CITIZENS FOR A STRONG DEMOCRACY

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 24 – July 8, 2019

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

5-30-19 +	Kicking Mexico, the law, and the truth. Citing statutory "emergency" authority, on May 30 Mr. Trump vowed to impose a 5% tariff on all imports from Mexico as punishment for Mexico's allowing Central American migrants to enter the U.S.<sup>1</sup> The move was not only racist and demagogic, but it threatened economic mayhem and as such was opposed by many members of both political parties.<sup>2</sup> Some observers also found the move illegal, in that no statute authorized the president to impose tariffs as a means to procure an immigration policy result.<sup>3</sup> The seizing of authority thus matched in its apparent illegality Mr. Trump's recent "emergency" expropriation of federal funds for his Mexican border wall, and his recent "emergency" arming of Saudi Arabia without congressional approval (both as described in Addendum 23 to this Chronology).<sup>4</sup> Under severe pressure from the Republican Senate and from business leaders, on June 7 Mr. Trump rescinded his tariff threat, claiming that he had now successfully negotiated with Mexico to stop the migrant inflow: by Mexico deploying its national guard and agreeing to hold asylum seekers in Mexico while they awaited their asylum hearings in the U.S. But on June 8, The New York Times reported that Mexico had already agreed to most of those measures months previously.<sup>5</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 11
-----------	--	-----------------

5-30-19 +	[Continued below.] Mr. Trump also falsely claimed that Mexico had newly agreed to buy large quantities of U.S. agricultural products.<sup>6</sup> Several observers characterized the "deal" as typical for Mr. Trump since the early days of his presidency: manufacture crises; deliver unreasonable ultimatums; and when they fail, claim victory, even though the underlying problems have not been solved.<sup>7</sup> Others noted that the tariff threat had not only proven to be hollow (thus arguably emboldening future targets of Mr. Trump's threats) but had risked a reciprocal withdrawal from the U.S.-Mexico-Canada (trade) Agreement that Mr. Trump himself had negotiated – thus making America's fidelity to its affirmative promises and treaties ever more suspect for foreign governments.<sup>8</sup>	6, 7, 9, 10, 11
6-2-19	Pray for me. Just as Mr. Trump was spontaneously entering an Evangelical church in Vienna, Virginia after golfing at his nearby club, the White House announced that he was going there to pray for the victims of a recent mass shooting in Virginia Beach. In fact no such prayer occurred: only a prayer for Mr. Trump. A mere 80 minutes before, the White House had notified the pastor that Mr. Trump would be coming and had asked the pastor to offer that prayer – as part of a national "Pray for Donald Trump Day" that had been organized by Franklin Graham, a prominent Evangelical leader and Trump supporter. The pastor subsequently apologized for offering the prayer, claiming that his church was non-partisan, and that he had been blind-sided by the surprise visit and the prayer request.<sup>9</sup>	7, 9, 11
6-2-19	Chao: not so clean. On June 2, The New York Times published an extensive report on Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao's promotion of the business of her family's international shipping company while in office and on its (and her) close connections with the Chinese government. The company reportedly had benefited handsomely from its Chinese connections and from Chinese industrial policy. In addition, the Times found that some U.S. maritime policies that had arisen under her watch appeared to have benefited Chinese shipping interests while degrading American ones. Chao is married to Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, and her family's largesse had reportedly made McConnell and his electoral campaigns wealthy.<sup>10</sup> [Continued below.]	17 (15)

