweeted: "Bush tried to get along, but didn't have the 'smarts.' Obama and Clinton tried, but didn't have the energy or chemistry."	11, 12, 13
3-22-18	Congress flags Carson and Zinke. Business Insider reported that Congress had just inserted into its pending spending bill a measure strictly limiting the ability of Cabinet members to spend lavishly on office redecorations. The insertion was in response to redecorating abuses, reported above in this Addendum, by Housing and Urban Development Secretary Ben Carson (February 27) and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke (March 8).	17 (11)
3-22-18	Talking smack with Biden. Provoked by former Vice President Joe Biden's several comments that as a high school athlete he would have beaten up Mr. Trump for the latter's abuse of women, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Crazy Joe Biden is trying to act like a tough guy. Actually, he is weak, both mentally and physically, and yet he threatens me, for the second time, with physical assault. He doesn't know me, but he would go down fast and hard, crying all the way. Don't threaten people Joe!" Without defending Biden, CSD notes that Biden walked back his words six days later, while Mr. Trump's were not likely to be walked anywhere. More importantly, we believe that Mr. Trump single-handedly set this tone during his campaign and beyond, and that the devolution of political discourse has followed.	9, 11

3-22-18	McMaster out; Bolton in. Mr. Trump dismissed the respected General H.R. McMaster as his national security advisor, replacing him with the highly controversial, perpetually enraged and ultra-hawkish John Bolton, who years ago had been relieved of his United Nations ambassadorship after a short period.. Bolton, who had served in the George W. Bush administration and had later lost the confidence of Mr. Bush and other Republicans, had gained a reputation as an unpopular bully, vicious infighter and authoritarian both within the U.S. government and as a diplomat. He had long decried international agreements generally and the United Nations particularly. He had had long and close associations with anti-Muslim groups. Despite (like Mr. Trump) having chosen not to serve in Vietnam, he also had called for going to war preemptively with both North Korea and Iran, and had been (and remained) a major proponent of the war in Iraq. The Huffington Post reported that although Defense Secretary Jim Mattis and chief of staff John Kelly had encouraged McMaster's dismissal, they were "skeptical" of Bolton as his replacement. Bolton would become Mr. Trump's third national security advisor in his 14 months in office (the first having been the disgraced Michael Flynn). And the dismissal of McMaster only nine days after that of Secretary of State Rex Tillerson left remaining only two of the four "adults" that pundits across the political spectrum had hoped would contain Mr. Trump's reckless and uninformed whims on matters of international policy and national security: Kelly (at that time seemingly both compromised and marginalized) and Mattis. The New York Times wrote that after Bolton's appointment, Bolton "described the job of national security adviser as making sure that the bureaucracy did not impede the decisions of the president."	11, 13
3-22-18	Dowd out; DiGenova in (briefly). The departure of General H.R. McMaster as national security adviser came on the same day as that of John Dowd, Mr. Trump's top personal attorney defending him against special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation. It was also three days after Mr. Trump had hired Joseph diGenova, a flamboyant, made-for-TV attorney who had long claimed that the "deep state" and the FBI had been conspiring against Mr. Trump. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 12

3-22-18	[Continued.] The changes were widely viewed as signaling a harder turn by Mr. Trump against Mueller. Three days later, DiGenova – theretofore un-vetted – would step down, due to conflicts of interest as among his clients. But in any event, some of the biggest heads had rolled (McMaster's, Dowd's, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson's) – and in each case shortly after Mr. Trump had assured the country that no changes were being contemplated.	7, 9, 12
3-22-18	Wrecking the WTO. Mr. Trump imposed tariffs on $60 billion worth of Chinese imports, violating The World Trade Organization's requirements that trade disputes be first adjudicated by that body. The New York Times reported that diplomats in Geneva considered Mr. Trump to have dealt "a blow to the foundations of the W.T.O.," an organization descended from one built after World War II to help prevent military conflicts. The move sparked a threat of retaliatory tariffs by China, raising the risks of a trade war.	13
3-23-18	Bending Congress to one's will. In a press conference, Mr. Trump again proposed eliminating the Senate's filibuster rule that requires a 60-vote majority to pass most measures. Killing the rule would end what little voice the minority party (now or ever) would have in Congress, and would today vastly concentrate power in Mr. Trump's hands. The proposal was not off-handed; rather, Mr. Trump had advanced it frequently during the short period of his presidency, as reported by CSD on January 20, 2017; April 28, 2017; May 1, 2017; May 30, 2017; and July 28, 2017. For example, in July he had tweeted: "Republicans in the Senate will NEVER win if they don't go to a 51 vote majority NOW. They look like fools and are just wasting time." At the same press conference, Mr. Trump proposed restoring the line-item veto, which would enable him to bypass negotiated Congressional compromises and thus again concentrate presidential power, and which the Supreme Court has declared unconstitutional. Mr. Trump delivered those remarks in connection with his having reluctantly signed a bi-partisan omnibus spending bill and blaming Republicans for having compromised with Democrats. The New York Times reported, relative to Mr. Trump's unhappiness with the bill: [Continued below.]	9, 11

3-23-18	[Continued.] "His stated reason was its lack of funding for his promised border wall, but that was only one disappointment for the president in a measure that blocked the hiring of thousands of new border patrol agents; stopped deep cuts to foreign aid, the diplomatic corps and environmental programs; thwarted a push to fund vouchers for private and parochial schools; and even rescued the National Endowments for the Arts and the Humanities." The implications of Mr. Trump's complaint were plain: that (1) compromise is weak, foolish and wrong; (2) anything that occurs in Washington and not to his taste was both wrong and not his fault; and (3) the country would be better off if he had absolute authority.	9, 11
3-24-18	Personality cult. The Washington Post – in noting the Republican Party's abandonment of its long-standing support of immigration, free trade, fiscal restraint, resistance to Russia, international democratic alliances, and decency in political discourse, all in favor of Mr. Trump's contrary views – reported that Republican insiders saw the party's base as embracing Mr. Trump as their leader more than party or any particular principles. The Post wrote: "For many pro-Trump voters, one senior White House official said, the actual policies are less important than the principle — and the principal[is] Trump himself, promising to stand up and fight for them. Sen. Bob Corker (R-Tenn.) ... described Trump's support in stark terms: 'It's more than strong, it's tribal in nature. ... People ... who are out on the trail say, "Look, people don't ask about issues anymore. They don't care about issues. They want to know if you're with Trump or not.'" Mr. Trump's supporters, wrote The Post, argued that he was simply delivering what his base had wanted, not things he had foisted on them. CSD's response: The American (and most other) people have likely always borne a vulnerability for certain anti-democratic themes to be exploited. But since the time of the Founding Fathers, the role of our leaders has been to quell, not exploit those themes.	9

3-26-18 +	Skewing the census – this time for real. On March 26, the Trump administration made good on its earlier proposal by ordering that the 2020 decennial census ask respondents whether they are citizens. As reported by CSD on December 29, 2017, critics had decried the plan as an attempt to intimidate migrant communities from participating in the census and thus to undercount them for purposes of Congressional and other governmental representation. In addition, survey research experts, business groups and prior census officials had blasted the plan as bad science that would debilitate all manner of social and business endeavors that rely on good census data. At least a dozen states promptly announced their intention to sue the government on constitutional grounds. And on March 30, the Census Bureau's own scientific advisory committee denounced the move, warning that including the question would depress responses, add expense, and compromise confidentiality – all for political purposes.	17 (6, 8, 9)
3-28-18	EPA gags staff. The Huffington Post, and then The Washington Post, revealed a recently leaked memorandum from the Environmental Protection Agency's leadership to its communications staff instructing them to downplay the certainty, extent and risks of human-caused climate change.	8
3-28-18	Pardons for witnesses? The New York Times reported that John Dowd, who until days before had been Mr. Trump's lead lawyer in defending him against special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation, had approached the lawyers for now-indicted Trump campaign leaders Michael Flynn and Paul Manafort in 2017 to discuss granting them pardons, possibly in exchange for them not testifying against Mr. Trump. If the allegation was true, it would likely constitute obstruction of justice. Dowd denied it.	9
3-28-18	Shulkin out; Jackson in. Mr. Trump fired the chief of the Veterans Administration, David Shulkin. He announced the firing by Twitter, only moments after chief of staff John Kelly had personally notified Shulkin, making this Mr. Trump's fourth firing-by-media (after those of FBI director James Comey, demoted FBI deputy director Andrew McCabe, and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson). The firing followed scrutiny of a travel spending episode of Shulkin's (which Shulkin publicly defended) and Shulkin's resistance to privatizing veterans' health care. [Continued below.]	10, 11, 16

3-28-18	[Continued.] Mr. Trump named as Shulkin's replacement Ronny Jackson, after having consulted few advisors. Jackson was the White House physician who on television had hyperbolically lauded Mr. Trump's health after having examined him some months previous. The appointment echoed Mr. Trump's consideration of his personal pilot in February to lead the Federal Aviation Administration. Veterans' organizations, by contrast, voiced concern that Jackson had no material administrative experience. Mr. Trump had previously praised Jackson's television performance. His selection thus appeared also to echo Mr. Trump's prior appointments of people who were television personalities or whom he had said he considered to be telegenic, or (often) to be from "central casting": chief economic advisor Larry Kudlow (TV), John Bolton (TV), Vice President Mike Pence (central casting), Secretary of Defense Jim Mattis (central casting), former Secretary of State Rex Tillerson (central casting) – all as documented at the links at this endnote.<sup>8</sup> The implication, in at least several of those instances, was Mr. Trump's predilections toward image over substance, and television ratings over all.	10, 11, 16
3-28-18	Owning the Supreme Court. Reacting to a public call by a retired Supreme Court justice to repeal the 2nd Amendment to the Constitution, which ensures citizens the right to bear arms, Mr. Trump tweeted: “THE SECOND AMENDMENT WILL NEVER BE REPEALED! As much as Democrats would like to see this happen, and despite the words yesterday of former Supreme Court Justice Stevens, NO WAY. We need more Republicans in 2018 and must ALWAYS hold the Supreme Court!” In fact neither the Democratic party nor its Congressional delegation had ever called for (and did not appear to want) the 2nd Amendment to be repealed. More disturbing was Mr. Trump's implication that a president has the right and obligation to stack and control the court. [Continued below.]	2

3-28-18	[Continued.] While many or most presidents had appointed Supreme Court justices with whom they had had ideological affinities, many had appointed moderates without strong party affiliations; the liberal Justice Stevens himself had been appointed by Republican President Gerald Ford; all justices had been approved by bi-partisan Senate votes; and (to CSD's knowledge) no recent president had so explicitly called for a party or the president to own the court, which would defy the separation of powers enshrined in the Constitution.	2
3-29-18 +	The war on Amazon. By way of Twitter, on March 29 Mr. Trump resumed his long-running attack on Amazon.com, charging that the company was paying less than its fair share of taxes and abusing the U.S. Postal Service. The tweet shortly followed an allegation issued by Axios, amply supported by evidence, and widely republished elsewhere, that Mr. Trump was "obsessed" with Amazon because its founder, CEO and largest shareholder, Jeff Bezos, also owned the Washington Post, which news outlet was politically hostile to Mr. Trump. Mr. Trump repeated his attacks on both Amazon and The Post on March 31. To the knowledge of CSD, Mr. Trump had not singled out any other company for not paying taxes or for abusing the postal service, although presumably there are many against which such complaints could be brought. The attempt by a sitting president to intimidate, damage the business of, and bring down governmental scrutiny and regulation upon a specific business enterprise for political purposes and personal vendetta is not without precedent: as documented by CSD above, Mr. Trump had behaved similarly relative to Nordstrom and the NFL (September 22, 2017) and multiple heavy manufacturers (pre-inauguration – see p. 7 of this document). The latest anti-Amazon tweets, the Axios article, a New York Times rebuttal of the charge that Amazon was not paying its share of taxes, and a Wall Street Journal demonstration that Amazon was actually propping up the postal service, appear at the links at this endnote.<sup>9</sup>	7, 9, 11

3-29-18	FEMA ignores climate change. A member of Congress wrote a letter to the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) questioning why the agency had dropped all references to climate change in its new strategic plan. The plan, among other things, was intended to protect the country against future catastrophic disasters. The previous strategic plan had concluded that climate change posed a major threat to the nation, for which management and planning were essential.	8
3-30-18	Pruitt on the take. Multiple news outlets reported that, for six months in 2017, Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt had leased an apartment on Capitol Hill at a substantially below-market rate from the wife of a major energy industry lobbyist. Pruitt – whose prior political campaigns in Oklahoma had been heavily financed by the energy industry and whose climate science denial was by now notorious – had already drawn scrutiny on multiple occasions for having incurred ethically questionable travel expenses, lied to Congress, and taken virtually all of his stakeholder inputs from the energy industry, as reported above by CSD on July 18, 2017; September 20, 2017; September 27, 2017; October 3, 2017; and February 11, 2018. But the below-market apartment rental rate appeared a step beyond – appeared to amount to outright bribery.	15

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 15 – May 7, 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

3-30-18 +	Denying asylum under the guise of efficiency. On March 30, Attorney General Jeff Sessions ordered that immigration judges meet an annual quota of cases they must decide. The order was likely to cause fewer grants of asylum, even meritorious ones. An explanation follows, based on the knowledge of several members of CSD who routinely provide forensic assistance to asylum seekers in the U.S. who have fled foreign dictatorships. International and American law require that people who flee persecution in foreign countries on specified grounds (e.g., race, religion, political beliefs) and who find their way to the U.S. must be granted asylum here, if they can show sufficient evidence in court that they were persecuted. In the U.S., immigration courts operate under the Department of Justice, not the federal court system; and as such their procedures can be dictated by an administration's political considerations. Whether and on what grounds an immigration judge grants asylum in a particular case can be appealed within the department; but usually a judge's individual or aggregate decisions are not seriously challenged by higher levels of the department – thus allowing the judge's political and social views to color his or her asylum determinations. [Continued below.]	2, 6, 14
------------------	--	-----------------

3-30-18 +	[Continued.] By way of example, some immigration judges categorically grant asylum far less frequently than do others, and thus a clear bias against granting asylum sometimes appears. An additional challenge for asylum seekers is that most are poor, deficient in English, lacking in legal knowledge, and not represented by counsel in court. Accordingly, it often falls to the judges to draw out from them the facts pertinent to their cases. A judge who is categorically disinclined to grant asylum will not do that, will instead let the asylum seeker stumble through his or her testimony, will then deny asylum, and will issue an order of removal (deportation) – which may be to the country where the claimed persecution had taken place, and where the individual may well be persecuted again. The re-persecution can include harassment, religious repression, privation, imprisonment, torture or execution. For this reason many attorneys and country experts in the U.S. volunteer their time to ensure that asylum seekers here obtain fair consideration of their asylum claims in court. Immigration judges have long been overwhelmed by their case loads. Sessions had already undertaken to hire more judges, to ease those loads. But now he ordered that the judges dispose of at least 700 cases per year. In the days following the order, numerous experts, including current and former immigration judges, concluded that the cases of asylum seekers who lack counsel would now be rushed through; fewer judges would probe to learn the pertinent facts; due process (which constitutionally protects citizens and non-citizens alike) would be compromised; more worthy asylum claims would be denied; and thus more men and women who had been persecuted in their countries of origin – whether in Africa, Asia or Latin America – would be sent back, to face abuse, torture or death. Analysis by The Wall Street Journal and CNN appears at the links at this endnote.<sup>1</sup> One former judge went so far as to write in The Washington Post that judges would likely now expect to be compensated – in his words, bribed – to deport more asylum seekers. He wrote: [Continued below.]	2, 6, 14
------------------	--	-----------------

3-30-18 +	[Continued.] "Every immigration judge knows that in general, it takes longer to consider and rule in favor of relief for a respondent than it does to agree with ICE [Immigration and Customs Enforcement] and order deportation. The administration wants to use quotas to make immigration judges more an arm of ICE than independent adjudicators. In my many years on the immigration bench, I learned that repressive nations had one thing in common: a lack of an independent judiciary. Due process requires judges free of political influence. Assembly-line justice is no justice at all."<sup>2</sup> Mr. Trump's quota order followed the recent imposition by him of at least three other restraints on asylum seekers: grilling them more aggressively during their "credible fear of persecution" interviews at the border; misinforming and turning away altogether some asylum seekers there; and holding more asylum seekers in detention without parole prior to their asylum hearings, all as detailed at the link at this endnote.<sup>3</sup> CSD, of course, acknowledges the right and the obligation of the U.S. to secure its borders against unlimited immigration. But we also fervently seek to uphold our country's obligations under international law, American statutes and humanitarian principles: to protect refugees and asylum seekers, to the extent such is just and practicable.	2, 6, 14
4-1-18 +	Those Mexicans (and Hondurans, and Democrats).          Beginning on Easter morning, April 1, Mr. Trump issued five anti-Mexican tweets in 24 hours – including that the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) was unfair to Americans; that Mexico was sending "caravans" of criminals into the U.S.; and that Democrats "want no Borders, hence drugs and crime!" He also blamed Democrats for the demise of DACA, the law protecting children brought to the U.S. by their parents as undocumented immigrants. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 13

4-1-18 +	[Continued.] As to the "caravans," there was one: a group of about 1,000 – mostly bedraggled Honduran women and children – who were fleeing through Mexico to escape corruption, rabid gang violence and crushing poverty. Reportedly they travelled in a group to defend against human predators, and they posed no security threat to the U.S. whatever. Similar groups had made the journey every Easter for several years, as a combination escape and protest march. Few had entered the U.S. But now, sparked by Fox News coverage, for at least three days Mr. Trump would seek to rouse rage and hysteria over the imminent invasion of the U.S. by the "caravan." Absent from his words of the Easter season were the slightest acknowledgement of or compassion for the migrants' suffering. On April 3, Mr. Trump threatened to send troops to the Mexican border to stop the migrants from entering the U.S., and on April 4 he issued an unspecified order to do so. In fairness, both immediately preceding presidents had deployed troops there – but in support, not enforcement capacities. In any event, Mr. Trump's threat and order appeared to lack both specific planning and any obvious purpose other than intimidation and demagoguery; and in the end, these troops too would be constrained to provide support only. As to DACA, a Democratic president had created it ; Democrats had long defended it; Mr. Trump himself had revoked it; and he remained able to restore it with the stroke of a pen. His scapegoating of Democrats was based entirely on their refusal to make concessions in a proposed DACA deal that they found harsh, extraneous and illogical; and even Republican members of Congress had found Mr. Trump impossibly unreliable and incoherent in negotiating the DACA issue. On April 5, Mr. Trump boasted that he had forced the Mexican government to disband the "caravan." The Mexican government denied that, and said that Mr. Trump's plan to send the National Guard to the border was foolish and offensive. Observers did, however, expect the "caravan" to disperse soon, as it had done in previous years: with most participants going home or being absorbed by Mexico. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 13
-----------------	---	------------------------

4-1-18 +	[Continued.] As to Mr. Trump's routine insults of the Mexican government and people, on April 6, The Washington Post reported on the extensive cooperation that the Mexican government had been according U.S. border security efforts, as linked at this endnote.<sup>4</sup> Through all of that falsehood and fear-mongering, Mr. Trump had conflated the "caravan," DACA, NAFTA and drug trafficking, none of which related to one another – except that they all involved brown people – whom Mr. Trump, from all evidence, simply doesn't care for. But he did look very tough, to some. As stated above in this Addendum, CSD acknowledges the right and the obligation of the U.S. to secure its borders against unlimited immigration, just as we acknowledge the business community's countervailing but equally legitimate desire to employ an immigrant work force to the extent of an American labor shortage. But above all, we condemn any racism and demagoguery associated with anti-immigrant sentiments and measures.	6, 7, 9, 10, 13
4-2-18	Telling the Baltics that U.S. news is "fake." At a news conference with the heads of three Baltic nations, Mr. Trump called on a number of Baltic reporters, surmising (in his words) that they would report "real news - not fake news," thus implying a contrast to the American journalists present, belittling our press freedoms, and denigrating our country before foreign leaders.	1, 10
4-2-18 +	Blazing thumbs. Further in the Easter spirit, on April 2 Mr. Trump savaged many more of his usual scapegoats by way of Twitter: the FBI and the Justice Department ("an embarrassment to our country" relative to their "slow walking" probe of Hillary Clinton); Amazon (inaccurately attacking its postal arrangements and tax practices, seemingly because the company was led by Jeff Bezos, the owner of Mr. Trump's journalistic nemesis The Washington Post); the news media ("fake NBC, which is a total joke"); and the Senate's filibuster rule (as often before, seeking more complete control of Congress for himself). [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11

4-2-18 +	[Continued.] The following day, his Twitter rants were more focused – on the media. He specifically named CNN, NBC, ABC and CBS as "fakers," comparing them unfavorably to Sinclair Broadcast Group (which had recently come under criticism for forcing its 100+ local television stations to air scripted conservative commentary). He particularly alleged (again, inaccurately) that CNN executive Jeffrey Zucker – "Little Jeff Zuker" – had applied a political litmus test when hiring staff and was causing CNN to fail (CNN has actually done quite well under this presidency). On April 3, The Wall Street Journal reported that Mr. Trump had issued five anti-Amazon tweets in five days, and that, partly as a consequence, its stock had fallen 8% – a loss of tens of billions of dollars in market value. Money magazine had reported on April 2 that Bezos had personally lost $16 billion. As of April 5, the Amazon tweets persisted.	1, 6, 7, 9, 11
4-2-18	Regards for Sisi. President Trump congratulated Egyptian President Abdel Fateh al-Sissi on winning his re-election, having scored 97% of the vote in what was widely viewed as a sham contest. The warm wishes added to those recently proffered by Mr. Trump to the leaders of China, Turkey and Russia for having extended their tenures undemocratically.	12
4-3-18 +	Pruitt does it again; and again; and again. On April 3, The Washington Post reported that Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt had directed one of his staffers to shop for apartments for him, contrary to law. The Post also reported that Pruitt had given 33% and 52% raises, respectively, to two staffers without the White House's permission, also possibly contrary to law. On April 5, The New York Times reported that Pruitt had reassigned, demoted or forced out five EPA staffers who had questioned his spending practices; yet again, contrary to law. On April 7, The Associated Press reported that Pruitt had spent $3,000,000 on his personal security detail to date – three times that of any of his predecessors. [Continued below.]	17 (8, 9)

4-3-18 +	[Continued.] On April 6, The Huffington Post re-capped some 23 questionable activities of Pruitt, most of which CSD had previously reported in this document. In the aggregate they revealed a deeply self-absorbed and ambitious man – much like Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, and Mr. Trump himself – largely un-tethered to honesty and ethical norms, and repugnant role models for Americans of all ages. CSD believes Pruitt's behavior to be of a piece with his unflinching denial of climate science in the service of his political patrons, and that that larger betrayal of reason, decency and responsibility may go down in American history as one of the great scandals and subjects of ridicule issuing from this administration.	17 (8, 9)
4-3-18	Enabling Sinclair. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's chair of the Federal Communications Commission, Ajit Pai, had skewed the agency's rules so as to allow Sinclair Broadcast Group, the conservative owner of over 100 local television stations and already the country's largest local station owner, to acquire dozens more stations through its proposed purchase of Tribune Media. Mr. Trump's anti-trust indulgence of his media ally Sinclair contrasted with his anti-trust attacks on his media enemies – Jeff Bezos/Amazon/The Post, and AT&amp;T/TimeWarner/CNN.	9, 16
4-3-18	Stomping on businesses. The New York Times detailed Mr. Trump's history of attempting to intimidate and injure individual named businesses, in a story linked at this endnote.<sup>5</sup> The context was his recent, inflammatory and untruthful campaign against Amazon, which campaign had succeeded at least temporarily in depressing that company's stock price. But the Times listed many additional named business targets, together with Mr. Trump's array of epithets for them and the sources of his personal animus: for example, Amazon (because its founder Jeff Bezos owned Mr. Trump's foil, The Washington Post); AT&amp;T (because it sought to merge with TimeWarner, which owned Mr. Trump's foil, CNN); and the National Football League (following his long-running litigation with them after he had bought a team in the competing United States Football League). While other recent presidents had criticized individual businesses, they had not done so frequently, almost never by name, not through blatant falsehoods, and not to advance a personal or political grudge. [Continued below.]	9

4-3-18	[Continued.] The Times quoted a (Republican) U.S. Chamber of Commerce executive: “It’s inappropriate for government officials to use their position to attack an American company, [which action] undermines economic growth and job creation.” CSD would add that such attacks are a violation of constitutional rights, and comparable in spirit to the persecution of politically disfavored business owners in foreign autocracies such as Russia. Not coincidentally, preventing government abuse of private businesses through the Center for International Private Enterprise (a Chamber of Commerce affiliate) had long been one of the mandates of the National Endowment for Democracy, a Congressionally-chartered organization that Mr. Trump had recently sought to de-fund.	9
4-3-18	Not learning, internationally. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had been reverting to his unschooled campaign rhetoric on international affairs, after temporary tempering by experienced advisors, and often contrary to the policies that his own administration was effecting. Examples: a recent call for peremptorily exiting the Syrian civil war; recent verbal attacks on NATO allies; continuing expressions of warmth toward Russia; continuing derision of NAFTA; and implementing the move of the U.S. embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. Unlike other presidents, who also had campaigned on concepts that they might not have been able to fulfill, Mr. Trump appeared resistant to post-election realities. The Times wrote: “He has been very consistent essentially since the 1980s,’ said Eric S. Edelman, a former under secretary of defense for policy in the George W. Bush administration. ‘He knows very little about the world, about history, about the policy details. But he does have strong convictions and they are remarkably durable and apparently impervious to contrary evidence.’ ... ‘The best and most intelligent presidents are adaptive,’ said R. Nicholas Burns, a diplomat who served in the Clinton and Bush administrations. ‘They reconsider some of their views from the campaign. I worry that we are looking at someone who is not adaptive — who is not learning on the job.’”	10, 11, 12, 13, 14

4-5-18	Hispanics: rapists and fraudulent voters. At a tax roundtable in West Virginia, Mr. Trump dramatically tossed aside his prepared remarks and instead pointedly affirmed his earlier, controversial comments that Hispanics were rapists (now claiming that they were raping members of the migrant "caravan" described above), and that they constituted "millions and millions" of fraudulent voters in the U.S. Neither statement was true.	4, 6, 7, 9
4-5-18	Fox to the rescue. Noting Mr. Trump's well-known flattery by, reliance on and inspiration from highly partisan and often inflammatory commentary on Fox News, The Washington Post wrote: "Aides sometimes plot to have guests make points on Fox that they have been unable to get the president to agree to in person. 'He will listen more when it is on TV,' a senior administration official said."	10
4-6-18	Animus toward Bezos explained. In a news analysis linked at this endnote,<sup>6</sup> The Washington Post documented both the origins of and the fallacies within Mr. Trump's hatred for Jeff Bezos, the founder of Amazon and the owner of The Post. Mr. Trump had deployed that hatred in recent months and days both to punish the business of Amazon and to disparage the credibility of The Post, all as reported above in this Addendum. The Post wrote that the source of the animus was far deeper than the paper's critical view of Mr. Trump's policies and behaviors (which view, The Post wrote, contrary to Mr. Trump's allegations, Bezos has never encouraged or directed – reportedly Bezos is totally hands-off editorial policy, his personal politics are unknown, and Amazon's PAC gives mostly to Republican candidates). Rather (wrote The Post, with documentation), Mr. Trump dislikes people who are richer than himself; and Bezos is currently the world's richest person in Forbes magazine's rankings, with Mr. Trump at 766. But most importantly, again according to The Post, Mr. Trump does not use data, information or a computer, and he disdains thinkers and even functionaries who create and operate in that space (such as at companies like Amazon); instead, he is far more comfortable with and anchored to activities such as building construction, smokestack industries, and the executives and workers who staff them. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 8, 9, 11

4-6-18	[Continued.] CSD does not disdain building construction and smokestack industries, some of its members having worked in them. At the same time, CSD does not consider the Post's observations about Mr. Trump's motivations to be mere captious gossip, but rather of the most profound import for American society. A president bludgeoning a company for its founder's newspaper's outlook or out of jealousy for the founder's wealth would be despicable enough. But Mr. Trump's retrograde views about labor, industry and commerce would appear to deny not only the value of scientific and technological endeavor but the entire forward thrust of American and worldwide enterprise. Bluntly put, that denial would seem as reactionary and potentially damaging as is Mr. Trump's affinity to the politics of "blood and soil" – that is, to the racism and nationalism of an earlier era, which Mr. Trump never outgrew and appears to yearn for from the depths of his being. Epilogue: Mr. Trump had been bashing Amazon for not collecting sales taxes from its customers. But Amazon in fact had been collecting taxes in all 45 states where those taxes were in force. Remarkably, also on April 6, The Wall Street Journal reported that TrumpStore.com – the online retail unit of The Trump Organization (Mr. Trump's business) that sells trivial Trump-branded merchandise nationwide – collected sales tax in only two states, possibly contrary to law. Both the White House and The Trump Organization declined comment.	1, 7, 8, 9, 11
4-6-18	Pompeo and Bolton vs. Muslims. The New York Times reported on the extensive history of anti-Muslim statements and associations of Mr. Trump's recent appointment nominees Mike Pompeo as Secretary of State and John Bolton as national security advisor, as linked at this endnote.<sup>7</sup> Many Muslim and Jewish groups had objected to those nominations.	17 (6)
4-7-18	Trade Wars. Mr. Trump's months-long threat of a trade war with China intensified over recent days, as he placed tariffs on an increasing number of Chinese imports and as China retaliated. Whether the tariffs would stand, and whether a full-blown trade war would materialize, were unknown. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11, 13

4-7-18	[Continued.] CSD does not take a position on trade policy, just as we do not take positions on health care, taxation, general spending, gun rights, reproductive rights, and so forth. But we do take positions on dishonesty, scapegoating, and reckless, irrational governance. In that regard, we despair of Mr. Trump's continuing fulminations against Chinese trade practices without his even acknowledging the well-publicized complexities inherent in his plans to impose punitive tariffs on China, such as the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. The potentially devastating injury that a trade war would likely cause to American exporters (such as farmers), retailers, importers of foreign materials and parts, the employees of such enterprises, and American consumers generally.</li> <li>2. The deployment of tariffs to curry favor with certain American industries and their workers regardless of overall economic impact, which many economists had rated as unlikely to generate a durable resurrection of those industries.</li> <li>3. The view held by some economists that a trade imbalance with China was not inherently harmful to the U.S. – rather, that the U.S. obtains huge value for its Chinese purchases.</li> <li>4. The incendiary rattling of our relations with China at a time when we needed that country to rein in North Korea.</li> <li>5. Mr. Trump's obsession with the trade imbalance while not addressing the far more immoral and injurious Chinese practice of stealing American intellectual property.</li> <li>6. The potential disruption of world economic and geopolitical stability that the system of international trade norms and dispute resolution was designed to bolster.</li> <li>7. The broad resistance to expanded tariffs and a trade war expressed by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, other prominent business voices, nearly all economists, most of Mr. Trump's own economic advisors past and present, and (for whatever it's worth) the stock market (and thus the savings of untold millions of Americans).</li> </ol> CSD does not purport to know the solutions. But in all, we believe that the consequences of the trade issues are far too vast and precarious for America's policies to be driven by Mr. Trump's petulance, his grudges, his machismo, his nativism, his disinterest in data, his unawareness of world economics, and his quest for a few hundred thousand votes. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11, 13
---------------	--	----------------------

4-7-18	[Continued.] We also fear that if Mr. Trump were now to back down from his threats of Chinese tariffs and a trade war, the world would increasingly tire of, and view with skepticism and a yawn, not only his many unduly pugnacious diatribes, but even more appropriate statements about protecting American and democratic interests abroad that he might issue.	9, 10, 11, 13
4-7-18, 4-8-18	Tweeting the weekend away. From Saturday to Sunday, Mr. Trump tweeted: a (provocative) condemnation of China's trade practices; an (improbable) boast that he was sealing the Mexican border while "the Dems" had been "a disaster" on that front; two (furious) complaints that the Justice Department was withholding certain classified information relating to Mr. Trump's enemies from Republican members of Congress; a (brutish) exultation that the Trump Tower in Manhattan had survived a fire (while not mentioning the tenant who had died in the blaze, or that Mr. Trump had lobbied against and had long refused to equip the building with sprinklers); a (falsehood-filled) defense of ethically embattled Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt; another (furious) complaint that the FBI had protected Hillary Clinton; a (bitter) blast at The Washington Post for having just exposed his fraying relationship with chief of staff John Kelly; a (slavish) pledge of friendship to China's dictator ("President Xi and I will always be friends, no matter what happens with our dispute on trade"); and three (threatening) denunciations of a recent chemical weapons attack in Syria, blaming President Obama for not having intervened more forcefully four years ago (when Mr. Trump himself, by way of Twitter, had urged President Obama not to intervene).	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13
4-9-18	Lies, damned lies, and this president. The Washington Post's continuing Fact Checker column logged two dozen falsehoods told by Mr. Trump in two speeches on March 29 and April 5 – that is, about 12 falsehoods per speech, rather than his average of around six per day. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 11

4-9-18	[Continued.] The falsehoods related to such matters as the nature of the border wall and its construction status; America's current level of energy imports; Hillary Clinton's role in effecting an earlier trade deal with South Korea; the overall strength of the U.S. economy; the status of the recent bump stock ban (re gun control); the extent to which he had fulfilled his campaign promises; the dollar cost of America's wars in the Middle East; the legality, wisdom and practicality of his wish to seize Iraqi oil as spoils of war; the number of federal judges he had appointed; the relative size of his recent tax cut; the size of the U.S.'s trade deficit with China; whether other countries, like the U.S., award birthright citizenship; whether widespread rape had occurred within the "caravan" in Mexico; whether an immigrant who had run over many New Yorkers in 2017 had brought in 22 family members through "chain migration"; whether massive fraudulent voting had occurred in the U.S.; and much more. The Post's column appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>8</sup> CSD found the number and variety of falsehoods to be not only brazen and stunning but also gratuitous and self-propelling – as though there were few particles of truth that would not bring forth from Mr. Trump a loud and cynical untruth; few falsehoods that he could bear not to tell.	6, 7, 9, 11
4-9-18	The Panama hotel. The Washington Post reported that the Panamanian lawyers for the Trump Organization, Mr. Trump's business, had asked the president of Panama to intervene in a Panamanian court case between the owner of a Trump-branded hotel and that business. The owner had terminated the Trump Organization's management contract and had removed the Trump branding from the enterprise, in part due to Mr. Trump's unpopularity in Latin America for his having repeatedly insulted Hispanics. The request appeared to seek to induce the Panamanian president to violate Panama's laws regarding separation of powers. It also suggested a possibly improper use of American presidential power at a diplomatic level for the personal benefit of the American president, which The Post's reporter called "extraordinary."	15

4-9-18	"An attack on our country" (aka Michael Cohen).  Shortly after the FBI raided the office, home and hotel room of Mr. Trump's lawyer Michael Cohen in connection with possible bank fraud, wire fraud and campaign finance violations, Mr. Trump – flanked by his top military aides – posed for a video to react. He blamed Democrats in the Department of Justice for the incident, even though all ranking DOJ officials, including the U.S. Attorney for Manhattan who had procured the search warrant from a federal magistrate judge, were Republicans whom Mr. Trump had handpicked for their positions. He also assailed Hillary Clinton and former FBI Director James Comey by name. He would also soon publicly threaten to fire special prosecutor Robert Mueller (who had not launched the raid); publicly blame, as he had done often before, Attorney General Jeff Sessions for having recused himself from the Russia investigation (thus depriving Mr. Trump of control); and privately blame Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein for the raid on Cohen. Cohen's own attorney complained that the raid was an extreme measure. He was correct. For a prosecutorial office to raid an attorney's office to gather information rather than simply asking for the information demonstrated a strong expectation that the attorney would destroy evidence, and thus exhibited an utter contempt for the attorney's integrity, as well as suspicion of serious crimes. In the military-enhanced video, Mr. Trump called the raids "disgraceful," a "witch hunt," "a whole new level of unfairness," and – most provocatively – "an attack on our country." To that last point, CSD found Mr. Trump's equating of his own interests and the interests of his ruthless, amoral and servile attorney with America's interests to be notable: not only for its pugnacity, its self-pity, its disdain for the rule of law and its disdain for America's interests, but for its shockingly deviant perception of reality itself. Mr. Trump meanwhile had never claimed that Russia's election interference and infrastructure hacking had amounted to "attacks on our country," although all his national security staff had. 4-9-18	[Continued.] But Mr. Trump's displeasure was not unrelated to fact. In summarizing the extent to which he now appeared to be encircled by law enforcement officials, a New York Times reporter wrote: "His longtime lawyer is being investigated in Manhattan; his son-in-law, Jared Kushner, is facing scrutiny by prosecutors in Brooklyn; his former campaign chairman is under indictment; his former national security adviser has pleaded guilty to lying; and a pair of former campaign aides are cooperating with Mr. Mueller. Mr. Mueller, meanwhile, wants to interview Mr. Trump about possible obstruction of justice." Observers speculated that Mr. Trump was now sufficiently frightened and angry that he could plunge the country into any manner of domestic or international crisis. Whether he would create such havoc before being tamed by Congress remained to be seen.	7, 9, 11,12
4-9-18	Ukrainian spend. The New York Times reported that Victor Pinchuk, a Ukrainian billionaire, had paid $150,000 to Mr. Trump's charitable foundation in September 2015 – during Mr. Trump's presidential campaign – and that special prosecutor Robert Mueller was investigating the payment. Mr. Trump's attorney and unsavory "fixer," Michael Cohen, had solicited the payment. In fairness, Pinchuk appeared to be pro-Western; and he had donated much larger sums to the Clinton Foundation. But the Clinton Foundation (regardless of the ethical questions surrounding it) had been unmistakably committed to and massively engaged in advancing prosperity and social justice worldwide; while the Trump Foundation had no mission, and it did little more than contribute occasionally to sometimes quirky local charities with which Mr. Trump had relationships. Indeed the Trump Foundation had previously come under scrutiny for deploying its funds for Mr. Trump's personal benefit, contrary to tax law. For a presidential candidate to accept campaign funding from a foreign individual is also contrary to election law.	Its own category: bribery
4-10-18 +	National security purge. Beginning April 10, Mr. Trump's new national security advisor John Bolton commenced a wholesale purge of national security staff – including all who had served under President Obama – starting with homeland security advisor Tom Bossert, National Security Council spokesman Michael Anton, and two days later deputy national security advisor Ricky Waddell.	17 (9, 11, 13)

4-10-18	U.S. caves to China and Russia on human rights. In an address at the University of Pennsylvania, Zeid Ra'ad Al Hussein, the United Nations' outgoing High Commissioner for Human Rights, said that the material abrogation of human rights advocacy under the Trump administration had encouraged and enabled Russia and China to broadly shut down discussions on that subject at the UN.	14
4-11-18	Consumer law scuttled. The Associated Press reported that under the leadership of Mr. Trump's budget director Mick Mulvaney, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau – created by Congress in 2010 to prevent a repeat of the Great Recession by heading off financial services industry abuses – had not brought a single enforcement action, thus effectively defying Congressional authority.	17 (9)
4-11-18	Ryan stands down. House Speaker Paul Ryan announced that he would not run for reelection in 2018. He thus joined almost four dozen other Republican members of Congress who had announced their retirements, after having seemingly found it impossible to square their perceptions of their party's traditional principles (on trade, immigration, Russia and fiscal conservatism) or their personal principles (reason, honesty, decency, democracy) with Mr. Trump's absence of principle and with his take-over of the Republican electorate.	Maybe everything
4-12-18	Unnerved, unhinged. The Washington Post reported that staff and others close to Mr. Trump had been finding him so unnerved by the escalating Russia investigation that he was spending hours ranting about subordinates; issuing nonsensical orders; making impulsive and contradictory public comments on major issues (Justice Department leadership, the recent gas attacks by the Syrian regime, and the blow-back from trade disputes that he had initiated) – all without strategy or advice. Staff were alarmed, feeling that they could do nothing from one hour to the next except react, and contain the damage. The Post's reporting appears at the link at this endnote. <sup>9</sup>	10, 11, 13

4-12-18 +	Pruitt, endlessly. On April 12, the Environmental Protection Agency's former deputy chief of staff, whom administrator Scott Pruitt had fired for questioning his lavish spending, detailed a multitude of new revelations about that spending and other self-important conduct and self-serving ethical lapses on Pruitt's part – too many to recite here. The whistle-blower was Kevin Chmielewski, a life-long Republican and a supporter of Mr. Trump. He shared the information with members of the House and Senate, who in turn confronted Pruitt in a letter seeking pertinent documents. That letter appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>10</sup> Roughly contemporaneously, another group of senators asked the EPA's inspector general to investigate Pruitt's use of four separate government email addresses, under suspicion that the notoriously secretive Pruitt had been attempting to hide his official activities. That detail appears here.<sup>11</sup> On April 13, The New York Times reported that Pruitt's security chief had built an unusual and unseemly protective wall around him – inflating security needs, intimidating colleagues, affecting cowboy attire and swagger, and awarding a security contract to a business associate.	17 (11)
4-13-18	Libby is pardoned. Mr. Trump pardoned Scooter Libby, the chief of staff of Dick Cheney, then President George W. Bush's vice president. Libby had been convicted in 2005 for having committed perjury and obstruction of justice in connection with the "outing" of CIA operative Valerie Plame due to Cheney's anger at her diplomat-husband for having questioned the invasion of Iraq. The reason for the timing of the Libby pardon was not apparent; but it seemed almost certainly to be politically inspired, to be related to Mr. Trump's concerns about the special prosecutor's Russia investigation; a possible precursor to his pardoning individuals implicated in that investigation; and thus an inducement for them to not cooperate with the investigation. The Libby pardon followed Mr. Trump's pardoning of the sadistic, anti-immigrant and unrepentant "birther," Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio, also for political purposes. Presidential political pardons (as opposed to pardons for repentant petty criminals) had been unusual in recent decades, but now they threatened to become routine. CSD reported on the Arpaio pardon on August 13, 23 and 25, 2017. [Continued below.]	9, 11

4-13-18	[Continued.] Libby's crimes included leaking classified information – a charge that Mr. Trump had long leveled against his former FBI director James Comey and unnamed others in his administration. More generally, Libby had compromised America's national security, a charge that many observers had leveled against Mr. Trump himself.	9, 11
4-13-18	Unrelenting on Bezos. Mr. Trump ordered an investigation of the postal service's financial problems, including relative to the pricing it was offering bulk shippers such as Amazon. Mr. Trump's attempts to injure Amazon and its founder Jeff Bezos for political and personal reasons are detailed above in this Addendum in entries dated April 2 and April 6.	9, 11
4-13-18	Fiddling (i.e., tweeting) while Damascus burns. As Mr. Trump, the Defense Department and the Joint Chiefs of Staff were secretly only hours away from launching a series of missile strikes against chemical weapons facilities in Damascus and two other Syrian locations in retaliation for that country's recent use of chemical weapons against civilian populations, Mr. Trump launched a different series of strikes – by Twitter. Reacting to the release of former FBI director James Comey's new memoir, and without apparent irony, Mr. Trump's morning tweet held that Comey was an “untruthful slime ball” and a “proven LEAKER &amp; LIAR.” Mr. Trump also tweeted an attack on “Crooked Hillary Clinton.” Later he tweeted that dismissed Deputy Attorney General Andrew McCabe had “LIED! LIED! LIED!”; that McCabe was “totally controlled by Comey”; and that allegations of collusion with Russia were “all made up by this den of thieves and lowlifes!” (The fusillade of tweets denigrating Comey, the Clintons and McCabe would continue for days and weeks to come. They included a radical, incendiary and unconstitutional call for Comey to be jailed.) The missile strike then ensued. As it was occurring, it appeared at least hypothetically to risk armed conflict with Russia and Iran. Given the gravity of the undertaking, it was announced in real time on television that evening by Mr. Trump, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis and Joint Chiefs Chairman Joseph Dunford. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11

4-13-18	[Continued.] In the strike's immediate aftermath, the consensus of mainstream commentators held that it did "send a message" to Syria relative to future chemical use; that it might or might not have succeeded in reducing Syria's chemical warfare capabilities (although on April 19 The New York Times would report that within days the Pentagon had concluded that Syria's chemical program would likely continue, and that its chemical capability had survived); and that the strike did not, and was not intended to, change the course of the Syrian conflict – which Syria, Russia and Iran were winning, including through other means of mass murder. In that sense (many mainstream analysts said), the scrupulously limited nature of the strike was a "win" for those three countries, and even for North Korea.<sup>12</sup> Syrian leadership and the pro-regime Syrian "street" were jubilant; and the next day Syrian military gains against the country's rebels advanced. Mr. Trump nevertheless tweeted "Mission Accomplished!", plus a boast about American military glory. CSD does not purport to second-guess the strike's tactical or strategic goals or outcomes, except to note some others' concerns relative to the strike's planning: that a week beforehand, Mr. Trump, seemingly to the shock of his advisors, had tweeted his intention to take military action, thereby apparently enabling the Syrians and Russians to prepare for the strike and to minimize the strike's damage; that just days before the strike, Mr. Trump had called for the withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Syria; that Mattis and Dunford had reportedly advised him against the strike; and that after the strike many bi-partisan congressional voices decried the void in overall strategy relative to the Syrian conflict – never a good thing when attacking another country. Indeed, although Mr. Trump had sought to dramatically out-muscle and out-boast former President Obama in his response to Syrian atrocities, in reality his broader plan remained widely viewed as equally unshaped, and his results to date equally limited. But apart from any geo-strategy (or its absence), CSD found Mr. Trump's actions that day unnerving in their totality: 1. Whether or how Mr. Trump had considered and managed the precarious strike at the same time as pardoning Scooter Libby and launching his tempestuous domestic political tweets defied the imagination. [Continued below.]	9. 10, 11, 13

4-13-18	[Continued.]                  2. Those tweets – and the turmoil, vanity, incompetence, corruption, sedition, desperation and political weakness that they evidenced – did not likely impress either our friends or our enemies with the reliability of our commander-in-chief in moments of military crisis. 3. Mr. Trump had created an optical environment in which even good faith military endeavors were susceptible to suspicions of him "wagging the dog" – i.e., cynically diverting attention from his own political crises (in this case the mounting Russia investigation and the mounting scrutiny of his attorney Michael Cohen), at potentially catastrophic costs to the country and to individual lives. Following the Syria strike such suspicions did appear in the mainstream news, to our country's chagrin.	9. 10, 11, 13
4-15-18	A party for lawyers. New Federal Election Commission filings revealed that in 2018 Mr. Trump's reelection campaign had spent over $834,000, or more than 20% of its funds, on his legal defense fees. That brought the campaign's total legal spending since he took office to nearly $4,000,000. As CSD has written before, the campaign may lawfully do that. Mr. Trump may lawfully engage lawyers in his defense. And at least one other recent president, Bill Clinton, had engaged lawyers to defend himself during his presidency. But for Mr. Trump the phenomenon was a signpost, or a billboard, for a number of anomalies: 1. The scale and variety of Mr. Trump's legal problems so soon in his presidency, and the sheer number of lawyers and law firms defending him, was stunning. 2. Mr. Trump, a proud billionaire, could amply afford to pay his own lawyers. To induce his small campaign donors to foot the bill, possibly without their knowledge, seemed grotesque, and of a piece with his instinct for inducing large numbers of other people to part with their money for foolish reasons (casino indulgence, over-priced merchandise, worthless "university" educations) and – as a politician – to advance his own power and wealth by convincing large numbers of people that his policy agenda and his radical governing tactics were for their own good. [Continued below.]	11

4-15-18	[Continued.] An April 15 New York Times Magazine feature speculated that Mr. Trump's puzzlingly early and (since then) continuous conduct of reelection campaign rallies might be attributable to his love of adoring crowds. But CSD speculates that he also saw the crowds as an easy and pleasant way to fund his legal defense. 3. Mr. Trump had reputedly owed his prior business success (and certainly his escapes from business demise) at least in part to persistent and ruthless litigation and legal intimidation, as opposed to creative commercial insights and fair play. In addition, he reputedly had long seen lawyers as tools to circumvent or frustrate the law, as opposed to creating positive value for business and society. He now appeared to have brought those attitudes about deploying legal resources to his role in governing the country. Several of CSD's members are lawyers: (they hope and believe) of a different sort.	11
4-15-18, 4-16-18	Sanctions, no sanctions. On April 15, U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley told CBS News that the Trump administration would be imposing sanctions on Russian companies that had supplied Syria in connection with its chemical weapons program. The next day, following a protest from Russia, the White House said that those sanctions would not be imposed.	10, 12
4-16-18	"Fake news" epithet proliferates. A Washington Post columnist listed authoritarian or moving-toward-authoritarian regimes that had copied Mr. Trump's invented phrase "fake news" to denounce their enemies and a critical press – India, Israel, Burma, Syria, Venezuela, the Philippines, Libya, Cambodia, Uganda, Malaysia, Turkey, China – as well as American scoundrels who had recently done the same: Alabama senate candidate and sexual predator Roy Moore, Missouri Governor and sexual predator Eric Greitens, Texas Congressman and sexual predator Blake Farenthold, white supremacist David Duke, and others. To CSD, it seemed a wildfire of deception and anti-press sentiment that Mr. Trump had lit, and that was raging uncontrollably.	1, 7

4-16-18	Zinke protects the interior (of Montana). The New York Times reported that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke not only had spent lavishly (see above in this document) and had traveled often to his home state Montana on nominally official business, but had repeatedly acted to protect Montana's parklands and environmental security while gutting those of many other states. Zinke reportedly was aspiring to high elective office in Montana. <sup>13</sup>	17 (11, 15)
4-17-18	Trust in the FBI plummets. An NPR poll revealed that 30% of Americans and the majority of Republicans – presumably convinced by Mr. Trump – now believed that the FBI was biased against him. The implication was that, for them, Mr. Trump should not be subject to law enforcement in the ordinary course; i.e., was above the rule of law.	7, 9, 11
4-18-18	Breeding. Tweeting about Hispanic immigration into California sanctuary cities, Mr. Trump referred to " this ridiculous, crime infested &amp; breeding concept. " News commentators puzzled over the meaning of the phrase "breeding concept." But – given Mr. Trump's past references to Hispanic migrants as brutal and racially inferior, and his past condemnation of Hispanic women entering the U.S. to have citizen-babies here – many concluded that he meant that Hispanics bred in America like animals. The world over, demagogues and racists have long used similar rhetoric to de-humanize ethnic and religious targets and to characterize them as vermin. In the worst cases, that has led to genocide.	6, 9
4-22-18	The Korea deal. Mr. Trump tweeted that, contrary to the concerns of "Sleepy Eyes Chuck Todd of Fake News NBC," Mr. Trump had gained the upper hand in his (possibly) approaching summit meeting with North Korean leader Kim Jong-un, in that the North Koreans "have agreed to denuclearization." The North Koreans had not agreed to that. Negotiations had not even begun, and their outcome (if any) was the subject of wildly varying speculation.	1, 7

4-24-18	The honorable Kim. Whether hoping to gull the American people into supporting possible give-aways to North Korean leader Kim Jong-un in upcoming nuclear negotiations, or talking himself into trusting Kim, or expressing genuine admiration for the man, Mr. Trump – likely spontaneously – called the ruthless despot, liar, assassin and torturer "very honorable" – only months after having exchanged outrageous threats and insults with him.	10, 11, 12. 13
4-24-18 +	Pruitt persists. On April 24, Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt proposed a rule that would bar his agency from using any confidential scientific data, including individuals' private health data that the EPA had long considered critical to formulating policy and protecting Americans' well-being. Pruitt called the move a landmark in transparency; critics called it a landmark in silencing science. The proposal arose while Pruitt was under siege for an ever-growing raft of alleged ethical violations, with scrutiny mounting after a recent New York Times exposé of his having grown rich as an Oklahoma politician through suspect means and later hiring two of his business associates – both unqualified, and one banned for life from the banking industry – as top EPA officials.<sup>14</sup> Pruitt had also long been scrutinized for being politically and financially beholden to the energy and industrial companies which, as EPA administrator, he had been tasked with regulating, and for brazenly and unlawfully undermining the agency's mission to protect the environment. On May 1, two of Pruitt's top (and unsavory) aides would be forced to resign as a result of the publicity.	17 (8, 11, 15, 16)
4-25-18	Mulvaney for sale. Mick Mulvaney – the director of the Office of Management of the Budget and the acting director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (which regulates banks and which he is attempting to dismantle) – told a meeting of bankers that as a Congressmen he would only meet with lobbyists if they would donate to his political campaigns. The implication was that the attendees (and others) even today should bribe government officials in order to be heard.	17 (bribery)

4-26-18	Ever nearer – to immunity, and/or to the edge. In a raging and disconnected telephone interview on Fox News, Mr. Trump yet again denounced former FBI Director James Comey and the FBI and Justice Department leadership; called for his adversaries to be prosecuted; and hinted that he might intervene in the department's investigations of himself. Mr. Trump also took the occasion of the interview to boast of his record ("We have accomplished more than any president in the first year, by far"); laud his relationships with France and North Korea; claim victory in the North Korea negotiations (which had not yet even been scheduled); threaten war with Iran; defend his misbegotten nomination of Ronny Jackson to lead the Veterans Administration; stick up for his indicted former campaign manager Paul Manafort; vouch for the character of, yet distance himself from, his thuggish attorney Michael Cohen (who was under federal investigation); deny having colluded with Russia; insist that "nobody's been tougher" on Russia than himself; pummel Hillary Clinton; praise his electoral college victory over her; claim to have broad support among African Americans and in that regard compare himself to Abraham Lincoln; crow that he had "made a fortune" for NBC with his reality show "The Apprentice"; hammer the mainstream press (including "sleepy eyes Chuck Todd" of MSNBC); tell countless falsehoods (according to The Washington Post); give himself an "A+" performance rating; and blame the Democrats for everything. In the end, the rattled and chagrined interviewers cut him off.	1, 7, 9, 11
4-26-18	Jackson gone (before he arrived). Ronny Jackson – the White House physician who had lavishly praised Mr. Trump's health on-camera after examining him – withdrew his nomination to head the Veterans Administration. The withdrawal followed accusations about Jackson's drinking episodes, improper prescriptions of drugs to patients, and bullying his staff – all of which compounded the already widespread, bi-partisan concerns among senators and veterans organizations about his lack of administrative experience. [Continued below.]	10, 11, 16

4-26-18	[Continued.] The developments once again illustrated Mr. Trump's proclivity to choose and reward officials for their praise of him and their telegenic looks, regardless of qualifications. They also illustrated his administration's disinterest in or ineptness at properly vetting high level nominees, which had led to both controversial appointments and extremely high turnover. Mr. Trump, however, blamed Jackson's demise on "false accusations" by Democrats, and he demanded that one Democratic senator resign for those falsehoods. (Mr. Trump himself, of course, hadn't resigned for telling an unprecedented volume of falsehoods.) Jackson's demise followed that of Mr. Trump's initial VA administrator, David Shulkin – see CSD's discussions of February 11, March 13, March 14 and March 28, 2018. So that was two down in 14 months. Mr. Trump also had had two secretaries of state, two secretaries of health and human services, two secretaries of homeland security (one promoted to chief of staff), two chiefs of staff, three national security advisors, and four communications directors, with more changes widely expected.	10, 11, 16
4-27-18	The hunted. Mr. Trump tweeted that the investigations of his campaign's relations with Russia were a "big hoax by the Democrats," and that "there should never have been a Special Counsel appointed. Witch Hunt!" The message implied that he was continuing to consider causing special prosecutor Robert Mueller to be fired.	9, 11, 12
4-28-18	Up in Michigan. At a raucous campaign-style rally in Michigan, Mr. Trump said of undocumented Hispanics, "All of these people pouring across are gonna vote Democrat," thus yet again falsely alleging massive voter fraud on the part of brown non-citizens. He also insinuated that he might blackmail a Democratic senator who had helped foil his nomination of Ronny Jackson as Veterans Administration chief. He attacked the "fake news" media and former FBI director James Comey. He boasted about his economic and diplomatic accomplishments. He touted America's military might and the recent strike against the Syrian regime. Duly incited, the crowd chanted that he deserved a Nobel peace prize.	1, 6, 7, 9, 11

4-30-18	Impeaching Rosenstein. Republican members of Congress drafted articles to impeach Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein for failing to turn over documents relating to the Justice Department's conduct of the Hillary Clinton email and Russia investigations. The move arose presumably with the encouragement or at least the acquiescence of Mr. Trump – in that he himself was known to have considered firing Rosenstein, and in that Mr. Trump would soon publicly join in the chorus about the documents. No member of the executive branch of the government, except a president, had been impeached since 1876, and that was for taking kickbacks, not a partisan dispute. In response, Rosenstein publicly implied that the department was been "extorted."	17 (9, 11, 12)
5-1-18 +	Pruitt just can't help it. On May 1, The Washington Post reported that the Moroccan government had hired an American lobbyist and long-time friend of Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt who had strangely and secretly arranged an expensive and ethically suspect trip for Pruitt to Morocco. Implications included that Pruitt had unlawfully used his office to financially benefit a friend, and that his trip had been unlawfully arranged by a foreign agent.<sup>15</sup> The following day, The New York Times reported that another lobbyist – who had been dismissed from Mr. Trump's transition team for business conflicts of interest – had similarly undertaken to arrange a trip for Pruitt to Australia, likely for purposes of personal gain.<sup>16</sup> Contemporaneously, news outlets widely reported that the lobbyist husband of Pruitt's Washington apartment landlord (who had rented to Pruitt at a deep discount) had asked Pruitt to appoint one of the husband's lobbying clients to several EPA committees – an apparent quid-pro-quo. On May 3, The Washington Post reported that shortly after taking office, Pruitt had drawn up a list of at least a dozen countries he would like to visit, had urged aides to help him find official reasons to travel there, then had asked well-connected friends and allies to make the trips happen.	17 (11, 15, 16, bribery)

5-1-18	Pence likes Arpaio. At a speech to a pro-Trump group in Arizona, Vice President Mike Pence called former Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio "a tireless champion of ... the rule of law." Arpaio was a racist, xenophobe and "birther," who had abused and humiliated migrants in detention, then was convicted of defying a court order to stop his systematic racial profiling. Mr. Trump subsequently pardoned him.	17 (6, 9)
5-1-18	The good doctor. Mr. Trump's long-time personal physician, Harold Bornstein, told CNN that the letter describing Mr. Trump's exceptional health that he had released during Mr. Trump's election campaign had been dictated to him by Mr. Trump himself. Although the letter had seemed ludicrous even at the time, Bornstein's new confession bore significant implications: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Mr. Trump having caused his physician to lie to the American public with potentially vast implications for the voters' selection of their commander-in-chief.</li> <li>2. The brashness of the lie, given its transparency and its genesis, as though Mr. Trump had had no sense whatever as to when it was important to tell the truth, or whether and how falsehoods could be uncovered.</li> <li>3. Mr. Trump's avid selection and use of subordinates to advance his falsehoods, regardless of the risks to their reputations (examples within his presidential administration had come to abound).</li> <li>4. Mr. Trump's matchless gift for leading individuals (at times, tens of millions of them) to their disadvantage based on preposterous promises that he would take care of them in exchange for their loyalty (Bornstein had hoped to become the White House physician).</li> <li>5. Mr. Trump's ultimate abandonment of those individuals – he had directed his attorney to surprise Bornstein and seize the records from him in February 2017.</li> </ol> As for the records, they were seized two days after Bornstein had publicly disclosed Mr. Trump's use of a hair-growth drug. But unless Bornstein had given the records over willingly, it had been not mere vanity and vengeance on Mr. Trump's part but possibly criminal conduct:  [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11

5-1-18	[Continued.]            1. Those doing the seizing had included the chief counsel for his company, who had had no governmental authority to so act; another had been his bodyguard; and together they may have been defrauding or extorting Bornstein (who told NBC that he had felt "raped, frightened and sad,"). 2. Bornstein appeared to have been deprived not only of certain property rights in the records but his professional duty to protect them. Ordinarily medical records are transferred in a careful and decorous way between physicians. CSD suspects that the thuggish seizure of the records by Mr. Trump's lawyer and bodyguard was comparable to the thuggish pay-off of Mr. Trump's former girlfriends by another one of his attorneys, Michael Cohen, and likewise intended to hide compromising information – just as Mr. Trump had long withheld his tax returns and had refused to cooperate with the Russian election-tampering investigations. CSD also suspects that Bornstein, like many other cocksure but disreputable and ultimately hapless Trump associates who had seemingly come to "flip" on him during the course of investigations, had found themselves seeking to protect themselves from the whirlpool of revelations into which they all seemed to be sinking.	7, 9, 11
5-1-18	In abundance. The Washington Post's tally of Mr. Trump's falsehoods while in office reached 3,001, for an average of 6.5 per day.	7
5-2-18 +	Cobb gone; Giuliani in (and in it, deeply). On May 2, Mr. Trump – who had recently hired his friend and political supporter, the flamboyant and controversial former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani, to join his personal legal defense team – fired Ty Cobb, who had been the lead White House counsel in defending the Russia election-meddling investigation. Mr. Trump thus continued his chaotic churn of top aides, and yet again lived up to his reputation for having retained many lawyers; having dismissed many lawyers; and having been an intolerable client for many lawyers due to his disrespect for thoughtful counsel, the law, and the truth. [Continued below.]	7, 10, 17 (9, 11)

5-2-18 +	[Continued.] Later that day, Giuliani told Fox News that Mr. Trump had in fact funded attorney Michael Cohen's hush-money pay-off to adult entertainment star Stormy Daniels – thus implicitly acknowledging that both Cohen and Mr. Trump had publicly lied when they had previously denied that, and thus fortifying others' allegations of Mr. Trump's participation in campaign finance crimes, bank fraud and wire fraud in connection with that payment. Giuliani also said that Mr. Trump had fired former FBI director James Comey for refusing to state publicly that Mr. Trump wasn't under investigation – again acknowledging an earlier lie on the part of Mr. Trump, and fortifying others' allegations of Mr. Trump's participation in obstruction of justice. To be sure that his Fox appearance would not go unnoticed, Giuliani also said that former presidential candidate Hillary Clinton should be in jail and that Comey should be prosecuted. The following day, The Washington Post and The Wall Street Journal reported that Giuliani's performance – which appeared to have been devised in collaboration with Mr. Trump, but to have then complicated if not increased Mr. Trump's legal and reputational jeopardy – occurred without prior consultation with Mr. Trump's chief of staff, his press secretary, or his other attorneys. The Post wrote that White House staff were "agog," expressing "a mixture of exasperation and horror." The Journal said that staff were "stunned," "alarmed," and "completely frozen." On May 4, Mr. Trump told the press that Giuliani wasn't fully informed, and Giuliani issued a revised statement. In ongoing media appearances in the days following, Giuliani continued to fumble and revise, acknowledging that he still didn't have the facts – quite unusual for an attorney who was concertedly purporting to represent the facts of his client's case to the public, let alone in such momentous matters.	7, 10, 17 (9, 11)
5-2-18	Yet nearer. Mr. Trump again insinuated that he would directly intervene in the Justice Department's investigation of himself, by demanding Congressional (Republican) access to the department's records relating to the investigation's scope.	9

5-3-18	Feeding on Republican donors. The Huffington Post reported that the Republican National Committee and other Republican organizations and candidates had spent nearly $2 million of their donors' money on Trump owned and branded hotels and resorts, thus enriching Mr. Trump personally. This would have included contributions by some small donors who likely had never anticipated that sort of use of their funds. Compare to CSD's entry of April 15 above, relative to small donors' funds being used to pay the billionaire's legal expenses.	11
5-3-18	Kushner keeps forgetting, remembering. Pro Publica reported that Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner was still struggling to tell the truth: he had just committed to revising his ethics disclosure filings for at least the 40th time, having failed thus far to be sufficiently accurate and forthright. (Kushner had lost his top security clearance in February due to his business conflicts of interest and his susceptibility to influence by foreign governments. He was also apparently a person of interest relative to the special prosecutor's investigation of Russian election meddling.)	17 (7, 15)
5-4-18	Knives, knives, knives. At a National Rifle Association convention, Mr. Trump implied that British and French gun control laws were responsible for (or at least ineffective in stopping) a recent spate of murders perpetrated by the use of "knives, knives, knives," dwelling on grisly hospital scenes in London. As reported by The Washington Post and The Huffington Post, his comments evoked angry responses from British and French officials and citizens, some of whom pointed to their countries' homicide rates being far lower than that of the U.S., and to the potential for a firearms attack to kill many more people than a knife attack. CSD does not take a position on gun control. But we do object to Mr. Trump's inflammatory demagoguery and his reckless creation of unnecessary international friction and discord.	9, 10
5-5-18	Dirty tricks against Iran deal. The Guardian reported that aides to Mr. Trump, in an attempt to subvert the Iranian nuclear accord to which he long had objected, had hired an Israeli private intelligence company to dig up personal dirt on several of President Obama's diplomats who had negotiated the accord in order to discredit them.	9

5-5-18	No boundaries in Cleveland. Mr. Trump used a tax round-table event funded by U.S. taxpayers unlawfully to campaign for a Republican Senate candidate and to disparage his Democratic opponent. As reported by The Washington Post, at the event he also attacked the "fake news" and undocumented migrants. Objecting to the frequent practice (across three presidential administrations, including his own) of immigration authorities releasing apprehended migrants pending judicial hearings for want of sufficient detention space, he said: "We have thousands of [immigration] judges. You think other countries have judges that give them trials?" But his numbers were wrong: as of that date the U.S. had only 330 immigration judges – the dearth of which, as CSD described in a March 30 entry above, was problematic. In addition, most undocumented migrants in the U.S. are in fact already subjected to "expedited removal" without having an opportunity for a hearing before a judge, a practice that some immigration rights advocates criticize. But worst of all, other Western democracies (as well as the U.S.) do afford asylum seekers and some other undocumented migrants the right to a judicial hearing. Mr. Trump's implication that undocumented migrants didn't deserve due process at all reflected a view contrary to U.S. and international law, and the Constitution.	6, 7, 9

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 16 – June 21, 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

5-8-18	Iran undone. After months of threatening to do so and after a weeks-long media build-up, Mr. Trump, with bravura, announced his decision to terminate the U.S.'s participation in the multi-nation agreement – the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) – restricting Iran's development of nuclear weapons that had been negotiated and signed by the Obama administration, Iran, Russia, China, and several European countries. The move, if fully honored and followed by all JCPOA participants, would enable the U.S. to re-impose economic sanctions on Iran; deprive the United Nations' nuclear watchdog, the IAEA, of the ability to monitor Iran's nuclear programs; and allow Iran to resume its development of nuclear weapons. America's allies, and many former American diplomats and security officials, were outraged ("near bursting with anger," wrote The Washington Post). Issues included: the potentially negative security prospect relative to Iran; the uncertain implications for North Korean denuclearization; the risks associated with the U.S. repeatedly breaking its word (as Mr. Trump had previously done relative to the Trans-Pacific Partnership and the Paris climate accords); Mr. Trump's failure to advance any alternative strategy for dealing with Iran's regional trouble-making (in Syria, Yemen, Gaza, Lebanon and elsewhere) or its nuclear ambitions; and the risk of war. [Continued below.]	9, 14
---------------	---	--------------

5-8-18	[Continued.] CSD does not take a position on the Iran agreement or its potential demise. We are concerned, however, that Mr. Trump may have made the decision (a) to fulfill a campaign promise devoid of understanding at the time it was made, (b) to reject multi-country agreements for the sake of personal and nationalistic swagger, (c) to pursue iconoclasm and attention-getting for their own sake (or for the sake of domestic political gain), and/or (d) to spite President Obama. (Mr. Trump had already established a pattern of acting in each of those four perilous and illegitimate ways.)	9, 14
5-9-18	Banning hostile journalists. Mr. Trump suggested by way of Twitter that journalists who were critical of him should have their White House and other presidential press credentials revoked. Commenting on that hostility toward the media, The Associated Press wrote that Mr. Trump had given only one formal news conference since becoming president, a break from his predecessors' tradition; and that the daily briefings given by his press secretary had been much shorter than those of prior administrations.	1
5-10-18	Making America "respected again." At a rally in Indiana for a senatorial candidate, Mr. Trump boasted about moving the U.S. embassy in Israel to Jerusalem and withdrawing from the Iran nuclear agreement, claiming that he had made America "respected again" abroad. It was unclear to CSD who overseas had increased their respect for America under his belligerent, chaotic, capricious, untrustworthy, scandal-ridden and uninformed leadership; but he convinced his crowd. Mr. Trump also trashed the "fake news media," promised yet again to build the Mexican border wall, and extolled the American flag.	1, 6, 7, 9, 11
5-11-18	At fever pitch. The New York Times reported a series of recent events suggesting that Mr. Trump's frustration over not being able to quickly close America's southern border by way of dictates and intimidation was rising in intensity. 1. In late April he had declaimed at a rally in Michigan that the U.S. has "the dumbest immigration laws anywhere on earth." [Continued below.]	6, 9, 11

5-11-18	[Continued.] 2. In early May, he had railed to the National Rifle Association about "deadly immigration loopholes," "horrible killer gang members" and "laws that were written by people that truly could not love our country." 3. At a May 9 Cabinet meeting, he had heatedly berated Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen – a lawyer, a seasoned homeland security professional, and a hawk on border enforcement – seemingly for attempting to keep her enforcement actions within the limits of the law. 4. Later that day, at a rally in Indiana, he had roared that Democrats had given the country "the worst immigration laws in the history of mankind." In CSD's view, Mr. Trump's disdain for the law, his branding of Democrats as traitors, his demonization of Hispanics, and his tirades against ethnic "others" particularly when stirring up crowds were all straightforward exercises in demagoguery. As for his comparative and historical legal analysis, we doubt that he had much awareness of either prior immigration laws in the U.S. or current immigration laws in other countries, many of which have been more liberal than ours currently are.	6, 9, 11
5-14-18	Incitement in Jerusalem. As tens of thousands of Gazan Palestinians protested and dozens died in riots over the moving of the U.S. embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem – a move defying the pleas of many Western and other countries, and deftly exploited by Gaza's radical Hamas leadership – the embassy's opening ceremonies were notable for their in-your-face provocations, their disdain for diplomacy in a dangerous part of the world, their horrendous televised projection of America's image globally, and their bald appeal to American political partisanship irrespective of America's interests and international consequences: [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13, 17 (6)

5-14-18	[Continued.] 1. They were led by Mr. Trump's senior advisor and son-in-law Jared Kushner, who despite having no pertinent experience had been tasked with advancing the Middle East peace process, and had subsequently lost his security clearance due to business conflicts. Kushner's wife and fellow (non-experienced) presidential advisor Ivanka Trump also figured prominently at the event. As a matter of messaging (or otherwise), both appeared ebullient, and oblivious to the Palestinian mayhem. 2. An Israeli rabbi who had recently compared black people to monkeys spoke at a reception and was then asked for his blessing by Kushner and Ms. Trump. 3. The official ceremony began and ended with prayers by two prominent American pastors and Trump acolytes, Robert Jeffress and John Hagee, who were known for their anti-Islamist sentiments, among other extreme and exclusivist theological views. Jeffress, for example, had also made notoriously anti-Catholic, anti-Mormon and anti-gay statements. Hagee had said that God had ordained the Holocaust, to drive Jews to Israel and thus hasten the end of days. Jeffress and Hagee fawningly praised Mr. Trump's wisdom, courage and leadership in moving the embassy. 4. Mr. Trump's ambassador to Israel, his former bankruptcy attorney David Friedman – also devoid of diplomatic experience – likewise swooned over Mr. Trump's greatness and compared him to Abraham Lincoln. 5. The 14 members of Congress in attendance were all Republicans – the administration had invited no Democrats. Never before had an American president made the country's general support of Israel a partisan affair.	10, 11, 13, 17 (6)
5-14-18	Hiding the toxins. Politico reported that, since the beginning of the year, the White House and the Environmental Protection Agency had been withholding a report by the Department of Health and Human Services on a nationwide water contamination crisis resulting from certain industrial and military uses of chemicals. Internal correspondence indicated that the subterfuge was for specifically political purposes: to quell awareness of pollution and polluters, even at the expense public health.	17 (8)

5-15-18	Law and Order. At an event commemorating fallen police officers, Mr. Trump banded on Hispanic gangs, sanctuary cities, illegal immigration, those who criticize police abuses, and measures that he viewed as being soft on crime. He also boasted of his controversial program to arm local police units with free, surplus, heavy military weaponry. CSD deeply respects and admires our police officers. But we are wary of appeals for police immunity or for emotionally-pumped calls for police department aggrandizement, especially when combined with racial and xenophobic animus. We also question the motives of a law-and-order president who had pardoned several prominent criminals for political purposes; whose pre-presidential life had been characterized by associations with criminals; and who himself appeared to have repeatedly skirted if not violated the law in his business and political affairs. But for us it was less a matter of hypocrisy than of autocracy.	6, 9
5-16-18 +	Hounding them. At a meeting with conservative California leaders in Washington, Mr. Trump referred to some or all undocumented immigrants as "animals" – for at least the sixth time, as documented by The Huffington Post.<sup>1</sup> (Whether he had been referring to some or to all immigrants became a question of controversy but was irrelevant; he had not so repeatedly referred to whites or white criminals as animals; and he had typically failed to distinguish between brown migrant criminals and non-criminals when attacking them in the past.) On April 18, CSD had cited the ugly and dangerous history of demagogues referring to ethnic minorities as sub-humans. Following this new episode, Vox cited psychological studies that demonstrated graphically and dramatically how such dehumanization works on populations, plus preliminary indications that Mr. Trump was achieving that with ours.<sup>2</sup> Mr. Trump also urged Attorney General Jeff Sessions to prosecute Mr. Trump's antagonist, the mayor of Oakland, for having publicly warned immigrants of an imminent federal dragnet in February. (Sessions was present, but did not respond; he had previously declined to prosecute the mayor at Mr. Trump's request, presumably because he felt that that prosecution would have been unlawful.)  [Continued below.]	6, 9, 11

5-16-18 +	[Continued.] On May 23, at a Long Island site of Hispanic gang violence, Mr. Trump, defiantly, used the term "animals" again to describe the gang members, detailing their crimes lugubriously.	6, 9, 11
5-16-18	Pruitt misleads Congress. Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt repeatedly lied at a Senate hearing, as reported by The New York Times and The Washington Post. A bring-down of his torrent of ethical and legal offenses – most of them previously reported by CSD – appears at this link to The Post. <sup>3</sup> Now under 16 investigations, he continued to enjoy Mr. Trump's support.	17 (7, 11, 15, 16)
5-16-18	Blaming Dems for sundering migrant families. Having drawn much criticism for seeking to deter Central American migrants by separating children from their parents, on May 16 Mr. Trump falsely blamed Democrats for mandating that. In truth, as The Associated Press reported, in 2008 a unanimous Congress had created shelters for migrant children and their parents, and President George W. Bush had signed the law; it was Mr. Trump who was newly and deliberately tearing apart families by arresting the parents and sending the children to shelters. He would repeat the allegation about Democrats on May 26 and beyond.	7, 11
5-17-18	More witch talk. Via Twitter, Mr. Trump yet again complained of " the greatest Witch Hunt in American History, " and he wrote (yet again) that the Democrats, not he, had colluded with Russia in the 2016 presidential campaign. He added: " Despite the disgusting, illegal and unwarranted Witch Hunt, we have had the most successful first 17 month Administration in U.S. history – by far! Sorry to the Fake News Media ... . " None of that was true.	1, 7, 9, 11, 12
5-18-18 +	Punishing Amazon. On May 18, The Los Angeles Times and The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had several times personally pressed the postmaster general to double Amazon's postage rates for package deliveries; and that she had refused because that would have broken the postal service's contract with Amazon, as well as jeopardized an arrangement that she considered profitable for the service. Two days later, Mr. Trump's chief economic advisor, Larry Kudlow, told ABC News that he had no opinion on the matter, indicating that Mr. Trump was acting individually rather than as a matter of considered government policy. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11

5-18-18 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's intervention was remarkable for its apparent personal and political motivation – his animus toward Jeff Bezos, Amazon's founder and the owner of Mr. Trump's nemesis, The Post. To CSD's knowledge, Mr. Trump (or any other recent president) had not intervened so directly in any other commercial relationship between the government and one of its customers or suppliers, let alone for personal reasons. We had presented in detail the legal import of Mr. Trump's attempt to destroy Bezos and the Amazon enterprise in our entries of July 24, 2017; and March 29, April 2, April 3, April 5, and April 13, 2018.	9, 10, 11
5-19-18+	Many tries at conspiracy; DOJ briefing. In the wake of the recent (false) claim by Mr. Trump and his allies that the FBI had infiltrated his election campaign (rather, it had merely tasked an informant with engaging several campaign figures who had had suspicious Russia ties in order to ensure that they were not susceptible to blackmail, an apparently common FBI operation), on May 19 CNN listed many previous (false) conspiracy theories that Mr. Trump and his allies had advanced since his election: that President Obama had tapped the wires in Trump Tower; that the Obama administration had "unmasked" and spied on Trump transition officials; that an anti-Trump secret society existed within the FBI; and that the FBI used the unproven Steele dossier of Mr. Trump's activities in Russia to initiate its investigation of his campaign's ties with that country, thus tainting the entire investigation. Soon afterwards, CNN recalled several of Mr. Trump's conspiracy theories that had pre-dated his election: that President Obama had not been born in the U.S.; that Senator Ted Cruz's father may have participated in the assassination of President Kennedy; and that MSNBC host Joe Scarborough may have murdered one of his staffers. On May 29, the New York Times added two more: that Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia may have been murdered; and that the U.S. government had known in advance of the September 11 attacks. But Mr. Trump persisted in alleging infiltration, and on May 20 he tweeted a threat that he would imminently order that the Justice Department investigate whether under President Obama the FBI had infiltrated his campaign for political purposes – a move that bore the potential to spark a crisis within the department. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11, 12

5-19-18+	[Continued.] Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein shortly responded, by way of a perceived compromise but nevertheless remarkably, that the department's inspector general (its internal ethical watchdog, not a criminal prosecutorial unit) would look into the matter. And on May 22, the Justice Department agreed to brief Congressional Republicans on May 24 on the activities of the FBI informant – initially, and astonishingly, excluding Democrats, until the Democrats demanded inclusion. Disturbingly, one of Mr. Trump's lawyers and his chief of staff John Kelly also attended the briefing, even though his own campaign was a subject of the criminal investigation. The series of episodes represented the first instance in which Mr. Trump had gone beyond complaints and bluster to actually intervene in the Justice Department's investigation; and they appeared to be unprecedented since President Nixon's comparable abuses. No evidence of spying visibly emerged from the May 24 briefing, or beyond. But for weeks after the initial claim, Mr. Trump would continue almost daily and sometimes more often, typically by Twitter, to allege, without evidence, that a "criminal deep state" had spied on his campaign, that the investigation of his campaign was "rigged," that "corrupt" Democrats (including within the FBI) were dogging him because they regretted losing the presidential election, that Democrats (particularly Hillary Clinton) rather than his campaign should be investigated, that the investigators would tamper with the mid-term congressional elections, and the like	7, 9, 11, 12
5-19-18 +	Like mad. On May 19, The New York Times reported that Donald Trump, Jr. had been offered illegal campaign assistance by the governments of Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates in 2016 and that special prosecutor Robert Mueller was investigating that circumstance. The following morning (a Sunday), in an angry stream of six tweets (containing 11 misstatements, according to CNN), Mr. Trump condemned the "Failing and Crooked" Times, "Crooked" Hillary Clinton, and the "Witch Hunt" against him (which he maintained was being perpetrated by Democrats within the FBI). He also called for "real Americans" to "get tough" on the "Scam," and he spun out extensive conspiracy theories about the FBI protecting Democrats. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 11

5-19-18 +	[Continued.] But by now such allegations, threats and tirades had become routine, and barely newsworthy. Had any previous president issued even one of them, one time, it would have rocked the nation. The public's tolerance for the degradation of discourse, honesty and the rule of law under Mr. Trump's tenure was momentous.	1, 7, 9, 11
5-20-18	Pruitt is resisted. The Washington Post identified numerous deregulatory moves by Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt – including the easing of requirements for storing toxic waste – that were being effectively resisted by agency staff, by other federal agencies, or by private litigants for failing to adhere to scientific evidence and/or appropriate internal review. <sup>4</sup> Other matters that had been effectively resisted: easing truck emissions, easing automobile fuel efficiency standards, and easing limits on methane gas leaks from hydrocarbon extraction. More than 70 lawsuits had been filed, and the EPA had lost four out of the six that had come to conclusion. But a far larger number of Pruitt's deregulatory efforts appeared to have advanced.	17 (8)
5-21-18	Kim on a coin. The Trump administration struck a commemorative coin featuring the faces of Mr. Trump and North Korea's brutal dictator Kim Jong-un in advance of their planned summit meeting in June. Never before had a commemorative coin paired a president with a despot.	12
5-21-18	Data security – who, me? Politico reported that Mr. Trump refused to use a secure cell phone for his personal communications, despite his long-standing and continuing condemnations of Hillary Clinton for having used an unsecured email server while secretary of state.	10
5-23-18	Twitter ban unconstitutional. A federal district court in New York ruled that Mr. Trump's practice of blocking critics from responding to his tweets violated the First Amendment's guarantee of free speech in a public forum.	3
5-24-18	Taking the knee: treason? Reacting to the National Football League's decision to ban its players from conducting on-field protests of perceived racial injustice during the playing of the national anthem, Mr. Trump suggested that protesting players should leave the country.	3, 6