6-2-19	[Continued.] The article followed a May 28 report in The Times that Chao had profited from an investment in an American highway construction materials company after having promised but failed to divest from it. While she had recused herself from any decisions regarding that company specifically, she remained intimately engaged in overall infrastructure policies that could benefit the company.<sup>11</sup> On June 10, Politico reported that Chao had appointed a special liaison from her office to steer Transportation Department grants to Kansas – McConnell's state – in connection with his 2018 reelection campaign.<sup>12</sup>	17 (15)
6-3-19 +	Defying congressional inquiries. (This entry continues CSD's entry of April 16 +, in which Mr. Trump's many and extraordinary refusals to comply with congressional information requests and subpoenas were described.) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• On June 3, the White House prevented disgraced election-fraud conspiracy theorist Kris Kobach from testifying candidly before the House Oversight Committee on his conversations with Mr. Trump about the proposed inclusion of the census question in the 2020 decennial census.<sup>13</sup></li> <li>• On June 4, Mr. Trump instructed former White House aides Hope Hicks and Annie Donaldson to defy a House Judiciary Committee document subpoena.<sup>14</sup></li> <li>• On June 6, the Justice and Commerce Departments defied House Oversight Committee document subpoenas relating to the administration's proposed inclusion of a citizenship question in the 2020 decennial census, days after news reports had emerged of new evidence pointing to a partisan (as opposed to a scientific, objective and socially useful) motive behind the inclusion.<sup>15</sup></li> <li>• On June 11, a former senior Commerce Department official refused to answer over 100 questions put to him by the House Oversight Committee relative to the formulation of the controversial citizenship question.<sup>16</sup></li> <li>• On June 12, Mr. Trump asserted executive privilege in blocking the release to the House Oversight Committee of documents relating to the citizenship question.<sup>17</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	9

6-3-19 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• On June 14, the Justice Department issued a legal opinion backing Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin's refusal to allow the IRS to turn over Mr. Trump's tax returns to the House Ways and Means Committee, despite the committee's statutory right to obtain them.<sup>18</sup></li> <li>• On June 19, former communications director Hope Hicks, when meeting in closed session with the House Judiciary Committee, but honoring objections raised repeatedly by Justice Department lawyers accompanying her – refused to answer questions about any events whatever that had occurred while she was serving in the White House. (She answered questions only about events that had arisen while she was serving in Mr. Trump's electoral campaign.) Afterwards, Mr. Trump tweeted that the "RIGGED" hearings amounted to "Presidential Harassment," he railed at "Crooked Hillary" Clinton, and he accused Democrats of obstructing justice.<sup>19</sup></li> <li>• On June 21, Felix Sater – a felon and a former business associate of Mr. Trump who had had a role in Mr. Trump's proposed Moscow hotel development in the run-up to the 2020 election – failed to appear before the House Intelligence Committee despite having previously agreed to do so.<sup>20</sup></li> <li>• On June 24, the White House announced that it would bar Mr. Trump's senior advisor and prominent political surrogate Kellyanne Conway from testifying before the House Oversight Committee relative to the findings of the Office of Special Counsel that she had repeatedly violated the Hatch Act by engaging in partisan political campaigning in connection with her official government duties.<sup>21</sup> (See CSD's entry of June 13 + below for details of Conway's and others' Hatch Act offenses.) [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	9
-----------------	--	----------

6-3-19 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• On June 26, in an obverse phenomenon, Mr. Trump lashed out at special prosecutor Robert Mueller (no longer employed by the federal government or under Mr. Trump's control) for having agreed the previous day to testify publicly before the House Judiciary and Intelligence Committees pursuant to a subpoena with which he had been served and with which he was thus bound by law to comply. Specifically, Mr. Trump accused Mueller of having acted criminally when (apparently unbeknownst to Mueller) the text messages of two Mueller staffers were deleted after Mueller terminated the two for ethical reasons.<sup>22</sup></li> <li>• On July 8, former Deputy White House Counsel Annie Donaldson, on White House instructions, declined to answer more than 200 written questions posed by the House Judiciary Committee.<sup>23</sup></li> </ul>	9
6-3-19 +	Across the pond. Mr. Trump went to Europe with a view to honoring the 50th anniversary of D-Day. He started his visit in the U.K. He began that visit by trading insults with London's mayor Sadiq Khan, who had called him a fascist, and whom Mr. Trump, by Twitter, now called a "stone cold loser" and mocked his modest height. He created further controversy by calling for a quick British exit from the European Union, referring to a royal duchess as "nasty," and endorsing a particular candidate to lead Britain's Conservative Party as prime minister.<sup>24</sup> In London he was greeted by 75,000 protesters, a fact he labeled "fake news," and he preposterously claimed that instead thousands had massed in his support. As before in the U.K., his staff had carefully avoided exposing him to displays of his vast unpopularity within that nation, so it was unclear whether he even knew about it.<sup>25</sup> Also in London, Mr. Trump, via Twitter, bashed CNN for its "fake news." Once again picking winners and losers among American businesses for personal political gain, and once again directly attacking the First Amendment to the Constitution, he urged that Americans boycott CNN's parent AT&amp;T until CNN became less critical of him. (Pursuant to the same motive, Mr. Trump had sought to block AT&amp;T's acquisition of CNN by way of a merger with Time Warner, then CNN's parent – an illegal move foiled in federal court.) [Continued below.]	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15