5-24-18 +	Kim off the coin, into the dumpster, and back. On May 24, Mr. Trump abruptly canceled his planned June 12 nuclear summit with North Korea, following a flurry of mixed and at times inflammatory messages from himself, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Vice President Mike Pence and National Security Advisor John Bolton as to America's expectations for North Korea's concessions, and amid the realization that North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un was not prepared to unilaterally disarm (as most observers had long predicted). The summit's plans had followed precipitously a months'-long exchange of insults between Mr. Trump and Kim; it was canceled without prior notice to America's ally, South Korea, which had facilitated it; and it ended with Mr. Trump renewing veiled threats of military action against North Korea. Mr. Trump's supporters characterized his declaration of the summit's end as a "gutsy" move; his critics as the fumbling of a recklessly executed gambit, an unnecessary insult to Kim, an embarrassment to South Korea, and a confidence-killer and strategic opening for China. Within days, in fact, the summit was back on. In astonishing public remarks, on June 6 Mr. Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani said it was because Kim had gotten "on his hands and knees and begged" for the meeting to be restored. As Politico would report on June 7, on the threshold of the negotiations, Mr. Trump appeared to have foregone most of the customary preparatory security briefings.<sup>5</sup> CSD continues to not comment on the merits of specific U.S. diplomatic and strategic initiatives except to the extent that they appear to coddle dictators, gratuitously abrogate international comity, attempt to humiliate former presidents, damage America's standing by betraying massive executive disorder, or otherwise jeopardize or discredit our democracy. Mr. Trump's lead-up to the North Korea summit appeared to have evidenced at least four of those exceptions. Nevertheless, as ever, we continued to hope for the best.	10, 13

5-24-18	No asylum. In a Fox News interview, Mr. Trump again erroneously claimed that the U.S. employed "thousands" of immigration judges to try asylum cases (there are fewer than 400). He also said without explanation that the asylum system was "corrupt." And he hinted that there should be no judges whatever; that asylum seekers should be denied an opportunity to advance their claims; and that everyone who sought to enter our southern border should simply be turned away by security forces. Notably, his practice of imprisoning migrants and harshly separating them from their children (see CSD's entry of May 16, above) was being applied to asylum seekers who had lawfully presented themselves at the border. In all, Mr. Trump's rejection of the convention of asylum (and of due process for asylum seekers) represented an abrogation of one of the most revered doctrines of international human rights, as embodied in the 1951 United Nations Refugee Convention that was adopted following the Holocaust, and that currently is honored by democracies (and even many non-democracies) worldwide.	6, 14
5-25-18	Funny (Russian) money. The New York Times reported that Viktor Vekselberg, a billionaire Russian oligarch whom the U.S. had since sanctioned for participating in Russia's meddling with the U.S. presidential election, together with his cousin and business associate Andrew Intrater, before and after Mr. Trump's inauguration met several times with Mr. Trump's lawyer Michael Cohen, now under state and federal investigation. They discussed how the Trump administration could advance Russian national interests; and Intrater agreed to pay Cohen a $1,000,000 consulting fee through his investment firm, Columbus Nova. Intrater also donated $250,000 to Mr. Trump's inaugural committee. Special prosecutor Robert Mueller was investigating.	17 (12, 15)
5-25-18	R-e-s-p-e-c-t. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's address at the U.S. Naval Academy's commencement exercises was heavy on pride and power, but unusually light on policy, strategy and ideals. Specifically, he boasted about his spending on building naval vessels and on otherwise increasing the size of the U.S. military. And he said that he had caused America to be "respected again" – repeating the claim from his May 10 rally in Indiana that CSD had noted then and remained mystified by.	9, 11

5-26-18 +	Mixing it with China. On May 26, The Huffington Post reported that the Chinese government had granted six new trademarks to presidential daughter and advisor Ivanka Trump's fashion business. On May 28, Politico reported that she had just won another mark, bringing to 13 the number of Chinese trademarks she had been awarded in the last three months, plus eight provisional marks. . Politico wrote: "Taken together, the trademarks could allow her brand to market a lifetime's worth of products in China, from baby blankets to coffins, and a host of things in between, including perfume, make-up, bowls, mirrors, furniture, books, coffee, chocolate and honey." HuffPost noted that the grants roughly coincided with Mr. Trump rescinding sanctions on ZTE, a Chinese cell phone manufacturer – despite its trading with North Korea and Iran in violation of U.S. sanctions law, and despite its products' broadly perceived threats to American cyber-security – enraging both Republicans and Democrats in Congress. Also contemporaneously, China agreed to lend $500 million to an Indonesian theme park project in which Mr. Trump was a partner. For CSD, the conflicts of interest were apparent. But in fairness, Mr. Trump's then current policies toward China seemed to mix hostility and appeasement erratically. By way of example, Mr. Trump had marginalized China relative to his dealings with North Korea; and on May 27 he provocatively sent a naval convoy through South China Sea waters claimed by China. Recent Washington Post pieces characterized as cacophonous and dysfunctional the fraught divisions and waffling within his administration's China trade policy<sup>6</sup>. Indeed, with China as with many other matters, one of Mr. Trump's few consistencies (other than authoritarianism, capriciousness, dishonesty, racism and self-promotion) appeared to lie in the advancement of his and his family's business interests.	10, 15
5-27-18	The young and beautiful. Mr. Trump tweeted: "Who's going to give back the young and beautiful lives (and others) that have been devastated and destroyed by the phony Russia Collusion Witch Hunt? They journeyed down to Washington, D.C., with stars in their eyes and wanting to help our nation...They went back home in tatters!" [Continued below.]	11, 12

5-27-18	[Continued.] It was impossible to know to whom Mr. Trump was referring: his five subordinates who had already pleaded guilty to investigated offenses? his attorney and self-professed "fixer" Michael Cohen who was under investigation for an ever-growing list of grotesque activities? his communications directors and press secretaries who had routinely and avidly purveyed and defended his falsehoods? his multitude of corrupt cabinet members and senior advisors? or any of the many others in his orbit who seemed destined for eternal and eminently deserved disgrace?	11, 12
5-29-18	Stoking sadism in Tennessee. At a raucous campaign rally for a Senate candidate in Nashville, Mr. Trump mocked the candidate's opponent as a nobody. He pounded the news media, "crooked" Hillary Clinton, undocumented migrants, and his "enemies." Referring to a notorious Hispanic criminal gang, he called House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi an "MS-13 lover"; and while working the audience "into a frenzy" (according to The New York Times), he drew from the crowd a cry that MS-13 members were "animals" – Mr. Trump's own notorious word for Hispanic migrants. He boasted about his popularity, his accomplishments, his expensive leather binder, the size of his hands, and the luxuriant construction of the new American embassy in Jerusalem. He reiterated his frequent falsehood that the FBI had infiltrated his campaign. He also reiterated his frequent falsehood that the Democrats were intending to destroy the Second Amendment and the right to bear arms. He said, without knowledge, "Our [immigration] laws are the worst laws of any country anywhere in the world." He said, inaccurately, "We have triumphed over evil like nobody has seen before." But perhaps most notably, in a display of hatred, domination and gratuitous cruelty toward Mexico and Mexicans, he said, "In the end, Mexico's going to pay for the wall. ... They're going to pay for the wall, and they're going to enjoy it, OK? They're going to enjoy it." Mexico's president shortly responded by Twitter: "President @realDonaldTrump: NO. Mexico will NEVER pay for a wall. Not now, not ever. Sincerely, Mexico (all of us)."	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13

5-29-18, 6-5-18	Obstructing Sessions. On May 29 and June 5, Mr. Trump tweeted that he regretted having chosen Jeff Sessions as his attorney general – his most recent efforts to humiliate Sessions and (seemingly) to cause him to resign, so that Mr. Trump could replace him with someone who would end the special prosecutor's investigation of Russian election-meddling and presidential obstruction of justice. Also on May 29, The New York Times reported that in early 2017 Mr. Trump had sought to convince Sessions to reverse his recusal from the investigation. All of these moves themselves appeared to amount to obstruction of justice.	9, 11, 12
5-29-18	Ignoring the GAO. Democrats on the House Oversight Committee released a May 9 letter to White House counsel from counsel for the Government Accountability Office, the chief government watchdog, alleging that the White House had stopped responding to all information requests, which previous administrations had routinely honored.	9
5-30-18	Roseanne and me. After ABC canceled the weekly series of the television sitcom actress and conspiracy theorist Roseanne Barr following her grievously racist tweet insulting President Obama's advisor Valerie Jarrett (she had similarly insulted President Obama's national security advisor Susan Rice in 2013), Mr. Trump reacted not with a condemnation of bigotry but with a stunning combination of racial insensitivity and narcissism: "Bob Iger of ABC called Valerie Jarrett to let her know that 'ABC does not tolerate comments like those' made by Roseanne Barr. Gee, he never called President Donald J. Trump to apologize for the HORRIBLE statements made and said about me on ABC. Maybe I just didn't get the call?" Mr. Trump's response appeared to be official. At a press briefing that shortly followed, his press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders doubled-down on it, at length, from a prepared script. Mr. Trump himself tweeted again on the subject of ABC's alleged unfairness the following day. He and Barr had supported one another reciprocally: Barr in her vocal political views, Mr. Trump in his congratulatory call to her on the success of the series in which she was cast (true to life) as a Trump supporter.	11, 17 (6)

5-31-18 +	Pardon me. On May 31, Mr. Trump announced that he would pardon pundit Dinesh D'Souza relative to his 2014 guilty plea for violating campaign finance laws. D'Souza is a radically provocative racist, birther, slavery apologist and conspiracy theorist – known, among many other things, for racially disparaging President Obama – as documented by The Huffington Post.<sup>7</sup> Many observers had found him to be not merely hyper-partisan, but uniquely cruel. Mr. Trump also said that he might shortly commute the sentence of former Illinois governor Rod Blagojevich relative to his 2010 bribery conviction; and pardon television personality and entrepreneur Martha Stewart relative to her 2004 conviction for obstructing justice and lying to investigators in connection with her insider trading activities. Both Blagojevich and Stewart had appeared on Mr. Trump's reality television program, The Apprentice. Mr. Trump had recently issued pardons to Arizona sheriff, prisoner abuser, birther and anti-immigration agitator Joe Arpaio (also a uniquely cruel man) relative to his 2017 conviction for violating a court order that had barred his racial profiling practices; to Scooter Libby, former Vice President Dick Cheney's chief of staff relative to his 2007 conviction for his role in outing a CIA operative for political reasons; and (posthumously – which was unusual – at the request of Sylvester Stallone) to the first black heavyweight boxing champion, Jack Johnson, relative to his 1913 conviction for violating Jim Crow laws. He had also commuted the sentence of Shalom Rubashkin, the CEO of the country's largest kosher slaughterhouse, who had been convicted of scores of financial crimes. The odd media/celebrity nexus to clemency continued in the days following, as the wives of Blagojevich and George Papadopoulos – the Trump presidential campaign's foreign policy advisor who had pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI about his Russia contacts – called for their husbands to be pardoned during appearances on Fox News, a station from which Mr. Trump was known to take many of his political cues. On June 6, Mr. Trump commuted the life sentence of Alice Marie Johnson, an aging, non-violent drug offender, at the urging of television celebrity and prison reform advocate Kim Kardashian, with whom he had met and posed for photos. On June 8, he said he might posthumously pardon Muhammad Ali for a draft evasion conviction – which had already been overturned. [Continued below.]	2, 9, 11, 12, 17 (6)
------------------	---	---------------------------------

5-31-18 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's unusual alignment with extremists in these developments also continued, as (according to The Washington Post) he mulled pardoning Dwight and Steven Hammond, two Oregon ranchers who were convicted in 2012 of committing arson on federal lands and whose cases inspired an armed, anti-government militia to lay siege to a federal land preserve in 2016 for 41 days.<sup>8</sup> The White House said on May 31 that a dozen more pardons would likely ensue. The Post wrote that he was asking friends whom to pardon. On June 8, he said he was asking NFL players. Mr. Trump argued that the punishments of D'Souza, Blagojevich and Stewart were unduly harsh; in fairness, some others had previously argued the same; and Mr. Trump himself had complained of Blagojevich's long sentence long before he had sought the presidency. But pardons and commutations are ordinarily granted only after a Justice Department process, pursuant to which the criminal has requested that relief and has shown contrition – which had not occurred in any of the above cases except for Alice Johnson's. In fact, according to The York Times, of nearly 200 petitions for clemency that had come to Mr. Trump's desk in the ordinary course in April alone, he had denied them all.<sup>9</sup> More disturbingly, with the possible exception of Alice Johnson, what each of those actual and potential acts of clemency had in common was that they were politically motivated: directly benefiting highly visible supporters or potential supporters of Mr. Trump, and/or appealing to their potentially numerous sympathizers. Other recent presidents too had issued (controversial) political pardons, but not exclusively or preponderantly: they had pardoned mainly unknown individuals for humanitarian reasons. And even Alice Johnson's commutation by Mr. Trump may have been political: she was black; President Obama had declined to grant her clemency; she was championed by a television celebrity; and Mr. Trump had not yet shown any serious interest in drug sentencing reform, but rather had allowed or encouraged his attorney general Jeff Sessions to order the opposite policy – maximum sentencing. 5-31-18 +	[Continued.] CSD views Mr. Trump's early and (so far) nearly exclusive deployment of the "political" pardon as intended to and succeeding in undermining the independence of the judicial system in favor of his own political fortunes. But the pardons and commutations, whether actual or merely contemplated, were disturbing for many additional reasons. Again, with the possible exception of Alice Johnson: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. They stoked Mr. Trump's narrative of a criminal justice system gone wild against minor offenders (a narrative that he had to date been applying to investigations of himself and his associates); i.e., that the criminals were actually victims.</li> <li>2. They continued to signal to Mr. Trump's many former subordinates who were under investigation and indictment that he might pardon them if they declined to turn on him.</li> <li>3. They forgave many of the specific crimes for which Mr. Trump himself and his associates were at risk of punishment, as detailed by Fortune.<sup>10</sup></li> <li>4. They may have even been announced as vengeful humiliations of some of the prosecutors who had convicted the particular criminals and whom Mr. Trump had since determined to be his political enemies – such as Preet Bharara, former U.S. Attorney in New York (who had convicted D'Souza) and former FBI director James Comey (who had convicted Stewart), as hypothesized by Quartz.<sup>11</sup></li> <li>5. Of equally profound concern, the sequential pardons of Arpaio and D'Souza – two of the country's leading birthers (Mr. Trump himself being a third) – may have reflected his deep, even visceral affinity toward them relative to their shared, viciously racial hatred for President Obama.</li> <li>6. A number of reports indicated that Mr. Trump had also taken great personal delight in his pardons, possibly reveling in the sort of omnipotence (optically, practically, and constitutionally) that they displayed – no other branch of the government could check him. 5-31-18 +	[Continued.] Much more was to come. On June 4, Mr. Trump tweeted that he had the "absolute right" to pardon himself – a position that even previous presidents facing potential criminal charges (Nixon, Clinton) had not publicly articulated (and that the Supreme Court might not agree with, should it come to that). That tweet had followed public and (recently revealed) private statements by Mr. Trump's attorneys that, because he was the president, and regardless of his motives (seemingly even corrupt ones), he could direct the Justice Department to do anything he wished; could not be indicted or subpoenaed, even for murder; was not capable under the law of obstructing justice; and could issue a pardon to himself. By implication, Mr. Trump and his attorneys apparently believed that he could pardon himself for such crimes as child molestation, murder and treason. And per the claims of his attorneys, he could direct the Justice Department to persecute his political enemies. Those outlooks compared to then-former President Nixon's infamous televised remark in 1977, "When the president does it, that means that it is not illegal." Mr. Trump also tweeted on June 4 that the appointment of special prosecutor Robert Mueller had been "totally UNCONSTITUTIONAL!" In all, for CSD, the episodes re-confirmed Mr. Trump's primal view of law enforcement: that it should be ruthless for brown street criminals and Democratic adversaries, but absent for himself, his abettors, and those whose celebrity could otherwise help him stay in office; also that he could overrule, and was beyond the reach of, the Justice Department and the courts. It was the opposite of separation of powers and of the rule of law.	2, 9, 11, 12, 17 (6)

5-31-18	Blasting the media – inaccurately. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump accused the mainstream media of lying for having reported that he had fired then FBI director James Comey due to the Russia election probe – when Mr. Trump had admitted as much himself on camera. He also falsely tweeted that ABC had failed to apologize for or discipline a reporter who had erred in accusing Mr. Trump of directing his then national security advisor Michael Flynn to make contact with Russians. The tweets followed a May 26 allegation by Mr. Trump that The New York Times had quoted an imaginary official regarding the scheduling of North Korea talks, when in fact it had paraphrased a senior White House aide whose identity shortly became known and widely reported. In sum, not satisfied with bashing the media for things it had actually done, he was now bashing it for things it had not done.	1, 7
6-1-18	Leaking the jobs report. Contrary to decades of protocol and possibly law, Mr. Trump tweeted a hint of a favorable monthly jobs report an hour before its public release by the Bureau of Labor Statistics -- thus immediately moving financial markets, enabling his Twitter followers to profit, and potentially politicizing the process of the report's production and dissemination. Such a leak by any other government servant would have been grounds for immediate termination. Mr. Trump had previously leaked classified information about an Islamic State terrorist threat (he told Russian diplomats in May 2017) and U.S. military strikes in Syria (he told a fundraising audience in May 2018). Whether Mr. Trump's casual disclosures of protected information were intended to win favor from the recipients, or to show off his knowledge, or both, was unknown. The Washington Post offered a third theory, and its consequences: "[B]ecause of Trump's penchant for blurting out sensitive information — often, apparently, simply because it is at the top of his mind — many West Wing aides and advisers privately say they are hesitant to share anything with Trump that they do not want to become public." On June 4, Politico would report that Mr. Trump's former chief economic advisor Gary Cohn did just that – withheld the jobs numbers from Mr. Trump, so that he wouldn't reveal them. [Continued below.]	8, 9, 10, 11

6-1-18	[Continued.] That Mr. Trump had persistently derided as meaningless the positive jobs report figures under President Obama's administration was its own matter – suggesting not merely hypocrisy of the highest order, but an attempt to manipulate the credibility of empirically developed governmental data.	8, 9, 10, 11
6-4-18	Radicalizing both Europe and America's role there. Reported in the U.S. by Politico, Mr. Trump's ambassador to Germany, Richard Grenell, told Breitbart London that he wanted to "empower" anti-establishment, anti-"elite," anti-immigration, populist, and (CSD would infer) xenophobic and authoritarian forces in Europe.<sup>12</sup> Grenell's statements were shocking not only for their call for the U.S. to interfere with the politics of our European allies, but for their threat to Europe's democratic resurrection that had followed its authoritarian calamity of the mid-twentieth century. To ignore Europe's recent history and to encourage the xenophobia currently sweeping that continent seemed to CSD at once ignorant, incendiary, and unforgivable.	17 (6, 9, 12, 13)
6-5-18	Flags vs. football. After most members of the Philadelphia Eagles football team had declined to attend a celebration at the White House of their February Super Bowl win, Mr. Trump hastily staged a replacement celebration there, dramatically featuring the Marine Band, the Army Chorus, a military march, the American national anthem, and many American flags. In his remarks he implied that NFL players who had protested racial injustice during the playing of the national anthem, and possibly the entire Eagles team, opposed America. (No Eagles players had engaged in such protests.) He also said that fallen military heroes were looking upon him fondly from heaven. In addition, he boasted about the strength of the economy under his presidency. The crowd in attendance appeared largely to consist of federal workers invited by the White House and masquerading as Eagles fans.<sup>13</sup> Mr. Trump, true to form, boasted about the size of the crowd.	6, 9

6-5-18	UN condemns US for separating migrant children. The United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights charged that the Trump administration's practice, since May, of imprisoning adult migrants (including lawful asylum seekers) and separating their children from them in order to deter migration violated international human rights laws and treaties to which the U.S. was a party. U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley responded by calling the OHCHR "ignorant" and "hypocritical." She added, with a defiance toward the UN that resembled that which commonly issues from regimes that broadly abuse human rights: “Neither the United Nations nor anyone else will dictate how the United States upholds its borders.”	6, 14
6-5-18, 6-6-18	Pruitt vs. Kushner. On June 5, The Huffington Post listed ten new ethics scandals that Environmental Protection Agency chief Scott Pruitt had been nabbed in within just the last month: splurging on customized fountain pens, dispatching an aide for months finding him an apartment, asking another aide to help his wife procure a Chick-Fil-A franchise, trying to buy a used mattress from the Trump International Hotel in Washington (what?!), and on.<sup>14</sup> But the next day, a Washington Post columnist tellingly found Pruitt's four- and five-figure adventures in grifting to be trivial compared to the nine-figure adventures of Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner: using his government office to win a $120 million real estate investment from one source and $500 million from another – not to mention the trademark approvals worth potentially millions that Kushner's wife, Ivanka Trump, had scored from the Chinese government for her fashion business.<sup>15</sup>	17 (9, 11, 15)
6-5-18	An absence at Justice. The Wall Street Journal reported that the White House had given up trying to appoint an Associate Attorney General, the number-three position in the Department of Justice, because no one wanted the job. The previous number-three, Rachel Brand, had resigned, seemingly at least in part over fears that she could be asked to replace the number-two, Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein (who supervised special prosecutor Robert Mueller) in the event Mr. Trump dismissed Rosenstein and a constitutional crisis ensued. Other top positions at Justice remained vacant as well, and the vacancies were reportedly slowing the department's effectiveness. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 12

6-5-18	[Continued.] The Journal added that in the past week Mr. Trump had tweeted about the Russia probe and the Justice Department – both of which he was unremittingly antagonistic towards – more than 20 times.	9, 10, 12
6-7-18	ACA – the final blow? In response to a filing by several Republican-controlled states claiming that the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") was unconstitutional, the Justice Department declined to defend the law – a highly irregular move by the federal government. (The Washington Post's editorial board subsequently wrote, on June 10: "Defending major, duly passed federal statutes is a core Justice Department responsibility. If it defended only laws the president liked, uncertainty about the permanence of many laws would reign, particularly as the presidency changed hands.") And the department went so far as to argue that the ACA's requirement that insurers cover pre-existing conditions was unconstitutional, thus breaking Mr. Trump's campaign promise to protect that provision.<sup>16</sup> For political reasons and (likely) personal vengeance against President Obama, Mr. Trump continued to wish to see the health care law die without a replacement plan in place, regardless of the impact on the health of tens of millions of Americans. Indeed, The Wall Street Journal reported that insurers were unnerved, foresaw market turbulence, and predicted big premium spikes for the old and the ill.<sup>17</sup>	9, 11
6-8-18 +	At the G-7: Russia "da," allies "nyet." On June 8, just before the economic summit in Canada of the Group of 7 -- America's closest and strongest allies -- Mr. Trump told reporters that the group should readmit Russia, after its having expelled that country for annexing Crimea in 2014. He said nothing about the annexation, but as before he appeared to acquiesce to it, as well as to Russia's meddling in the elections of the U.S. and some other G-7 countries. The Washington Post reported that the National Security Council had no prior notice that Mr. Trump was going to propose readmitting Russia, and that both Republicans and Democrats in Congress were appalled by the proposal. In fact, on that very day, Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats warned that the Kremlin was proceeding to interfere in U.S. mid-term elections in "unprecedented" ways, and was attempting to break up Western alliances. He called it "an all-out assault by Vladimir Putin on the rule of law, Western ideals and democratic norms." [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

6-8-18 +	[Continued.] But Mr. Trump had already incited turmoil going into the G-7 meeting, having recently launched tariffs against and trade disputes with the other members, threatened an all-or-nothing negotiation for American interests with them at the summit, refused in advance to enter into a joint statement with them about shared principles and values; specifically objected to such a statement's perfunctory embrace of a "rules-based international order"; announced that he would leave the meeting early (thus avoiding discussions about climate change); and at one point in the previous days even said that he didn't want to attend at all. Still in advance of the summit, The New York Times wrote that, the previous day, "President Emmanuel Macron of France and Prime Minister Justin Trudeau of Canada lashed out at Mr. Trump for imposing tariffs on their steel and aluminum industries. They called it an illegal economic assault on their countries that is unanimously opposed by the other leaders of the Group of 7 ... "There have been disagreements within the G-7 in the past .... But rarely — if ever — has there been the kind of visceral and unanimous outrage at an American president among the United States' most important allies. Mr. Trump has repeatedly poked his counterparts in the eye — ignoring their pleas to remain a part of the Paris climate treaty, the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade pact and the Iran nuclear deal, and more recently by branding their steel and aluminum industries threats to national security, and therefore subject to tariffs." As the summit unfolded, Mr. Trump showed up late for several meeting sessions; his disagreements with the others were heated, as he reportedly mocked and insulted the other leaders; he was often inattentive to the others' remarks<sup>18</sup>; he threatened to stop trade with some allies altogether; and (incidentally) at a press conference he extensively pummeled the American news media between boasts about his negotiating skills and friendships with foreign leaders. As threatened, he left the summit early. [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

6-8-18 +	[Continued.] Soon after the summit, he reiterated his desire to admit Russia to the group; reacting to frank follow-up statements by Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, he tweeted that Trudeau was "very dishonest and weak"; he threatened to escalate the trade war; and, after having agreed while in session to sign the group's joint communiqué, he retracted. The Times captured the June 9 aftermath: "Shortly before leaving the annual meeting ... President Trump boasted that it had been 'tremendously successful' and that on a scale of 0 to 10, 'the relationship is a 10.' Fewer than nine hours later, the relationship was plummeting toward a zero. With a petulant tweetstorm from Air Force One, Mr. Trump all but blew up the Group of 7 nations that the United States has led for more than four decades and essentially declared open political war on America's closest neighbor. ... Mr. Trump's unvarnished post-summit Twitter insults aimed at Mr. Trudeau ... left the Canadian-American relationship at its most overtly hostile since, perhaps, the War of 1812." On June 10, Mr. Trump's aides, in what appeared to be an orchestrated endeavor, added to the fury on the Sunday talk shows. Chief economic advisor Larry Kudlow accused Trudeau of a "betrayal," and National Trade Council director Peter Navarro said that Trudeau deserved "a special place in hell." Conservative Washington Post columnist Max Boot wrote: "No U.S. officials have ever spoken this way about any U.S. ally, ever. These are the kind of words that normally precede military action." Russian President Vladimir Putin had already publicly gloated about the economic discord among his Western foes.<sup>19</sup> As many commentators noted, his efforts to help Mr. Trump's election seemed to be paying off. In any event, Mr. Trump's hostility toward long-allied democratic leaders contrasted starkly with his warmth toward and flattery of the dictators of Russia, North Korea, China, the Philippines, Egypt, Turkey, and Saudi Arabia (a remarkable collection of flattering quotes appears at this endnote<sup>20</sup>). He seemed bent on personally humiliating the former, while extolling and coddling the latter; even on weakening the NATO military alliance, which he had long derided. -----------------	---	------------------------------

6-8-18 +	[Continued.] But just as disturbing as his preference for autocrats was his apparent preference for global instability. European Council President Donald Tusk said of the G-7 conference, notably using the disputed communiqué language, “What worries me most . . . is the fact that the rules-based international order is being challenged” – and by its chief architect, the U.S. For CSD, an explicit challenge to explicit rules set forth in treaties made for only part of the crisis. Mr. Trump's impetuous retraction of his agreement to the joint communiqué fortified us in our concern – stemming generally from Mr. Trump's profound volatility and unreliability, and more specifically from his previous withdrawals from the Paris climate accord, the Iran nuclear agreement and the Trans-Pacific Partnership – as to the extent to which another country would trust Mr. Trump or the U.S. to abide by any statement or agreement whatever going forward. What was Mr. Trump's goal in all of this? A New York Times columnist speculated: “Maybe it’s ideological, and he prefers Putin-style authoritarianism to democracy. Or maybe he no grand strategy and Putin really does have some compromising information. Or maybe Trump just likes being against what every other modern American president was for.”<sup>21</sup> CSD, however, would give Mr. Trump credit for at least an attempt at canny pragmatism: his avowed aim of using tariffs to help some industrial workers within his electoral base (even if at the expense of injuring many more workers and consumers); and his aim of looking strong in advance of his imminent summit with North Korea, as acknowledged by his aides (although the G-7 fiasco may well have had the opposite long-term effect). Still, we share the concerns of the columnist; and to those concerns we would add four more possibilities: Mr. Trump's prospect of profiting from future investments in Russia and other authoritarian countries; pure peevishness and impulsiveness; a compulsion to dominate; and a hostility toward high-minded and urbane foreign leaders whom he may have imagined as looking down on him culturally (see our entry of June 20, below). Because apart from angry tweets and raging claims at political rallies, he had not made a reasoned case that the U.S. was indeed on the losing end of global tariffs – which commentators on both the left and the right had found to be a phony charge. His claim of a trade deficit with Canada was plainly spurious.<sup>22</sup>	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

6-10-18	Shredding everything, and the law. Politico reported that Mr. Trump routinely (and manually) shredded many or most documents on his desk after he had read them, in violation of the Presidential Records Act, and despite his staff's attempts to change his practice. A team of data management specialists had been tasked with taping together the shredded documents, until several of them were abruptly terminated this spring, without notice and without explanation.<sup>23</sup> Whether Mr. Trump's shredded papers had undergone re-assembly since then was not reported.	9, 10
6-11-18	Profiting: Jared and Ivanka. The Washington Post reported that presidential advisors Ivanka Trump and Jared Kushner, Mr. Trump's daughter and son-in-law, while serving in the White House in 2017, had made at least $82 million from their businesses, sometimes through endeavors in which their government positions posed potential or actual conflicts of interest.<sup>24</sup> The New York Times reported that the couple had engaged in $147 million in transactions during that period, with unknown counter-parties – who, frankly, could have been anyone.<sup>25</sup>	17 (15)
6-11-18 +	With Kim, in Singapore. Before international television cameras, Mr. Trump met North Korean President Kim Jong-un with a warm and protracted handshake. Mr. Trump said that he was "honored" to meet with Kim, and that he expected to have a "terrific relationship" Kim was widely viewed as the world's most brutal dictator. He is worshipped as a near deity at home. The atrocities committed by him and his family against his own people almost defied description – he had directed the torture and imprisonment of thousands, the assassinations of his uncle and half-brother, the executions of foes by close-range anti-aircraft fire, and the allocation of massive government funds to weapons programs despite broad malnutrition. Nevertheless recent columns in The New York Times and The Washington Post undertook to summarize those atrocities.<sup>26</sup> Following the handshake, in a break from American national security and diplomatic protocols, Mr. Trump met with Kim privately – that is, with no aides present, only interpreters. What they discussed will likely never be known. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

6-11-18 +	[Continued.] After a subsequent, longer session, Mr. Trump announced that he had agreed to stop joint U.S. military exercises with South Korea – without having first notified either South Korea or the Pentagon – and thus undermining the U.S.'s long alliance with the south. He also reiterated his aim to bring U.S. troops home from the south – which would abandon the south and cede regional hegemony to China. He promised no new sanctions on the north. He promised the north (unspecified) security guarantees. At the conclusion of the talks, Mr. Trump screened a fantasy video showing himself and a beaming Kim as glorious partners in the building of a prosperous and technologically advanced North Korea. He speculated that the country could enjoy world class beach hotels and condos (possibly built by himself?). He said that the meeting had been "fantastic," and that he and Kim had developed an "excellent relationship" and a "very special bond." He said, "We had great chemistry .... We had it right from the beginning." He characterized the outcome – warm relations and a path toward denuclearization of North Korea – as "very important," "comprehensive," and, implicitly, as triumphant and epochal. He said he was confident that Kim would begin dismantling his nuclear arsenal "very quickly." He characterized Kim himself as a "very talented man" who "wants to do the right thing," is a "very worthy, very smart negotiator," and is a "funny guy" with a "great personality" who "loves his people." He said, "I do trust him." At one point Mr. Trump saluted a North Korean general. Later, Mr. Trump tweeted that “everybody can now feel much safer than the day I took office. There is no longer a Nuclear Threat from North Korea”; also that “President Obama said that North Korea was our biggest and most dangerous problem. No longer — sleep well tonight!” Analysts, however, widely said that although the U.S. had made the concessions described above, Kim had agreed to nothing firm or new in the very brief written accord, other than to continue the talks. His more general promises of denuclearization were ones that North Korea had broken often in its dealings with prior American administrations. No discussions about North Korea's growing capabilities and provocations in the areas of cyber-attacks, ballistic missiles or chemical and biological weapons were reported. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
------------------	---	------------------------------------

6-11-18 +	[Continued.] To the contrary, North Korea – and Kim individually – were widely seen as having benefited materially from Kim having scored a first, direct and much-publicized meeting with the president of the United States, as well as from the president's personal flattery. Some observed that Mr. Trump had been totally out-manuevered, had effectively (for better or worse) adopted the long-standing Democratic position of engaging with North Korea without immediate denuclearization, and at most had succeeded in defusing a crisis of his own creation.<sup>27</sup> Many noted that although the U.S. had not relaxed its economic sanctions on the strength of the summit, China and Russia were seen as inclined to do so, and other countries as likely to. For Kim's part, reports on his robust, self-congratulatory, internally-directed, post-summit propaganda spin appear at the links at this end note.<sup>28</sup> As had occurred after the G-7 fiasco only days earlier, observers were also quick to contrast Mr. Trump's embrace of Kim with his denunciation of the G-7 leaders. The New York Times editorial board, referring to Kim and other dictators as "authoritarian thugs who crave respect and legitimacy" as well as gaudy pomp and ceremony, found in them men whom Mr. Trump respected precisely because of their willingness to deploy brutality to succeed in their self-aggrandizement; for whom he felt a genuine fondness; with whom he was truly comfortable; and with whom he shared, fraternally, the disdain of most of the Western world.<sup>29</sup> Of such media criticism, Mr. Trump tweeted on June 13: ""Our Country's biggest enemy is the Fake News." CSD, of course, lauds a diplomatic course as superior to the recent exchange of insults and nuclear threats between the two leaders. And peace, prosperity and cultural modernization could eventually arrive in North Korea, with America's help. But we are wary of preening, televised theatre designed to enthrall political constituents and disparage prior administrations, all at the possible expense of America's national interests. In addition, we would characterize Mr. Trump's public flattery of Kim as both deviant and perilous; his early triumphalism as truly epochal for its disingenuousness; and his claim that North Korea was no longer a nuclear threat as flat-out preposterous. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
------------------	---	------------------------------------

6-11-18 +	[Continued.] Most commentators doubted that the North Korean regime would ever give up its nuclear weapons – the fruit of a long and expensive investment, and its key to power and survival – notwithstanding Mr. Trump's demands for and projections of that result. And just as the U.S. was justified in mistrusting North Korea, North Korea would appear to be justified in mistrusting Mr. Trump, who had distinguished his presidency not only by his dishonesty, but by changing his mind capriciously and continuously and by reneging on major international agreements. We believe that if a thaw between the two countries nevertheless were to ensue, even (and likely) without denuclearization, it will have been through Kim's build-out of his nuclear missile program, his staged (and not serious) threats to the U.S., his shrewd reading of Mr. Trump, and his canny diplomatic planning – not Mr. Trump's impulsive, ill-informed, volatile and vain reactions to events. We were not alone in our skepticism. North Koreans celebrated the summit's outcome. Except for Mr. Trump's most inveterate partisans, few Americans – among analysts, members of Congress and the media – appeared to have done so. One former senior official in President Bush's State Department called Mr. Trump's claim of success at the summit the work of a "huckster," "fantasist" and "grifter."<sup>30</sup> Only 21% of Americans polled bought the bait.<sup>31</sup> We of course are not strategists or intelligence analysts, nor do we predict the future. We only chronicle behaviors.	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
6-13-18 +	Pruitt did it again. On June 13, The Washington Post reported that Environmental Protection Agency administrator, radical deregulator and climate science denier Scott Pruitt, already plagued by many, many investigations of his self-indulgent spending of taxpayer money and other irregularities, had last year pressed a senior aide to spend months asking political donors to give or find his wife a job; and they did. Pruitt had likely acted unlawfully both in extracting free services from a subordinate and in procuring a personal benefit from the donors on the strength of his office. In a separate piece, The Post tallied Pruitt's known spending abuses while at the EPA as totaling nearly $4,000,000.<sup>32</sup> In days following, reports appeared to the effect that Pruitt's misuse of staff, and his seeking politically charged favors from friends, was routine.<sup>33</sup>	17 (9, 15)

6-14-18	Trump Foundation is sued. New York State's attorney general announced that she had sued Mr. Trump, his children Ivanka, Eric and Donald, Jr., and the Trump Foundation (their charitable giving arm) for "persistently illegal conduct" – that is, for having brazenly and systematically violated state non-profit laws over a period of ten years. Federal tax and campaign law violations were also suspected. The offenses included the foundation's having made grants for the benefit of Mr. Trump's and others' election campaigns, and of his personal and business interests (such as settling some of his lawsuits and purchasing a portrait of him for one of his golf clubs). The grants were made at Mr. Trump's whim, without any charitable policy or governance being in place, and in defiance of the law requiring foundations to operate exclusively for charitable purposes. Among other things, the attorney general asked the court to dissolve the foundation, to order it pay at least $2.8 million in restitution and penalties, and to bar the Trumps from serving on New York charitable boards for specified future periods. Mr. Trump tweeted that the allegations were politically motivated and "ridiculous." Whether and to what extent any of the offenses may have occurred during CSD's reporting period – i.e., since Mr. Trump's election – was not apparent. But at a minimum, Mr. Trump's denial (implicit or explicit) seemed almost certainly to amount to a falsehood. The episode adds to the long list of investigations of and lawsuits against Mr. Trump that had arisen since his presidential candidacy, including those involving assault, inciting violence, defamation, violation of the Constitution's ban on emoluments, the Stormy Daniels matter, and of course the special prosecutor's investigation of collusion with Russian election meddling and associated acts of obstruction of justice. Extensive histories of Mr. Trump's litigation activity – he and his firms were involved in over 4,000 cases through 2016 – appear at this end note.<sup>34</sup> Of special interest: Wrestling magnates Vince and Linda McMahon had given $5,000,000 to the foundation; and Mr. Trump had later appointed Ms. McMahon as head of the Small Business Administration.	7; Plus charity, tax and campaign finance fraud (each its own category)

6-14-18	Sessions thumps Bible. In defending his harsh policy of broadly prosecuting those who cross the Mexican border, Attorney General Jeff Sessions quoted a scriptural passage defending law and order – which in the past, according to The Washington Post, had been most prominently cited for political purposes by crown loyalists during the American revolution and by Southern slaveholders prior to the Civil War.<sup>35</sup> (He said nothing about the rampant violations of law by Mr. Trump and his Cabinet members.) Conservative religious leaders disagreed with him – at least on the subject of separating migrant families.<sup>36</sup>	17 (6, 9)
6-14-18	Reality check. A pair of columns in The Washington Post served as compelling reminders of practical, historical truths that have often gotten lost in Mr. Trump's America First thunder: that a dog-eat-dog, unilateralist international order, and an abandonment of liberal alliances and even of the principal of world liberalization, is inherently hostile to American security<sup>37</sup>; and that North Korea (or any country) can simply not modernize and draw broad investment unless it adopts some level of human rights and the rule of law.<sup>38</sup>	14
6-15-18	The post-Singapore interview. Basking in his claims of success at the North Korea summit, Mr. Trump gave an impromptu interview to Fox News and then to other reporters on the White House lawn. On North Korea. He said of Korean leader Kim Jong-un: “He speaks and people sit up at attention. I want my people to do the same.” (Mr. Trump later said he was joking; but given his extraordinary and unprecedented history of speaking and behaving in an authoritarian manner, as reported extensively in this document, it was a bad joke, if in fact a joke at all.) He excused Kim's massive human rights violations on grounds that North Korea is a "tough country." He said that he didn't care about human rights there as long as America was safe from nuclear attack. Of having given Kim a summit win by granting him international stature and legitimacy, he said, I gave him credibility. I what we got, everything. Point after point after point.” What those points were was unknown to the public. As to the vast missing details of denuclearization, he said, "I have solved that problem." 6-15-18	[Continued.] On the DOJ. Mr. Trump mischaracterized and cherry-picked the findings of the just-released Department of Justice inspector general's report. Among other things, the report had found former FBI director James Comey to have been insubordinate in publicly announcing renewed scrutiny of then presidential candidate Hillary Clinton's email practices just days before the election (to the detriment of her election bid); several other FBI staffers to have privately favored Clinton over Trump (although without apparent action or effect); and the agency to not have been at fault in declining to prosecute Hillary Clinton for her use of a private email server. In the interview, Mr. Trump said or implied that the report demonstrated that (a) Comey was a criminal, (b) the FBI categorically had plotted against him during the campaign; (c) he himself had done nothing wrong; and (d) his campaign had not colluded with the Russians. But the report had not said any of that. More roundly, he slammed the report for concluding that the FBI had not in fact acted against him in a biased manner, and for overall being "a horror show" and itself a work of "total bias." He said that he wanted to "defeat" the FBI in its conduct of "very dishonest intelligence," and called it a "den of thieves," led by "scum on top." And he said that special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation of him had been "thoroughly discredited." On Russia, and the investigations. Mr. Trump again called for Russia to be re-admitted to the G-7. He also blamed President Obama for having lost Crimea to Russia and for having permitted Russia's interference with the American election (himself having never objected to either of those things). He said that former national security advisor Michael Flynn deserved sympathy and may have been innocent of the charges to which he had pled guilty and that had forced him from office. He also expressed sympathy for indicted former campaign manager Paul Manafort, while falsely minimizing Manafort's role in the Trump campaign. Of his having dictated to his son Donald, Jr. an intentionally misleading characterization of the latter's meeting with Russian operatives in Trump Tower during the campaign, he said, "It's irrelevant. It's a statement to The New York Times. The phony, failing New York Times." Of the special prosecutor's investigation generally, he said "they have no Republicans" (although in fact Robert Mueller is a life-long Republican). 6-15-18	[Continued.] On black and brown. Mr. Trump said that (black) NFL players who protested racial injustice should stay out of politics. He also falsely stated that U.S. law requires him to separate migrant parents from their children at the Mexican border; he (again) falsely blamed Democrats for the (non-existent) law (and he would do that again the following day); and he said he would refuse to sign a pending congressional bill that would bar the separations. On Hillary. He also boasted (still) of his electoral victory over Hillary Clinton, thus effectively reminding his supporters that he had rescued them from her clutches. On himself. According to The New York Times, Mr. Trump's boasts during the interviews incorporated the words "great" or "greatest" 48 times.	1, 3, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12
6-18-18	Playing with fire in Europe. Blaming immigrants and German Chancellor Angela Merkel, Mr. Trump tweeted that crime was at a record high in Germany, and that European voters should support anti-immigration parties. In fact, German crime was at a record low; Mr. Trump had no business interfering in European politics; like Russian President Vladimir Putin, he appeared to be seeking to weaken and divide Europe rather than unite and strengthen it; and Mr. Trump's encouragement of populist, xenophobic political movements in Europe demonstrated an atrocious disremembering of the run-up to World War II. The tweet followed similar expressions of sentiment by the U.S. ambassador to Germany, as chronicled by CSD on June 4. Mr. Trump and his Secretary of State Mike Pompeo meanwhile, as reported by The Times, had been cultivating Hungary's notoriously xenophobic and anti-Semitic leader, Victor Orban, whom the two previous American presidents had shunned.	6, 9, 12, 13
6-18-18 +	UN calls U.S. child separation "abuse"; WaPo calls it "torture." The mounting national and international furor over the Trump administration's harsh separation of children (including toddlers and infants) from their parents at the Mexican border was joined again by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, who said that the practice constituted child abuse – having previously said, on June 5 (as chronicled by CSD above), that it violated the rights of children under international law. [Continued below.]	6, 14, 17 (7); Plus gratuitous cruelty (its own category)

6-18-18 +	[Continued.] The following day, a Washington Post columnist took the charge of child abuse a step further. Referring to widely published recordings and images of separated children screaming in anguish, she wrote that subjecting the parents to that amounted to "mental torture similar to forcing a POW to listen to the screams of a comrade as a means of extracting information or inducing submission."<sup>39</sup> That, indeed, seemed to be precisely the sort of "deterrent" against migration that Mr. Trump had claimed to intend. Meanwhile, also on June 18, Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen falsely said that family separations were not administration policy, that only Congress could stop them, and that the Obama and Bush administrations had also performed such separations.	6, 14, 17 (7); Plus gratuitous cruelty (its own category)
6-19-18	Burning the ACA down. Mr. Trump announced new rules that would allow small businesses to band together to purchase inexpensive insurance for their employees, as an end-run around the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") and in a further attempt to sabotage it. The policies were expected to lack many basic protections provided by the ACA, including maternity care, prescription drugs and mental health benefits. The young and healthy were projected to subscribe to the employer plans; and as a consequence, fewer insureds would subscribe to the ACA, and their premiums would rise. Without providing a responsible insurance plan available to all Americans, Mr. Trump was all but ensuring that tens of millions would suffer reduced health care.	9, 11
6-19-18	More Conflicts. Politico reported that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, cited often above in this document for his self-aggrandizing behavior while in office, was having indirect business dealings with the chairman of Halliburton, an oil field service company which he was tasked with regulating.<sup>40</sup> Separately, The New York Times reported that, in October, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross had shorted the stock of a Kremlin-linked shipping company after reporters had begun investigating his questionable connection with it, but before that information had become public. That is, illegal insider trading was suspected.<sup>41</sup>	17 (15)

6-19-18	Dumping the UN (again). The Trump administration, having already abandoned most or all efforts to advance international human rights, now announced its withdrawal from the United Nations Human Rights Council, on grounds that the organization had routinely and disproportionately criticized Israel, and that its membership was populated with rights-abusing regimes. The Bush administration had refused to join, on similar grounds, but the Obama administration later joined. The New York Times wrote that this was the first time a member had voluntarily left UNHRC; and that "the United States now joins Iran, North Korea and Eritrea as the only countries that refuse to participate in the council's meetings and deliberations." North Korea and Eritrea are outlaw states. In October, the U.S. had withdrawn from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) – known widely for its preservation of World Heritage Sites – also in protest of an action that was perceived to be anti-Israel. UNHRC had long been controversial for its patently anti-Israel bias (if not obsession) and for its rights-abusing members. CSD nevertheless places the Trump administration's withdrawal from UNHRC and UNESCO within the context of its persistent abandonment or disparagement, in a perilous age, of major international bodies and agreements: the Trans-Pacific Partnership, the Iran nuclear accord, the Paris climate accords, the G-7 and NATO. In the aggregate, Mr. Trump's wholesale and radical embrace of unilateralism did not seem possibly to be good for the advancement of U.S. and democratic interests. The withdrawal from UNHRC, for example, stood to deprive the U.S. of participating in a forum about major human rights issues such as several members of CSD are deeply engaged in.	14
6-19-18 +	"Infestation" ... and then reversal. On June 19, under widespread pressure to not separate children from their parents at the Mexican border, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Democrats are the problem. They don't care about crime and want illegal immigrants, no matter how bad they may be, to pour into and infest our Country, like MS-13. They can't win on their terrible policies, so they view them [illegal immigrants] as potential voters." [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11

6-19-18 +	[Continued.] The next day he tweeted: "The Fake News is not mentioning the safety and security of our Country when talking about illegal immigration. Our immigration laws are the weakest and worst anywhere in the world, and the Dems will do anything not to change them &amp; to obstruct - want open borders which means crime." Mr. Trump's casting blame on the Democrats appeared to be based on their refusal to cave to his unilateral demands for building a wall along the Mexican border and other anti-immigration measures. That is, as he had previously acknowledged, he was exploiting the family separations as bargaining chips in what should have otherwise been a normal (or abnormal) policy debate – or, as many observers commented, he was holding over 2300 children hostage. Mr. Trump's vicious reference to an "infestation" by migrants, the recent elevation of racial and xenophobic drum-beating as his most consistent and prominent appeal to his base, and his combination of all of that with attacks on his political opponents and the press recalled for CSD the run-ups to historical genocides overseas, as we had written on April 18. Genocide did not threaten; but we believed that America's vision and stature had been crippled, and that our country had become endangered – and defiled. On June 20, Mr. Trump relented. Having doubled- and tripled-down on separating the children, but then having incurred the wrath of domestic and world leaders (including bi-partisan members of Congress, governors, conservative American Christian figures, four former First Ladies and the Pope), he was forced to issue an executive order barring the separations. He thus gave the lie to his frequent claim that he had had no power to issue such an order. Still he blamed Congress for the crisis he had created; at a press briefing he said nine times how "strong" he was against immigration<sup>42</sup>; and he implied that the reprieve was his own humane idea. The following day he continued to blame Democrats, raging that they didn't care about the children. The order reportedly had been developed and executed in a slap-dash, panicky manner, leaving White House aides and DHS officials flummoxed as to how to proceed.<sup>43</sup> Indeed, Mr. Trump and his White House had already flip-flopped 14 times (to that date) on the issue.<sup>44</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	--	---------------------------

6-19-18 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's new plan for the children was unclear, but initially he appeared to contemplate incarcerating entire families indefinitely, contrary to U.S. law. CSD nevertheless believes that this reversal demonstrates the potential for popular and congressional opposition to thwart Mr. Trump's barbaric policies more generally. Not insignificantly, Refugees International, a prominent American refugee advocacy organization that is normally careful (for practical and ideological reasons) to remain non-partisan, issued a report card for the Trump administration regarding its performance on refugee and humanitarian protection. The grade, which was supported by extensive analysis, was a resounding F.<sup>45</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
6-20-18	Huge in Duluth. At a boisterous campaign rally in Duluth, Minnesota, as reported by The Washington Post, Mr. Trump dwelt on the ways in which his perceived enemies had wronged him. "They" (largely the mainstream media) hadn't applauded him sufficiently for his recent North Korea summit; had gone on at length about his separating migrant children from their families; had acquiesced to the Justice Department inspector general's report that Hillary Clinton hadn't merited prosecution; had credited President Obama with much of the economy's recovery since the Great Recession; hadn't appreciated the size of his crowds; and – quite tellingly – hadn't accepted him as part of the nation's "elite."<sup>46</sup> To that last point, he said, "You ever notice they always call the other side 'the elite'? The elite! Why are they elite? I have a much better apartment than they do. I'm smarter than they are. I'm richer than they are. I became president and they didn't." Mr. Trump drew from the crowd boos for CNN and the reporters in attendance, chants of "Lock her up!" as to Clinton, calls to "Build that wall!" as to Hispanic migrants, and jeers for the dying Senator John McCain (for having voted against the repeal of the Affordable Care Act). He mocked the manhood of several protestors, and shouted, "Get 'em out of here!" As for Hispanic migrants, he said, "We're sending them the hell back!" And again he portrayed his executive order halting the family separations as his own, humane idea.	1, 6, 7, 9, 11

6-21-18	Even more treason! Mr. Trump said in a television interview that the media's skepticism about the fruits of his recent summit with North Korea was " almost treasonous. " He had previously accused Democrats of treason for not having applauded his State of the Union address. <sup>47</sup>	1, 9, 11

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 17 – July 30 , 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

6-22-18	No deal. Mr. Trump told Congress to postpone indefinitely any attempt to pass immigration legislation, despite his having made that issue the hallmark of his presidency. The statement reflected his apparent, belated acknowledgement of the complexities of the issue and the divisions within Congress, even though his party controlled Congress. The postponement was Mr. Trump's latest failure to accomplish things that he could not effect unilaterally as president such as he had done with regulatory roll-backs, judicial appointments, and pardons of criminals. The New York Times wrote that it exemplified his failure to "make deals," despite his self-professed superiority in that skill. The Times listed other deals that he had failed to make, notwithstanding his considerable efforts (or at least volubility): health care, gun control, spending cuts, NAFTA, China trade, steel and aluminum imports, Middle East peace, the Qatar blockade, Syria, Russia, Iran, climate change, and Pacific trade. Even the major deal of his administration, the tax cut legislation, had been struck within Congress rather than through his own attention. And despite his claims to the contrary, there was nothing yet approaching a "deal" with North Korea. [Continued below.]	10, 11
----------------	---	---------------

6-22-18	[Continued.] The Times wrote: "Even routine deals sometimes elude Mr. Trump, or he chooses to blow them up. After a Group of 7 summit meeting this month with the world's leading economic powers, Mr. Trump, expressing pique at Canada's prime minister, refused to sign the carefully negotiated communiqué that his own team had agreed to. It was the sort of boilerplate agreement that every previous president had made over four decades. ... "To be sure, [the above-listed types of non-deals] can be enormously complex and forging consensus can take time. Negotiations over such matters have frustrated more seasoned presidents with more bipartisan or internationalist instincts. Any judgment before the end of his four-year term may be premature. But no modern president has sold himself on the promise of negotiating skills more than Mr. Trump has. He regularly boasts that deals will be 'easy' and 'quick' and the best ever."<sup>1</sup> Several of CSD's members are attorneys. "Dealing" by way of insults and bullying has been discredited by experts on negotiating techniques for decades. It may succeed in two-party negotiations, especially when one party holds most of the power; but less often in transactions involving multiple counter-parties, or in repeat transactions with non-captive counter-parties (members of Congress, foreign countries). People just won't put up with it. We do not believe that Mr. Trump's deal-making style – the posturing, the bullying, the egotism, the capriciousness – is likely to serve either the practical or the values-based interests of America on a durable basis.	10, 11
6-22-18	Cheers and jeers. The Washington Post characterized and documented the nature and volume of the oral reactions by attendees at Mr. Trump's recent rally in Duluth, Minnesota, and at other rallies: raucous "boos" and taunts following his naming of enemies; raucous cries to build the wall at the Mexican border; and raucous chants and cheers for his praise of America and of his purported accomplishments. The Post likened that phenomenon to a rock concert.<sup>2</sup> But CSD sees no connection to a rock concert. To us, the unique mix of hatred, self-praise and jingoism that Mr. Trump had been routinely visiting upon and evoking from audiences for several years seemed comparable only to what dictators bring out in political broadcasts and rallies.	9

6-22-18	Dead children. Mr. Trump met on television with relatives of American children who had been killed by undocumented Hispanic migrants, displaying large photographs of the children that he had autographed. The event came amid the still-raging controversy about Mr. Trump's harsh policy of separating Hispanic migrant children from their parents at the Mexican border, which he had been forced by national and international outrage to back down from just two days earlier. He said to the cameras, “These are the American citizens permanently separated from their loved ones. The word “permanently” being the word that you have to think about. Permanently. They’re not separated for a day or two days. They are permanently separated.” [The migrant families would be separated for much longer than a day or two.] Mr. Trump had the relatives graphically describe how the children had died. He cited exaggerated statistics as to the number of such deaths. And he blamed the mainstream media and Democrats for creating or ignoring the tragedies. To CSD, the event appeared to be an effort to cynically and demagogically exploit the memory of the child victims, as Mr. Trump had done after the school shootings in Parkland, Florida (see our entry of February 26); to justify Mr. Trump's harsh family separation policy; to demonize and dehumanize undocumented Hispanic migrants categorically; and to make the loss and suffering of "our" children appear more important than the loss and suffering of "theirs." Earlier in the day, by way of Twitter, Mr. Trump had accused Democrats of telling “their phony stories of sadness and grief [about the migrant children], hoping it will help them in the elections.”	1, 6, 7, 9
6-24-18	Ax the judges! By way of twitter, Mr. Trump explicitly (more explicitly than before) called for the immediate deportation of all undocumented migrants, for eliminating immigration courts, and for denying due process to asylum seekers and other migrants. Such an outcome would violate the Constitution, international refugee law, and American treaties adopting that law. He also wrote, “Our immigration policy [is] laughed at all over the world.” That is not evenly remotely true. Only Mr. Trump's policy and policy goals were laughed at and reviled – at least among refugee professionals worldwide, whose writings several members of CSD regularly read.	2, 6, 7, 14

6-24-18	Hawking Mar-a-Lago. The New York Times reported that the White House would be distributing a commemorative "challenge coin" featuring the image of Mr. Trump's Florida resort, Mar-a-Lago – a bald advertisement for one of Mr. Trump's for-profit ventures, and a further testament to his grandiose, self-promoting, ethically challenged view of the presidency.<sup>3</sup> Other commemorative coins previously ordered by Mr. Trump had likewise represented presidential firsts: a gilded, super-sized coin that replaced "E pluribus unum" with Mr. Trump's campaign slogan, "Make America Great Again"; and a medal featuring a portrait of himself with the North Korean butcher, Kim Jong-un. (See CSD's entries of December 22, 2017 and May 21, 2018.) The Times wrote: "People who have traveled with Mr. Trump say he has become enthralled by challenge coins, attributing his interest to his appreciation for military traditions and might, as well as his attraction to gaudy displays of gilded excess. That fascination grew during the presidential campaign, when he would receive coins from law enforcement and military personnel whom he encountered at stops." That the Mar-a-Lago coin was being paid for by some of Mr. Trump's White House staff rather than by the government seemed to CSD not the valid excuse that the White House claimed it to be, but rather a possible violation of both campaign finance law and the ban on federal employees giving gifts to their superiors. The Times reported that after it had inquired about the Mar-a-Lago coin, White House plans for other coins – featuring Mr. Trump's Trump Tower in Manhattan and his golf course in Bedminster, New Jersey – were abruptly canceled.	9, 11, 15
6-25-18	The immigrant invasion. The Washington Post reported that although Mr. Trump had angrily characterized immigration as an ever-more threatening "invasion" by Hispanics across the Mexican border, the data showed a different picture. In 2016 (the latest year for which figures were available), some 1.2 immigrants lawfully obtained green cards; another 629,000 people illegally overstayed their visas and thus remained here as immigrants; and only 170,000 crossed the border illegally by land (down 90% from the year 2000).<sup>4</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7

6-25-18	[Continued.] The Post wrote that the number of green cards issued was not affected by the number of illegal entries or overstays; and that immigration hawks ought to be (and some are) more worried about the visa over-stays than about the land crossings. Why then was Mr. Trump so fixated on the undocumented crossings? CSD believes that it was just a matter of a demagogue's need to simplify problems and to name ethnic out-groups as a country's mortal tormentors.	6, 7
6-26-18 +	Slaughtering the hog. After the E.U. responded to Mr. Trump's new tariffs by imposing retaliatory tariffs that would be ruinous for American motorcycle manufacturer Harley-Davidson, the company announced plans to move some of its manufacturing operations overseas so as to avoid those tariffs. (Harley was not alone – many manufacturers and farmers around the country feared similar tariff-generated calamities.<sup>5</sup>) The announcement angered and likely embarrassed Mr. Trump: because he had previously praised Harley for its made-in-America profile; because he had cultivated its "hog"-riding customer base and promoted the company by hosting it at the White House; and because the company had now very publicly undercut his assurances that his protectionist tariffs would save and restore American jobs. For several days Mr. Trump responded to the company's announcement in a series of tweets and in a speech – to the effect that Harley was ungrateful for the (marketing) help he had given it; that its customers would and should abandon it; and that he himself would punish Harley by brutally taxing the company. He called it "the beginning of the end" for Harley. The company's stock price plummeted. On July 3, Mr. Trump tweeted that he would help foreign motorcycle manufacturers move to the U.S. to supplant Harley, charging that Harley's customers were unhappy with Harley's move, and deriding it for an unrelated sales drop. CSD does not take a position on trade policy (except to the extent that it may be erratic, demagogic or not fact-based, all as Mr. Trump's policy had appeared thus far to be). But we continue to strenuously object to his unprecedented pattern – contrary to our country's bedrock belief in free enterprise – of singling out individual American companies for punishment or reward to suit his political and emotional needs. Dictators do that.	9, 11

6-26-18	Justices blast presidential intolerance. The Supreme Court, in a strict partisan vote, upheld Mr. Trump's controversial travel ban for people from several Muslim-majority nations, as having fallen within the president's national security prerogatives. Justices Roberts (writing for the majority) and Kennedy (concurring) nevertheless subtly but specifically castigated Mr. Trump for his anti-Muslim statements as offending the Constitution and the American way.<sup>6</sup> To CSD's knowledge, essentially calling a president a bigot and his behavior insulting to the Constitution and to our ideals was unprecedented on the part of the Court. Mr. Trump promptly gloated about his judicial victory. But he was silent about the court's excoriation of him – if he even understood that they, in their restrained and legally cautious language, had done that.	6, 11
6-26-18	Returning the children. A federal district judge in San Diego issued a preliminary injunction ordering the government to stop separating migrant children from their parents at the Mexican border unless their parents endangered them, thus removing the issue from presidential discretion. It also ordered that the government reunite families with their parents pursuant to an expedited timeline. The court wrote that the separations – effected under Mr. Trump's "zero-tolerance" immigration policy since May – were likely to cause irreparable psychological damage to both parents and children, and that the government's failure to have planned its separation and reunification operations had led to chaos and had violated due process. Whether the government was able to comply with the timeline, and whether it even knew where all the children were, would long remain unclear.	6, 9, 10; Plus gratuitous cruelty (its own category)

6-27-18	The Fargo rally. At a rally for congressional candidates in Fargo, North Dakota, Mr. Trump adhered to his customary style and themes while addressing the principally white attendees. He boasted about the crowd size; promoted several private businesses; snidely called the recently intemperate African American Congresswoman Maxine Waters the "new leader" of the Democratic party; disparaged the mortally ill Senator John McCain for having voted against repealing the Affordable Care Act; derided "Crooked Hillary" Clinton and called her "guilty, guilty, guilty, guilty"; alleged that Democratic Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi "wants to protect" the Hispanic gang MS-13; claimed that he was smarter than his uncle who had been an MIT professor, and (for good measure) "smarter than anybody"; falsely stated that Michigan voters approved of his performance as president; crowed that a New York Democratic congressman "got his ass kicked" in a recent primary election; derided the "elite" (claiming that "we" – who? – were smarter and richer than "them"); and said that "We will make America loving again."<sup>7</sup> The New York Times identified at least 12 exaggerated or (sometimes viciously) false statements – too many to list here, but stunning in their array.<sup>8</sup>	6, 7, 9, 11
6-27-18, 6-28-18	Fear and loathing. Within the space of nine hours following the Fargo rally, Mr. Trump tweeted protracted and excited allegations that Democrats were endangering American lives by supporting undocumented migrants, and that the Justice Department and the FBI were persecuting him and his associates while giving Hillary Clinton a pass. To the latter point, for possibly the first time, he expressly named special prosecutor Robert Mueller as one of his persecutors; and he yet again questioned whether Russia had interfered in the 2016 presidential election (contrary to the findings of multiple American intelligence agencies). The tweets contained too many falsehoods and exaggerations for CSD to identify here. But in order to fully convey the tirade's venom, its bizarreness, its insults to the values of our Republic, and its attempts to obstruct the DOJ's investigation of Mr. Trump and his associates by turning public opinion against it (a project in which he had been succeeding), we quote it in its entirety: "Thank you North Dakota. Together, we are MAKING AMERICA SAFE AND GREAT AGAIN! ... [Continued below.]	6, 9, 12

6-27-18, 6-28-18	[Continued.] "In recent days we have heard shameless attacks on our courageous law enforcement officers. Extremist Democrat politicians have called for the complete elimination of ICE. Leftwing Activists are trying to block ICE officers from doing their jobs and publicly posting their... "...home addresses – putting these selfless public servants in harm's way. These radical protesters want ANARCHY – but the only response they will find from our government is LAW AND ORDER! ... "Lover FBI Agent Peter Strzok [the indiscreetly anti-Trump staffer who had mainly sleuthed Hillary Clinton's offenses] was given poor marks on yesterday's closed door testimony and, according to most reports, refused to answer many questions. There was no Collusion and the Witch Hunt, headed by 13 Angry Democrats and others who are totally conflicted, is Rigged! ... "Russia continues to say they had nothing to do with Meddling in our Election! Where is the DNC Server, and why didn't Shady James Comey and the now disgraced FBI agents take and closely examine it? Why isn't Hillary/Russia being looked at? So many questions, so much corruption!... "Peter Strzok worked as the leader of the Rigged Witch Hunt for a long period of time - he got it started and was only fired because the gig was up. But remember, he took his orders from Comey and McCabe and they took their orders from you know who. Mueller/Comey best friends! ,,, "When is Bob Mueller going to list his Conflicts of Interest? Why has it taken so long? Will they be listed at the top of his $22,000,000 Report...And what about the 13 Angry Democrats, will they list their conflicts with Crooked H? How many people will be sent to jail and..... "....persecuted on old and/or totally unrelated charges (there was no collusion and there was no obstruction of the no collusion)...And what is going on in the FBI &amp; DOJ with Crooked Hillary, the DNC and all of the lies? A disgraceful situation!"	6, 9, 12

6-29-18	Religion in the world. The International Organization for Migration – a United Nations Agency tasked with data-gathering, logistical and other operations relative to the movement of refugees, which had been led by an American for most of its 67 years – roundly rejected Ken Isaacs, Mr. Trump's nominee to lead the organization. Although Isaacs had had a distinguished career with Samaritan's Purse (the Evangelical relief organization), his nomination failed due to his previous anti-Muslim remarks, his skepticism about climate change, and Mr. Trump's hostility toward migrant rights and international organizations. The episode was seen as evidence of international resentment toward Mr. Trump's America, and of the limitations of Mr. Trump's ability to foist his controversial outlooks on the rest of the world.<sup>9</sup> Isaacs' nomination coincided roughly with the naming under Mr. Trump's presidency of several high profile Christian political activists to U.S. positions in which they would be responsible for advancing universalist, non-sectarian human rights globally: Sam Brownback as Ambassador for International Religious Freedom; Robert Destro as head of the State Department's Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor; and Gary Bauer and Tony Perkins as members of the Commission for International Religious Freedom. Those units had long been amply represented by committed Christian (and other faith-inspired) voices. But CSD, through its human rights affiliations, has learned that some of the new appointments, and related staffing decisions, have taken the units in a more aggressively sectarian and polarizing direction. CSD very much supports the religious freedom movement's advocacy for persecuted Christian minorities overseas – one of our members was active in that advocacy during the movement's early days. And several of CSD's members see their own international humanitarian efforts as being faith-inspired. But we are concerned that the appointments and the increased "sectarianization" of our country's international humanitarian efforts, combined with the Trump administration's more general disinterest in universal human rights and international humanitarian relief, could risk for our government's pertinent units a sectarian operational bias, a corruption of the very notion of human rights and international humanitarian relief, and a backlash from other countries and peoples. We earnestly hope our concerns are misplaced.	6, 13, 14
----------------	---	------------------

6-29-18	Artless. A New York Times columnist documented how Mr. Trump had become the first recent president to appear to be categorically indifferent if not opposed to the fine and performing arts. The columnist wrote that the phenomenon reflected a soullessness in the administration, and that it encouraged a dehumanization and diminution of the American spirit.<sup>10</sup> CSD is not certain whether an aversion to art is anti-democratic, as such. After all, historically, some of the world's most barbaric dictators embraced the fine and performing arts to their liking (while torturing and murdering artists whose work they believed threatened them). But we see in Mr. Trump an elevation of money, power, fame and sex above all other appetites and values – to the exclusion of both the empathic and reflective values that the arts often advance. We are inclined to categorize this behavior as indicated.	11
6-29-18	Kissing the bride, grabbing the country by the XXXXX. Uninvited and unannounced but consistent with his practice, Mr. Trump dropped in on a private wedding at his golf club in Bedminster, New Jersey and kissed the bride. The club at one point had explicitly promoted itself as a wedding venue by holding out the possibility of such presidential visits.	15
7-1-18, 7-2-18	WTO, NATO threats. On July 1, Axios reported that Mr. Trump had ordered, and his administration had drafted, a bill that would withdraw the U.S. from the rules of the World Trade Organization.<sup>11</sup> The next day, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had issued written (but unspecified) threats to other NATO members for their under-spending on military defense.<sup>12</sup> Both moves were consistent with Mr. Trump's hostility toward the Group of 7, the United Nations and other multi-lateral organizations. They were seen in particular as supporting Russia's goal of weakening Western alliances – almost as though, at least metaphorically, Russia had directed them.	12, 13, 14

7-2-18	Selling exposure, again. NBC reported that Mr. Trump's wife Melania – who in years past had posed nude and nearly nude for several magazine photo shoots<sup>13</sup> – while at the White House was secretly receiving substantial royalties through Getty Images from the licensing of glamorous photographs of herself and her family. (The licensing agreement stipulated that the images could be used only in positive news stories about the Trumps.) NBC was not aware of any other First Ladies having traded on their White House celebrity in that manner (that is, by selling their images, or their looks) – only of their having written and sold inspirational books, the proceeds of which were donated to charities.<sup>14</sup>	17 (11, 15)
7-2-18	Asylum abridged. A federal judge in the District of Columbia issued a preliminary injunction against what had proven to be a secret, de facto policy of the Trump administration of routinely, extensively and indefinitely imprisoning asylum seekers (those credibly fleeing persecution abroad) pending their asylum hearings before immigration judges, contrary to U.S. and international law.	6, 7, 9, 14
7-2-18 +	Pruitt: The adventure continues; until it doesn't. On July 2, Environmental Protection Agency chief Scott Pruitt's former deputy chief of staff revealed, and CNN confirmed, that Pruitt had routinely, deliberately and illegally created false daily logs so as to hide from the public many questionable meetings, such as those with executives of industries that he was tasked with regulating, and a $240 per person dinner in Rome with a Vatican cardinal who was known for his climate science denial and who was accused of sexual abuse.<sup>15</sup> The revelation shortly followed a report by The Washington Post that Pruitt's EPA had been operating under an "open door policy" toward lobbyists from regulated industries, routinely granting their wishes.<sup>16</sup> As previously reported in this document, much of Pruitt's political career had been bankrolled by such industries. The Post and The New York Times had also recently reported that the EPA's chief ethics officer had recommended that Pruitt be investigated by the EPA's inspector general for an array of offenses, many or most of them likely the subject of over a dozen investigations of Pruitt that were already underway.<sup>17</sup> [Continued below.]	17 (7, 11, 15, 16)

7-2-18 +	[Continued.] The Post also reported that Pruitt had directed a staffer to find his wife not just a job (as CSD had chronicled on June 13), but a job paying over $200,000.<sup>18</sup> At last, on July 5, Pruitt resigned. His controversial tenure was summarized at the links at this end note.<sup>19</sup> Mr. Trump praised him on his way out the door. And in his resignation letter – true to his pattern of obsequiously lauding Mr. Trump in furtherance of the latter's personality cult, which practice until his resignation had appeared to have protected his position – he wrote that Mr. Trump had "blessed [him] personally" by allowing him to serve; he praised Mr. Trump's "courage, resoluteness and steadfast commitment"; and he said, "I count it as a blessing to serve you in any capacity." Promoting Pruitt's profile as a man of strongly professed faith, the letter soared to this extraordinary conclusion: "My desire in service to you has always been to bless you as you make important decisions for the American people. I believe you are serving as President today because of God's providence. I believe that same providence brought me into your service. I pray as I have served you that I have blessed you and enabled you to effectively lead the American people. Thank you again Mr. President for the honor of serving you and I wish you Godspeed in all that you put your hand to." Pruitt's immediate successor as acting EPA administrator was Andrew Wheeler, the deputy administrator and a former coal lobbyist. Within weeks, a call was raised to investigate him for having met with former clients three times since becoming deputy in April, contrary to his ethics pledge.<sup>20</sup>	17 (7, 9, 11, 15, 16)
7-3-18	Winning in North Korea. Only days after intelligence reports had revealed that North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un was enhancing his nuclear capabilities rather than restraining them – contrary to the much vaunted spirit of Mr. Trump's recent summit with Kim – Mr. Trump tweeted: "Many good conversations with North Korea - it is going well! In the meantime, no Rocket Launches or Nuclear Testing in 8 months. ... All of Asia is thrilled. Only the Opposition Party, which includes the Fake News, is complaining. If not for me, we would now be at War with North Korea!" [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 11, 12

7-3-18	[Continued.] CSD's understanding, however, was that America's Asian allies were more nervous than thrilled; and that if in fact the U.S. had been at the brink of war with North Korea some months ago (which was and remains debatable), it was Mr. Trump who had brought us there.	1, 7, 9, 11, 12
7-5-18	Mockery in Montana. At a campaign rally in Great Falls, Montana, Mr. Trump mockingly (as before) alleged that Democratic Congresswoman Maxine Waters (who is black) had extremely low intelligence; mockingly (as often before) referred to Democratic Senator Elizabeth Warren as "Pocahontas" for her claims to Native American ancestry; and made mocking reference to the "Me, Too" movement against sexual predation (himself having been accused of serial acts of predation). He also took the occasion to disparage the NFL's television ratings and its new policy on player protests of racial injustice (allowing players to remain in the locker room during the national anthem); allege that the Justice Department was giving Hillary Clinton "special treatment" relative to her email abuses (evoking the usual "Lock her up!" chants from the crowd); boast (improbably) that North Korea would completely denuclearize; chastise the "Fake News"; assure that Russian President Vladimir Putin, at the two men's upcoming summit, would be "fine" (apparently meaning "fair and trustworthy"); allege without foundation (as often before) that Clinton had won the popular vote in 2016 due to massive election fraud; and charge (falsely) that Democrats wanted to let the Hispanic gang MS-13 "run wild in our communities" and to impose "anarchy" in the country. The New York Times counted a staggering 18 falsehoods in his speech, each more stunning than the next.<sup>21</sup> The Washington Post calculated that 76% of Mr. Trump's claims were untrue or unsubstantiated.<sup>22</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 12
7-5-18	Ending asylum. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump repeated his June 24 call for Congress to end due process and safe haven for political asylum seekers in the U.S., at least as to Hispanics at the Mexican border. And as he had done many times before, he characterized the alternative measure as requiring the hiring of "thousands" of immigration judges to hear asylum cases, a measure which not even asylum advocates had felt was called for.	2, 6, 7, 14

7-5-18	Fox in the henhouse. Mr. Trump hired as his deputy chief of staff for communications Bill Shine, who had recently resigned as a top Fox News executive while under scrutiny for having failed to police rampant sexual harassment there. The appointment was notable for multiple reasons. First, Shine became Mr. Trump's fifth communications director in 17 months. Second, the appointment defied widespread concerns about harassment of women in the workplace. Third, it cemented Mr. Trump's proximity to Fox: Shine became his second Fox hire (the first had been Heather Nauert, named the State Department's chief spokesperson); Fox had been widely seen by both friends and foes of Mr. Trump as vocally and indiscriminately supporting him in its editorial content; Mr. Trump was known to rely heavily and impulsively on Fox editorial content (even when erroneous) as inspiration for his Twitter activity; and he reportedly had been consulting with incendiary and fact-challenged Fox commentator Sean Hannity regularly on matters of personnel and policy. That wedding of our country's governance with the marketing intuition and continuous, dubious messaging of a major television network was unprecedented and disturbing.	9
7-5-18, 7-9-18	From the Supreme Court – with gratitude? On July 5, Politico observed that whoever Mr. Trump would pick to fill the vacant Supreme Court seat created by the departure of Justice Anthony Kennedy could feel sufficiently beholden to Mr. Trump as to rule in his favor in the likely event that one or more of the many pending proceedings against him personally (sex scandals, emoluments clause, non-profit violations, incitement to assault protestors, and above all the special prosecutor's investigation) were to reach the Court.<sup>23</sup> No previous president had been so personally entangled in legal process when appointing a Justice, or so personally positioned to benefit from such an appointment. In fact on July 9, when Mr. Trump nominated Brett Kavanaugh for the position (in front of television cameras, after conducting a dramatic, reality-show style guessing game as to his pick), Kavanaugh's first words of acceptance expressed effusive gratitude toward Mr. Trump. More importantly, Kavanaugh was known for – and was likely selected in part for – his belief that presidents should have expansive administrative powers and should not be subject to investigations or other legal process.<sup>24</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 11

7-5-18, 7-9-18	[Continued.] Process issues coming before the Court could include whether the president can be subpoenaed, whether the president can pardon himself, and whether the president can dismiss a special prosecutor who is investigating him. If appointed, Kavanaugh would seemingly be unique among the Justices for his hostility toward presidential subpoenas.<sup>25</sup>	2, 9, 11
7-6-18	Charity bashes. The Palm Beach Post reported that nearly all of the $706,000 in donations made by Mr. Trump's foundation in Palm Beach County since 2008 went to charities that had hosted lavish fundraisers at his Mar-a-Lago resort. In other words, the foundation (which was now defunct but was nevertheless being sued by the State of New York for non-profit law violations) would – off the record – at once reward the charities with cash for promoting Mr. Trump's property and exact a booking fee for him personally in connection with making its charitable gifts.<sup>26</sup> Both types of "deals," however artful, were unusual for bona fide foundations, and (in the view of CSD) legally suspect. Those activities do not appear to have occurred since Mr. Trump's election, and thus they do not fall within the reporting period of this Chronology. CSD nevertheless includes them here to further illuminate our June 14 entry relative to the New York lawsuit, in which the state attorney general effectively alleged that Mr. Trump's foundation was an utter scam.	Strong-arming charities (its own category)
7-6-18	Formaldehyde for all. Politico reported that the Environmental Protection Agency was blocking the release of a study that indicated that most Americans inhale enough formaldehyde vapor in the course of daily life to put them at risk of developing leukemia and other ailments.	8
7-7-18 +	More blows to Americans' health. On July 7, the Trump administration announced that it was temporarily halting billions of dollars in risk adjustment payments to health insurance companies under the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") – payments intended to mitigate disproportionate risks as among insurers with sick patients and those with healthy patients – because a federal judge had questioned how the government was calculating the payments. [Continued below.]	11

7-7-18 +	[Continued.] As a consequence of the payment suspension (in the view of a Wall Street Journal writer) and in the service of Mr. Trump's vanity and vengeance rather than the health of Americans (in the view of CSD), more insurance market turbulence, higher premiums and fewer insureds were projected.<sup>27</sup> (On July 24, following an outcry from insurers, the administration would reverse its decision, and promise to resume the payments.) On July 10, the administration announced that it was slashing its grants to non-profit organizations that helped consumers subscribe to the ACA – its second round of cuts, bringing the cumulative cuts to 80%. It also mandated that the "navigators" at the non-profits introduce consumers to non-ACA compliant insurance plans as well as the ACA. Critics charged that consumers – particularly the poor – could be encouraged to purchase plans offering weak coverage, while many others would lose all opportunity for face-to-face assistance.<sup>28</sup> (CSD does not hold a position on the ACA – only on its wanton destruction for the sake of Mr. Trump's political and emotional benefit.)	11
7-7-18, 7-8-18	Little truth; much obstruction. On July 7, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Public opinion has turned strongly against the Rigged Witch Hunt and the 'Special' Counsel because the public understands that there was no Collusion with Russia (so ridiculous), that the two FBI lovers were a fraud against our Nation &amp; that the only Collusion was with the Dems!" Regrettably, in one respect he was correct: according to Politico, Mr. Trump had by now succeeded in turning 36% of voters against special prosecutor Robert Mueller. And then this: "The Rigged Witch Hunt, originally headed by FBI lover boy Peter S (for one year) &amp; now, 13 Angry Democrats, should look into the missing DNC Server, Crooked Hillary's illegally deleted Emails, the Pakistani Fraudster, Uranium One, Podesta &amp; so much more. It's a Democrat Con Job!" On this point, Mr. Trump and CSD could likely agree: that the conspiracy theories had come in a breathtaking stream from a besieged politician with an unusual mind and a determined rhetorical agenda. The following day, Mr. Trump's personal attorney and television surrogate, former New York mayor Rudy Giuliani, told ABC news that Mueller's probe was "the most corrupt investigation I have ever seen." [Continued below.]	7, 9

7-7-18, 7-8-18	[Continued.] Like everyone else, of course, Giuliani had no idea how the largely secret investigation was being conducted, what its working findings were, or how those findings were driving its direction. Unlike everyone else, however, in recent months he had distinguished himself for his aggressive, erratic, television-borne defense of Mr. Trump. In any event, he was speaking for his client (or so he was bound to do under pertinent professional standards), and in that he seemed bent on causing popular sentiment to obstruct and shut down the investigation. CSD does not undertake to report on every utterance of Mr. Trump's lawyers or supporters; but this episode of pointed obstruction struck us as meriting a place in our Chronology.	7, 9
7-7-18 +	No tariffs or tirades for Ivanka. Politico and The Huffington Post reported that none of the tariffs that Mr. Trump had recently imposed on Chinese imports touched any of the Chinese-manufactured products that his daughter Ivanka was importing for her fashion line. HuffPost also noted that although Mr. Trump had railed against Harley-Davidson after its announcement that it would move some of its manufacturing operations overseas, none of Ms. Trump's branded products (and few of Mr. Trump's own branded products) had ever been "Made in America."<sup>29</sup> HuffPost subsequently reported on the criticisms that she had recently drawn for touting her father's plan for the creation of American jobs while contracting out her own manufacturing to Asian sweat shops.<sup>30</sup> On July 24, Ms. Trump would announce that she was closing her company. She explained that she would always be too occupied with policy issues to ever return to it. But the Trumps are business people. News media reported that she had been scorched both politically and financially – that her brand had been doing poorly since, and likely because, she had taken her White House office, and because of her father's unpopularity as president. The off-shoring and sweat shop concerns may also have been hitting home – politically, financially, or even personally. Notably, she would likely not have been able to sell the business, if its principal asset was its tarnished brand. In any event, her announcement had come only days after Mr. Trump had threatened to impose tariffs on virtually all Chinese imports – seemingly, even Ms. Trump's – such that (in CSD's view) her decision to close may have been preemptive, and even something akin to insider trading.	11, 15, 17 (7, 11, 15)

7-8-18, 7-9-18	Forking the babies. The New York Times reported that in the spring the Trump Administration had threatened Ecuador (and implicitly other countries) with trade sanctions and cuts in foreign aid if they were to sponsor a perfunctory World Health Organization resolution favoring breast-feeding babies over using infant formula. The U.S. also had threatened to cut its support for the WHO over the matter. For 40 years scientists had agreed that breast-feeding was healthier than the use of formula; and today they saw breast-feeding as standing to save hundreds of thousands of children's lives and hundreds of billions of dollars, annually, worldwide. They viewed the recent U.S. objection as hostile to science and health and as intended instead to favor American formula manufacturers. In the end, the resolution was saved when its sponsorship was taken up by Russia, which country the U.S. chose not to threaten. Russia appeared to pick up diplomatic points with the other delegates, while the U.S. lost.<sup>31</sup> The day after the news report, Mr. Trump tweeted: "The failing NY Times Fake News story today about breast feeding must be called out. The U.S. strongly supports breast feeding but we don't believe women should be denied access to formula. Many women need this option because of malnutrition and poverty." The tweet was false both as to its implication that The Times had reported erroneously, and as to its claim that formula is advantageous in circumstances of malnutrition and poverty.<sup>32</sup>	1, 7, 8, 12, 14
7-9-18, 7-10-18	Picking on Pfizer. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump condemned Pfizer for raising the prices of some of its drugs – once again (as in the cases of Harley-Davidson and many others) singling out an American company for opprobrium and thus interfering with its business. He blamed Pfizer for "taking advantage of the poor &amp; others unable to defend themselves," ignoring both his own habits in that direction and his having failed in his campaign promise to force drug prices down. Apparently fearing a blow to its stock price, Pfizer announced the next day that it would postpone its product price increases.<sup>33</sup>	9