6-3-19 +	[Continued.] He also denied global climate change in a press interview.<sup>26</sup> A Washington Post columnist detailed Mr. Trump's frequent (and often breathtakingly false) tweets and other statements during his stay in the U.K., in which he lavishly boasted about himself and trashed his American adversaries. Some of the most outlandish statements included disparaging entertainer Bette Midler, the "Corrupt Media," the special prosecutor's "Witch Hunt," 2020 presidential contender "Sleepy Joe Biden," and "Cryin' [Senate Minority Leader] Chuck Schumer" (a "disaster" and a "jerk"); claiming vast expertise about nuclear weapons; claiming to have created "the greatest [U.S.] economy ever"; touting his "big" 2016 electoral win and his "spectacular" inauguration; claiming to have a "very good relationship with the people in the United Kingdom" and its leaders; comparing himself to Winston Churchill; and excusing his Vietnam-era draft avoidance by pointing to his strong military budget as president.<sup>27</sup> Mr. Trump had made some of those comments during a Fox News interview in France, with an American war cemetery in the video behind him. At that time he also trashed House Speaker "Nervous Nancy" Pelosi as "horrible, nasty, vicious," and "a terrible person"; and he said that "crooked" Hillary Clinton should not have been permitted to run against him in 2016. He further boasted, improbably, of his "automatic chemistry" with Queen Elizabeth.<sup>28</sup> Those comments, combined with the cemetery setting, drew widespread condemnation not only for his having criticized American leaders while on foreign soil, but for his having desecrated the memory of the fallen on what had long been considered to be hallowed ground. Mr. Trump was vividly accompanied in the U.K. and elsewhere in Europe by his wife, three children, and two children-in law – all at least in part at government expense (that is, at a minimum, as to security expenses). Previous presidents had sometimes traveled abroad with children; but not so many children at once, none of whom were business people, and all of whom were minors. (Mr. Trump had previously criticized President Obama for his far less lavish travel expenses.)<sup>29</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15

6-3-19 +	[Continued.] Moving on from the U.K. to Ireland, Mr. Trump's visit with the Irish prime minister was downgraded to a brief encounter in the VIP lounge at Shannon Airport, thus avoiding Mr. Trump's insistence that it be held at his Irish golf club and the prime minister's insistence that it be held at a nearby, legendary castle. Mr. Trump nevertheless stayed two nights at his club – spending taxpayer dollars unnecessarily to fly there, while drawing promotional attention to the facility as well as hotel revenues from reporters, officials and others in attendance. It was the third time that Mr. Trump had visited – and promoted – his overseas properties while traveling abroad. (Curiously, news reports noted that Mr. Trump was awaiting a decision by local planning authorities on whether he could build a sea wall to prevent part of the golf course from eroding. In his application for the wall, he had cited climate change – a phenomenon he had otherwise claimed didn't exist – as a cause of the erosion.)<sup>30</sup> Mr. Trump's cumulative presidential golf outings (all to his own clubs) had now cost taxpayers well over $100 million – three times what President Obama had spent at this point in his term, and across two and a half times as many outings (despite Mr. Trump having excoriated his predecessor for golfing often).<sup>31</sup>	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15
6-8-19, 6-13-19	Suppressing science (yet again). On June 8, The Washington Post reported that White House officials prevented a State Department intelligence agency from informing the House Intelligence Committee days earlier of the agency's assessment that a failure to address climate change could be catastrophic for America's national security, after the White House had attempted to edit out that assessment from the agency's written submission.<sup>32</sup> On June 13, media reported that Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue, another climate science skeptic, was moving several of his department's research units from Washington to Kansas City, with the possible intent and effect of politicizing or crippling the research.<sup>33</sup>	17 (8)
6-10-19	Fact Checker update. The Washington Post's Fact Checker counted 10,796 false or misleading claims that Mr. Trump had made in office as of June 7, for an average of 12 per day during his presidency and 16 per day since April 26. The largest number of such claims (20%) addressed immigration issues, followed by trade (10%) and the Russia election meddling investigation (10%).<sup>34</sup>	7

6-10-19 +	On the Fed (once more, with feeling). On June 10, Mr. Trump yet again berated the Federal Reserve Bank for having raised interest rates during his administration; he urged that it lower interest rates now; and he bemoaned the Fed's independence (contrasting it to China's state control of its own central bank). He thus continued to flaunt tradition and wisdom by undertaking to politicize the Fed's decisions for his personal political benefit (that is, risking an inflationary economy that could help him win reelection but spell longer-term economic damage).<sup>35</sup> On June 18, Mr. Trump hinted to a reporter that he might try to remove Fed chair Jerome Powell, which would be illegal. Previous news reports had indicated that Mr. Trump had been investigating such a removal for months.<sup>36</sup>	9
6-11-19 +	North Korean love. On June 11, Mr. Trump, who had previously claimed to have "fallen in love" with North Korean dictator and butcher Kim Jong-un, said that he had received a new, "beautiful letter" from Kim. He also boasted of the (non-existent) progress he had made in U.S.-North Korean relations, stating, "We have a very good relationship together."<sup>37</sup> The next day, Mr. Trump told reporters that Kim had "kept his word" relative to his promise not to conduct nuclear and missile testing – thus contradicting his own national security advisor, John Bolton, who had said just hours before that Kim had reneged, having recently tested a short-range ballistic missile.<sup>38</sup>	7, 12
6-12-19	Infallible. Mr. Trump finally articulated what he had been suspected to believe all along: in connection with his prior statements (contrary to intelligence reports) that Russia was not intervening in Venezuela, he told a reporter, "Ultimately, I'm always right."<sup>39</sup>	11, 13

6-12-19 +	Still wanting it. On June 12, Mr. Trump told ABC News that he would welcome receiving opposition research from a hostile foreign power if it were to be offered during the course of his 2020 re-election campaign, and that he might or might not report such an incident to the FBI. In so doing, he effectively invited further foreign meddling in American elections; compromised many months of FBI work directed toward stopping such foreign activity; and defied his own appointed FBI director, Christopher Wray, who had told a Senate panel on May 7 that such conduct by a president would be illegal. Mr. Trump also thus flaunted one of the core controversies of the Mueller investigation – whether it had been improper for his campaign to seek and accept such election assistance from Russia – as though that investigation, which had so rent the nation, had never occurred; or as though, as indeed he had repeatedly claimed in recent months, the investigation had totally exonerated him and his campaign relative to seeking Russian assistance.<sup>40</sup> During and after the interview, Mr. Trump justified his attitude by stating that politicians routinely accept opposition research (not acknowledging that they don't accept it from hostile foreign powers) and that he himself had routinely spoken with foreign leaders without notifying the FBI (not acknowledging that he had not spoken with them about American election strategies).<sup>41</sup> Whether he had failed to grasp the distinctions, was simply following his creed of refusing to admit error, or instead was attempting to deceive the American public was unknowable; but regardless, in the view of many observers, what he said displayed a grievous unfitness for office. A firestorm of criticism erupted, including on the part of several prominent Republican senators.<sup>42</sup> The following day, the chair of the Federal Election Commission wrote unequivocally that for Mr. Trump to accept election help from a foreign government would be illegal.<sup>43</sup>	7, 9, 11, 12, 13