7-10-18	The Hammonds are pardoned. Mr. Trump pardoned Oregon ranchers and federal land arsonists Dwight and Steven Hammond, who were revered by extremist militias that had occupied other federal land in protest over the Hammonds' initial convictions. Mr. Trump had recently predicted those pardons, as reported by CSD in our May 31 entry. The move constituted a continuation of Mr. Trump's streak of high profile, self-interested, political acts of clemency, which, together with their drastic implications for democracy, are described in that entry. But opponents of federal land conservation, including the leader of the occupation who was now running for governor of Nevada, exulted.<sup>34</sup>	2, 9, 11
7-10-18	Spinning the children. Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar told CNN, as to the thousands of children in his custody (through his Office of Refugee Resettlement) that the U.S. had harshly separated from their parents at the Mexican border: “It is one of the great acts of American generosity and charity, what we are doing for these unaccompanied kids who are smuggled into our country or come across illegally.” The double-speak drew media attention. Not incidentally, HHS had missed the July 10 deadline for re-uniting most of the age five-and-under children with their families that had been ordered by a federal court – apparently due at least partly to not knowing where the children and/or parents were.	17 (7, 10, 11; plus gratuitous cruelty, its own category)
7-11-18 +	In Europe. Mr. Trump's tour of Europe laid bare for the world his unfitness as president and his danger to democracy. It was an embarrassment for and a blow to America. An extensive summary follows. A. With NATO, in Brussels. 1. Overview. On July 11, Mr. Trump traveled to Brussels to meet with NATO leaders. As at the recent G-7 meeting in Toronto, he would skip meetings, force agenda changes, arrive at events late and leave early, and be otherwise generally disruptive.<sup>35</sup> Based on his pre-meeting remarks and his history since becoming president, European and American commentators widely feared that he would use the occasion to undercut the alliance and move closer to NATO's arch-enemy, Russia – a fear (or if it materialized, an actual development) of historic proportions for both America and democracy. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15

7-11-18 +	2. Knifing Germany. Mr. Trump began the NATO summit by angrily charging, with reporters present, that Germany's arrangement to import gas from Russia through a new pipeline was making Germany "captive of Russia" and "totally controlled by Russia." While some European leaders too were concerned about the pipeline, and while the U.S. had long opposed it (including for its potential to enable Russia to punitively cut off gas sales to Eastern Europe while enjoying Western European markets), in truth Germany was otherwise leading Europe's resistance to regional Russian hegemony and Russia's disruption of democracies. Germany's leader, Angela Merkel, had been characterized in the press as having replaced the American president as the "leader of the free world." She was also a friend of President Obama. Mr. Trump was widely seen as deeply resenting her. Mr. Trump's insulting comments, at the outset of what had traditionally been a cordial conference intended to project Western unity, appeared to be drawn from his playbook – attempting to humiliate his rivals, and accusing others of his own worst offenses as a means of distracting from and justifying his wrongful behavior (here, his friendship toward Russia). Commentators on the left and the right wrote that the affront was almost unprecedented in the alliance's nearly 70-year history. Two of Mr. Trump's aides who were present appeared in video to be taken aback. Republican and Democratic congressional leaders objected from afar. 3. The motive. In truth, Mr. Trump had long wished Europe to buy (expensive) American gas rather than (inexpensive) Russian gas.<sup>36</sup> At the conference he also demanded that every country commit 4% of its GDP to defense spending – far above the current 2% target, and not even met by the U.S. – reportedly shocking many in the room. It all seemed to be about money and winning (rather than defense or shared values), and about Mr. Trump's idea of the art of the deal. 4. The threat. During the conference, Mr. Trump was indeed viewed as having implicitly threatened to withdraw the U.S. from NATO; and in the end, the conference appeared to the Europeans to have been successful, only in that that withdrawal hadn't occurred – yet. But the Europeans were reportedly rattled. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
------------------	--	---

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] 5. The self. Still, Mr. Trump couldn't leave it at that. At a July 12 press conference following the meetings, he boasted that he alone had gotten NATO members to agree to eventually raise their defense spending to 2% – a commitment that the Obama administration had already won. He boasted that he had gotten Europeans to agree to spend more of that money sooner, which Italian and French leaders promptly denied. He said, "Everyone in the room thanked me" (which may actually have been true, given an accurate reading of his emotional needs – see below). He also boasted about his electoral college victory, the rise in the American stock markets, and his recent negotiations with North Korea – all while larding his comments with misstatements.<sup>37</sup> And despite the widespread perception among European leaders that Mr. Trump was erratic, ill-informed and untrustworthy, he repeated his claim that he was a "very stable genius."<sup>38</sup> Multiple commentators wrote that the European leaders were allowing Mr. Trump to preen precisely so as to keep the U.S. in NATO; and one wrote that those leaders resembled psychiatrists dealing "with a disturbed child."<sup>39</sup> At bottom, it was not clear to CSD how such boasts and such claims of overwhelming domination (presumably for the consumption of Mr. Trump's American supporters) would enhance America's effectiveness or bargaining position on the world stage. 6. And on Russia. Mr. Trump's attitude toward Russia arose, and contrasted sharply, in the same news conference. Asked how he would respond if Russian President Vladimir Putin were to deny his country's interference in the 2016 American election when the two men would shortly meet in Helsinki, Mr. Trump responded: [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] "I mean, look, he may. You know, what am I going to do if— he may deny it. I mean, it's one of those things. So all I can do is say, 'Did you?' and 'Don't do it again.' . . . He's a competitor. He's been very nice to me the times I've met him. I've been nice to him. He's a competitor. Somebody was saying, is he an enemy? He's not my enemy. Is he a friend? No, I don't know him well enough. But the couple of times I've gotten to meet him, we get along very well. I hope we get along well. I think we get along well. But ultimately, he's a competitor. He's representing Russia. I'm representing the United States. So, in a sense, we're competitors. Not a question of friend or enemy. He's not my enemy. And, hopefully, someday, maybe he'll be a friend." To paraphrase, Mr. Trump cared nothing about the gross injuries that Putin had inflicted (and was inflicting) on Ukraine, Syria or America, but only whether he could personally befriend him – and, as CSD had long suspected, find a way to divide up much of the world's spoils between themselves, such as sometimes occurs among ruthless but "friendly" competitors in business. NBC reported that promptly after the NATO summit, the Pentagon had gone into "full-scale damage control" to counteract such comments and to reassure America's NATO allies.<sup>40</sup> That exercise was not anomalous. CSD finds it staggering how routinely, and how desperately, Mr. Trump's principal advisors and bureaucracy (presumably the "deep state" that he had often alleged was conspiring against him) had had to scramble in order to un-do the injuries he had caused to our country, and to himself. 7. In sum. Altogether, the mainstream media's consensus was that Mr. Trump's wrecking-ball antics had scarred NATO, empowered Russia, and accomplished nothing for the U.S. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
------------------	--	---

7-11-18 +	[Continued.]  B. Bearing gifts, in the U.K.  1. Unwelcome. From Brussels, Mr. Trump proceeded to the U.K. for a meeting with British Prime Minister Theresa May. He was greeted across that country with days of widespread protests and ridicule – including, in London, a 250,000 person march, thousands of belligerent (and often vulgarly belligerent) placards, and a giant, diapered "baby Trump" balloon – all reflecting a level of outrage, hostility and disrespect that no previous American president had experienced. 2. Insulting. Upon his arrival on July 12, Mr. Trump told The Sun, a tabloid affiliated with Fox News, that May's "soft Brexit" strategy (exiting the European Union while retaining certain trade and migration accords) would "probably kill" any trade deal with the U.S. It was consistent with Mr. Trump's desire to divide and conquer Europe<sup>41</sup>, but otherwise an extraordinary intrusion into the workings of the EU, America's greatest international ally. It was also extraordinary and insulting for an American politician to publicly criticize, let alone threaten, his host in her own land. (In a press conference the next day, he denied having made the statement. He instead blamed the "fake news" for misquoting him, and he said that May should do whatever she wanted relative to Brexit. But The Sun quickly released the tapes of the interview, which corroborated what he had said.) In the same interview with The Sun, Mr. Trump promoted May's principal Tory rival, Boris Johnson, as a good replacement for her, another extraordinary act of meddling and impropriety. 3. Racist. Also in the interview, he blasted London's (brown) Mayor Sadiq Khan, falsely blaming him for an increase in (brown) crime and terrorism there. And he pointedly told The Sun that the recent wave of (brown) immigration was destroying Europe's culture. That is, not content with his incendiary racism at home, he chose to export it. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11,  12, 13, 14, 15

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] 4. Self-promoting. Mr. Trump also chose to export his preposterous claims as to his own popularity. He told The Sun, "They like me a lot in the U.K.," when opinion polls – not to mention the protests – demonstrated the opposite, and Princes Charles and William had refused to meet him.<sup>42</sup> He also falsely boasted that he was the most popular Republican president in history – more popular even than Abraham Lincoln.<sup>43</sup> 5. Anti-democratic. For spice, Mr. Trump publicly denigrated specific American news outlets (CNN and NBC), likely a first for a president abroad. 6. Untruthful. On July 15, The Huffington Post recounted the many falsehoods that Mr. Trump had publicly dispensed to that point in his European adventure<sup>44</sup> – apparently committed to, or constitutionally unable to deviate from, his American rhetorical style. C. New Russian indictments. 1. The announcement. On July 13, while Mr. Trump was abroad, the Justice Department announced that a grand jury called by special prosecutor Robert Mueller had indicted 12 Russian military intelligence officers for hacking the email accounts of the Democratic National Committee and the personal office of then candidate Hillary Clinton during the 2016 election campaign. The hacking of Clinton's emails had first occurred on the very day that Mr. Trump, in a campaign speech, had urged the Russians to find and publicize emails that she had deleted from her private server. Now 26 of the 32 people indicted by Mueller were Russians. 2. The defense. Quickly and predictably, Mr. Trump's attorney Rudy Giuliani tweeted that the indictments established that no Americans were involved in what the Russians had done. But the indictments did not establish that; they did not even address that. Giuliani added that the investigation of Mr. Trump should end, because no evidence of his wrongdoing had emerged. But the evidence-gathering was ongoing – carefully and confidentially. To a virtual certainty Mueller had already uncovered vastly more data than he had revealed – that is in the nature of competent forensic investigations, as opposed to political and media circuses. 7-11-18 +	[Continued.] 3. The scapegoats. Mr. Trump had been advised of the indictments before traveling to Europe. But by the end of the day, as he prepared for his imminent meeting in Helsinki with Russian President Vladimir Putin, neither he nor the White House had commented on the alleged Russian crimes. In fact on the morning of July 13, shortly before the DOJ announcement, he had condemned the "rigged witch hunt" against him during a press conference with May. Finally, on July 14, via Twitter from Scotland, Mr. Trump blamed President Obama for having not stopped the Russian behavior, and the "Deep State" for not prosecuting Hillary Clinton instead of himself. As before, there was no outrage against Russia; only the aftertaste of Mr. Trump's fury toward Europe, and his ongoing scapegoating of others. Mr. Trump's continuing embrace of Russia – unlike most of his other positions, however controversial – was reportedly at complete odds with those of all of his senior staff.<sup>45</sup> D. At Home, in Scotland. 1. Promoting the club. On July 14, Mr. Trump arrived at his Trump Turnberry golf club in Scotland to play some rounds, promote his property, and observe its business and operational performance.<sup>46</sup> On his first day on the links (as he had done repeatedly in Europe before arriving at the club<sup>47</sup>), he tweeted how magnificent the club was. (He also tweeted attacks on CNN, President Obama and the "Deep State," and he boasted of his 2016 electoral victory.) As he traded on his reputation as president and conducted personal business, U.S. taxpayers footed the bill.<sup>48</sup> Not incidentally, Mr. Trump's son Eric was visiting and markedly promoting Turnberry at the same time.<sup>49</sup> 2. Fear of the foreigner. Mr. Trump had now spent 30% of his days as president at one or another of his properties, always at government expense.<sup>50</sup> For CSD, that reflected not only his business conflicts, his lavish spending and his yen for self-promotion, but his fear of and disdain for foreign environments. For example, we are not aware of Mr. Trump having often spent time abroad (or even in the U.S., except for political rallies and factory tours) touring, exploring, or otherwise removing himself from the luxurious, pampered, sanitized comfort associated with his Manhattan and Palm Beach lifestyle – a world of servants and the served, and devoid of all germs. 7-11-18 +	[Continued.] We do not regard that provincialism and fussiness as a mere peccadillo or as a harmless matter of taste. We see in it a telling insight into his racism, nationalism and anti-multilateralism, which appeared to be native, visceral, blinding, irrational, perilous, and counter-productive in a now largely globalized world. 3. And back at you. Mr. Trump's feeling toward foreigners appeared to be mutual. The Turnberry club reportedly was unpopular among both Scottish and other potential patrons due to their antipathy toward Mr. Trump, and it was losing money – hence Mr. Trump's current efforts to promote it.<sup>51</sup> Astonishingly, according to a new survey by a Russian state polling company in advance of Putin's imminent meeting with Mr. Trump, even 71% of Russians disliked the latter, and only 16% trusted him.<sup>52</sup> 4. Europe as foe. Also while in Scotland, Mr. Trump told CBS News that "the European Union is a foe, what they do to us in trade." He then placed them side by side with Russia and China as America's "competitors." E. With Putin, in Helsinki. 1. Meeting alone. On July 16, Mr. Trump met in Helsinki, Finland for two hours with Russia's brutal and authoritarian president, Vladimir Putin. Mr. Trump had no known agenda, and no staff present other than an interpreter. All of that represented a radical breach of security and transparency for any president, but particularly for this president, whose relationship with his counter-party was already notoriously suspected of having been compromised relative to American interests. As in the case of Mr. Trump's recent unaccompanied meeting with another brutal, corrupt and authoritarian leader, North Korean President Kim Jong-un, whatever transpired in the talks – including any promises or concessions Mr. Trump may have made, any classified information he may have revealed, or any personal business he may have discussed – may never be known to any Americans except Mr. Trump and his interpreter. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] 2. The enemies within. Just prior to the meeting, Mr. Trump had told reporters that he expected to have an “extraordinary relationship” with Putin, and he had faulted prior American administrations for the two countries’ current enmity – another radical breach of protocol. He had also tweeted that morning: “Our relationship with Russia has NEVER been worse thanks to many years of U.S. foolishness and stupidity and now, the Rigged Witch Hunt!” In other tweets that morning he had castigated former President Obama (for tolerating the Russian election meddling) and the FBI (for conducting the “Witch Hunt” against him); and he had written that “[m]uch of our news media is indeed the enemy of the people.” 3. The joint press conference. Even before the meeting, The New York Times, The Washington Post and others believed that (like Kim) Putin – an international pariah with a struggling economy -- had come out ahead by simply having been able to meet with and sternly face the American president as an equal.<sup>53</sup> But the actual outcome was far worse. In the spectacle of an astonishingly warm and harmonious press conference with Putin immediately following the session, still on July 16, Mr. Trump said that the U.S. and Russia were equally at fault in their current hostile relationship – the U.S., for its “foolish” policies. He agreed with Putin that the determinations of the special prosecutor and numerous American intelligence agencies – that Russia had interfered in the 2016 presidential election – were erroneous. He declined to criticize Russia for anything. To divert reporters’ pointed questions about him siding with Putin, he railed at the FBI, the Justice Department, Hillary Clinton and the special prosecutor, calling the last “a disaster for our country.” [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
------------------	--	---

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump even went so far as to embrace Putin’s preposterous proposal that the Russian government help the U.S. interrogate the 12 Russians whom the special prosecutor had recently indicted, and that the U.S. allow Russia to interrogate (possibly in Russia) 11 Americans, including President Obama's ambassador to Russia, Michael McFaul. The first part of the proposal would plainly involve a corruption of justice and security. The second part would represent an utter dishonor to our diplomatic corps, and – given that the U.S. has no extradition treaty with Russia, and given that U.S. diplomats have diplomatic immunity in foreign jurisdictions in any event – an arrangement that would involve the president exercising dictatorial powers over private citizens to cause them to appear before Russian agents. (Days later Mr. Trump would be forced by a unanimous Senate resolution to walk back the idea.) Never before had an American president sided against his own government, let alone in the course of a public display of friendship toward one of our principal adversaries that was televised to the world in real time. The press conference was widely seen as a colossal diplomatic, if not strategic, victory for Russia. 4. The American blow-back. For once, Mr. Trump found himself largely isolated in the matter. His senior aides, whose advice and briefing materials he had reportedly ignored, withheld public comment. In Congress, his performance drew cries of alarm from many Democrats and some Republicans (from Republicans: “disgraceful,” “shameful,” “bizarre,” and “weak”), with few cheers from either party. One prominent critic called Mr. Trump an imbecile; others, a traitor. Other commentators speculated that Mr. Trump, out of vanity and insecurity, was seeking to defend the legitimacy of his minority election; others, that Putin had duped him and was now howling with laughter; yet others, that his behavior was servile or cowardly. Among the few prominent Americans who vocally defended Mr. Trump's Helsinki performance were the notoriously reliable Vice President Mike Pence,<sup>54</sup> the notoriously pro-Russia Congressman Dana Rohrabacher,<sup>55</sup> and the notoriously racist and anti-Semitic former KKK leader David Duke.<sup>56</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
------------------	---	---

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] 5. Our take. CSD does not think Mr. Trump was either duped or cowardly. We have long believed that he admires Putin for his cunning and power; that he would like to partner with Putin in establishing an international axis of authoritarian, mendacious, ethno-nationalist regimes that allow one another hegemony in their respective spheres of influence while favoring corrupt billionaires within; that he hopes to do business in Russia in the future; and above all that in Helsinki he intended to give away pieces of our country’s freedoms, sovereignty, democratic values and strategic influence – for something that would benefit him personally. (This was CSD's view, as of July 16. It was joined in large measure, although far more eloquently, by conservative writer Andrew Sullivan in New York magazine on July 20.<sup>57</sup>) We also find the allegations that Mr. Trump had obstructed (and was obstructing) justice in connection with the various investigations of Russian election interference to now appear obvious, never more amply apparent, even quaint – that is, nearly insignificant in comparison to his forthright and public embrace of America's enemy. 6. Walking it back. On July 17, after returning to the U.S., Mr. Trump tweeted that the “Fake News” had undermined his strong performance in Helsinki. But he had not yet fully faced the broad American outrage. After being pressured by political allies to re-consider his rejection of U.S. intelligence conclusions in favor of Putin's views, he told a group at a White House meeting before television cameras that no president had ever been tougher on Russia than he (although in truth all of his actions against Russia had been pressed on him by Congress or by staff). More to the point, he said that at the Helsinki press conference – when he had famously stated, "I don't see any reason why it would be Russia" that had interfered in the 2016 election – he had meant to say "wouldn't be Russia"; that he “accepted” U.S. intelligence assessments that Russia had interfered [although not that he "agreed with" or "believed" or "supported" those assessments]; that the good faith error in his misstatement "should have been obvious"; that he was now "clarifying" it in case it hadn't been obvious; but that he also believed [without evidence] that others may have interfered as well. 7-11-18 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's retraction (if it actually was a retraction) was reportedly watered down from the script he had agreed to with his aides, and in any event it was patently insincere.<sup>58</sup> Indeed, he had waffled on these very points before, and he seemed certain to waffle again (and he did – tweeting on July 22 that the investigation was "all a big hoax" and on July 23 that the "discredited Mueller Witch Hunt" should immediately end). He meanwhile retracted nothing else from his pro-Russian and anti-American remarks in Helsinki. His disloyalty to the U.S. seemed deliberate and ingrained, and the danger and damage seemed irreversible for as long as he would remain the president. Also on July 17, The Atlantic reported that both the White House's video and transcript of the Helsinki press conference – like the Kremlin's own transcript – had been edited to omit part of an exchange between Putin and a reporter that had indicated, in Putin's words, that Putin had wanted Mr. Trump to become president.<sup>59</sup> The world had already seen the complete video, as it was being filmed. But the White House didn't correct the transcript until July 28.<sup>60</sup> 7. Yet more damage. On July 18, Mr. Trump told a reporter that Russia was no longer meddling in the American electoral process – directly contradicting the "red alert" on that topic issued just days previous by his director of national intelligence, Dan Coats.<sup>61</sup> Once again the White House, through its press secretary, found itself scrambling to mask and un-do what Mr. Trump had clearly said. 8. And another meeting to come. On July 19, the White House announced that Mr. Trump had invited Putin to meet with him there in the fall. Coats himself learned of the development with shock from an NBC reporter while she was interviewing him on a stage in Aspen, Colorado. Coats also acknowledged that he had not yet been informed as to what Mr. Trump and Putin had discussed privately in Helsinki. The Wall Street Journal then reported that Mr. Trump had defied the White House staff's plan for him to confront Putin over the 12 recent indictments relative to election meddling.<sup>62</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
-----------	--	------------------------------------

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] From all appearances, Mr. Trump thus was barreling headlong toward rapprochement with Russia – but without the input of his security agencies and most other advisers, and without the outcomes of his first summit with Putin having come to rest or even being known to those advisors or to members of Congress. Indeed – even though the Russian foreign ministry had announced that agreements had been reached during Mr. Trump's one-on-one session with Putin, that Russia was beginning to implement them, and that Mr. Trump had made concessions to Putin – few if any within Mr. Trump's administration seemed to know what the agreements or concessions were. In fact the overall activities of the national security and intelligence agencies relative to Russia seemed completely disconnected from those of Mr. Trump.<sup>63</sup> He looked to be making policy and conducting diplomacy recklessly and on his own – unmoored from information, transparency, accountability, intra-governmental coherence, and allegiance to American principles of strength and weakness, right and wrong. One commentator called it "nothing less than the breakdown of American foreign policy."<sup>64</sup> 9. Selling it. But Mr. Trump did make a few things clear to the public: what he viewed to be the unpatriotic efforts of Americans who opposed him. On July 19 he tweeted: "The Summit with Russia was a great success, except with the real enemy of the people the Fake News Media." And on the following day, he told CNBC that President Obama had been a "patsy" for Russia.<sup>65</sup> While his actions in Helsinki appeared to have disturbed nearly all members of Congress (including, with a quiet disturbance, most Republicans), his rhetoric had indeed moved the grass roots. New polls indicated that over 70% of registered Republicans approved how he had handled the summit;<sup>66</sup> that – despite the clear findings of intelligence agencies and the Senate – only 32% of Republicans agreed that Russia had interfered in the 2016 election;<sup>67</sup> that 84% to 88% of Republicans approved of his overall job performance;<sup>68</sup> and that 75% of Republicans believed that the FBI's investigation was the result of anti-Trump bias while only 30% approved of the investigation.<sup>69</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
------------------	---	---

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] A gifted salesman, Mr. Trump's perennial pitch to the electorate that "it would be better to get along with Russia than not" – a proposition with which nearly all Americans would agree in the abstract – continued to omit the qualifier under which he in fact seemed to have been operating: "– on their terms." But the trope nevertheless appeared to have resonated with his enthralled base – many or most of whom only a few years ago might have viewed Russia as our implacable enemy. 10. The chaos. Had Mr. Trump in recent days been powerfully expanding the unilateral powers and practices of the presidency, or instead humiliating himself in that effort? On June 20, a Washington Post reporter wrote of Mr. Trump's chaotic contests with other American institutions during and since his Helsinki summit: "For the third time this week, President Trump has been forced to walk back something he said about Russia. First it was comparing his own intelligence community's credibility to Vladimir Putin's. Then it was his statement that Russia wasn't still interfering in U.S. elections. And now it's his apparent plan to allow Russia to interview Americans it accuses of crimes, including a former ambassador. It was all one giant, self-inflicted wound. And it all did precisely what Putin hopes and what Trump seems to fear most: made Trump look weak and ineffectual." 10. What is true? On July 20, a Washington Post columnist contrasted Mr. Trump's rejection of his intelligence agencies' empirical findings about Russia's election meddling, and his disregard for empirical intelligence generally, with his embrace of countless false conspiracy theories (often as purveyed by fringe right-wing media outlets). Among other things, in recent years, he had adopted the canards that a Democratic National Committee staffer rather than Russia had stolen and leaked the DNC's emails; that President Obama had tapped the wires in Trump Tower and spied on his campaign; that President Obama had been born in Kenya, not Hawaii; that thousands of Muslims in New Jersey had been seen celebrating the collapse of the Twin Towers on September 11, 2001; and that 3,000,000 fraudulent ballots had been cast for Hillary Clinton in 2016.<sup>70</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15

7-11-18 +	[Continued.] Was our commander-in-chief perennially delusional in addition to being pathologically mendacious? Pundits speculated. But on July 24, the question arose again. Mr. Trump tweeted: "I'm very concerned that Russia will be fighting very hard to have an impact on the upcoming Election. Based on the fact that no President has been tougher on Russia than me, they will be pushing very hard for the Democrats. They definitely don't want Trump!" Mr. Trump offered no evidence for this radical and novel allegation; no commentary on Russia having been found by our intelligence agencies to have interfered with our 2016 election on Mr. Trump's behalf or on Putin's forthright acknowledgement in Helsinki that he had wanted Mr. Trump to win that election; and (still) no interest in securing the upcoming mid-term elections from foreign meddling. Empirical reality had never been so undermined by any president (except by Mr. Trump himself). 11. Pompeo balks. On July 25, in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo refused to reveal what Mr. Trump had discussed in his two-hour private meeting with Putin in Helsinki – if in fact Pompeo knew. So either Pompeo was defying Congress, or Mr. Trump was continuing to keep vital secrets from one of his most senior advisors. 12. Walking it back – again. Also on July 25, after meeting at the White House with European Commission President Jeanne-Claude Juncker, Mr. Trump agreed to postpone the trade war that he had initiated and that had come to threaten sectors of the American economy, including farming. On the same day, National Security Advisor John Bolton announced that Mr. Trump would postpone the proposed White House visit by Putin from the fall of 2018 until 2019, "after the Russia witch hunt is over." As for the trade agreement, which Mr. Trump had touted with televised fanfare as "historic," nothing firm had been agreed to; some of its concepts (such as free trade) resembled those championed by President Obama; and as with North Korea and the migrant families separated at the Mexican border, Mr. Trump took splashy credit for having resolved (actually, backed down from) a crisis he had created.<sup>71</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15

7-11-18 +	[Continued.]          As for the announcement by Bolton, who had made a career of being ultra-hawkish relative to Russia and other foreign powers in the service of protecting democracy, he had now, after only a few months on the job, switched over to a career that included demonizing special prosecutor Robert Mueller and American democracy in the service of his (Bolton's) master. One or both moves appeared calculated to postpone Mr. Trump's headstrong and potentially ruinous activities until after the November 2018 mid-term congressional elections. But in any event, in both matters, Mr. Trump seemed to have been forced to pull back by congressional Republicans. The twin episodes demonstrated not only the recklessness of Mr. Trump's policies, but the power of Congress to rein him in when it is willing.	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
7-12-18	Ross sells. The Office of Government Ethics told Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross that conflicts of interest associated with his investment holdings were potentially criminal, whereupon – after much delay and controversy in previous months – he announced that he would sell all his investments. One of the shrewdest business people in Mr. Trump's Cabinet, Ross claimed innocent error in having misunderstood his holdings when failing to divest earlier.	17 (7, 15)
7-13-18	Us versus them. The United Nations completed an agreement – the Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration – that laid out better ways to address the current extraordinary global flow of migrants, including tens of millions of refugees. Since December, the Trump administration had boycotted the treaty process, and it chose not to sign the agreement.	14
7-16-18	Fear. As reported by The Huffington Post, a new poll indicated that – presumably convinced by Mr. Trump – 85% of Trump voters and 32% of Clinton voters had come to believe that the vicious but petty and highly localized Hispanic gang MS-13 that preyed mostly on other Hispanic migrants was a threat to America as a whole. Among the Trump voters, half (regardless of whether they were located in an MS-13 area) were very concerned that they or their families were personally at risk.	6, 9

7-18-18	The Trump boys fly around, on the U.S. nickel. Politico reported that, in just one month, the Secret Service had spent $250,000 to accompany presidential sons Eric and Donald, Jr. on overseas business trips.	17 (11)
7-19-18 +	Trolling the Fed. In an interview with CNBC on July 19, Mr. Trump criticized the Federal Reserve Bank for raising interest rates, notwithstanding the Fed's policy and tradition of independence. Despite the controversy that followed, he doubled-down on that sentiment in a July 20 tweet. White House staff, yet again, felt compelled to publicly clean up Mr. Trump's remarks; but his point had been made. The U.S. was then experiencing a sustained economic expansion. During such expansions, raising interest rates is a measure customarily taken by the central bank to check inflation, albeit at the risk of slowing growth. Not customary – in fact almost unknown in recent decades – is for the president to criticize or otherwise politicize the Fed's decisions. Mr. Trump, who (reportedly) had no understanding of economics and (seemingly) had no concern for the country's long-term economic health beyond his tenure as president, said he was opposed to any interest rate moves that could reduce growth of the economy (and thus of jobs and the stock market). He also opposed rate increases for their contribution to a strong dollar, which weakens exports – even though the dollar had been strengthening largely because of the economic growth of which he himself had been boasting. While a desire for economic growth is salutary, meddling over one's head in highly technical and perilous waters for political purposes is not. To be sure, excessive borrowing on the one hand, and reckless interest rate policy designed to bolster growth, employment and public social benefits on the other, are two ways in which authoritarian regimes often maintain power ... and then collapse. Rising interest rates (CSD assumes) could also negatively impact some of the personal businesses of Mr. Trump and his family. Higher rates, for example, are abhorrent to the real estate industry. Mr. Trump told CNBC that he knew he was breaking protocol in his interest rate remarks, but that he didn't care. 7-19-18 +	[Continued.]                  When campaigning for president, Mr. Trump had (falsely) accused then President Obama and Federal Reserve Board chair Janet Yellen of artificially depressing interest rates for political purposes. For more complete critiques of Mr. Trump's interest rate meddling, see the links to The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, Politico and The Washington Post at this end note.<sup>72</sup> (CSD itself disclaims any expertise in economics; but we are confident in our ability to spot presidential overreach and conflicts of interest.)	9, 10, 15
7-19-18 +	Zinke storms along. On July 19, CNN reported that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had been declining to publish his meeting schedules both in advance and after the fact, and had been concealing specific meetings that had transpired – including meetings with business figures. The practice was contrary to both protocol and (maybe) the law. But – like Zinke's other flagrantly self-aggrandizing behavior in public office – it resembled that of disgraced former Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt.<sup>73</sup> Possibly prompted by that report, on July 23 The Huffington Post wrote that Zinke had become the subject of at least 11 formal investigations since his appointment, and it listed nearly a dozen Zinke scandals that had accumulated since then (most of them having been covered by CSD previously in this document): Montana real estate conflicts, campaigning for Mr. Trump in violation of the Hatch Act, hiding his personal meetings, flying on political and personal business at government expense, exempting Florida from his offshore drilling plan for political purposes, attempting to punish a senator regarding the repeal of the Affordable Care Act (which had had nothing to do with his portfolio), failing to disclose that he owned stock in a Montana gun manufacturer, reassigning (and thus effectively silencing and punishing) senior civil service department staff with whom he disagreed, and so forth.<sup>74</sup> But for the examples of Pruitt and Mr. Trump, the mind would struggle to contain how one man – even a brazenly grasping one such as Zinke – could have grabbed, and grabbed, and gone free to grab again.	17 (9, 15)

7-19-18	Weird bang, big bucks. CNN reported that Mr. Trump's planned military parade in Washington would cost an estimated $12,000,000. As CSD had observed in our entries of September 18, 2017 and February 6, 2018, the parade would principally benefit Mr. Trump's ego and his political stature within his base, while doing damage to long-standing American traditions, attitudes and projected images regarding the role of the military in civic life.	9, 10, 11
7-20-18	Tackling the NFL (again). Mr. Trump, by way of Twitter, resumed his attack on the NFL, now for postponing a policy of forbidding (black) player protests during the playing of the national anthem. Seeming to seek to arouse his base after his disastrous European tour, he proposed a specific set of punishments for the players. But, according to The Huffington Post, after many months of criticizing the protests, he had never addressed the substance of the protests – disproportionate police killings of black people.	6, 9
7-21-18, 7-22-18	It's good to be the king; although sometimes annoying. On July 21, The Wall Street Journal wrote that in recent days Mr. Trump had been bridleing at bi-partisan criticisms of his overreach in asserting presidential powers relative to trade, interest rates and Russia: "All he's hearing in D.C. is 'you can't do this, you can't do that.' He can't criticize the Fed, he can't criticize the intelligence community,' said a person close to the president, echoing others in Mr. Trump's orbit. 'He's obviously going to get frustrated by the can't-do mentality.'"<sup>75</sup> The following day, Politico detailed episodes in which Mr. Trump had blind-sided the Pentagon in unilaterally proposing or announcing significant changes to military policies and operations: his transgender ban, his military parade, his Space Force, his reported agreement to partner with Russian forces in Syria, his announced desire to reduce U.S. troop commitments in Germany, his suggestion that the U.S. invade Venezuela, and his cessation of military exercises with South Korea at the behest of North Korea. Each of those developments had sent his senior-most military officials into desperate and time-consuming attempts to understand, communicate, and obey.<sup>76</sup> In these cases, however, he did not seem frustrated. No one had gotten in his way.	9, 10, 11, 12, 13

7-22-18	Back to North Korea. After having granted worldwide legitimacy and several concessions to North Korea in June, Mr. Trump had claimed to have defused that country's nuclear threat. The Washington Post now reported that although he had maintained as recently as July 17 that negotiations with North Korea were "going very well," in fact they were not. Rather, the U.S. had been repeatedly snubbed and insulted since then. The Post wrote: "Diplomats [without attribution] say the North Koreans have canceled follow-up meetings, demanded more money and failed to maintain basic communications ... . Meanwhile, a missile-engine testing facility that Trump said would be destroyed remains intact, and U.S. intelligence officials say Pyongyang is working to conceal key aspects of its nuclear program." CSD, naturally, hoped for improvement – and for the truth.<sup>77</sup>	7, 11
7-22-18	And now Iran. After Iranian President Hassan Rouhani said to a gathering of diplomats that "America should know that peace with Iran is the mother of all peace, and war with Iran is the mother of all wars," Mr. Trump tweeted, in capital letters: "To Iranian President Rouhani: NEVER, EVER THREATEN THE UNITED STATES AGAIN OR YOU WILL SUFFER CONSEQUENCES THE LIKES OF WHICH FEW THROUGHOUT HISTORY HAVE EVER SUFFERED BEFORE. WE ARE NO LONGER A COUNTRY THAT WILL STAND FOR YOUR DEMENTED WORDS OF VIOLENCE &amp; DEATH. BE CAUTIOUS!" It was unclear whether Mr. Trump was (a) threatening to initiate a nuclear strike over what could be a trifling, second oral threat by Rouhani; (b) writing without the input of his advisors (he had tweeted late at night); (c) risking an inconclusive, thin, dangerous and/or humiliating diplomatic outcome with Iran such as he had done with North Korea; (d) attempting to distract from his missteps with Russia and North Korea; (e) acting on impulse; (f) unaware that the Iranians – having watched him in action with Russia and North Korea – may have come to view him as a hapless noise-maker and negotiator; (g) deranged; or (h) several of the above. Critics charged that in any event the administration had not articulated a coherent Iran strategy.<sup>78</sup>	10, 11, 13

7-22-18, 7-23-18	Stormy words for enemies. Over two days, by way of Twitter, Mr. Trump raged against (a) the "Fake News" for criticizing rather than appreciating what he saw as his spectacular meetings with North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un and Russian dictator Vladimir Putin; (b) Jeff Bezos and his companies Amazon and The Washington Post (see CSD's many entries on this topic above); (c) President Obama; (d) "Crooked" Hillary Clinton; and (e) the Justice Department's investigations. CSD has here lumped these topics together. We have sometimes found Mr. Trump's Twitter rants to be as eclectic, multi-directional and difficult to compartmentalize as he himself apparently has. For him, it is all about a sprawling conspiracy. For us, a fancifully gilded and towering deceit.	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12
7-23-18	Silencing the security experts. Mr. Trump threatened to revoke the security clearances of six named, high level former national security officials because of their criticisms of him since becoming private citizens. (Indeed, and quite unusually, they had criticized him, patriotically and in good faith, on grounds that he was disloyal and incompetent, and because he had attacked and disregarded the intelligence community.) No president had ever attempted to silence critics in that way before; security clearances had been revoked for wrongdoing, not retaliation. Removing the clearances could not only embarrass and professionally damage the targets of that action, but in some cases, to the country's disadvantage, could hamper the ability of successor staff to consult with them – something that in previous administrations staff had done with their predecessors.<sup>79</sup> Republican Senator Bob Corker compared the proposal to the behavior of Venezuela's dictator, Nicolas Maduro.<sup>80</sup>	3, 9, 11

7-25-18	A reporter, to the dungeon. White House communications staff banned a CNN reporter from a press event on grounds that her questions to Mr. Trump in an immediately preceding event had been inappropriate. Other news outlets, including Fox, found her behavior to have been customary, and they stood by her. The Washington Post characterized the incident as the first actual realization of Mr. Trump's frequent directives to aides to punish individual reporters.<sup>82</sup>	1
7-26-18	In Illinois. At a steel mill in Granite City, Illinois, Mr. Trump misleadingly touted his aggressively protectionist, reputedly scattershot, and highly controversial trade policies – policies that were abhorred even by many or most Republicans in Congress. He exaggerated the number of jobs that his steel tariffs had created at the plant and the number of steel plants that were opening across the country. He ignored the loss of jobs at nearby manufacturers who now had to pay more for their steel. He ignored the heavy damage that his trade wars were causing farmers (except to taunt, without explanation, “we will not let anybody bully our wonderful American farmers”). He boasted of the previous day's "breakthrough" trade agreement with the EU, and of Europe's "surrender," despite (as reported by CSD on pp. 33-34 above) his having been forced by Republicans to pull back on his bellicose tariff plans after having risked damaging the American economy. And he accused China of ongoing trade offenses because of its desire for Democrats to win the upcoming mid-term congressional elections, which in turn would bring Hispanic criminals across the Mexican border. (What?)<sup>83</sup> As to his trade war in general, he said, “We are winning, we're back and we are winning and we are winning bigger than anyone understands.”<sup>84</sup> “America never surrenders,” he said.<sup>85</sup> None of that was true. In the campaign-style event, complete with booming music, Mr. Trump bashed the news media, praised North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un, bragged about humbling our NATO allies, and for good measure boasted of his 2016 election victory.<sup>86</sup> To that last point, he repeated his prior falsehood that the majority of American women had voted for him in 2016; in truth, only a majority of white women had voted for him;<sup>87</sup> so possibly those were the only women whom he recognized as being truly American. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12

7-26-18	[Continued.] At one point Mr. Trump – the posh-living heir and billionaire who (unlike some members of CSD) had possibly never worked with his hands or machines for a day – said to the largely blue collar crowd, "I look at the faces of you people. I could be one of you."<sup>88</sup> Several Republican congressional candidates were in Mr. Trump's entourage, and he endorsed them. But the event was funded by taxpayer dollars – which was illegal relative to his and their campaign event.<sup>89</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12
7-26-18	In Iowa. Mr. Trump told a crowd in Dubuque, Iowa that, with respect to his July 25 trade discussion at the White House with European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker (see CSD's entry on pp. 33-34 above): "We're opening things up. ... But the biggest one of all happened yesterday ... the EU .... We just opened up Europe for you farmers. You're not going to be too angry with Trump, I can tell you. You were essentially restricted. You had barriers that really made it impossible for farm products to go in ... you have just gotten yourself one big market that really essentially never existed." According to The Wall Street Journal, European leaders disagreed. While possible movement on the beef and soybean trade had occurred, they said they had expressly declined to address any other aspect of agricultural tariffs.<sup>90</sup> Mr. Trump also said that the parties had agreed to "no tariffs, no nothing, free trade" – an Obama administration initiative that Mr. Trump had previously trashed, and that he and Juncker had now only posed as a (possible) aspiration, not an agreement.	7
7-27-18	What, me worry? President Trump conducted a brief private meeting with his most senior advisors – his first on the topic – to learn what actions various federal agencies had undertaken to protect the 2018 mid-term elections from foreign interference. He listened to their reports; but as before since his own election, he reportedly offered no new direction or coordination.<sup>91</sup>	12

7-27-18	Cooking the books (again). Mr. Trump lauded the economy's current growth; and it indeed was growing. But, as reported by The New York Times, his remarks were peppered with false claims of scale and of his own wizardry. <sup>92</sup>	7
7-28-18	Post-factual at HHS. Politico reported on how the Trump administration's skewing and rejection of scientific data in favor of ideology, to an unprecedented extent, had contaminated the public-facing work of the policy-making unit of the Department of Health and Human Services. <sup>93</sup>	17 (8)
7-28-18	Nazis emboldened in Pennsylvania. In a chilling report, The Washington Post characterized the neo-Nazi cells that have long been prevalent in northern Pennsylvania as having become emboldened during and because of the presidency of Mr. Trump. <sup>94</sup>	17 (6)
7-29-18	Mr. Trump and The Times. Mr. Trump tweeted that a July 20 discussion that he had had with the publisher of The New York Times had been cordial, and he implied that the parties had agreed on the widespread problem of "Fake News." The publisher promptly issued a dissenting statement, writing that he had told Mr. Trump that his allegations of "Fake News" were inaccurate, and that Mr. Trump had been encouraging violence against journalists, especially overseas, by labeling the media "the enemy of the people." Mr. Trump then tweeted that the media were "unpatriotic" and the ones who were putting lives at risk, particularly attacking The Times and The Washington Post. <sup>95</sup>	1, 7
7-29-18	The president versus the prosecutor. As special prosecutor Robert Mueller appeared to be coming ever closer to Mr. Trump's inner circle in unearthing pertinent facts about Russian meddling in the 2016 election, Mr. Trump had been tweeting ever more often and critically about him in an effort to obstruct the investigation. Having ignored his own business conflicts of interest as president, on July 29 he detailed in a series of tweets what he characterized as Mueller's business conflicts which (he claimed) should militate Mueller's dismissal.	9, 12

Addendum 18 – September 3, 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

7-30-18, 7-31-18	Collusion's cool. Mr. Trump's attorney Rudy Giuliani, and then Mr. Trump himself – confronting long-standing concerns that Mr. Trump's 2016 campaign may have colluded with Russia in the latter's election interference – said that "collusion is not a crime." While that was technically correct – the term "collusion" apparently doesn't appear in federal criminal statutes – conspiracy to hack computers, to steal confidential data, to tamper with elections, and to assist foreign powers in injuring the U.S. are decidedly federal crimes. CSD was not certain whether Giuliani and Mr. Trump were parsing words or instead trivializing those possible grievous charges; but they were clearly trivializing something. CSD believes that no other president would have made such a treacherous statement in the context of dealings with a foreign adversary.	7, 9, 12
7-31-18	More are born every minute. TheHill.com reported on two new surveys that reflected the apparent success of Mr. Trump's having discredited basic American institutions and values. One poll found that substantial numbers of voters would welcome or tolerate Russian assistance to Republican congressional candidates in the upcoming mid-term elections.<sup>1</sup> The other found that the majority of voters believed that the FBI, in its investigations, had acted with bias for or against Mr. Trump or Hillary Clinton.<sup>2</sup>	7, 9, 12

7-31-18	In Tampa. At a campaign rally for a congressional candidate in Florida, Mr. Trump launched his usual fury against the "fake news," Hispanic gangs, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, Congresswoman Maxine Waters, cancer-stricken Senator John McCain, and Democrats who he falsely alleged had welcomed criminals "pouring into our country." He drew the usual chants of "Lock her up!" (for "Crooked Hillary" Clinton) and "Build the wall!" (for Hispanic migrants). A video captured the crowd vulgarly abusing the members of the press who were present.<sup>3</sup> Also, a prominent contingent of attendees identified themselves by T-shirts and signs as members of the fringe group QAnon. QAnon purveys wide-ranging conspiracy theories, including about a pedophilia ring among Hollywood elites; also a plot by a globalist cabal – including President Obama, the Clintons and the Rothschilds – to run the country and to kill Mr. Trump, which plot (they claim) Mr. Trump and special prosecutor Robert Mueller are secretly allied in foiling. Mr. Trump's misstatements at the rally included that Democrats sought to give undocumented migrants the right to vote; that he had started building the border wall and that Congress had given him $1.6 billion to do that; that he had passed the biggest tax cut in American history; that people already needed IDs to buy groceries (and thus should need them to vote); that he was the most popular president among Republicans in history; that Russian President Putin was "very unhappy" that Mr. Trump was president; that "savage gangs" were occupying our country; that thousands of people were standing outside who couldn't fit into the hall; that U.S. Steel had committed to building six new steel mills (as yet not announced by the company – and if true, a breach of securities laws relative to disclosing inside information); that the Uzbek terrorist who had killed eight people in Manhattan had brought in 22 family members through "chain migration"; and that the new embassy in Jerusalem would cost only $400,000 (actual cost: tens of millions). He also said that his political "movement" (however that might be defined – Make America Great Again?) was "the greatest movement in the history of America" – that is, surpassing such socially positive, coherently articulated and successful movements as labor rights, civil rights and women's rights. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11
----------------	---	-----------------------

7-31-18	[Continued.] Mr. Trump stood in front of a "Promises Made. Promises Kept" banner, despite his having failed to deliver on many of his key campaign pledges: building the border wall, repealing the Affordable Care Act and replacing it with something better, eliminating (or even shrinking) the federal deficit, draining (or even shrinking) the swamp, making America more respected abroad (or even maintaining its level of respect), favoring the middle class over Wall Street and the wealthy, and bringing peace to the Middle East – all of which he had once predicted would be easy. Nevertheless, one attendee said, "Trump is the first person that's done what he said he's gonna do."<sup>4</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 11
8-1-18	Fire Mueller now! Free Manafort, too! Within a series of seven tweets, Mr. Trump shouted that "Attorney General Jeff Sessions should stop this Rigged Witch Hunt right now, before it continues to stain our country any further. Bob Mueller is totally conflicted, and his 17 Angry Democrats that are doing his dirty work are a disgrace to USA!" He also tweeted (as he had done often before) that the investigation was a "hoax." And he tweeted sympathy for his former campaign chief Paul Manafort, who was on trial for tax evasion and bank fraud – calling that trial too a "hoax," and thus directly interfering with judicial process. Mueller was expected to examine the tweets themselves in investigating whether Mr. Trump had sought to obstruct justice. The tweets meanwhile re-confirmed Mr. Trump's continuing acquiescence to Russian election meddling.	2, 9, 12
8-1-18	Just the facts, ma'am. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had now made 4,229 false or misleading claims during his presidency, raising the rate from an initial 4.9 claims per day to 7.6 in a recently accelerating trend. On July 5 he had made 79 false or misleading claims in a single day. The Post wrote: "Trump has a proclivity to repeat, over and over, many of his false or misleading statements. We've counted nearly 150 claims that the president has repeated at least three times, some with breathtaking frequency." Some of the most common and repeated falsehoods pertained to the economy, immigration, the special prosecutor's Russia investigation, taxes, NATO spending, and trade. The Post wrote that the falsehoods, among other things, had indicated "a fundamental misunderstanding of economics."<sup>5</sup>	7

8-1-18	Insurance for some. The Trump administration issued a final rule allowing the sale of inexpensive, skimpy, "short-term" health insurance policies that would leave customers exposed for claims for pre-existing conditions and catastrophic illnesses. (CSD had previously noted the proposal.) The policies were widely viewed as being attractive to the young and the healthy, such that premiums on Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") policies for the old and the ill would rise, many insurable events would go uncovered, and Americans' health would likely suffer. (CSD does not take a position on the Affordable Care Act – only on Mr. Trump's vengeful and demagogic effort to destroy it without having a suitable replacement in place.)	11
8-2-18	In Pennsylvania. At a campaign rally in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania for senatorial candidate Lou Barletta, Mr. Trump jeered the "fake disgusting news" as "horrible, horrendous people" who "only make up stories." He extensively slammed the press for undercutting his many real or imagined wins: his Pennsylvania election victory, his good relations with Russian President Vladimir Putin, his (purportedly) triumphant engagement with North Korea, his purportedly exceptional relations with NATO leaders, and the purportedly brilliant outcomes of his tax and economic policies. He also said that the press had lied in reporting that he had arrived late for his meeting with Queen Elizabeth in London the previous month, when video footage plainly showed her waiting for 12 minutes.<sup>6</sup> His supporters screamed "CNN Sucks!" As for immigration, Mr. Trump said that his campaign accusation that Mexico was sending "rapists" to the U.S. was "peanuts compared to what turns out to be the truth." He continued to brand the Hispanic gang MS-13 as the exemplar of all undocumented migrants – even though, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer, its members represent less than 1% of gang membership in America and a tiny fraction of undocumented migrants altogether.<sup>7</sup> He falsely accused Pennsylvania Senator Bob Casey of favoring open borders and the abolition of the Immigration and Customs Enforcement Agency (ICE) (also of refusing to meet with Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh and to debate Barletta). He also touted his border wall and his call for more border patrol agents. He said, "It's our country, so get the hell out!" [Continued below.]	1, 3, 6, 7, 9, 11

8-2-18	[Continued.] Mr. Trump drew cries of "Lock her [Hillary Clinton] up!" And he charged that special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation was a "hoax" – only hours after five of his top national security officials (FBI director Christopher Wray, Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats, Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen, National Security Advisor John Bolton, and National Security Agency chief Paul Nakasone) had condemned and cautioned of Russian election meddling past and present. As in Tampa on July 31, QAnon members were prominently visible, and tolerated. But when an anti-Trump protestor appeared in the crowd, Mr. Trump directed – in a sneer of cold command, as he had done while campaigning – "All right. Get 'em out. Get 'em out. Get 'em outta' here." To be sure, all presidents have encountered protestors. But CSD members do not recall a recent president having issued such imperious, thuggish directives (if any directives at all) to expel them. We do, however, personally recall the campaign appearances in Pennsylvania of Presidents Eisenhower and Kennedy, who had commanded hard men during wartime. Mr. Trump, in what seemed a pretense to a criminal boss's style of command, did not resemble them in any respect.	1, 3, 6, 7, 9, 11
8-2-18	Philadelphia immigration judge removed. The Justice Department removed a well-regarded Philadelphia immigration judge from an asylum case for seeking to gather more information on the case before ruling; and it replaced him with a different judge who promptly deported the (Hispanic) asylum claimant. The move was extraordinary, but consistent with Attorney General Jeff Sessions's recent directive to speed up asylum hearings, even if at the expense of justice. It reportedly shocked the local immigration bar as well as retired immigration judges, who protested in a letter.<sup>8</sup>	17 (2, 6, 14)

8-3-18	Voter fraud – just saying stuff. A member of Mr. Trump's now defunct Presidential Advisory Commission on Election Integrity – having at last procured via a court order the commission's records that Mr. Trump's allies on the commission had astonishingly withheld from other members – charged that the documents established that the commission had been convened specifically to prove widespread voter fraud in the 2016 presidential election, but that its findings instead confirmed that no substantial voter fraud had occurred in recent history. Still, Mr. Trump and his allies continued to claim that fraud had robbed him of a popular vote victory in 2016.<sup>9</sup>	4, 7, 9, 11
8-3-18, 8-6-18	Labels. A populist? On August 3, a New York Times columnist criticized the media for characterizing Mr. Trump as a "populist," when his major initiatives had appeared to have been aimed at helping corporations and the wealthy rather than (or more than) the poor, working and middle classes – particularly in the areas of taxes, health care, labor and regulation (e.g., relative to banking, the environment, worker safety, and consumer protection).<sup>10</sup> While CSD does not take a substantive position on those issues, we do agree with the columnist that the outcomes do not seem to have obviously favored "the people," despite Mr. Trump's claims otherwise. Which, then, if any, of Mr. Trump's principal positions might properly be called "populist?" CSD would place the following items at least partly in that column: his call (for now) to protect social benefit entitlements; his protectionist tariffs (which had been widely viewed as boosting some jobs while destroying others); his hostility toward educated "elites," their culture, their global outlook, their tech industries, their belief in science, and their universities (except if he or his appointees had attended them); and above all his ethno-nationalism and anti-immigrant xenophobia (which CSD believes comport with only a type of populism, one associated with torches and pitchforks). But what, if anything, is anti-democratic about claiming to be for the people to the extent one is not, or to be for the people in patently destructive ways? CSD would characterize the behavior as indicated in the right-hand column. [Continued below.]	7, 9

8-3-18, 8-6-18	[Continued.] A Republican? On August 6, a Washington Post columnist summarized the many ways in which Mr. Trump had forsaken Republican Party principles: his uncritical embrace of Russia and other brutal autocracies; his attacks on democratic allies; his pursuit of massive deficit budgeting; his abandonment of free trade and free domestic markets; and his excoriation of the free press.<sup>11</sup> CSD would add to the list his antipathy toward the pro-immigration principles of the Republican Party's business wing, and his disdain for the party's long-proclaimed "family values" (a phrase that we do not recall Mr. Trump having used often, if at all.) But what is anti-democratic about scuttling the core doctrines of a major American political party? – Theoretically nothing; things change. But if the change flows from the whim and concoction of a single, fraudulent demagogue, something is very wrong.	7, 9
8-3-18	Raking it in. The Washington Post, in reporting that a Saudi Arabian government delegation had recently spent heavily at the Trump International Hotel in Washington, noted that delegations from Malaysia, the Philippines and Kuwait were also known to have patronized the property since it opened after Mr. Trump's election, and while the administration was conducting diplomacy with those countries; but that Mr. Trump's company had continued to keep the details of foreign patronage secret. (Mr. Trump was then still being sued for violating the Constitution's prohibitions on him accepting foreign and domestic "emoluments" at the hotel.)<sup>12</sup>	15
8-3-18	Donald, Don and LeBron. After CNN host Don Lemon and NBA star LeBron James criticized Mr. Trump on television, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Lebron James was just interviewed by the dumbest man on television, Don Lemon. He made Lebron look smart, which isn't easy to do." Mr. Trump had previously alleged low intelligence in his African American foils (Lemon and Congresswoman Maxine Waters), and he would do so again on August 13 (Omarosa Manigault Newman – see below). He had also frequently attacked, as unpatriotic, black athletes who had protested his policies and rhetoric.	6, 11

8-4-18	In Ohio. At a rally for a congressional candidate in Lewis Center, Ohio, Mr. Trump ripped his usual targets, including MSNBC ("so corrupt ... so disgusting") and the special prosecutor's investigation (a "witch hunt"). He drew the crowd's by now obligatory chants, "CNN sucks!" and "Build the wall!" He also attacked the coastal "elites," repeating his narrative that his supporters were smarter and richer than them and thus were themselves the true "elite" – thus exploiting the politics of jealousy, resentment and negativity that (in CSD's view) had long been more characteristic of places like Russia than America.* In fact one visual image of the rally went viral: a photo of a pair of burly Trump supporters wearing T-shirts that read, "I'd rather be Russian than Democrat." [*The standing joke: A poor American and a poor Russian watch as someone roars by in a luxury sports car. The American says, "I want to be able to get one of those!" The Russian says, "I want to kill that bastard."]	1, 6, 9, 12, 17 (12)
8-5-18	Forest fire fantasies. As the most extensive wildfires in California's history raged, Mr. Trump tweeted: "California wildfires are being magnified &amp; made so much worse by the bad environmental laws which aren't allowing massive amount of readily available water to be properly utilized. It is being diverted into the Pacific Ocean. Must also tree clear to stop fire spreading!" Experts disagreed with his assessment of cause and effect, and noted his failure to name human-generated climate change as a possible, if not likely, cause.<sup>13</sup>	7, 8
8-5-18, 8-7-18	Tariffs vs. the national debt. On August 5, Mr. Trump tweeted that the extensive tariffs he had been imposing on imports were a major success – even though, in truth, the U.S. trade deficit that Mr. Trump had demonized continued to mushroom. He also said that his tariffs would pay down the national debt, and at the expense of foreign exporters; but as a Washington Post business analyst explained, a projected $21 billion in revenue from the new tariffs (a) would in truth effectively be paid by American companies and consumers; (b) would be reduced by the $12 billion in subsidies that Mr. Trump had ordered for farmers injured by his trade wars; and (c) in any event would barely make a dent in the $21 trillion debt – to which at least $1.6 trillion was being added by Mr. Trump's own tax cuts and additional spending.<sup>14</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 10

8-5-18, 8-7-18	[Continued.] An August 7 New York Times analysis likewise concluded that the tariffs would barely scratch the national debt, to which Mr. Trump had been substantially adding.<sup>15</sup> More generally, the overall economic merit of Mr. Trump's tariffs and trade wars versus their potential injuries continued to be fiercely debated, particularly within Mr. Trump's own party.	7, 10
8-5-18, 8-7-18	The Enemy of the People threatens our national security. On August 5, Mr. Trump tweeted: "The Fake News hates me saying that they are the Enemy of the People only because they know it's TRUE. I am providing a great service by explaining this to the American People. They purposely cause great division &amp; distrust. They can also cause War! They are very dangerous &amp; sick!" Two days later, newly published survey results showed that 48% of Republicans had come to believe that the media indeed was "the enemy of the people"; also that 43% said that "the president should have the authority to close news outlets for bad behavior."<sup>16</sup>	1
8-6-18 +	Favoring Saudi Arabia over Canada re human rights. On August 2, the Canadian foreign minister had tweeted concern about Saudi Arabia's recent imprisonment of prominent human rights and women's rights advocates. On August 6, the Saudis retaliated by expelling the Canadian ambassador, recalling their own, vowing to interfere in internal Canadian affairs, freezing future trade and investment in Canada, and pulling thousands of Saudi students from Canadian universities. Ordinarily the U.S. would have come to Canada's defense. But in a showing of Mr. Trump's contempt for liberal democratic Canada and his friendship toward authoritarian Saudi Arabia, the State Department on August 7 broke with tradition by publicly stating that although it was concerned about due process in Saudi Arabia, it wouldn't take sides in that country's dispute with Canada.<sup>17</sup>	12, 14

8-9-18	The obstruction team (or part of it). 1. Nunes. House Intelligence Committee chair Devin Nunes – having ardently, untruthfully and at times ridiculously hamstrung (and then finally terminated) his committee's investigation of the Russian election meddling, and having called for the impeachment of Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein (who supervises special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation) – was revealed to have openly said at a fundraising event that the Republican Party must retain its majority in Congress [and thus control of his committee] to protect Mr. Trump from special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation. He thus made clear that he saw his, his party's, and Congress's role as protecting the president, rather than serving as a constitutional check on him. 2. Giuliani. Rudy Giuliani – Mr. Trump's famously flamboyant, disjointed and self-contradictory attorney – said that a Justice Department rule required that Mueller end his investigation within 60 days prior to the upcoming congressional elections. His untruths: (a) no such rule exists; (b) an unwritten protocol discourages publicity about investigations of candidates – it does not suggest limiting the investigations themselves, and none of Mueller's known targets are running for office; and (c) even the protocol is not always honored, as when then FBI director James Comey, only weeks before the 2016 presidential election, announced that his investigation of candidate Hillary Clinton's email practices had resumed.<sup>18</sup> 3. The obstructer-in-chief. Mr. Trump tweeted: “This is an illegally brought Rigged Witch Hunt run by people who are totally corrupt and/or conflicted. It was started and paid for by Crooked Hillary and the Democrats. Phony Dossier, FISA disgrace and so many lying and dishonest people already fired. 17 Angry Dems? Stay tuned!” Once again, he appeared to be threatening to fire Mueller.	7, 9, 12, 17 (7, 9, 12)
8-10-18	Knee-capping the kneelers. A day after on-field player protests of racial inequality resumed at a series of NFL pre-season games, Mr. Trump tweeted his objections. He complained that fans were buying expensive tickets to enrich the ungrateful players, and that most of the protesters couldn't even define their grievances (grievances that he himself had never even acknowledged).	6

8-11-18	Both sides now. As white supremacists prepared to rally only blocks from the White House on the anniversary of the notorious march on Charlottesville, Mr. Trump again refused to condemn the racists – instead, as before, equivocating as between the marchers and the counter-protesters. He tweeted: “Riots in Charlottesville a year ago resulted in senseless death and division. We must come together as a nation. I condemn all types of racism and acts of violence. Peace to ALL Americans!”	6
8-12-18	Boycotting Harley. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump endorsed a consumer boycott of Harley-Davidson for its having undertaken to move some of its manufacturing operations overseas as a result of his trade wars. CSD has frequently noted Mr. Trump's pointed efforts to injure the businesses of Harley, Amazon and other companies that he believes to have crossed him. But remarkably, an effective boycott of Harley would eliminate hundreds of Harley jobs – the very jobs that Mr. Trump had claimed to be protecting.	9, 10, 11
8-12-18	Voter suppression. The New York Times detailed how Mr. Trump's Justice Department was supporting various states in their efforts to suppress voting (typically on the part of young, old, poor, and/or minority voters – not Mr. Trump's base): aggressive voter role purges, restrictions on absentee ballots, harsh voter identification requirements, and racially motivated gerrymandering.<sup>19</sup> In recent decades the federal government had sought instead to protect and expand the franchise, as it indeed was obliged to under federal law.	4, 6
8-13-18	The joy of giving. Politico detailed how Mr. Trump's golf clubs had been selling Trump-branded merchandise at a discount to selected presidential aides. The discounts amounted to inappropriate gifts, or (arguably) bribes. At the same time, they promoted Mr. Trump's business brand. The activities appeared to be unethical, if not illegal.	15; plus bribery (its own category)
8-13-18 +	Omarosa and NDAs. The imminent publication of former White House staffer Omarosa Manigault Newman's tell-all book alleging that Mr. Trump was racist, misogynistic and mentally incompetent, and her publicizing bootleg tapes of inside White House conversations, sparked Mr. Trump to tweet that the African American woman was a "crazed, crying lowlife," and a "dog." His campaign counsel wrote to the publisher, baselessly and unconstitutionally threatening litigation.<sup>20</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 9, 10, 11, 17 (extortion and bribery)

8-13-18 +	[Continued.] Who was Omarosa? In the words of a Washington Post columnist, himself African American: "Omarosa achieved single-name fame as a contestant on Trump's show 'The Apprentice,' where she performed with Shakespearean villainy — lying, cheating, backstabbing, viciously advancing her own interests and sabotaging her rivals. Trump evidently found all of this admirable, because he insisted on bringing her into his administration as a top-level adviser despite her utter lack of experience and qualifications. They deserve each other."<sup>21</sup> Mr. Trump's own further thoughts, via Twitter: "People in the White House hated her. She was vicious, but not smart. I would rarely see her but heard really bad things. Nasty to people &amp; would constantly miss meetings &amp; work. When Gen. Kelly came on board he told me she was a loser &amp; nothing but problems. I told him to try working it out, if possible, because she only said GREAT things about me — until she got fired!" The tapes appeared to indicate an extortionistic threat on the part of chief of staff John Kelly to injure Newman's reputation if she were to go public with unflattering information, plus an offer of a bribe of $15,000 per month to remain silent. The fracas pointed to the remarkable array of self-serving, flamboyant, deceptive, ruthless, erratic and legally slippery advisors and agents with whom Mr. Trump had surrounded himself during and since his campaign in addition to Newman: Steven Bannon, Paul Manafort, Corey Lewandowski, Michael Cohen, Roger Stone, Scott Pruitt, Ryan Zinke and others (not even counting his horde of deceptive surrogates and advocates such as Sean Spicer, Sarah Huckabee Sanders, KellyAnne Conway, Rudy Giuliani, Jay Sekulow and Donald Trump, Jr.). Is having a stable of unsavory agents anti-democratic? CSD believes so, if they individually and collectively undermine the government's integrity, credibility, and commitment to core American values. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 9, 10, 11, 17 (extortion and bribery)
------------------	---	--

8-13-18 +	[Continued.] The Newman episode also revived discussions of Mr. Trump's disturbing and unprecedented requirement that many staff sign perpetual non-disclosure and non-disparagement agreements in favor of himself and his family members, including as to the beneficiaries' personal and financial affairs and unclassified information. The practice struck some observers as being contrary to the staff's First Amendment rights and to their obligation to protect the country before protecting the president.<sup>22</sup> In addition, a Post reporter wrote: "The rampant use of such nondisclosure agreements underscores a culture — fostered by Trump himself — of paranoia, leaks, audio recordings and infighting that has pervaded his dealings for decades and continues into his presidency, according to current and former aides."<sup>23</sup>	1, 6, 9, 10, 11, 17 (extortion and bribery)
8-13-18, 8-14-18	Defying Congress. After signing a major defense spending bill on August 13, Mr. Trump issued a signing statement in which he announced that he would decline to enforce some 50 of the bill's provisions as unconstitutional intrusions on his presidential powers – including provisions limiting his authority to support Russia militarily and to withdraw troops from South Korea, and provisions obligating him to disclose information to Congress.<sup>24</sup> Other recent presidents had also used and abused such signing statements, but – in CSD's view – not as part of a broadly authoritarian assertion of executive power such as Mr. Trump had long deployed. Along similar lines, in a New York Times opinion piece, a writer argued that Mr. Trump's persistent attempts to destroy the duly legislated Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") by unilateral executive action was not only inhumane and self-serving, but (because contrary to Congress's will) illegal.<sup>25</sup>	9, 12
8-14-18	Tweeting: in multitudes, for multitudes. In eight morning tweets, Mr. Trump railed against "Crooked Hillary" Clinton, the Justice Department, the FBI and his attorney general Jeff Sessions, all relative to the special prosecutor's investigation of him and his campaign with respect to Russian election meddling. He yet again termed the investigation a "Rigged Witch Hunt" and called for its termination. As many commentators had noted under this presidency, repeating the same false allegations again and again is a favored mechanism of authoritarian regimes, and an effective means of convincing populations of their truth.	7, 9, 12

8-15-18 +	Brennan's security clearance revoked. On August 15, Mr. Trump announced, through his press secretary, that he had revoked the security clearance of one of his critics, former CIA director John Brennan. Among other things, the move curtailed current government officials from consulting with Brennan. It was reportedly unprecedented on the part of a sitting president; and it appeared to abridge Brennan's First Amendment rights, the interests of national security, and established institutional protocols for revoking security clearances. Characteristic of Mr. Trump, it was vengeful and political – aimed at silencing and humiliating Brennan and other critics, not protecting national security. Reportedly it had occurred without the prior knowledge of Dan Coats, the Director of National Intelligence. In a written statement, Mr. Trump accused Brennan of "unfounded and outrageous allegations, wild outbursts on the internet and on television about this Administration." He said that Brennan's "lying and recent conduct, characterized by increasingly frenzied commentary, is wholly inconsistent with access to the Nation's most closely held secrets and facilitates the very aim of adversaries, which is to sow division and chaos." Commentators were quick to note that he had projected onto Brennan, a long-serving American patriot whose strategic advice had secured the elimination of Osama Bin Laden, some of Mr. Trump's own worst traits. But in reality, as The Wall Street Journal reported based on an interview with Mr. Trump, his true motivation in punishing Brennan (and in threatening to so punish others – see below) was to quash the special prosecutor's probe of Russian election interference.<sup>26</sup> The White House contemporaneously reiterated its threat to revoke the clearances of many other former senior officials whom Mr. Trump considered to be his enemies, as CSD had first reported on July 23; but the list of his targets had now grown. Those on the list had served the country honorably and selflessly, many for decades – in sharp contrast to Mr. Trump himself. Commentators recalled President Nixon's secret "enemies list" (Nixon too had considered his enemies to be America's enemies), the revelation of which list over 40 years ago had sparked national outrage; except that Mr. Trump paraded his list publicly, and much of the country – by now accustomed to his wildly anti-democratic behavior – was not outraged. 8-15-18+	[Continued.] On August 16, The Washington Post reported that "of the more than a dozen officials with what could be construed as leadership roles in [overseeing the special prosecutor's] investigation, more than half have been fired and/or threatened with official recourse."<sup>27</sup> On the same day, retired Navy Admiral William McRaven – who as commander of the U.S. Joint Operations Special Command had overseen the Navy Seals in executing the Bin Laden operation – addressed Mr. Trump in a Post op-ed: "I would consider it an honor if you would revoke my security clearance as well." McRaven also wrote: "John Brennan ... is one of the finest public servants I have ever known. Few Americans have done more to protect this country than John. He is a man of unparalleled integrity, whose honesty and character have never been in question .... Through your actions, you have embarrassed us in the eyes of our children, humiliated us on the world stage and, worst of all, divided us as a nation. If you think for a moment that your McCarthy-era tactics will suppress the voices of criticism, you are sadly mistaken."<sup>28</sup> Twelve top former intelligence officials who collectively had served under Presidents Reagan, Clinton, George W. Bush and Obama (and who were soon afterwards joined by others of that rank) then issued a joint condemnation of Mr. Trump's action with respect to Brennan. The next day, on August 17, some 60 lower-ranking former CIA officers of varying party affiliations signed a similar letter. On August 20, another 177 former officials signed.<sup>29</sup> Also on August 17, The Post reported that Brennan's punishment had been announced weeks after it had been decided by Mr. Trump, at a moment specifically intended to divert attention from the scandal involving former White House aide Omarosa Manigault Newman's tell-all book about the administration. The Post also reported that the White House was considering lifting others' security clearances to coincide with any other Trump administration scandals that might eventuate.<sup>30</sup>	7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13

8-15-18	Corruption? No problem. Multiple news outlets reported that Mr. Trump had cut the budgets for the inspectors general of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Homeland Security Department, the State Department, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Agriculture. Inspectors general are internal, independent, anti-corruption watchdogs. Corruption at the EPA on the part of former director Scott Pruitt had made headlines throughout Pruitt's tenure.	17 (15)
8-16-18	When newspapers unite. In a coordinated effort, more than 300 American newspapers published editorials rejecting Mr. Trump's repeated attacks on the "fake news" and his repeated characterizations of the press as "the enemy of the people." (The Washington Post wrote, in its news reporting, that Mr. Trump had deployed the phrase "fake news" or similar over 400 times since his inauguration.) The editorials charged that that behavior was authoritarian, undemocratic and potentially violence-provoking. By way of example, the Houston Chronicle's editors wrote:  "What makes Trump's undermining of the press worse is that it's not taking place in bureaucracy's backrooms. Trump's insults directed at reporters and news organizations, and his threats to limit press access and freedoms, are front and center at news conferences, at rallies, on Twitter. And they're incessant."<sup>31</sup> The Senate then unanimously passed a resolution declaring that "the press is not the enemy of the people." Mr. Trump, however, responded to the newspapers by tweeting an attack on the "FAKE NEWS" and accusing them of "collusion."	1
8-16-18 +	Military parade postponed. On August 16, Mr. Trump indefinitely postponed the military parade that he had planned for November, after cost estimates ballooned from $12 million to $90 million. Virtually no one but Mr. Trump had supported the "vanity" event, which had drawn criticism – including from military figures and veterans groups – for being pointless and offensively militaristic. The following day, by way of Twitter, Mr. Trump blamed the Washington, DC municipal government for price-gouging relative to its portion of the cost; but a $50 million portion was the Pentagon's, and more belonged to other federal agencies.<sup>32</sup>	9, 11

8-17-18	Intervening for Manafort. As a federal jury was deliberating on whether to convict Mr. Trump's one-time presidential campaign manager Paul Manafort of tax and bank fraud, Mr. Trump told reporters that Manafort – an over-the-top liar, grifter, poseur, counselor to dictators, and general scoundrel – was "a very good person, and [that] ... it's very sad what they've done to" him. The "they" was presumably the legal team of special prosecutor Robert Mueller, which continued its investigation of possible collusion and obstruction of justice relative to Russian election meddling on the part of Manafort, Mr. Trump himself, and other Trump campaign personalities. (Also in speaking to reporters that day, Mr. Trump once again said that Mueller was "conflicted," and that the probe was a "rigged witch hunt.") For the president of the United States to so intervene in an ongoing criminal trial had rarely if ever happened before. And Mr. Trump declined to discuss whether he would pardon Manafort if convicted<sup>33</sup> – likely encouraging Manafort and others under investigation or indictment to hold out for clemency rather than cooperate with Mueller.	2, 9, 12
8-17-18	Cutting foreign aid. Politico reported that the White House was seeking to cut at least $3 billion from Congressionally-mandated foreign aid spending – much of it through United Nations contributions. Republican and Democratic senators found the plan to be extraordinary, geo-strategically unwise, "devastating" for the State Department and USAID, and likely illegal.<sup>34</sup>	9, 10, 13, 14
8-18-18	Attacks on the investigation, by the numbers. The New York Times tallied over 250 attacks by Mr. Trump on the special prosecutor's investigation since the special prosecutor was appointed in early 2017, with a sharp spike beginning in April 2018 as (commentators speculated) the investigation was coming closer to Mr. Trump and his inner circle.<sup>35</sup> It is difficult for CSD to see that pattern and intensity of attacks as amounting to anything less than obstruction of justice, in the extreme.	7, 9, 11, 12

8-18-18 +	For open social media. On August 18, Mr. Trump tweeted that far right-wing social media content should not be censored by platform operators, equating the far right's entitlement to be heard to that of the "fake" CNN and MSNBC. He seemed to be referring to radical and incendiary conspiracy theorist Alex Jones' Infowars, which recently had been banned from several popular platforms. He threatened to restrain the platforms from excluding some voices. He repeated the attack a week later.<sup>36</sup> In effect, the initial tweet proposed – dangerously, but consistent with Mr. Trump's war on the mainstream media – that the president should have a voice in what a privately-owned media outlet should and should not publish, what its internal rules for proper content and even its editorial policies should and should not be. As for the general phenomenon of a privately (or even publicly) owned media outlet or platform asserting its own editorial rules – and they all do – CSD appreciates the ethical complexities. And we recognize that open platforms such as Twitter differ from content providers such as newspapers, Web publishers and cable channels; that they face unique challenges in weighing the premises of open content versus the effects of dangerous or offensive content (including determining what's offensive or dangerous, and to what extent). But we allow no credibility whatever for Mr. Trump's views in this matter, given his war against accurate reporting, and his de facto alliance with robust, anti-factual, anti-democratic, hate-spewing content providers during a period when the president himself had drastically moved the country toward believing in and acting on such content. Certainly Mr. Trump owes his entire political success to his own radical and abusive deployment of Twitter.	1, 9, 17 (7)

8-19-18 +	McGahn cooperates, The Times reports, the president explodes. After The New York Times reported that White House Counsel Donald McGahn had long been cooperating with special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation of Mr. Trump and his associates in order to avoid Mr. Trump blaming him for any misdeeds that might emerge from the investigation, Mr. Trump – tweeting from a weekend stay at his Bedminster, New Jersey golf club on August 19 – railed against The Times' reporting and the special prosecutor. Below, CSD has transcribed the whole remarkable rant. [Continued below.]	1, 9, 10, 11, 12

8-19-18 +	[Continued.] "I allowed White House Counsel Don McGahn, and all other requested members of the White House Staff, to fully cooperate with the Special Counsel. In addition we readily gave over one million pages of documents. Most transparent in history. No Collusion, No Obstruction. Witch Hunt! "The failing @nytimes wrote a Fake piece today implying that because White House Council [sic] Don McGahn was giving hours of testimony to the Special Council [sic], he must be a John Dean type "RAT." But I allowed him and all others to testify - I didn't have to. I have nothing to hide..... "....and have demanded transparency so that this Rigged and Disgusting Witch Hunt can come to a close. So many lives have been ruined over nothing - McCarthyism at its WORST! Yet Mueller &amp; his gang of Dems refuse to look at the real crimes on the other side - Media is even worse! "No Collusion and No Obstruction, except by Crooked Hillary and the Democrats. All of the resignations and corruption, yet heavily conflicted Bob Mueller refuses to even look in that direction. What about the Brennan, Comey, McCabe, Strzok lies to Congress, or Crooked's Emails! "The Failing New York Times wrote a story that made it seem like the White House Council [sic] had TURNED on the President, when in fact it is just the opposite - &amp; the two Fake reporters knew this. This is why the Fake News Media has become the Enemy of the People. So bad for America! "Some members of the media are very Angry at the Fake Story in the New York Times. They actually called to complain and apologize - a big step forward. From the day I announced, the Times has been Fake News, and with their disgusting new Board Member, it will only get worse! "Study the late Joseph McCarthy, because we are now in period [sic] with Mueller and his gang that make Joseph McCarthy look like a baby! Rigged Witch Hunt!" [Continued below.]	1, 9, 10, 11, 12
------------------	---	-------------------------

8-19-18 +	[Continued.] On the following day, Mr. Trump's tweets resumed – launching ever increasing vitriol at Mueller, in an apparent attempt to obstruct the investigation by swaying public opinion against it: "Disgraced and discredited Bob Mueller and his whole group of Angry Democrat Thugs spent over 30 hours with the White House Council [sic], only with my approval, for purposes of transparency. Anybody needing that much time when they know there is no Russian Collusion is just someone...." "....looking for trouble. They are enjoying ruining people's lives and REFUSE to look at the real corruption on the Democrat side - the lies, the firings, the deleted Emails and soooo much more! Mueller's Angry Dems are looking to impact the election. They are a National Disgrace!" "Where's the Collusion? They made up a phony crime called Collusion, and when there was no Collusion they say there was Obstruction (of a phony crime that never existed). If you FIGHT BACK or say anything bad about the Rigged Witch Hunt, they scream Obstruction!" "I hope John Brennan, the worst CIA Director in our country's history, brings a lawsuit. It will then be very easy to get all of his records, texts, emails and documents to show not only the poor job he did, but how he was involved with the Mueller Rigged Witch Hunt. He won't sue!" "Everybody wants to keep their Security Clearance, it's worth great prestige and big dollars, even board seats, and that is why certain people are coming forward to protect Brennan. It certainly isn't because of the good job he did! He is a political 'hack.'" CSD would note that the two tirades came from a man who had vowed to "Make America Great Again" and who had compared himself ever more often to Abraham Lincoln. Also on August 20, Mr. Trump told Reuters that he could run the investigation of Russian election tampering himself if he wished to.<sup>37</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 17 (7, 10)
------------------	--	--

8-19-18 +	[Continued.] Meanwhile, Mr. Trump's attorney Rudy Giuliani, on television, was disparaging (and thus seeking to obstruct) the investigation on a continuous, falsehood-laden, and often incoherent basis. As for Mr. Trump's Twitter reference to Senator Joseph McCarthy's brutal and fraudulent red-baiting campaign in the early 1950s, we would observe (as we have done before) that McCarthy's notorious lawyer and lieutenant, Roy Cohn, had long served in his later years as Mr. Trump's personal attorney and his deny-everything, apologize-for-nothing, punish-all-critics mentor. As for Mr. Trump's disparagement of Brennan and Mueller, we would observe that at the CIA Brennan had served Democratic and Republican administrations for 25 years, at times with great distinction; and that Mueller, a Republican, had served spotlessly as FBI director and was a Vietnam war hero. We did not grasp how Mr. Trump, with his life-long dedication to himself, his fame, his libido and his money, could see his way to attacking their character – except as a demagogue.	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 17 (7, 10)
8-20-18	The politics of cyber-bullying. Joining the chorus of pundits who (justly or unjustly) noted the irony of First Lady Melania Trump's (seemingly tepid) campaign against cyber-bullying, a Washington Post columnist detailed Mr. Trump's own offending activities in that area: "In recent days alone, he has cyber-bullied his former White House aide Omarosa Manigault Newman ('dog,' 'wacky,' 'vicious,' 'nasty,' 'a loser,' 'hated,' 'crazed, crying lowlife'); John Dean ('rat'); the media ('sick,' 'fake,' 'disgusting,' 'enemy of the people'); Brennan ('loudmouth, partisan, political hack,' 'limited intellectually'); his own attorney general ('BLANK Jeff Sessions'); Connecticut Democratic Sen. Richard Blumenthal ('Loser!'); Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer ('haywire'); New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo ('incompetent,' 'really dumb,' 'having a total meltdown'); Ohio Gov. John Kasich ('very unpopular,' 'failed'); and those investigating Trump ('creep,' 'McCarthyism at its WORST!' 'zero credibility,' 'corrupt,' 'a fraud,' 'lowlife')."<sup>38</sup>	9, 11

8-20-18	The obliteration of ISIS. The Huffington Post reported that although Mr. Trump had been claiming to have "eradicated," "wiped out," and "obliterated" ISIS, the Pentagon and other security officials believed that the organization remained at peak strength and was poised to make attacks in distant countries.<sup>39</sup>	7, 9, 10, 11
8-20-18	Fear and loathing for immigrants. At a White House ceremony honoring immigration officers and agents, Mr. Trump railed at Hispanic criminals and rapists, the MS-13 gang, and Democrats – who he said were soft on migrant crime and who, if they won electoral gains in Congress, he said would open the borders to chaos. He falsely claimed that his border wall was already being built and that his administration had shattered immigration enforcement records. He repeatedly referred to the federal Customs and Border Patrol agency as "CBC" rather than CBP. And – provoking criticism from many in the media – he commended a Hispanic-American border agent for speaking "perfect English" – as though that was a rarity among the millions of Hispanic-Americans who likewise speak fluently and without accents, few of whom he likely had come to know.<sup>40</sup>	6, 7, 9
8-20-18	Squatting on the Fed. In an interview with Reuters, Mr. Trump again said that he didn't want the Federal Reserve Bank to raise interest rates. "I should be given some help by the Fed," he said – thus once more violating the nation's long-held respect for the Fed's independence from presidential and other political influence.<sup>41</sup> Also on that day, The Wall Street Journal recounted numerous other calls by Mr. Trump for the Fed to halt its interest rate increases, and his spoken regrets for having appointed Jerome Powell to chair the bank. Some observers felt that Mr. Trump was setting up Powell as his scapegoat if the economy were to turn downward.<sup>42</sup>	9, 10, 11
8-21-18 +	Manafort is convicted; Cohen pleads guilty. On August 21, a federal jury convicted Mr. Trump's one-time campaign manager Paul Manafort on eight counts of tax and bank fraud, which are felonies. Mr. Trump reacted by praising Manafort as a "good man" and denouncing special prosecutor Robert Mueller. [Continued below.]	2, 7, 9, 11, 12, 17 (7, and assorted crimes)