6-13-19 +	Garroting the Hatch Act. On June 13, the government's Office of Special Counsel – an ethical watchdog agency unrelated to special prosecutor Robert Mueller – ruled that Mr. Trump's senior advisor Kellyanne Conway had repeatedly violated the Hatch Act, which forbids political campaigning by most federal officials during the course of their official duties, and it recommended that Mr. Trump discipline her by firing her.<sup>44</sup> The following day, he publicly refused to do so, thus yet again baldly violating the law. Instead he praised Conway.<sup>45</sup> The chief of the Office of Special Counsel, himself a Trump appointee, blasted Mr. Trump for unethically interfering with the actions of the office. On June 15, a CNN analysis noted that at least a dozen senior Trump administration officials had been cited for Hatch Act violations, and that Mr. Trump himself, although exempt from the statute's restrictions, had to an extraordinary extent mixed campaign and other political messaging with official functions (including by attacking his adversaries while traveling overseas) – to the point of blurring the distinction between the two types of activities beyond recognition.<sup>46</sup>	9, 17 (9)
6-14-19 +	Multi-tasking the grab. Media reported that Mr. Trump would shortly be holding a re-election fundraiser at his Doral golf resort in Miami, Florida. His campaign would be paying the resort a rental fee; the government would be paying his travel and security expenses; and he himself would be playing golf. Thus in one fell swoop Mr. Trump would be promoting his property while using both taxpayer and donor money to line his pockets and enjoy a day on the links – thereby adding to the staggering sums he had personally netted from political events since becoming president, and the staggering amounts of golf he had played at his clubs.<sup>47</sup>	11, 15
6-14-19, 6-15-19	Wrapped in the flag. On June 14, the White House issued a Flag Day tweet that featured an odd photograph from March in which Mr. Trump was depicted beatifically hugging the American flag. The following day, Mr. Trump tweeted his support for a constitutional amendment that would criminalize the burning of the flag, as had been newly proposed by two Republican senators.<sup>48</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 11

6-14-19, 6-15-19	[Continued.] Of all the possible constitutional amendment initiatives to support, this seemed to CSD the most thoughtless, the most unnecessary, the most inflammatory, the most demagogic, the most ethno-nationalist ... and the most ironic, given Mr. Trump's unprecedented attacks on American legal, cultural and political traditions, his lifelong disdain for true patriotism, and his likely willingness to sell American interests out for the sake of Russian, Saudi Arabian and other for-profit opportunities.	9, 11
6-15-19	Hiding cyber-operations from the president. In reporting on the development of massive new U.S. cyber-warfare capabilities that can be deployed against Russia, The New York Times wrote: "Pentagon and intelligence officials described broad hesitation to go into detail with Mr. Trump about operations against Russia for concern over his reaction — and the possibility that he might countermand it or discuss it with foreign officials, as he did in 2017 when he mentioned a sensitive operation in Syria to the Russian foreign minister."<sup>49</sup> The stunning report appeared to indicate that top officials considered the commander-in-chief to be an utter nincompoop, a potential traitor, or both; and, as previous news reports had long speculated, that they were actively attempting to protect the country from him. Mr. Trump quickly tweeted that The Times had committed "a virtual act of Treason," that the story wasn't true, and that The Times was "THE ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE." But what was treasonous: that The Times had embarrassed the president? (it had); that The Times had embarrassed Russia? (it had); that The Times had disclosed classified information? (it had not: The Times responded that its sources had expressly acquiesced to the publication of the story<sup>50</sup>). What was untrue: that the program existed? (it did); that the president was a nincompoop and/or a traitor? (he was). Might Mr. Trump's reaction have arisen from surprise or fury in learning from The Times of the cyber program's extent or even its existence? (That, CSD was not able to determine).	7, 10, 12, 13; Treason
6-15-19	The coming crash. Mr. Trump tweeted that the stock market would experience an unprecedented crash if he were not re-elected in 2020.	9

6-16-19	President for life. For at least the fourth time, Mr. Trump mused (jokingly or not) about servicing as president for more than two terms – which would be unconstitutional.<sup>51</sup>	9, 11
6-17-19	The Space Force: for sale. The Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump's 2020 re-election campaign was hawking hats, T-shirts, pens and other sundries that promoted, as being in progress, Mr. Trump's much vaunted Space Force initiative. The concept of a unit specializing in orbital operations had long been discussed within the military. But Mr. Trump had expropriated it as his own, had vacuously re-characterized it as requiring the creation of a separate and co-equal branch of the military, and had gotten no buy-in for any of that from Congress.<sup>52</sup> That is, his claim to be already building the Space Force seemed even more megalomaniacal and less accurate than his claim to be already building the wall at the Mexican border. Still, he was managing to monetize the Space Force idea for his campaign's coffers. The Space Force sundries were being offered for sale at various Trump properties, along the lines of previous sales of Trump steaks, Trump deodorant, Trump vitamin kits, Trump water, Trump vodka, Trump wine, Trump mattresses, Trump pillows, Trump eyeglasses, Trump chandeliers, Trump coffee, and Trump neckties.<sup>53</sup>	7, 9, 11
6-17-19	Flipping and flopping. A Washington Post columnist recounted some 18 of the many instances in which Mr. Trump had contradicted himself almost contemporaneously with voicing his own original statements. Topics included national security threats, his attitudes toward the Justice Department, the status of ISIS, border security, nuclear proliferation, Russian election meddling, and immigration policy.<sup>54</sup> The same evening, one of Mr. Trump's biographers told an MSNBC interviewer that Mr. Trump seemed friendless; increasingly incapable of articulating a sustained or considered position about anything; and increasingly unable to distinguish fact from fiction, having gone from lying 20%-30% of the time to 80%-90%.<sup>55</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 10