8-21-18 +	[Continued.] Manafort still faced trial for money laundering and illegal foreign lobbying relative to his work for authoritarian foreign governments. He also remained a subject of Mueller's investigation of Russian election meddling, having long worked for and with high-ranking friends of the Kremlin. Nearly contemporaneously, Mr. Trump's former attorney and self-proclaimed "fixer" Michael Cohen pleaded guilty to eight counts of bank and tax fraud. He also pleaded guilty to having, at Mr. Trump's "direction," secretly and through devious maneuvers paid two of Mr. Trump's extra-marital girlfriends (porn star Stormy Daniels and Playboy centerfold Karen McDougal) to remain silent about their respective affairs so as to influence the 2016 election. The criminality of the payments lay in their having constituted campaign contributions in excess of permissible limits, in violation of restrictions on corporate donations, and in intentional defiance of campaign finance disclosure obligations – effectively a fraud on American voters, some of whom may have (or according to one poll would have) voted differently had they known about the payments and their circumstances.<sup>43</sup> Mr. Trump and the White House had repeatedly denied, and now to continued to deny, his advance knowledge of the payments. He reacted to Cohen's plea by calling him a persistent liar and maintaining that he (Mr. Trump) had done nothing wrong. Cohen also remained a subject of the Russian election meddling probe. On the same day, a grand jury indicted California Congressman Duncan Hunter for personally using campaign funds. Hunter was one of the first two members of Congress to endorse Mr. Trump for president. The other was New York Congressman Chris Collins, recently arrested for insider trading.<sup>44</sup> Additional leading Trump campaign figures had earlier pleaded guilty to federal crimes alleged by the special prosecutor such as lying to the FBI: short-lived national security advisor Michael Flynn, Manafort's campaign assistant Rick Gates, and foreign affairs campaign advisor George Papadopoulos. [Continued below.]	2, 7, 9, 11, 12, 17 (7, and assorted crimes)
------------------	--	---

8-21-18 +	[Continued.] On August 22, Mr. Trump tweeted: "I feel very badly for Paul Manafort and his wonderful family. 'Justice' took a 12 year old tax case, among other things, applied tremendous pressure on him and, unlike Michael Cohen, he refused to 'break' - make up stories in order to get a 'deal.' Such respect for a brave man!" Mr. Trump thus at once disparaged the court system; disparaged the Justice Department; attempted to influence future court cases implicating himself and his associates; exalted a lying, thieving felon; showed no interest in the pertinent crimes; betrayed a godfather-like conviction that loyalty (toward himself) should supersede the law; and indicated his continuing favor (and possible future pardons) for defendants who declined to turn on him. In fact on August 22, Mr. Trump told Fox News that a criminal defendant's "flipping" to cooperate with prosecutors by testifying against his or her associates – a bedrock tool and goal of prosecutors, including those pursuing the Hispanic drug gangs whom Mr. Trump had demonized – "almost ought to be illegal." CSD continues to marvel at Mr. Trump's swarm of white collar criminal associates. (To the list we should add Felix Sater, a convicted swindler for the Russian mafia in the U.S. who had partnered with or consulted for Mr. Trump in various real estate ventures and Russian contacts, including contacts during the 2016 election campaign.) We visualize them flanking him in a chorus as he has ranted against migrant and other minority street criminals, incited crowds to clamor for Hillary Clinton's imprisonment (including mere hours after the Manafort and Cohen developments described above), and proclaimed himself the law and order president. As we had noted in our August 9 entry about Mr. Trump's fevered, accusatory tweets, we do not see any of this as making America great, or as placing Mr. Trump in the league of Abraham Lincoln.	2, 7, 9, 11, 12, 17 (7, and assorted crimes)
8-21-18	Campaigning at official functions. White House staffers cavalierly told reporters that Mr. Trump and his top aides had been and still were routinely and determinedly campaigning for Congressional candidates in the course of, or in the guise of, conducting official events, and at taxpayer expense. The activity was reportedly unusual for presidential administrations, and was likely a violation of various federal election laws.<sup>45</sup>	9, 17 (9)

8-21-18	Still defying Congress – for Russia. Republicans and Democrats on the Senate Banking Committee castigated Trump administration officials for dragging their feet on implementing the economic sanctions against Russia that Congress had legislated in 2017.<sup>46</sup> Republicans and Democrats on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee likewise called out administration officials for refusing to share with Congress what Mr. Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin had secretly agreed to in Helsinki in July.<sup>47</sup>	9, 12
8-21-18	In West Virginia. At a rally for a congressional candidate in Charleston, West Virginia, Mr. Trump warned of waves of criminal migrants if Democrats were to win control of the House. He said, “A vote for any Democrat in November is a vote to eliminate immigration enforcement, to open our borders and set loose vicious predators and violent criminals. ... They’ll be all over our communities. They will be preying on our communities.” He made special mention of the recent murder of a white female Iowa student, allegedly by an undocumented male Mexican migrant (a case to which he and his allies would soon devote continuing inflammatory attention, contrary to the wishes of the student's family and without ever offering condolences to the family).<sup>48</sup> He led the crowd in a chant of "Build the wall!", and he reiterated his recent falsehood that the wall was already being built (now even hinting that it would soon be completed). Mr. Trump also attacked Democratic legislators Chuck Schumer, Nancy Pelosi and Maxine Waters by name, and he thundered: “The Democrat Party is held hostage by the so-called resistance: left-wing haters and angry mobs. They’re trying to tear down our institutions, disrespect our flag, demean our law enforcement, denigrate our history and disparage our great country — and we’re not going to let it happen.” Mr. Trump encouraged the crowd to chant, "Lock her [Hillary Clinton] up!" and "Drain the Swamp!" He said nothing about the judicial developments earlier in the day pursuant to which his former campaign manager Paul Manafort and his former attorney Michael Cohen would themselves likely be locked up (Manafort already had been locked up, pending his trial, which he had just lost) – or about Manafort's now fabulously publicized reputation as the ultimate swamp creature. [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12

8-21-18	[Continued.] But he did issue his obligatory denunciations of the "fake news," the "Russian witch hunt," and the special prosecutor's investigative team. He also repeated his recent cry that he is smarter and richer than the "elite" – emphasizing in particular his own luxurious homes, which he claimed surpassed theirs – and that his supporters were the true elite. (How his wealth and luxurious homes made him more "elite" than, say, a highly accomplished general or writer or businessperson or professor or public policy professional, any of whom might or might not oppose him, was not clear.) As reported by The New York Times, Mr. Trump "worked the crowd into a frenzy."<sup>49</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12
8-22-18	The market and me. On August 22, Mr. Trump told Fox News that he couldn't be impeached because he was doing "a great job" as president. He also said (threatened?) that if he were impeached, the stock market would collapse and impoverish millions. Neither statement had a basis in evidence, logic or American history.<sup>50</sup>	7, 9, 11
8-23-18	Insurrection? Mr. Trump's lawyer Rudy Giuliani told Sky News that if Mr. Trump were impeached "the American people would revolt."<sup>51</sup> It was not clear to CSD whether Giuliani was predicting political action or armed insurrection; whether he was inciting lawlessness or just speaking carelessly; or what the ideology of the revolt would be, other than possibly (CSD could only speculate) ethno-nationalism or loyalty to an authoritarian leader. CSD has long feared that Mr. Trump or his followers could stoke violent lawlessness. We are disturbed that Giuliani – a former law enforcement official and the president's attorney – would make a statement that could at all be interpreted as a call for an uprising to protest constitutional due process.	17 (5, 10)
8-23-18	No to human rights. National Security Advisor John Bolton told the Associated Press that the U.S. would eliminate its funding for the United Nations' Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights – the world's leading intergovernmental human rights organization.<sup>52</sup>	14

8-23-18	Taking it to Africa. Following a Fox News report that black South Africans were murdering large numbers of white farmers and that the government was stealing their land – widely viewed by informed observers to be a false conspiracy theory – Mr. Trump, without a moment of investigation, analysis or diplomacy, publicly tweeted his concern. That was only his second tweet about Africa, and his first tweet expressing a position on any political or social issue there.<sup>53</sup> He had long appeared to be without knowledge of or interest in the continent, and without empathy for its predominantly black population. Given the vastness and diversity of the region's geography, promise and problems, that he chose (perhaps instinctively) to highlight an issue involving black-on-white crime had only one possible explanation. The South African government objected. American white supremacists cheered.<sup>54</sup>	6, 10, 13
8-23-18	The withering of State. The New York Times reported on continuing vacancies in senior positions at the State Department, despite recent improvements in that regard: "No administration in modern American history has had its top diplomats confirmed at a slower rate. Forty-three embassies have no ambassador, and some of the world's most strategically important countries — Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Qatar, Pakistan and Australia — still have no nominees. The department's bureaus for East Asian and Pacific affairs and for South and Central Asian affairs, vital centers for coordinating and implementing policy, do not have nominees for their top slots. And only one of the department's six under secretary positions has a Senate-confirmed appointee. .... [T]here is a widely held perception even among Republicans in Congress that the Trump administration does little to vet its nominees, with Senate staff members discovering controversies and lawsuits — often through simple Google searches — never mentioned in paperwork that is supposed to be all-encompassing."<sup>55</sup>	10, 13

8-23-18, 8-25-18	No to the law; yes to the mob. In a wide-ranging news analysis on August 23, The Washington Post characterized Mr. Trump's increasingly explicit disdain for the law, manifested in recent days as prosecutorial investigations had become more damaging to him and his associates. Elements of the disdain included his suggestion that prosecutors not be allowed to flip witnesses; his continued denunciations of his Attorney General Jeff Sessions for refusing to protect him; his praise of his former campaign manager and now convicted felon Paul Manafort; his attorney Rudy Giuliani revealing that he and Mr. Trump had discussed pardoning Manafort; his stripping of former CIA director John Brennan's security clearance for having criticized him; his arguing that campaign finance law violations are commonplace, trivial, and not even truly illegal; and his ongoing excoriation of special prosecutor Robert Mueller for conducting a "witch hunt." The writer saw the developments as threatening long-lasting damage to the American justice system and the rule of law. Among other things, the writer quoted a former Mafia prosecutor who likened Mr. Trump's view of the law to that of a "mobster." He said, "The president has not a whit of respect for institutions, whether it's the DOJ or the Fed or the FBI .... If you are a threat to him, he is [metaphorically] going to try to kill you."<sup>56</sup> (Other observers had long noted Mr. Trump's Mafia style and past business connections.<sup>57</sup> See also CSD's August 2 and 21 comments about Mr. Trump's mobster-like tone in ejecting a protester from a rally and in demanding personal loyalty, respectively.) In a similar analysis two days later, The New York Times wrote that in addition to Mr. Trump having damaged – perhaps irreparably – the reputation and thus perhaps the very effectiveness of the FBI and the Justice Department, now any criminal, following the president's lead, might more freely and successfully claim that his or her prosecution was politically motivated, that lying is acceptable, that truth does not exist, and that the testimony of cooperating witnesses should not be trusted or even admitted into evidence. The Times added that throughout Mr. Trump's business career he had alternatively battled the American legal system and abused it as a bludgeon for his personal enemies. Now as president, wrote The Times, "Mr. Trump is sworn to uphold the law, but he has viewed the legal system itself as an adversary."<sup>58</sup>	2, 9, 10, 11
-----------------------------	---	---------------------

8-24-18	Sessions on the ropes? For a year and a half, Mr. Trump's attorney general Jeff Sessions had faithfully and effectively carried out much of Mr. Trump's agenda that had fallen to him, including identifying conservative judges and justices for nomination to the federal bench, withdrawing the Justice Department from regulatory enforcement efforts, and helping to implement Mr. Trump's anti-immigration policy. But Mr. Trump's resentment for and humiliation of Sessions for having recused himself from the Russian election meddling investigation at its outset, and thus having allowed a special prosecutor to be appointed, had only grown. In fact Mr. Trump had reportedly found any suggestion that any of his subordinates place the Constitution over their loyalty to him to be incomprehensible and infuriating.<sup>59</sup> As the investigations of Mr. Trump and his associates on various matters bore ever more damaging fruit, Mr. Trump was now increasingly described by allies and critics as bent on firing Sessions.<sup>60</sup> (He had the legal power to do so; but he apparently feared political blow-back from Republicans in the Senate, where Sessions had previously served.) On August 24, Mr. Trump tweeted his cumulative list of grievances against Sessions, urging him to: "look into all of the corruption on the 'other side' including deleted Emails, Comey lies &amp; leaks, Mueller conflicts, McCabe, Strzok, Page, Ohr..... ....FISA abuse, Christopher Steele &amp; his phony and corrupt Dossier, the Clinton Foundation, illegal surveillance of Trump Campaign, Russian collusion by Dems - and so much more. Open up the papers &amp; documents without redaction? Come on Jeff, you can do it, the country is waiting!" The following morning, Mr. Trump resumed his attacks on Sessions (also on special prosecutor Robert Mueller, Hillary Clinton and the FBI) – including with an apparent threat to fire Sessions and to directly interfere with the operations of the Justice Department: "Jeff Sessions said he wouldn't allow politics to influence him only because he doesn't understand what is happening underneath his command position. Highly conflicted Bob Mueller and his gang of 17 Angry Dems are having a field day as real corruption goes untouched. No Collusion! [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11

I feel sure that we will soon be getting to the bottom of all of this corruption. At some point I may have to get involved! 'The FBI only looked at 3000 of 675,000 Crooked Hillary Clinton Emails.' They purposely didn't look at the disasters. This news is just out. @FoxNews ... 'The FBI looked at less than 1%' of Crooked's Emails!"	9, 10, 11
8-25-18 +	Dominating even the dead. Mr. Trump's terse, tepid and tardy public condolence following the death of Senator John McCain on August 25 contained no words of praise, and in his Instagram message the text was accompanied by a domineering photo of Mr. Trump himself.<sup>61</sup> In that regard it matched his tribute to the iconic, utterly independent and recently deceased singer Aretha Franklin, whom he had boastfully and patronizingly eulogized by claiming that she had "worked for" him (she had merely performed sometimes at his casinos).<sup>62</sup> For CSD, in both instances, the preening, the imperiousness and the need to dominate even the dead bespoke Mr. Trump's selfish, cruel and controlling mindset. The McCain tribute was particularly savage in its omissions. McCain had long served in the Senate with distinction, and he had run for president of the United States in Mr. Trump's own party. He had been widely admired not only for being a Vietnam war hero (which Mr. Trump, who had avoided military service, had belittled), but for standing against Mr. Trump's authoritarian behavior and for adhering throughout his political career to honorable convictions. While heartfelt tributes to McCain flowed from foreign leaders and from former domestic adversaries such as President Obama, Hillary Clinton, Harry Reid and John Kerry – Mr. Trump's tribute was stony. But it was true to form. For many months, as McCain had been dying, and until just days before his end, at campaign rallies Mr. Trump had railed against him and evoked boos from attendees. [Continued below.]	10, 11

8-25-18 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's harshness upon McCain's passing caused such an uproar – including from American veterans organizations – that two days later he issued the following, second tribute: “Despite our differences on policy and politics, I respect Senator John McCain’s service to our country and, in his honor, have signed a proclamation to fly the flag of the United States at half-staff until the day of his interment.” While some commentators found that to be an improvement, CSD did not. There was still no kindness, sympathy or praise. Rather, the statement of "respect" remained formulaic; and in unnecessarily reiterating his differences with McCain, Mr. Trump seemed simply to not be able to let it go – that is, seemed to demand having the last, hostile word. We found his behavior to be not merely petty and mean-spirited, but deeply unpatriotic – yet another example of him placing his vanity and self-aggrandizement over the values and interests of the country. Finally, some hours later, Mr. Trump very briefly told Evangelical leaders before cameras, perfunctorily but without rancor, “We very much appreciate everything that Senator McCain has done for our country.” He thus at last had acceded slightly to the urgings of his staff, who had originally drafted a warm tribute to McCain that Mr. Trump had rejected. During the course of the entire fiasco, the White House flag had been lowered, then raised, then lowered again in tribute. Notably, Russian media rejoiced in McCain's death.<sup>63</sup>	10, 11
8-27-18	FBI headquarters grab. According to a report by its inspector general, the General Services Administration had improperly allowed Mr. Trump to influence the agency in deciding to build the FBI's new headquarters across the street from his Trump International Hotel in Washington, contrary to long-standing plans to move the headquarters to Maryland or Virginia. The GSA also may have misled Congress about that intervention, and may have hidden the Washington building's higher cost.<sup>64</sup> The GSA had also drawn criticism early in Mr. Trump's administration for not having found Mr. Trump's company to be in breach of the GSA's lease of the building housing the hotel, contrary to the lease's plain language forbidding government officials from having a financial interest in the tenant.<sup>65</sup> The agency appeared to be under his thumb.	11, 15, 17 (7, 15)

8-27-18	Violence and Faith. As reported by both The New York Times and The Washington Post, Mr. Trump warned a group of evangelical leaders at the White House that if Democrats were to gain control of Congress in the upcoming November elections, radical leftists would unleash a storm of violence on the American people. (Both newspapers recounted various episodes during Mr. Trump's 2016 election campaign when he had urged his own followers to commit violence. Actually no Democratic candidates, then or since, had urged violence.) Mr. Trump also told his guests: “This November 6 election is very much a referendum on not only me, it’s a referendum on your religion, it’s a referendum on free speech and the First Amendment.” In that regard he urged the pastors to campaign vigorously for Republicans from their pulpits, in contravention of federal tax law – the so-called Johnson Amendment, a statute that forbids tax-exempt, non-profit churches from engaging in political activity. He thus at once stoked religious paranoia (and hatred?); suggested that he and his party (and America?) were bound to protect principally one religion; clamored for a massive campaign of illegal conduct (despite his professed law and order presidency); and cynically inverted his disparagement of First Amendment rights (at least as they protect the mainstream press). In addition, Mr. Trump boasted to the group at length that he had revoked the Johnson Amendment. But he had not done that, and he could not have done it absent congressional action. In fact he had merely ordered that the law not be aggressively enforced; but it already was not being aggressively (if at all) enforced.<sup>66</sup>	5, 6, 7, 9, 11
8-27-18, 8-28-18	A unique presidency. A CNN television commentator noted that Mr. Trump was the only recent president not to have had friendly relations with any of his predecessors. A Washington Post political analysis noted that Mr. Trump was also unique among presidents for regularly shunning or being disinvited from perfunctory events which a president would ordinarily attend, including a recent royal wedding in the UK, and the funerals of Senator John McCain and former first lady Barbara Bush.<sup>67</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 9, 10, 11, 15

8-27-18, 8-28-18	[Continued.] A Post columnist wrote: "The man now living and working in the White House is uniquely different from, and worse than, his predecessors. All of them. Other presidents have been venal, bigoted, corrupt, divisive, ignorant or unstable, but never all of these things at the same time, in such lavish measure."<sup>68</sup>	6, 9, 10, 11, 15
8-27-18, 8-29-18	Ohr. On August 27, The New York Times profiled Bruce Ohr, the career FBI civil servant whom Mr. Trump had lately been vilifying on Twitter. Mr. Trump was seeking to force Ohr out of the agency for having communicated with former British spy Christopher Steele relative to Steele's partially unproven "dossier" on Mr. Trump's Russia connections. Among other things, Mr. Trump had threatened to rescind Ohr's security clearance. Ohr's nearly 30-year record at the FBI in fact was spotless. Ohr's specialty: Russian organized crime.<sup>69</sup> Two days later, Mr. Trump, in a series of tweets, advised Chief Justice John Roberts how to handle Ohr and others at the FBI and the Justice Department: "How the hell is Bruce Ohr still employed at the Justice Department? Disgraceful! Witch Hunt! "Ohr told the FBI it (the Fake Dossier) wasn't true, it was a lie and the FBI was determined to use it anyway to damage Trump and to perpetrate a fraud on the court to spy on the Trump campaign. This is a fraud on the court. The Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court is in ... charge of the FISA court. He should direct the Presiding Judge, Rosemary Collier, to hold a hearing, haul all of these people from the DOJ &amp; FBI in there, &amp; if she finds there were crimes committed, and there were, there should be a criminal referral by her...." CSD found the tweet alarming. Constitutionally, the president has no standing to advise the chief justice of anything – only to request that the Justice Department file a formal petition or pleading to litigate a matter in the ordinary course. Democratically, the proposal for a court to round up all the president's enemies at once was perverse. And in terms of protocol, the casual, public and imperious tweet debased the dignity of the Supreme Court.	2, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12

8-27-18 - 8-29-18	Not a hack. Shortly after a right-wing media outlet reported on August 27 that a Chinese-owned company had penetrated Hillary Clinton's private email server and had obtained nearly all of her emails while she was serving as secretary of state, Mr. Trump tweeted the allegation as fact, faulting the FBI for not pursuing the matter. The FBI then announced that the report was false.<sup>70</sup>	7, 9, 10, 11
8-28-18 +	What rule of law? On August 28, A Washington Post columnist listed a startling array of instances in which Mr. Trump had alleged that his critics' lawful actions were "illegal," while defending the genuinely illegal actions of his associates.<sup>71</sup> Similarly, a New York Times columnist observed that, true to his earlier boast, Mr. Trump had already (figuratively) "shot someone on Fifth Avenue" with impunity relative to his defiance of American democratic norms. The columnist added that Mr. Trump was moving toward the "Russification of America": not only through his friendship toward Russia, but through widespread corruption; regular attacks on the press and the judiciary; the ascendancy of rule by personal loyalty over rule by the Constitution; "the glorification of oil, gas and mining over science and technology; the elevation of white, Christian, nationalist values; and the neutering of the legislative branch."<sup>72</sup> Russia stood (the columnist wrote) to win the post-Cold War. On August 30, Mr. Trump said that the special prosecutor's investigation was flat-out "illegal."<sup>73</sup>	1, 2, 6, 8, 9, 15
8-28-18 +	Google: also rigged. Shortly after watching a Fox News commentary on August 28, but without investigating or offering any evidence, Mr. Trump repeated that commentary – by tweeting that Google searches were "rigged" to display more results for (mainstream) "fake" news media that were critical of him than for news media that favored him. He had also previously criticized Facebook and Twitter for disfavoring him, and he did that again by Twitter the next day. All of those critiques reflected his eagerness both to single out for censure individual American businesses and to broadly attack various forms of media for their content, all to advance his personal agenda. Google denied the new charge of bias, of which tech industry professionals were likewise skeptical. [Continued below.]	1, 9, 11, 17 (1)

8-28-18 +	[Continued.] The president's top economic advisor, Larry Kudlow, nevertheless promptly said that he would investigate whether to seek to regulate Google searches.<sup>74</sup> On August 30, Mr. Trump suggested that Google, Amazon and Facebook be broken up on anti-trust grounds.<sup>75</sup> A New York Times columnist subsequently pointed to the support for Mr. Trump's outlook from his allies in Congress, and to the real possibility that Google could cave to authoritarian pressure for censorship, as it had done overseas.<sup>76</sup> CSD acknowledges that voices of varying political persuasions have alleged anti-trust abuses on the part of some of the above companies. And as we wrote on August 18, we acknowledge the ethical complexities inherent in politically-based content selection on the part of the media (all media). But as we also wrote then, we fear Mr. Trump's self-serving agenda; and we see irony in his having won and preserved his presidency largely on the strength of Twitter. In addition, as we have written before, we note his utter disinterest in advancing tech (as opposed to smokestack) industries, despite tech's having long served as a stunning engine for economic and job growth. (Both his allies and his critics might call that a "cultural thing.") But in any event, Mr. Trump's views on tech companies would appear to be devoid of consistency, principle or analysis; instead to consist only of ad hoc cries to benefit his personal fortunes.	1, 9, 11, 17 (1)
8-29-18	Dead Puerto Ricans? Their own fault. Confronted with new official figures that almost 3,000 people had died as a result of Hurricane Maria the previous year – making that the most deadly natural disaster in the U.S. in a century – Mr. Trump expressed no sympathy for the loss of lives, no regret for the federal government's slow response to the catastrophe, and no chagrin for his initial braggadocio about having saved lives. Instead, at a news conference, he continued to fault Puerto Rico for its own lack of preparedness and infrastructure, and to boast of the brilliance of the federal (that is, his own) response.<sup>77</sup>	6, 11
8-29-18, 8-30-18	McGahn going; Sessions knifed. Mr. Trump announced that White House counsel Don McGahn would be leaving his position. [Continued below.]	10, 11, 12

8-29-18, 8-30-18	[Continued.] The news marked not just the latest of many departures on the part of Mr. Trump's top aides.<sup>78</sup> It also marked the demise of yet another of Mr. Trump's attorneys – including Ty Cobb and John Dowd – each of whom had unsuccessfully attempted to maintain simultaneously his position and his integrity relative to the special prosecutor's investigation of Mr. Trump's activities in connection with the Russian election meddling. (Many other attorneys had simply declined to represent Mr. Trump.<sup>79</sup>) In McGahn's case, his offenses included having refused to fire, but instead having cooperated with, the special prosecutor.<sup>80</sup> The announcement coincided with reports that Mr. Trump was lobbying individual senators to allow him to dismiss his campaign luminary and attorney general, the former four-term senator Jeff Sessions – for similar reasons – after having persistently humiliated him<sup>81</sup>; and that even most of the Republican caucus from Alabama (Sessions's home state) had swung to Mr. Trump and against Sessions.<sup>82</sup> In all, the events confirmed the sense of CSD and various commentators that Mr. Trump seemed almost inevitably to tarnish and/or betray even his closest associates (and wives), and to be bent on shuttering the special prosecutor's investigation. The day after the McGahn announcement, the White House announced that White House ethics counsel Stefan Passantino was also departing.<sup>83</sup>	10, 11, 12
8-30-18	My stock market. Mr. Trump tweeted: "The news from the Financial Markets is even better than anticipated. For all of you that have made a fortune in the markets, or seen your 401k's rise beyond your wildest expectations, more good news is coming!" He thus continued to take sole credit for the rise in the stock market (most of which had preceded his presidency); puffed the market's performance in contravention of prudence and presidential custom; pre-established his eventual need to find a scapegoat upon a market down-turn; and betrayed his favoritism toward the wealthy such as other presidents had not so baldly done.	7, 10, 11

8-30-18	Leaving the WTO. Mr. Trump threatened to exit the World Trade Organization if it didn't bend to his demands, after having already snubbed its rules by imposing major tariffs on imports under a false pretext in March.<sup>84</sup>	14
8-30-18	The lying enemy. In a barrage of angry and patently untruthful tweets, Mr. Trump laid into CNN and NBC: "The hatred and extreme bias of me [sic] by @CNN has clouded their thinking and made them unable to function. But actually, as I have always said, this has been going on for a long time. Little Jeff Z [CNN's CEO, Jeffrey Zucker] has done a terrible job, his ratings suck, &amp; AT&amp;T should fire him to save credibility!" "What's going on at @CNN is happening, to different degrees, at other networks - with @NBCNews being the worst. The good news is that Andy Lack(y) [NBC's chairman, Andrew Lack] is about to be fired(?) for incompetence, and much worse. When Lester Holt [an NBC reporter to whom Mr. Trump had acknowledged on camera that he had dismissed FBI director James Comey because of the Russia investigation] got caught fudging my tape on Russia [Holt had not fudged it, and the video that the entire world had seen was plainly not edited], they were hurt badly!" "I just cannot state strongly enough how totally dishonest much of the Media is. Truth doesn't matter to them, they only have their hatred &amp; agenda. This includes fake books, which come out about me all the time, always anonymous sources, and are pure fiction. Enemy of the People!"	1, 7, 9, 11
8-30-18	In Indiana. At a rally for congressional candidates in Evansville, Indiana, Mr. Trump dedicated much of his speech to attacking the media. Among other things, he falsely accused television networks of turning off their cameras when he was thrashing them at rallies; and he urged NBC to fire its chairman. (Hours earlier, a man had been arrested for threatening to kill reporters at the Boston Globe, calling the paper "the enemy of the people" for criticizing Mr. Trump.) [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12

8-30-18	[Continued.] He also again threatened to "get involved" in the FBI and the Justice Department if they didn't stop investigating him. He again charged Democrats with being soft on border security and the Hispanic MS-13 gang. He again blasted Hillary Clinton and evoked chants of "Lock her up!" And he again said he was more popular among Republicans than Abraham Lincoln had been. Mr. Trump said, "Today's Democrat Party is held hostage by left-wing haters, angry mobs, 'deep state' radicals, establishment cronies, and their fake news allies." He repeatedly praised veterans as heroes, but said nothing about the recently deceased war hero John McCain, his nemesis. As to the "elite" (whoever they might be), he reiterated his narrative: "See, you have to understand, I have a better education than they do from a much better school, but -- the elite. They're the elite. They're the elite. I went to better schools, I went to better everything. And by the way, by the way, are you ready for this? And I'm President, and they're not." Further on the subject of himself, he said, "We love winners. We love winners. Winners are winners." Also: "And we're the talk of the world. I'll tell you, every foreign leader who comes to see me, almost, they walk in and they start off, Mr. President, congratulations on the incredible success you're having with your economy. Congratulations. Everything. Almost everyone." In a similar vein, he had told Bloomberg reporters earlier in the day that he would award himself an "A-plus" job approval rating because (he said) the "level of love" at his rallies is "just a beautiful thing to watch."<sup>85</sup> CSD bites its tongue as it puzzles over Mr. Trump's understanding of the word "love."	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12
8-31-18	Riling Palestinians. A week after slashing bilateral aid for Palestinian development projects, the State Department announced that it would end America's long-standing financial support for UNRWA, the United Nations' humanitarian agency that helps Palestinian refugees. The administration reportedly believed that the harsh UNRWA cut would bring the Palestinians to the negotiating table with Israel. Most of the international diplomatic community believed that it would do the opposite.<sup>86</sup> [Continued below.]	10, 14

8-31-18	[Continued.] CSD doesn't purport to know. But we are skeptical of both Mr. Trump's overall Middle East peace strategy (which to date has already seemed amorphous, peevish, provocative and counter-productive), and we reject his categorical disdain for the UN and other international institutions.	10, 14
8-31-18	The Kavanaugh papers. The Trump White House notified the Senate Judiciary Committee that it would withhold from the committee over 100,000 pages (that is, over a quarter) of Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh's papers from the period when he had served George W. Bush in the White House counsel's office, even though President Bush's attorney had authorized the release of those papers. The records and legal histories of federal judicial nominees are routinely scrutinized by the committee in advance of the nominees' confirmation hearings. Kavanaugh's history was uniquely complex, in part because he had served special prosecutor Kenneth Starr in the investigation of President Clinton that had led to the president's impeachment, and in part because he had served a former president in a political role relative to major (and controversial) policy decisions. His White House records could powerfully inform the committee as to his views and performance relative to a future role as a Supreme Court justice. Critics thus found the White House's withholding of the Kavanaugh papers to violate both the prerogatives of Congress under the Constitution and the integrity of the Supreme Court, and to possibly even represent a cover-up.<sup>87</sup>	2, 9
9-1-18	As McCain rested. As Senator John McCain was being poignantly eulogized by his family and by presidents Obama and George W. Bush at the National Cathedral, Mr. Trump – who had been disinvited from the memorial events – played golf at one of his clubs. He also angrily tweeted a threat to destroy the North American Free Trade Agreement; plus a false conspiracy theory alleging that the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance (FISA) Court had wrongfully failed to hold hearings when granting and extending warrants to monitor his Russophile campaign aide Carter Page. Several news analysts wrote that Mr. Trump could not bear sharing the nation's attention with the deceased McCain. Instead, at what could have been (and for many was) a moment of great patriotism and national unity, Mr. Trump chose to play, to sulk, to preen, to bash allies, to help Russia, and to divide.<sup>88</sup>	7, 9, 10, 11, 12

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 19 – October 16, 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

9-3-18	Gagging Mueller's report. Mr. Trump's attorney Rudy Giuliani told The New Yorker that whenever special prosecutor Robert Mueller would finally issue his report to Mueller's superior, Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, he (Giuliani) was "sure" that Mr. Trump's legal team would attempt to block publication of at least parts of it on grounds of executive privilege.<sup>1</sup> Mueller's report was expected to address any collusion with the Russian election meddling, and any obstruction of the special prosecutor's investigation, that Mueller may find the Trump campaign or Mr. Trump to have engaged in. Giuliani's statement confirmed the longstanding fears of pro-democracy advocates that Mr. Trump would attempt to block the document's publication. Although Mueller had reportedly agreed with Mr. Trump's lawyers that they could assert executive privilege, CSD believes that withholding the full report from Congress and the American people would itself amount to one of the gravest acts of obstruction imaginable; and that even threats at this time to withhold the report – by influencing public opinion and thus the will of Congress to take preventive or (in the future) remedial action – likewise would amount to obstruction.	9, 12

9-3-18	Interference in more criminal cases. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump faulted his attorney general Jeff Sessions for having recently allowed the Justice Department to indict two Republican congressmen, Duncan Hunter and Chris Collins, on corruption charges. Hunter and Collins had been Mr. Trump's earliest supporters in Congress and had been seeking reelection (Hunter still was, while Collins had dropped out due to the charges). That is, Mr. Trump suggested that, for the political benefit of himself and his party, the government should not have pursued the corruption cases against the congressmen.<sup>2</sup> (Mr. Trump had previously, through his public comments, sought to influence the trial and sentencing on tax and bank fraud charges of his former campaign manager Paul Manafort, as reported by CSD on August 1, August 17 and August 21.)	2
9-4-18	Shutting down NBC? Mr. Trump suggested by Twitter that the FCC lift the broadcast license of his antagonist NBC, for its having allegedly failed to have sufficiently called out a particular, prominent Hollywood sex offender. No legal or constitutional rationale was offered for lifting the license; and in fact the FCC issues licenses only to stations, not networks.<sup>3</sup>	1
9-4-18 +	Woodward, Anonymous, and Yale. Woodward's book. As reported on September 4 by multiple news outlets, legendary Watergate journalist Bob Woodward's forthcoming book on the Trump White House would shortly reveal in explicit detail how Mr. Trump's senior-most aides – chief of staff John Kelly, chief economic advisor Gary Cohn, staff secretary Rob Porter, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, Defense Secretary James Mattis, personal attorney John Dowd, and others – while serving Mr. Trump had feared that his instability, ignorance and mendacity could undermine his presidency and the country's national security. Woodward said that they even hid dangerous draft documents from him so that he couldn't sign them. Woodward also described Mr. Trump as regularly and wretchedly berating his senior staff, including in a reference to Attorney General Jeff Sessions as "mentally retarded" and a "dumb southerner" (suggesting that Mr. Trump disdained some of his base as well as his aides). [Continued below.]	1, 7, 10, 13

9-4-18 +	[Continued.] Like many other mainstream journalists before, Woodward described the White House as unprecedentedly dysfunctional. He called the staff's efforts to rein in Mr. Trump "an administrative coup d'état."<sup>4</sup> That evening and the following morning, Mr. Trump tweeted that Woodward was lying. In one tweet he also suggested that libel laws (that is, Supreme Court precedent) should be changed so that he could sue Woodward for defamation. (He had made similar suggestions in the past, relative to other journalism he disfavored.) His tweets defied a recent recording of him speaking with Woodward about the forthcoming book, in which he had told Woodward that he had always considered him to be fair. (Woodward had won two Pulitzer prizes for The Washington Post.) Anonymous's op-ed. On September 5, in an utterly remarkable move, The New York Times published an anonymous column by a currently serving, high ranking government official (whom The Times' editorial board knew) in which the official confirmed that multiple top officials had long been seeking to protect American security and democracy from Mr. Trump, and that they at one point had considered invoking the 25th Amendment of the Constitution to oust him on grounds of infirmity. The writer – a professed conservative Republican – called Mr. Trump not only "amoral," but "impetuous, adversarial, petty and ineffective" and "half-baked, ill-informed and occasionally reckless." Backed by a cohort of sheriffs at a photo op that signaled his commitment to law and order, Mr. Trump reacted to the news of the column as posed to him by a reporter. He boasted about his popularity and accomplishments; said inaccurately that "nobody has ever done in less than a two-year period what we've done"; said that despite the anonymous column no one could beat him in 2020; said that The Times and CNN would be out of business before he left the presidency; and condemned the anonymous author as "gutless" and The Times and CNN as "phony media outlets." At his request, the sheriffs applauded. His press secretary later demanded that the unnamed "coward" resign and that The Times apologize.<sup>5</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13
-----------------	--	----------------------------

9-4-18 +	[Continued.] Later, by Twitter, Mr. Trump suggested that the op-ed amounted to "treason." He then tweeted that the "Failing New York Times" may have made up the story; but that if it hadn't, for national security purposes it must turn over the identity of the writer. (On October 11, Mr. Trump would again say that there was a "very good chance" that The Times had fabricated the column.<sup>6</sup>) That demand stood in bald defiance of the newspaper's constitutional rights, and as a demagogic yet hollow rhetorical gesture (as opposed to him bringing a legal action against The Times – which would have failed). No breach of law on the part of either the writer or The Times was apparent, and in fact possibly hundreds of White House officials over the decades had leaked to the press their discontent with the then president.<sup>7</sup> As for the "national security" rationale, Mr. Trump had before invoked it, controversially, to support many of his recent orders,<sup>8</sup> in a manner characteristic of dictators. On September 7, Mr. Trump called on the attorney general to track down the author on national security grounds – but obviously, in reality, to find and punish a political enemy.<sup>9</sup> As for the author of the anonymous op-ed, not only his/her identity but also his/her motives drew broad speculation from the press. Had he/she acted out of patriotism, conservative partisanship, or self-interest? Was he/she brave or cowardly in having remained anonymous? Observers on both the left and the right objected to the anonymity. But the only things certain were that the White House was frantically trying to identify the author for punishment, and that everyone there was denying being the culprit and terrified of everyone else.<sup>10</sup> Also on September 7, Mr. Trump falsely said of the episode, "We have a really well-run, smooth-running White House. It's a well-oiled machine. It is running beautifully." He also said that, contrary to the column, he was very smart: because he could captivate "the biggest crowds in the history of politics" for over an hour without notes.<sup>11</sup> A Yale psychiatrist. In yet another confirmation of the questions around Mr. Trump's stability, on September 6, a Yale University psychiatrist told Salon.com that two of Mr. Trump's staffers had called her the previous October to discuss their concerns that he was "unraveling."<sup>12</sup>	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13
-----------------	---	----------------------------

9-4-18 +	Of Kavanaugh: Outlawing protests? Securing the Court? On September 4, Mr. Trump suggested to a conservative news site that protesting be outlawed. His comment appeared to have been sparked by protests that day against his Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh at Kavanaugh's confirmation hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee.<sup>13</sup> Previously as well Mr. Trump had suggested that protesters be jailed.<sup>14</sup> The Kavanaugh protesters included both those from the grass roots, and (at their seats on the panel) Democratic senators who objected to the hearing going forward without a full and timely release of records from Kavanaugh's previous service in the office of the White House Counsel under President George W. Bush.<sup>15</sup> Their charges (as reported by CSD on July 9 and August 31) were that Kavanaugh seemed the most partisan nominee in the Court's recent history, as well as one of the strongest advocates of presidential immunity from legal process, both of which things the missing records could help establish. The Court's constitutional mandate is to be deliberative, non-political. For CSD, the question of partisanship was now particularly acute in view of the possibility (if not the probability) that the Court – including Mr. Trump's nominee Kavanaugh – would be called upon to rule on elements of Mr. Trump's anti-democratic behavior, and/or on congressional procedures in examining that behavior.<sup>16</sup> The next day, Kavanaugh dodged senators' questions as to whether, as Mr. Trump had previously suggested, the president could pardon himself or ignore criminal subpoenas, or whether Kavanaugh would recuse himself on such matters.<sup>17</sup> In recent decades court nominees routinely had declined to answer substantive legal questions, for fear of being rejected by the Senate. Still, the unanswered questions hovered over the proceedings.	2, 3
9-5-18	Against Nike. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump taunted the Nike sports apparel company for featuring Colin Kaepernick, the NFL's first player to have taken a knee in protest of police brutality and racial injustice in that ongoing controversy. In his tweet, he claimed that the businesses of both Nike and the NFL were doing poorly, in an apparent effort to undermine them, as he had done previously relative to other businesses that he believed had crossed him.	6, 9

9-6-18	The price of golf. TMZ.com reported that cumulative golf cart rentals for Mr. Trump during his presidency at taxpayer expense totaled over $300,000, and that his golf club outings altogether had cost taxpayers approximately $77 million.<sup>18</sup> Mr. Trump had spent a quarter of his days in office at his golf clubs.<sup>19</sup>	11
9-6-18	My friend Kim (the hacker). Almost contemporaneously with the Justice Department's release of a criminal complaint exposing North Korea for hacking American companies and stealing hundreds of millions of dollars from global financial institutions, Mr. Trump, responded to a flattering statement from that country's dictator by tweeting: "Kim Jong Un of North Korea proclaims 'unwavering faith in President Trump.' Thank you to Chairman Kim. We will get it done together!"<sup>20</sup>	11, 12
9-6-18	In Montana. At a rally for a congressional candidate in Billings, Montana, before a crowd that The New York Times described as "jubilant and rowdy," Mr. Trump bashed the news media and suggested that the administration insider's recent anonymous New York Times op-ed describing his incompetence was "gutless" and amounted to "treason." He compared his speeches to Lincoln's Gettysburg address, stating that the "fake news" had also criticized the latter in Lincoln's day.<sup>21</sup> He said, "The economy is booming like never before in our history"<sup>22</sup>— a claim that he had frequently made and that The Washington Post now documented as spurious.<sup>23</sup> He falsely said that Democrats wanted to "destroy your Social Security" by diverting its funds to Hispanic migrants.<sup>24</sup> He falsely said that he had started building the Mexican border wall, that Democrats wanted to confiscate privately owned guns, that former White House physician Ronnie Jackson had been untruthfully maligned, and that CNN was "almost out of business." He boasted about having defeated the "Bush Dynasty" and "crooked Hillary Clinton"; also about how he and North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un were fond of one another; also about presidents and prime ministers calling him "sir"; also that "they all" praised him for his infamous press conference with Russian President Vladimir Putin in Helsinki in July (most observers had found it nauseating). He said, "We will win. We will win. We always win. We always win." Also: "Like you, you, me, we're smart, we're really smart." Also: "We're going to have no crime."<sup>25</sup>  [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12

9-6-18	[Continued.] The Washington Post subsequently reported that 68% of Mr. Trump's claims in the speech were inaccurate. <sup>26</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12
9-7-18	The beat goes on. The Washington Post reported that its Fact Checker database of Mr. Trump's false or misleading claims since his inauguration had reached 4,713 on September 3. The rate had accelerated in the previous three months to 15 per day – possibly as Mr. Trump had felt increasing pressure from the special prosecutor's probe. <sup>27</sup>	7
9-9-18	Like a dog with a bone. As the NFL's regular season began, Mr. Trump tweeted his objection to black players' on-field protests against racial injustice, linking those protests to what he said were low viewer ratings. He thus resumed his attacks on both the athletes and the league, a private business enterprise that he appeared to wish to injure both for political purposes and for vengeance.	6, 9, 11
9-10-18	And ICC to the dogs. National security advisor John Bolton, confirming his career-long hostility to the International Criminal Court, declared open war on that body, calling it illegitimate and ineffective, and threatening to prosecute criminally any court personnel – including eminent judges and human rights experts – who may charge citizens of the U.S. or its allies with a crime. (The U.S. had never joined the court, for fear of our soldiers and leaders being charged for war crimes during international interventions; but it had mostly supported the court's mission and operations.) <sup>28</sup> Tin-pot dictators who could be subject to the court's justice rejoiced at Bolton's words. <sup>29</sup>	17 (14)
9-10-18, 9-19-18	Sessions vs. immigration judges. On September 10, Attorney General Jeff Sessions told immigration judges that asylum seekers' lawyers were shifty and that the judges shouldn't be sympathetic to asylum seekers. Immigration judges work for the attorney general at the Justice Department (not within the federal court system). Sessions's advice offended the judges' union, which promptly protested. Union spokespeople said that Sessions had effectively asked the judges to ignore due process and to serve as prosecutors rather than as independent adjudicators. <sup>30</sup> [Continued below.]	17 (2, 6)

9-10-18, 9-19-18	[Continued below.] On September 19, Sessions generally forbade the judges from dismissing deportation cases (that is, effectively, parking them in suspense for want of judicial resources) without the permission of the prosecutor (the Department of Homeland Security) – a further affront to judicial independence.<sup>31</sup>	17 (2, 6)
9-10-18	Swagger. The State Department announced that it would brand itself going forward as the "Department of Swagger." Denuded of staffing, the agency would now define itself to the world by its arrogance rather than its expertise or effectiveness.<sup>32</sup> Its stock in trade is diplomacy; but CSD puzzled at the stunningly tone-deaf branding campaign.	17 (10, 11)
9-10-18 +	A mistake? Impossible. On September 10, Mr. Trump, boasting about the growth of the economy under his presidency, tweeted: "The GDP Rate (4.2%) is higher than the Unemployment Rate (3.9%) for the first time in over 100 years!" His chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers promptly and publicly said that the figure of 100 should have been 10; and multiple analysts wrote that the growth in GDP had exceeded the unemployment rate many times in recent decades, as demonstrated by empirical evidence. But Mr. Trump seemed unwilling to correct his error. Although he had deleted many of his tweets over the course of his presidency, this tweet would remain online through at least October 16, when CSD last checked. Anyone can make a mistake. But CSD feels confirmed in its sense that the more convincingly one of Mr. Trump's factual claims has been contested, the more likely he has been to stand by it.	7, 11
9-11-18	Unwelcome in Ireland, also. The Irish government said that Mr. Trump's planned trip to Ireland for November had been canceled, due to the prospect of widespread popular protests over his climate policies, international relations and treatment of immigrants, women and minorities. The protests would follow those that had greeted him in the UK in July. Presidents Kennedy, Obama and Clinton had been greeted in Ireland warmly.<sup>33</sup> CSD is not aware of an American president having been so reviled by the people of an overseas, democratic ally.	Disgusting American allies, and humiliating the U.S. overseas

9-11-18	Treason, and Louis the King. A Washington Post columnist recounted (with citations) the many people and groups that Mr. Trump had accused of treason: all Democrats, all journalists, several Republicans, President Obama, and some members of his own administration (Attorney General Jeff Sessions, former chief economic advisor Gary Cohen, FBI analyst Peter Strzock, and the anonymous New York Times op-ed writer). The columnist called out "Trump's Louis XIV-style belief that he is the state [L'état, c'est moi], that his self-interest and the national interest are the same. News he doesn't like is 'fake.' Actions he doesn't like are 'illegal.' People he doesn't like are 'traitors.'"<sup>34</sup> In the U.S., treason is a capital offense, punishable by death.<sup>35</sup>	9, 11
9-11-18 +	Puerto Rico: an alternative reality. In proclaiming strong governmental preparedness for incoming Hurricane Florence in the Carolinas on September 11, Mr. Trump responded to a reporter's questions about lessons learned from Hurricane Maria that had hit Puerto Rico in 2017. He said that the federal response to Maria had been "tremendous," and an "incredible, unsung success." He said nothing about the loss of nearly 3,000 Puerto Rican lives, much of which had occurred weeks and months after the storm had passed and thus may have been preventable by a stronger governmental relief effort. He also said nothing about lessons learned from Maria. In the coming days he continued to blame the slow recovery from Maria on Puerto Ricans themselves (for their weak infrastructure immediately prior to the hurricane's landfall), on San Juan's "incompetent" mayor, and on the logistical difficulties of providing relief to an island.<sup>36</sup> Commentators had widely acknowledged the infrastructure and logistical difficulties there, and their views had been mixed as to the extent to which the loss of lives was due to the negligence of the Trump administration. But what outraged critics at this point was that Mr. Trump still neither acknowledged nor showed empathy for the massive loss of Puerto Rican lives, nor admitted even the slightest possibility that the federal government could have done more to save them. Rather, his sole message on the subject was the claim of his own perfect performance. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 11

9-11-18 +	[ Continued. ] Following the outcry over his remarks, in a series of tweets on September 13, Mr. Trump denied – contrary to scientific studies – that 3,000 Puerto Ricans had died as a result of the storm. He blamed the report of the high death toll on a conspiracy against him on the part of Democrats. <sup>37</sup> More outrage ensued. <sup>38</sup> All of this occurred while Hurricane Florence continued churning toward the Carolinas.	6, 7, 8, 11
9-12-18	Sabotaging refugee admissions. Reuters reported that the Trump administration – in addition to drastically reducing the annual cap on refugee admissions – had been concertededly blocking the processing of admissible refugees' applications, imposing harsher vetting requirements (especially for Muslims), starving the vetting process of staff, ignoring pro-refugee analyses, and even removing pro-refugee analysts from their jobs. The report indicated that the administration's measures represented a radical deviation from the decades-long procedures of preceding administrations, both Democratic and Republican. <sup>39</sup>	6, 8, 14
9-12-18	Campaign rent. The Wall Street Journal reported that in the 2018 election cycle, Mr. Trump's 2020 re-election campaign had spent nearly $1,000,000 to rent his properties for events. <sup>40</sup>	11, 15
9-13-18	The untruths surge. The Washington Post's "Fact Checker" reported that Mr. Trump had now made over 5,000 false or misleading statements since his inauguration. On September 7, in a single day, he had made 125 such statements within 120 minutes, a new one-day high. He had averaged 8.3 false or misleading claims per day, but 32 per day within the most recent nine days. On almost 140 occasions he had said that Russian election meddling hadn't occurred. <sup>41</sup>	7, 12
9-14-18	Manafort pleads. Mr. Trump's one-time campaign manager Paul Manafort – already convicted of eight counts of tax and bank fraud – pleaded guilty to money laundering, bank fraud and illegal foreign lobbying charges in a separate action brought by special prosecutor Robert Mueller that had specifically targeted Manafort's income from his pro-Russian Ukrainian clients. That brought to five the number of Trump campaign figures who had pleaded guilty to crimes since the election.	17 (12, and a wide variety of crimes)

9-15-18	The hunt. Mr. Trump again tweeted that special prosecutor Robert Mueller's "Witch Hunt" was "illegal."	7, 9, 11, 12
9-17-18	Refugees slashed again. Amid the worst global refugee crisis since World War II (over 68,000,000 displaced, over 25,000,000 of them externally<sup>42</sup>), Mr. Trump cut the cap on refugee admissions for Fiscal Year 2019 to 30,000, after having cut it from 110,000 under President Obama to 45,000 in 2018. The 45,000 figure had already been the lowest in the history of the current refugee program. The new 30,000 figure suggested that Mr. Trump wanted the U.S. eventually to admit almost no refugees at all, as some of his advisors had reportedly urged – contrary to international law, humanitarian principles, the net positive contributions of refugees to America's economy, and America's strategic international standing. Both the State Department and the Defense Department had objected to the new cut.<sup>43</sup> Congressional leaders from both parties objected as well, on humanitarian, strategic, and procedural grounds.<sup>44</sup> Notwithstanding the 45,000 cap for FY 2018, the Trump administration had slowed the processing of refugee admissions to the extent that only 20,000 to 25,000 were expected to actually have been admitted to the U.S. in that year. CSD expects that actual admissions in FY 2019 may be even lower.	6, 9, 13, 14
9-17-18 +	Releasing classified data. On September 17, Mr. Trump ordered the Justice Department to declassify certain data relating to the ongoing investigation of Russian election meddling – specifically, portions of a Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) warrant application regarding his former campaign adviser Carter Page. Mr. Trump's act was extraordinary for several reasons: he sought to declassify selectively and in a manner clearly intended to discredit the investigators and thus to help himself politically; federal investigatory data had rarely if ever been declassified in the midst of an investigation; the investigation pertained to the declassifier (Mr. Trump) himself; and the Justice Department believed that the declassification would jeopardize the integrity of its investigation and threaten national security. The selective declassification mirrored the earlier selective release of Russian investigatory data by Mr. Trump's allies in Congress, and Mr. Trump's own casual disclosure of national security secrets on several occasions, all as described above in this document. [Continued below.]	9, 11, 12

9-17-18 +	[Continued.] As ever, there were competing narratives. Mr. Trump's congressional allies had been urging the selective release of the Russia data on grounds of "transparency," even though Mr. Trump and they had commonly sought to hide Russia information, plus such other information as Mr. Trump's income tax returns and (more recently) Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh's records from his days in the White House Counsel's office. For their part, critics (including CSD) considered the new declassification decision to amount to a further attempt by Mr. Trump to sway popular opinion against the Russia investigation, and thus to obstruct it.<sup>45</sup> The next day, Mr. Trump told a reporter from The Hill that exposing "corruption" at the Justice Department (such as in the FISA warrant matter) would amount to one of his "crowning achievements" in office.<sup>46</sup> On September 19, he railed to The Hill about his attorney general Jeff Sessions, in his continuing effort to humiliate Sessions into resigning – so that, by all appearances, he (Mr. Trump) could dismantle the Justice Department's Russia investigation.<sup>47</sup> Under pressure from American allies and the Justice Department over security concerns, on September 21 Mr. Trump delayed the implementation of his order that the investigatory documents be released.<sup>48</sup>	9, 11, 12
9-18-18	The good economy. The Washington Post's Fact Checker detailed, with extensive data, how Mr. Trump's oft-repeated claim to have single-handedly strengthened the U.S. economy – as opposed to having at least in part ridden a trend that had begun under President Obama – was false.<sup>49</sup>	7
9-18-18 +	Kavanaugh's innocence. As the Senate Judiciary Committee neared approval of Mr. Trump's nominee for the Supreme Court, Brett Kavanaugh, a woman alleged that Kavanaugh, while drunk, had sexually assaulted her when they were both teenagers and Kavanaugh was a popular, hard-drinking athlete at an elite Washington-area prep school. The nomination's progress had already been controversial – and problematic for CSD – as we had reported on July 9, August 31 and September 4. But the new charges roiled the Senate and the nation as much as anything so far in Mr. Trump's presidency, with Republicans defending Kavanaugh and Democrats objecting. Below is an extensive synopsis of the events. [Continued below.]	2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 17 (2, ??)

9-18-18 +	[Continued.] The background. Polarization between Democrats and Republicans had been increasing for decades, escalating notoriously during President Obama's tenure and then further in Mr. Trump's. A year from the end of his term, President Obama had nominated Merrick Garland – a centrist federal circuit court judge – to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court; but the Senate's Republican leadership had refused to grant the candidate a hearing, on grounds that President Obama was a lame duck and thus should not staff the Court. Promptly upon Mr. Trump's election – blessed with a Senate controlled by his own party – he had filled that vacancy with a conservative justice and without much impediment or controversy. But when a second vacancy arose for Mr. Trump to fill, he was in the position to tilt the Court toward a solid conservative majority. Democrats, still aggrieved by the loss of the "Merrick Garland" seat, vowed to resist Mr. Trump's nomination of Kavanaugh, an arch-conservative. Through what came to be seen as tactical missteps, or even (their critics said) bad faith, the Democrats introduced Kavanaugh's first sexual accuser to the committee only at the end of his confirmation hearings. The first accuser, and the defense. Kavanaugh flatly denied the first accuser's allegations. The White House undertook to micro-manage Kavanaugh's defense,<sup>50</sup> and on September 18, 19 and 20, including at a Las Vegas rally, Mr. Trump glowingly defended him against her charges. Knowing nothing about her, and before she had testified, how he had come to his conclusion was unknown; but it was consistent with his having defended many of his supporters and allies (as well as himself) – but not his opponents – against charges of assaulting women.<sup>51</sup> Mr. Trump meanwhile blamed the timing of the allegations on a conspiracy by Democrats, and he recommended against an investigation by the FBI despite the accuser's request.<sup>52</sup> The attack. At last, on September 20 and 21, Mr. Trump did the expected: he denigrated the accuser's credibility – on grounds that she had not promptly reported the incident to the police (although most sexual assault victims, such as his own, don't).<sup>53</sup> That move was reportedly undertaken not impulsively but strategically, on the advice of Mr. Trump's aides.<sup>54</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 17 (2, 7?)

9-18-18 +	[Continued.] The second accuser, and the second attack. On September 24, shortly after a second woman had accused Kavanaugh of alcohol-fueled sexual misbehavior while they both were students at Yale and Kavanaugh had denied the same, Mr. Trump – again without evidence – said the accusation was "totally political"; he tweeted about the "False Accusations"; and the White House broadly attacked her claims.<sup>55</sup> Mr. Trump continued his attacks on the second woman's credibility on September 25 and 26, at one point stating that because many women had (in his opinion) falsely accused him (Mr. Trump) of sexual harassment and assault, all powerful men should be protected against such claims.<sup>56</sup> The third accuser, and the continuing push-back. By then a third female accuser from Kavanaugh's allegedly angry-drunk prep school days had stepped forward, and again Kavanaugh denied everything. All three accusers had now alleged that Kavanaugh had acted in concert with, and as a form of shared hilarity with, other abusive young men. At least two of the three accusers (the first and second) seemed to be viewed as credible, even by Senate Republicans. But Mr. Trump remained adamant in his defense of Kavanaugh; he did not express empathy or credibility relative to victims of sexual abuse generally; and CSD does not recall him having ever done so – unless the alleged attackers were black or brown (as when he had twice labeled Mexican migrants "rapists" and had railed against the Central Park Five both before and after their innocence was proven<sup>57</sup>). The directive. But the highest drama was yet to come. Reacting to a bland interview that Kavanaugh had given to Fox News to shore up his image, Mr. Trump reportedly urged Kavanaugh to defend himself more aggressively at his next hearing session<sup>58</sup> – when Kavanaugh would confront the charges of the first accuser. What shortly followed that directive was extraordinary. The cross-testimony; breaking judicial bounds. On September 27, the first accuser testified before the committee. Among many other riveting statements, she said that her most indelible recollection of the assault was of Kavanaugh and his fellow attacker laughing uproariously at her expense while perpetrating it. 9-18-18 +	[Continued.] In rebuttal, Kavanaugh raged. In so doing he leapt to comply with Mr. Trump's demand for aggression: evading questions,<sup>59</sup> belligerently and tearfully proclaiming his victimhood, implausibly denying certain youthful behavior,<sup>60</sup> mischaracterizing the statements of witnesses,<sup>61</sup> furiously alleging a Democratic, "left-wing" and Clintonian conspiracy against him,<sup>62</sup> maintaining that he was entitled to the appointment because he had worked hard at good schools and beyond to get there, and vowing revenge.<sup>63</sup> He addressed some of his Democratic questioners insultingly: snidely asking Senator Klobuchar if she had ever blacked out from drinking; similarly asking Senator Whitehouse what he liked to drink; and shouting over Senator Feinstein. The Washington Post wrote: "Kavanaugh's statements marked an extraordinary moment in the history of Supreme Court confirmation battles. Not only was a potential justice on the highest court raging against one of the country's two major political parties, but he was also leveling a serious allegation - that the process itself was being manipulated."<sup>64</sup> A distinguished law professor who had come to know almost all of the Supreme Court justices in the last 50 years later wrote that Kavanaugh's testimony was "truly shocking, immature, irrational and uncontrolled" – which he believed distinguished Kavanaugh from all of the other justices, and rendered him unfit for the job.<sup>65</sup> A Nobel economist and fellow Yale alumnus saw the root of Kavanaugh's diatribes as lying in his sense of entitlement.<sup>66</sup> Both CNN television commentators and The Post speculated that in Kavanaugh's tirades he had been playing to "an audience of one" – Mr. Trump – so that Mr. Trump wouldn't withdraw his nomination. The Post said that the strategy had worked: that after the hearing Mr. Trump and the White House were ebullient.<sup>67</sup> This, and their lavish praise of Kavanaugh's performance, occurred despite Kavanaugh having frequently wept during the session, and Mr. Trump's more typical mockery of and distaste for men who weep. Mr. Trump's praise of Kavanaugh was also inconsistent with his known dislike for men who drink to excess;<sup>68</sup> and inconsistent with his frequently voiced disdain (except as to his own appointees) for the coastal academic, political and social "elites" of which Kavanaugh was a part.<sup>69</sup> (Kavanaugh was a personal protégé of President George W. Bush, his father was a wealthy lobbyist, and his grandfather had also gone to Yale.<sup>70</sup>) [Continued below.]	2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 17 (2, 7?)

9-18-18 +	[Continued.] To CSD's knowledge, rarely if ever in recent decades had a sitting president so directly orchestrated and politicized a Supreme Court nominee's confirmation hearing – and thus, effectively, the demeanor of the Court itself. And never had a nominee during recent Supreme Court confirmation hearings appeared so intemperate and non-judicial, or had so ratified and re-committed to a professional history as a partisan (and even hyper-partisan) political operative.* Notably, as numerous commentators had observed, it was this partisan history, and likely a continuing partisan identity, for which Mr. Trump may have chosen to nominate Kavanaugh from the outset – as well as having possibly chosen Kavanaugh for his expansive view of executive privilege which, if he were seated on the Court, could help render Mr. Trump immune from legal process. The glimmer of reason and fairness. On September 28, following a groundswell of popular outrage against the wildly political and indecorous conduct of the committee hearings, a lone Republican senator, Jeff Flake, forced the committee to recommend to Mr. Trump that the FBI be directed to conduct a limited, one-week, "supplemental" investigation of the various sex-related claims against Kavanaugh – as Democratic senators had been insisting upon. Politically, Mr. Trump had no choice but to accede to the committee's reluctant request. The glimmer fades. But by the next morning, the White House had forbidden the FBI from interviewing Kavanaugh's third accuser, asking his prep school and Yale classmates about his drinking habits, or otherwise conducting a full investigation. It relented slightly only after pressure from Democrats and moderate Republicans had been applied.<sup>71</sup> Still, in the end, the FBI would interview only ten witnesses<sup>72</sup> and turn away dozens who came forward.<sup>73</sup> It would not interview Kavanaugh or two of his three accusers.<sup>74</sup> Although such "supplemental" investigations for judicial nominations are routinely truncated, under the current exceptional circumstances the White House's orders<sup>75</sup> to the FBI seemed like nothing less than a cover-up. 9-18-18 +	[Continued.] More misogyny – and now demagoguery. On October 1, Mr. Trump told reporters that he questioned the claims of Kavanaugh's accusers.<sup>76</sup> On October 2, he told reporters that "women are doing great," while "it's a very scary time for young men in America" due to false accusations of sexual misconduct.<sup>77</sup> Later in the day, at a campaign rally in Mississippi, he viciously mocked and brutally misstated the testimony of Kavanaugh's first accuser in an effort to discredit her, insinuating that she was part of an "evil" cabal of Democrats; and he said that men, not their accusers, were the true victims in sexual assault cases. His supporters at the rally cheered and laughed<sup>78</sup> – as the accuser had alleged Kavanaugh had laughed during his attack on her. The contrary view. On October 3, the National Council of Churches (representing 38 denominations and over 40,000,000 people, including Presbyterians, Lutherans, Baptists, Episcopalians, Methodists, and several Orthodox denominations) called for the withdrawal of Kavanaugh's nomination. It cited his bias, disrespect for Democratic senators, and lack of judicial temperament. It also cited his "misstatements" and "outright falsehoods."<sup>79</sup> By October 4, over 1,700 law professors had signed a petition objecting to Kavanaugh's appointment, also for his want of judicial temperament.<sup>80</sup> Kavanaugh's own court (the federal circuit court for the District of Columbia) forwarded multiple complaints on similar grounds to the Supreme Court's Chief Justice John Roberts – an unheard-of reproach.<sup>81</sup> The FBI report. On October 3, the FBI released its report to the White House, and on October 4, the White House released it confidentially to the Senate. Kavanaugh's supporters in the Senate called the report "thorough," and they were jubilant that no corroborating allegations of sexual misconduct had been cited. His opponents called it a "sham," in that the FBI had not followed countless leads that had appeared. [Continued below.]	2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 17 (2, 7?)

9-18-18 +	[Continued.] The defense mushrooms. Also on October 4, Kavanaugh pleaded his case by way of an op-ed in a broad circulation newspaper (The Wall Street Journal)<sup>82</sup> – a move that critics said was unprecedentedly political for a Supreme Court nominee. On October 5, Mr. Trump tweeted that those who had been protesting against Kavanaugh were carrying signs "paid for by Soros" – the American pro-democracy philanthropist who in recent years had become the whipping boy of anti-democratic, anti-Semitic forces in Central and Eastern Europe, and more recently in the U.S. The Russian government also rallied to defend Kavanaugh and dismissed his accusers as representing "malignant feminism."<sup>83</sup> The vote. On October 5, enough senators committed to vote in Kavanaugh's favor that his confirmation was assured. On October 6, the Senate confirmed Kavanaugh, on a razor-thin and almost purely party-line vote. Some analysts wrote that Mr. Trump's public mockery of the first accuser<sup>84</sup> and Kavanaugh's rage-filled testimony<sup>85</sup> – each in defiance of democratic norms – may have saved the nomination. The limitations on the scope of the FBI's supplemental investigation, as directed by the White House,<sup>86</sup> may have also been a factor. The aftermath. Later on October 6, Mr. Trump (as often before) called for libel laws that would (unconstitutionally) enable Kavanaugh and himself to sue their accusers.<sup>87</sup> That evening, at a campaign rally in Kansas – during which, as was typical, he whipped his audience into a rage – Mr. Trump not only rejoiced in the Kavanaugh victory, but characterized the "radical" Democrats' opposition to it, and their peaceful protests, as the work of an "angry mob." He roared: "They threw away and threw aside every notion of fairness, of justice, of decency, and of due process – nobody's seen anything like it."<sup>88</sup> According to The Washington Post, "Kavanaugh's name elicited thunderous applause, with supporters cheering, fist-pumping into the sky and holding up babies in celebration."<sup>89</sup> Perhaps never before had a Supreme Court confirmation so energized a crowd, or a Supreme Court justice (for some) become so lionized. On October 8, Mr. Trump told reporters that the accusations against Kavanaugh were a "hoax set up by the Democrats. .... All made up. It was fabricated."<sup>90</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 17 (2, 7?)

9-18-18 +	[Continued.] At a splashy, televised White House ceremony that evening celebrating Kavanaugh's confirmation – normally such confirmations are low-key and apolitical – Mr. Trump apologized on behalf of the American people to Kavanaugh and his family for their "suffering." (The majority of Americans, according to polls, had not wanted Kavanaugh to be seated.) He also charged Kavanaugh's accusers with "lies and deception." And he said that Kavanaugh had been "proven innocent" of the accusers' charges – despite the purely partisan nature of the Senate proceedings, the inapplicability of criminal trial procedures there, and the quashing of the FBI's fact-finding.<sup>91</sup> Both Mr. Trump and Kavanaugh lauded the Republican senators who had supported the confirmation.<sup>92</sup> Although many leading Republicans attended,<sup>93</sup> it was not apparent to CSD whether any Democrats were invited or came. On October 9, both in tweeting and in speaking to reporters, Mr. Trump repeated and made more explicit his previous false claims that the thousands of anti-Kavanaugh protestors in Washington had been hired by dark forces.<sup>94</sup> That evening, at a campaign rally in Iowa, he accused Democratic Senator Diane Feinstein (without evidence) of corrupting the Kavanaugh proceedings, evincing from the crowd a chant, "Lock her up!" He also excited the crowd by chastising the "angry left-wing mob" that had protested Kavanaugh's appointment.<sup>95</sup> In summary. The contest over Kavanaugh's confirmation was unseemly and deeply damaging to our governmental institutions. Observers universally blamed Senate Republicans, Senate Democrats, or both for the disaster. But this document is limited to reporting on the anti-democratic behavior of Mr. Trump and his administration, however much others may at times provoke or facilitate that behavior. CSD sees Mr. Trump as having personally exhibited the following anti-democratic behaviors in the Kavanaugh affair: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Publicly discrediting and mocking particular women who had credibly accused a man of sexual assault.</li> <li>2. In public statements, generically favoring accused men over their female accusers.</li> <li>3. Falsely characterizing the Senate witnesses' testimony and the outcome of the proceedings. 9-18-18 +	[Continued.] 4. Doing all of that demagogically – especially by alleging the victimization of Kavanaugh, of himself, and of men generally – for personal political gain. 5. Constricting the FBI's fact-finding relative to the sexual accusations: a cover-up. 6. Withholding documents pertinent to Kavanaugh's political history in serving a previous administration: another cover-up. 7. Defiling the Supreme Court and undercutting its legitimacy by directing a nominee's (injudicious and inflammatory) testimony and by orchestrating a ruthless campaign that placed party strategy over judicial and constitutional principle. 8. Calling peaceful protesters a threatening "mob," and spinning a false conspiracy theory that they were paid by nefarious forces (compare to his anti-Obama "birtherism"). 9. Likely having nominated Kavanaugh at least in part for Kavanaugh's expansive view of presidential and executive privilege, which could shield Mr. Trump and his administration from legal process. 10. Continuing, even after the confirmation, to deliberately frighten and anger his base and to divide the American people. <hr/> *The nominee. This document is about not only Mr. Trump but also his nominees and appointees – those whom he has empowered or sought to empower in their respective offices. Accordingly, CSD feels compelled to summarize the questions that had arisen at the eleventh hour as to Kavanaugh's fitness to serve on the Court: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Whether in his youth he had committed predatory and humiliating sexual offenses against women in the company of, and for sport with, other males;</li> <li>• Whether he had repeatedly lied to the Senate Judiciary Committee (a breathtaking list of his alleged falsehoods appears at the link at this endnote<sup>96</sup>); and</li> <li>• Whether he was so partisan and vengeful that, going forward, he could not be expected to fairly decide cases involving litigants with whom he ideologically disagreed. 9-18-18 +	[Continued.] At the September 27 hearing, we did not see Kavanaugh's supporters within the committee as having addressed any of those issues; rather, as having principally argued that the timing of the sexual allegations raised by Democrats had been devious and unfair (ignoring their own previous, extraordinary boycott of Merrick Garland's nomination). Instead the task of discrediting the accuser fell to the seasoned, outside prosecutor whom Kavanaugh's supporters had hired to interrogate her at the hearing and who on September 30 faithfully issued the discrediting report.<sup>97</sup> Critics, including both prosecutors and defense attorneys, found the report questionable, if not unprofessional.<sup>98</sup> As to whether Kavanaugh's denial of the sexual allegations issuing from his adolescent years was truthful, we of course don't know more than anyone else does – notwithstanding his other patent evasions and likely untruths during and before his testimony. (Despite having earlier opined from the circuit court bench that polygraph tests are useful, and despite his first accuser having sought and passed a polygraph test, Kavanaugh had not done the same.<sup>99</sup>) As to his character that otherwise emerged in the course of the nomination process, he appeared, even when young, to have been a man of considerable kindness and rectitude – within his tribe, and when sober. But we grew concerned about several facially disparate items in his adult years that we came to believe might in truth be related to one another: first, his role as a back-room, puritanical and furious zealot in investigating President Clinton's sexual infractions;<sup>100</sup> and second, his having accumulated up to $200,000 in credit card debt – much of it spent on buying baseball tickets for himself and his Washington friends, and in all leading him to apparent balance sheet insolvency.<sup>101</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 17 (2, 7?)

9-18-18 +	[Continued.] Zealotry, sexual hypocrisy and improvidence aren't crimes. But to our knowledge they aren't characteristic of recent or current Supreme Court Justices either. Most disturbing, however, were the commonalities that we discerned: Kavanaugh's tendency toward an unsettling mix of obsequiousness and pack-like behavior, which together had been capable of resulting in injury, intentional or otherwise. His rashness and rage at the hearing were likewise consistent with how his accusers and many of his classmates had characterized his youth. We found it disturbing that such characteristics could be represented on the Supreme Court – the country's ultimate protector of the law – where (at least to public appearance) temperance, dignity and independence had for decades, if not centuries, been the norm. In particular, we became and remain profoundly concerned, based on what we saw of Kavanaugh and the circumstances of his confirmation, that his allegiance to Mr. Trump could transcend his allegiance to the Constitution and the law.	2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 17 (2, 7?)

9-18-18, 9-19-18	Hatch Act, anyone? On September 18, Politico reported that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo would shortly speak before an election-oriented gathering of conservative activists on the topic of international religious freedom. Previous secretaries of state had addressed gatherings sponsored by advocacy groups relative to international affairs; but seemingly not groups with such a broadly partisan domestic agenda, especially during election season.<sup>102</sup> CSD is concerned that Pompeo's address may have violated the Hatch Act, which forbids most government officials from aiding in election campaigns. On September 19, Politico reported that budget director and acting Consumer Financial Protection Bureau director Mick Mulvaney had met behind closed doors with Republican donors and campaign officials in September, also in possible violation of the Hatch Act.<sup>103</sup> Other Trump Cabinet members had previously appeared to violate the Hatch Act as well, with impunity, as reported earlier in this Chronology.	17 (campaign law violations)

9-20-18	In Nevada. At a campaign rally in Las Vegas, Nevada, Mr. Trump engaged in his customary campaign rhetoric – including by hounding the "fake news" and Democrats – as the excited crowd chanted "Build that wall!" and "Lock her [Hillary Clinton] up!". He repeatedly mocked reporters for "crying." He boasted of his electoral college victory (still!), his penchant generally for "winning," and his adeptness in quickly building structures (here, the Mexican wall). Of Democrats, he said: "The new platform of the Democrat Party is radical socialism and open borders." Also: "And I won't allow the United States of America to become the next Venezuela. That's what they want to do." Also: "Today's Democrat Party is held hostage by left-wing haters, angry mobs, socialist fanatics, 'deep-state' bureaucrats, and their fake news allies." Additional inaccuracies abounded.<sup>104</sup> He also continued his ceaseless mockery of the late Senator John McCain, now posthumously.<sup>105</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12

9-21-18	In Missouri. At a campaign rally for a senatorial candidate in Springfield, Missouri, Mr. Trump – as had been his custom during the mid-term campaign season although he was not on the ballot – spoke mostly of himself. He boasted of his purges to date within the Justice Department, while vowing to rid the department of its "lingering stench." He also boasted falsely of having created "the greatest economy in history." He described his own 2016 election victory as "one of the greatest nights in the history of our country." He falsely warned that Democrats would fling open the Mexican border, provide social benefits to undocumented migrants, and destroy Medicare in the process. He also continued his defense of his Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh relative to recent sexual assault allegations, arguing (as he had said of some of his other appointees, and reflecting his orientation to televised showmanship) that Kavanaugh was from "central casting" – without explaining how surface appeal translated into wisdom, fairness or integrity. Without apparent irony, some signs raised by the audience read, "Drain the Swamp."<sup>106</sup>	6, 7, 9, 11, 12
9-25-18 +	Laughter at the UN. Boasting of his accomplishments in a speech before the United Nations General Assembly in New York on September 25, Mr. Trump said, "In less than two years, my administration has accomplished more than almost any administration in the history of our country." Many in the audience audibly laughed at him. He responded, "I didn't expect that reaction, but that's OK." Why Mr. Trump was surprised at being disdained by an international body that he had so relentlessly vilified for so long puzzled CSD. In fact he shortly reiterated his antagonistic worldview to the assembly: "We will never surrender America's sovereignty to an unelected, unaccountable, global bureaucracy. America is governed by Americans. We reject the ideology of globalism and we embrace the doctrine of patriotism." Also: "The United States will not be taken advantage of any longer .... America will never apologize for protecting its citizens." [Continued below.]	7, 11, 12, 14, Making America Great (Again?)

9-25-18 +	[Continued.] More specifically, he denounced the International Criminal Court, the Iran nuclear agreement, the World Trade Organization, and the UN's Human Rights Council – all institutions from which he had either withdrawn or distanced the U.S. He also threatened to withdraw the U.S. from UN peacekeeping efforts. He said that immigrants commit crimes and should stay home; also that the U.S. would not participate in the new UN compact on global migration.<sup>107</sup> In addition, as at other multinational meetings, he had arrived late for his speech, forcing the world organization to alter its schedule.<sup>108</sup> The laughter was widely reported. One report also noted that this was the first General Assembly speech by an American president that was not interrupted by applause.<sup>109</sup> Several reports referred to this 2014 tweet by Mr. Trump, in which he had swiped at President Obama: "We need a President who isn't a laughing stock to the entire World. We need a truly great leader, a genius at strategy and winning. Respect!"<sup>110</sup> Another writer posted multiple Trump tweets from over the years in which he had claimed that the world had been laughing at the U.S. and that he would fix that.<sup>111</sup> The German delegation then laughed at him for claiming that Germany was growing dependent on Russian energy.<sup>112</sup> Mr. Trump's presentation was otherwise mottled with light and darkness. He boasted about the performance of the American stock market and other economic indicators.<sup>113</sup> He praised North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un, as well as a handful of countries that he considered to be friendly. But he railed against Iran, China, Syria, Cuba, OPEC, Venezuela, World Trade Organization members, recipients of US aid, and NATO allies.<sup>114</sup> By one account, in half an hour he had disparaged countries representing 90% of the world's population<sup>115</sup> (but not Russia). Unlike other American presidents, Mr. Trump offered no affirmative vision of humankind other than unchecked nationalism. The only sense of fairness he articulated was what was fair to the U.S. In the words of one commentator, "President Trump made it as clear as he ever has how he views America's place and purpose in the world. As a bully, not a beacon. His speech lashed out at all the familiar foes, but Trump's main target was the international order itself."<sup>116</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 11, 12, 14, Making America Great (Again?)
------------------	--	---

9-25-18 +	[Continued.] The Washington Post's Fact Checker identified 14 false or misleading claims in his address.<sup>117</sup> The New York Times (as everyone knows, a more conservative newspaper) identified only five.<sup>118</sup> Within hours after the address, the laughter episode was noted in Philadelphia by several speakers at a sizable University of Pennsylvania symposium titled "Competing Visions of the Global Order." A leading British journalist quipped that the laughter was heard "all the way down the Hudson River." Indeed, Mr. Trump's rejection of the 70-year post-World War II order stood as a major motif of the event, and speakers voiced their concerns. One of them, former United Nations ambassador and former national security adviser Susan Rice, withheld comment on the laughter; but she cautioned that Mr. Trump's radical breach of the decades-old order could cause other countries to never fully trust the U.S. going forward, even after Mr. Trump's term ends; that to their minds, "If it happens once, it can happen again." Later that day, Mr. Trump told reporters that he had in fact intended to elicit laughter from the General Assembly, and that he thought his UN speech had gone "very well."<sup>119</sup> Subsequently, at the Security Council, he charged without evidence that China had been interfering with American elections; gave Russia an unmerited pass both on that topic and on the use of chemical and biological weaponry; exaggerated his progress on North Korean denuclearization; and threatened to crush Iran. These too were the observations of Rice, now writing in The New York Times. She concluded: "Mr. Trump's trip to the United Nations this week set America on an ever more dangerous course in which we are courting conflict with powerful countries that don't seek it and ignoring persistent threats from committed adversaries with the will and capacity to do us grave harm. In these troubling times, up is down, black is white and America stands alone, reckless and ridiculed, among the nations of the world."<sup>120</sup>	7, 11, 12, 14, Making America Great (Again?)

9-29-18	In West Virginia (falling in love). At a rally for a senatorial candidate in Wheeling, West Virginia, Mr. Trump said twice that he and the murderous North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un "fell in love" during the course of their meeting in June. But Mr. Trump's administration had recently conceded, contrary to his own previous predictions, that Kim had not moved at all toward the denuclearization that Kim had promised; that denuclearization could take years; and that Kim was continuing to attempt to interfere with American elections.<sup>121</sup> To CSD, it was as though Presidents Roosevelt or Truman had said that they had fallen in love with Soviet Premier Joseph Stalin, and had continued to trust him, even while Stalin was plotting against the U.S. and butchering his own people. Mr. Trump also lashed out at some of his usual enemies, deprecating the media as "the enemy of the people" and Democratic Senator Elizabeth Warren as "Pocahontas" (a term to which Native American groups had previously objected).<sup>122</sup> In addition, to thunderous applause, he called the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee "disgraceful political hacks" for having treated Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh with "shameless conduct" during the September 27 confirmation hearing regarding allegations of his youthful sexual offenses;<sup>123</sup> and he lauded Kavanaugh for his "brilliant and really incredible character, quality and courage" (a characterization that CSD is inclined to label as questionable, if not a grotesque falsehood). But for the most part, CSD had found that Mr. Trump's demagogic rallies were no longer being reported upon in detail by the mainstream media, or even by Fox News,<sup>124</sup> since they had become so commonplace, repetitive, and – regrettably – normalized.	1, 6, 7, 12
10-1-18	Little confidence. A new Pew Research Center global poll revealed that while most of the populations tested would prefer the U.S. rather than China to lead the world, few – particularly among America's allies – had confidence in Mr. Trump's ability to lead.<sup>125</sup>	10, 13, 14

10-2-18	In Mississippi (savaging the accuser). At a campaign rally in Southaven, Mississippi, Mr. Trump boasted about his electoral success and prospects. He called the Democratic Party the "party of crime" – on the same day that The New York Times revealed that he had made much of his fortune through what appeared to have been tax fraud on the part of himself and his family. He hinted that he could physically knock out former Vice President Joe Biden. He said that Mississippi's Republican Governor Phil Bryant (who was in attendance) was from "central casting." He falsely said that construction of his proposed Mexican border wall had begun. He evinced from the crowd the chant, "Lock her [Hillary Clinton] up!" Relative to the recent, appalling Senate Judiciary Committee hearing for the approval of his Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, and intensely advocating on Kavanaugh's behalf, Mr. Trump falsely stated that Kavanaugh was at the top of his class at Yale College and Yale Law School. He ruthlessly disparaged and mocked the testimony of the woman who had accused Kavanaugh of attempted rape, while depicting men (explicitly including himself) as vulnerable to false allegations of sexual abuse. He unfairly thrashed and grossly exaggerated Democratic committee member Senator Richard Blumenthal's misstatements about his Vietnam-era service in the Marines, while ignoring his own infinitely more plenteous and injurious falsehoods and his having avoided military service altogether. And he suggested that Democratic committee member Senator Patrick Leahy was a drunk.<sup>126</sup>	2, 6, 7, 9, 11
10-3-18	Presidential alert. At 2:18 p.m. EDT, most cell phones in the country received a loud, buzzing message titled "Presidential Alert" – a test of FEMA's new emergency warning system. Private plaintiffs had brought a lawsuit to restrain the test on grounds of privacy, free speech, and unconstitutional seizures of property (that is, of cell phones).<sup>127</sup> CSD does not have a view on those issues. But we are disturbed that a perfunctory message on the part of a federal administrative agency had been and would continue to be cast as "presidential," thus suggesting to the country that it was Mr. Trump personally (as opposed to the agency) that was protecting us – like the paternalistic, all-powerful, all-seeing, and always audible Big Brother in the novel 1984.	9, 11

10-3-18	Judge blocks expulsions. A federal judge in California temporarily blocked the Trump administration's termination of Temporary Protected Status (TPS) for several hundred thousand migrants who had fled upheaval and natural disaster in Haiti, Sudan, Nicaragua and El Salvador. The judge said that the motivation for the intended expulsions could be racial, based on Mr. Trump's many racist and anti-immigrant comments in other matters.<sup>128</sup>	6
10-3-18 +	Still "fixing" the census. On October 3, the Trump administration urged the Supreme Court to prevent the deposition of Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross and a ranking Justice Department official in a case challenging the inclusion of a question about respondents' citizenship in the 2020 decennial census. As reported by CSD on December 29, 2017 and March 26, 2018, critics had charged that including the question would be costly and scientifically unsound, and that it was motivated by a desire to suppress immigrant and minority participation – a claim that the depositions could corroborate.<sup>129</sup> Thus, despite the administration's recent cries for "transparency" when seeking to release classified documents to its own advantage (see CSD's entry of September 17 above), here the administration was still furiously excluding, stonewalling and dissembling relative to the census.<sup>130</sup> Ross too appeared to be dissembling. On October 11, the Justice Department filed court papers acknowledging that he "recalled" having discussed the citizenship question with anti-immigration ideologues Stephen Bannon and Kris Kobach, contrary to his earlier sworn statements to Congress.<sup>131</sup> (Compare to Ross, a brilliant investor, having previously "misunderstood" his investments relative to his ethics disclosure obligations: see CSD's entry of July 12.)	6, 8, 9, 17 (6, 7)
10-6-18	In Kansas. At a rally in Topeka, Kansas for gubernatorial candidate and leading immigration conspiracy theorist Chris Kobach, Mr. Trump exulted in the Senate's confirmation that morning of his Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, and he characterized the Democratic opposition to Kavanaugh as despicable. As before, he also railed against immigration; called Democrats "the party of crime" and "open borders"; implied that he could physically thrash former Vice President Joe Biden; and referred to Senator Elizabeth Warren as "Pocahontas." [Continued below.]	6, 9

10-6-18	[Continued.] Of Democrats generally, Mr. Trump said, "Just imagine the devastation they would cause if they ever obtain the power they so desperately want and crave. ... You don't hand matches to an arsonist and you don't give power to an angry left-wing mob – and that's what they've become. The Democrats have become too extreme and too dangerous to govern."<sup>132</sup>	6, 9
10-8-18	Selling weapons, like steaks. The Huffington Post documented how Mr. Trump had been trumpeting his success in sales of heavy American military equipment to other countries – much in the way he had previously trumpeted the success of his sales of condos, golf course memberships, steaks, ties, vodka and "dubious" real estate courses. Although the U.S. had been making such sales since the end of World War II, it had done so more quietly, seeking to avoid a morally distasteful reputation as an arms merchant; but Mr. Trump had shown no such reservations. HuffPost wrote that the new publicity sometimes caused chagrin on the part of the purchasers and anger toward the U.S. on the part of victimized populations (such as Yemeni civilians suffering from Saudi Arabian attacks using U.S. weapons).<sup>133</sup>	10
10-8-18	Melania in Africa. Upon his wife Melania's return from her goodwill trip to four African countries on October 8, Mr. Trump said, "The First Lady did a tremendous job representing our country in Africa – like no one has before."<sup>134</sup> CSD – several of whose members have spent time in Africa – takes exception. While Ms. Trump's whirlwind trip was stylish and harmless, we found it thin on substance and expressed insight. Countless presidents, members of Congress, diplomats, aid workers, Peace Corps volunteers, human rights organizations, artists, missionaries and business people, among others, had "represented" our country in Africa far more effectively. Mr. Trump was entitled to praise his wife. But his concern for and awareness of Africa still seemed to be nil.	6

10-9-18 +	Let it fry. Mr. Trump reacted with skepticism to the October 7 release of a major new United Nations report predicting catastrophic consequences of human-caused global warming within 20 years. Asked for comment by a reporter, he appeared to not yet have become familiar with the report's contents; but his initial response consisted of questioning its accuracy based on who had written it. According to The Huffington Post, "The data in the UN's new document is unlikely to sway Trump, who has vowed to pull the U.S. out of the Paris Agreement and has taken steps to dismantle every major policy designed to reduce the nation's carbon footprint."<sup>135</sup> On October 14, Mr. Trump's chief economic advisor Larry Kudlow, without apparent analysis, expressly questioned the report's findings.<sup>136</sup>	8, 17 (8)
10-9-18	In Iowa. At a campaign rally in Council Bluffs, Iowa, Mr. Trump adhered to his recurrent themes: boasting about his accomplishments, decrying Hispanic migration, labeling Democrats as socialists bent on turning the U.S. "into Venezuela," and insulting Democratic leaders such as Senators Diane Feinstein, Richard Blumenthal and Elizabeth Warren ("Pocahontas"). Since the recent imbroglio over Brett Kavanaugh's Supreme Court nomination hearings, he had come to thrashing Democrats for opposing the nominee; he had been calling Democrats "the party of crime" and an "angry left-wing mob"; and those new-found themes also appeared in Council Bluffs, to the audience's roaring approval. He also again called Democrats "too dangerous to govern." As to the "mob," the chants of "Lock her up!" that he evoked now targeted both Hillary Clinton and Feinstein (the latter for her role in the Kavanaugh hearings). In addition, Mr. Trump charged Democrats with practicing the "politics of anger, division and destruction."<sup>137</sup> For CSD, that accusation paralleled his long-standing, dizzying custom of derogating his critics by way of allegations that had first been leveled at him. (For example, he had called the press liars and had claimed that Hillary Clinton had colluded with Russia in election meddling.) The new slur was likely destined to further confound all reasoned discourse. The Washington Post wrote: "For a president who campaigned on and is governing with themes of grievance and fear, the portrait painted Tuesday night in Council Bluffs was especially dark."<sup>138</sup>	6, 9, 11

10-9-18	Haley gone. The U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, announced that she would resign effective January 2019. Speculation about her reasons for leaving were widespread and various: fatigue, intra-administration tensions, presidential ambitions, financial needs, and even a recent complaint by a watchdog organization that she and her husband had travelled frequently to her home state of South Carolina during her tenure at the expense of private donors.<sup>139</sup> Despite having argued for and implemented many of Mr. Trump's harsh, anti-multilateral initiatives at the U.N., she had on occasion shown more moderation and independence than some of his other appointees. In any case, she joined the long list of Mr. Trump's high-level aides who had not lasted.<sup>140</sup>	10
10-9-18 +	Pressing the Fed. Mr. Trump again – twice on October 9, as the stock market was falling – complained that the Federal Reserve Bank was raising interest rates too quickly in their effort to contain inflation, thus (he said) jeopardizing the country's economic growth; and he fortified his attacks in subsequent days. He went so far as to brand the Fed "crazy" and "out of control," at one point saying, "I think I know more about it [interest rate policy] than they [the Federal Reserve Board] do." He meanwhile falsely implied that he had the power to fire Jerome Powell, the Fed's chairman, over the latter's policies.<sup>141</sup> In fact Mr. Trump had been widely regarded by economists of all persuasions as knowing nothing about their discipline. Worse, his by now recurring jabs violated nearly all recent presidential precedent relative to the Fed's independence. They also were seen by observers as positioning him to take credit for economic and stock market growth while blaming others for any declines in the ordinary course.	9, 11
10-10-18	The white nationalists within. A Washington Post columnist identified ten Trump administration officials who had been exposed as having supported white nationalists. The column was prompted by new revelations that Andrew Wheeler, the acting head of the Environmental Protection Agency whom Mr. Trump had appointed to succeed disgraced EPA chief Scott Pruitt, had "liked" a racist depiction of President and Michele Obama (in addition to having supported various right-wing conspiracy theories online).<sup>142</sup>	17 (6)

10-10-18	In Pennsylvania. At a campaign rally for congressional candidates in Erie, Pennsylvania, Mr. Trump again warned of the "radical Democrat mob."<sup>143</sup> He said: "What the radical Democrats did to Brett Kavanaugh and his beautiful family is a national disgrace." He added that Democrats want to "impose socialism and take over and destroy American health care." Also: "Democrats want to abolish America's borders and allow drugs and gangs to pour into our country."<sup>144</sup> On another topic, he mocked the "MeToo" movement.<sup>145</sup> And with an unusual directness, but as ever without evidence, he accused Hillary Clinton of having colluded with Russia to affect the 2016 election, drawing chants of "Lock her up!"<sup>146</sup> CSD's members live in Pennsylvania. What with the rage, fear and falsehood that Mr. Trump unleashed in Erie, we could not recognize what had become of civic life in our heretofore moderate, sustaining and commonsense state.	6, 7, 9
10-10-18, 10-11-18	The great health care debate. On October 10, The Huffington Post reported that the Trump administration was planning to shorten the upcoming open enrollment period for the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") and shut down its online portal for maintenance during peak sign-on times, just as it had done the previous year<sup>147</sup> – presumably, once again, to sabotage the ACA for personal and political purposes without having created a viable alternative, and all at the expense of the health of Americans. On the same day, in an opinion column published by USA Today, Mr. Trump falsely claimed that Democrats wanted to gut Medicare and that he himself had championed the ACA's pre-existing conditions protections.<sup>148</sup> Remarkably, the newspaper's online version linked those statements to earlier news articles refuting them; and the following day it published a fact-check refuting them further.<sup>149</sup> Mr. Trump's USA Today column – an extended exercise in falsehood, fury and fear-mongering – also included a diatribe against Democrats' plans for "open border socialism." Echoing his rally speeches, Mr. Trump wrote: "The new Democrats are radical socialists who want to model America's economy after Venezuela."<sup>150</sup>	7, 9, 11

10-10-18 +	Saudi disappearance. On October 2, a Virginia-based Washington Post columnist and Saudi Arabian dissident, Jamal Khashoggi, had disappeared in the Saudi consulate in Istanbul and was believed to have been assassinated there. Both Republican and Democratic senators had expressed alarm.<sup>151</sup> But Mr. Trump's own response had been only tepid. He finally acknowledged on October 10 that a full investigation was required; but the next day he cited America's "excellent" relations with Saudi Arabia and flatly refused to halt his much boasted-of arms sales to that country, which he said secured American manufacturing jobs.<sup>152</sup> He repeated that refusal in a CBS interview released on October 13,<sup>153</sup> as bi-partisan concerns continued.<sup>154</sup> Some critics also pointed to Mr. Trump's indulgence of ongoing Saudi war atrocities in Yemen; the Saudi government's kidnapping of Lebanon's prime minister in 2017; its arrest, beating and confiscation of the assets of many prominent businessmen and royal family members; its blockade of Qatar; its recent imprisonment of hundreds of women's rights and other liberal activists within the country; and its diplomatic insults of Canada in August following Canada's protest of the imprisonments – all perpetrated by the country's young and authoritarian Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS).<sup>155</sup> Those critics connected Mr. Trump's indulgence to MBS's having lavishly feted Mr. Trump in Riyadh; the Saudis having conspicuously patronized the Trump International Hotel in Washington; the Saudi promise of arms purchases in exchange for Mr. Trump's promise not to interfere in Saudi human rights; and Mr. Trump's own disdain for the free press.<sup>156</sup> On October 15, speaking with reporters and without evidence, Mr. Trump speculated that the journalist may have been murdered by "rogue killers" rather than by the Saudi regime, prompting ridicule from critics.<sup>157</sup> In his remarks, he appeared to give great, even enthusiastic weight to the denials by the accused (here the Saudi government) – "The king firmly denied any knowledge of it!" – as he had previously done with other known or alleged malfeasors: Russian President Vladimir Putin, North Korean leader Kim Jong-un, campaign chairman Paul Manafort, Supreme Court nominee (now Justice) Brett Kavanaugh, and various other men accused of sexual wrongdoing. [Continued below.]	12

10-10-18 +	[Continued.] As of the date of this Addendum, the widespread, bipartisan concerns about Mr. Trump's response to the incident hadn't abated.<sup>158</sup> CSD, for its part, acknowledges that, for diplomatic and strategic reasons, countless human rights offenses on the part of both allies and enemies have gone unchallenged or only lightly challenged by American presidents. In addition, rightly or wrongly, Mr. Trump appears to have materially built his Middle East policy around deepening U.S.-Saudi ties. With any other president, we would appreciate the careful reserve that Mr. Trump now appeared to display. But given his apparent indifference to human rights violations within multiple authoritarian regimes (Russia, North Korea, the Philippines, Egypt, Saudi Arabia), we too found that reserve to be suspect. Saudi Arabia, of course, in addition to violating human rights internally, nurtures and globally exports the intolerant, misogynistic and often militant Wahhabi version of Sunni Islam that gave rise to Osama bin Laden and the September 11, 2001 attacks on the U.S. American leaders and diplomats have long struggled to reconcile the grave terrorist and jihadist peril that flows from the desert kingdom with their desire to cultivate relations with its leaders. To CSD's knowledge, Mr. Trump has indulged the Saudis on that subject as well.<sup>159</sup>	12
10-14-18	On Sixty Minutes. Responding to questions posed by Sixty Minutes host Lesley Stahl, Mr. Trump said: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• As to whether he had treated Brett Kavanaugh's primary accuser with respect after she had testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee in connection with his confirmation as a Supreme Court Justice: " I'm not gonna get into it because we won. I can see it."<sup>160</sup></li> </ul> The Washington Post's "Fact Checker" counted at least 14 false, misleading or exaggerated assertions, some of which Mr. Trump reversed when challenged by Stahl. The Post Wrote: "His rhetoric is fundamentally based on making statements that are not true, and he will be as deceptive as his audience will allow."<sup>161</sup>	1, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 14

10-14-18, 10-15-18	Squeezing protesters. Concerns over the National Park Service's proposal to tax and to limit the size of Washington, D.C. protests mounted, as the deadline for public comments neared. Critics viewed the measure as an effort to protect President Trump and his agenda from large protest crowds.<sup>162</sup>	3
10-15-18, 10-16-18	Nevertheless, she (Pocahontas) persisted. After Massachusetts Senator Elizabeth Warren produced DNA evidence confirming her claims to having a small level of Native American ancestry, on October 15 Mr. Trump responded, "So what? ... She'll make our country into Venezuela."<sup>163</sup> The next day he tweeted that the test was a fraud and that "Pocahontas" should apologize to the American people. CSD likewise doesn't care about Warren's lineage, if (as appears to have been the case) she was raised believing that she had Native American ancestors. It's true that Warren had overstated her Native American lineage 30 years ago as a law professor. But by Twitter, at rallies, and otherwise, Mr. Trump had long and relentlessly derided her as "Pocahontas" for what he had maintained was her false genetic claim. Although that derision had offended Native American groups, he had continued and escalated it. His refusal to now acknowledge or apologize for error and cruel insult would have been startling – but for his known incapacity to either acknowledge or apologize.	6, 9, 11
10-16-18	Winning: with radically early money. CNN reported that Mr. Trump's re-election campaign had raised $106,000,000 – 26 to 32 times what Presidents Obama and George W. Bush had raised two years into their presidencies. Mr. Trump's take was attributable to his having begun his re-election campaign the day he was sworn in rather than waiting two years – a radical break from tradition that both raided congressional candidates' funding opportunities and enhanced the unseemly optics of Mr. Trump's commitment to winning over governing.<sup>164</sup>	9, 11

10-16-18	Winning: with radical robocalls. A Republican member of CSD received a robocall from Mr. Trump's campaign that began, forebodingly, "THEY do not want ME to be elected." There was no positive or even substantive message, no vision or promise for the listener: only a dire warning that "the other" was persecuting Mr. Trump (and, implicitly, the listener). The message not only played to listeners' fears, but it demonized and delegitimized Mr. Trump's opponents, all in a manner not recalled by our listener in any other presidential election.	9

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 20 – November 25, 2018

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

10-15-18, 10-16-18, 10-23-18	Knocking the Fed. On October 15, former Federal Reserve Board chair Janet Yellen said that Mr. Trump's by then relentless harangues against the Fed's raising of interest rates, and his attempts to thwart the Fed's independence, were not only unusual and unwise but were "damaging to the Fed and to financial stability." Still that didn't silence him. The next evening he told Fox News, "The Fed is my biggest threat."<sup>1</sup> He likely meant that for the Fed to keep inflation at bay and thus to keep the economy stable by raising interest rates could reduce the growth of jobs and the stock market, thus injuring him politically. That is, he appeared (characteristically) to place his personal fortunes ahead of those of the country. On October 23 Mr. Trump reiterated to The Wall Street Journal that "the Fed is the biggest risk" and that he disapproved of the current path of interest rate raises. The Journal wrote: "Mr. Trump repeatedly described the economy in personal terms. He referred to economic gains during his time in office as 'my numbers,' saying, 'I have a hot economy going.' He described his push for growth as a competition with former President Obama's record, saying that increases in growth under his Democratic predecessor were skewed because of low interest rates."<sup>2</sup>	9, 10, 11

10-16-18	"Horseface" and "Tiny." Mr. Trump tweeted an epithet describing Stormy Daniels – the adult entertainment star, his former extra-marital girlfriend, and now his litigation antagonist: he called her "Horseface." News outlets were quick to recount the many other occasions on which he had disparaged prominent women for their looks or their bodily functions.<sup>3</sup> (Each episode had seemed scandalous at the time, but they all now blended into the new, seemingly acceptable normal.) Daniels promptly responded by calling Mr. Trump "Tiny" – referring to the size of his genitals, which she had described in greater detail in her recent book. The exchange reflected yet a further degradation of the office of the president, unthinkable only two years ago.	6, 10, 11; Making America Great (Again)
10-16-18	Telling the AP. In an interview with the Associated Press, Mr. Trump: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Opined, "I've had the most successful two years in the history of this country as a president." Also: "Who is the one, who's the one president that percentage-wise has done better than me? There's only one. George Washington — 100%. Nobody has gotten that yet."</li> <li>• Repeatedly accorded credibility to the Saudi Arabian regime's denial of having recently assassinated the American-based, dissident Saudi journalist Jamal Khashoggi in Istanbul – despite a vocal bipartisan uproar in the Senate expressing a contrary view. Also expressed his reluctance to give up arms sales to the Saudis. (See CSD's entry of October 10 +.)</li> <li>• Spoke of the special counsel's "witch hunt" against him relative to Russian meddling in the 2016 election, and protested accusations of complicity or misjudgment on the part of his son Donald, Jr.</li> <li>• Disparaged his attorney general Jeff Sessions yet again. "He should be ashamed" for having recused himself from the special counsel's investigation.</li> <li>• Claimed (falsely) to have produced "the greatest economy in the history of our country."</li> <li>• Claimed (falsely) that the Democrats enjoy a natural advantage in the Electoral College.</li> <li>• Claimed (exaggeratedly) to have defeated ISIS (which is still active in multiple countries).</li> <li>• Claimed (falsely) to have had "tremendous success in North Korea." [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	7, 8, 11, 12, 14; plus gratuitous cruelty

10-16-18	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Contradicted his former attorney Michael Cohen's sworn testimony that Cohen had paid hush money to adult entertainment star and former Trump girlfriend Stormy Daniels at Mr. Trump's direction. (No other explanation for the payment had appeared.)</li> <li>• Explained, relative to human-induced climate change, and possibly to his storied germaphobia, "I am truly an environmentalist. ... Everything I want and everything I have is clean. Clean is very important – water, air. But I also want jobs for our country." Also: "My uncle was a great professor at MIT for many years. ... I have a natural instinct for science, and I will say that you have scientists on both sides of the picture."</li> <li>• Expressed no regret for having separated migrant children from their families at the Mexican border.</li> <li>• Boasted incessantly, and acknowledged no errors or deficiencies.<sup>4</sup></li> </ul> The New York Times identified 11 false or misleading statements made by Mr. Trump in the interview.<sup>5</sup>	7, 8, 11, 12, 14; plus gratuitous cruelty
10-17-18, 10-22-18	Two more treaties succumb. On October 17, Mr. Trump announced that the U.S. would withdraw from the 144-year-old Universal Postal Union treaty, an arrangement that subsidizes inbound shipping fees from certain developing countries.<sup>6</sup> On October 22, he announced his withdrawal from the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty (the INF), an arms-limitation arrangement with Russia, while expressly threatening to engage in a new nuclear arms race with Russia and China.<sup>7</sup> Europeans were alarmed, as Russia threatened counter-measures.<sup>8</sup> CSD does not take a position on either development, nor do we hazard how to square the INF withdrawal with Mr. Trump's general Russophilia. But we note the pattern: the continued toll of the wrecking-ball that Mr. Trump has taken to international order and comity.	14
10-18-18	Race bating goes national. The Huffington Post listed 17 Democratic candidates of color across the country who had been disparaged on racial grounds during their current midterm campaigns.<sup>9</sup> CSD believes that the development is new since at least the 1960s, and is directly attributable to Mr. Trump's pointed racial divisiveness.	17 (6)

10-18-18	The FBI building: It's mine. Newly revealed emails confirmed that Mr. Trump had personally directed the General Services Administration to abandon long-standing plans to move the FBI's operations to a suburban location from their current spot across the street from the Trump International Hotel in Washington. Mr. Trump reportedly stood to lose money if the building were vacated then re-let to tenants that would compete with his hotel. Democrats, in a letter to the GSA, alleged that the GSA administrator – a Trump appointee – had misled Congress about the matter.<sup>10</sup> (CSD had first reported concerns on August 27.)	15, 17 (7)
10-18-18	In Montana: Punching reporters; slandering Soros. At a campaign rally in Missoula, Montana for Congressman Greg Gianforte, Mr. Trump warmly praised Gianforte for having body slammed and punched a peaceable reporter from The Guardian (a major British news publication) in an episode the previous year that had gained international attention and had earned Gianforte criminal punishment. Mr. Trump's comments drew loud cheers and laughter from the crowd. The praise came at a time when he was still temporizing over the recent torture-murder of the Washington-based Saudi reporter Jamal Khashoggi in Istanbul by Saudi agents, as congressional leaders of both parties had blanched at his delay. The British government rebuked Mr. Trump for his praise of Gianforte's assault. At the same rally, Mr. Trump chastised Democrats for having mistreated his nominees Brett Kavanaugh (Supreme Court Justice – confirmed) and Ronny Jackson (Veterans Administration Secretary – rejected), each of them "a fine, high-quality, handsome guy." He said that the accusations of Kavanaugh's sexual transgressions had been a "con job." He went so far as to repeat his canard that the anti-Kavanaugh protestors had been funded by George Soros – the pro-democracy philanthropist who had become the whipping boy of authoritarian Eastern European anti-Semites and who more recently had become the target of American anti-Semites as well.<sup>11</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11

10-18-18	[Continued.] The Soros slander was of particular significance. As a child, Soros had survived the Nazi occupation of Hungary and had gone on to succeed in the U.S. as an investor. An admirer of Ronald Reagan, he had become a hero to American pro-freedom advocates, both Democratic and Republican, for his ground-breaking, self-funded efforts to help bring democracy and "open societies" to Eastern European countries after the fall of communism in the 1990s. Among many other things, his foundations had distributed computers and photocopiers in the region and had encouraged civic engagement and free speech. More recently, Soros had taken up the cause of refugees in Europe, and he had become a major Democratic donor in the U.S.<sup>12</sup> But throughout, authoritarians and xenophobes in the region had despised him. In particular, Hungarian Prime Minister Victor Orban had long scapegoated him relative to refugee rights and other matters. For example, using age-old anti-Semitic tropes, in March 2018 Orban had said: "We are fighting an enemy that is different from us. Not open, but hiding. Not straightforward, but crafty. Not honest, but base. Does not believe in working but speculates with money. Does not have its own homeland but feels it owns the whole world."<sup>13</sup> During the last days of his own electoral campaign in 2016, Mr. Trump had run an advertisement depicting Soros and two other prominent Jewish Americans as financiers bent on secretly dominating America. And on October 5, 2018, he had first (falsely) charged Soros for funding the anti-Kavanaugh protests (see CSD's entry of September 18 +). Although Mr. Trump is not anti-Semitic, he now appeared to be fully joining Orban in the Soros project, for personal political gain. (Grave consequences would follow: see CSD's entries of October 24 + and 27, below.) At the Montana rally, Mr. Trump also said – without evidence – that the current caravan of frightened and destitute Central Americans headed for the American border included "hardened, bad people," and he suggested that Democrats were paying them to come here. [Continued below.]	1, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11
-----------------	---	--------------------------

10-18-18	[Continued.] More routinely, he bashed the "fake news," the "deep state" and Hillary Clinton; he called Senator Elizabeth Warren "Pocahontas"; he took sole credit for having "created" the currently strong economy; and he boasted about his 2016 electoral victory. He also repeated his now recurring refrains that the Democratic party is a "mob" and the "party of crime," and that he could trounce former Vice President Joe Biden in a fistfight.<sup>14</sup>	1, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11
10-19-18	In Arizona, racially. At a campaign rally in Mesa, Arizona, Mr. Trump falsely argued that Democrats wanted to give benefits to undocumented migrants to entice them to immigrate here and to vote for Democrats. He said, "That's why Democrats want to give illegal aliens free welfare, free health care and free education. Give them a driver's license, next thing you know, they'll want to buy them a car. Then they'll say the car's not good enough — how about a Rolls Royce?"<sup>15</sup>	6, 7, 9
10-19-18 +	Zinke grifting, again. On October 19, media reported that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had recently been investigated for causing the government to improperly pay for his wife's travel when accompanying him on official business. That brought to at least 18 the number of ethics investigations that Zinke had sustained in less than two years (many of them described above by CSD in this document.) The report came on the heels of revelations that Zinke had attempted to wrongfully hire a political crony as the department's inspector general – its ethics watchdog.<sup>16</sup> On October 30, media reported that the inspector general had referred one of the Zinke matters to the Justice Department for possible prosecution.<sup>17</sup> On November 9, The Washington Post reported that Zinke had taken off 66 personal days during his first year and a half in office.<sup>18</sup>	17 (11)
10-19-18 +	Dancing with MBS (over Khashoggi's remains). Still reluctant to condemn Saudi Arabia and its Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS) for having murdered and dismembered Jamal Khashoggi, the Washington Post columnist and Washington-based Saudi dissident, in Turkey on October 2 (see CSD's report of October 10), on October 19 Mr. Trump broke with his intelligence advisors and declared "credible" and a "good first step" the Saudi government's latest (improbable and inconsistent) white-washing of Khashoggi's death.<sup>19</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12

10-19-18 +	[Continued.] On October 20, he praised MBS as “a strong person” who “has very good control.” Emphasizing America's economic ties with Saudi Arabia, he said, “He’s seen as a person who can keep things under check. I mean that in a positive way.”<sup>20</sup> (He had meanwhile been wildly inflating the number of jobs that Saudi-American commerce stood to create.<sup>21</sup>) Some weeks later, as investigations progressed, disturbing developments began arising daily. On November 13, national security advisor John Bolton said that there was no evidence that MBS was culpable.<sup>22</sup> On November 15, the Saudis re-told the murder story yet differently (a third or fourth version), and still implausibly.<sup>23</sup> On November 16, the CIA revealed its conclusion that MBS had ordered Khashoggi's murder.<sup>24</sup> But Mr. Trump questioned that conclusion, and he called Saudi Arabia a “spectacular ally.”<sup>25</sup> On November 18, he said that MBS had repeatedly and personally denied to him any involvement, and that no one might ever know the truth about the murder.<sup>26</sup> On November 20, in a written statement filled with falsehoods and exclamation points, he smeared Khashoggi; repeated that the truth about his murder might never become known; and pledged – regardless of whether MBS were to be found culpable – to always stand by Saudi Arabia. His reasons: that country's arms purchases from and investments in the U.S. (which he continued to wildly inflate), its provision of cheap oil, and its hostility to Iran.<sup>27</sup> Later that day he denied to reporters his extensive personal business dealings with wealthy Saudis and the Saudi government – which he had once boasted about, and which had included their stays at the Trump International Hotel in Washington during his presidency.<sup>28</sup> Shock in Washington ensued. In a bi-partisan letter to Mr. Trump, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee demanded detail on MBS's involvement.<sup>29</sup> On November 21, Mr. Trump spat back, tweeting his thanks to Saudi Arabia for lowering oil prices and calling it “a big Tax Cut for America and the World.” On November 22, he falsely denied that the CIA had blamed MBS for the murder; he defended MBS; and he said that he would rather protect American jobs than challenge the Saudi prince.<sup>30</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12

10-19-18 +	[Continued.] CSD acknowledges that other presidents had declined to call out ruthless dictators for the sake of perceived American interests. But for Mr. Trump, that practice seemed habitual, ornery, pandering, beyond reckless, and deeply corrupt; also, as to MBS, a refusal to admit error;<sup>31</sup> a submission to having been feted by him in Riyadh; an ignorant and damaging proclamation to the world that America's ideals are for sale, or that our only ideal is money;<sup>32</sup> an open invitation to despots to trample human rights, kidnap dissidents overseas and murder journalists, particularly if they flatter an American president and patronize his business enterprises; a knee-capping of our intelligence agencies' morale and credibility – choosing to believe a deceitful murderer rather than them; and a resounding declaration that truth is irrelevant.	7, 10, 11, 12
10-20-18	In Nevada, racially. At a campaign rally in Elko, Nevada, Mr. Trump preposterously said that Californians were "rioting" to be able to escape sanctuary cities. He also said, "The Democrat party is openly inviting millions of illegal aliens to break our laws, violate our borders and overwhelm our nation. The Democrats want caravans. They like the caravans. A lot of people say, 'I wonder who started that caravan.'" He again said, without evidence, that the Central American caravan that was now nearing the U.S. was filled with criminals. And he again called California Congresswoman Maxine Waters (an African American) a "low-IQ individual."<sup>33</sup> Mr. Trump also said that Republicans would implement a "very major tax cut" for middle-income individuals before November – even though Congress would be in recess until then, and Republican congressional leaders were stumped at the announcement.<sup>34</sup> (A month later, even the beginnings of such legislative discussions had not appeared.) In addition, he prompted the audience to jeer the reporters at the event; and he said that if the media were on his side, his approval rating would be "100%."<sup>35</sup> CSD believes that that last statement could be true: that nominal 100% popular approval often attends authoritarian governments such as Mr. Trump would seemingly like to realize in the U.S.	1, 6, 7, 9

10-20-18	Denying a Democratic mandate? Mr. Trump tweeted: "All levels of government and Law Enforcement are watching carefully for VOTER FRAUD, including during EARLY VOTING." Mr. Trump had long claimed that Hillary Clinton had stolen the popular vote victory from him in 2016 by way of massive voter fraud, and he had attempted to prove that fraud by empowering an investigatory commission – which fell apart after operating obscurely and after ultimately finding no material fraud anywhere. With Mr. Trump's new tweet, CSD and others became concerned that he could deny the legitimacy of Democratic congressional victories in 2018 under a range of circumstances.<sup>36</sup> (In fact Mr. Trump would soon raise false allegations of Democratic voter fraud relative to the results of several Congressional races; see our entry of November 8+ below.)	4, 9
10-22-18	"I'm a nationalist." At a rally in Houston, Texas, Mr. Trump proclaimed unabashedly, "You know, they have a word – it's sort of became old-fashioned – it's called a nationalist. And I say, really, we're not supposed to use that word. You know what I am? I'm a nationalist, okay? I'm a nationalist. Nationalist. Nothing wrong. Use that word. Use that word." The statement could have been benign, possibly a synonym for "patriot," but for its facial association with the rabid white nationalism in the U.S. that had been rising under Mr. Trump's presidency (of which Mr. Trump was certainly aware) and the hyper-nationalism in Europe that had led to two world wars<sup>37</sup> (of which he may not have been). He did not walk back the statement despite the media firestorm that ensued.<sup>38</sup>	6, 9, 10
10-22-18, 10-25-18	National emergency at the border. On October 22, Mr. Trump tweeted (and later told reporters) without evidence that a Central American migrant caravan headed toward the U.S. border included "criminals and unknown Middle Easterners." He also tweeted that Democrats were to blame; that he would be cutting aid to three Central American countries as punishment; and that he had "alerted Border Patrol and Military that this is a National Emergency [sic]."<sup>39</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9

10-22-18, 10-25-18	[Continued.] The tweets appeared to be intended to arouse voters racially in advance of the upcoming midterm elections, as evidenced by Mr. Trump's exhortation within one of them: "Remember the midterms!" CSD believes that announcing a national emergency (whatever that may have meant) for racist and political purposes amounted to the height of demagoguery. Mr. Trump reiterated those themes that night at a rally in Houston, Texas. He accused Democrats of "encouraging millions of illegal aliens to break our laws, violate our borders and overwhelm our nation" and of having "launched an assault on the sovereignty of our country."<sup>40</sup> Indeed, as multiple news outlets reported, Mr. Trump's campaign messaging had been marked increasingly by non-stop falsehoods, racial xenophobia and other fear-mongering.<sup>41</sup> (The falsehoods pertained not only to Democrats' alleged complicity in illegal migration, but to the size of his rally crowds<sup>42</sup> and his purported support for requiring health insurance plans to cover pre-existing conditions.<sup>43</sup>) As for the caravan specifically, Mr. Trump had not participated in the ongoing, reasoned national discussion by both Democrats and Republicans about immigration or about limiting Central American migrations effectively and humanely.<sup>44</sup> He had only called for a border wall, foreign aid cuts, and the deployment of troops – all "solutions" decried by critics in both parties as brutish, incendiary and devoid of effectiveness; i.e., fantastical. On October 25, as the midterms neared, Mr. Trump doubled-down. He tweeted: "I am bringing out the military for this National Emergency." (This was bluster: by law neither the National Guard nor active duty troops may perform actual enforcement activities at the border.)	6, 7, 9
10-23-18	Politicizing veterans' judges. The Washington Post reported that the Trump administration had begun to select judges for the traditionally non-partisan Board of Veterans' Appeals – a body that rules on veterans' benefit claims – on the basis of party affiliation and general political ideology.<sup>45</sup>	2

10-23-18, 10-24-18	Scrambling. Several news reports characterized Mr. Trump's staff as having to desperately keep up with and cover for his seat-of-the-pants policy pronouncements. On October 23, The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's recent promises during midterm congressional campaigning that the Republican Congress was about to enact a middle class tax cut sent aides spinning in search of a credible plan. The Post wrote: "The mystery tax cut is only the latest instance of the federal government scrambling to reverse-engineer policies to meet Trump's sudden public promises — or to search for evidence buttressing his conspiracy theories and falsehoods." Other scramble-inducing examples cited by The Post: Mr. Trump's announcements of plans for a military parade, for a Space Force, for auto tariffs, and for a ban on transgenders in the military; also his claims that "unknown Middle Easterners" were part of a Central American migrant caravan headed for Texas, which baseless statement the White House was then forced to defend.<sup>46</sup> The following day, The Wall Street Journal and Politico reported that the Justice Department had given the Departments of Homeland Security and Health and Human Services no advance notice of, and that those two agencies had thus done no advance planning for, the "zero tolerance" policy on border crossings that had resulted in the separation of several thousand migrant Hispanic children from their families during the spring – a calamity that DHS and HHS then had had to scramble to un-do.<sup>47</sup>	10

10-24-18	Wide open communications. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's calls on unsecured cell phones that he had been warned by security officials not to use were being listened to by Russian and Chinese agents. (Mr. Trump denied using the phones.) The Times also reported that China had been seeking to spy on and influence Mr. Trump through several of his billionaire friends with whom he often spoke and whom China had identified through the cell phone hacking. The Times noted that Mr. Trump was using cell phones to bypass the White House switchboard so as to hide from senior aides his communications with friends and Fox News hosts; that Russian and Chinese leaders Vladimir Putin and Xi Ji Ping had avoided using cell phones, for security reasons; and that Mr. Trump had once lost one of his phones in a golf cart. The silver lining: Mr. Trump was not believed to have spilled many outright classified secrets, because he had not shown an interest in knowing any. The Times wrote: "The issue of secure communications is fraught for Mr. Trump. As a presidential candidate, he regularly attacked his Democratic opponent, Hillary Clinton, during the 2016 campaign for her use of an unsecured email server while she was secretary of state, and he basked in chants of 'lock her up' [for that security infraction] at his rallies."<sup>48</sup>	7, 10, 11

10-24-18 +	Pipe bombs. Pipe bombs were sent or delivered to former President Obama and his wife Michelle, Former President Bill Clinton, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, pro-democracy philanthropist George Soros, Congresswoman Maxine Waters, former CIA director John Brennan (care of CNN's New York studio), former Attorney General Eric Holder, and Congresswoman Debbie Wasserman Schultz – all of whom were Democrats, and all of whom Mr. Trump and many of his supporters had venomously attacked – some with increasing frequency. The bombs did not explode. And at a campaign rally in Mosinee, Wisconsin shortly afterward the news broke, Mr. Trump offered platitudes about conducting the country's political discourse in "peace and harmony." But he then (disharmoniously) blamed the media for the hostility and the divisiveness wracking the nation – while taking no responsibility himself. At the same rally he went on to evoke racial hostility against Central American migrants, as well as chants of "Lock her [Hillary Clinton] up!"<sup>49</sup> The following day, by way of Twitter, Mr. Trump again blamed the "Fake News" for the "Anger" that had led to the bomb scares. Also, similar packages were discovered as having been sent or delivered to additional Trump enemies: former Vice President Joe Biden and the actor and film maker Robert DeNiro.<sup>50</sup> On October 26, similar packages addressed to (Democratic) Senator Corey Booker, Senator Kamala Harris, activist Tom Steyer and former National Intelligence Director James Clapper (c/o CNN) were intercepted also.<sup>51</sup> A startling re-cap of Mr. Trump's many recent, wildly divisive, inaccurate, fear-mongering attacks on Democrats appeared in The Washington Post's "Fact-Checker" that day and can be viewed at the link at this endnote.<sup>52</sup> To CSD's knowledge, the mainstream media had never called for physical violence against or for the punishment of its political adversaries; but Mr. Trump consistently had. -------------------	---	--------------------

10-24-18 +	[Continued.] Disturbingly, numerous Trump supporters in multiple media venues (including Fox News, Mr. Trump's close collaborator) instantly speculated that Democrats had planted the bombs as "false flags" meant to undercut Mr. Trump – thus creating and closing an impenetrable loop of fury and unreason with yet another conspiracy theory.<sup>53</sup> On October 25, The New York Times attributed the growing dissemination of such conspiracy theories in part to Mr. Trump's own conduct as the "conspiracist-in-chief."<sup>54</sup> On October 26, Mr. Trump began a speech to an assemblage of supporters with a call for national unity in the face of the bomb threats, but he soon started railing against "globalists" (a white nationalist code word for Jews). When someone yelled "George Soros!", the crowd chanted, "Lock him up!" Mr. Trump then reprised, "Lock him up."<sup>55</sup> (Regarding the Soros trope generally, see CSD's entries of September 18+ and October 18 above. Regarding the grave, hate-motivated events that ensued, see our entry of October 27, below.) Later that day, a Trump zealot and conspiracy theorist<sup>56</sup> living in Florida was arrested on suspicion of having mailed the pipe bombs. He was characterized by acquaintances as emotionally troubled;<sup>57</sup> by another as virulently racist, anti-Semitic and homophobic.<sup>58</sup> (Three of his pipe bomb addressees were of Jewish descent, and six were black or brown.) The perpetrator had appeared in a video at a Trump rally, chanting with others in derogation of the press.<sup>59</sup> After the arrest, when reporters asked Mr. Trump whether he felt his divisive rhetoric had been at all to blame for the terroristic acts, he said, "There's no blame, there's no anything."<sup>60</sup>	1, 6, 9, 11
10-26-18	In North Carolina. At a campaign rally in Charlotte, North Carolina on the evening after the pipe-bomb mailer had been apprehended, Mr. Trump again called for national unity and a de-escalation of political rhetoric. But he promptly followed by warning that "the Democrat Party is openly encouraging millions of illegal aliens to break our laws, violate our borders, and bankrupt our country. . . . Democrats' extreme immigration policies will overwhelm your schools, your hospitals, and communities, and strain public resources to the breaking point."<sup>61</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9

10-26-18	[Continued.] He also castigated the media for criticizing him and for dividing the country, drawing from the crowd the chant "CNN sucks!" He called out his perennial targets House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, Senate Minority Leader "Cryin' Chuck Schumer," Congresswoman Maxine Waters, and "Crooked Hillary" Clinton (two of whom had received pipe bombs). And he evoked and savored the crowd's chant of "Lock her up!" after berating Clinton.<sup>62</sup> Some Nazi-like salutes appeared in a photo of the audience.<sup>63</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9
10-27-18 +	Pittsburgh massacre. A gunman killed 11 worshippers at a synagogue service in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The Anti-Defamation League said that it was "likely the deadliest attack on the Jewish community in the history of the United States." The gunman's declared motives were hatred for Jews and hatred for immigrants and refugees. He had connected the two in his social media posts: accusing Jews of orchestrating the "invasion" by a Central American migrant caravan that was bent on killing U.S. citizens.<sup>64*</sup> Mr. Trump is not anti-Semitic. But throughout his presidency, for purposes of political expediency, he had condoned, played to, and arguably encouraged those who are<sup>65</sup> – including, in recent weeks, by railing against "globalists" (often an anti-Semitic code word for rapacious Jews) and accusing the Jewish pro-democracy philanthropist George Soros of devious anti-American schemes (see our entries of September 18 +, October 18 and October 24 +, above). During 2017, Mr. Trump's first year in office, anti-Semitic incidents in the U.S. rose almost 60%, the largest single-year increase on record.<sup>66</sup> Racial, religious and other hate crimes in the aggregate rose 17%.<sup>67</sup> And as to the gunman's anti-immigrant animus generally and his rage over the Central American caravan specifically, Mr. Trump – intentionally and preeminently among his recent themes – had stoked that furor. Although the Pittsburgh shooter had acted on his own – and although Mr. Trump had not urged the massacre, wished it to occur, taken pleasure in or derived benefit from its having occurred, or in any way empowered the perpetrator – CSD believes that through presidential incitement Mr. Trump likely bore a material portion of the responsibility for the tragedy. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 17 (6)

10-27-18 +	[Continued.] In the immediate wake of the massacre, Mr. Trump strongly condemned it, and he condemned hatred in general. But contrary to custom under such circumstances, he continued his congressional campaigning that day, at events in Indianapolis, Indiana and Murphysville, Illinois. From the podium there he attacked or referred to some of his usual targets (Nancy Pelosi, Maxine Waters, Elizabeth Warren – that day all women, no Jews); and at his mention of Hillary Clinton he drew the usual chant from the crowd, "Lock her up!"<sup>68</sup> He did ask the audience in Illinois if it would be alright for him to "tone it down just a little bit" that evening, presumably in deference to the synagogue massacre; but the crowd resoundingly shouted "No!"<sup>69</sup> Several in the Illinois audience, subscribing to Mr. Trump's claim, also voiced to a reporter their conviction that Soros was behind the caravan.<sup>70</sup> In the days following the massacre, many observers wondered whether Mr. Trump was even capable of uniting the country in moments of trauma or crisis.<sup>71</sup> But a Washington Post columnist posited that Mr. Trump's presidential mandate was fundamentally and intentionally divisive: "His grip on power depends entirely on splitting the nation in two. Angry division — rooted in race, gender, immigration status, religion and ideology — allowed Trump to become president. Absent a politics of us-versus-them, Trumpism makes no sense at all."<sup>72</sup> A Wall Street Journal columnist reached a similar conclusion.<sup>73</sup> In that regard, when Mr. Trump visited Pittsburgh to express his condolences on October 30, local (non-Jewish) political leaders refused to meet him, and some 2000 residents of varying faiths assembled to protest<sup>74</sup> – a response to a presidential condolence event that was unprecedented in recent memory. But the next day he said that he had been "treated very nicely" in Pittsburgh, and that the "disgraceful" "Fake News" media had inflated the "small" size of the protests.<sup>75</sup> He repeated that allegation against the press at a rally in Fort Myers, Florida that evening.<sup>76</sup> Also on October 31, he again suggested to reporters that Soros was funding the caravan.<sup>77</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 17 (6)

10-27-18 +	[Continued.] * The perpetrator had specifically denounced HIAS, the Jewish refugee agency. HIAS, together with eight other national agencies – five of them Christian and thus likewise faith-based – resettles refugees of all beliefs from Asia, Africa, the Middle East and elsewhere in the U.S. for the State Department and otherwise advocates for immigrants. Several of CSD's members work closely with HIAS and one of the other eight national refugee agencies, in their own efforts at assisting refugees.	1, 7, 9, 17 (6)
10-28-18	Corruption round-up. A New York Times columnist re-capped episodes of the corrupt behavior of Mr. Trump and his top aides in the first two years of his presidency: taking money from U.S. taxpayers and from foreign and domestic flatterers at his various properties; using his own frequent visits to his properties to promote them; facilitating overseas business opportunities for his company through his presidential position; quashing the demolition and reconstruction of the FBI building in order to protect his own nearby hotel; rampant self-dealing on the part of cabinet members and son-in-law/senior advisor Jared Kushner; and so forth.<sup>78</sup> (Most or all of the episodes have appeared above in this Chronology as they arose. 10-29-18	Terrorism and the media. Mr. Trump tweeted: "There is great anger in our Country caused in part by inaccurate, and even fraudulent, reporting of the news. The Fake News Media, the true Enemy of the People, must stop the open &amp; obvious hostility &amp; report the news accurately &amp; fairly. That will do much to put out the flame of Anger and Outrage and we will then be able to bring all sides together in Peace and Harmony. Fake News Must End!" [Continued below.]	1, 7

10-29-18	[Continued.] The tweet issued only days after an unhinged Trump supporter had mailed a spate of pipe bombs to prominent Democratic figures, and then a gunman had massacred 11 Jewish congregants at a Pittsburgh synagogue; and the tweet appeared to be referring to those events. It is difficult for CSD to imagine how a president could be more baldly hypocritical; or how much more authoritarian Mr. Trump's presidency would be, and how much more deadly the outcomes of his vicious demagoguery would be, but for the accurate reporting of the mainstream media.	1, 7
10-29-18	Pence: hitting on all cylinders. At a campaign rally in Waterford, Michigan, Vice President Mike Pence warned of Democratic "mobs" and the approaching Central American caravan – both tropes that were by now standard fare for Mr. Trump and his supporters.<sup>81</sup> More remarkable was Pence's insult to the memory of the recent victims of the Pittsburgh synagogue massacre. Himself an Evangelical Christian, Pence called on a Messianic Jewish "rabbi" – as "a leader of the Jewish community" – to pray for the victims. Messianic Judaism is viewed by most of the American Jewish faithful as a Christian sect that attempts to convert Jews to Christianity – and thus as both heretical and threatening. The clergyman, garbed in Jewish religious attire, promoted Pence's designated electoral candidates, an act of questionable legality for a non-profit clergyman. But he also prayed for the Pittsburgh victims in theological terms that were so disturbing to Jewish ears that the event instantly gained national notoriety.<sup>82</sup> Of course the clergyman was free to express his faith when offered the opportunity. It was Pence who was tone-deaf, or worse.	17 (6, 7, 9)
10-29-18 +	The invasion. On October 29, as the Central American migrant caravan approached the U.S., Mr. Trump tweeted, without evidence:<sup>83</sup> "Many Gang Members and some very bad people are mixed into the Caravan heading to our Southern Border. Please go back, you will not be admitted into the United States unless you go through the legal process. This is an invasion of our Country and our Military is waiting for you!" [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9

10-29-18 +	[Continued.] As CSD previously observed, most or all of the "invaders" were hapless figures fleeing poverty and violence. Most were women, children and families. Few if any were likely carrying firearms. Many or most were expected to drop out of the caravan before it arrived in the U.S. Of those who arrived, most were expected to present themselves to U.S. authorities lawfully and request asylum. They would represent a fraction of a percentage of all migrants that year. And the 5,200 active duty troops that would now be stationed at the border, together with the 2,000 existing reservists – a total equal to those stationed in Iraq and Syria – could not by law engage directly in enforcement activities. Rather, critics, including within the Pentagon and among retired military leaders, said that the new deployment was a mere prop; a deviation from the custom of instead deploying the National Guard in such circumstances; an unnecessary burden on active duty troops and troop strength; and a waste of up to several hundred million dollars in taxpayer money for the sake of Mr. Trump's political gain in the upcoming midterm elections.<sup>84</sup> Mr. Trump also threatened to unilaterally issue executive orders that would bar Central Americans from seeking asylum in the U.S. altogether (illegal); direct the construction of a tent city at the border to house migrant families long term (also illegal); and ban birthright citizenship (unconstitutional).<sup>85</sup> He also falsely said that the U.S. is the only country that grants birthright citizenship; but in fact 33 do.<sup>86</sup> Even many Republicans objected to the birthright ban threat.<sup>87</sup> On October 31, Mr. Trump tweeted twice about the violent behavior of a second Central American migrant caravan that was heading north. In the second tweet he wrote: "Our military is being mobilized at the Southern Border. Many more troops coming. We will NOT let these Caravans, which are also made up of some very bad thugs and gang members, into the U.S. Our Border is sacred, must come in legally. TURN AROUND!" That day he tripled the number of active duty troops he said he was considering sending to the Mexican border, from 5,200 to 15,000 (the troop strength in Afghanistan); and he tripled his claimed figure of actual undocumented migrants here.<sup>88</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9

10-29-18 +	[Continued.] Also on October 31, Mr. Trump's campaign tweeted to his 55 million followers an incendiary video showing an undocumented migrant laughing about having killed two American police officers, plus a mob of unruly caravan participants. The video falsely alleged that Democrat administrations alone were responsible for the killer's having been present and at liberty in the U.S., and that Democrats were now helping Central Americans overrun the U.S. for violent purposes.<sup>89</sup> Neo-Nazi and other racist web sites exulted at the ad's publication.<sup>90</sup> A CNN commentator characterized the video as "the most racially charged national political ad in 30 years," and "the most extreme step yet in the most inflammatory closing argument of any campaign in recent memory."<sup>91</sup> CNN refused to run the ad; and on November 5 even Fox News (Mr. Trump's collaborative news outlet) pulled it.<sup>92</sup> The video advertisement appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>93</sup>	6, 7, 9
10-30-18	Praise for Bolsonaro. National Security Advisor John Bolton praised Brazil's new, radically nationalist, racist, sexist, homophobic, authoritarian and anti-environmental president Jair Bolsonaro as a "like-minded" partner.<sup>94</sup>	17 (6, 9, 12)
10-30-18	The stock market – and me. Mr. Trump tweeted that the stock market's recent pull-back owed to its fear of Democratic gains in the imminent congressional midterm elections – comparing Democrats' goals to those of the dictatorial, socialist and ruinous Venezuelan regime. Virtually all economists and market-watchers disagreed, attributing the market drop instead to peaking economic growth, slowing in global demand, weakening of corporate earnings, Mr. Trump's trade war with China, and Federal Reserve Bank rate increases (imposed precisely because of the economy's success).<sup>95</sup> Curiously, the next day he boasted of the stock market's sudden rise – which had occurred despite the continuing Democratic electoral threat.<sup>96</sup>	7, 9, 11
10-31-18	Letting them meddle. Politico reported that the White House had continued to refuse to lead or coordinate the competing and sometimes discordant efforts of multiple federal agencies in preventing foreign meddling in the upcoming midterm elections – now only a week away – and this despite nearly two years of awareness, warning, opportunity, and requests from senior aides.<sup>97</sup> CSD speculates that Mr. Trump did not want to know whether or how the Russians might still be interfering.	12, 13

11-1-18	Squeezing asylum seekers. In a speech at the White House that blazed with fear-mongering,<sup>98</sup> Mr. Trump announced two changes to long-established immigration policy in the U.S. First, asylum seekers – those seeking protection from persecution or abuse in their countries of origin – may not apply for asylum if they are apprehended after crossing the border irregularly rather than having applied for asylum when first entering the country at an official port of entry. But many of the current irregular crossings owed to inadequate processing facilities at ports of entry, according to the United Nations;<sup>99</sup> and the policy change breached international law, American statutes, and treaties to which the U.S. is a party. Second, Mr. Trump said that asylum seekers would now be detained indefinitely pending their deportation, contrary to a 2001 Supreme Court ruling limiting detention to 180 days absent special circumstances. In the same speech Mr. Trump hinted strongly that many of the members of the Central American migrant caravan were rapists,<sup>100</sup> and that he would order the military to shoot any rock-throwers.<sup>101</sup> The speech was riddled with falsehoods.<sup>102</sup> The fear-mongering continued at a rally in Columbia, Missouri that evening. A Washington Post reporter characterized that event and the entire tenor of Mr. Trump's last days of his midterm campaigning as overtly racial.<sup>103</sup>	6, 7, 9
11-2-18	6,410 and counting. The Washington Post's Fact Checker updated its cumulative tally, stating that Mr. Trump had now made 6,410 false or misleading statements since taking office. These had accelerated, coming at the rate of 30 per day in the seven weeks leading up to the midterm elections, and 84 on October 1 alone. He had falsely denied having imposed tariffs. Some 25 times he had misstated Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh's class rank in college and law school, despite having been corrected. The Post wrote: "The president's proclivity to twist data and fabricate stories is on full display at his rallies. He has his greatest hits: 120 times he had falsely said he passed the biggest tax cut in history, 80 times he has asserted that the U.S. economy today is the best in history and 74 times he has falsely said his border wall is already being built."<sup>104</sup>	7

11-2-18	In Indiana. At a campaign rally in Indianapolis, Indiana, Mr. Trump responded to former President Obama's recent criticisms of him by calling out the latter's middle name (Hussein), as a dog-whistle to bigots and xenophobes. It was reminiscent of his own long and leading role in the "birther" movement that had falsely cast the former president as a foreigner and his election as illegitimate.	6, 7, 9
11-2-18	The apocalypse. At a campaign rally in Huntington, West Virginia, Mr. Trump said of Democrats, "A blue wave equals a crime wave." The Huffington Post, citing statistics, reported that Mr. Trump's narrative had inspired a torrent of anti-crime Republican campaign advertisements for the upcoming midterm elections – many of them attack ads, many of them exaggerated or inaccurate, and, in the aggregate, the most frequent and incendiary anti-crime ads in decades – even though the national crime rate had remained low.<sup>105</sup> The New York Times similarly reported that Republican candidates across the country had been following Mr. Trump's lead of demonizing Democrats, minorities and immigrants, and of posing the election in apocalyptic, cultural, racial and "us against them" terms.<sup>106</sup> The Washington Post concurred, reporting that many Republican candidates (stark examples were given) were running "overtly on racially tinged messages" and were "running a campaign built on blunt, race-based attacks on immigrants and minorities," "at a level not seen since the 1950s and 1960s."<sup>107</sup> In a separate article, The Post cited late-breaking examples of Mr. Trump's closing venom and call to hysteria, which it described as "unmoored from reality": "In Columbia, Mo., the president suggested that Democrats 'run around like antifa' demonstrators in black uniforms and black helmets, but underneath, they have 'this weak little face' and 'go back home into mommy's basement.' In Huntington, W.Va., Trump called predatory immigrants 'the worst scum in the world' but alleged that Democrats welcome them by saying, 'Fly right in, folks. Come on in. We don't care who the hell you are, come on in!' ... 'They want to invite caravan after caravan, and it is a little suspicious how those caravans are starting, isn't it?' Trump asked at a Saturday night rally in Pensacola, Fla. ... . At his Saturday rally in Belgrade, Mont., Trump told a cheering crowd, without a hint of irony, 'I'm the only one that tells you the facts.'"<sup>108</sup>	6, 7, 9, 17 (6, 9)

11-3-18, 11-4-18	Inciting violence. On November 3, news media began reporting that – incited by Mr. Trump's anti-caravan rhetoric – armed, right-wing vigilante militias were heading for the Mexican border.<sup>109</sup> On November 4, ABC News reported that 16 criminal defendants across the country who were accused of threatening or committing racial, religious or gender-based violence had expressly cited Mr. Trump as their inspiration.<sup>110</sup> (The count claimed to be conservative: it excluded incidents as to which charges were never brought, instances of vandalism, and instances of charges brought against pro-Trump defendants who had not expressly cited him as their lodestar.)	5, 6, 17 (6)
11-5-18	Closing out the campaign. In the final day of his non-stop campaigning for the midterm elections, Mr. Trump continued and amplified his high-pitched motifs: falsehoods, fear and intimidation. In Washington, D.C. he falsely told reporters, "There are a lot of people ... that try and get in illegally and actually vote illegally, so we just want to let them know that there will be prosecution at the highest level." In doing so, he seemed to be urging state authorities to suppress brown voting, or to appear to his supporters to be doing so. (Already that election season, state Republican administrations had been attempting, notoriously, to disenfranchise black voters in Georgia and Native American voters in North Dakota.)<sup>111</sup> In Fort Wayne, Indiana, he said, "The Democrat agenda will deliver a socialist nightmare."<sup>112</sup> In Cleveland, Ohio, he falsely told a crowd: "The Democrat platform is a 2018 socialism, open borders edict. ... Democrats are inviting caravan after caravan [into the country]." He falsely said that Democrats were trying to give health care benefits to undocumented migrants, and were encouraging them to vote.<sup>113</sup> That evening, at a rally in Cape Girardeau, Missouri, he implied that Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh's primary accuser relative to youthful sexual transgressions had recanted her testimony – when in fact it was a little known accuser who had recanted.<sup>114</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 17 (1, 6)

11-5-18	[Continued.] Also in Cape Girardeau, Mr. Trump was introduced by the right-wing radio host and conspiracy theorist Rush Limbaugh. Mr. Trump subsequently called onto the stage Sean Hannity and Jeanne Pirro, two Fox News hosts who had long served effectively as his advisors, propagandists and fellow inciters. Such overt electioneering by media commentators had not occurred in recent history.<sup>115</sup> Hannity took the opportunity to denounce the mainstream press at the back of the hall as "fake news."<sup>116</sup> On the eve of the election, former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke tweeted, "Go, Trump, go."<sup>117</sup> The New York Times wrapped up the overall tenor. It described "an us-against-them midterm election campaign that was built on dark themes of fear, nationalism and racial animosity ... ." It characterized Mr. Trump as "not only taking on individual Democratic officeholders by name, which most presidents avoid, but also ridiculing them and insulting them with playground-style taunts. Describing himself as a 'nationalist,' Mr. Trump has vilified immigrants, both legal and illegal, in racially charged language that was once considered unacceptable in national politics." But most disturbingly, The Times wrote: "Mr. Trump's fiery, invective-filled campaigning produced what may be the most polarized midterm contest in modern times as he played to tribal rifts in American society in a way that no president has done since before the civil rights era. The divisions exposed and expanded over the past few weeks seem certain to last well beyond Election Day."<sup>118</sup>	6, 7, 9, 17 (1, 6)

The Midterm Elections

In the November 6, 2018 midterm elections, Democrats took control of the House of Representatives by a substantial margin, and Republicans slightly increased their hold on the Senate. Democrats also gained seven governorships, six legislative chamber majorities, the majority of state attorney general positions, and hundreds of state legislative seats.<sup>119</sup>

The elections were widely viewed as a referendum on Mr. Trump's presidency – as Mr. Trump had boasted they would be – and almost two-thirds of voters so indicated in exit polls.<sup>120</sup> Turn-out was the highest for midterm elections in the modern era.<sup>121</sup> Both Democrats and Mr. Trump claimed victory, and both were correct: many of the races were very close, and the country remained bitterly polarized under Mr. Trump.

For example, a New York Times analysis found many of the country's voters embracing racial diversity, but many rejecting it.<sup>122</sup> A Politico analysis credited Mr. Trump's anti-immigrant invective with having bolstered many Republican candidates and thus having stemmed Republican losses.<sup>123</sup>

Unusually, the Democrats' gains occurred despite a strong economy, low unemployment and Mr. Trump's tax cuts, reflecting a rebuke by many voters to Mr. Trump on other grounds.<sup>124</sup>

A Reminder of Our Premises

On November 21, 2018, those members of Citizens for a Strong Democracy who are engaged in ongoing international human rights advocacy received, in a newsletter, a commentary on the mechanisms of dictatorship. Referring to a wide range of recent African dictators, the writer began:

"Dictators are not all the same. They use different tools of repression and survival. 'Divide and rule,' however, is one of the oldest, most widely used, and most effective of their strategies. It involves creating, maintaining, and even enforcing divisions, distrust, and enmity among ethnic, religious, regional, and socio-political groups. This helps ensure that no unified movement can coalesce to overthrow a dictatorial regime. From Siad Barre of Somalia to Juvenal Habryimana of Rwanda, Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire, and many others, the African continent is not short of examples of dictators who have obtained and/or retained power through these divisive tactics.

"One aspect of divide and rule is that most dictators retain some domestic support by offering privileges to members of their own ethnic or religious groups in return for their political support, while systematically excluding others."<sup>125</sup>

As CSD has maintained throughout this Chronology, "divide and rule" is hardly Mr. Trump's only tool in asserting and maintaining his authority. But it is indicative. And we find it more than ironic that the particular illustration above derives from a region of the world that Mr. Trump so disdains as inferior to our own.

11-7-18 +	In the elections' wake. Hard on the heels of the midterm elections, Mr. Trump gave a lengthy news conference in which he (without presidential precedent) ridiculed by name those Republican candidates who had not fully embraced him and who appeared to have lost their respective races. He also boasted of a "very close to complete victory" – despite the Democrats' many gains, including their having taken control of the House and its investigatory committees that were likely to hold him to account for his misconduct. When asked by a reporter what lesson he had learned from the election, Mr. Trump said, "I think people like me." And he called himself "a great moral leader." Also at the news conference, he threatened an escalated war on the Democrats, including counter-investigations, if they were to investigate him. He repeated his false claim that the Mexican border wall was already under construction. He said yet again that the Russia investigation was a "hoax," and he boasted of his ability to unilaterally end it. He said that CNN was the "enemy of the people." He called an African American reporter a "racist" for asking whether his having recently identified himself as a "nationalist" could embolden white nationalists.<sup>126</sup> Later that day Mr. Trump tweeted that any suggestion that he had not won a great victory was being perpetrated by the "FAKE NEWS!" And – in yet another unprecedented move – the White House revoked the press credentials of CNN's White House correspondent Jim Acosta. Acosta, an aggressive-to-flamboyant journalist, had asked Mr. Trump questions at the news conference politely but persistently. Mr. Trump called him a "terrible person" and an "enemy of the people." Later, deploying an apparently doctored video, the White House falsely accused him of having assaulted a young female White House aide who had tried to take the microphone from him.<sup>127</sup> CNN sued to reinstate Acosta's credentials, and it was joined by the White House Correspondents' Association, Fox News, Politico, The New York Times, The Washington Post, NBC, CBS, USA Today, Bloomberg and The Associated Press, among others. On November 16, a federal judge issued a temporary restraining order directing that Acosta's press pass be restored, on due process grounds.<sup>128</sup> Soon Acosta's pass was restored.	1, 7, 11
------------------	---	-----------------

11-7-18 +	Sessions gone; Whitaker in. On November 7, at Mr. Trump's direction, and after having long been publicly and privately humiliated by him, Jeff Sessions resigned his position as attorney general. The departure, widely expected, was attributable to Sessions having recused himself from – and having thus been unable to limit – special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation of Russia's interference in the 2016 presidential election and Mr. Trump's possible role in that interference. Matthew Whitaker – Sessions's chief of staff – was named acting attorney general. Despite Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein being next in line for the attorney general position by default, Whitaker was designated for the job, and was directed to take on Rosenstein's role as Mueller's overseer. Whitaker's selection alarmed good-government advocates. His resume was negligible, compared to most recent attorneys general. But he was a Trump loyalist; he had publicly disparaged and delegitimized the investigation multiple times; he had once said that the president had the categorical right to dismiss any federal investigation; and he was close friends with Mr. Trump's campaign co-chairman who had testified before a Mueller grand jury. Whitaker nevertheless refused to promise to recuse himself from overseeing Mueller. Whitaker was also a political extremist. He had once radically challenged the Supreme Court's authority to decide constitutional law; and had once radically proposed that all federal judges have a Christian Biblical view of the law. He had headed a conservative dirt-and-attack advocacy group, and he now struck critics as more of a partisan zealot than an accomplished and fair-minded prosecutor. Indeed, he was viewed by many as professionally and ethically unqualified, and as a crony installed to protect Mr. Trump's personal interests, including by throttling Mueller. (Several previous presidents had likewise appointed cronies as attorneys general; but except for Richard Nixon, those presidents had not been under threat of investigation.)  [Continued below.]	7, 9, 12
------------------	--	-----------------

11-7-18 +	[Continued.] In addition, Whitaker had served as an advisor and as a sometimes brutal defense lawyer for a company whose business had been patenting its customers' inventions. It had promoted such exotic concepts as Bigfoot and time travel, and his own Justice Department was investigating it for allegedly bilking some of the customers. Critics questioned whether Mr. Trump was even able lawfully to appoint an acting attorney general without the person having been approved by the Senate for that or a prior position; it had never before occurred in American history. The resignation and replacement were widely seen as imperiling the special prosecutor's investigation. On November 8, tens of thousands of people took to outdoor public spaces to protest in cities and towns across the country.* [For news sources for all the above paragraphs, see this endnote.<sup>129</sup>] Sessions's resignation came less than a day after the 2018 midterm elections. Mr. Trump appeared to have delayed it until then, so as not to stoke perceptions of his disdain for the independence of the Justice Department and thus jeopardize Republican candidates' races.<sup>130</sup> (Indeed, after a nearly two-month, pre-election hiatus, on the day after the election Mr. Trump resumed his Twitter attacks on the investigation, calling it "a disgusting Witch Hunt, led by 17 Angry Democrats."<sup>131</sup>) Sessions had long drawn the ire of civil libertarians for having, in their view, broadly abused the rights and well-being of immigrants and minorities, as well as having lied to Congress; but they too feared that his dismissal endangered Mueller's investigation.<sup>132</sup> In the bipartisan firestorm that followed Whitaker's appointment, Mr. Trump repeatedly and falsely denied that he knew Whitaker – similar to his having denied close relations with his campaign manager Paul Manafort and his personal attorney Michael Cohen once their criminal conduct had become established.<sup>133</sup> *Protests occurred at multiple venues in Southeastern Pennsylvania. Four members of Citizens for a Strong Democracy participated.	7, 9, 12
------------------	--	-----------------

11-7-18 +	North Korea: unrequited love. On November 7, a high-level negotiating session between the U.S. (to include Secretary of State Mike Pompeo) and North Korea was canceled, amid multiple reports that the relationship was going nowhere due to both personality and substantive conflicts. This transpired despite Mr. Trump's recent declarations that he and North Korean leader Kim Jong-un had achieved peace and "fell in love."<sup>134</sup> On November 12, The New York Times reported in detail, and with satellite images, how North Korea had continued to build its ballistic missile and nuclear warhead programs. Mr. Trump had proclaimed his success in neutralizing that country's nuclear threat as recently as November 7; and on November 18 he told Fox News that he didn't believe the report.<sup>135</sup> Meanwhile, international sanctions against North Korea were collapsing, under cover of Mr. Trump having blessed the country's intentions.<sup>136</sup> So far, the North Koreans seemed to have fooled him, and to have "won" – although still affording him fodder for his credulous supporters.	7, 12
11-8-18 +	"Election corruption." Without evidence, and in separate communications, on November 8 Mr. Trump and his attorney Rudy Giuliani suggested that Democrats were fraudulently tampering with the November 6 election results in close (and as yet unresolved) senatorial and gubernatorial races in Florida.<sup>137</sup> On November 9, in a tweet, Mr. Trump suggested that Democrats were "finding votes" in the close Florida and Georgia elections. He also alleged "election corruption" as a Democrat pulled ahead in the senatorial race in Arizona.<sup>138</sup> On November 10, he tweeted, of the Democrats: "Trying to STEAL two big elections in Florida!" On November 12, again without any evidence of improprieties, he tweeted that, contrary to law, the ongoing Florida recount should end, absentee ballots (including those representing tens of thousands of Florida-based troops) be ignored, and Republicans be declared the winners, all due to Democratic fraud.<sup>139</sup> On November 14, he told The Daily Caller, without evidence, that many people vote, then go into a car and disguise themselves, then return to vote again.<sup>140</sup> [Continued below.]	4, 7, 17 (4, 7)

11-8-18 +	[Continued.] Contemporaneously, and following Mr. Trump's by now two-year-long theme, Republican administrations in both Georgia and Florida, sometimes with racial overtones, were baselessly alleging Democratic fraud in the close voting there, and were attempting to restrict vote counts.<sup>141</sup> By challenging the legitimacy of the elections, critics charged that Mr. Trump had compromised America's faith in its electoral system more than the Russians could have done by meddling in the midterms.<sup>142</sup> Through all of the allegations of fraud, Mr. Trump remained silent about well-publicized efforts by the Republican administrations in Georgia and North Dakota to suppress minority voting in the 2018 elections there. (See CSD's entry of November 5, above.)	4, 7, 17 (4, 7)
11-9-18 +	World War I remembered (or not). In France, commemorating the 100th anniversary of the end of World War I, Mr. Trump drew negative attention for skipping one ceremony on account of rain; arriving late at another ceremony and at a meeting; foregoing a conference among world leaders on the promotion of peace; being seen (together with the authoritarian leaders of Russia and Turkey) as bent on the destruction of a united Europe; and (implicitly) being publicly upbraided and educated by French President Emanuel Macron for having recently called himself a "nationalist" – nationalism having been one of the principal causes of the devastating war, and of the Second World War that followed it. Macron said: “Patriotism is the exact opposite of nationalism. Nationalism is a betrayal of patriotism. In saying ‘Our interests first, whatever happens to the others,’ you erase the most precious thing a nation can have, that which makes it live, that which causes it to be great and that which is most important: Its moral values.”<sup>143</sup> [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13

11-9-18 +	[Continued.] As described by CSD on July 11 +, at the recent NATO summit Mr. Trump had likewise skipped and been late for important events intended to showcase international comity. Now in France, while skipping the meetings, he had reportedly spent much of his time alone: fuming, watching television, and tweeting.<sup>144</sup> Overall, he was seen as having been utterly isolated and disengaged, and having contributed nothing to the gathering of leaders – a humiliation for America, and an abrogation of our traditional role in the world.<sup>145</sup> Mr. Trump had begun his French adventure on November 9 by disparaging French President Emmanuel Macron. Citing Macron's recent proposal to build a European military (in response to Mr. Trump's threats to leave NATO), he falsely accused Macron of wanting that army to protect Europe from aggression by the U.S., and he tweeted that that proposal was "very insulting." Back in Washington on November 13, and again by Twitter, Mr. Trump said it again: "Emmanuel Macron suggests building its own army to protect Europe against the U.S., China and Russia. But it was Germany in World Wars One &amp; Two - How did that work out for France? They were starting to learn German in Paris before the U.S. came along. Pay for NATO or not!" In a tweet, he also ridiculed Macron's low approval rating among French voters. His tweets were at once insulting to France, insulting to Germany, and incoherent as to whether he wished the U.S. to help protect Europe or not. (Indeed, just on November 12 he had tweeted a renewed threat to withdraw from NATO if Europe didn't pay its share of defense costs.<sup>146</sup>) On November 14, the French government condemned Mr. Trump for having abandoned "common decency" in his tweets.<sup>147</sup>	10, 11, 13
11-10-18	Pants on fire. Mr. Trump tweeted that the deadly wild fires that were newly raging in California were the result of incompetent (Democratic) governance in the state. He did not offer condolences to the families of the fires' victims, or acknowledge the role of climate change in the fires' genesis. But he did – astonishingly, and vituperatively – threaten to withhold federal funds from California programs by way of punishment.<sup>148</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 8, 9, 11

11-10-18	[Continued.] The tweet echoed Mr. Trump's sentiments about a previous spate of California fires, as reported by CSD on August 5. One commentator noted Mr. Trump's warm attention to and sympathy for disasters and victims in red states, and his chilliness (and even inhumanity) toward them in blue states – despite (nominally) being president for all.<sup>149</sup>	7, 8, 9, 11
11-10-18	Medals for sale. The White House announced that Mr. Trump would shortly award the Presidential Medal of Freedom – a citation heretofore reserved for distinguished public servants, cultural figures and the like – to Miriam Adelson, the wife of casino magnate Sheldon Adelson. The Adelsons were two of Mr. Trump's strongest donors and supporters. They had given tens of millions of dollars to him, and hundreds of millions to other Republican candidates, but they lacked medal recipients' typical accomplishments. In a number of stunning commentaries, critics compared the award to Mr. Trump having granted presidential pardons to political favorites, and, more categorically, to his having redefined age-old notions of merit and truth as things that benefit him personally.<sup>150</sup> (Previous presidents too had given the medal to some of their donors; but the recipients had also been deserving luminaries in their own right.<sup>151</sup>)	11, 16
11-11-18 +	The military: politicized, pushing back, and used. Politics and push-back. In a November 11 report on the on-the-ground experience of thousands of active duty soldiers newly deployed to the Mexican border, The New York Times recounted some of Mr. Trump's showy, politically motivated, costly and ill-conceived military initiatives that the Pentagon itself appeared to have resisted, albeit with mixed success: the border deployment, the Washington military parade, the banning of transgender troops, and the Space Force.<sup>152</sup> A week later, reports appeared that once the border deployment had been confirmed, Defense Secretary James Mattis had refused the (illegal) request of Mr. Trump and the Homeland Security Department to send armed troops to directly stop the migrants; and Mattis had prevailed.<sup>153</sup> Then on November 21, Mattis expressly refused to arm most of the deployed troops, despite a new presidential order directing them to defend the border patrol.<sup>154</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11

11-11-18 +	[Continued.] Props and put-downs. On November 12, The Huffington Post recapped (and CSD now augments) incidents of Mr. Trump having used the military as a prop while insulting those who had actually served. Recent insults: skipping a visit to a military cemetery in France on account of rain; foregoing Veterans Day commemorations upon his return to the U.S.; and calling for the annulment of military absentee votes in the close Florida midterm elections. Recent props: flying to midterm campaign events in, and holding those events in front of, military aircraft; and needlessly and expensively sending thousands of active duty troops to intercept the Central American migrant caravan at the Mexican border. Previous insults: blaming "the generals" for a combat death in Yemen in early 2017 during an unsuccessful military operation that he had personally approved; disparaging the late Senator John McCain's Vietnam war record; disparaging a Gold Star Muslim family; and not having visited deployed troops in combat theatres. Previous props: promoting military spending, and seeking the lavish military parade in Washington "honoring himself" (in the words of a Washington Post columnist).<sup>155</sup> On November 16, citing security officials, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had not even attempted to understand his role as commander in chief.<sup>156</sup> On November 18, in an interview with Fox News, Mr. Trump disparaged the much venerated retired Admiral William McRaven – who had overseen the elimination of Osama Bin Laden – as a Democratic partisan and as having performed inadequately in the Bin Laden operation.<sup>157</sup> (The remark followed Mr. Trump's deprecation, on October 14, of Defense Secretary Mattis – a highly respected former general with whom he had had many disagreements at the White House on military matters and whom he might have been preparing to fire – as "sort of a Democrat."<sup>158</sup>) The belittling of McRaven drew a firestorm of criticism from former security officials, who found it mean-spirited, unnecessary, dangerous and uninformed.<sup>159</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11
-------------------	--	------------------

11-11-18 +	[Continued.] On November 19, The Washington Post published its own list of Mr. Trump's insults to decorated military officers and Gold Star families. (To one such family he had promised a $25,000 personal gift, but then had forgotten it until reminded months later by The Post.)<sup>160</sup> On November 20, The Post reported on the growing controversy about Mr. Trump having not visited deployed troops. The Post noted that most recent presidents had visited the troops, often multiple times. And it cited knowledgeable sources who said that Mr. Trump – a man who had built his political success in part on projecting a brutish virility, readiness for physical fights, and commitment to military strength – hadn't traveled to war theatres out of fear for his personal safety.<sup>161</sup> (Although conceivably, CSD speculates, his failure to have visited the troops had been due to his admitted fear of germs.) Also on November 20, CNN reported that deployment of active duty troops to the Mexican border would cost taxpayers $72 million – initially; and that the deployment of National Guard troops had already cost $138 million.<sup>162</sup> (The cost of separating and reuniting the migrant families there had risen to $80 million.<sup>163</sup>) CSD gives greater weight to some of those charges than to others. For example, we are less concerned about the no-showing (out of callousness, indiscretion or cowardice) than the show-boating (a genuine penchant for demagoguery and autocracy). At the same time, we continue to note that Mr. Trump had avoided service during the Vietnam War. Many others of his generation had done the same; and many for good reasons. But we see in his militaristic rhetoric a unique cynicism, and a dark twisting of the notion of patriotism.	9, 10, 11
11-12-18	The stock market – and me (again). Mr. Trump tweeted that the stock market's recent decline reflected its fear of investigations that the new Democratic majority in the House of Representatives expected to mount against his conduct while in office. But in fact the stock market had risen sharply after the Democrats' midterm electoral victory the previous week. And market analysts disagreed with Mr. Trump's evaluation, instead identifying many other causes for the overall market pull-back since early October.<sup>164</sup> (See also CSD's October 30 reporting on Mr. Trump and his stock market calls.) [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11

11-12-18	[Continued.] Mr. Trump had previously linked a rise in the stock market to his performance as president – something that wiser presidents had declined to do, in part because of the market's inherent volatility.	7, 9, 11
11-13-18	The caravan: no longer an emergency? Since the November 6 midterm elections, Mr. Trump appeared to commentators to have gone almost completely silent relative to the criminal and cultural threats that he saw in the Central American caravan that was approaching the Mexican border and that he had sent active duty military forces to interdict. (Exception: on November 16 he tweeted that the migrants were engaged in a "con" that was costing American taxpayers money.) Possibly he was awaiting further developments. Or possibly his political need to stoke fear and hatred had simply abated. But the sequence of clamor, elections then silence about a "national emergency" seemed unprecedented in American politics. <sup>165</sup>	6, 9
11-14-18	"Vast" criminal exposure. New York Magazine recapped Mr. Trump's legal peril: "The breadth of Trump's legal exposure exceeds that of any president in American history. It is so vast that it is hard to comprehend. Some, and possibly all, of the following appear to have colluded with Russia on behalf of the Trump campaign: Michael Flynn, Roger Stone, Paul Manafort, Donald Trump Jr., and Michael Cohen. Trump has been doing business with the criminal underworld in Russia and elsewhere for years, the secrets of which may be revealed by Mueller, or by House Democrats obtaining his tax returns. Federal prosecutors are investigating whether he violated campaign-finance laws by directing hush money to various mistresses. The state of New York is investigating the Trump Foundation for alleged misappropriation of funds and the Trump Organization for decades-long tax fraud. He is being sued for violating the Constitution's Emoluments Clause. He is also being sued for fraud. And this is just the information we know so far, which has come out despite a Congress dedicated to protecting him from investigation, a benefit he will enjoy for only a few more weeks." <sup>166</sup>	9, 17 (9)

11-15-18	No witches here. After an election-period hiatus, Mr. Trump resumed his attacks on special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation of the 2016 Russian election meddling. He tweeted: "The inner workings of the Mueller investigation are a total mess. They have found no collusion and have gone absolutely nuts. They are screaming and shouting at people, horribly threatening them to come up with the answers they want. They are a disgrace to our Nation and don't care how many lives the [sic] ruin. These are Angry People, including the highly conflicted Bob Mueller, who worked for Obama for 8 years. They won't even look at all of the bad acts and crimes on the other side. A TOTAL WITCH HUNT LIKE NO OTHER IN AMERICAN HISTORY!" Almost none of those statements were true.	7, 12
11-15-18	Again, little is true. As news media reported that Mr. Trump was contemplating firing his Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen, his chief of staff John Kelly and others, Mr. Trump tweeted: "The White House is running very smoothly and the results for our Nation are obviously very good. We are the envy of the world. But anytime I even think about making changes, the FAKE NEWS MEDIA goes crazy, always seeking to make us look as bad as possible! Very dishonest!" Almost none of those statements were true.	1, 7, 10
11-16-18	And still, little is true. The Washington Post identified nine falsehoods that Mr. Trump advanced in a "wild" November 14 interview with The Daily Caller. They included spurious claims of Democratic voter fraud; an exaggeration of Republican midterm electoral victories; the purported start of construction on the Mexican border wall; non-existent corruption within the special prosecutor's team; and the demise of the Affordable Care Act (which despite Mr. Trump's unlawful efforts was still alive, and popular with most voters).<sup>167</sup>	4, 6, 7, 12
11-18-18	Potty-mouth. Referring to Congressman Adam Schiff – soon to be the chair of the House Intelligence Committee since the Democrats won control of the House of Representatives and its committees – Mr. Trump tweeted: "So funny to see little Adam Schitt [sic] (D-CA) talking about the fact that Acting Attorney General Matt Whitaker was not approved by the Senate, but not mentioning the fact that Bob Mueller (who is highly conflicted) was not approved by the Senate!" [Continued below.]	7, 11, 12