6-17-19	[ Continued. ] Of course those were only opinions. But they were opinions widely held. CSD believes that even if many American voters didn't hold them, surely many of America's allies and enemies abroad did. And even if they were only a little bit true, they would be a grave and unprecedented danger to our country.	7, 10
6-17-19 +	The trouble with Fox. Having recently (and falsely) denied his 2020 re-election campaign's leaked finding that he was polling poorly, on June 17 Mr. Trump now criticized Fox News for objectively reporting on that network's own poor polling results for him. He had similarly criticized Fox in recent weeks for airing Democratic voices, and for otherwise reporting the news objectively – all of which he seemed to feel had violated his understanding that he effectively owned the editorial policies of Fox. <sup>56</sup> On July 7, Mr. Trump again ranted against Fox, for interviewing Democrats and for quoting The New York Times. <sup>57</sup>	7, 9, 11
6-17-19	Manafort saved from Rikers. Mr. Trump's Justice Department made the unusual move of directing New York State prison officials to not hold convicted federal felon Paul Manafort in the state prison at Rikers Island pending a state felony trial, because they felt that, for Manafort, sitting in a federal prison would be more humane. The intervention was unusual; the outcome (not sitting in Rikers at that stage in a state criminal case) was unusual; and the episode gave rise to continuing concerns that Mr. Trump could pardon Manafort. <sup>58</sup>	2
6-18-19	Saudis licensed to kill and to use child soldiers. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo blocked the inclusion of Saudi Arabia in a State Department list of countries that deploy child soldiers, thereby dismissing his own department's conclusion that Saudi forces were exploiting children in their murderous war in Yemen. <sup>59</sup>	17 (7, 14)
6-18-19	Mis-appointment round-up. On June 18, Mr. Trump dismissed his acting Secretary of Defense Patrick Shanahan, who had come under criticism for his too-close relations with his former employer Boeing, as well as for his lack of military experience, his seeming ineffectiveness in his acting role, and his prior personal circumstances involving domestic abuse. Mr. Trump then appointed Secretary of the Army Mark Esper to fill the position – his third Defense Secretary in less than three years. <sup>60</sup> [ Continued below. ]	10

6-18-19	[Continued.] On the same day, Ann Marie Buerkle, who was acting chair of the Consumer Product Safety Commission and Mr. Trump's nominee for chair, resigned over her stewardship of several children's toy recall scandals.<sup>61</sup> Those developments took their place in the continuing cavalcade of Mr. Trump's senior nominations and appointments starting askew and/or going bad, as documented above in this Chronology. They recently followed or shortly preceded: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The appointment on May 28 of the under-experienced Mark Morgan as acting director of Immigration and Customs Enforcement – a key unit of Homeland Security – reportedly because he had praised Mr. Trump repeatedly on Fox News when a vacancy in the position had appeared and because few other people wanted a senior post in the department under Mr. Trump.<sup>62</sup></li> <li>• The resignation on June 2 of Kevin Hassett, the White House's top economist and long-time opponent of tariffs.<sup>63</sup></li> <li>• The appointment on June 11 of arch-immigration foe Ken Cuccinelli as acting director of the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, another key unit of the Department of Homeland Security, over the objections of prominent Republican and Democratic senators who vowed to block him from achieving a permanent appointment. Cuccinelli replaced Lee Francis Cissna, a career immigration professional whom Mr. Trump had recently dismissed for being too soft on migrants.<sup>64</sup></li> <li>• The appointment on June 14 of former hard-line ICE acting director Thomas Homan to serve as Mr. Trump's White House "border czar," without Homan having agreed to serve.<sup>65</sup></li> <li>• The revelation on June 17 that Mr. Trump's nominee for Ambassador to the United Nations – Kelly Craft, an inexperienced diplomat but a wealthy political donor – had been absent from her job as ambassador to Canada most of the time.<sup>66</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	10