11-18-18	[Continued below.] In addition to launching his juvenile trash-talk, Mr. Trump lied or was mistaken: Mueller's appointment as special prosecutor didn't by law require Senate approval; and the Senate had vetted and approved Mueller to be FBI director in 2001 anyway.	7, 11, 12
11-18-18	Telling it to Fox. In an astonishing interview with Fox News, Mr. Trump said that the "fake news" was "disgusting"; publicly all but predicted the demise of two of his highest ranking appointees (chief of staff John Kelly and Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen); said that the (chaotic) White House was "running like a well-oiled machine"; denied the accuracy of satellite imagery showing North Korea's continuing nuclear arms build-up; preposterously claimed to be writing his own answers to the questions that special prosecutor Robert Mueller had formally submitted to him in his "witch hunt" – i.e., without material help from his (Mr. Trump's) own counsel; falsely accused his critic, the decorated retired Admiral William McRaven, of partisanship and derogated McRaven's service in overseeing the elimination of Osama Bin Laden; ridiculously said that the Republicans having held their Senate majority in the recent midterm elections was "historic"; denied that the midterm elections had been substantively about himself (having insisted before his overall defeat in those elections that they would be); and gave himself an "A+" for his performance as president. <sup>168</sup>	1, 7, 11
11-19-18	Crowd size and "truthful hyperbole." The Washington Post's Fact Checker detailed Mr. Trump's persistent, excited and wildly inaccurate boasts during campaign rallies in the recent midterm elections about the crowds in attendance. <sup>169</sup>  CSD believes that as a rhetorical device – promoting buyer enthusiasm by fabricating the support of other buyers – those claims compared to the inflated claims of Trump Organization condominium unit sales that his daughter and senior advisor Ivanka Trump had for a period of years made to investors, as was exposed in October 2018 – e.g., claiming that a property was "virtually sold out" when in fact it was 75% unsold. Ms. Trump and her brother Donald, Jr. were reportedly close to being indicted for fraud in connection with such sales tactics, until the elder Mr. Trump's lawyer succeeded in causing the Manhattan district attorney to drop the case, while becoming one of that official's top campaign donors. <sup>170</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9

11-19-18	[ Continued. ] We have long reported on Mr. Trump's hucksterism. We now continue to implore buyers to beware.	7, 9
11-19-18 +	Ivanka's emails. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's daughter and senior advisor Ivanka Trump had sent hundreds of emails relating to her White House duties from a personal account during much of 2017, many of them in violation of federal rules. Although the activity was apparently not as extensive, determined or risky as that of Hillary Clinton while she was serving as secretary of state, it was shocking for its audacity: Mr. Trump had demonized Clinton for her email misdeeds during his 2016 electoral campaign; and he had continued to do so throughout his presidency, including during his many 2018 midterm election campaign rallies ("Lock her up!"). When first questioned internally at the White House about her own email conduct, Ms. Trump reportedly (and astoundingly) claimed to have not been familiar with the rules.<sup>171</sup> Mr. Trump, naturally, proclaimed that Ms. Trump was "very innocent," and he invented an additional 100,000 emails that he said Clinton had deleted.<sup>172</sup> CSD doubts that Ms. Trump's email activity caused any damage. But her husband and senior White House advisor Jared Kushner had also used personal email accounts for official business. Combined with her conflicted business dealings and those of Kushner, as well as other Kushner behavior and that of Ms. Trump's brother Donald, Jr. – all as reported above in this document – in light of the Clinton vendetta, The Post's email revelation fueled CSD's perception of a Trump family outlook that they, and they alone, stood above not only the law, but ordinary decency and common sense.	7, 17 (9, 11)
11-19-18 +	Anti-asylum order blocked; Roberts speaks; Trump refutes. On November 19, a federal district judge in San Francisco issued a temporary restraining order blocking Mr. Trump's executive order to deny asylum to migrants who might seek it after having crossed the Mexican border at locations other than regular ports of entry. The judge said that the executive order violated explicit Congressional legislation.<sup>173</sup> (See CSD's November 1 entry on Mr. Trump's announcement of the order.) [Continued below.]	2, 6, 9, 11

11-19-18 +	[Continued.] The next day, Mr. Trump ranted against the "Obama Judge" at the district court, as well as the generally liberal Ninth Circuit court of appeals to which any appeal of the judge's ruling would be taken. Misconstruing statistics as to how often the Supreme Court had reversed the Ninth Circuit's decisions,<sup>174</sup> he called it a "disgrace," and he threatened obliquely that "it's not going to happen like this anymore."<sup>175</sup> To that, the Supreme Court's Chief Justice John Roberts – a Republican appointee – fired back on November 21: "We do not have Obama judges or Trump judges, Bush judges or Clinton judges. What we have is an extraordinary group of dedicated judges doing their level best to do equal right to those appearing before them. That independent judiciary is something we should all be thankful for." The presidential rebuke by a Supreme Court justice was extraordinary. The American Bar Association likewise objected, stating that questioning a court's motives, mocking its legitimacy and threatening retaliation eroded the Constitution.<sup>176</sup> But determined to have the last word, Mr. Trump tweeted a lengthy lecture to Roberts, persisting in his claim that the Ninth Circuit was biased.<sup>177</sup> And in a Thanksgiving Day telephone conference call with American military officers overseas on November 22, he continued to lash the Ninth Circuit (and implicitly Roberts) – thus further attempting to politicize the military, both as to the substance of judicial rulings and as to the independence of the judiciary under the Constitution.<sup>178</sup> (See also CSD's entries of November 11+ and 22 about politicizing the military.) Mr. Trump also tweeted on Thanksgiving Day that the Constitution forbids law enforcement professionals (and thus seemingly himself) from being subject to any sort of judicial restraint. He wrote: "Justice Roberts can say what he wants, but the 9th Circuit is a complete &amp; total disaster. It is out of control ... . Judges must not Legislate Security and Safety at the Border, or anywhere else. They know nothing about it and are making our Country unsafe. Our great Law Enforcement professionals MUST BE ALLOWED TO DO THEIR JOB! If not there will be only bedlam, chaos, injury and death. We want the Constitution as written!" [Continued below.]	2, 6, 9, 11
-------------------	---	--------------------

11-19-18 +	[Continued.] As to Mr. Trump's objections to the liberal rulings of the Ninth Circuit's judges, on November 22 The Washington Post reported that some 40 to 50 federal courts, all over the country and in decisions issued by both Democratic and Republican appointees, had overruled Mr. Trump's orders as exceeding his authority – a string of losses so extensive as to reflect a "new phenomenon." His defeats had included the Muslim travel ban, the transgender military ban, the sanctuary cities crackdown, the cut-off of teen pregnancy prevention funding for programs that failed to preach abstinence, the family separation adventure at the Mexican border, the banning of CNN's Jim Acosta from the White House (blocked by Mr. Trump's own appointed judge), and several environmental rulings.<sup>179</sup> For its part, CSD notes that one of Mr. Trump's signature accomplishments as president had been to appoint dozens of federal judges who were ideologically sympathetic to him. With all due respect to Justice Roberts, we struggle to discern a distinction between Mr. Trump's crusade to appoint "his" people and the right of other presidents to appoint "theirs" – except in the context of a dictatorship.	2, 6, 9, 11
11-20-18	Omniscience. A Washington Post columnist collected statements by Mr. Trump pursuant to which he had claimed to have commanded much more knowledge than seemed humanly possible. Among other things, since becoming president, he had claimed to know more about ISIS and about how to eliminate Osama Bin Laden than our military; more about Saudi dissident Jamal Khashoggi's murder and Russia's election interference than the CIA; more about medicine than his doctor; more about steelworkers than "anybody"; more about North Korea's growing nuclear arms program than was revealed by satellite imagery; and more about climate change, hurricanes, and the risks of staring at the sun than scientists. (The pattern was not new. Before becoming president he had contradicted medical scientists on such matters as the value of vaccines and exercise.)<sup>180</sup>	7, 8, 11
11-20-18	Prosecuting Comey and Clinton. The New York Times reported that in the spring of 2018 Mr. Trump had wanted to order the Justice Department to prosecute his political enemies – his vanquished election opponent Hillary Clinton and his fired FBI director James Comey – and that he would have done so if White House lawyers, fearing his impeachment, had not dissuaded him.<sup>181</sup>	9, 11

11-20-18	On top of the Fed. Mr. Trump yet again blamed the Federal Reserve Bank's interest rate increases for the turbulent stock market; and again market analysts widely disputed that.<sup>182</sup> (As CSD has noted before, recent presidents had eschewed political meddling with Fed decision-making.)	7, 9
11-21-18	It's so cold. Mr. Trump tweeted: "Brutal and Extended Cold Blast could shatter ALL RECORDS - Whatever happened to Global Warming?" His implication that temporary cold weather belied global climate change was either ignorant or fraudulent.	8
11-22-18	Giving thanks to one's self; befuddling the military. On Thanksgiving morning, in attempting to deflect a recent torrent of criticism that he had not visited American troops deployed overseas, Mr. Trump spoke to military officers around the world by way of a televised conference call from his comfortable Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida. But instead of merely conveying holiday tidings, he used the call, unusually and politically, to rail against the Ninth Circuit federal appeals court; renounce the CIA's finding that Saudi Crown Prince Mohammad bin Salman (MBS) had ordered the killing of the Saudi dissident and Washington Post journalist Jamal Khashoggi in Turkey; falsely attack Hillary Clinton for her email practices (while defending his daughter and senior advisor Ivanka for her own); boast about having attended the Wharton School; boast about having sent troops to the Mexican border; complain about America's trade treaties; ask the officers to comment publicly about developments in their respective theatres; and falsely trash the country's economic performance under President Obama. The Post, apparently on information, reported that the officers were left scratching their heads.<sup>183</sup> After the call, when asked by a reporter what he was thankful for on the Thanksgiving holiday, Mr. Trump responded that he was most thankful for his family, and for own accomplishments.<sup>184</sup>	2, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 21 – January 13 , 2019

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

11-25-18	Right-wing violence soars. The Washington Post reported that incidents of right-wing violence had soared under Mr. Trump's presidency, eclipsing all other categories of politically-motivated violence, including from the left and from radical Islamists. <sup>1</sup>	17 (5, 6)
11-25-18 +	Russian aggression in Crimea. As world leaders denounced Russia for firing on and seizing three Ukrainian vessels in Crimea on November 25, Mr. Trump declined to join them. <sup>2</sup>	12
11-26-18	Caravan lies. Following the first violent altercation between Central American caravan migrants and the American border patrol, Mr. Trump – possibly to deflect from criticisms of the use of tear gas against a group that included women and children <sup>3</sup> – fabricated much: that the caravan included over 500 "serious criminals and gang members," that three border patrol officers had been "very badly hurt," and that many migrant children had been stolen and were being exploited by kidnappers in the latter's own quest for asylum. <sup>4</sup>	6, 7, 9

11-26-18	In Mississippi. (What?!) At a campaign rally in Tupelo, Mississippi for a racially controversial white candidate in a senatorial run-off election, Mr. Trump boasted of his success as a campaigner in the recent midterm elections – even though Democrats had won the popular vote for the House by the largest margin of any party in history,<sup>5</sup> 41 House seats had flipped Democrat, Democrats had made major gains in state legislatures and governorships, and 37 Republicans whom Mr. Trump had endorsed lost<sup>6</sup>. He also falsely said that foreign leaders extolled him; falsely hinted that Democrats stole some of the elections; falsely said that Republicans generally supported mandatory insurance coverage for pre-existing medical conditions; falsely said that construction had begun on his proposed Mexican border wall; falsely said that undocumented criminals commit more crimes than others in America; falsely said that steel mills were being built "all over the country"; and (truly or falsely) said that he was "winning, winning, winning" against the "deep state." He had advanced all of those falsehoods before. Mr. Trump added, "Nobody has ever done so much in the first two years of a presidency as this administration. Nobody. Nobody." Also: "[T]his is the greatest political movement in the history of our country. There's nothing like this. Nothing like this has ever happened."<sup>7</sup> He had sold that soap before as well; but his false, strident and historically ignorant braggadocio still astounded CSD and other observers.	1, 4, 5, 7, 11
11-26-18	Trump TV. Mr. Trump tweeted that the U.S. should create a global news network that would counter CNN's "unfair" and "false" news coverage, and that would instead promote a positive view – presumably his view – of America worldwide. In fact Congress had already long funded an editorially independent, multi-media, global news outlet in Voice of America, which promotes democracy and the free press, and which has been widely valued for having brought truth and hope to millions living under authoritarian regimes.<sup>8</sup> Was Mr. Trump aware of VOA at the time of his tweet? Possibly: his administration had been breaking tradition by filling VOA's leadership with partisan political appointees drawn from outside the community of mainstream journalists, including from the ethno-nationalist Breitbart News.<sup>9</sup>	1, 9

11-26-18 +	Mega-climate report. On November 26, Mr. Trump said that he didn't "believe" the forecast of economic cataclysm contained in the Fourth National Climate Assessment, a blockbuster quadrennial report issued by 13 of his own federal agencies and over 300 leading climate scientists. The next day he went further, expressly denying man-made climate change in an interview with the Washington Post. He indicated no plans to protect the country or the planet from global warming, nor to discontinue his policies that advanced global warming. On November 28, acting EPA Administrator Andrew Wheeler, a former coal lobbyist, said that the administration might intervene in the scientists' development of the next National Climate Assessment so as to make its warnings less dire.<sup>10</sup> Critics widely charged that the Trump administration had unsuccessfully attempted to bury the report from public scrutiny by releasing it on Black Friday, the day after Thanksgiving. CNN documented 23 other occasions on which Mr. Trump had dismissed the idea of global warming and/or climate change.<sup>11</sup>	8
11-26-18 +	Threatening GM. Beginning on November 26, Mr. Trump repeatedly threatened to punish General Motors for its newly announced plan to close several plants in the U.S. – including by cutting their federal subsidies. The threats represented a continuation of his practice of attacking named businesses that ran afoul of his political agenda.<sup>12</sup> But in addition, in the case of GM, he lacked authority to un-do certain subsidies; and to single out one company for retribution under a federal subsidy program would be illegal.<sup>13</sup> Withdrawing the subsidies also would likely eliminate even more jobs at GM.<sup>14</sup> Never one to admit error, on December 13 Mr. Trump told Fox News that GM was not "going to be treated well."<sup>15</sup>	9, 11
11-27-18	Greater than Reagan! The Hill reported that in a new book by two of Mr. Trump's loyalists, Mr. Trump told the authors that he was "far greater than Ronald Reagan" and "the greatest president in history and I blow Ronald Reagan away."<sup>16</sup>	11

11-27-18	A pox on objectivity. In a series of tweets, Mr. Trump raged against special prosecutor Robert Mueller and his office's investigation of Russia's election meddling in 2016 (which he again called a "Witch Hunt"). Among other things, in Mr. Trump's continuing efforts to disparage (and thus, in CSD's view, to obstruct) the investigation, he wrote that Mueller "is doing TREMENDOUS damage to our Criminal Justice System." On the same day, Mr. Trump reiterated in a Washington Post interview that he was unhappy with Federal Reserve Bank chairman Jerome Powell, whom he had appointed; and he blamed the Fed's interest rate hikes for the decline in the stock market (mostly untrue<sup>17</sup>) and for the recent decision by General Motors to close several U.S. plants (completely untrue). "I'm doing deals, and I'm not being accommodated by the Fed," he said – apparently viewing the Fed as his servant, and oblivious to its chartered independence. He also said that he trusted his "gut" about interest rates over other people's training and intellect. Mr. Trump also told The Post that he didn't believe the dire findings and cautions relative to global warming contained in the new, blockbuster National Climate Assessment, or the conclusions of environmental scientists generally. He said that "a lot of people like myself, we have very high levels of intelligence but we're not necessarily such believers." He also repeated his skepticism about the CIA's determination that Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS) had ordered the murder of The Post's columnist Jamal Khashoggi in Turkey that fall.<sup>18</sup> Thus in a single day Mr. Trump had publicly and brazenly rejected the independent, objective operations and evaluations of four extraordinarily credible national institutions, all in the service of his personal political goals: the Justice Department, the Federal Reserve Bank, the National Climate Assessment, and the CIA. The Post counted nine other false or misleading statements in its interview.<sup>19</sup> It also later reported on Mr. Trump's many uninformed, fallacious and incoherent statements about the Fed, the economy and fiscal policy – too many to include in this Addendum.<sup>20</sup>	7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12

11-27-18 +	A pardon for Manafort? A release of classified information? On November 27, The New York Times reported that lawyers for former Trump campaign chairman and now convicted felon Paul Manafort were feeding the content of his confidential plea bargain discussions with the special prosecutor's office to Mr. Trump's lawyers.<sup>21</sup> Observers guessed that Manafort may have ordered that practice so as to win a pardon from Mr. Trump; and some wrote that Mr. Trump's dangling of such a pardon could have amounted to witness tampering and obstruction of justice.<sup>22</sup> On November 28, Mr. Trump told The New York Post that he was in fact considering a pardon.<sup>23</sup> Mr. Trump also told The New York Post that if the Democrats "play tough" with him in 2019 once they had come to control the House of Representatives' oversight committees, he would release classified information that would be "devastating" to them. Mr. Trump had previously made threats to release classified information for political and retaliatory purposes.<sup>24</sup> CSD believes that any such action would be treasonous; and that the mere threat to do so constituted both extortion and treason. In addition, Mr. Trump told The New York Post that the special prosecutor's pursuit of several of Mr. Trump's former associates amounted to "McCarthyism."<sup>25</sup> He tweeted the same that day and the next. The reference to McCarthyism was an invocation of a senatorial inquisition of suspected communists in the early 1950s that, ironically, had been largely orchestrated by Senate committee counsel Roy Cohn, who was to become Mr. Trump's personal attorney and Machiavellian mentor for years.	9
11-28-18	All the traitors. Mr. Trump re-tweeted an image of 11 people behind bars, with these words superimposed on the image: "Now that Russia collusion is a proven lie, when do the trials for treason begin?" The 11: special prosecutor Robert Mueller, Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, former FBI Director James Comey, former President Obama, former President Clinton, former Secretary of State and presidential contender Hillary Clinton, her aide Huma Abedin, her campaign chairman John Podesta, former Attorney General Eric Holder, former National Intelligence Director James Clapper, and former Attorney General Loretta Lynch. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 11, 12

11-28-18	[Continued.] But "Russia collusion" was not a proven lie – the special prosecutor's investigation was continuing. And, in CSD's view, in a democracy casually naming one's legitimate adversaries as traitors was itself treasonous.	7, 9, 11, 12
11-28-18	The alpha male. In the November 28 New York Post interview (see above), Mr. Trump referred derogatorily to former New York City mayor and potential presidential candidate Michael Bloomberg as "Little Michael."<sup>26</sup> He had previously referred to his critics, respectively, as "Liddle [sic] [Republican Senator] Bob Corker," "Little [Republican Senator] Marco Rubio," and "Little [Democratic Congressman] Adam Schiff." That is, for demagogic purposes, he now continued to insinuate that he could physically best his opponents, in the manner of a playground bully, a medieval warlord, a gangster, a skinhead, an alpha gorilla, or Russian President Vladimir Putin. (Putin is a judo practitioner who had often posed bare-chested for photographs depicting his virility. Notably, CSD believes that Putin is about the same height as Corker, Rubio and Schiff; that Mr. Trump was unlikely to refer to his Russian idol as "little"; and that Putin could thrash Mr. Trump if he did.) A Washington Post columnist detailed how Mr. Trump had likewise, repeatedly expressed more reliance in his decision-making on "gut" primitive instincts than on intellect – including, most recently, in his criticism of the Federal Reserve Bank's interest rate policy. (See CSD's November 27 entry about interest rates, above.)<sup>27</sup> No other president in at least a century had so behaved. CSD draws a direct line between Mr. Trump's primitive assertions of instinct and male dominance, on the one hand, and his derogation of the recent National Climate Assessment, on the other: in each case, thumbing his nose at civilization (as it were; and as we have known it).	9, 11

11-28-18 +	Saudi cover-up. On November 28, Mr. Trump appeared to have prevented CIA director Gina Haspel from joining Secretary of Defense James Mattis and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo in briefing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the Saudi Arabian regime's murder and dismemberment of Washington Post columnist Jamal Khashoggi in Turkey. Haspel had traveled to Turkey to investigate the matter, and she was reportedly the only top Trump administration official to have had the stomach (and the integrity) to listen to the audio tape of the torture and execution; both Mr. Trump and national security advisor John Bolton had declined to do so. The CIA – and presumably Haspel herself – had concluded that Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS) had ordered the murder; but Mr. Trump had repeatedly denied that the CIA's conclusion was absolute, and he had otherwise defended MBS. Critics charged that Haspel's absence from the Senate briefing was unprecedented under the circumstances, possibly beyond the president's authority to have directed, and a cover-up.<sup>28</sup> The outrage within both parties was so strenuous that Haspel then did meet with the leaders of three Senate committees on December 4,<sup>29</sup> after which Republican Senate attendees confirmed their view that MBS had been complicit in the crime, and that Mr. Trump was covering that up.<sup>30</sup>	7, 9, 12
11-29-18	The Russia deal. In a series of statements to reporters, Mr. Trump issued a remarkable response to new allegations of a secret business relationship of his with Russia during the 2016 presidential campaign, at the very time when Russia was meddling with the election. Specifically, he was responding to the revelation that his former attorney Michael Cohen had admitted to special prosecutor Robert Mueller that he and Mr. Trump were pursuing a hotel licensing project in Moscow until June 2016 – well into the campaign – despite Mr. Trump having repeatedly told the public that he had no current Russian business dealings. [Continued below.]	7, 10, 12, 15

11-29-18	[Continued.] Cohen had told Mueller about the project in connection with admitting that he had lied to Congress on that topic when he had testified that negotiations for a Moscow deal had ended in January 2016. (Cohen had already pleaded guilty in August 2018 to tax evasion and to campaign finance violations, in having paid adult video actress and former Trump extra-marital girlfriend Stormy Daniels hush money at Mr. Trump's direction for purposes of influencing the election.) Cohen's new account of the Russia deal was reportedly corroborated by emails and other witnesses. Mr. Trump's response: Cohen was lying, so as to avoid further prison time (lying in what respect was unclear); the Moscow project wasn't a "deal" – only an "option" (but an option is in fact a deal, as every real estate professional and every entertainment personality knows); and even if Cohen was telling the truth, continuing to operate the Trump business during the campaign was technically legal (true). But most directly pertinent to this Chronology – Mr. Trump's behavior during his actual presidency – he falsely told the reporters that the secret Moscow deal had been widely known during his campaign. That is, he was now lying to the American people about having lied to the American people in 2016.<sup>31</sup> CSD and other observers also believed that he had been and now remained vulnerable to Russia blackmailing him over these and other untruths; and that he continued to place his business hopes with Russia ahead of his sworn obligations as president. As in some of Mr. Trump's other infractions, we would call that breach of duty treasonous. After the news of Cohen's latest admission broke, Mr. Trump abruptly postponed his imminent meeting with Russian President Vladimir Putin at the G-20 summit in Argentina, purportedly because of recent Russian-Ukrainian tensions. But the true reason was likely the political fall-out for Mr. Trump from Cohen's admission – which Russia, apparently miffed, noted after having learned of the postponement through Mr. Trump's Twitter feed. That is, blaming the Russia-Ukraine crisis was seemingly yet another falsehood on the part of Mr. Trump, and yet another diplomatic fumble.<sup>32</sup>	7, 10, 12, 15

11-29-18 +	Still gunning for Obamacare. On November 29, the Trump administration issued new advice to states, urging them to use federal insurance subsidies for policies other than the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") policies for which they had been statutorily intended – thus further undermining the ACA.<sup>33</sup> The administration had also again reduced the "navigator" program that offered help to subscribers during the year-end open enrollment period, and it had again starved open enrollment of an advertising budget.<sup>34</sup> On December 14, The Huffington Post reported that the administration had cut advertising with the actual knowledge that that action would likely reduce enrollment, and it recapped some of the administration's many attempts to cripple the ACA.<sup>35</sup> The same day, in a lawsuit brought by red state governments which Mr. Trump's Justice Department – contrary to nearly all department precedent – had declined to defend, a federal district judge ruled the ACA to be unconstitutional, thus threatening havoc for the nation's health care and health insurance systems.<sup>36</sup> As millions of Americans stood to lose insurance coverage should the court's decision survive the expected appeals, Mr. Trump gloated on Twitter. By the close of the open enrollment period, new enrollments had dropped 18% from the prior year, and overall enrollments had dropped 4%.<sup>37</sup> As ever, CSD does not take a position for or against the ACA. But we have long characterized Mr. Trump's war on that program – without having a substitute plan in place – as a personal vendetta against President Obama, effected for retributive and demagogic purposes, and likely to cause very real injury to the health of thousands of Americans.	9, 11

11-30-18	Putin and MBS, brothers in glee. Russian President Vladimir Putin and Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS) engaged in overtly warm camaraderie before cameras at the G-20 meeting in Argentina, including by exchanging laughter, grins and a high-five while other attendees were greeting one another more soberly.<sup>38</sup> Both men were being treated as pariahs by many Western countries for their recent notorious actions: MBS for having ordered the torture, murder and dismemberment of The Washington Post journalist Jamal Khashoggi in Turkey, and Putin for having fired on and impounded three Ukrainian naval vessels. The two leaders did not share a great deal geopolitically; Russia was aligned with Saudi enemies Syria and Iran. But both men had ordered the murders of journalists and expatriates, and in that they appeared to share an exceptional vision of governance. To CSD (and others), they also appeared to share and to rejoice in having, in recent days, seriously embarrassed and hog-tied Mr. Trump, who – to much U.S. domestic outrage – had declined to bring either of them to task for their misdeeds, as though in slavish servility toward both. A remarkable video of the MBS-Putin encounter appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>39</sup>	12; Making America Great (again)
11-30-18	Hatch Act round-up. NBC News recapped recent and earlier Hatch Act violations by Mr. Trump's staff. The Hatch Act forbids most federal employees from engaging in electoral campaign activities. Altogether the Office of Special Counsel (which is different from the office of the special counsel/prosecutor investigating Russian election meddling) had received well over a dozen Hatch Act complaints about Mr. Trump's staff; it had found violations in seven of those cases, including that of Mr. Trump's surrogate Kellyanne Conway; and it had issued warnings to the offenders.<sup>40</sup>	17 (9)

12-1-18	A confederacy of scoundrels. In the wake of breathtaking new developments in the criminal prosecutions of Mr. Trump's former campaign chairman Paul Manafort and his former attorney Michael Cohen, a Washington Post reporter listed a sordid array of senior advisors to Mr. Trump's 2016 presidential election campaign that seemed to have been drawn from a dark fantasy universe of liars and scoundrels as their misdeeds had been uncovered after the election, one by one: Manafort (international grifter and felon); Cohen (legal fixer and felon); Roger Stone (political trickster, conspiracy theorist and possible felon); Jerome Corsi (conspiracy theorist and possible felon); Rick Gates (a more garden variety felon); and George Papadopoulos (political wannabe and felon).<sup>41</sup> Citing the same list – plus Michael Flynn (felon) and a raft of additional aides – a New York Times reporter wrote, "Mr. Trump surrounded himself throughout 2016 and early 2017 with people to whom lying seemed to be second nature."<sup>42</sup> The Los Angeles Times wrote similarly.<sup>43</sup> CSD hesitates to project onto Mr. Trump any guilt-by-association with his many associates. But his own never-ending mendacity had spoken for itself; and an odor did emanate.	17 (7; and Making America Great, yet again)
12-3-18	Immigrants in the military. The Washington Post reported that the Trump administration's enhanced security screening of eager and able non-citizen recruits who held green cards had come to threaten low troop strength and even mission failure; had been enjoined by a federal judge as pointless; and at last had been suspended by the Pentagon.<sup>44</sup>	6
12-3-18	Obstruction. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump praised long-time friend, dark political trickster and conspiracy theorist Roger Stone<sup>45</sup> – now under investigation by special prosecutor Robert Mueller in connection with Russia's interference with the 2016 election – for having told ABC News the previous day that he (Stone) would never testify against Mr. Trump.<sup>46</sup> Mr. Trump also tweeted that his former attorney Michael Cohen, who was now cooperating with Mueller adversely to Mr. Trump, "should serve a full and complete sentence" for the felonies Cohen had committed in Mr. Trump's service.<sup>47</sup> In addition, Mr. Trump tweeted that in general Mueller was seeking lies, not the truth, from witnesses.<sup>48</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 12, 17 (9)

12-3-18	[Continued.] CSD believes that in all three tweets Mr. Trump, as the nation's chief law enforcement officer, was plainly and improperly reacting to processes and events that had placed him in legal jeopardy. More specifically, we found in those tweets attempts to criminally obstruct justice for his own benefit – by disparaging Mueller and his investigation; by encouraging a witness (Stone) to not cooperate with the special prosecutor; and by suggesting to a federal court, out of retribution, how it should punish a criminal (Cohen). The Stone and Cohen matters also evidenced Mr. Trump's continuing practice of dangling pardons in front of loyalists and seeking punishment for turncoats. The same morning, Mr. Trump's lawyer Rudy Giuliani denounced special prosecutor and Vietnam war hero Robert Mueller for "oppressive tactics that are un-American."<sup>49</sup> CSD believes that he was trying to discredit (and thus to obstruct) Mueller's discreet and painstaking investigation, which in earlier days Giuliani himself – once a federal prosecutor – would have almost certainly found exemplary.	2, 9, 12, 17 (9)
12-4-18	China trade madness. After Mr. Trump boasted only days previously at the G-20 summit in Argentina that China had acceded to all of his trade demands, and after the American stock market rose mildly in response, the Chinese disagreed with his claims; the administration waffled on them; the Chinese became confused; Mr. Trump threatened sharper tariffs; and the stock market suffered sharp losses.<sup>50</sup> CSD does not take a position on trade policy. But as for Mr. Trump's negotiating style, one former trade official said, “You don’t do this with the Chinese. You don’t triumphantly proclaim all their concessions in public. It’s just madness.”<sup>51</sup> As for the stock market, of course anything goes. But its sharp drop had nothing to do with Democratic electoral victories or Federal Reserve Bank interest rate hikes as Mr. Trump had been claiming in recent weeks. Rather, the drop was widely viewed as having resulted from Mr. Trump's exaggerated claims, chaotic pronouncements and injudicious threats relative to China, plus (according to Mr. Trump's own staff) from a slowing of global growth.<sup>52</sup>	7, 10, 11

12-4-18	Pompeo versus Europe. Speaking in Brussels, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo lauded Mr. Trump's antagonism toward multilateralism, cryptically insisting that an each-country-for-itself philosophy somehow makes the world safer and advances a liberal world order. Some of Pompeo's hallucinatory morsels: “This is the type of leadership that President Trump is boldly reasserting.” Also: “This is what President Trump is doing. He is returning the United States to its traditional central leadership in the world.” European diplomats scratched their heads and took offense.<sup>53</sup>	17 (14)
12-5-18	Saudi fees for service? The Washington Post reported that the Saudi Arabian government had spent lavishly to house an American veterans group at the Trump International Hotel in Washington during the months after Mr. Trump's election, in connection with a sustained, pro-Saudi congressional lobbying campaign in which the veterans had naively participated.<sup>54</sup> Those expenditures had come on top of lavish expenditures for stays by actual Saudi delegations at that hotel and at one of Mr. Trump's New York hotels, as chronicled by CSD on October 19 +. Mr. Trump had had many other business dealings with wealthy Saudis and the Saudi government as well.<sup>55</sup> He and his son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner appeared also to be positioned to receive major Saudi funding for their respective real estate ventures long after his presidential term would end. In all, the wide range of business conflicts of interest seemed to inform and to implicate Mr. Trump's kid glove treatment of the Saudi leadership following its recent murder of Washington Post columnist Jamal Khashoggi in Turkey.	12, 15
12-5-18 +	Behaving, but not welcome. On December 5, Mr. Trump was reportedly pleased that he had behaved politely at the memorial ceremony at the Washington National Cathedral for the recently deceased President George H.W. Bush – that is, pleased for having silently shaken hands as he had joined a string of living past presidents in their pew.<sup>56</sup> But despite their amity with one another, the past presidents received Mr. Trump coldly;<sup>57</sup> video showed him to be as isolated from them as he had been from world leaders in venues such as Paris and Argentina, having repeatedly and viciously insulted most of them (both past presidents and world leaders). [Continued below.]	7, 11, 12

12-5-18 +	[Continued.] Apparently bristling at the cold shoulder, at having endured praise of the late President Bush's character and the many coded rebukes for his own character that that praise had contained,<sup>58</sup> and at having not been the center of the country's attention during the ceremony, Mr. Trump soon afterwards tweeted a highly suspect statistic showing that his public approval rating had risen.<sup>59</sup> The next day, he tweeted that he would be even more popular but for "the phony Russia Witch Hunt."	7, 11, 12
12-6-18, 1-3-19	Undocumented at Bedminster. On December 6, The New York Times reported that a housekeeper who worked at Mr. Trump's Bedminster, New Jersey golf club, made his bed there and washed the orange makeup from his white shirts was an undocumented Guatemalan migrant. She said that many other undocumented migrants worked there as well, and The Times subsequently spoke with several of them. The workers' immigration status could have been determined had the club used the E-Verify electronic database that Mr. Trump had long urged all businesses to deploy – and that he had said throughout his election campaign that he used at all his properties – in connection with his incessant railing against irregular migration. "We don't have one illegal immigrant on the job," he had said. Reportedly, however, many of his clubs had foregone E-Verify – willfully turning a blind eye to the employment of undocumented workers, with a view to profiting from that.<sup>60</sup> On January 3, The Times reported that yet another undocumented worker at the club had come forward – this time a woman from Ecuador – claiming that club management had knowingly hid her undocumented status from the Secret Service during Mr. Trump's 2016 presidential campaign. The Times also wrote that, since its December report, the club (apparently diving for cover) had terminated about a dozen undocumented workers.<sup>61</sup> In recent decades, other national political figures had been found to have employed undocumented workers, and for that they had paid a political price.<sup>62</sup> But Mr. Trump seemed immune from even chagrin – despite having built the very core of his political message on combating undocumented immigration. CSD attributes his immunity to the climate of presidential entitlement and infallibility that Mr. Trump had worked to create for himself within parts of the electorate.	7, 9; and violation of immigration laws

12-6-18	Tillerson tells. Former Secretary of State Rex Tillerson told a crowd at a charity event that, while in office, he had had to frequently convince the uneducated, incurious and impulsive Mr. Trump to not break treaties and to not break the law. Mr. Trump lashed back, tweeting that Tillerson was "dumb as a rock" and "lazy as hell."<sup>63</sup>	9, 10, 11, 13, 14
12-7-18	Twitter vs. Mueller. In a series of five scathing tweets, Mr. Trump, in detail, denounced Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, special prosecutor Robert Mueller, and the "Witch Hunt" of their investigation into Russia's 2016 election interference – all as conflicted, corrupt, and blind to the offenses that he alleged against former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, former FBI Director James Comey, former Director of National Intelligence James Clapper, former CIA Director John Brennan, and others.	9, 11, 12
12-7-18	Barr and Nauert. Mr. Trump announced the appointment of William Barr as Attorney General, to replace former Attorney General Jeff Sessions and Acting Attorney General Matthew Whittaker. Barr had previously served as attorney general under President George H.W. Bush, and he thus was seen generally as a mainstream selection. But he had facilitated the undercutting of an earlier special prosecutor; he had written that Congress must not be allowed to usurp presidential power; like Mr. Trump, he had criticized special prosecutor Robert Mueller for hiring so many Democrats as staffers; he had spoken favorably about Mr. Trump's firing of former FBI Director James Comey and investigating Hillary Clinton – at one point stating that there was more basis to investigate Clinton than there was to investigate Mr. Trump for potential collusion with Russia; and just in June he had actually written a memorandum to the Justice Department criticizing the premises of Mueller's obstruction of justice investigation.<sup>64</sup> CSD feared that Mr. Trump chose Barr with a view to enhancing presidential authority, curtailing or ending Mueller's investigation of the 2016 Russian election meddling, and skewering if not prosecuting Clinton instead. Barr was also later revealed to have made the largest campaign donations of any Justice Department official in recent history – almost $600,000, to Republicans – despite having criticized some of Mueller's staff for having made far smaller donations to Democrats.<sup>65</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 11, 12, 13, 16 17 (6)

12-7-18	[Continued.] On the same day, Mr. Trump announced the appointment of Heather Nauert, a telegenic former Fox News pundit, to serve as ambassador to the United Nations – a position normally reserved in the U.S. and most major countries for distinguished scholars, diplomats and political figures. Her appointment was viewed as transforming the position in the U.S. from one of depth, diplomacy and respect for the UN's mission to one of communication, branding and loyalty to Mr. Trump.<sup>66</sup> Critics also pointed to prior Islamophobic comments and associations of hers.<sup>67</sup> At the time of the announcement, she was serving in a senior communications role in the State Department, having joined a list of at least eight Trump appointees drawn from Fox.<sup>68</sup> She also joined a long list of Trump supporter-appointees having no obvious qualifications for their positions.<sup>69</sup>	9, 11, 12, 13, 16 17 (6)
12-7-18 +	Prosecutors accuse the president of a felony. On December 7, federal prosecutors in the Southern District of New York implicitly accused Mr. Trump of a federal felony. Specifically, in a sentencing memorandum relating to his former attorney Michael Cohen, they alleged that Mr. Trump had directed Cohen to secretly pay hush money to adult film actress Stormy Daniels and to Playboy model Karen McDougal to suppress his affairs with them, with the intent of influencing the 2016 presidential election – a serious campaign finance violation. All other presidents who had been found by prosecutors to have committed a felony had either resigned under threat of impeachment (President Nixon) or had been impeached (President Clinton).<sup>70</sup> Some observers also characterized the secret payments as a fraud on the American electorate, which may have helped procure Mr. Trump's 2016 victory.<sup>71</sup> A contemporaneously released sentencing memorandum by special prosecutor Robert Mueller indicated that Cohen had been discussing with a Russian national a possible partnership with his government in influencing the election in November 2015, a substantially earlier date than had been previously known to the public. Mueller's memorandum also indicated that Cohen had discussed with Mr. Trump Cohen's continuing negotiations to build a Trump-branded hotel in Moscow well into the presidential campaign<sup>72</sup> – seemingly when Mr. Trump was publicly denying any current business dealings with Russia and while Russia was attempting to influence the election. [Continued below.]	An alleged presidential felony; alleged electoral fraud Also 7, 12, 17 (12)

12-7-18 +	[Continued.] Following those revelations, Mr. Trump falsely and incomprehensibly tweeted that the two memoranda had totally exonerated him. The next day he tweeted, "Time for the Witch Hunt to END!" On December 10 – by now seeming to acknowledge having secretly directed the hush money payments that he had originally denied having known about<sup>73</sup> – he tweeted that those payments amounted to "a simple private transaction," not a crime. On December 13, he tweeted that any campaign finance violation was (at worst) technical in nature and the fault of his lawyer (Cohen), whom he now claimed not to have directed to break the law. By Twitter and in speaking with reporters during that period, Mr. Trump repeatedly said that Cohen was lying in having stated that the purpose of the hush money had been to influence the election. But on December 12, federal prosecutors revealed that David Packer, the CEO of American Media Inc., had corroborated Cohen's allegation of intent to influence the election.<sup>74</sup> (AMI is the publisher of The National Enquirer, a lurid and theretofore pro-Trump tabloid that had facilitated and intermediated the payment to McDougal by arranging to "catch-and-kill" her story.) Both Cohen and Packer, formerly inveterate disinformation collaborators of Mr. Trump's, had thus now turned on him. Meanwhile, on December 9, The Washington Post had reported that some 14 of Mr. Trump's associates – including his campaign chairman, his longest serving political advisor, two of his children and one of his lawyers – were now known to have had contacts with Russian nationals about business and campaign matters during the campaign period. The Post found the nature and multiplicity of such contacts with an adversarial foreign power to have been extraordinary for a presidential campaign. (In public statements, Mr. Trump had long denied any and all such contacts.<sup>75</sup>) On December 10, CNN reported that the number of associates having had contact was 16, counting contacts during the transition period that had followed the electoral campaign.<sup>76</sup> On December 11, Mr. Trump told Reuters that he hadn't heard of the contacts before, but that in any event they had been "just peanut stuff."<sup>77</sup>	An alleged presidential felony; alleged electoral fraud Also 7, 12, 17 (12)

12-8-18 +	Kelly going; "my generals" almost gone. On December 8, Mr. Trump announced that retired Marine Corps general John Kelly – his chief of staff and former Homeland Security Secretary – would be leaving the White House. Reportedly the two men had long been feuding and had sometimes engaged in profane shouting matches. Mr. Trump had tired of Kelly's attempts to bring discipline to the White House, and Kelly had drawn the ire of numerous White House competitors, including Mr. Trump's daughter Ivanka and her husband Jared Kushner, both senior advisors. Despite having committed a number of public blunders regarding race and immigration, Kelly had been widely credited with providing a steadying hand and protecting national security from Mr. Trump's petulant, uninformed and capricious whims. Kelly was the second of Mr. Trump's chiefs of staff to depart, amid a historically high rate of overall staff turnover in an administration marked by instability and infighting.<sup>78</sup> In addition, out of four generals whom Mr. Trump had cumulatively appointed to Cabinet-level positions and whom he had referred to as "my generals," Kelly was the third to leave, following the departures of National Security Advisors Michael Flynn and then of Flynn's replacement H.R. McMaster. The fourth general, Defense Secretary James Mattis, was expected to leave shortly. For Mr. Trump to have appointed so many generals had been unusual; he reportedly had done so out of his infatuation with the military and its muscular leaders that he had selected "from central casting"; but in the end he couldn't abide their professionalism, even as he had compromised most or all of their reputations.<sup>79</sup> On the same day, Mr. Trump announced that he would replace the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, swapping out Marine General Joseph Dunford for Army General Mark Milley. Disturbing to the Pentagon was that Mattis had recommended a different general to replace Dunford; that Mr. Trump had made his announcement before telling Mattis, Dunford and Milley that he would do so; and that Dunford's term still had ten months remaining – a breach of protocol and national security in that it rendered Dunford a lame duck.<sup>80</sup> [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13

12-8-18 +	[Continued.] On December 12, a Washington Post columnist recapped the sordid fates of many of Mr. Trump's top aides to date: the three generals and one Wall Street titan (chief economic advisor Gary Cohen) who had been compromised and humiliated; five men (Flynn, attorney and fixer Michael Cohen, campaign chairman Paul Manafort, and campaign associates Rick Gates and George Papadopoulos) who had pleaded to or been found guilty of felonies; five aides (Cohen, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, Attorney General Jeff Sessions, and senior strategists Stephen Bannon and Omarosa Manigault Newman) whom Mr. Trump had publicly insulted after removing them; three Cabinet members (Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price, Veterans Affairs Secretary David Shulkin, and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt) who had been caught with their hands in the till; and three lawyers (John Dowd, Ty Cobb and Donald McGahn) who had been ingloriously dismissed.<sup>81</sup> More casualties were widely expected. On December 14, Mr. Trump named budget director and loyalist Mick Mulvaney to serve as acting chief of staff, after – very publicly and chaotically – having been unable to find anyone willing to take on the permanent (?) position as Kelly's replacement. Reportedly, candidates feared ineffectiveness, humiliation, dismissal and legal liability should they assume the position, as Mr. Trump's own legal exposure for various alleged misdeeds mounted.<sup>82</sup> On January 11, The New York Times reported that the turnover among Mr. Trump's top appointees was the highest of any president in history at the two-year point of the administration.<sup>83</sup>	10, 11, 13
12-8-18	French protests, terrorism. Mr. Trump gratuitously tweeted that street protests in France over taxes and the economy there were attributable to the international climate accord from which he had withdrawn but in which France had remained, and that the protestors were chanting "We want Trump!" None of that appeared to be true; and in any event it violated diplomatic decorum. The French government urged Mr. Trump to shut up.<sup>84</sup>	7, 10, 13

12-9-18	Blocking the UN climate report. At an international climate summit in Poland, Mr. Trump's negotiators joined those from authoritarian Russia, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia in blocking the endorsement of the recent study by the United Nations' Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change that had projected cataclysmic outcomes of continuing global warming.<sup>85</sup> (Mr. Trump had previously expressed skepticism about the study, as reported by CSD on October 9 +.)	8, 12
12-9-18	The greatest. Under what many observers thought to be materially increased pressure from the special prosecutor's investigation of Russian election meddling, Mr. Trump tweeted, delusionally: "The Trump Administration has accomplished more than any other U.S. Administration in its first two (not even) years of existence, &amp; we are having a great time doing it! All of this despite the Fake News Media, which has gone totally out of its mind-truly the Enemy of the People!"	1, 7, 11
12-10-18	"The Bottomless Pinocchio." The Washington Post's Fact Checker coined a new term to characterize some of Mr. Trump's persistent misstatements: "the Bottomless Pinocchio," which The Post said consisted of a falsehood that Mr. Trump had uttered at least 20 times – even after the falsehood had been exposed – with his presumed goal of seeking to establish it as reality.<sup>86</sup> The Post identified 14 Bottomless Pinocchios to date: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Maintaining that the Trump tax cut was the biggest in history (123 iterations).</li> <li>• Overstating the size of U.S. trade deficits (117 iterations).</li> <li>• Maintaining that the U.S. economy had never been stronger (99 iterations).</li> <li>• Inflating our NATO spending (87 iterations).</li> <li>• Maintaining that the U.S. had started building his proposed Mexican border wall (86 iterations).</li> <li>• Maintaining that the U.S. had the loosest immigration laws in the world – and thanks to Democrats (52 iterations).</li> <li>• Maintaining that Democrats colluded with Russia during the 2016 election campaign (42 iterations).</li> <li>• Maintaining that the border wall would stop drug trafficking (40 iterations). 12-10-18	Global migration compact: Never. Some 165 countries formally adopted the new United Nations' Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration – a non-binding document designed to reduce migrant chaos and suffering. The compact was not pro-migration, and it recognized countries' sovereignty and their rights to establish their own immigration policies. Still the Trump administration refused to sign, having rejected the initiative some months previous.<sup>87</sup> (See CSD's entry of July 13.)	6, 14
12-10-18, 12-15-18	Zinke going. On December 10, The Huffington Post reported that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had appointed David Jorjani, a political operative, to head his department's Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) compliance program. Jorjani, like Zinke, was known to favor the interests of extraction industries over the preservation of public lands, and he had written that his new job was to protect Zinke. But FOIA compliance is a statutory obligation for federal agencies; it's meant to be administered apolitically, and with a view to releasing information, not hiding it.<sup>88</sup> [Continued below.]	17 (9, 15, 16)

12-10-18, 12-15-18	[Continued.] The appointment, however, was too late to protect Zinke. On December 15, Mr. Trump announced Zinke's resignation, under a cloud of almost 20 investigations for self-dealing while in office, including a potentially criminal one.<sup>89</sup> In reporting the development, news media detailed Zinke's incessant ethical offenses and his affronts to the country's interior while serving as secretary (most or all of which CSD had previously logged in this Chronology).<sup>90</sup> Zinke's departure on self-dealing grounds followed that of Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt, and Veterans Affairs Secretary David Shulkin. Politico wrote: "The high turnover rate at the Cabinet level flows directly from President Donald Trump's own mixing of business and politics, said Walter Shaub, who stepped down as director of the Office of Government Ethics in July 2017 .... 'My experience with them was they said, 'Show me the exact rule that says you have to do exactly what you're saying,' and of course there's never an exact rule that says don't get into a land deal in Montana with an oil company [such as Zinke had done],' Shaub said."<sup>91</sup> The unprecedentedly high turnover among Mr. Trump's senior advisors was expected to continue.<sup>92</sup>	17 (9, 15, 16)
12-11-18	Ignoring intelligence. The Washington Post reported on the "mounting concern" and "extraordinary frustration" within American intelligence agencies over Mr. Trump's having ignored and discounted their findings on numerous topics: Russia's election interference, North Korea's nuclear missile program, Iran's ambitions, global climate change, the (non) threats posed by Latin American migrants, and the role of Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS) in the recent murder of a Post columnist in Turkey. Intelligence officials who interfaced with the White House found that "the disconnect between spy agencies and the president is without precedent." Officials who had briefed Mr. Trump had found his attention to wander, and had cited a "lack of comprehension."<sup>93</sup>	10, 13
12-11-18	Revoluting. Mr. Trump told Reuters that "the people would revolt" if he were impeached.<sup>94</sup> CSD viewed this as an early, conditional call for insurrection. [Continued below.]	5, 12, 13

12-11-18	Javanka's opportunity. The Associated Press reported that presidential advisors Ivanka Trump and her husband Jared Kushner could profit handsomely from a tax break known as the Opportunity and Revitalization program that Congress had established in 2017. The program allows real estate investors to escape certain income taxes if they invest in properties located in distressed urban zones. A Kushner company owned and was acquiring properties in such zones. Ms. Trump and Kushner had championed the program's proposed creation while serving in the White House.<sup>96</sup>	17 (15)
12-11-18	Unqualified judges. Vice President Mike Pence cast a tie-breaking vote in the Senate to confirm the appointment of a federal circuit court judge whom the American Bar Association had found to be unqualified for the position. That was the seventh of Mr. Trump's judicial nominees that the ABA had found to be unqualified; and other nominees of his had been scored for alleged racial or gender-related bigotry.<sup>97</sup> CSD assumes that the nominees had had attributes other than fair-minded jurisprudence that drew Mr. Trump to them.	2, 16
12-11-18 +	Intervening in justice. On December 11, for purposes of coaxing the Chinese government toward a favorable trade agreement, Mr. Trump suggested that he might stop the Justice Department's efforts to extradite from Canada a Chinese business executive whose company had allegedly violated U.S. trade sanctions on Iran. On December 16, Mr. Trump tweeted that he wanted to "review" the military proceedings being brought against a former Special Forces soldier who had admitted to murdering a prisoner in Afghanistan. Both interventions in the judicial process were extraordinary for a sitting president in recent decades (since President Nixon's abuses along those lines); and they exemplified Mr. Trump's disregard for traditional notions of separation of powers.<sup>98</sup>	2, 10

12-11-18 +	The wall; Pelosi and Schumer; winning. In a remarkable, live, televised negotiation and shouting match in the Oval Office on December 11, Mr. Trump threatened House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi and Senate Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer that he would be "proud" to shut down the government shortly if they didn't agree to fund his proposed Mexican border wall. He claimed that terrorists, criminals and contagion-carrying migrants were streaming into the U.S., and that he had already built large portions of the wall. None of that was true; and Pelosi and Schumer repeatedly challenged his factuality.<sup>99</sup> Mr. Trump had surprised Pelosi and Schumer with the live telecast, and he had insisted that it proceed over their televised objections<sup>100</sup> – presumably thinking that he would best them before a live global audience. But in fact they appeared to have gotten the better of him; and he reportedly stormed out of the office afterwards, flinging his briefing papers across the room.<sup>101</sup> Regardless of who may have "won," the episode diminished the office of the presidency, for the world to see. The following day, in reaction to a murderous terrorist attack in Strasbourg, France, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Another very bad terror attack in France. We are going to strengthen our borders even more. Chuck and Nancy must give us the votes to get additional Border Security!" He did not publicly offer the French either consolation or assistance;<sup>102</sup> rather, he appeared to remain fixed mainly upon (in his own frequent words) winning and winning. On December 13, Mr. Trump claimed an alternative victory relative to the wall. He tweeted, as he had long sworn to his campaign rally audiences, that Mexico would pay for the wall's construction – although now through "the money we save" by way of the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA). That compact, which he had recently negotiated, had not yet been approved by Congress. In any event, he did not suggest how the savings (whose?) would translate into free U.S. government revenues necessary to fund the $25-60 billion construction project, and his claim failed a New York Times fact-check.<sup>103</sup>	6, 7, 9, 10, 11

12-13-18	The Senate rebukes the president on MBS. The Senate adopted a unanimous resolution condemning Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS) for ordering the murder of The Washington Post's columnist Jamal Khashoggi in Turkey. The resolution was an extraordinary rebuke of Mr. Trump's continued embrace of the authoritarian MBS. On the same day, a majority of Senators resolved to cut American funding of Saudi Arabia's atrocity-riddled war in Yemen. That too was an extraordinary rebuke of Mr. Trump's embrace of the man.<sup>104</sup>	12
12-13-18 +	Inaugural crimes (and many others) investigated. On December 13, The Wall Street Journal reported that federal prosecutors were investigating Mr. Trump's inaugural committee for having misspent funds and having promised political favors to donors.<sup>105</sup> On the same day, The New York Times reported that prosecutors were investigating whether donors from Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates had secretly and illegally funded Mr. Trump's inaugural committee and a pro-Trump SuperPAC in hopes of buying influence with the president.<sup>106</sup> On December 14, ProPublica reported that the Trump Organization was alleged to have sought to illegally overcharge the inaugural committee for event space at the Trump International Hotel in Washington, possibly violating tax laws forbidding self-dealing by a non-profit's insiders (in this case, Mr. Trump).<sup>107</sup> CSD does not speculate as to the outcome of the investigations; and the reports do not allege that Mr. Trump was personally involved in the three affairs. But across all three, we sense a common thread, or environment, of graft and unlawful self-enrichment. In the days following the reports, news media noted the breathtaking number of Trump-related entities and individuals that had drawn investigations or lawsuits since the 2016 election: Trump University, the Trump Organization, the Trump election campaign, the Trump transition team, the Trump inauguration committee, the Trump Foundation, many individual figures in the Trump campaign and administration, and Mr. Trump himself. The topics included Russian election meddling; violations of tax, charity and campaign finance laws; self-dealing; consumer fraud; and lying about sexual adventures.<sup>108</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 11, 15, 16, 17 (9, 11, 15, 16)

12-13-18 +	[Continued.] Here too we don't speculate on the outcomes (except as to the "university," which had settled its fraud suit); but we note the breadth and pervasiveness of the scrutinized activities. We also note that Mr. Trump had been resisting many of the pertinent investigations – rather than embracing them, as an innocent man might have done. But the above activities that may have violated or closely skirted the law were even more troubling, given Mr. Trump's many campaign boasts in which he had promised to become the "law and order president," as captured in a CNN video appearing at the link at this endnote.<sup>109</sup> To be clear, CSD is troubled less by Mr. Trump's hypocrisy than by his authoritarian view of the law: that it exists to punish others, and to insulate himself. We also note a December 6 report by Forbes magazine that Mr. Trump – unconventionally but openly – had enriched himself handsomely through donations to his 2020 re-election campaign. Forbes wrote: "On the day Donald Trump became president of the United States, while inauguration festivities were still in full swing, he officially launched his 2020 reelection campaign. Donations poured in from more than 50,000 people across the country. But according to the latest federal filings, Trump still has not donated a penny of his own, while his businesses continued to charge the campaign for hotels, food, rent and legal consulting. That means the richest president in American history has turned $1.1 million from donors across the country into revenue for himself."<sup>110</sup>	9, 11, 15, 16, 17 (9, 11, 15, 16)
12-15-18, 12-29-18	Witch-hunting the FBI. Continuing his own witch hunt against the Justice Department's investigations of his activities, on December 15 Mr. Trump tweeted that the department had deliberately erased 19,000 text messages by department staff who had been critical of him. In fact the FBI's office of inspector general and an assistant attorney general appointed by Mr. Trump himself had determined that the deletion had resulted from an inadvertent technological glitch, and that the texts had been recovered. On December 29, again via Twitter, Mr. Trump repeated the canard.	7, 9

12-15-18 +	Stop the presses! On December 15, Mr. Trump tweeted his elation that the Weekly Standard – a respected, mainstream conservative publication that had frequently criticized him – had closed. The following day, he tweeted that the "unfair news coverage" of him by some television networks "should be tested in courts, can't be legal?" His clear implication was that mainstream networks should be censored and prosecuted, while he would continue to use Fox News as his personal propaganda arm.	1, 9
12-18-18	Another whipping. Mr. Trump warned the Federal Reserve Bank that it would be making a "mistake" if it proceeded with its program of raising interest rates – a continuing breach on his part of the presidential practice of staying out of the Fed's business.	9, 11
12-18-18	Good luck for a felon. Mr. Trump tweeted "good luck" to his former national security advisor Michael Flynn in advance of the latter's sentencing hearing. Flynn had pleaded guilty to having lied to the FBI about having secretly and illegally communicated with Russian officials while serving on Mr. Trump's transition team. In that tweet, Mr. Trump also suggested that Flynn had been railroaded by the Justice Department. Mr. Trump thereby derogated the Justice Department, the requirement that citizens tell the truth to the FBI, and the obligation of federal officials to serve only one country: the United States. He also appeared, unconstitutionally, to be trying to influence Flynn's sentencing.	2, 9, 12, 17 (7, 12)
12-18-18	"Deep state" (jailhouse) blues. The New York Times reported that an increasing number of low-level officials around the country, recently accused of criminal behavior, had been following Mr. Trump's lead in blaming the "deep state" for wrongly persecuting them.<sup>111</sup> To CSD's mind, Mr. Trump's conspiracy theory had thus become not only a motivation or excuse for illegal behavior and fertile ground for bad faith forensic defenses, but a cultural and political movement with anarchic potential.	7, 9, 17 (7, 9)

12-19-18	Asylum remains. On December 19, a federal judge struck down a recent Trump administration policy that had categorically barred Central American migrants from seeking asylum based on domestic or gang violence. Another judge had previously struck down Mr. Trump's recent order to deny asylum to migrants who had crossed the border irregularly; and on December 21 the Supreme Court let that ruling stand.<sup>112</sup> (The irregular crossings appeared at least in part to be due to processing slow-downs experienced by migrants at official ports of entry, whether intentional or for want of federal resources.)	6, 9, 14
12-19-18	Truth vs. the wall. Mr. Trump tweeted: "Mexico is paying (indirectly) for the Wall through the new USMCA, the replacement for NAFTA! Far more money coming to the U.S. Because of the tremendous dangers at the Border, including large scale criminal and drug inflow, the United States Military will build the Wall!" None of that was true: the new trade agreement with Mexico (not yet approved by Congress) had not remotely promised that greater commercial revenues for U.S. enterprises would translate to funds for building the wall; no credibility had adhered to Mr. Trump's promise that the wall would stop the flow of drugs; and Mr. Trump lacked the funding and the authority to direct the military to build the wall.	6, 7, 9
12-19-18	The Russia letter. CNN revealed a non-binding letter of intent to build a Trump-branded hotel in Moscow signed by Mr. Trump and a Russian. The letter was dated October 28, 2015, when Mr. Trump was campaigning for the presidency and denying that he had any business dealings in Russia.<sup>113</sup> The letter stood as further evidence that the Russian government had ammunition with which to blackmail Mr. Trump, and that he had thus treasonously cultivated and appeased Russia relative to its foreign aggression and American election interference for his personal self-interest.	7, 12, 15

12-19-18	Persecuted, at the foundation. Mr. Trump tweeted that he had been victimized by political persecution the previous day when New York's attorney general had shut down his family foundation for its "shocking pattern of illegality." The foundation was found to have served Mr. Trump and his family – for years, up through the 2016 election – as a funnel for self-dealing and illegal political activities, and to have been operated with flagrant fiduciary dereliction.<sup>114</sup> The state took over the foundation's assets for distribution to legitimate charities, rather than allowing Mr. Trump himself to make further self-serving distributions. CSD again reminds itself and its readers that Mr. Trump is the nation's chief law enforcement officer.	7, 9, 11
12-19-18 +	Leaving Syria (to Russia); Leaving Afghanistan. On December 19, Mr. Trump tweeted that he was immediately pulling all American troops out of Syria, because ISIS had been defeated there. The tweet reportedly blindsided the secretary of state, the secretary of defense, the national security advisor, the American envoy to Syria, and Republican leaders in the Senate, all of whom had publicly advocated for the troops to remain in theatre. They had also disagreed that ISIS, with 30,000 fighters still at large, had been defeated. The 70 countries that were partners with the U.S. in its Syria effort also were taken by surprise, as was the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Israel too was alarmed. But the Turkish government had been notified and was pleased, in that it could now obliterate Kurdish forces in Syria that the U.S. had been supporting. The precipitous removal of U.S. forces was widely viewed as an invitation to chaos and atrocity, as well as the ascent of Russia, Iran and ISIS in Syria – and all for the benefit of Mr. Trump's appeal to isolationist elements within his political base.<sup>115</sup> Republican and Democratic senators erupted with shock and concern.<sup>116</sup> Other commentators and analysts viewed Mr. Trump's decision as a gift to Russia, which had been ruthlessly propping up Syria, both militarily and diplomatically.<sup>117</sup> Indeed, Russian President Vladimir Putin was quick to praise Mr. Trump's decision and his conclusion that ISIS had been defeated. "On this, Donald is right. I agree with him," Putin fraternally said.<sup>118</sup> A Russian foreign affairs analyst wrote, "Trump is God's gift that keeps on giving."<sup>119</sup> CSD fears that (but cannot know whether) Mr. Trump's gift was intentional. 12-19-18 +	[Continued.] On December 20, news media reported that Mr. Trump had ordered the reduction of American troop strength in Afghanistan by half – surprising and alarming Afghan and American commanders and, as in Syria, threatening chaos on the ground. The move seemed impulsive and unplanned, particularly relative to newly promising peace talks that were occurring with Taliban militants in that country.<sup>120</sup> America's allies in Asia expressed alarm at the loss of U.S. leadership in advancing stability in the region.<sup>121</sup> The announced withdrawals from Syria and Afghanistan were so unplanned that as of December 23, top generals still had no idea what the actual withdrawal plans were.<sup>122</sup> On January 6, National Security Advisor John Bolton flatly contradicted Mr. Trump, stating that the U.S. wouldn't leave Syria until ISIS was eradicated and Turkey had guaranteed the safety of Kurdish forces.<sup>123</sup> Mr. Trump appeared to concede the point, but denied that his position had changed.<sup>124</sup> On January 8, Turkish President Recep Erdogan expressly threatened to attack the Kurds; in what was considered a snub, he refused to meet with Bolton, who was in-country for talks about the withdrawal; and the entire diplomatic situation fell into disarray.<sup>125</sup> On January 11, a New York Times report characterized the withdrawal itself, which by then had hastily begun, as occurring in "a climate of chaos."<sup>126</sup>	7, 10, 12, 13

12-20-18 +	Mattis going. On December 20, Defense Secretary James Mattis – the last of the four senior aides whom Mr. Trump had described as "my generals" – submitted his resignation, in a letter in which he detailed some of his disagreements with Mr. Trump. Those disagreements had previously been reported as including Mr. Trump's coddling of Russia and China, his militarization of the Mexican border, his ban on transgender troops, his insulting of NATO allies, his embrace of North Korea, his choice of a new chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, his call for torture during military interrogations, his quest for a military parade, his proposal for a Space Force, his withdrawal from the Iran nuclear accord, and just the previous day – reportedly the last straw for Mattis – his announced withdrawal from Syria.<sup>127</sup> Mattis's resignation letter made clear that he thought Mr. Trump threatened the world order that the U.S. had helped create decades ago. Never before had a defense secretary publicly resigned on policy principles. Commentators characterized Mattis's letter as being of historic proportion.<sup>128</sup> Senators from both parties reeled from what they considered to be the loss of a moderating voice in the White House amid the mounting chaos there. The chaos involved the departures of so many senior officials (including the chief of staff); the multiform investigations and legal actions being brought against Mr. Trump and his associates (and the sordid revelations those investigations and actions had generated); the ethical and legal scrutiny that Mr. Trump was expected to face from the new Democratic House majority; the ceding of Syria to Russia; an imminent partial shutdown of the government precipitated by Mr. Trump's insistence that Congress fund his border wall; and a plummeting stock market (itself widely attributed in part to Mr. Trump's trade provocations and his shutdown threats). Many times before, the administration's chaos had alarmed observers; but with Mattis leaving, the alarm grew. Mr. Trump now appeared to have rid himself of all independent-minded advisors, leaving him ever more likely to isolate the U.S., abandon international principles, and otherwise run amok – all for purposes of his domestic political self-aggrandizement, and his personal psychological needs.<sup>129</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 10, 13

12-20-18 +	[Continued.] On December 21, in another extraordinary development, Brett McGurk, the American envoy to the international coalition fighting ISIS, likewise resigned in protest over Mr. Trump’s decision to withdraw from Syria.<sup>130</sup> In response to that resignation, Mr. Trump tweeted: "The Fake News is making such a big deal about this nothing event!" He also tweeted that he didn't know McGurk, a derisive charge that he had commonly leveled against people whom he considered unimportant and inferior. But in that McGurk had led the effort against ISIS that Mr. Trump had claimed was so successful, his assertion that he didn't know McGurk seemed at once ignorant, incoherent, ungracious – and if true, a reflection of dereliction of duty on the part of the commander in chief.<sup>131</sup> On December 23, incensed by Mattis's letter, Mr. Trump ordered him to leave almost immediately – two months before his scheduled departure date – thus depriving the Pentagon, the White House and Mattis's successor of a transition period.<sup>132</sup> On December 31, in a valedictory memorandum to the armed forces, Mattis urged them to "keep the faith in our country and hold fast, alongside our allies, aligned against our foes." That reflected the traditional role of the military in its foreign operations; and it was a rebuke of Mr. Trump's rejection of our allies. But in addition, Mattis urged the troops "to support and defend the Constitution while protecting our way of life."<sup>133</sup> To CSD's mind that message was pointedly domestic. Although we could be mistaken, we could only read it as an admonition that the military could be called upon to stand in the way of Mr. Trump's assault on our democracy. We didn't know whether to be more disturbed by the illness, or by the potential cure. On January 2, Mr. Trump reacted by publicly disparaging Mattis.<sup>134</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 10, 13
-------------------	---	------------------

12-20-18 +	[Continued.] A January 9 column in The Washington Post undertook to explain why the marriage between Mr. Trump and "his" generals had so grandly failed. The (conservative) columnist wrote that generals read, analyze, prepare, live by an honor code, and are dedicated to America and our allies; while Mr. Trump had eschewed all of that. The writer continued: "With his insufferable boastfulness, Trump claimed, 'I think I would have been a good general.' Actually, he would never have made it to first lieutenant, because his me-first ethos is so at odds with the military's stress on service and sacrifice. All that Trump knows about the military seems to come from movies such as 'Patton' and 'Bloodsport.'"<sup>135</sup>	1, 10, 13
12-20-18	Whitaker unchained. Acting Attorney General Matthew Whitaker cleared himself to supervise the special prosecutor's investigation of Russian election meddling, rejecting the advice of career Justice Department ethics specialists that he recuse himself due to his past comments on the matter. Because he had been antagonistic to the investigation, it seemed to have become newly imperiled.<sup>136</sup>	17 (9)
12-21-18	The sage of technology. In arguing that only a physical wall and not technological tools would keep migrants from crossing the border, Mr. Trump tweeted, "I know tech better than anyone ...." The remark hearkened back to his campaign boast that he knew "more about ISIS than the generals." Mr. Trump does not use a computer or email, and CSD believes that he likely knows less about technology than the average American.	7, 11
12-21-18 +	The sage of economics. News media began reporting that Mr. Trump – enraged by the stock market's continuing fall – had asked aides whether he lawfully could fire Federal Reserve Bank Chairman Jerome Powell for having raised interest rates and thus having arguably contributed to the fall. (Other contributing factors often cited in the general and financial news: Mr. Trump's trade wars, Mr. Trump's government shutdown, Mr. Trump's mega-deficit budget, the waning sugar-high of Mr. Trump's tax cuts, slowing corporate profits, and slowing global growth.<sup>137</sup>) Mr. Trump's desire to fire Powell was doubly discordant: he was Mr. Trump's own appointee; and in his position he was legally tasked with independence from political and executive pressure. [Continued below.]	8, 9, 10, 11

12-21-18 +	[Continued.] Business and political figures reacted to the reports of Powell's peril with alarm, believing that any such firing would be illegal; would amount to a rejection of economic science; would compromise domestic and foreign faith in the American government's management of its economy; would signal that that economy was in worse condition than was otherwise believed; and thus would likely depress the market even more. In all, the idea of firing Powell was seen as authoritarian, counterproductive and even idiotic. But it was also seen as a baldly cynical political endeavor: to blame Powell for the down market (after Mr. Trump had long claimed credit for the up market during most of his presidency), and to replace him with a low-interest-rate servant (even at the risk of sparking a ruinous inflation). That is, Mr. Trump – once again, as in countless other areas – was seen as seeking to advance his own short-term political interests even if that would devastate the country.<sup>138</sup>	8, 9, 10, 11
12-21-18 +	The shutdown. Having forced a government shutdown over his demand that Congress fund part of his proposed Mexican border wall, on December 21 Mr. Trump continued to lash out at undocumented migrants – now in a scaremongering video that he tweeted about gang members and traffickers. In another tweet, following his custom of blaming anything and everything on others, he faulted Democrats for the shutdown – even though only days earlier he had explicitly told Democratic Senator Chuck Schumer in a televised White House meeting that he (Mr. Trump), not the Democrats, would be "proud" to own any such debacle. He now expressed no regret as to the federal workers who were losing pay over the Christmas holidays, the tremendous dollar cost of the shutdown, the interruption in the delivery of federal services to the American people, or the risk to American securities markets and the economy that the shutdown could portend. Rather, in the view of many commentators, the shutdown was entirely about Mr. Trump's wall; his hopes for reelection; his fear of impeachment if he were to lose face with his base; and his inveterate refusal to back down, on anything. For CSD, it was also proof of the xenophobic and racially-driven core of his presidency.<sup>139</sup>	6, 9, 10, 11

12-24-18, 1-11-19	Information enterprises hurting. On December 24, The Wall Street Journal reported that Mr. Trump's hostility to immigrants had contributed to a sharp drop in the number of foreign students seeking college and university educations in the U.S., with dangerous consequences for both research and national security.<sup>140</sup> Previous reports – also linking the drop to Mr. Trump's anti-immigrant stance – had noted that the loss of foreign students paying full-freight tuition had come to threaten scholarship funding for American students; had even threatened the solvency of some colleges; and had enriched and otherwise benefited colleges and universities in other countries which the foreign students had begun attending instead. Similarly, on January 11, The Washington Post reported that American tech industries were in a "panic" because Mr. Trump's proposals to limit tech visas was driving tech workers to Canada.<sup>141</sup>	6, 9, 10
12-24-18, 12-25-18	The president's Christmas. Isolated, nearly alone in the White House, and under pressure on many political, economic, strategic, legal and ethical fronts, Mr. Trump spent much of the morning before Christmas, on Twitter, blaming others: Defense Secretary James Mattis (whom he had just fired) for "subsidizing" allied militaries; Republican Senator and Trump critic "Little Bob Corker" and ISIS point man Brett McGurk (who had just resigned in protest over Mr. Trump's Syria withdrawal) for President Obama's Iran nuclear deal; Federal Reserve Bank chair Jerome Powell for the stock market's continuing plunge; and congressional Democrats for the continuing government shutdown that he himself had forced over his demand for Mexican border wall funding. The stock market responded to the tweets by plunging even further, reportedly out of fear for Mr. Trump's capricious meddling with the Fed's operations.<sup>142</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11, 13

12-24-18, 12-25-18	[Continued.] On Christmas Day, speaking to reporters at the White House, Mr. Trump continued to lobby for his border wall, blame Democrats for the shutdown, and falsely insist that the wall was already being built. He (improbably) said that furloughed federal workers supported him in the shutdown. He blasted the special prosecutor's investigation of Russian election meddling, repeating his frequent claims that he had not colluded with the Russians but that Democrats had. He said that investigations by congressional oversight committees to be newly controlled by Democrats could amount to "presidential harassment," which he knew "how to handle better than anybody else." He closed: "It's a disgrace what's happening in this country. But, other than that, I wish everybody a Merry Christmas."<sup>143</sup> CSD reminds itself and its readers that Mr. Trump, during his presidency, had yet to admit his own error in anything.	7, 9, 10, 11, 13
12-26-18	In Iraq. After months of public pressure to visit America's deployed troops, Mr. Trump flew to Iraq. The visit was marred by a number of irregularities: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• His failure to entirely protect the secrecy of his flight itinerary, thus creating a security risk for the U.S.</li> <li>• His insult to Iraqi leaders by having entered their sovereign territory without coordinating or meeting with them.</li> <li>• His complaint that the flight into the country was nerve-wracking (he had previously boasted about his physical courage, and he seemed insensitive to the routinely nerve-wracking life of a soldier in theatre).</li> <li>• His signing Trump campaign hats and condemning Democrats over his proposed Mexican border wall when addressing the troops (an improper politicization of a military address, such as he had done often before).</li> <li>• His revelation of a covert Navy Seal deployment (he had also spilled classified information several times in the past).</li> <li>• His wild overstatement of pay raises that he claimed to have procured for the armed forces.<sup>144</sup></li> </ul> In sum, notwithstanding the bombast and photo-ops, when he finally traveled to the field Mr. Trump betrayed his signature amateurism, insincerity, counter-productivity, demagoguery, selfishness, and aversion to physical risk.	7, 9, 10, 11

12-27-28, 12-28-18	A-twitter over the wall. On December 27, Mr. Trump tweeted excitedly that the U.S. needed his proposed border wall "to stop Drugs, Human Trafficking, Gang Members &amp; Criminals from coming into our Country." Presumably referring to the federal shutdown pursuant to which he had caused hundreds of thousands of workers to be furloughed and hundreds of thousands more to work without pay – all as a means to secure congressional funding for the wall<sup>145</sup> – he then added, without evidence: "Do the Dems realize that most of the people not getting paid are Democrats?" However devoid of fact, the comment appeared to CSD to be a signal to his Republican base that they themselves were not being hurt by the shutdown; that is, that the shutdown was a political but legitimate punishment for his and their antagonists, and that his base should rejoice rather than worry. Any such partisan punishment, of course, would be unconstitutional; and the very idea of it was repellent. On December 28, again by Twitter, Mr. Trump threatened that if the wall were not built he would "close the southern border." But whatever such an undertaking might mean relative to the border's lawful, routine and vast level of personal and commercial cross-traffic, it could clearly not sustain legal scrutiny.<sup>146</sup> He also threatened to cut off aid to Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador – the migrants' countries of origin – which undertaking most observers believed would actually spur more migration to the U.S. He also railed against Mexico for stealing American jobs. On December 29, Mr. Trump tweeted that the recent deaths of two migrant children in the custody of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) – an agency operating under his own two-year-long border enforcement policies – were "strictly the fault of the Democrats and their pathetic immigration policies that allow people to make the long trek thinking they can enter our country illegally. They can't. If we had a Wall, they wouldn't even try!" Absent from his messaging was any expression of regret or condolence relative to the tragedies – only a gaming of the children's deaths, politically.<sup>147</sup> Taken as a whole, the series of tweets indicated to CSD that Mr. Trump was not just confused and inflammatory but genuinely, personally enraged: and at large categories of people (Democrats and brown migrants).	6, 7, 9, 10, 11

12-29-18 +	Triple untruths. On December 30, The Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now told almost three times as many untruths in 2018 as in 2017, for a cumulative total of over 7,600 during his presidency, or an average of 15 per day. Yet, frighteningly, a full 36% of voters still found him to be "honest" – in CSD's view, the ultimate index of his success as a demagogue. The Post's stark analysis of the nature and content of the falsehoods appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>148</sup> The Post's report followed a December 29, year-end analysis in The New York Times of Mr. Trump's patterns in falsehood, including his repeating his own falsehoods until they might appear to many to be true, and embellishing them into ever greater untruths.<sup>149</sup> On December 31, Politico reported statistics on Mr. Trump's profligate tweeting to his 56.6 million followers: 2843 tweets in 2018, including 22 on August 29 alone. He had promoted himself or his administration in 52% of the instances, attacked adversaries in 32%, and in many other instances both. Favorite Twitter themes (hundreds of instances for most of the following) included his proposed Mexican border wall (good), Fox News (good), his relations with China and North Korea (good), President Obama (bad), Hillary Clinton (bad), the "Fake News" (bad), and special prosecutor Robert Mueller's "Witch Hunt" (bad). Some 440 times he tweeted in ALL CAPITAL LETTERS.<sup>150</sup> Politico also published a more general statistical compendium of Mr. Trump's 2018 experience, which included 44 campaign rallies, 67 golf outings, and an 18% increase in the trade deficit that he had so demonized.<sup>151</sup> The above statistics were complemented by yet another startling array of numbers, as compiled by Bustle: 41 senior firings and resignations from Mr. Trump's administration; 17 investigations related to Mr. Trump and his campaign; and 36 charges and 10 guilty pleas or convictions issuing from special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigations alone.<sup>152</sup>	6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 17 (12, 15)

12-31-18	New Year's revelry. Guests paid $1,000 per ticket to attend a New Year's Eve party at Mar-a-Lago, Mr. Trump's home and commercial resort in Florida. Mr. Trump himself had planned to attend; he did not; but presumably most or all of the guests had hoped to see him there. That is, he stood to gross for his business tens or hundreds of thousands of dollars by selling presidential celebrity and access.<sup>153</sup>	15
1-1-19	New Year's tidings. On New Year's Day, Mr. Trump blazed away on Twitter: thrashing Democrats for not agreeing to fund his proposed border wall; praising his former white nationalist advisor Sebastian Gorka; congratulating Brazil's new racist, sexist, anti-environmental and proto-fascist President Jair Bolsonaro<sup>154</sup> on his inauguration; and insulting the former Afghanistan commander, retired general Stanley McChrystal (for having publicly called Mr. Trump untruthful and immoral). After having once declared himself "the most militaristic" president, and having initially surrounded himself with three decorated generals in cabinet-level positions, Mr. Trump had now dismissed and/or disparaged not just McChrystal, but also his former defense secretary (and a retired general) James Mattis, his former homeland security secretary then chief of staff (and a retired general) John Kelly, his former national security advisor (and a retired general) H.R. McMaster, retired admiral William McRaven, and retired general John Allen – all of whom had disagreed with him in public and/or in private. At issue had been not only Mr. Trump's violation of codes of honesty and integrity to which those distinguished military leaders had dedicated their lives, but Mr. Trump's perilous refusal to grasp issues, and to heed the advice of national security experts if they had challenged his thinking or sought to rein him in. But through all of this, Mr. Trump had continued to support his first national security advisor (and a retired general) Michael Flynn, who had pleaded guilty to lying to Congress in connection with his dealings with foreign governments while serving on Mr. Trump's campaign and transition teams.<sup>155</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17 (6)

1-1-19	[Continued.] The implications, for CSD: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump valued military figures for decoration, not for advice.</li> <li>• He valued loyal but corrupt figures more than independent and honorable ones.</li> <li>• He ultimately had no respect for the military (or American security) whatever.</li> </ul>	6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17 (6)
1-2-19	With the Cabinet. Mr. Trump held a televised meeting with his Cabinet members. Remarkably, the group included five acting members who were filling in for departed officials. The attendees were mostly silent, although some spoke adoringly of the president. But Mr. Trump distinguished himself as well. He: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Conducted the session with a poster oddly depicting himself as an action-movie hero and planted oddly before him on the conference table.</li> <li>• Spoke disparagingly to the Cabinet members of their former colleague, Defense Secretary James Mattis – gone from his position for only a day since resigning over what he had perceived as Mr. Trump's incompetence and absence of principle – including by asking rhetorically as to Mattis, "What's he done for me?" (To CSD, the scene resembled the aftermath of a Soviet purge, in which surviving apparatchiks witnessed the denunciation of the most recent victim.)</li> <li>• Preposterously claimed that he was popular with European leaders.</li> <li>• Turned American policy on its head by stating that the Soviet Union had been right to have invaded Afghanistan in 1979, and by implicitly inviting Russia to replace the U.S. in that country today (comparable to his having ceded Syria to Russia).</li> <li>• Offered free rein to Iran in Syria (at extraordinary peril to Israel, among other things).</li> <li>• Mocked U.S. allies for what he considered to be their paltry contributions to America's wars in the Middle East.</li> <li>• Said that he knew more about drones than anyone (thus adding to the long list of topics as to which he had claimed to know more about than anyone else, as compiled by NBC on video at the link at this endnote<sup>156</sup>) . [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	7, 9, 11, 12, 13

1-2-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Said that he would have been a good general (despite having avoided the draft in his youth, and having reportedly shown little interest in the details of military strategy or tactics as president).</li> <li>• Spoke of this military episode: "I had a meeting at the Pentagon with lots of generals. They were like from a movie. Better looking than Tom Cruise, &amp; stronger. And I had more generals than I've ever seen ...."</li> <li>• Complained about having spent the holidays alone at the White House (as he had done by Twitter some days earlier).</li> <li>• Claimed that there were 30 million undocumented immigrants in the U.S. – nearly triple the actual number.</li> <li>• Said that he worked harder than other presidents (when in fact he had taken more vacation days than any other recent occupant of the White House).</li> </ul> CSD feels compelled to observe that while all of this had come to seem normal during Mr. Trump's presidency, in fact it was abnormal. No previous president had so boasted, preened, insulted, wandered, erred and misled before a televised Cabinet meeting.<sup>157</sup> And as one Washington Post editor compellingly wrote afterwards, it was difficult to imagine that the leaders of China and Russia were not smirking and shrewdly calculating for geopolitical advantage in the face of Mr. Trump's isolation, ignorance, impulsiveness, administrative chaos, indulgence of our enemies, disdain for our allies, rejection of expert strategic advice, and (CSD would add) domestic political turmoil, market and economic uncertainties, and diplomatic and national security vacancies.<sup>158</sup>	7, 9, 11, 12, 13
1-3-19, 1-4-19	The stock market and me (again). On January 3, a Democratic majority officially took control of the House of Representatives. By coincidence that day, fears of a U.S. and global economic slowdown (caused in part by Mr. Trump's trade wars, commentators widely believed) sent the American stock market plunging.<sup>159</sup> Tweeting at 8:00 the following morning, Mr. Trump blamed the market's drop on the Democrats' ascent to power. But within hours the market rose sharply, more than erasing the previous day's losses, and oblivious to Democratic control of the House. [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11