6-18-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The announcement on June 25 that Mr. Trump's acting commissioner of Customs and Border Protection (yet another key unit of Homeland Security), John Sanders, would resign. The development came at a moment of crisis – when Mr. Trump was threatening mass Hispanic deportations and the public was expressing fury over DHS's harsh treatment of migrant children at the Mexican border.<sup>67</sup> Sanders would be replaced by acting ICE director Mark Morgan, and Matt Albence would become acting ICE director. Every top position at DHS had thus gone through one or more changes in recent months, and none of those top positions – all "acting" – had been approved by the Senate.<sup>68</sup></li> <li>• The announcement on June 25 that Stephanie Grisham would become Mr. Trump's third press secretary (replacing Sarah Huckabee Sanders; he had had seven communications directors).<sup>69</sup></li> </ul> Following the Shanahan debacle, a June 18 analysis by Politico recapped Mr. Trump's considerable churn in cabinet positions, his penchant for poorly vetting his appointees, his trouble in finding people willing to serve, and his preference for naming acting officials so as to avoid Senate confirmation and to more readily control and dismiss his hirelings.<sup>70</sup> On June 23, Axios published a leaked Republican National Committee analysis of its own chaotic and irresponsible vetting process for top appointees during Mr. Trump's post-election transition period. RNC staffers had characterized the effort as a "disaster," a "shit show," and a "clown show," in which many appointees' known or easily knowable background defects had been ignored.<sup>71</sup>	10

6-18-19	Kicking it off in Florida. Mr. Trump, who had in fact (and without precedent) begun his 2020 re-election campaign within days after being sworn in for his first term of office in 2018 – he had been conducting rally after rally since then – now officially kicked off the campaign at a rally in Orlando, Florida. There, The New York Times wrote, "Mr. Trump unleashed a torrent of attacks, falsehoods, exaggerations and resentments that were the trademark of his first campaign and have been on almost daily display during his time in the White House." The Times called the crowd "raucous" and "frenzied."<sup>72</sup> Mr. Trump boasted in superlative terms about the crowd size and about his accomplishments as president. He called his slogan "Make America Great Again" "the greatest theme in the history of politics." He demonized migrants, falsely accused Democrats of seeking "open borders," and called that "the greatest betrayal of the American middle class and, frankly, American life." He termed the Mueller investigation a "witch hunt," a "hoax," and "an all-illegal attempt to overturn the results of the election, spy on our campaign, which is what they did -- and subvert our democracy." He falsely accused President Obama of tolerating the Russian election interference. He said that Democrats "want to destroy our country" and characterized them as an "angry, left-wing mob" bent on seeking to "undermine our great democracy." He attacked "Crooked Hillary" Clinton extensively (bringing his public denunciations of her, by one count, to an average of 2.56 per day since taking office, and drawing the predictable cries from the crowd to "Lock her up!"). He proclaimed, "They are really going after you. They tried to erase your vote, erase the legacy of the greatest campaign and the greatest election probably in the history of the country." And he thundered, "A vote for any Democrat in 2020 is a vote for the rise of radical socialism, and the destruction of the American dream."<sup>73</sup> CNN counted 15 false statements in Mr. Trump's address, including with respect to U.S. energy production, the special prosecutor's Russia investigation, the status of the border wall's construction, Mr. Trump's stewardship of the environment, the effect of his China tariffs on consumer prices, employment rates, his healthcare policies, and much more.<sup>74</sup> The Washington Post presented its own list of 17 false statements.<sup>75</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9