1-3-19, 1-4-19	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's flawed market analysis reflected his ongoing practice of blaming others for the market's bad days, after having taken credit himself for its string of good days earlier in his term. CSD had described that pattern – within this Addendum alone – in our entries of November 27, December 4, December 20, December 21 and December 24-25 above. Previous, wiser presidents had mostly declined to comment on the market's vicissitudes.	7, 9, 10, 11
1-4-19	The hotels of Mississippi. The Washington Post provided an update on the attempts by Mr. Trump's real estate company, currently led by his sons Donald Jr. and Eric, to develop a chain of hotels in parts of the country where Mr. Trump was politically popular. (See p. 6 of CSD's original Specific Concerns at the beginning of this Chronology.) The Post's update indicated that Mr. Trump's legal and political problems had confined the projects so far to Mississippi, where he indeed had remained popular.<sup>160</sup> For CSD, the project's poor performance re-confirmed its underlying premise: that the plan was to trade on Mr. Trump's presidency, wherever possible – even though that had proven to be not widely possible.	15
1-4-19 +	Over the top (of the wall). Brave new threats. In the midst of an already prolonged government shutdown that Mr. Trump had forced over his demand that Congress fund his proposed Mexican border wall, on January 4 he said – in what The Washington Post characterized as a "rambling" and "chaotic" news conference – that he would maintain the shutdown for a year or more if Congress didn't approve the funding of the wall. Just as remarkably, he said that he didn't need congressional approval at all, in that (in the style of a tin-pot dictator) he could declare a national emergency and unilaterally order the wall's construction. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 17 (7)

1-4-19 +	[Continued.] No new empathy. Throughout the shutdown controversy, Mr. Trump still displayed no concern for the many millions of citizens who were being deprived of federal services (including many low-income rural Americans<sup>161</sup>); the many millions of dollars that the shutdown and restart would cost the government administratively<sup>162</sup>; the potential of the shutdown to injure financial markets and the broader economy<sup>163</sup>; the alarm expressed by airline pilots and Transportation Safety Authority workers regarding in-flight security and anti-terrorism efforts;<sup>164</sup> the alarm expressed by prison guards for their own safety;<sup>165</sup> the dangerous suspension of FDA food inspections and EPA pollution inspections;<sup>166</sup> the suspension of government payments that had been promised to farmers hurt by Mr. Trump's trade policies;<sup>167</sup> the many American businesses that the shutdown was injuring (in the view of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce);<sup>168</sup> the objections to the wall and the shutdown by borderland residents and their members of Congress;<sup>169</sup> or – not the least – the lives of the 800,000 federal workers who were now furloughed or working without pay (including border protection officers<sup>170</sup>). Indeed, h improbably<sup>171</sup> stated, as he had done some days before, that many of the workers were gladly sacrificing their paychecks for the wall.<sup>172</sup> (He had also previously stated that most of the workers were Democrats ... which didn't appear to compute.) Five ways to pay. Altogether, Mr. Trump had now promised or proposed – and he continued to promise or propose – four different mechanisms for funding his wall: (1) making Mexico pay for it (an incessant campaign assurance, proclaimed by Mr. Trump 212 times, which Mexico had repeatedly rejected as insulting and ridiculous, and which Mr. Trump now denied having ever literally meant<sup>173</sup>); (2) making taxpayers pay for it (the subject of the current government shutdown); (3) making the military pay for it under Mr. Trump's purported emergency authority (out of the military's existing budget – thus depriving the military of those funds for true national security purposes); and (4) making American companies and their customers pay for it, by somehow attributing as payment, or even actually taxing, corporate revenues that he projected would flow from his new USMCA trade agreement with Canada and Mexico (if Congress were to ratify that agreement).<sup>174</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 17 (7)
-----------------	---	------------------------------------

1-4-19 +	[Continued.] On January 6, acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney identified a fifth funding mechanism: he said that Mr. Trump had directed all Cabinet secretaries to search their existing budgets for ways to fund the wall.<sup>175</sup> As a fiscal and policy phenomenon, the five payment approaches made for a sprawling redundancy, and a confusion, and a desperation, that Mr. Trump declined to acknowledge. Rhetorically, he seemed to be grasping at straws in order to claim a personal "win" – any form of payment for the wall could do. But in truth only one form seemed potentially realistic: the express congressional and taxpayer funding that he was demanding, and that had precipitated the government shutdown. More mystery. Why Mr. Trump would force a government shutdown over taxpayer funding was unclear, given that the $5.7 billion he was seeking from Congress would pay for only a fraction of the $25 to $60 billion wall anyway. He had meanwhile declined to seriously address critics' contentions that the wall would do little to stop undocumented migration at the Mexican border; to stop overall undocumented migration (which had largely derived from visa over-stays); or to stop drug trafficking (which had largely occurred through other routes). Nor had he acknowledged that even border patrol agents, when surveyed, had shown little belief in a wall.<sup>176</sup> Simplifying it. But as is often the case with chaos, and very much to the point of this Chronology, simpler explanations for Mr. Trump's recalcitrance appeared. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• First, as observers widely concurred, Mr. Trump was desperately playing to his base, so as to preserve his presidency. In recent days he had dug in in direct response to the demands of right-wing media personalities. His fulminations about the wall, and thus about the shutdown, appeared to be more symbolic than practical. The symbol was that of an ethno-nationalist America on which he had staked his popular vision and his political survival. (That was likely the single largest reason that congressional Democrats so contested the relatively minor expenditure – even more than what they saw as its problem-solving deficiencies.) [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 17 (7)
-----------------	---	--------------------------------

1-4-19 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Second, a New York Times analysis concluded that the wall – which had begun during Mr. Trump's campaign as an easy, vivid metaphor and mnemonic for border control – had metastasized into not only a promise to his supporters that he felt he dare not break, but a vision of a vast and enduring physical monument to its creator, the New York developer, the master builder, himself.<sup>177</sup> In fact on January 7, CNN televised a series of at least four video clips in which Mr. Trump had explicitly called for the construction of a "beautiful" wall that would be called "The Trump Wall."</li> </ul> Add-on inaccuracies. In the same January 4 news conference, Mr. Trump falsely<sup>178</sup> stated that previous presidents had supported the building of a wall. He also repeated his frequent false claim that the construction of the wall had already begun.<sup>179</sup> Ordinarily, such falsehoods would have made for major news headlines. That they had become so routine and non-newsworthy illustrated for CSD, yet again, the extent to which empirical truth in public discourse, the stature of the American presidency, and the credibility of American democracy had degraded during Mr. Trump's tenure. Yet more fables. On January 5-7, news media (including Fox News) documented and challenged the wildly erroneous nature of the Trump administration's repeated claims of having apprehended thousands of suspected terrorists at the Mexican border, and related figures. Both press secretary Sarah Sanders and Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen had badly erred in their use of statistics, then they had declined to correct their errors. In truth no terrorists had been apprehended at the border.<sup>180</sup> CNN television commentators on January 6 speculated that the false claims were an effort to give cover to Mr. Trump should he attempt to declare a national emergency at the border so as to be able to build the wall without congressional approval. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 17 (7)
-----------------	--	--------------------------------

1-4-19 +	[Continued.]  Goosing opinion. Seemingly ever more frantic to have his win, on January 5 Mr. Trump wrote on Twitter that the wall was "something which everyone, other than drug dealers, human traffickers and criminals, want very badly!" In fact no poll had shown that most Americans wanted the wall;<sup>181</sup> and most of the millions who did not want it were not drug dealers, human traffickers and criminals. For CSD, the falsehood sounded of conspiracy theory, with Democrats cast as the criminal conspirators. We also found Mr. Trump's inflation of the popularity of his wall to be comparable to his inflation of the size of crowds at his rallies, and to his children's inflation of condominium sales in their past development projects: manipulative, fraudulent, and possibly even criminal. (See CSD's entry of November 19, 2018.) Frantic, yes. But also a way of life. A national emergency: the implications. On January 12, in a Times opinion column, a pair of scholars traced the recent history of authoritarian-minded leaders overseas seizing extraordinary powers when genuine national security crises had arisen. They wrote: "[A]ny reckless use of emergency powers [to build the Mexican border wall] would set a dangerous precedent for overriding the legislative branch. Unlike other national emergency declarations [in the U.S.], this one would openly defy the will of Congress. This raises a terrifying question: How would a president who is willing to fabricate a national emergency over a simple legislative impasse behave during a real security crisis?"	6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 17 (7)
1-8-19	And another whipping. In an early morning tweet, Mr. Trump yet again struck at the (independent) Federal Reserve Bank for raising interest rates, which actions he had been claiming were depressing the stock market. But in the same breath he boasted that overall the stock market had risen "BIG" since his election.	9, 11

1-8-19 +	Television fraud. As of January 8, the federal government shutdown was now approaching the longest in history, and its sole cause was the impasse over Mr. Trump's Mexican border wall. As dysfunction, suffering and grievance mounted, political risks did as well. (See CSD's entry of January 4 +, above.) In an extraordinary live evening address carried by most of the country's major television networks, Mr. Trump pitched his wall to the people. In order to do so, he had pre-empted the networks' entertainment and news programming. Other presidents had occasionally done that, to unify the American people around truly urgent national crises. But Mr. Trump used the broadcast and his executive prerogative in a divisive, non-crisis situation, and in an attempt to defraud, intimidate and fund-raise for domestic political purposes.<sup>182</sup> 1. Fraudulent content; fear-mongering; atrocity stories. In the address, Mr. Trump reiterated many of his demonstrably false statements about the wall, saying or strongly implying: that the new, proposed USMCA trade agreement among the U.S., Mexico and Canada would somehow pay for the construction (it contained no mechanism for that); that the flow of undocumented migrants was at record levels (it had been much higher in previous years); that the wall would stop the flow of drugs, including fentanyl, into the U.S. (most drugs are smuggled in containers at legal ports of entry, and most fentanyl comes from China); that undocumented migrants were taking Americans' jobs (they often took jobs that Americans didn't fill); and that vast numbers of undocumented migrants were rapists, murderers and child smugglers (examples of which he described in graphic detail).<sup>183</sup> 2. Fraudulent solicitation; intimidation. Earlier in the day Mr. Trump had texted and emailed his supporters, asking them to each send $5.00 – toward a $500,000 goal – to a so-called "Official Save the Border Fund." He asked that they send the money prior to his 9:00 p.m. address, and that he would personally take the names of those "patriots" who contributed. But in reality the fund was simply part of his reelection campaign fund.<sup>184</sup> And immediately after the address, he re-sent to those who had not contributed, noting (menacingly, in CSD's view), that he had kept their names too, and that they were not yet among the "patriots" who had contributed.<sup>185</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9
-----------------	---	----------------

1-8-19 +	[Continued.]  3. Fraudulent and authoritarian pre-emption. Mr. Trump had used the presidential prerogative to effectively commandeer the airwaves at least in part to raise funds for his reelection campaign.<sup>186</sup> But his television performance did not appear to have had an immediate effect on either public opinion or congressional negotiations to re-open the government. In the days following, by Twitter, Mr. Trump – seemingly flustered – took to blaming "Cryin [sic] Chuck" Schumer and the "Mainstream Media" for misrepresenting the continuing stalemate. That in itself was a misrepresentation: Mr. Trump had instigated the shutdown, and had claimed at the outset that he himself would own it. On January 12, the shutdown became the longest in U.S. history, at 22 days.	1, 7, 9
1-9-19	Lawyering up. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's White House counsel, at taxpayer expense, had hired 17 new lawyers to resist investigations by the newly empowered Democratic majority in the House of Representatives and by special prosecutor Robert Mueller, as well as to resist the release of Mueller's eventual report to Congress.<sup>187</sup> Previous White Houses likewise had employed many lawyers. But the task here appeared to be specifically to protect the president from investigations. The battalion-strength effort to withhold, conceal, obfuscate and obstruct that Mr. Trump now seemed to be advancing plainly represented to CSD an escalation of his continuing efforts along those lines. It was the opposite of transparency and a quest for truth, relative to the interests of the country and the growing collection of legal and ethical pressures that had come to besiege him. That is to say, it seemed the strategy of a man with much to hide.	7, 9, 11

1-10-19	Loving theirs, hating ours. In back-to-back statements, Mr. Trump at the White House praised Chinese dictator, human rights abuser, technology thief and American antagonist Xi Jinping as "far more honorable" than Democratic congressional leaders "Cryin [sic] Chuck" Schumer and Nancy Pelosi; and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo in Cairo discredited President Obama at length while lauding the Egyptian and Saudi Arabian dictatorships.<sup>188</sup> Pompeo's obsession with President Obama appeared to mirror Mr. Trump's, as did his utter indifference to human rights abuses overseas. But his platitudes in Cairo lauding America's aggressive, international moralism flatly conflicted with the amoral, transactional isolationism of Mr. Trump – further evidencing an administration at dangerously loose ends with respect to coherence.<sup>189</sup>	9, 11, 12, 17 (9, 12, 14)
1-11-19	The invasion. Visiting the Mexican border, Mr. Trump televised a video of himself flanked by beefy, uniformed border patrol officers, presumably cherry-picked, at least one of whom spoke out in sympathy with Mr. Trump's border agenda. The episode represented a continuation of Mr. Trump's efforts to politicize in his own favor the images of the border patrol, other law enforcement bodies and national security agencies, as well as politicizing the agencies' actual staff.<sup>190</sup> Upon his return to Washington, he tweeted that "... it is a far worse situation than almost anyone would understand, an invasion! I have been there numerous times - The Democrats, Cryin' [sic] Chuck and Nancy don't know how bad and dangerous it is for our ENTIRE COUNTRY... Without [the wall] our Country cannot be safe. Criminals, Gangs, Human Traffickers, Drugs &amp; so much other big trouble can easily pour in. It can be stopped cold!" Among other things, those television and Twitter communications implied that Mr. Trump was a canny, inquiring, tough and physically courageous commander. Nothing in that messaging, either explicit or implicit, was fact-based.	6, 7, 9, 11

1-11-19, 1-12-19	Holding fast: against the law, and for the wall. On January 11, The New York Times reported that directly after Mr. Trump had fired then FBI Director James Comey in 2017 and before the appointment of special prosecutor Robert Mueller days later, the FBI had begun investigating whether Mr. Trump was working for Russia. The following morning, for two hours and via six tweets, Mr. Trump reacted – by raging and misleading on Twitter.<sup>191</sup> He attacked the FBI, "Lyin' [sic] James Comey" (a "Crooked Cop"), Mueller, "Crooked Hillary" Clinton, the Democratic National Committee, and the "Witch Hunt" against him. At the same time he wrote of his hope for friendly relations with Russia. How did Mr. Trump have time for such Twitter activity amid the now record-setting and increasingly damaging government shutdown, which reportedly his advisors had no clue how he planned to end?<sup>192</sup> Easily: he then tweeted 13 times about the shutdown and the wall, invoking such regular themes as these: "Thousands of illegal aliens who have committed sexual crimes against children"; "Drugs, Crime and so much that is bad"; "Cryin' [sic] Chuck [Schumer] and Nancy Pelosi"; "I won the election"; and "a Fake reporter from the Amazon Washington Post".	1, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12

CITIZENS FOR A STRONG DEMOCRACY

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 22 – March 2, 2019

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

1-12-19	Threatening Cohen. Speaking to Fox News, Mr. Trump disparaged the credibility of, and hinted at blackmailing, his former attorney (and now admitted felon) Michael Cohen if Cohen were to testify negatively about him in an upcoming House Oversight Committee hearing that Cohen had sought. The blackmail: that Mr. Trump would expose Cohen's father-in-law relative to questionable business practices.<sup>1</sup> Intimidating a congressional witness is a felony; blackmail is another felony. CSD believes that both of those felonies occurred in the Fox interview.	9; Blackmail; Obstruction of Justice
1-13-19	A Russian asset? A (conservative) Washington Post columnist compiled a list of 18 extraordinary ways (and hundreds of individual incidents) in which Mr. Trump had been directly or indirectly connected to or sympathetic toward Russia, from his days as a real estate developer through the present.<sup>2</sup> The column was sparked by revelations, only days earlier, that the FBI had opened an investigation of Mr. Trump as a possible Russian asset after he had fired then FBI Director James Comey in 2017,<sup>3</sup> and that Mr. Trump had kept secret from his own staff all details about his dealings as president with Russian autocrat Vladimir Putin, to the point of confiscating his interpreter's notes.<sup>4</sup>	12, 15

1-13-19	Turkey in the straw, Turkey in the hay. Mr. Trump threatened on Twitter to "devastate Turkey economically" if it attacked America's Kurdish allies in Syria after the U.S. troop withdrawal that Mr. Trump had recently and capriciously announced. The tweet came just as Secretary of State Mike Pompeo was trying to reason with Turkey on the matter, a NATO sometimes-ally on which the U.S. had long relied for military bases and intelligence. Turkey objected strenuously.<sup>5</sup> Turkey's volatile and authoritarian leader, Recep Erdogan, had long been a troubling figure. His human rights record was miserable; his bodyguards had beaten up demonstrators in Washington in 2017 as he had looked on; he had recently threatened to obliterate Kurdish forces in Syria; he had openly feuded with NATO, the U.S. and Israel off and on; and his alliances in the region had often shifted unpredictably. Any American president would have had his hands full with Erdogan. But in 2017 Mr. Trump had rhetorically embraced him, to the dismay of both human rights and security observers. For CSD, this new threat toward Turkey smacked of capriciousness.	10, 12, 13
1-13-19	Still riding with the Enquirer. On Twitter, Mr. Trump praised The National Enquirer for its headline exposing lurid details of the recently announced divorce of Amazon founder Jeff Bezos (Mr. Trump calling him "Bozo"). He also tweeted that The Enquirer was "far more accurate" than The Washington Post, now owned by Bezos. The frivolous, indecorous, dishonest and anti-democratic tweet occurred at an unseemly moment – amid the now record-setting and gravely serious federal shutdown that Mr. Trump had forced over his demand for funding the construction of a wall at the Mexican border. But it was not just unseemly: it also raised questions as to Mr. Trump's relationship with The Enquirer. By way of background, Mr. Trump had long hated Bezos for The Post's persistent criticisms of Mr. Trump; for Bezos's legendary status within the technology industry (an industry that Mr. Trump reportedly resented); and for Bezos having vastly more money than Mr. Trump. For all of that, Mr. Trump had sought during his presidency to punish Amazon with debilitating taxes and anti-trust enforcement. (See CSD's entry of April 6, 2018 regarding the source of his animus; also our eight other entries above regarding his vendetta against Bezos.) [Continued below.]	1, 7, 10, 11; Obstruction of Justice

1-13-19	[Continued.] The Enquirer, for its part, is a supermarket tabloid that traffics in scandalous reporting and is a laughingstock among real journalists and the mainstream reading public. It had long collaborated with Mr. Trump in promoting him and publicizing disinformation in his favor, particularly during his 2016 campaign for the presidency. The Enquirer had also facilitated Mr. Trump's felonious hush money payments to Karen McDougall, his one-time extra-marital girlfriend, by buying her story in a "catch-and-kill" operation. That David Pecker, the Enquirer's CEO and Mr. Trump's personal friend, had agreed some months prior to cooperate with the Department of Justice in the McDougall matter – and possibly in many matters, given Pecker's presumed familiarity with other sordid details of Mr. Trump's life – had seemed to strike a blow to Mr. Trump's relationship with him. But Mr. Trump now appeared to still have an affinity for the fact-challenged and inflammatory Enquirer – his fellow traveler both in cynically deceiving portions of the public (many of the same portions) and in general amorality and avarice. CSD speculates that Mr. Trump, ever taking the long view on commercial opportunities, might hope to once again partner with The Enquirer after his presidency. A New York Times analysis speculated further: that Mr. Trump's resurgent praise for the Enquirer suggested his hope that he could dissuade Pecker from revealing too much to the Justice Department – that is (to CSD's mind) the commission of yet more obstruction of justice.<sup>6</sup>	1, 7, 10, 11; Obstruction of Justice

Some good news: Democracy survives.

This Chronology is dedicated to reporting on Mr. Trump's anti-democratic and authoritarian behaviors, and to registering our deepest concerns about them. But we are pleased to point to a more hopeful observation. On January 14, 2019, a New York Times columnist compellingly wrote that – despite the chaos and suffering caused by Mr. Trump's ongoing shutdown of the government over his demands for funding a Mexican border wall – American democracy was surviving:

"To be clear, we're very far from a worst-case scenario version of a Trump administration. Last year the president sent nearly 6,000 active-duty American troops to the border based on racist propaganda about a migrant caravan, but there haven't been tanks in the streets. The administration winks at foreign governments who kill journalists, but its own threats against the media are mostly empty. I feared, at the beginning of this administration, that Trump would try to exploit American intelligence capabilities against his personal enemies, but instead he gets his intelligence from Fox News. The fact that so many high-level Trump associates have pleaded guilty to crimes is a sign of his corruption, but it also shows he hasn't corrupted our entire system. ... From his fantasy world in the White House, he barks dictatorial and often illegal orders, floats conspiracy theories, tweets insults and lies unceasingly. But much of the time he's not fully in charge. He has the instincts of a fascist but lacks both the discipline and the loyal lieutenants he'd need to create true autocracy."<sup>7</sup>

CSD is heartened by this reminder of what remains of our country's strength, goodness and sanity. But we also note that what has saved America from the abyss is not any deficit in Mr. Trump's authoritarian urges, but the resistance to them by right-minded journalists, voters, judges and members of Congress.

1-14-19 +	The art of the deal. As Mr. Trump single-handedly forced the federal government shutdown to continue well past a record-setting length, and as he refused to budge on his demand that the Democratic-majority House agree to fund a small, symbolic piece of his Mexican border wall, critics pointed to the failure of his negotiating skills that for decades he had proclaimed to be legendary. Those professed skills were proving to be a fraud, on multiple counts. First, the very premise of the negotiation was fraudulent: to the extent Mr. Trump was purporting to negotiate for the benefit of the American people, in reality he was negotiating only for his vanity and to preserve his political fortunes with his electoral base. Second, long into the process he was still not negotiating at all – only making implacable demands. Third, his "negotiation" amounted to cynically and even sadistically holding hostage the American government and people, as though a terrorist were holding airline passengers hostage while attempting to negotiate free passage to a safe destination. Fourth, after weeks of the shutdown, it had become clear that – however and whenever it would end – significant damage to the American economy and people would have accumulated. More specifically, in addition to the many injuries described in CSD's entry of January 4 +, new or expanded elements of the shutdown's damage had come to appear in news reports daily: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Airport security checkpoints were closing.<sup>8</sup></li> <li>• Farmers – already damaged by Mr. Trump's trade wars – were now losing access to federal subsidies, loans and other services.<sup>9</sup></li> <li>• Regulatory investigations affecting the environment, financial abuse and taxes were suspended.<sup>10</sup></li> <li>• State Department staff in the U.S. and abroad had been furloughed or were working without pay, often in stressful and delicate circumstances essential to America's international interests, thus straining U.S. diplomacy. Many furloughed abroad had no opportunity to pick up short-term substitute employment.<sup>11</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	---	------------------------

1-14-19 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Individuals and businesses were canceling travel plans; business permits were being delayed; IPO and M&amp;A approvals from the SEC were not being issued; businesses were unable to obtain EIN numbers for opening bank accounts and filing tax returns; furloughed and unpaid government workers were cutting down on their consumer spending; and altogether the country's economic growth was being depressed.<sup>12</sup></li> <li>• The country's air safety system had come under stress.<sup>13</sup></li> <li>• Scientists were being deprived of climate data.<sup>14</sup></li> <li>• 43,000 Coast Guard members were defending the country without pay, as was the Secret Service.<sup>15</sup></li> <li>• School lunches were being rationed.<sup>16</sup></li> <li>• The government's ability to attract top-notch talent was compromised, possibly for the long term.<sup>17</sup></li> <li>• Government functions and economic efficiency were predicted as likely to take months or years to recover.<sup>18</sup></li> <li>• Sundry, low-profile but important activities such as research, training, forest protection, cyber-security, drug approvals and the collection of economic data were stalled.<sup>19</sup></li> <li>• The IRS had become hamstrung – in helping taxpayers (including through the recent tax law changes), in collecting taxes, and in processing refunds.<sup>20</sup></li> <li>• Federal courts were running out of money.<sup>21</sup></li> <li>• Consumer confidence was dropping, a portent of recession.<sup>22</sup></li> <li>• Disaster planning was slowing.<sup>23</sup></li> <li>• FBI agents said their agency had been neutered.<sup>24</sup></li> <li>• National Science Foundation grants, touching on all manner of scientific inquiry, were halted.<sup>25</sup></li> </ul> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	---	------------------------

1-14-19 +	[Continued.] An additional flaw in Mr. Trump's negotiating skills had appeared: his heavy reliance on false statements and on ad hominem attacks against his counter-parties – mechanisms that negotiating experts had long identified as generally ineffective and counter-productive. On January 15, for example, he continued that pattern by falsely claiming that most Americans saw a crisis at the Mexican border and supported the construction of a wall; falsely claiming (yet again) that Democrats wanted an "open border" and thus had become the "Party of Crime"; disingenuously claiming that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, more than himself, were "playing political games" with and were responsible for the impasse; and gratuitously blaming Pelosi for receiving her taxpayer-funded salary while rank-and-file government workers were going unpaid.<sup>26</sup> On January 19, Mr. Trump again commandeered the airwaves (see CSD's entry of January 8 +) to press his border wall "negotiation." Under pressure from the damage he had caused by the shutdown, in his live television address he now advanced a new "compromise" plan for the border wall. But it was still not a negotiation; he had not consulted with the Democrats in advance. Rather, it was another harangue, strong on fear-mongering (attacking Hispanic drug smugglers/rapists/diseases and "open border," "radical" Democrats) – gratuitously offensive to many of those whose help he needed to make a deal. Not surprisingly, the shutdown went on. On January 21, Mr. Trump tweeted that Pelosi – the ultimate centrist, who had recently been heralded for her acumen in overcoming her left wing and some other Democratic dissenters to regain the House speakership – had "lost control" and was a "Radical Democrat." At last, on January 25, Mr. Trump – the master negotiator – agreed to re-open the government (temporarily) without having won any funding for his border wall. That is to say, he had surrendered, and had acceded to Pelosi's demand that the government be re-opened as a prelude to discussions about border security.<sup>27</sup> But meanwhile hundreds of thousands had suffered from his cruelty, demagoguery and vanity. The shutdown had also cost the country from $3 billion to $11 billion in lost productivity and lost economic activity.<sup>28</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	--	------------------------

1-14-19 +	[Continued.] Yet even in announcing his agreement to re-open, Mr. Trump repeated his inaccurate claims about border security; and he threatened to either shut down the government again or to declare a national emergency if Congress would not have authorized his border wall by February 15.<sup>29</sup> (For the denouement as to that deadline, see CSD's entry of February 15, below.)	6, 7, 9, 10, 11
1-14-19 +	Self-dealing, unbound. Beginning on January 14, these developments quickly accumulated: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump's inaugural committee was reported to have spent $1.5 million on a lavish gala at his Trump International Hotel in Washington (that is, placing money in his pocket); and multiple friends of Mr. Trump were reported to have been paid large sums under inauguration-related contracts.<sup>30</sup></li> <li>• Numerous T-Mobile executives were reported to have patronized the Trump International Hotel while seeking federal approval for their company's merger with Sprint.<sup>31</sup></li> <li>• Mr. Trump's daughter Ivanka, initially rumored to have been considered (without qualifications) to be named by him to head the World Bank, was revealed to now be in his inner circle for selecting a non-family member for the post, despite her business conflicts of interest relative to the operations of the Bank.<sup>32</sup></li> <li>• The General Services Administration's inspector general reported that the GSA's lawyers had wrongfully ignored the constitution's anti-emoluments clause when deciding whether to allow the Trump International Hotel to continue to lease the GSA's Old Post Office Building in Washington after Mr. Trump's inauguration.<sup>33</sup></li> </ul>	15, 16, 17 (9)

1-15-19	Citizenship question on census? "Egregious." A federal district court in Manhattan rejected Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross's controversial attempt to add a question to the upcoming 2020 decennial census asking respondents whether they were U.S. citizens. The judge slammed Ross's behavior as "egregious," procedurally illegal, and utterly dishonest relative to his true (political) justifications for the addition.<sup>34</sup> (See CSD's entries of December 29, 2017, March 26, 2018, and October 3, 2018 + as to Ross's likely intent to under-count minorities and thus to skew voting districts, commercial marketing research and the availability of social benefits against them.)	17 (6, 8, 9)
1-17-19	President to Cohen: "Fix the polls." The Wall Street Journal reported that, at Mr. Trump's direction, during his 2015-2016 election campaign his then attorney and fixer Michael Cohen had paid the operator of two online polls to skew the polling results in favor of Mr. Trump.<sup>35</sup> CSD sees in this gambit a reminder of Mr. Trump's youthful practice of feeding his made-up social conquests to New York tabloids under an assumed name; his overstatement of his crowd sizes since his election; his and his family's practice of falsifying condominium sales figures in order to sell more units (see CSD's entry of November 19, 2018); a campaign finance violation; and above all, felonious election tampering – that is, one attempt, possibly among others, to steal the 2016 election.	9; Electoral fraud
1-17-19 +	President to Cohen: "Lie to Congress." BuzzFeed reported that, according to federal law enforcement officials, when Mr. Trump's former attorney Michael Cohen had lied to Congress in 2017 about Mr. Trump's and his children's continuing business dealings with Russia during the 2016 presidential campaign, Cohen had done so at the instruction of Mr. Trump.<sup>36</sup> The following day, the special prosecutor's office issued an extraordinary but cryptic notice that at least some of what BuzzFeed had written was inaccurate. But if materially accurate, Mr. Trump's encouragement of Cohen to lie to Congress could amount to witness tampering, subornation of perjury and obstruction of justice, all federal felonies.<sup>37</sup> (CSD drew no conclusions at the time as to the report's accuracy; but Cohen later corroborated them to Congress, as we report below in our entry of February 27.) [Continued below.]	9, 17 (7); Subornation of perjury; Obstruction of justice

1-17-19 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump responded to the allegation by tweeting obliquely that Cohen's father-in-law was vulnerable to criminal charges. The tweet echoed Mr. Trump's threat to expose the in-law, which threat CSD, on January 12 (above), had identified as amounting to both obstruction of justice and blackmail – yet more felonies.	9, 17 (7); Subornation of perjury; Obstruction of justice
1-17-19 +	Pelosi flight grounded. On January 17, Mr. Trump publicly canceled the long-planned but theretofore secret military aircraft flight of House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, House Intelligence Committee chair Adam Schiff, House Foreign Affairs Committee chair Eliot Engel, and other Democrats who were headed to meet NATO commanders in Belgium and American troops in Afghanistan. Mr. Trump and his staff then publicized that the group had made plans to salvage their trip by flying a commercial airline, thus causing them to cancel those plans as well. The moves reportedly came in retaliation for Pelosi's suggestion days earlier that Mr. Trump postpone his scheduled January 29 State of the Union Address in House chambers due to security issues associated with the continuing government shutdown. (Mr. Trump's stated, and disingenuous, reasoning for his actions: Pelosi should stay in the U.S. to attend to the shutdown.) The cancellation of the military flight occurred while some of the travelers had already boarded the bus to Andrews Air Force Base – a unique disruption and humiliation for Pelosi and her group. In fact shutdown negotiations had already been totally stalled, and Mr. Trump himself had traveled to Afghanistan earlier during the shutdown; and so his rationale for cancelling the military flight was false. The cancellation, rather, disrupted legitimate and perfunctory Congressional fact-finding operations. And the publication of the commercial flight was a clear breach of security protocols, in that it revealed the intended itinerary of Pelosi – who was second in the line of succession to the presidency, after the vice president.<sup>38</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11

1-17-19 +	[Continued.] CSD believes that Mr. Trump's motive, in addition to petty vengeance, was to forestall Democratic photo ops overseas that could have illustrated that their party was more supportive of America's diplomatic and military missions overseas than he was. (Pelosi, for example, had visited war zones many times in the past.<sup>39</sup>) Another motive was to cast further blame on Democrats for the shutdown – even though he had initially announced on television that he himself was "proud" to initiate and to own the shutdown. ("I will take the mantle," he had told Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, on-camera.) In other words, Mr. Trump had aborted a legitimate congressional prerogative, unconstitutionally and dictatorially, for self-serving political purposes.	7, 9, 10, 11
1-17-19, 1-23-19	More ACA sabotage. On January 17, the Trump administration proposed rules to make premiums and out-of-pocket maximum expenses under the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") even more expensive for subscribers, thus continuing Mr. Trump's relentless effort to sabotage the law.<sup>40</sup> (CSD has long refrained from taking a position on the ACA – only on Mr. Trump's efforts to kill it, for vindictive purposes, and without an alternative plan being in place – at the expense of the well-being of thousands of Americans.) On January 23, a Gallup survey revealed that the proportion of Americans who were then uninsured had become the highest since 2014.<sup>41</sup>	9, 11
1-19-19 +	No asylum. On January 19, Mr. Trump announced a plan to deny asylum to Central American children who had entered the U.S., and instead grant it only to a limited number who had applied from their home countries. Within days, the proposal had become part of his bill to end the continuing government shutdown precipitated by his demand for border wall funding. [Continued below.]	6, 9, 10, 14

1-19-19 +	[Continued.] Under international law, asylum (or, more commonly, refugee status) can certainly be granted based on applications from afar; indeed, that's how the U.S. refugee program has long been structured and administered overseas by the United Nations refugee agency. But denying asylum to those who had managed to reach our border would violate established international law, as would arbitrarily capping the numbers of asylum grants based on country of origin. Cynically, Mr. Trump characterized the proposal as a humanitarian measure that would somehow benefit the Central American children at issue.<sup>42</sup> On January 24, the Trump administration ordered that some asylum seekers be returned to Mexico before their asylum claims were heard in the U.S. – also contrary to American and international law. The Mexican government protested, expressing concern about the scope of the order, its details, and its impact on Mexican society. Not incidentally, northern Mexico was seen as an unsafe place for the migrants to abide.<sup>43</sup>	6, 9, 10, 14
1-20-19	With Russia, throughout. Mr. Trump's attorney Rudy Giuliani told The New York Times that Mr. Trump now acknowledged that he had been negotiating with Russia to build a Trump-branded hotel in Moscow through the very date of his 2016 election, contrary to all prior denials by Mr. Trump. The Times wrote: "The new timetable means that Mr. Trump was seeking a deal at the time he was calling for an end to economic sanctions against Russia imposed by the Obama administration. He was seeking a deal when he gave interviews questioning the legitimacy of NATO, a favorite talking point of President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia. And he was seeking a deal when, in July 2016, he called on Russia to release hacked Democratic emails that Mr. Putin's government was rumored at the time to have stolen."<sup>44</sup> The next day, Giuliani attempted to walk back his and his client's admission. That was true to Giuliani's habit of making gratuitous, flamboyant, reckless and preposterously inconsistent statements in Mr. Trump's defense. Overall, CSD continued to see in Giuliani's representation of Mr. Trump a mockery of the legal system, as well as an attempt to obstruct justice by telling falsehoods and by cynically undertaking to sway voter and congressional opinion in Mr. Trump's favor.<sup>45</sup>	7, 12, 15, 17 (Obstruction of Justice)

1-21-19	Fact Checker update. The Washington Post's Fact Checker now counted 8,158 false or misleading statements that Mr. Trump had made since taking office – over 6,000 of them in his second year. That averaged 5.9 episodes per day overall, and 16.5 per day in the second year. The largest number of episodes involved Mr. Trump's furious resistance to brown people's immigration here – the issue that had most come to define his presidency and his appeal to his supporters. For CSD, it seemed not coincidental that that issue was not only his most shrill and his most racist, but his most laden with falsehood – in all, adhering to the primal archetype of anti-democratic demagoguery.<sup>46</sup>	6, 7
1-21-19, 1-22-19, 2-20-19	Prep Boys and Indians. Beginning on January 21, Mr. Trump twice tweeted his support for a group of white students from a private high school who were filmed wearing Trump campaign hats while jeering a Native American demonstrator and Vietnam War veteran on the National Mall in Washington, DC. The circumstances of the episode – the physical convergence of three ethnic and religious demonstrations at once, with resulting tensions – were ambiguous. But as news media and the school's administration were attempting in good faith to sort out what had happened, Mr. Trump instinctively and gratuitously took one side – for the white students, and against the news media.<sup>47</sup> On February 20, in a tweet he cheered on the students for suing the Washington Post over its "fake news" coverage of the episode.	1, 6
1-22-19	No more press briefings. Mr. Trump directed his press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders to stop conducting press briefings because of the media's hostility to her. The briefings had already become increasingly rare. From the media's point of view, Sanders (and Mr. Trump, through her) had routinely stonewalled and/or spoken falsely during the sessions, so the briefings had become of questionable value anyway.<sup>48</sup> Whether the briefings would in fact stop completely was unclear.	1
1-23-19	Dictators, adversaries soar with Trump. A Washington Post reporter described in vivid detail how dictators across the world were increasing their repressive behavior while citing Mr. Trump as their inspiration, and sometimes as their friend, protector or patron.<sup>49</sup> [Continued below.]	10, 12, 14

1-23-19	[Continued.] A New York Times reporter described a new U.S. intelligence assessment that America's enemies were expected to take advantage of the weakening world order and America's isolationism under Mr. Trump. <sup>50</sup>	10, 12, 14
1-25-19	Kushner's security clearance fudged. NBC reported that Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner, as well as 30 other Trump appointees, had failed their security clearances that had been conducted by career security experts, but that that failure had then been overridden by another Trump appointee. The FBI had twice denied Kushner's clearance due to fears of foreign influence arising from his overseas business dealings. <sup>51</sup> (See also CSD's entry of March 1, below, regarding Mr. Trump's personal intervention in Kushner's clearance.)	10, 11
1-25-19	Stone indicted. A federal grand jury empowered by special prosecutor Robert Mueller indicted Roger Stone, a self-proclaimed political "dirty trickster"; an inveterate admirer of disgraced President Richard Nixon (with a tattoo of Nixon on his back); an incessant showman and attention-seeker; a notorious liar; a brazen conspiracy theorist; a former political consulting partner of Mr. Trump's one-time campaign chairman and now convicted felon Paul Manafort; and Mr. Trump's decades-long friend and advisor. The charges included lying to Congress, witness tampering and obstruction of Mueller's probe. Those charges arose from Stone's contacts – for the benefit of the 2016 Trump election campaign – with WikiLeaks, the organization which, in advance of the election, had published embarrassing Democratic campaign organization emails that the Russian government had hacked. They indicated that Mr. Trump's senior campaign officials had been affirmatively seeking to learn how to use the Russia-hacked emails against candidate Hillary Clinton. After his indictment, Stone defiantly flashed for cameras Nixon's signature, two-raised-arm "victory" salute. For his part, Mr. Trump tweeted furiously that the indictment was part of Mueller's "Witch Hunt" against himself and his associates.<sup>52</sup>	9, 17 (Election corruption)

1-26-19	More undocumented workers at Trump golf clubs. The Washington Post reported that on January 18 the Trump National Golf Club in Westchester, New York had fired a dozen undocumented workers.<sup>53</sup> The move came on the heels of revelations by The New York Times that Mr. Trump's Bedminster, New Jersey golf club had routinely hired undocumented workers. (See CSD's entries of December 6, 2018 and January 3, 2019.) Mr. Trump had made a crusade since his election campaign of demonizing undocumented migrants; but he was now seen as having profited from them at at least three of his clubs while breaking the law.<sup>54</sup>	9, 11
1-28-19	Dear Earth: Please fry. Mr. Trump, a climate science denier and a man apparently oblivious to the human wreckage and political instability that global warming had already sown in the U.S.<sup>55</sup> and across the world by way of droughts, storms and rising sea levels, tweeted: "In the beautiful Midwest, windchill temperatures are reaching minus 60 degrees, the coldest ever recorded. In coming days, expected to get even colder. People can't last outside even for minutes. What the hell is going on with Global Waming [sic]? Please come back fast, we need you!"	8
1-28-19	Making it true. A Washington Post columnist recapped the many ways in which the Trump administration had been spending tax dollars to come up with data to support Mr. Trump's untrue statements. The most recent (known) episode involved an effort to prove that sex traffickers were tying up captive Central American women with duct tape in order to silence them while driving them across the Mexican border. Previous efforts and expenditures had included proving that: the crowd size at Mr. Trump's inauguration had been larger than it was; widespread voter fraud existed in the U.S.; Central American migrant caravans had been infiltrated by Middle Eastern terrorists; and CNN's Jim Acosta had assaulted an administration press aide.<sup>56</sup> CSD would add to the list Mr. Trump's extensive, taxpayer-funded efforts (through White House and Justice Department attorneys and otherwise) to obstruct special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation of Russian election meddling and of Mr. Trump himself.	7, 9

1-28-19	White House tours. The Washington Post reported that on some of the many boastful White House tours that Mr. Trump had been giving to friends and strangers, he had made a point of disparaging the personal lives of previous presidents whom he considered to be his enemies. In particular, he had falsely told visitors that President Obama had watched basketball on television all day in his private dining room; and he had repeatedly and bawdily pointed out where President Clinton had engaged in sexual acts with his intern Monica Lewinsky.<sup>57</sup>	11
1-29-19 +	Intelligence agencies: "You're wrong, as ever." On January 29, a major new written national intelligence assessment, plus top national intelligence officials speaking individually to the Senate Intelligence Committee, contradicted Mr. Trump on at least four fronts. They said that North Korea was not planning to abandon its nuclear weapons program; that Iran was not currently advancing its nuclear bomb-making capability; that ISIS was far from defeated; and (implicitly) that the migration of Central Americans across the Mexican border was not a high level security threat.<sup>58</sup> Incensed, on the following day Mr. Trump tweeted that the intelligence officials – several of whom he himself had appointed – were "extremely passive and naive," and he suggested they "should go back to school." Mr. Trump's ongoing disdain for intelligence data, as well as this new public rebuke of his own intelligence agencies, was extraordinary for a sitting president. Critics claimed that the episode would damage national security.<sup>59</sup>	6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13
1-30-19	Chosen by God. Mr. Trump's perpetually untruthful press secretary, Sarah Huckabee Sanders, told a Christian news outlet that God had chosen Mr. Trump to be president.<sup>60</sup> Although many people of many faiths commonly attribute events to the will of God, the statement from Mr. Trump's chief communicator troubled observers, in that autocrats the world over have long claimed to have been divinely anointed. (That Mr. Trump, in CSD's view, is in truth a consistent liar, bully, racist, law-breaker, traitor, lecher, adulterer, deadbeat and con-man is a separate matter, relative to his personal profession of faith.)	9

1-30-19	Secrets with Putin. News media reported that Mr. Trump had spoken with Russian President Vladimir Putin at the Buenos Aires summit in November without staff or an American interpreter present.<sup>61</sup> The episode represented a continuation of Mr. Trump's pattern in that regard with Putin. Indeed, The Washington Post had recently reported that Mr. Trump had gone to "extraordinary lengths" to keep his conversations with Putin secret.<sup>62</sup> The practice represented a significant breach of security protocols (and in CSD's belief, a suggestion of treachery relative to American interests). No one else will ever know what they discussed.	10, 12, 13
2-4-19	Vacant. The Washington Post detailed the continuing high churn among top Trump administration officials, the continuing high vacancy rates for top positions, and the administration's extreme reliance on acting (as opposed to regular) department heads. The vacancies were seen as threatening not only departmental efficiency but the legality of certain departmental actions taken under the acting chiefs. Reasons for the vacancies included various dynamics around the Senate's approvals of nominations. But they also included Mr. Trump's disinterest in the situation, and his belief that he could better control department heads if they were not fully vested with standard authority.<sup>63</sup>	9, 10, 13
2-4-19	Freedom House report. In its annual "Freedom in the World" report, Freedom House – the storied and largely government-funded NGO – attributed the continuing decline in democracy worldwide in part to the example set by the U.S. and Mr. Trump. The U.S. scored only 86 out of 100 points on the organization's freedom index. The organization's president wrote: "[Mr. Trump] is straining our core values and testing the stability of our constitutional system." "No president in living memory has shown less respect for its tenets, norms and principles," he added. "Trump has assailed essential institutions and traditions, including the separation of powers, a free press, an independent judiciary, the impartial delivery of justice, safeguards against corruption and most disturbingly, the legitimacy of elections." Also: "The current overall U.S. score puts American democracy closer to struggling counterparts like Croatia than to traditional peers such as Germany or the United Kingdom."<sup>64</sup>	All

2-5-19	The State of the Union. In his State of the Union address, Mr. Trump, reading from a teleprompter, as in his previous addresses to Congress called for bi-partisan unity. But reportedly a deep chill prevailed in the House of Representatives chamber over his ongoing brutality and divisiveness. For example, he continued to rail against the dangers to Americans' prosperity and physical safety at the hands of Hispanic migrants. And while advancing a highly partisan agenda, he ignored many of the largest issues (such as climate change and income inequality) to which many in the chamber had been dedicated. In those senses, the call for comity seemed a gigantic falsehood. The Washington Post's Fact Checker identified nearly 30 more specific factually dubious statements that Mr. Trump made as well.<sup>65</sup>	6, 7
2-7-19 +	Border pushback. On February 7, the city leaders of Nogales, Texas ordered the U.S. government to remove razor wire that the latter had just installed on an existing mid-city fence at the Mexican border, having found the wire unnecessary, dangerous, unsightly and inflammatory.<sup>66</sup> The following day, city leaders and residents of El Paso, Texas – a low crime city proud of its good interethnic relations – forcefully objected to Mr. Trump’s erroneous claim during his State of the Union address that a border fence there had reduced migrant crime; and they mounted a large protest when Mr. Trump held an anti-immigration rally there on February 11.<sup>67</sup>	6, 10
2-8-19	Superhuman. After administering Mr. Trump’s annual physical examination, Mr. Trump’s physician again broke from traditional practice and forewent issuing a complete report on the president’s health. Instead, he said of Mr. Trump that he “is in very good health and I anticipate he will remain so for the duration of his Presidency, and beyond.” The prediction echoed that of Mr. Trump’s former physician, who in the previous year had said that Mr. Trump could live to be 200. It also echoed the report of Mr. Trump’s campaign-era physician who had proclaimed that Mr. Trump would be "the healthiest individual ever elected to the presidency" if he won, in a statement that had appeared to have been written by Mr. Trump himself.  [Continued below.]	8, 9, 11

2-8-19	[Continued.] While the various predictions of Mr. Trump’s future (and super-human) health may have been innocent colloquial figures of speech, in the aggregate they suggested instead that Mr. Trump had directed the physicians to issue the reports as campaign materials and authoritarian propaganda. One former White House medical official said that to predict the president’s future health defied medical science and professional ethics.<sup>68</sup>	8, 9, 11
2-11-19	In El Paso, violently. At a rally in El Paso, Texas in which he promoted his proposed border wall, Mr. Trump reiterated his false claims that the wall was already being built and that a wall had reduced violent crime in El Paso. He also exaggerated the crowd size. Most disturbingly, he incited the heated crowd against both Hispanic migrants and the media. One attendee was inspired to violently attack the BBC’s press crew.<sup>69</sup>	1, 5, 6, 7, 9
2-13-19	Manafort: Once more, with feeling. A federal judge found Mr. Trump’s former campaign manager Paul Manafort – already convicted of multiple felonies in connection with his foreign business activities – to have lied to federal officials about his contacts with Russians in performing his campaign work for Mr. Trump. That brought to four the number of Trump campaign officials who had been found to have lied about Russian contacts during the course of federal investigations.<sup>70</sup>	17 (7, 12)
2-13-19	False again on the Koreans. Mr. Trump announced that he had caused South Korea to pay an additional $500 million toward the support of American troops in that country, when in fact the agreed-upon increase was only $70 million. He had previously stated that the U.S. had 40,000 troops stationed there, when the true number was 28,500.<sup>71</sup> (As recorded above in this Chronology Mr. Trump had also overstated his progress in nuclear negotiations with North Korea on multiple occasions.) He thus likely continued to compromise his credibility on the world stage.	7
2-14-19 to 2-17-19	Stumbling, internationally. Within a period of a few days: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Vice President Mike Pence insulted and frightened Western European allies by traveling to and lauding relationships with Eastern European autocrats while bashing the Western countries for continuing to support the Iran nuclear accord.<sup>72</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	10, 11, 14, 17 (12, 14)

2-14-19 to 2-17-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• At an annual security meeting in Munich, Western European leaders roundly condemned Mr. Trump's antagonism toward a unified West, including relative to his unilateral withdrawals from the Syrian conflict and the Iranian nuclear accord. The Washington Post called it "a full-scale assault on the Trump administration's foreign policy."<sup>73</sup> The New York Times wrote that Russia was thrilled by the very public divisions as between America and its allies.<sup>74</sup></li> <li>• Heather Nauert, a former Fox News personality and Mr. Trump's nominee to replace U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley following the latter's resignation, withdrew from consideration over having hired an undocumented migrant as a nanny in years past – thus at once re-confirming the Trump administration's ineptitude at vetting its appointees, its staggering hypocrisy on the topic of employing undocumented migrants, and its disinterest in filling the U.N. ambassadorship with someone professionally fit for it.<sup>75</sup> (Mr. Trump would subsequently nominate for the position Kelly Craft, a woman with marginally stronger diplomatic credentials, but also having the principal credential – together with her billionaire husband – of being Kentucky's largest Republican contributor.<sup>76</sup>)</li> <li>• By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump threatened to release 800 ISIS prisoners back into theatre if European governments wouldn't agree to take them and try them – thus both shocking the Europeans and threatening to shoot American security interests in the head (presumably for the sake of "winning" his ongoing negotiations with Europe).<sup>77</sup></li> </ul>	10, 11, 14, 17 (12, 14)
-------------------------------	--	------------------------------------

2-14-19 +	Russian tales. In a series of interviews on multiple television channels in which he promoted his new memoir, former acting FBI Director Andrew McCabe – whom Mr. Trump had named acting director after firing Director James Comey, and whom he had then in turn fired – described to reporters what he had considered during and after his tenure to be a number of shocking circumstances: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump's heeding Russian President Vladimir Putin's advice about North Korean nuclear capabilities over the advice of U.S. intelligence agencies.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump's wholesale disparagement of the integrity of the FBI.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump's broad attempts to quash the Justice Department's investigations of Russia's election meddling.</li> <li>• The unprecedented level of contacts between Trump associates and Russian government agents, which had caused McCabe to initiate an investigation of Mr. Trump for fear that he might be a Russian asset (see CSD's entry of January 13, above).</li> <li>• Mr. Trump's having fired McCabe for having opened that investigation. (After Mueller was appointed special prosecutor, Mueller took over the investigation.)</li> </ul> Mr. Trump reacted by accusing McCabe of treason.<sup>78</sup>	9, 11, 12, 13
2-15-19	The "national emergency." Having failed yet again to convince Congress to fund his border wall – that is, after Congress agreed (without Mr. Trump's participation) to avert another government shutdown by funding government operations without a material allocation for the wall – Mr. Trump agreed to sign the legislation. But, as he had threatened (see CSD's entry of January 25, above), he declared a national emergency, pursuant to which he would draw money from other budgetary items to fund the wall's construction. He said that the emergency lay in "an invasion of our country with drugs, with human traffickers, with all types of criminals and gangs." [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 11

2-15-19	[Continued below.] The move was unprecedented, in that (a) it defied the prerogative and the will of Congress relative to a fully-debated spending decision; (b) it invoked the president's statutory emergency powers on a ginned-up non-emergency; (c) the wall's efficacy in stopping the dangers that Mr. Trump had cited had been widely discredited; and (d) the declaration derived from purely political and personal motives: to fulfill Mr. Trump's uninformed, racist and demagogic campaign promise (to build the wall), and to impress upon the public that he would never back down from anything. Mr. Trump's boastful, rambling announcement to reporters was also riddled with his usual falsehoods about Hispanic migration. In all, the declaration resembled the emergency declarations commonly promulgated by dictators abroad. The emergency declaration was expected to be challenged both by congressional action and by litigation, such that the spending of the "emergency" funds would almost certainly be delayed, if not blocked altogether, and more lawyers than construction workers could be paid. Nevertheless, critics in both parties feared that the declaration could serve as precedent to justify dictatorial actions by future presidents.<sup>79</sup> Administering the "emergency" response meanwhile promised to be costly. Not only would funds be commandeered from other congressionally mandated programs – including military programs – but the "emergency" endeavor threatened to divert the energies of military and other security officials from true security crises, such as those emanating from China, Russia and the Middle East.<sup>80</sup>	6, 7, 9, 10, 11
2-15-19 +	Pursuing Justice. In the days that followed William Barr's February 15 swearing-in as the country's new attorney general, Mr. Trump launched more than a dozen tweets scalding the Justice Department for such alleged misdeeds as its "witch hunt" and its "coup" attempt against him, the "treason" on the part of some of its leaders, and its "conflicted, illegal and rigged" conduct. The tweets seemed to be a message to Barr, that he toe the Trump line in the administration (or non-administration) of justice.<sup>81</sup>  [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 11;  Obstruction of Justice

2-15-19 +	[Continued.] In a lengthy investigative report on February 19, The New York Times published fresh details about Mr. Trump's relentless inside attempts over the course of two years to prevent the Justice Department from investigating himself and his associates. One notable episode consisted of him asking acting Attorney General Matthew Whitaker to put a Trump loyalist in charge of the federal investigation of his hush-money payments to his former extra-marital girlfriends.<sup>82</sup> Mr. Trump responded by tweeting that The Times was "a true ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE." The Times replied by pointing to evidence that Mr. Trump's incendiary, anti-press rhetoric was grossly deviating from fundamental American principle and was endangering the lives of journalists around the world.<sup>83</sup>	1, 7, 9, 11; Obstruction of Justice
2-20-19, 2-21-19	The wall's construction, in (phony) video. In a series of tweets, Mr. Trump posted video clips that he claimed or implied portrayed his completed construction of new sections of a wall at the Mexican border. In fact the videos portrayed the replacement of old, damaged barriers, undertaken months earlier with previously authorized funding – that is, before Congress had recently authorized minor new construction funding, and before Mr. Trump had recently declared a national emergency pursuant to which he could fund additional new construction by executive fiat.<sup>84</sup>	6, 7
2-21-19, 2-24-19	Science denier-in-chief. Mr. Trump was reported on February 21 to have named William Happer – a climate science denier with no climatological expertise – to chair the new Presidential Committee on Climate Security. The apparent purpose of the committee would be to refute prior determinations by the Pentagon, the director of national intelligence, multiple scientific advisory panels and Congress that climate change is a national security threat.<sup>85</sup> On February 24, Mr. Trump was reported to now be contemplating the formation of a more secretive committee for this purpose than he had originally planned.<sup>86</sup> CSD views the creation of the committee as comparable to Mr. Trump's quixotic empowerment in 2017 of a Presidential Advisory Commission on Election Integrity, to attempt to prove massive electoral fraud during the course of Hillary Clinton's popular vote victory in the 2016 presidential election. That committee was ultimately disbanded without having proven anything, other than the depravity of its mission and leadership.	8, 13

2-25-19	Ivanka to the rescue. Mr. Trump tweeted that his daughter and senior adviser Ivanka had "created millions of jobs." She had not. The closest she had come was to promote a White House jobs training program, in which many of the participating companies had already scheduled trainings.<sup>87</sup>	7, 11
2-27-19	Cohen confirms. Michael Cohen – Mr. Trump's former attorney and self-described "fixer," now an admitted and convicted felon for (among other things) having committed tax fraud, bank fraud, campaign finance violations, and perjury before Congress – confirmed to the House Oversight Committee many things that he and others had previously alleged and/or that had already seemed to observers to have been obvious: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• That Mr. Trump (through Cohen) had personally directed, at Mr. Trump's expense, felonious 2016 campaign hush money payments to Mr. Trump's former extra-marital girlfriends for the purpose of influencing the presidential election.</li> <li>• That as president Mr. Trump had omitted those payments from his 2017 financial disclosure forms.</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump's long-time friend, campaign associate and self-described political "dirty trickster" Roger Stone had alerted Mr. Trump in advance that WikiLeaks was going to publish compromising Hillary Clinton campaign emails (which federal officials later determined had been hacked by Russia). See also CSD's entry of January 25, above.</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump had implicitly instructed Cohen to falsely tell Congress in 2017 that Mr. Trump had had no real estate projects in Russia in 2016, when in truth the two men (and Mr. Trump's children) had continued to pursue a Moscow hotel project throughout the 2016 election campaign in hopes of making hundreds of millions of dollars from it.</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump had frequently characterized Africans and African Americans as inferior people.</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump had been a bully and a cheat in his business dealings, having ordered Cohen to threaten Mr. Trump's adversaries over 500 times.</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump had inflated his wealth to obtain business financing while deflating it in his tax reporting (both practices possibly fraudulent).</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump was smug about having avoided service in Vietnam. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	6, 7, 15; Tax fraud; Bank fraud; Election fraud; Subornation of perjury; Obstruction of justice

2-27-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• That Mr. Trump had rigged an auction to bid up the price of a portrait of himself, then had had his foundation buy the portrait (a likely illegal course of conduct).</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump had had Cohen warn educational institutions not to reveal Mr. Trump's grades or standardized test scores, even though they were already ethically constrained from doing that.</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump's run for the presidency in 2016 was at its core a business-branding and money-making scheme rather than an undertaking on behalf of the public interest, and that Mr. Trump had not wanted to be president.</li> <li>• That Mr. Trump had lied in having denied many of the above behaviors.</li> </ul> In his prepared opening statement, Mr. Cohen had summarized his views of Mr. Trump: "He is a racist. He is a conman. He is a cheat."<sup>88</sup> Mr. Trump, in Hanoi preparing to meet with North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un, predictably, tweeted that Cohen was a known liar, and thus not to be believed.	6, 7, 15; Tax fraud; Bank fraud; Election fraud; Subornation of perjury; Obstruction of justice
2-27-19 +	My friend Kim. Beginning his new round of de-nuclearization meetings with the savagely brutal North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un on February 27 in Hanoi, Mr. Trump referred to him as his "friend," as he had done repeatedly after his meetings with Kim in Singapore in 2018. (Among other things, Mr. Trump had said at that time that the two men had "fallen in love.") He then called Kim a "great leader," and said that the U.S. and North Korea enjoyed a "very special relationship." Subsequently, in terminating the meetings on February 28 after their failure, he spoke of the "warmth" he continued to shared with Kim. He also said that he trusted Kim's denial of having known that American student Otto Warmbier was being mortally mistreated while in North Korean detention. [Continued below.]	10, 11, 12

2-27-19 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's remarks were consistent with his favorable personal words for such butchers as Chinese President Xi Jinping, Russian President Vladimir Putin and Egyptian President Abdel Fatah al-Sissi, and for such election campaign felons (convicted, admitted or indicted) as Paul Manafort, Roger Stone, and (until he flipped on Mr. Trump) Michael Cohen.<sup>89</sup> Whether any or all of those expressions of warmth had been strategic or genuine, they suggested an instinctive affinity for butchers and felons never before displayed by an American president. By way of example, CSD continues to question whether under any circumstances a previous American president would have referred to, say, the then Soviet Union's savage dictator Josef Stalin as his "friend." Another dissonant note in Mr. Trump's praise of Kim's communist regime lay in his ongoing, furious denunciations of "socialism" as it had appeared (rabidly) in Venezuela and (mildly) among some Democratic members of Congress and contenders for the 2020 presidential nomination.<sup>90</sup> CSD believes that the contradiction can be squared by contrasting foreign regimes (Venezuelan) and domestic politicians (Democrats) who might try to redistribute the wealth of persons such as himself with a regime (North Korean) where he had publicly implied that he could someday add to his fortune as a real estate developer. As for the collapse of the de-nuclearization talks, it revived the appearance that Mr. Trump's glowing report on the Singapore talks the previous year had been either naive or outright fraudulent. It also further discredited his long-standing, avowed belief that he could succeed in complex negotiations through the force of his personality and his ability to build "relationships" rather than by relying on information, preparation and strategy. Reportedly, North Korea's nuclear threat was now greater than ever.<sup>91</sup>	10, 11, 12
2-28-19	ISIS claim. Mr. Trump falsely stated that the U.S. had captured "100%" of the territory in Syria held by ISIS. "The Pentagon scrambled to catch up with Mr. Trump's comments," The New York Times reported.<sup>92</sup> The complete capture did indeed appear to be imminent; but Mr. Trump's continued exaggerations and fabrications broadcast to world leaders, both friendly and hostile, his utter unreliability.	7, 13

3-1-19	Kushner's special clearance. Media reported that in 2018 Mr. Trump had ordered that his son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner be granted a top secret security clearance, over the objections of his then chief of staff John Kelly, his then White House Counsel Don McGahn, the CIA, and various career security officials. Mr. Trump had publicly denied similar reports to that effect in January 2019. The episode gave rise to serious questions both about Kushner's security defects and Mr. Trump's nepotistic, authoritarian defiance of national security norms.<sup>93</sup> (See also CSD's entry of January 25 on this topic.)	7, 9, 11, 13
3-2-19	Down on Mueller. In a speech before a conservative political group in Maryland, Mr. Trump said that special prosecutor Robert Mueller had "perhaps the worst reputation of any human being I have ever seen." (In fact Mueller's reputation among law enforcement professionals and Washington politicians was generally impeccable.) He also called former FBI Director James Comey a liar, and Mueller's investigation a "witch hunt."<sup>94</sup>	7, 9, 11; Obstruction of justice

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 23 – May 31, 2019

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

3-2-19	Golf, anyone? Mr. Trump tweeted that his financially troubled Trump International Golf Links property in Scotland was " perhaps the greatest golf course anywhere in the world. Also furthers U.K. relationship! " The tweet drew immediate condemnation from watchdog organizations as an attempt to profit financially from his presidency. As for the U.K. relationship, Mr. Trump had recently lost his long-standing lawsuit against the Scottish government in which he had sought to bar wind turbines from coastal waters visible from his course; and a Scottish court had recently ordered that he reimburse the government for its legal fees. <sup>1</sup>	7, 15
3-2-19	Hotel Kuwait. The Huffington Post reported that on February 26 the government of Kuwait had hosted a gala event at the Trump International Hotel in Washington, thus lining Mr. Trump's pockets with income – contrary to constitutional proscription – and causing a Democratic member of Congress to decline the invitation. <sup>2</sup>	15

3-2-19 +	Jared of Arabia. On March 2, a New York Times columnist drew a disturbing line between (a) presidential advisor and son-in-law Jared Kushner's attempts to enable Westinghouse Electric to sell nuclear power plant technology to Saudi Arabia and (b) Westinghouse's parent company having bailed out Kushner from a Manhattan real estate investment that had threatened to bankrupt him. The power plant sale was being opposed by nearly everyone else in government – as an invitation to nuclear weapons proliferation on the part of a rogue Saudi regime that had already distinguished itself as the premier destabilizing force and human rights abuser in the Gulf region.<sup>3</sup> Observers believed that Kushner's international business conflicts of interest and his lack of transparency about them had constituted at least one likely cause of the revocation of his security clearance in early 2018<sup>4</sup> – a clearance that was subsequently restored and upgraded, at Mr. Trump's insistence, over the objections of many ranking administration officials (as reported by CSD on March 1, 2019). On March 4, the White House refused a request by the House Oversight Committee to release records relating to the security clearance process for Kushner and others.<sup>5</sup> On March 5, CNN reported that Mr. Trump had personally granted his daughter and advisor Ivanka a security clearance after then chief of staff John Kelly and White House counsel Don McGahn had refused to do so. Three weeks before the report, Ms. Trump had publicly denied that her father had been involved in her clearance or in Kushner's.<sup>6</sup> Like Kushner's, her clearance denial had presumably involved business conflicts of interest; that is to say, the potential for corruption – a risk that had long appeared to attend authoritarian, nepotistic regimes worldwide.	9, 11, 13, 17 (15)

3-4-19	Fact Checker update. The Washington Post's Fact Checker counted a cumulative 9,014 false or misleading statements that Mr. Trump had made since taking office. Having averaged 16.5 such claims per day in 2018, he was averaging 22 per day in 2019. He made over 100 such claims (including with respect to his inauguration and rally crowd sizes, the status of the Mexican border wall's construction, how wind farms operate, and how the Justice Department was persecuting him) in his bitter, boastful, name-calling, extemporaneous, disconnected, two-hour-plus speech to the annual Conservative Political Action Conference on March 2 in National Harbor, Maryland – at which he hugged the American flag and proclaimed that the hall was filled with "love."<sup>7</sup>	7, 11
3-5-19	Fox propaganda. A lengthy New Yorker article posed that Mr. Trump's relationship with Fox News was so extensive and so unusual as to amount to the network serving as his captive and intentionally inflammatory propaganda arm, and something approaching state TV. Fox had been closely collaborating with Mr. Trump's messaging on a daily basis; Fox had often disseminated false conspiracy theories that appealed to Mr. Trump's base; Mr. Trump had been deriving much of his policy information from watching Fox; staffers frequently moved from Fox's payroll to the White House's, or the reverse; and Fox had even killed the story of Mr. Trump's campaign pay-off to extra-marital girlfriend Stormy Daniels before it was published elsewhere. The New Yorker attributed the genesis of the Fox-Trump relationship to the long-standing relationship and affinities as between Mr. Trump and Fox's owner, Rupert Murdoch. Both men, wrote the reporter, were fundamentally "devoid of almost any ideology besides self-interest," and both had derived their success from "fear-based, anger-based politics that has to do with class and race."<sup>8</sup>	9
3-5-19	Hush money at the White House. The New York Times reported that not only did Mr. Trump direct and reimburse his then lawyer Michael Cohen's illegal campaign hush money payments to one of Mr. Trump's former extra-marital girlfriends, and later deny any knowledge of the payments, but he made the reimbursements from the White House itself between performing official presidential duties. [Continued below.]	7, 9; Debasing the presidency

3-5-19	[Continued.] The Times wrote: " The president hosted a foreign leader in the Oval Office, then wrote a check. He haggled over legislation, then wrote a check. He traveled abroad, then wrote a check. On the same day he reportedly pressured the F.B.I. director to drop an investigation into a former aide, the president's trust issued a check to Mr. Cohen in furtherance of what federal prosecutors have called a criminal scheme to violate campaign finance laws at the direction of Mr. Trump."<sup>9</sup>	7, 9; Debasing the presidency
3-6-19, 4-5-19	Census question blocked, again, and again. On March 6, a federal court in California found that Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross's fervent attempts to include within the constitutionally mandated 2020 decennial census a question about the respondent's citizenship would violate the very purpose of the census, in that it would cause an undercounting of (minority) American residents. The court enjoined the inclusion of the question, stating that the question "threatens the very foundation of our democratic system."<sup>10</sup> On April 5, a federal court in Maryland blocked the inclusion of the question. The judge wrote: "The unreasonableness of [the government's] addition of a citizenship question to the Census is underscored by the lack of any genuine need for the citizenship question, the woefully deficient process that led to it, the mysterious and potentially improper political considerations that motivated the decision and the clear pretext offered to the public."<sup>11</sup> The rulings followed similar rulings by a federal court in New York, as reported by CSD on January 15. (Many previous entries in this Chronology have pointed to the apparently racist and anti-democratic implications of the question's inclusion.)	17 (6, 9)
3-6-19	The Trump boys, employing illegally. The Washington Post reported that the president's sons Donald, Jr. and Eric Trump had until recently employed an undocumented Mexican national as the caretaker of their private hunting preserve in New York State, and that they had dismissed him only following the revelation by The Post and The New York Times of considerable undocumented employment at several of Mr. Trump's golf clubs. (See CSD's entries of December 6, 2018, January 3, 2019 and January 26, 2019 concerning the golf clubs.)	17 (Crime and hypocrisy)

3-6-19, 3-8-19	The Trump dad, employing recklessly. A Washington Post columnist on March 6 summarized the stunning array of senior Trump administration officials who had (a) departed, (b) publicly contradicted Mr. Trump, (c) been publicly faulted by Mr. Trump while serving, (d) disparaged Mr. Trump before serving or after leaving office, (e) written books about Mr. Trump after leaving office, or (f) been indicted for or convicted of crimes in connection with serving Mr. Trump. "It's a personnel problem of incalculable dimensions, but with a common denominator: Trump. Either he's a bad judge of talent, or nobody with talent wants to work for him, or he's a terrible boss — or all three," the columnist wrote.<sup>12</sup> On March 8, Bill Shine, who was serving as the fifth or sixth White House communications director during Mr. Trump's two-year presidency (the counts vary), resigned — seemingly due to the impossibility of managing Mr. Trump's capricious statements.<sup>13</sup> On the same day, Heather Wilson resigned as Air Force Secretary.<sup>14</sup>	10, 11
3-8-11	Who hates whom? Spurred by comments by a Muslim, freshman, Democratic member of Congress that were critical of Israel and that some Democrats and Republicans viewed as anti-Semitic, Mr. Trump reacted. First he told reporters, "Democrats have become an anti-Israel party. They've become an anti-Jewish party, and that's too bad." Then he told a group of Republican donors that Democrats "hate Jewish people." The statements were not only preposterous, but they evidenced Mr. Trump's worst attempts to scapegoat the Democrats, incite anti-Muslim animus, and divide the country. They also ignored his own election campaign's anti-Semitic tropes and his reluctance to denounce racist and anti-Semitic extremists such as those within his own party and those who had marched in Charlottesville in 2017.<sup>15</sup>	7, 9

3-8-19, 3-13-19	No collusion. Following a federal judge's sentencing of Mr. Trump's initial campaign manager Paul Manafort to 47 months in prison for tax and bank fraud, on March 8 Mr. Trump tweeted that the judge had ruled that "there was no collusion with Russia" – thus reprising Mr. Trump's nearly continuous cries to that effect during special prosecutor Robert Mueller's ongoing investigation of him. In fact the judge had explicitly stated in his ruling that the question of whether Manafort had colluded with Russia in the latter's tampering with the 2016 presidential election had not been before him.<sup>16</sup> On March 13, a second federal judge sentenced Manafort to an additional 43 months in prison for other crimes: illegally lobbying for Ukraine, hiding his lobbying earnings, and encouraging witnesses to lie on his behalf. Afterwards his attorney told the press that the judge had found "no collusion" – something that again the judge had expressly declined to rule on.<sup>17</sup> Noting the synchrony between the stories of Mr. Trump and Manafort's lawyer, observers speculated that Manafort was continuing to angle for a pardon from Mr. Trump, and that Mr. Trump might well grant it.	7; 17 (Something fishy)
3-11-19, 3-12-19	Gutting refugee relief. On March 11, the Trump administration submitted to Congress a proposal for the FY 2020 budget that would virtually eliminate the State Department's Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration – the unit that arranges for the admission of refugees to the U.S. The proposal would also cut humanitarian aid and refugee assistance overseas, thus giving the lie to the administration's own stated reasoning for having chopped refugee admissions here to a record low – that it's more cost-effective to help refugees in venues closer to their home countries than here. A group of former military officers said that the abatement of such overseas programs would compromise U.S. security.<sup>18</sup> On March 12, the administration announced that it would close the overseas operations of the Department of Homeland Security's U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, thus further slowing the lawful admission to the U.S. of refugees and others.<sup>19</sup>	6, 7, 14

3-11-19, 3-12-19	Shredding science and technology. Mr. Trump's March 11 budget announcement included further funding cuts for the National Science Foundation, the National Institutes of Health, and a technology program within the Department of Energy.<sup>20</sup> On March 12, following the tragic crash of a Boeing 737 passenger aircraft in Ethiopia, Mr. Trump's only public reaction yet again betrayed his astonishing ignorance of and antipathy toward technology. In lieu of expressing condolences to the families of the victims, he tweeted (without knowledge of or relevance to anything): "Airplanes are becoming far too complex to fly. Pilots are no longer needed, but rather computer scientists from MIT. I see it all the time in many products. Always seeking to go one unnecessary step further, when often old and simpler is far better. ... All this cost for very little gain." CSD found it hard to fathom how the president of the United States, or for that matter any contemporary person of purported education and intellect, could so casually and ignorantly disparage the fields of endeavor that have brought us modern medicine (of which Mr. Trump reportedly had taken advantage), computing (of which he had not), space travel (which he had proposed to militarize), and Twitter itself.	8
3-13-19, 3-14-19	Threatening violence against "the left." On March 13, Mr. Trump told the incendiary, right-wing Breitbart News in an interview: "You know, the left plays a tougher game, it's very funny. I actually think that the people on the right are tougher, but they don't play it tougher. Okay? I can tell you I have the support of the police, the support of the military, the support of the Bikers for Trump – I have the tough people, but they don't play it tough — until they go to a certain point, and then it would be very bad, very bad."<sup>21</sup> The next day, The Washington Post reported that Venezuela's authoritarian strongman Nicolas Maduro was using armed motorcycle gangs to sow terror and to enforce his will.<sup>22</sup>	5

3-13-19, 3-14-19	Does Congress begin to stand? On March 13, the Republican-controlled Senate voted 54 to 46 to curtail Mr. Trump's military support for the atrocity-soaked Saudi Arabian war in Yemen. (The Democratic-controlled House of Representatives had passed a similar measure earlier in the year.)<sup>23</sup> On March 14, the Senate voted 59-41 to overturn Mr. Trump's declaration of a national emergency at the Mexican border – a declaration which he had claimed would enable him to fund the construction of a border wall without a congressional appropriation. (The House had passed a similar measure in February.)<sup>24</sup> Also on March 14, the House resolved 420 to 0 that Attorney General William Barr release special prosecutor Robert Mueller's report to the public when issued, amid concerns that Mr. Trump and Barr would block that release.<sup>25</sup> In the aggregate, those developments raised the possibility that Congress could draw more lines against Mr. Trump's authoritarian abuses.<sup>26</sup> As expected, on March 15 Mr. Trump vetoed the bill overturning his national emergency declaration. It was his first veto; and – as compared to all possible vetoes available to a president – he exercised it specifically to preserve extraordinary powers that he had claimed for himself.<sup>27</sup> As to the resolution on the special prosecutor, he tweeted that "there should be no Mueller report," and that the investigation was "illegal and conflicted."	9, 12; Obstruction of Justice
3-15-19 +	New Zealand massacre. On March 15, a white nationalist slaughtered 51 Muslim worshippers at two mosques in Christchurch, New Zealand, claiming that he had been inspired in part by Mr. Trump.<sup>28</sup> Whether Mr. Trump's Islamophobia, his appeals to white nationalists or his occasional veiled calls for civil violence had in fact helped inspire the New Zealand gunman was indeterminable. But the episode recalled the recent Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania synagogue massacre (see CSD's entry of October 27 +, 2018), the recent pipe bomb threats by an American Trump devotee (see our entry of October 24 +, 2018), the car attack by a white nationalist in Charlottesville, Virginia (see our entry of August 12, 2017), and the many other episodes of white nationalist and anti-Muslim violence that had arisen in the U.S. since Mr. Trump's election and that he had declined to criticize.<sup>29</sup> [Continued below.]	5, 6

3-15-19 +	[Continued.] When questioned by reporters about the Christchurch massacre, Mr. Trump said that he did not believe that white nationalism was a significant problem<sup>30</sup> (contradicting the FBI's view<sup>31</sup>). And after condemning the shooting in perfunctory remarks, he quickly followed by blasting the "invasion" of the U.S. by Hispanic criminals.<sup>32</sup> Mr. Trump also declined to condemn anti-Muslim bigotry and violence, or to express sympathy for the Muslim community at home and abroad relative to the Christchurch massacre, despite a public outcry that he do so.<sup>33</sup> And on March 17, three times he tweeted his support for Jeanine Pirro, an incendiary Fox News commentator who had recently been disciplined by Fox itself for her most recent anti-Muslim statements.	5, 6
3-15-19 to 3-17-19	Tweeting the weekend away. Mr. Trump tweeted 50 times over the weekend – a substantial increase from his weekend average of 16. The messages, although thematically disconnected from one another, contained not only his usual invective: against the mainstream media, Democrats, special prosecutor Robert Mueller and the "Witch Hunt," others in the government who had resisted his will, "Crooked Hillary" Clinton, and former Vice President and potential 2020 campaign competitor Joe Biden ("a low-I.Q. individual"); but also against two Fox News anchors who he felt were not sufficiently loyal to him, and even the late Senator John McCain. He meanwhile took time to tout his poll numbers. Pundits speculated as to the president's mental stability.<sup>34</sup>	9, 10, 11
3-17-19	Exploiting sex trafficking. The Washington Post's editorial board exposed how hollow Mr. Trump's fierce claims of support for anti-trafficking measures had proven to be: that fewer traffickers had been prosecuted than under his predecessors; that fewer trafficking victims had been granted humanitarian visas; and that it had become significantly more difficult for victims to come forward – thus forcing them further into the shadows. All of this had occurred while Mr. Trump, as part of his anti-migrant demagoguery, had been fabricating and publicizing lurid stories of trafficked sex victims being dragged here from across the Mexican border. An anti-trafficking activist told The Post: "The administration appears to view trafficking as a convenient tool to justify its border policies, rather than as a human tragedy to be seriously addressed."<sup>35</sup>	6, 7, 9, 14

3-18-19	Putin outlaws "fake news." Russian President Vladimir Putin signed into law a series of measures that outlawed and punished "fake news" – thus enabling prosecutors, not courts (that is, Putin's administrative apparatus) to block the dissemination of information that “exhibits blatant disrespect for the society, government, official government symbols, constitution or governmental bodies of Russia,” and to punish the purveyors of such information with fines and imprisonment. The new laws represented Russia's first major constraints on Internet freedom.<sup>36</sup> CSD struggled to sort out, as between Putin and Mr. Trump, who was the student and who the teacher.	1
3-18-19	Disappearing the UN. The American Civil Liberties Union complained to the United Nations' Human Rights Council in Geneva that the Trump administration had repeatedly ignored data requests from the HRC's special rapporteur on migrant rights, and had failed to deliver to that body routine reports on racial discrimination and torture. The ACLU wrote: “[T]he Trump administration has escalated its hostility toward human rights bodies including the apparent severing of relationships with independent experts appointed to monitor and report on human rights violations.” It added: “These issues raise serious concerns regarding the U.S. commitment to human rights and the international rule of law.”<sup>37</sup>	14
3-19-19	Disappearing the Congress. The chair of the House Oversight Committee wrote in The Washington Post that the White House had refused to produce a single document that the committee had requested since coming under Democratic control in January. Document requests had addressed such matters as suspect security clearance procedures, illegal hush money payments to Mr. Trump's former extra-marital girlfriends, efforts to share nuclear technology with Saudi Arabia, and other suspected patterns of corruption. Previous administrations had amply complied with such requests.<sup>38</sup> For his part, the chair of the House Judiciary Committee reported that few of the 81 individuals and entities connected to Mr. Trump (mainly outside the administration) had timely complied with document requests in connection with the committee's investigation of obstruction of justice for the benefit of Mr. Trump.<sup>39</sup> [Continued below.]	9

3-19-19	The loser. The Washington Post reported that in the two years of his presidency, Mr. Trump had lost a remarkable 63 court cases challenging the legality of his administrative actions. Observers said that he hadn't even tried to follow the law, and that he had often undercut the enforceability of his actions by betraying unlawful intent through his tweets and other public statements. Many of the decisions were issued by Republican-appointed judges. The Post wrote: "In case after case, judges have rebuked Trump officials for failing to follow the most basic rules of governance for shifting policy, including providing legitimate explanations supported by facts and, where required, public input. ... [T]he rulings ... paint a remarkable portrait of a government rushing to implement far-reaching changes in policy without regard for long-standing rules against arbitrary and capricious behavior."<sup>40</sup> CSD is reminded of Mr. Trump's litigiousness during his business career, pursuant to which he was reputed to have sought to defeat his opponents by way of obstinacy, attrition and brute legal force rather than abiding by principled dealings or principled use of the court system. From all appearances, as president he had continued to view the legal system as something to be exploited rather than respected.	9, 10
3-19-19	Bolsonaro feted at the White House. Mr. Trump feted Brazil's recently elected racist, misogynistic, homophobic, proto-fascist President Jair Bolsonaro and his entourage at the White House. There they publicly praised one another and decried the "fake news." Mr. Trump's current and former nationalist/populist advisors – Steve Bannon, Sebastian Gorka and others – reacted by urging and heralding a global nationalist/populist movement.<sup>41</sup>	6, 12

3-20-19	Defiling the dead. For at least the third time in recent days, Mr. Trump pointedly and personally attacked the recently deceased Senator John McCain. This time he went on for five minutes. Mr. Trump said that his ire arose from McCain's 2017 vote against repealing the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") and from his turning over to the FBI the Steele "dossier" about Mr. Trump's suspected unseemly activities in Russia. But there was no policy gain to be had. Rather, the tirades appeared to represent an incitement against establishment Republicans generally, and a vendetta – motivated by Mr. Trump's inclination toward vanity, vengeance and sadism, and by his jealousy over McCain's honorable military service and principled political life.<sup>42</sup>	11
3-21-19	Two Kushners of Arabia. The New York Times reported that in October 2017 presidential son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner was conducting diplomacy with the leaders of Saudi Arabia in Riyadh at the same time that his brother Josh was there promoting business ventures.<sup>43</sup>	17 (15)
3-21-19	Javanka's private communications. The chairman of the House Oversight Committee revealed that Ivanka Trump and Jared Kushner – Mr. Trump's senior advisors and his daughter and son-in-law – had continued routinely to abuse communications security protocols, even after having been called out for that before, and even while Mr. Trump continued to evoke chants from his followers to the effect that former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton should be jailed for having violated such protocols. One of Kushner's abuses was using a private, encrypted WhatsApp account to communicate with foreign figures in a manner that could avoid the content (possibly including classified information) ever being subject to oversight scrutiny.<sup>44</sup>	17 (11)
3-21-19	The Marines at the border. The Los Angeles Times reported that Marine Corps Commandant Robert Neller was strongly objecting to Mr. Trump's deployment of troops to the Mexican border, in that, together with domestic deployments for disaster relief, it would degrade Marine Corps combat readiness – and all in the service of Mr. Trump's domestic political priorities. The rebuke was considered extraordinary. For CSD, it indicated that Mr. Trump was sacrificing real American security for the benefit of his fallacious, demagogically motivated agenda for migrant exclusion.<sup>45</sup>	6, 9, 10, 11, 13

3-22-19	Reversing on North Korea. A day after the Treasury Department imposed new sanctions against two Chinese shipping companies that were helping North Korea evade existing sanctions, Mr. Trump announced by Twitter that he was reversing the new sanctions. The White House press secretary said that the decision was a favor to Mr. Kim: “President Trump likes Chairman Kim, and he doesn’t think these sanctions will be necessary.” Policy analysts were stunned that a president would so publicly and abruptly reverse the carefully crafted sanctions of his own advisors.<sup>46</sup>	10, 12, 13
3-22-19	Sent by God. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo told a Christian audience that God may have sent Mr. Trump to the presidency in order to save the Jewish people from Iran.<sup>47</sup>	17 (9)
3-22-19	ISIS defeated? For at least the tenth time, Mr. Trump stated that ISIS had been thoroughly defeated (by him). Critics concurred that all or virtually all of the extremists' territory had been recaptured; but they pointed to continuing fighting and an ongoing threat of resurgence.<sup>48</sup>	7
3-22-19, 4-4-19 +	Moore and Cain for the Fed. On March 22, Mr. Trump announced that he would nominate Stephen Moore – a former Trump campaign adviser, and a highly visible and partisan Trump supporter, flatterer and apologist since then – to serve on the Federal Reserve Board. That body had long been populated mainly by highly esteemed, centrist economists and bankers dedicated to the science of economics and the welfare of the country; and Moore's appointment was widely seen as an attempt to politicize the Fed by inserting erratic and unprincipled advocacy. Like Mr. Trump, for example, Moore had castigated the low-interest rate environment during President Obama's tenure and the Great Recession, but under Mr. Trump's tenure had come to castigate the current board for raising interest rates. Like Mr. Trump, he had developed a reputation for falsifying data. Among credible economists, he had developed a reputation for having routinely been wrong in his economic predictions.<sup>49</sup> He had called for a return to the gold standard; had called for the elimination of the corporate and federal income tax, the minimum wage, Medicaid and Social Security, and many major federal government departments; and had said that he was "not a big believer in democracy," but rather that capitalism was more important than democracy.<sup>50</sup> [Continued below.]	8, 11, 16, 17 (9)

3-22-19, 4-4-19 +	[Continued.] On April 4, Mr. Trump announced that he would nominate Herman Cain – the former Godfather's Pizza executive, former Republican presidential primary candidate, and current Trump re-election campaign fundraiser – to serve on the Fed's board. Cain was widely viewed as a grifter and an economic crackpot; but like Mr. Trump, he appeared to favor a lowering of interest rates as a means for juicing short-term economic growth (versus long-term economic stability) and thus juicing Mr. Trump's reelection campaign.<sup>51</sup> Ordinarily, Fed nominees had had conservative personal profiles and had kept them low pending their confirmation hearings. But Cain's personal (sexual/marital) history had been unseemly, Moore's was now revealed to have been also, and both now uniquely talked and talked to the media about themselves in what The New York Times likened to a "reality show."<sup>52</sup> Even the Republican Senate was appalled, and confirmations came to appear impossible. On April 22, Cain withdrew his nomination.<sup>53</sup> On May 2, Moore withdrew his.<sup>54</sup> A summary of Mr. Trump's remarkable 62 withdrawn nominations, and the dysfunctional vetting process that had given rise to the withdrawals, appears at the link at this endnote.<sup>55</sup>	8, 11, 16, 17 (9)

The Mueller Report

The Barr Report on the Mueller Report.

On March 22, 2019, special prosecutor Robert Mueller delivered his report on Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election campaign to Mr. Trump's Attorney General William Barr.

On March 24, Barr issued a summary of the report. He stated that Mueller had found that Mr. Trump and his associates had not conspired in the 2016 Russian election tampering; but that Mueller had said that he (Mueller) had lacked sufficient evidence to determine whether Mr. Trump had engaged in any related acts of obstruction of justice, and that the report "does not exonerate " Mr. Trump in that regard, quoting Mueller. Barr – a Trump appointee who had denounced the investigation prior to (and possibly in order to win) his appointment – nevertheless quickly and formally exonerated Mr. Trump, and he closed the investigation.<sup>56</sup> Mr. Trump promptly tweeted, "No Collusion, No Obstruction, Complete and Total EXONERATION," which was flatly untrue. Shortly afterwards Mr. Trump repeated those words to reporters, and he called the investigation "an illegal take-down that failed."

The Triumphal Parade.

On March 25, Mr. Trump tweeted: "The Mainstream Media is under fire and being scorned all over the World as being corrupt and FAKE. For two years they pushed the Russian Collusion Delusion when they always knew there was No Collusion. They truly are the Enemy of the People and the Real Opposition Party!"

Mr. Trump's allies widely repeated the "total exoneration" trope. They promptly called for investigations of the Justice Department for having embarked on the investigation from the outset, as well as for renewed investigations of Mr. Trump's presidential rival Hillary Clinton, whom he had long demonized.<sup>57</sup> The Trump reelection campaign began selling T-shirts and other sundries featuring one of Mr. Trump's tweets decrying the investigation as a "WITCH HUNT!" The campaign also decried the probe as a fraud perpetrated on the American people by the Democratic party, and it urged television networks to boycott leading Democratic figures who had prominently urged the investigation.<sup>58</sup> Mr. Trump's press secretary posted to Twitter a long "enemies" list of some of Mr. Trump's most prominent critics within the media, entertainment and political fields.<sup>59</sup> Mr. Trump himself accused his critics of treason.<sup>60</sup> Russian commentators crowded jubilantly.<sup>61</sup>

In Michigan: Going for Schiff.

Mr. Trump and his supporters began a campaign particularly demonizing California Congressman Adam Schiff, the current chair (and former ranking member) of the House Intelligence Committee and a fervent Trump investigator – pointedly calling for Schiff's resignation.<sup>62</sup> To CSD's mind, Schiff was a man of exceptional intellect, honor, civility, eloquence, patriotism and courage – qualities foreign to Mr. Trump, and thus a natural target for that scapegoating. Mr. Trump's son Donald, Jr. tweeted, "Has anyone heard from slimy Adam #fullofschiff Schiff today? I mean it must be embarrassing to have have [sic] spent the last 2 years as the leader of the tinfoil hat brigade and have it all come crashing down so quick." Mr. Trump himself, in a lengthy attack on the investigation at a March 28 reelection campaign rally in Grand Rapids, Michigan,<sup>63</sup> taunted Schiff as "Little pencil-necked Adam Schiff.... He's got the smallest, thinnest neck I've ever seen. He is not a long-ball hitter."<sup>64</sup> The campaign then issued a T-shirt featuring Schiff with a pencil in the place of his neck.<sup>65</sup>

In a marked episode of egotism, tastelessness and confusion, at the Michigan rally Mr. Trump repeated his familiar broadside against "the elite": "I have a better education than them, I'm smarter than them. I went to the best schools. They didn't .... Much more beautiful house, much more beautiful apartment. Much more beautiful everything. And I'm president, and they're not."<sup>66</sup> In so doing he forgot that although Schiff, unlike Mr. Trump, had not dedicated his life to aggrandizing an inherited fortune by bilking banks, investors and consumers and to pursuing an ostentatiously materialistic and libidinous life devoid of all moral value, Schiff had indeed graduated from Stanford University and Harvard Law School.

Also, from the Michigan rally: "The Russia witch hunt was a plan by those who lost the election to try and illegally gain power by framing innocent Americans. Despite this phony corrupt disgusting cloud we've done more together in the first two years than any administration in history." And so on, including attacks on the "fake news media."<sup>67</sup> As he ripped his Democratic tormentors by name, the excited crowd chanted, "Lock them up!"<sup>68</sup> The crowd also reprised its familiar chant about Hillary Clinton: "Lock her up!"<sup>69</sup> Those choruses had followed the chant that had arisen during Trump Jr.'s warm-up speech, in which the crowd cried of the progressive Latina Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez: "OAC sucks!"<sup>70</sup> The incitement of visceral, nearly violent hatred toward named Democrats thus appeared to be entering a new phase of competing targets.

The Triumph Pales.

But no one other than top Justice Department officials had actually seen Mueller's report. Recalling the House of Representatives' 420-0 vote on March 14 that the report be made public once issued,<sup>71</sup> House Democrats now demanded its immediate release, so that the public could evaluate it without having to rely on Barr's hasty interpretation.<sup>72</sup> In addition, on April 3, The New York Times and The Washington Post reported that several members of Mueller's team had expressed dismay at Barr's characterization of the report, indicating that they had found substantial evidence of Mr. Trump's culpability (for something). Mr. Trump now was reported to be concerned. Having initially shown satisfaction with the investigation's outcome (as summarized by Barr), he now resumed his attacks on the inquiry. He repeatedly accused the investigation's staff and supporters of having committed treason.<sup>73</sup> On April 6, he tweeted that the investigators had been Democratic partisans but that they nevertheless had found nothing and had merely wasted taxpayer money in conducting the probe.<sup>74</sup> On April 10, he told reporters: "It was an illegal investigation. It was started illegally. Everything about it was crooked ... . This was an attempted coup. This was an attempted takedown of a president, and we beat them." On April 15 he tweeted that "Crooked Hillary, the DNC [and] Dirty Cops [at the Justice Department]" were the real criminals: "INVESTIGATE THE INVESTIGATORS!" (See CSD's entry of May 4 + in this Addendum, below, for his subsequent pursuit of this theme.)

The Second Barr Summary.

On April 18, in a nationally televised address, Barr delivered his second summary of the Mueller report, which was much like the first, only longer. Without detail, he acknowledged that he disagreed with some of Mueller's conclusions that as a matter of fact and law some of Mr. Trump's behavior could constitute obstruction of justice.<sup>75</sup> His presentation was highly partisan, in that (a) he characterized Mr. Trump as having fully cooperated with the investigation (even though Mr. Trump had refused to be interviewed by Mueller's team, had evaded written questions, and had continuously attempted to discredit and scuttle the investigation); (b) he expressed sympathy for Mr. Trump's motives and victimhood in having resisted the investigation; (c) he made no mention of the endless stream of falsehoods issued by Mr. Trump and his associates around the investigated events; (d) he made no mention of the criminal activity of Mr. Trump's many campaign associates that had already been established; and (e) he made no mention of Mr. Trump's extraordinary pandering to and secrecy in dealing with the Russian government. It was a whitewash.

The Redacted Report.

Within hours after concluding his remarks, Barr delivered a redacted version of the Mueller report to Congress and to the public. CSD's summary of the report follows.

1. As for "colluding" (Mr. Trump's word, not Mueller's) with the Russian government to influence the presidential election, the report confirmed that Russia had interfered with the American election, that it had wanted to help Mr. Trump's campaign, that the campaign had sought that help, and that the campaign had had 140 secret contacts with the Russian government, but that the evidence was insufficient to prove actual conspiring or coordinating.

2. As for obstruction of justice, the report described ten areas in which evidence of obstruction had amply appeared to the investigators.

3. One such area: the report confirmed that Mr. Trump had repeatedly attempted to fire Mueller, to intimidate ranking Justice Department officials, and to otherwise throttle the investigation – which was saved only because Mr. Trump's aides had refused to obey some of his directives.

4. Mr. Trump and his subordinates also repeatedly misled the public relative to the subject matter of the investigation. Events reported by the mainstream media that he had denied as "fake" proved to have been generally accurate.

5. In responding to Mueller's written questions, Mr. Trump wrote at least 37 times – following his custom in the course of business litigation<sup>76</sup> – that he couldn't remember, and at other times he gave incomplete answers.

6. One of Mr. Trump's apparent motives: to hide potential criminal or embarrassing revelations on other matters that could emerge from the investigation, including as might pertain to his pursuit of a hotel project in Moscow during his election campaign. (The report did not expressly address counter-intelligence issues themselves, such as whether Mr. Trump had sought to cultivate the favor of the Russian government or had actually fallen under the influence of Russia.<sup>77</sup>)

7. Mueller concluded that a president can indeed, as a matter of law, be found to have obstructed justice (contrary to Barr's own previously stated belief); but because he believed that he could not indict a sitting president, and because the president thus could not rebut allegations in a court of law, Mueller appeared to have directed any actual determination of culpability to Congress.

(The report also revealed that Mr. Trump had urged his one-time Attorney General Jeff Sessions to prosecute Hillary Clinton – complementing the baying of the crowds at Trump rallies to "Lock her up!"<sup>78</sup>)

In short, Mueller's report stated that he had found substantial evidence that Mr. Trump had obstructed justice; but Barr, a Trump loyalist, had concluded and announced – pursuant to unspecified reasoning – that no obstruction had occurred.<sup>79</sup> Absent a full disclosure of Barr's reasoning – or even if it were to someday be disclosed – CSD and others believed that Barr's interpretation was highly vulnerable to charges of cynicism, disingenuousness, partisanship, cronyism, and disdain for the Constitution. Barr also flatly misrepresented Mueller's report in numerous ways.<sup>80</sup> In addition, CSD believes that the report itself demonstrated, in a wholly epochal manner for America, the boundless dishonesty, corruption, and antipathy to the rule of law on the part of Mr. Trump and his highest ranking supporters.

Of special significance, we understand Mueller as having not expressly charged Mr. Trump with committing either conspiracy or obstruction due to what were essentially legal technicalities: that Mueller was not certain he could sufficiently prove some items notwithstanding the evidence, and that he saw his prosecutorial role to be limited. Mr. Trump nevertheless, on the strength of Barr's televised interpretation, promptly declared total victory on the substance of the investigation.<sup>81</sup>

Other Reactions.

Commentators instantly noted that the report re-confirmed the Trump White House's profile – including as to aides' reluctance to obey Mr. Trump's most audacious orders<sup>82</sup> – as a place of "chaos, intrigue and deception," "chaos, dishonesty and malfeasance," and "a hotbed of conflict infused by a culture of dishonesty — defined by a president who lied to the public and his own staff, then tried to get his aides to lie for him."<sup>83</sup> But on April 19, a day after the report's release (and revealed by The Washington Post on May 2), loyal White House counsel wrote a letter to Mueller complaining about the report: that Mueller had exceeded his authority in commenting on Mr. Trump's culpability beyond the bare minimum.<sup>84</sup>

For his part, Mr. Trump again tweeted that the investigation was a "hoax," that some of his enemies had committed "Treason," and that some of the witnesses' statements were "total bullshit." In the days and weeks that followed, Mr. Trump commented non-stop on the report: continuing to claim complete "exoneration," while fulminating over the damning statements made about him by witnesses and over Mueller himself.<sup>85</sup> On April 26 he accused former Justice Department officials of an "attempted coup," "an attempted overthrow of the United States government," and "the greatest political scandal in the history of our country. ... Bigger than Watergate."<sup>86</sup>

But although Mr. Trump's popularity ticked downward in some polls, for the most part neither his supporters nor his critics seemed immediately to have changed their views about him.<sup>87</sup>

Barr under the Glare.

On April 30, media reported that, in late March, Mueller had written an extraordinary letter to Barr objecting to Barr's initial four-page, public characterization of Mueller's report as having distorted Mueller's views. They then had a disagreement by telephone.<sup>88</sup> On May 1, Barr testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee in a manner that was widely regarded by the mainstream press as evasive, dishonest, and protective of Mr. Trump rather than of the country. Some Democrats on the panel, as well as the Democratic speaker of the House, went so far as to accuse Barr of having lied to Congress on April 9 when he had testified that Mueller had expressed no concerns about Barr's letter.<sup>89</sup> Other critics now felt confirmed in their concerns that Barr was Mr. Trump's lapdog and that Barr broadly supported an authoritarian presidency.<sup>90</sup> On May 2, Barr canceled his scheduled appearance before the House Judiciary Committee for that day, on technical procedural grounds, prompting Democrats there to consider holding him in contempt of Congress.<sup>91</sup> In the days following, Mr. Trump and Barr repeatedly defied congressional subpoenas for information and testimony regarding the Mueller report, as described in greater detail below in CSD's entry dated April 16 +.

Yet More.

- On May 6, several hundred former federal prosecutors who had served in Democratic and Republican administrations published a letter asserting that, based on Mueller's findings about Mr. Trump's behavior, a government official ordinarily would have been charged with multiple felonies, and that Mr. Trump escaped such charges only because of the Justice Department's pre-existing policy that it would not indict a sitting president. Eventually over 1000 signed the letter.<sup>92</sup>
- On May 9, Mr. Trump yet again charged Mueller with having been biased by personal disputes with the president, and to have overseen an utterly corrupt investigation – which he claimed had nevertheless exonerated him.<sup>93</sup>
- On May 14, mainstream media reported that Barr, at Mr. Trump's insistence, had appointed a prosecutor to investigate the genesis of the Mueller investigation of Trump campaign figures. The predicate was the assertion by Mr. Trump and his supporters that the Mueller investigation had been politically motivated and illegal. The development had arisen despite the in-plain-view evidence of Russian meddling and Russian links to the Trump campaign that had existed at the Mueller investigation's outset; hence the unquestionable legal and national security necessity to conduct it. It had also arisen despite Mueller's restrained but ample findings, ultimately, that Russia had concertedly meddled in the 2016 election for the benefit of Mr. Trump; that Mr. Trump's campaign had welcomed that meddling; and that substantial evidence pointed to Mr. Trump's having obstructed the investigation.<sup>94</sup> (The pursuit of that new investigation is detailed in CSD's entry of May 4 + below in this Addendum.)

Mueller Speaks.

On May 29, Mueller broke his (oral) public silence of two years. Addressing live television cameras, he summarized the report's findings; defended the integrity of his team (implicitly, as against Mr. Trump's allegations of a partisan "witch hunt"); announced his resignation from the Justice Department; said he would not elaborate on his written report if called to testify before Congress; made clear that Congress could yet find Mr. Trump culpable of obstruction; subtly but unmistakably contradicted Barr on at least three of Barr's Trump-friendly characterizations of the report; and cautioned the American public with great urgency that the Russian government was continuing to be bent on disrupting our elections – a charge that Mr. Trump had stood almost alone in disputing.<sup>95</sup>

Mr. Trump responded the following morning by way of Twitter and in remarks to reporters: ignoring the Russian election tampering charges and alarms, denigrating Mueller, and grossly mischaracterizing Mueller's public statement.<sup>96</sup> Broad portions of the American public remained oblivious to Mueller's nuanced rebukes, and instead remained anchored to the Trump-Barr "total exoneration" spin on the Mueller report. Mr. Trump's supporters claimed victory.<sup>97</sup>

Democracy's Prospect.

Any remedy for Mr. Trump's misdeeds now lay entirely in the hands of Congress, where the Republican Senate was certain to block any Democratic House attempt at impeachment. In addition, based on Barr's handling of the Mueller report, there now appeared to be nothing standing in the way of Mr. Trump and his family continuing to develop foreign business opportunities while praising and befriendng foreign authoritarian regimes, to submit to foreign blackmail for unbecoming behavior, or to otherwise engage in audaciously anti-democratic conduct. There also appeared to be few if any ways in which the Justice Department could or would take measures to rein in this president or any future president, under the theory advanced by Mr. Trump, his legal advisors and Barr, that the president may direct the department in any way he wishes, including by firing anyone who might seek to check him – contrary to the understandings that had held since President Richard Nixon's scandalous departure from office in 1974.<sup>98</sup> Fresh concerns arose that Mr. Trump, now emboldened, could corruptly exercise his power to pardon his associates and himself relative to alleged and proven crimes.<sup>99</sup> And the very idea that this president or future presidents would be bound by basic ethical norms – not consorting with international adversaries for personal gain, consistently purveying falsehoods, consistently flaunting the rule of law and the design of the Constitution – had come into question.<sup>100</sup>

Categories of anti-democratic behavior: 1, 5, 7, 9, 11, 12, 17

3-23-19	More T-shirts. Drawing criticism from a former White House ethics official, Mr. Trump was reported to be selling T-shirts and other sundries bearing images of the White House at his Trump Store and his Trump International Hotel in Washington.<sup>101</sup> CSD believes that this latest episode of his monetizing his presidency went to more than the (negligible) value of the sundries; it was part of an ongoing pattern of promoting all of his company's consumer-facing enterprises on the strength of his office.	15
3-25-19	The wall's presidential funding begins. The Pentagon announced that it had transferred $1 billion to an account to build fencing along the Mexican border, contrary to the appropriations powers of and the will of Congress.<sup>102</sup>	6, 9
3-25-19 +	DOJ batters the ACA. Mr. Trump – not satisfied with his many efforts to destroy the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare") by way of regulatory action – now had his Justice Department write a letter to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. The court was then hearing a challenge to the statute brought by a number of Republican-led states, claiming that the entire statute, not just parts of it, was illegal (including such overwhelmingly popular features as coverage for pre-existing conditions and for children to age 26). In fact the Justice Department is obligated to defend duly enacted congressional legislation unless it is utterly indefensible; the Department had acknowledged in June 2018 that the ACA was defensible; it now was reversing itself; and in so doing it was violating the rule of law.<sup>103</sup> Any overturning of the ACA, while giving Mr. Trump his long sought vengeance against President Obama (as amply described above in this document), was seen as likely to sow wreckage throughout the American healthcare system and the well-being of millions of Americans.<sup>104</sup> One observer said that to invalidate the ACA now, after it had been law for nine years, would compare to invalidating the interstate highway system. Another called the potential wreckage "breathhtaking."<sup>105</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 11

3-25-19 +	[Continued.] But the Justice Department's move was also seen as so preposterous as to be unlikely to prevail in court. CSD views it as consistent with Mr. Trump's continuing abuse of the court system by bringing frivolous litigation, as he had made a career of doing as a businessman, and as CSD described in our March 19 entry, above. Those developments occurred during the same week as two federal courts found certain of Mr. Trump's attempts to eviscerate the ACA to be illegal.<sup>106</sup> On May 1, Mr. Trump followed through. The Justice Department formally joined with a number of states in appellate court litigation to expressly demand the repeal of the whole of the ACA. If the suit were successful, over 20 million Americans stood to lose their health insurance.<sup>107</sup> (CSD has not taken a position on the ACA itself; only on Mr. Trump's reckless, demagogic, unlawful and vindictive attempts to destroy it without having an alternative plan in place.)	9, 11
3-28-19	Saving Puerto Rico. After having long been accused of a feeble and inadequate response to Puerto Rico's twin 2017 hurricane disasters, Mr. Trump reportedly complained that the island was receiving too much federal recovery aid, and he boasted, "I've taken better care of Puerto Rico than any man ever." For the avoidance of doubt, he added, "Puerto Rico has been taken care of better by Donald Trump than by any living human being."<sup>108</sup>	6, 7, 11
3-29-19 +	Caprice at the border. On March 29, Mr. Trump threatened to close the Mexican border at all ports of entry.<sup>109</sup> The next day he threatened to terminate all foreign aid to El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras as a means of coercing those countries' governments to restrain their nationals from migrating north to the U.S.<sup>110</sup> Both threats were widely viewed by policy experts as impulsive, uninformed, demagogic, and unlikely to be effective. They were also viewed as likely to be counter-productive: closing the border for the economic chaos it would cause the U.S., and terminating aid for its potential to exacerbate the conditions driving the migrants northward and thus provoking more migration.<sup>111</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 9, 10

3-29-19 +	[Continued.] Confronted with a firestorm of Republican criticism, on April 4 Mr. Trump said he would not close the border, but would instead give Mexico a one-year warning to stop drug traffic – then would "tariff their cars" and close the border.<sup>112</sup>	6, 9, 10
3-29-19. 4-4-19, 4-5-19	Still down on the Fed. On March 29, Mr. Trump yet again blamed the Federal Reserve Board for causing a slowdown in the economy, and his top economic advisor urged that the Fed immediately lower interest rates.<sup>113</sup> On April 4, Mr. Trump said that the Fed's interest rate policies were "unnecessary and destructive."<sup>114</sup> On April 5, he explicitly called for a rate cut.<sup>115</sup> The episodes thus continued – for political purposes and with perilous economic implications – Mr. Trump's unprecedented interference with Federal Reserve monetary policy, and his unparalleled hypocrisy after having slammed low interest rates during President Obama's administration.	9, 11
3-30-19 +	Selling out on security: at Mar-a-Lago. On March 30, a Chinese national who had been allowed to enter Mr. Trump's home and commercial resort in Palm Beach, Florida as a guest was arrested for carrying malware on portable electronic devices; she was suspected of seeking to install the malware on the resort's computers. The episode raised serious security questions about Mr. Trump's practice of letting hundreds of paying resort members and guests enter the property, for Mr. Trump's personal profit and political advantage. The FBI began an investigation.<sup>116</sup> On April 9, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's golf clubs were continuing to cull undocumented workers from the payroll, having hired them pervasively before that practice had been exposed by the press. At Mar-a-Lago in particular, their easy ability to falsify their identity papers and work credentials suggested yet another element of the national security threat at that property.<sup>117</sup>	11, 15

4-1-19 +	Selling out on security: at the White House. On April 1, the House Oversight Committee reported that a White House personnel staffer had told the committee that the Trump administration had "systematically" ignored security issues in granting top secret clearances. She said that 25 White House staffers were granted clearances after initial denials under those circumstances, and that she had been disciplined for her whistle-blowing on the topic. The White House meanwhile had refused to honor the committee's requests for pertinent documentation.<sup>118</sup> Several days later, Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner was identified as one of those whose clearances had been denied due to serious security concerns, and who was then cleared on Mr. Trump's orders.<sup>119</sup>	9, 11, 13
4-1-19	The census expert. Pursuing his administration's drive to depress the minority census tally by adding a question about citizenship to the 2020 decennial survey, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Can you believe that the Radical Left Democrats want to do our new and very important Census Report without the all important Citizenship Question. Report would be meaningless and a waste of the $Billions (ridiculous) that it costs to put together!" As CSD has repeatedly observed, adding the question would undermine survey science and would disadvantage states, communities and businesses where migrant minorities are concentrated.	6, 7, 8, 9
4-1-19	Fact Checker update. The Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now made 9,451 false or misleading statements since taking office, with the pace increasing to an average of 22 per day over the prior 200 days. The Post cited as exemplary Mr. Trump's March 28 rally in Grand Rapids, Michigan, where he made 64 such claims.<sup>120</sup> CSD commends the article to its readers as a staggering indication of how what is wildly untrue has likely come to be believed by many.	7, 9
4-2-19	Wind turbine cancer. In his latest fusillade against renewable energy, Mr. Trump falsely stated at a Republican fundraising event that the sound of wind turbines causes cancer.<sup>121</sup> A leading Republican senator called Mr. Trump's comment "idiotic."<sup>122</sup>	7, 8, 10
4-2-19	Voter fraud: still at it. Mr. Trump suggested to a group of supporters that Democrats would attempt to steal the 2020 election by way of ballot fraud.<sup>123</sup>	4

4-4-19	Children struggling with arithmetic. A watchdog group reported that Mr. Trump's White House advisors – daughter Ivanka Trump and son-in-law Jared Kushner – had between themselves amended their financial disclosure forms ten times in recent weeks, suggesting either poor mathematical skills or outright monkey business. The couple had flunked repeatedly in their prior submissions as well, such that the Office of Government Ethics had refused to certify their filings for almost a year, despite dozens of amended filings.<sup>124</sup>	17 (7, 15)
4-4-19 +	Serving (one's self) in the Cabinet. On April 4, the Office of Government Ethics announced that it would not certify Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin's 2018 financial disclosure filings, due to his trickery in having transferred his holdings in a film company to his then fiancée and now his (third) wife.<sup>125</sup> (As reported above in this Chronology, Mnuchin had drawn attention in 2017 for the improper use of government aircraft for personal travel with his new wife.) On the same day, The New York Times reported that David Bernhardt, President Trump's nominee for Interior Secretary, had continued to lobby for a major agribusiness client several months after he had promised to end such activities.<sup>126</sup> In his recent confirmation hearing, Bernhardt had already come under withering scrutiny for his ties to extractive industries and other conflicts of interest.<sup>127</sup> On April 11, the Republican Senate nevertheless confirmed Bernhardt's appointment.<sup>128</sup> On April 15, the Interior Department's Office of Inspector General announced that it had launched an investigation into his suspected conflicts of interest and other ethical lapses.<sup>129</sup> On April 23, media reported that that office was investigating whether six more of Mr. Trump's Interior appointees had breached conflict of interest rules by engaging with former employers or clients.<sup>130</sup>	17 (15)

4-4-19, 4-5-19, 4-10-19	The tax man: in his pocket? On April 4, The New York Times reported that in February, shortly after the Democratic takeover of several House committees that could compel the production of his income tax returns, Mr. Trump had unusually and successfully pressed the Senate for rapid approval of a former tax advisor of the Trump Organization as chief counsel at the Internal Revenue Service.<sup>131</sup> On April 5, The Washington Post wrote that Mr. Trump's appointee as IRS Commissioner had written in 2016 that Mr. Trump should not release his tax returns, and that Mr. Trump had otherwise appeared to have been staffing top government positions with individuals who, prior to their selection, had expressed favor for his personal interests.<sup>132</sup> On April 10, the Treasury Department refused to promptly honor a congressional request of the IRS to produce Mr. Trump's tax returns – despite his campaign promises to produce them, the decades-long practice of presidents voluntarily producing them, and Congress's statutory authority to demand them.<sup>133</sup> Lurking in the returns could have been evidence of conflicts of interest, illegal receipts from foreign governments, a revelation that Mr. Trump was not as wealthy as he had claimed, and outright tax fraud. Mr. Trump was now seen as hiding from Congress and the public not only the Mueller report, but this. For CSD, the secrecy was extraordinary not only for its anti-democratic non-accountability, but for the dark data that the documents seemed almost certainly to contain. (For more developments on Mr. Trump's refusal to disclose information to Congress, see our April 16 + entry below in this Addendum.)	9, 16, 17 (15)
4-5-19	In Calexico. Largely unwelcome by local residents (as he had been during his recent trip to El Paso, Texas), Mr. Trump traveled to Calexico, California to publicly address, and inflame, the Mexican border "crisis." There he said of Hispanic migrants, "Can't take you anymore. Can't take you. Our country is full. Our area is full, the sector is full. Can't take you anymore. I'm sorry. So turn around. That's the way it is."<sup>134</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 14

4-5-19	[Continued.] He then privately told border patrol officers that they should turn away all migrants; that is, not give any an opportunity to claim asylum – which would be illegal. The officers' supervisors then ordered them to disregard Mr. Trump's directive.<sup>135</sup> CNN subsequently reported that Mr. Trump had offered that day to pardon Kevin McAleenan, the then head of Customs and Border Patrol (soon afterwards named acting head of DHS), if McAleenan followed Mr. Trump's orders and was jailed for violating the law by denying asylum seekers entrance to the U.S.<sup>136</sup> Earlier in the day, Mr. Trump had called for Congress to "get rid of the whole asylum system" and "get rid of immigration judges."<sup>137</sup> Those episodes appeared to demonstrate not only Mr. Trump's general disdain for the rule of law, but his long-suspected readiness (as reported by CSD amply in this Chronology) to dangle pardons as a means to influence individuals' behavior – in itself a grievous violation of the law and of judicial authority. Mr. Trump then went to the border. In a stunning visual maneuver<sup>138</sup> that combined falsehood, racial hatred and demagoguery, he showed off a plaque commemorating the commencement of construction of "his" border wall. In fact the plaque was attached to a section of replacement fencing that had been authorized by President Obama. No work had yet begun on Mr. Trump's wall.<sup>139</sup> By then many Americans not in Mr. Trump's camp had in fact come accept the term "crisis" as accurately describing the situation at the border. But they saw it as a humanitarian crisis, involving thousands of migrants who had fled poverty and gang violence in Central America and were now languishing on both sides of the border, often with inadequate means of sustenance and protection. During Mr. Trump's trip to the border, he was not reported to have visited with any migrants, or to have even seen them, let alone acknowledged their condition.	2, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 14

4-5-19	Flips and flops. A Washington Post columnist recounted Mr. Trump's many rapid and capricious changes of heart within the past week: calling for the Special Olympics to not be defunded; calling for Congress to delay attempting to repeal the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare) until after the 2020 election; suggesting that the public not be allowed to see the report on Russian election meddling recently issued by special prosecutor Robert Mueller; declaring that he would not imminently close the Mexican border; and all without the slightest acknowledgement of his rampant and disconnected impulsiveness.<sup>140</sup>	10, 11
4-6-19	MAGA: a global bonfire. The Huffington Post, citing research data, reported that Islamaphobes and white nationalists around the world had commonly taken to wearing Mr. Trump's signature Make America Great Again campaign hats and using the MAGA slogan in rally banners and social media.<sup>141</sup> That is to say, for some, under Mr. Trump's leadership America had become not a beacon for democracy but a beacon for racial hatred. Adherents included a Canadian gunman who had killed six Muslims in a mosque in January 2017. Also, an American arrested on April 5, 2019 for having threatened on March 21 to kill Ilhan Omar, a Muslim member of Congress, had told the FBI that he "loves the president."<sup>142</sup> See also CSD's entry of March 15+, above, noting that the perpetrator of the recent massacre at a New Zealand mosque had expressed admiration for Mr. Trump. To the date of this entry, Mr. Trump had not disowned the phenomenon.	6, 17 (5)
4-7-19 +	Nielsen gone; and a broader purge of DHS. On April 7, Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen abruptly and involuntarily resigned, after a disastrous tenure in which Central American migrants and asylum seekers had tested the U.S.'s ability to process and care for them, and in which Nielsen – at Mr. Trump's behest – had presided over the harsh separation of migrant families and over various new limitations on traditional asylum rights. She had also stood by many of Mr. Trump's most preposterous statements about border security, race and extremism, and all while incurring numerous humiliations at his hands.<sup>143</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 9, 10, 11, 13

4-7-19 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump nevertheless removed her because he believed she was not tough enough on the Central Americans.<sup>144</sup> He reportedly ambushed her with the removal;<sup>145</sup> and he reportedly fired her by Twitter (as he had fired Secretary of State Rex Tillerson by Twitter in March 2018), in that his tweet announcing her removal preceded her tendering her letter of resignation.<sup>146</sup> In all, her many humiliations paralleled those of other top Trump officials.<sup>147</sup> Nielsen's removal appeared to be part of a broader purge of top DHS leadership. Only days earlier, Mr. Trump had removed Ronald Vitiello, the acting director of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), after concluding (and later publicly stating) that he wasn't tough enough.<sup>148</sup> On April 8, the White House announced that Randolph Alles, the director of the Secret Service (also part of DHS) had stepped down.<sup>149</sup> The Washington Post and The New York Times reported that yet others, particularly those (like Nielsen and Alles) who had been allied with former chief of staff John Kelly, were targeted for removal as well.<sup>150</sup> That the elimination of leadership should occur in the midst of what Mr. Trump had deemed a national emergency at the Mexican border was confounding. The Post wrote: "Since the department's creation in the wake of the 9/11 terrorist attacks, successive presidents have viewed stability at DHS as a top priority for national security, counterterrorism efforts and, more broadly, the country's collective peace of mind. ... No president before Trump has pushed the country's security agencies into such a state of churning confusion, current and former DHS officials said Monday."<sup>151</sup> A Democratic senator cautioned: "DHS is now without a secretary, deputy secretary, ICE director, FEMA director, Secret Service director, inspector general, undersecretary for policy, undersecretary for science and technology, chief financial officer and chief privacy officer. That's at least 10 top positions filled by someone in an acting capacity."<sup>152</sup> Republican senators also decried the looming chaos created by the purge, and they found Nielsen to be a scapegoat.<sup>153</sup> On May 24, Mr. Trump forced the resignation of Francis Cissna, the director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (yet another major DHS entity), for Cissna's being too law-abiding.<sup>154</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 9, 10, 11, 13
-----------------	--	-------------------------

4-7-19 +	[Continued.] Apart from the disarray that Mr. Trump had unleashed on DHS, more systemically these were the latest in a record-setting string of high level departures from the Trump administration.<sup>155</sup> The departures, widely documented by CSD in the past, had flowed variously from scandal and from Mr. Trump's pique at anyone who might challenge him – including, in Nielsen's case and others', by advising him of the legal limitations on his authority.<sup>156</sup> In addition, the new departures, again like many previous ones, occurred without a replacement having been designated – only an "acting" official, whom Mr. Trump could name and direct without the Senate having approved him or her, and thus bypassing even that small congressional check on Mr. Trump's exercise of executive power. The temporary nature of the appointments was also expected by some to knee-cap and intimidate top management, such that management would more readily bend to Mr. Trump's will.<sup>157</sup> And it was expected, probably not intentionally, to keep the respective agencies in a rudderless state until the positions were permanently filled.<sup>158</sup>	6, 9, 10, 11, 13
4-8-19	The Iranian Revolutionary Guard ... and me. Mr. Trump named the Iranian Revolutionary Guard as a terrorist organization, thus subjecting it and its representatives to economic, travel and criminal sanctions. Calling a foreign governmental unit a terrorist organization was unprecedented; it occurred over the objections of the Pentagon and the CIA; and it was criticized by administration officials as having issued from a "chaotic and rushed process." Iran responded by declaring the U.S. Central Command a terrorist organization, and other countries were seen as now likewise able to declare U.S. military and other governmental units and individuals to be terrorists and thus subject to criminal proceedings overseas.<sup>159</sup> CSD does not dispute that the Revolutionary Guard commits terrorist atrocities. But we note that, as reported in 2017 by The New Yorker, Mr. Trump knowingly (and perhaps criminally) had relied on their financing for a hotel project in Azerbaijan – which Mr. Trump withdrew from only after winning the 2016 presidential election.<sup>160</sup>	10, 13

4-8-19	Judge blocks "Remain in Mexico" order. A federal judge in California issued a nationwide preliminary injunction barring the implementation of Mr. Trump's recent order that Central American asylum seekers who had crossed into the U.S. must wait – insecurely and without access to counsel – in Mexico (rather than in the U.S.) while their asylum claims were being processed. The judge ruled that the order didn't follow statutory procedures for ensuring the safety of migrants.<sup>161</sup>	6, 9
4-8-19 +	More family separations; more everything. On April 8, major media outlets reported that Mr. Trump had been seeking to reinstate his policy of separating Central American children from their parents at the Mexican border as a means of deterring migration. In 2018 a court had ruled that policy to be unconstitutional. For Mr. Trump to reinstate the policy now would be a bald violation of the law.<sup>162</sup> The New York Times wrote: "In addition to urging Mr. Trump to revisit the idea of family separation, several of the president's closest immigration confidants have been pushing him to consider even harsher measures. Those include further limits on who can seek asylum; stronger action to close ports of entry along the Mexican border; an executive order to end birthright citizenship; more aggressive construction of a border wall; and a more robust embrace of active-duty troops to secure the border against illegal immigration. ... [B]y removing Ms. Nielsen, Mr. Vitiello and perhaps others, Mr. Trump is getting rid of voices who sometimes cautioned him against taking actions they believed to be illegal or unwise."<sup>163</sup> Mr. Trump denied that he wanted to resume family separations. Rather, he (falsely) stated, it was President Obama who had instituted the wholesale separations.<sup>164</sup>	6, 7, 9, 11, 14
4-9-19	El-Sisi aglow in the White House. Ignoring a bi-partisan plea from the Senate, Mr. Trump for the second time warmly welcomed Egyptian President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi in the White House, without noting his increasingly authoritarian rule and his broad human rights abuses.<sup>165</sup>	12
4-10-19	Beating up migrants. Mr. Trump publicly hinted that he would like American security forces to "get a little rough" with undocumented migrants at the border.<sup>166</sup>	6, 14; Torture

4-11-19	Jamming the agencies. The Trump administration issued a memorandum expanding the White House's powers to review (and to veto) rule-making on the part of a range of independent agencies that could affect large areas of the economy, such as the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Reserve Bank and the National Labor Relations Board.<sup>167</sup> In other words, expertise and objectivity could now be superseded more fully by politics, caprice, and presidential self-dealing. CSD believes that while striving to make rule-making more efficient and less onerous is not inherently authoritarian, in Mr. Trump's case it is.	9
4-11-19	WikiLeaks? "I know nothing!" After the arrest in London of WikiLeaks founder and accused rapist Julian Assange for his role in hacking U.S. government computers so as to publish secret information, Mr. Trump said, "I know nothing about WikiLeaks. It's not my thing and I know there is something having to do with Julian Assange." But Mr. Trump did know about WikiLeaks. In over 140 instances during his presidential campaign he had colorfully professed his love for the organization (e.g., "I love WikiLeaks!"), after it had released embarrassing information about his then opponent Hillary Clinton. WikiLeaks had developed that information in collaboration with Russian military intelligence (which had stolen it with a view to defeating Clinton); and Assange, a Clinton opponent, had collaborated with the Trump campaign in disseminating it.<sup>168</sup>	7
4-11-19 +	Vengeance against sanctuary cities. On April 11, The Washington Post reported that for months Mr. Trump had (unsuccessfully) urged the Department of Homeland Security to bus Hispanic migrants to sanctuary cities such as San Francisco, then to release them there on the streets. The plan was to punish those cities for their policies of not routinely turning over undocumented petty criminals and suspects to DHS for removal.<sup>169</sup> DHS promptly stated that it had rejected the concept. But on April 12, Mr. Trump confirmed by Twitter that he was still considering it<sup>170</sup> – that is, using distressed migrants as pawns against his political enemies, which would be illegal. [Continued below.]	6, 9, 11

4-11-19 +	[Continued.] In implying that the migrants were vermin, and their presence in a given city a calamity, Mr. Trump's inspiration, once again, seemed to amount to a combination of racism, sadism, vengeance, and demagogic political play, rather than a humanitarian response to the border situation or even practical problem-solving. Notably, the plan would be costly. In addition, if bused to a given city, migrants presumably could simply bus themselves somewhere else. Or they might stay, without incident, in that those were cities that many of the migrants might have been headed to anyway. In fact mayors of many of the cities said they welcomed the idea.<sup>171</sup> And placing the migrants in those cities would actually make it easier for them to find legal help for winning asylum and to otherwise avoid deportation.<sup>172</sup> In sum, Mr. Trump was blowing smoke, for the harsh pleasure of his admirers.	6, 9, 11
4-12-19	No to the UN, again. The Trump administration declined to nominate any American to serve on the United Nations' Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, thus distancing itself yet further from international institutions and commonplace forms of global cooperation.<sup>173</sup>	6, 14
4-12-19	Treason. A Washington Post columnist detailed in stark array the many times, recently quite frequent, that Mr. Trump had accused his critics of treason – including special prosecutor Robert Mueller, Democrats, and so on. The columnist noted that the Constitution names treason as a crime punishable by death, and that the idea that criticizing a head of state amounts to treason is a hallmark of dictatorships.<sup>174</sup> For its part, CSD stands by its own assessment, advanced above in this Chronology, that it was Mr. Trump's bizarre and persistent displays of favoritism toward America's antagonist Russia – manifestly intended to protect his business opportunities, reputation and/or other personal interests – that had amounted to treason.	9

4-12-19	DOJ ignoring congressional will. For the second time in two weeks, Mr. Trump's Department of Justice declined to defend a federal statute that was in litigation, despite its obligation to do so. The first instance had involved the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"), in which the DOJ actually joined in attacking the statute (see CSD's entry of March 25 +, above). The new instance involved the DOJ's refusal to defend a statute forbidding female genital mutilation. Critics feared the establishment of precedent that a presidential administration, on partisan grounds, could cherry-pick which statutes it chose to defend when they were challenged in court and which it chose to abandon, thus usurping congressional law-making authority.<sup>175</sup>	9
4-12-19 +	Muslim bashing, again. On April 12, after Ilhan Omar, a freshman Muslim congresswoman, condemned post-9-11 Islamophobia before a Muslim advocacy group, Mr. Trump issued an incendiary tweet juxtaposing her photo with a video of the burning World Trade Center.<sup>176</sup> She quickly encountered a torrent of death threats, many of them referring specifically to Mr. Trump's tweet.<sup>177</sup> (Some of the more graphic threats were reported verbatim in the news.<sup>178</sup> And the death threats continued for many weeks.<sup>179</sup>) But Mr. Trump, having found a new (brown, female) scapegoat for his demagoguery, continued to demonize her – and by extension all Democrats – claiming on April 15 that Omar controlled the Democratic speaker of the House, Nancy Pelosi.<sup>180</sup>	5, 6, 9

4-16-19 +	Defying subpoenas and document requests. On April 16, the Washington Post and CNN independently reported on Mr. Trump's unwillingness to comply with, and his efforts to stop other private and governmental bodies from complying with, the numerous subpoenas and other document requests that various House committees (controlled by Democrats since January) had issued in recent weeks: for the full, un-redacted report of special prosecutor Robert Mueller; for Mr. Trump's income tax filings; and for documents relating to his abnormal practices in granting security clearances to family members and others, his meetings with foreign leaders (including Russians), his formulation of immigration policies, his involvement with the AT&amp;T/Time Warner merger (suspected of advancing a vendetta against Time Warner subsidiary CNN), and his company's overall business activities. A historically ruthless litigator, Mr. Trump was seen as possibly able to block the information requests for years, by which time they could become effectively moot – and he had recently hired many new White House attorneys for that purpose, at taxpayer expense.<sup>181</sup> As the weeks passed, the struggle between the House committees and Mr. Trump escalated. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• On April 22, Mr. Trump and his businesses – without precedent – sued the chairman of the House Oversight and Reform Committee to try to quash its subpoena of financial records.<sup>182</sup></li> <li>• On April 23, the White House instructed a staffer to defy a subpoena from that committee regarding security clearances (the White House later agreed to limited testimony after the staffer was threatened with a contempt citation).<sup>183</sup></li> <li>• Also on April 23, Mr. Trump told The Washington Post that he would categorically resist allowing current or former White House aides to testify before Congress on the subject of the Mueller report.<sup>184</sup> Most notably, his defiance pertained to former White House Counsel Donald McGahn – who had cooperated extensively and damningly with special prosecutor Robert Mueller, had told Mueller's team that Mr. Trump had ordered him to fire Mueller and to publicly lie about that conversation, and had now been subpoenaed by the House Judiciary Committee<sup>185</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	7, 9, 11; Obstruction of Justice

4-16-19 +	[Continued.] CSD and others had come to believe that the various records and testimonies that were being blocked could be expected to reveal unethical, illegal or treasonous activity. Previous presidential administrations too had occasionally, and controversially, resisted congressional subpoenas and document requests; but none had appeared to have had anywhere near as much to hide as Mr. Trump; never had the refusal to cooperate been more repeated and categorical; and none of the requests (at least in recent years) appeared to have been about a sitting president's personal corruption. Mr. Trump's wholesale defiance of Congress's quest for information suggested not only the breadth of that corruption, but an authoritarian, undemocratic undertaking to hide it; new acts of obstruction of justice in themselves; a blatant trashing of congressional prerogatives; and thus a profound challenge to representative government and to the most fundamental structural tenets of the Constitution.<sup>203</sup>	7, 9, 11; Obstruction of Justice
4-17-19	No bond for some asylum seekers. Attorney General William Barr announced that, contrary to previous law, many people who crossed the Mexican border into the U.S. other than at regular border checkpoints and who then applied for asylum would not be eligible for bond and parole pending their asylum hearings, but rather would face indefinite, possibly years-long detention. Observers believed that the Trump administration's imposition of (or its failure to manage) increasingly lengthy delays at border crossings was actually contributing to the irregular crossings. They also believed that punishing asylum seekers, and using that punishment as a deterrent relative to other potential asylum seekers, violated international law.<sup>204</sup>	6, 14
4-17-19	Ivanka and the World Bank. Presidential daughter and advisor Ivanka Trump confirmed rumors that her father had offered to nominate her to lead the World Bank. It was a position of immense responsibility for which she lacked all qualifications, except that, in Mr. Trump's words, she was "good with numbers." Mr. Trump had also touted his daughter as a potential ambassador to the United Nations and a potential presidential candidate.<sup>205</sup>	10, 11
4-19-19	More violent threats. A Trump supporter in Florida was arrested for addressing threats of violence to multiple Democratic members of Congress, particularly railing against blacks and Muslims.<sup>206</sup>	5, 6

4-21-19	Raking it in. News outlets reported that Mr. Trump's hotels and other properties had received nearly $5 million in fees from Republican candidates, members of Trump-supporting PACs and the Republican National Committee since he took office.<sup>207</sup>	15
4-23-19	Not meeting the press. The New York Times reported that White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders had just set a record by having not held press briefings for 43 consecutive days. That record had now been broken three times in a row, over various periods during Mr. Trump's presidency. Since January 1, Sanders herself had conducted only two formal briefings. Prior to this administration, daily briefings had been the norm. The recently released Mueller report had also exposed that on several occasions Sanders had flagrantly lied to the press.<sup>208</sup>	1
4-23-19 +	Watching social media – ominously. In a meeting at the White House on April 23, Mr. Trump complained to the CEO of Twitter that that social media platform had limited or removed some followers of Mr. Trump and other conservatives – not withstanding Mr. Trump's phenomenal use of Twitter in conveying his political messages to the public. Mr. Trump had previously threatened to regulate Silicon Valley companies so as to reduce what he claimed was their bias against him.<sup>209</sup> On May 3, Mr. Trump threatened to "monitor" social media platforms for anti-conservative bias after Facebook and Instagram de-platformed a number of incendiary, far-right conspiracy theorists.<sup>210</sup> On May 15, Mr. Trump asked the American public to report to him any censorship that it experienced on Facebook, Google or Twitter. Although the White House invited reports from persons of all political persuasions, clearly Mr. Trump's goal was to critique, and possibly to regulate, those social media giants on grounds of censoring his supporters and others holding views that coincided with his own. On the same day, the Trump administration declined to join in a new international campaign to crack down on incendiary online hate speech that had arisen following the recent massacre of Muslims at a mosque in New Zealand.<sup>211</sup> [Continued below.]	9

4-23-19 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's conflicting positions were consistent only in that they favored government censorship of social media to protect right-wing views, but not to protect against them.	9
4-23-19 +	Tweeting to kill. On April 23, Mr. Trump tweeted 50 times, mainly excoriating the mainstream media.<sup>212</sup> On May 1, he tweeted extensively in objection to the International Association of Firefighters' recent endorsement of Joe Biden for the 2020 presidential election.<sup>213</sup> On May 3 and 4, he tweeted repeatedly in objection to Facebook and Instagram having recently de-platformed a number of incendiary, far-right conspiracy theorists. He also attacked the media, and promoted one of his golf courses.<sup>214</sup> On May 10, he re-tweeted 60 posts within 45 minutes that were flattering toward himself.<sup>215</sup> In addition, in the aggregate as of April 24, Mr. Trump had tweeted about the final Mueller report more than 50 times, in some instances with an apparent attempt to intimidate witnesses relative to pending prosecutions and congressional inquiries, and often making blatantly untrue statements about the investigation and its findings.<sup>216</sup>	1, 9, 11, 15
4-24-19	Some truth about the census. Mr. Trump tweeted that the real reason for his seeking to include a citizenship question in the 2020 decennial census was that "The American people deserve to know who is in this Country [sic]." That is, he wanted to "out" illegal immigrants; and that admission contradicted the repeated statements by Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross that the purpose of including the question was to protect voter rights. Three federal courts had already blocked the question, on grounds that it was poorly conceived and/or racially motivated. Survey scientists had also found it likely to compromise the census's accuracy, as reported above in this Chronology.<sup>217</sup>	6, 8
4-24-19	Seeing the Court in his pocket. Mr. Trump tweeted that if the Democrat-controlled House of Representatives tried to impeach him, he "would first head to the U.S. Supreme Court." What he believed even the Republican-dominated Supreme Court could do to intervene in congressional impeachment proceedings was unclear, as a constitutional matter; but his assumption that he could not only go to the Court but could also stir the Court to save his presidency was breathtaking.<sup>218</sup>	6, 9

4-24-19	Visa overstays targeted: if you're black. Finally acknowledging that unlawful visa overstays (in addition to Mexican border crossings) constitute a major source of undocumented migrants in the U.S., Mr. Trump said that he would consider limiting visa issuances for citizens of some 20 countries – most of them African – even though far larger numbers of visa over-stays emanate from large (and strategically significant) countries such as China and India.<sup>219</sup>	6
4-24-19 +	Election Security. On April 24, media reported that Mr. Trump's staff had forbidden former Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen from raising with him concerns about looming Russian interference in the 2020 American elections; that she had finally given up on attempting to coordinate the government's election security efforts or to publicize the security threats; and that the White House was deeply disinterested in the issue. Similar reports subsequently ensued.<sup>220</sup>	4, 12
4-26-19 +	Palliating North Korea; then not. On April 26, media reported that Mr. Trump had acceded to North Korea's demand that the U.S. reimburse that country $2,000,000 for expenses it had incurred in caring for American citizen Otto Warmbier, whom it had mortally mistreated before returning him to the U.S. in a coma. The report came amid a continuous stream of news indicating that North Korea was testing ballistic missiles, turning to Russia as an ally, insulting American diplomats, and otherwise abnegating any positive outcomes from Mr. Trump's much-ballyhooed summits and professed friendship with North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un.<sup>221</sup> Mr. Trump denied having rendered any payment for Warmbier's care. On May 9, after North Korea fired a second missile within a week, the U.S. for the first time seized a North Korean cargo vessel with a view to enforcing international economic sanctions against that country.<sup>222</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15

4-26-19 +	[Continued.] On May 25, shortly after breaking hallowed Japanese cultural tradition by presenting his own gargantuan "President's Cup" trophy to a Sumo wrestler in a ring in Japan, Mr. Trump tweeted: "North Korea fired off some small weapons, which disturbed some of my people, and others, but not me. I have confidence that Chairman Kim will keep his promise to me, &amp; also smiled when he called Swampman Joe Biden a low IQ individual, &amp; worse. Perhaps that's sending me a signal?" He thus at once diminished the North Korean threat, unnerved his Japanese hosts, contradicted his own advisors, slandered Biden, and took the side of a foreign dictator in mocking his top 2020 re-election contender ... after having associated himself with a sport based on brute strength.<sup>223</sup> On May 27, still in Japan, Mr. Trump contradicted both his advisors and the Japanese government by denying that North Korea had launched ballistic missiles, and he said that instead he agreed with Kim's denials.. He also praised the intelligence of Kim and re-doubled his claim that Biden was dimwitted. He also again referred to North Korea's potential (and his own?) to develop beachfront resorts in that country.<sup>224</sup> On May 31, media reported that Kim had executed his U.S. envoy over the latter's failure to have made progress during the two countries' most recent summit.<sup>225</sup> CSD continues not to criticize the Trump administration's specific foreign policy positions and efforts, except to the extent that they may plainly offend our Statement of Principles – such as befriending dictatorships, withdrawing from international security and human rights accords, or evidencing racism, capriciousness, falsehoods, science denial, self-serving demagoguery, business conflicts of interest, and so forth. But we note that the new tensions with North Korea, combined with a contemporaneous spike in tensions with China (over Mr. Trump's trade war), Iran (over Mr. Trump's hard line toward Iran's nuclear program), and Venezuela (to the point of his encouraging regime change) appeared to display the vulnerabilities inherent in his impetuosity, his saber-rattling, his reported ignorance about foreign affairs, and his disconnects with his advisors. They also appeared, disturbingly, to pile one significant international risk upon another, and to renew skepticism about his much-professed deal-making skills.<sup>226</sup>	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15
------------------	--	------------------------------

4-27-19	In Wisconsin. At a campaign rally in Green Bay, Wisconsin, among other familiar themes, Mr. Trump attacked immigrants, Democrats, and the "scum" in the Justice Department that had investigated him. He also boasted at length (again) about the crowd size; referred (again) to presidential contender Senator Elizabeth Warren as "Pocahontas"; called the Mueller investigation (again) "the greatest political hoax in American history"; claimed (again) to be "draining the swamp" (despite presiding over the most self-dealing and conflict-of-interest-ridden administration in recent history); falsely accused Democrats (again) of seeking to "take your guns away" and "to allow children to be ripped from their mother's womb" or to be "executed" immediately after birth; and (again) categorically praised the ruthless Saudi Arabian regime.<sup>227</sup>	6, 7, 9, 12
4-29-19	Huger and huger. The Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now made 10,111 false or misleading statements during his presidency, for an average of 23 per day during the immediately preceding seven months – up from an initial average of five per day. One explanation for (or characterization of) the rise in the rate: in recent weeks, Mr. Trump had routinely made dozens of false or misleading statements at a time in each of many interviews, rallies and Twitter barrages; that is to say, in non-stop torrents of untruths.<sup>228</sup>	7
4-29-19	Guilfoyle to the rescue. Media reported that Kimberly Guilfoyle, the girlfriend of Mr. Trump's son Donald, Jr., had joined the White House staff as a senior advisor.<sup>229</sup>	11
4-29-19	Making them pay. In a blow to the international principle of humanitarian asylum, Mr. Trump ordered the drafting of regulations that would require that asylum seekers pay the government to process their asylum claims. He also ordered that the regulations deny asylum seekers work permits. Because asylum seekers in the U.S. already are not entitled to receive any public benefits, many of those who were not in pre-hearing detention would seemingly have to resort to begging, crime, or self-expulsion in order not to starve.<sup>230</sup>	6, 14
4-30-19	Cheating the vulnerable. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's golf clubs had frequently cheated their undocumented workers out of overtime pay, insurance, and vacation time.<sup>231</sup> The workers of course were not in a position to challenge that treatment in courts of law.	6; Barbarity

4-30-19 +	More for the Fed. On April 30, Mr. Trump intensified his calls on the Federal Reserve Board to lower interest rates.<sup>232</sup> On May 3, Vice President Mike Pence called for the same.<sup>233</sup> CSD has reported many times previously on Mr. Trump's unconventional attempts to politicize the Fed's decision making, for his own political benefit.	9, 11
5-1-19 +	Hatch Act flaunted. For the third and fourth times, White House advisor Kellyanne Conway was reported on May 1 to have violated the Hatch Act in recent days by campaigning for Mr. Trump in the course of her official duties – specifically, in these instances, by denigrating other current presidential contenders, including Joe Biden. CSD had documented the previous episodes earlier in this Chronology. The White House had never disciplined Conway for her previous infractions.<sup>234</sup> On May 7, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin addressed a Trump campaign fundraiser. In the audience were business executives whom he was tasked with regulating. He purported, preposterously, to have appeared as a private citizen, and thus to have been exempt from the Hatch Act.<sup>235</sup> On May 22, Lynne Patton – a former event planner for the Trump business and family, a notoriously unqualified Trump HUD appointee, and a repeated Hatch Act offender – violated the statute again, and boasted that she didn't care if she did.<sup>236</sup> On May 29, Conway pointedly and extensively criticized Joe Biden. When challenged by a reporter about previous government findings that she had violated the Hatch Act, she said, "If you're trying to silence me through the Hatch Act, it's not going to work. Let me know when the jail sentence starts."<sup>237</sup> Politico reported on the unusual volume of Hatch Act violations within the Trump administration – and on the public having acquiesced to it, after having grown accustomed to the non-stop breaches of laws and ethical norms by Mr. Trump and his administration.<sup>238</sup>	17 (9)

5-2-19	Sent by God. Following frequent claims by officials and key supporters that Mr. Trump had been sent to America by God,<sup>239</sup> Mr. Trump said at the White House during a National Day of Prayer service that he had relied on God to get him through the Mueller investigation.<sup>240</sup>	9
5-4-19 +	Spygate. On May 4, The Washington Post reported that a major emerging theme in Mr. Trump's 2020 re-election campaign consisted of accusations that the FBI had unlawfully and undemocratically spied on his 2016 campaign, and that the Justice Department should now "investigate the investigators" with a view to bringing criminal charges against some of them.<sup>241</sup> The theme was not new; but the campaign's fervor was. And Attorney General William Barr appeared to be leading the charge.<sup>242</sup> In truth the FBI did gather intelligence on Russia's election meddling in 2016, which did cause the agency to examine Russian contacts within Mr. Trump's campaign – all of which was utterly essential to protect our democracy, and far from unlawful; had they not done so they would have been derelict. Former FBI Director James Comey's retort in The Post – he had been in charge at the time – was compelling, as were his characterizations of the cynicism and mindlessness of the conspiracy theories.<sup>243</sup> But whether the demagogic scapegoating of the FBI would now rival in persistence and in fury the demagogic scapegoating of Hillary Clinton in Mr. Trump's campaigning remained to be seen. On May 13, Mr. Trump claimed by Twitter, as he had claimed before, that the investigation had amounted to an attempted "coup," and that the current FBI director Chris Wray was trying to protect the culprits. On May 17, Mr. Trump tweeted: "My Campaign for President was conclusively spied on. Nothing like this has ever happened in American Politics. A really bad situation. TREASON means long jail sentences, and this was TREASON!"  [Continued below.]	9, 11

5-4-19 +	[Continued.] On May 23, Mr. Trump authorized Barr to declassify intelligence information relating to the alleged spying so that Mr. Trump could publicize it. Never before had a president given an official who was not in charge of an intelligence agency the authority to reveal the agency's secrets. And he did this at the very time that he was refusing to allow Justice Department officials to cooperate with congressional requests and demands for data about the substantive findings of the Mueller report itself (see CSD's entry of April 16 + above in this Addendum, for details on that refusal). That is, Mr. Trump was seeking to release classified information that he believed to be in his own favor while suppressing non-classified information that he believed would injure himself politically.<sup>244</sup> Mr. Trump's own Director of National Intelligence, Dan Coats, said that the move threatened national security.<sup>245</sup> On May 24, Mr. Trump told reporters, yet again, that the Mueller investigation was "a hoax perpetrated on the country" and "an attempted coup or an attempted takedown of the president of the United States."<sup>246</sup> No prior president had so slandered his adversaries, his subordinates, or the Justice Department.	9, 11
5-4-19	Hilarity with Putin. Mr. Trump revealed that the previous day he had spoken for an hour by telephone with Russian President Vladimir Putin, who had orchestrated the massive attempts at American election interference in Mr. Trump's favor in 2016 and was expected to do the same in 2020. Mr. Trump reported that, on the call, they had joked about the Mueller report being a "hoax," and about the report's conclusion that Mr. Trump had not "colluded" with Russia in 2016, but that they did not otherwise discuss Russia's prior or forthcoming election tampering efforts. Mr. Trump also reported that he had not discussed Russia's current, massive financial and political support for Venezuela's rogue dictator, Nicolas Maduro (whom Mr. Trump wanted to oust), and that Russia had no such involvement there – directly contradicting recent remarks and diplomatic activities by Secretary of State Mike Pompeo. Rather, Mr. Trump extolled the good relations that he had cultivated with Putin, one of America's principal, most deceptive, and most menacing adversaries. And he blamed the "Fake News Media" for mischaracterizing U.S.-Russia relations.<sup>247</sup>	12

5-5-19	Tiger Woods to the rescue. Mr. Trump announced that he would bestow the Presidential Medal of Freedom – the nation's highest civilian honor – upon his business partner and political supporter, the celebrity golfer Tiger Woods. Woods had already been promoting Mr. Trump's golf resorts, and he was now seen as being rewarded for that and being positioned to promote the resorts even more effectively. Previous presidents had granted the honor to supporters, but seemingly not to business partners, and rarely to individuals who were mid-career.<sup>248</sup>	15, 16
5-7-19	Silence on Arctic climate change. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo blocked the Arctic Council – an organization of eight countries bordering on Arctic waters – from including in its annual declaration a caution about the perils of climate change that were widely seen as endangering those waters and, as a consequence, the world's population. The action thus served as a rejection of both science and international cooperation.<sup>249</sup>	8
5-7-19, 5-8-19	Knee-capping asylum. On May 7, The Washington Post reported that the Trump administration had directed asylum officers to be more skeptical and confrontational with asylum applicants, by aggressively challenging their claims that they (the asylum seekers) feared being returned to their home countries.<sup>250</sup> On May 8, NBC News reported that the Trump administration was blocking some detained asylum seekers from obtaining free, privately-funded legal services, to which they were entitled by law (if as a practical matter they were able to procure them).<sup>251</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 14

5-7-19, 5-8-19	[Continued.] As to the first of these items, CSD believes that fair and careful vetting of asylum claims is appropriate. But the two new developments followed a flurry of other recent ones which, in the aggregate, demonstrated yet again Mr. Trump's concerted attempt to deter Central Americans (and possibly others) from applying for asylum and to limit asylum rights that have long been enshrined in U.S. and international law. CSD has reported on the other recent developments above in this Addendum: requiring asylum seekers to unsafely "remain in Mexico" pending their hearings (April 8); denying bond to and imposing indefinite detention upon some asylum seekers pending their hearings (April 17); and requiring application fees from asylum seekers and denying them work permits pending their hearings (April 29).	6, 14
5-8-19	Dodging taxes. Responding to a New York Times report that Mr. Trump had declared over $1 billion in business losses to the IRS two decades ago, and that in some years his businesses had paid no income taxes at all, Mr. Trump boasted that aggressively avoiding taxes had been accepted "sport" among real estate developers. Mr. Trump's tax deductions may or may not have been lawfully declared; but through his boast he may have become the first president to have implicitly encouraged American citizens to dodge their tax obligations. Mr. Trump's tax compliance practices had long been suspect, and thus fertile ground for public and congressional inquiry. But at the time of this episode, his treasury secretary was unlawfully defying a House Ways and Means Committee request to produce his tax returns.<sup>252</sup>	9, 11
5-8-19	Press passes revoked. The White House revoked the long-standing press passes held by many reporters representing mainstream media outlets such as The Washington Post, in an obvious attempt to disfavor and intimidate them.<sup>253</sup>	1
5-8-19	Shoot them! At a campaign rally in Panama City Beach, Florida, Mr. Trump – referring to undocumented migrants – asked the crowd, "How do you stop these people?" "Shoot them!" someone yelled, and the audience cheered and laughed uproariously. Mr. Trump responded by signaling his approval.<sup>254</sup>	5, 6, 9

5-8-19, 5-10-19	Alfred E. Neuman. At a campaign rally in Panama City, Florida on May 8, in the usual course Mr. Trump mocked a number of his potential 2020 election opponents through the nicknames he had given them – deriding "Sleepy Joe" Biden and "Crazy Bernie" Sanders. He also harshly mocked the pronunciation of candidate Pete Buttigieg's name, and he hinted that Buttigieg was insufficiently imposing a figure to negotiate with world leaders. In a video, supporters behind him laughed, applauded and leered.<sup>255</sup> On May 10, continuing the practice of mocking his adversaries' physical appearance and assigning them derogatory nicknames, Mr. Trump referred to Buttigieg as "Alfred E. Neuman," the funny-looking Mad Magazine mascot.<sup>256</sup> CSD believes that those practices were not just juvenile, sadistic, insulting to his adversaries, insulting to the office of the president, and narcissistic in their demonstration of Mr. Trump's belief in his own physical and mental perfection; but through the president's ethical example, the practice could be assumed to encourage at least some in the country toward a comparable heartlessness, pack-like bullying of the "other," and overall self-debasement.	9, 11
5-9-19	Kerry to jail? Mr. Trump revealed that he had instructed the Justice Department to consider prosecuting former Secretary of State John Kerry for having privately met with Iranian officials after leaving office – even though every former secretary of state had continued to meet with world leaders after serving.<sup>257</sup>	9
5-9-19 +	Giuliani to Ukraine? The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani was planning to travel to Ukraine to seek that government's assistance in digging up dirt on the Justice Department's earlier investigation of the 2016 Trump election campaign. Giuliani was also seeking dirt on what the Trump camp had recently claimed was an improper intervention by Mr. Trump's leading 2020 re-election rival, Joe Biden, in an investigation of Biden's son's business activities in Ukraine. [Continued below.]	9, 17 (9, 11)

5-9-19 +	[Continued.] The Times wrote: "Mr. Giuliani's plans create the remarkable scene of a lawyer for the president of the United States pressing a foreign government to pursue investigations that Mr. Trump's allies hope could help him in his re-election campaign. And it comes after Mr. Trump spent more than half of his term facing questions about whether his 2016 campaign conspired with a foreign power."<sup>258</sup> That is, Giuliani was effectively asking a foreign government to meddle in a second American presidential election. On March 10, following a media firestorm, Giuliani canceled his trip to Ukraine.<sup>259</sup> But on the same day, Mr. Trump told Politico that he could consider investigating Biden<sup>260</sup> – a stark reminder of how, when campaigning in 2016, he had vowed to investigate and imprison his then rival Hillary Clinton.	9, 17 (9, 11)
5-10-19	The Fourth of July, and me. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump was planning to insert himself in the annual Washington, DC July 4th celebration, including by making a televised speech at the Lincoln Memorial. The celebration had long been a non-partisan event.<sup>261</sup>	9, 11
5-10-19	From Afghanistan, with love. By executive fiat, Mr. Trump shifted $1.5 billion in congressional appropriations for the war in Afghanistan to funding the construction of his Mexican border wall, thus not only defying Congress but shelving American security in favor of racist, domestic demagoguery – at taxpayer expense.<sup>262</sup>	6, 9
5-13-19	Orban at the White House. Mr. Trump met at the White House with Hungary's corrupt, authoritarian, radically anti-immigrant,<sup>263</sup> and (when useful<sup>264</sup>) anti-Semitic prime minister Viktor Orban – a leader who had called for an ethnically pure (white), Christian, Hungarian state, who had invited other European governments to join him in that call, and whom Presidents George W. Bush and Obama had shunned. In a warm, televised photo op with Orban, Mr. Trump termed the meeting "a great honor." He continued, "Viktor Orban has done a tremendous job in so many different ways. ... I know he's a tough man, but he's a respected man. Probably, like me, a little bit controversial, but that's OK. That's OK. You've done a good job, and you've kept your country safe."<sup>265</sup>	12

5-15-19	Disappearing the ACA. A new report on the government's deployment of Web content revealed that the Trump administration had determinedly purged the Web of references to the Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"), with a continuing view to destroying it – contrary to law and to Americans' well-being. (CSD does not take a position on the substance of the ACA: only on Mr. Trump's reckless, demagogic and vengeful obsession with dismantling it without having a substitute plan in place.)<sup>266</sup>	9, 11
5-15-19, 5-18-19	I beg your pardon. Continuing his practice of pardoning famous criminals for personal reasons, on May 15 Mr. Trump pardoned his friend, fellow billionaire and convicted swindler Conrad Black, following Black's publication of a book praising Mr. Trump.<sup>267</sup> On the same day, Mr. Trump pardoned Pat Nolan, a conservative Republican politician from California who had been convicted of bribery.<sup>268</sup> On May 18, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump was preparing to pardon a number of accused and convicted American war criminals, such as soldiers who had murdered innocent civilians in the field.<sup>269</sup> Such pardons, if granted, not only would further extend Mr. Trump's streak of granting clemency for self-serving political purposes, but would (as before) bypass the established protocol of the Justice Department initiating pardon requests; would defy American precedent (as during the Vietnam War) of holding our own war criminals accountable; would erode U.S. military discipline and justice; would advance Mr. Trump's agenda to establish the U.S. as a rogue and bellicose power unanswerable to any international norms; and would encourage other nations to do all of the same. Mr. Trump had already pronounced some of the accused soldiers to be American heroes. The contemplated pardons would follow Mr. Trump's pardon of another convicted American war criminal on May 6.<sup>270</sup>	2, 9, 11, 14
5-15-19	Protecting social media – for me. Mr. Trump asked the American public to report to him any censorship that it experienced on Facebook, Google or Twitter. Although the White House invited reports from persons of all political persuasions, clearly Mr. Trump's goal was to critique, and possibly to regulate, those social media giants on grounds of censoring his supporters and others holding views that coincided with his own. [Continued below.]	9, 11

5-15-19	[Continued.] On the same day, the Trump administration declined to join in a new international campaign to crack down on incendiary online hate speech that had arisen following the recent massacre of Muslims at a mosque in New Zealand.<sup>271</sup> Mr. Trump's two positions were at once inconsistent (favoring and disfavoring government censorship) and consistent (both positions promoting media access for extreme right-wing views).	9, 11
5-16-19, 5-23-19	The vanity wall. On May 16, The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had been micro-managing the design of new lengths of barrier to be built along the Mexican border, as he had micro-managed the designs of his hotels and resorts. In doing so, he was adopting the multiple roles of master builder, engineer, architect and security expert, while often overruling and stumping the real security experts, and even making unduly expensive decisions. In the process he had often summoned aides to his office on short notice, wakened them by phone in the early morning hours, and brought up the design issues during meetings about other topics ... as though obsessed. Among other things, after having frequently changed his design instructions, he was currently insisting that the metal barrier be tall, uniform, black (so as to be too hot to touch), and topped with sharp spikes (so as to injure a climber's hands). He also wanted the structure to be aesthetically pleasing. Observers viewed it as a vanity project – that is, as a monument to himself – funded with money he had diverted from military needs.<sup>272</sup> On May 23, The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump was actively pressing the Army Corps of Engineers to award a contract for the construction of the wall to a company whose CEO – a Republican donor and a colleague of prominent anti-immigration politicians – had frequently promoted his particular design for the wall on Fox News and other conservative media. The Army Corps had already rejected his design, and for that he was suing the Corps. The attempt by Mr. Trump to politically influence the selection of a contractor ran contrary to the Corps' hallowed reputation for probity.<sup>273</sup>	6, 11

5-16-19	Demonizing the Dems. In proposing from the White House lawn that more green cards be issued to highly educated English speakers and fewer to families of those already having legal status here (a position not at odds with that of some other democratic countries), Mr. Trump gratuitously and untruthfully said, “Democrats are proposing open borders, lower wages and frankly, lawless chaos.”<sup>274</sup> Those allegations had become quite perfunctory for Mr. Trump. For CSD, it was as though he could not advance a straightforward policy concept without slandering those he considered to be his enemies; and as though no falsehood coming from him was any longer capable of attracting sustained media attention or popular condemnation.	6, 7, 9
5-19-19	Obliterating Iran. Mr. Trump tweeted: “If Iran wants to fight, that will be the official end of Iran. Never threaten the United States again!” Days earlier he had indicated that he was actually less hawkish toward Iran than some of his advisors. He had made a similar threat toward Iran the previous year; also toward North Korea. Whether he was now tweeting to frighten Iran, to impress voters, or to satisfy his own craving to bully and provoke was unknowable, as was whether he knew what he was doing.<sup>275</sup>	9, 10, 11
5-19-19	Bringing Ireland to heel? The Irish prime minister's office publicly voiced objections to Mr. Trump's insistence that the planned meeting of the two men in Ireland in June be held at Mr. Trump's Irish golf course rather than a nearby Irish castle. Mr. Trump's undertaking to advertise his resort was seen as both insulting to Irish prerogatives and cravenly mercenary.<sup>276</sup>	11, 15
5-20-19	Oh, The Times. Mr. Trump went on a Twitter rampage against "The Failing New York Times" for its "Fake News" reporting about money laundering suspicions that had arisen out of transactions on his part and those of his son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner for compliance analysts at Deutsche Bank in 2016 and 2017. In the string of five tweets, he boasted repeatedly about his wealth.<sup>277</sup>	1, 7, 11; Possible money laundering

5-20-19	In Pennsylvania. At a campaign rally in Montoursville, Pennsylvania, Mr. Trump: boasted about his (modest) crowd size; under-counted, by a factor of ten, the crowd size that Democratic 2020 electoral hopeful Joe Biden had recently drawn; repeated his false claim that he had passed the largest tax cut in American history; repeated his inaccurate claims that the Justice Department had spied on his 2016 campaign, that the Mueller investigation had been a "hoax," and that it had all amounted to "treason"; and repeated his prior statement, as to Central American migrants, that "our country is full."<sup>278</sup>	6, 7, 9, 11
5-20-19 +	A thumb on the pollution scale. On May 20, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's Environmental Protection Agency was using phony analytics to downplay the health threats caused by fossil fuel burning, and thus to ease pertinent regulations affecting energy utilities.<sup>279</sup> On May 27, The Times reported more broadly on the administration's war on climate science – driven mostly by business interests – including an effort to not project climate change beyond the year 2040.<sup>280</sup>	8
5-20-19 +	Losing again in court. In quick succession, Mr. Trump lost three more federal court challenges to his authoritarian undertakings. On May 20, the DC district court ordered his personal accounting firm to turn over his business records to the House Oversight Committee.<sup>281</sup> On May 22, a New York district court ordered Deutsche Bank to turn over his business records to the House Intelligence and Financial Services Committees.<sup>282</sup> And on May 24, a California district court blocked his attempt to spend un-appropriated funds on his border wall.<sup>283</sup> The first two courts found preposterous Mr. Trump's claim that Congress lacked the constitutional authority to investigate the president before actually impeaching him.<sup>284</sup> Responding to the third ruling, Mr. Trump tweeted on May 25, from Japan: "This is a ruling against Border Security and in favor of crime, drugs and human trafficking." Although Mr. Trump was likely to appeal all of the rulings, at a minimum they demonstrated the extent to which he had pushed to the limits the legality of his conduct as president.	6, 9

5-22-19	Golfing update. The Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump's golf outings during his presidency – all at his own golf courses in New Jersey, Florida, Los Angeles, Scotland, and soon at his course in Ireland – had so far cost taxpayers $102 million. After having derided President Obama for playing golf frequently and after having promised never to play during his presidency, he had now played twice as often as his predecessor and had spent three times as much in taxpayer money at the same point in their respective presidential terms, while contemporaneously advertising his golf properties to the public – sometimes pointedly. HuffPost wrote: "The $102 million total to date spent on Trump's presidential golfing represents 255 times the annual presidential salary he volunteered not to take. It is more than three times the cost of special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation that Trump continually complains about. It would fund for six years the Special Olympics program that Trump's proposed budget had originally cut to save money."<sup>285</sup>	11, 15
5-22-19 +	So, there! On May 22, Mr. Trump stormed out of a meeting with Democratic congressional leaders that had been called for the purpose of striking a deal on an infrastructure bill. As pretext, he claimed to be reacting to House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's accusation that morning that his resistance to congressional investigations (see above in this Addendum at April 16 + for detail on that resistance) amounted to a cover-up. He then proceeded to the Rose Garden, where he had quickly summoned reporters and where "No Collusion, No Obstruction" placards were already in place at the lectern. There he swore that he would not cooperate with the Democrats until they stopped their investigations. "I don't do cover-ups," he said. "It turns out I'm the most -- I think most of you would agree to this -- I'm the most transparent president probably in the history of this country."<sup>286</sup> Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer said that Mr. Trump's blow-up was staged. For the political foolishness, the paranoia and the self-pity that had characterized his rambling address to the reporters, Pelosi and others said that Mr. Trump had seemed unhinged.<sup>287</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 10, 11

5-22-19 +	[Continued.] Some Democrats acknowledged that Pelosi had intentionally provoked Mr. Trump from the outset. In any event, she had now again touched a nerve. The next day at the White House, flanked by aides during an announcement about an aid package for farmers who had been injured by his trade wars, Mr. Trump railed at Democrats for nearly half an hour. He called Pelosi "a mess" and repeatedly called her "crazy"; he mocked her mannerisms and insinuated that she was impaired; he reiterated his claim of being an "extremely stable genius," adding that he was a "very capable person"; and he called on the aides serially to express to the television cameras how calm he had been the day before when the infrastructure meeting had collapsed – which they dutifully did. Mr. Trump also found a moment during his rant to accuse former FBI Director James Comey and former acting FBI Director Andrew McCabe of treason (a crime punishable by death).<sup>288</sup> Later that day Mr. Trump re-tweeted a heavily doctored video of Pelosi speaking that falsely portrayed her as debilitated or drunk.<sup>289</sup>	7, 9, 10, 11
5-24-19	Arms sales without Congress. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo announced that, exercising "emergency" authority, Mr. Trump's administration would sell $8 billion in military hardware to Saudi Arabia and other countries without the approval of Congress – a move that The Washington Post called a "rare step," and that outraged both Democrats and Republicans in Congress. The Saudi sales caused particular furor, in that the Saudi regime had murdered a Washington Post columnist the previous year, and in that Congress had been seeking to cut off U.S. military support for the regime due to the civilian atrocities it was committing, and the mass starvation it was facilitating, in the course of its ongoing intervention in Yemen's civil war.<sup>290</sup> The episode followed The Washington Post's May 22 revelation that acting Secretary of Defense Patrick Shanahan on May 8 had approved a new policy establishing that his department could unilaterally reject congressional inquiries and oversight. Both Republicans and Democrats on the House Armed Service Committee had expressed alarm.<sup>291</sup>	9

5-28-19 +	The president's military. On May 28, The New York Times reported that sailors aboard a U.S. naval vessel that Mr. Trump visited while in Japan, contrary to regulation, had sewn patches on the arms of their uniforms bearing Mr. Trump's likeness and the phrase "Make Aircrew Great Again."<sup>292</sup> On May 29, The Wall Street Journal (then other media) reported that the White House had asked the Navy to hide the U.S.S. John McCain with a barge, to cover up its name with a tarp while it lay in the Japanese naval base that Mr. Trump was visiting, and to bar sailors wearing the ship's cap from attending Mr. Trump's address – all so as not to offend Mr. Trump (who hated Vietnam war hero Senator John McCain and his memory).<sup>293</sup> Although Mr. Trump was not known to have personally ordered either event, taken together they displayed his and his administration's continuing efforts to cause the military to reflect his egotism and his political interests. They also displayed his subordinates' dangerous efforts to withhold from his attention unpleasant data or experiences – for fear of being thrashed.<sup>294</sup>	17 (9, 11)