6-20-19 +	Foreign non-policy. After Mr. Trump had clamored to confront Iran (including militarily) for years, in quick succession: (a) Iran was revealed to have built up its nuclear capabilities substantially since Mr. Trump had withdrawn the U.S. from the Iranian nuclear accords; (b) Iran mined a Japanese oil tanker; and (c) it shot down a U.S. drone. Our country appeared to be on the brink of war with Iran. But Mr. Trump reacted by expressing doubt that Iran had done some of those things (or that it had done them intentionally); he declined to retaliate; soon afterwards he said that he did not want a war with Iran and blamed his advisors for fomenting one ("These people want to push us into a war, and it's so disgusting"); then he threatened to "obliterate" Iran; then he said (improbably, and contrary to the assessments of his advisors) that any war with Iran would be brief and would not escalate. The events followed other recent stunning reversals by Mr. Trump, each occurring shortly after he had launched a dire threat: levying a 5% tariff on all Mexican imports in order to force Mexico to better stanch the flow of migrants into the U.S.; deporting "millions" of undocumented migrants following a swift dragnet; and seeking regime change in Venezuela. Observers noted some common characteristics among many of the episodes of threats followed by reversals: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• An impulsiveness, capriciousness, and seeming lack of prior planning – in the reversals as well as in the original threats.</li> <li>• The likelihood that Mr. Trump's threats (and his internal coordination with his hapless advisors) were losing credibility among both foreign enemies and foreign allies.</li> <li>• America's spurned allies having lost confidence in their strategic alignment with the U.S. and with the candor of U.S. intelligence assessments.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump's claims to have rescued groups, countries or the entire world from dire crises that he himself had created. 6-21-19 +	Sub-humans. By June 21, a cascade of reports had appeared decrying the conditions under which migrant children were being held by the Department of Homeland Security at the Mexican border.<sup>78</sup> On June 22, New Yorker magazine reported in graphic detail that unaccompanied children at a particular facility in Texas were being held in filthy, disease-ridden and unsafe conditions. Mr. Trump, naturally, blamed Democrats.<sup>79</sup> (At the time, impassioned House Democrats were promoting a bill for child migrant protection that was more exacting than a competing Senate bill. In the end, on June 27, the Senate bill prevailed.<sup>80</sup>)	6, 7, 9, 14
6-23-19	Thank you (i.e., me). Mr. Trump thanked himself for the recent stock market rally – unintentionally directing his Twitter followers to a fake Russian Twitter account for support of the proposition.<sup>81</sup>	10, 11
6-23-19	Meeting the Press. Repeating his own familiar themes, Mr. Trump said in an NBC "Meet the Press" interview that Saudi Arabia's murder of Saudi dissident and Washington Post columnist Jamal Khashoggi was irrelevant as long as that country was buying U.S. weapons and other goods; he falsely accused President Obama of having initiated Mr. Trump's own harsh family separation policies at the Mexican border; he attacked Federal Reserve Board chairman Jerome Powell for not lowering interest rates; he threatened to "obliterate" Iran; and he indicated continued ambivalence as to whether to confront Russian President Vladimir Putin about ongoing Russian efforts to interfere in the American election process.<sup>82</sup>	7, 9, 10, 12, 14

6-23-19	No climate change for farmers. Politico reported that Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue, a pro-agribusiness partisan and climate science skeptic, had buried the department's public reporting on the impact of climate change on agriculture and agricultural products so that it was difficult for farmers, consumers, scientists and policy makers to access that information, sometimes with potentially widespread adverse health effects.<sup>83</sup>	17 (8)
6-27-19 +	Supreme Court quashes citizenship question (sort of). On June 27, the Supreme Court ruled that the 2020 decennial census could not contain a question asking respondents to declare whether they were U.S. citizens, unless Mr. Trump's Justice Department were to come forward with a better justification for including the question within days after the ruling. Chief Justice John Roberts (Republican-appointed) and four Democratic-appointed Justices effectively found Mr. Trump's administration to have lied about its motives for including the question when claiming that it was for the protection of the Voting Rights Act. (As CSD has reported extensively above in this Chronology, the inclusion of the question was designed instead to undercount immigrant communities and thus to deprive them of political representation and social benefits, with the likely ancillary result of depriving them of some commercial services. Recent evidence had more specifically revealed that the question's inclusion was intended to skew political districting in favor of white Republicans.) Mr. Trump promptly vowed to keep fighting for the inclusion of the question, to the point of possibly seeking to administratively extend the statutorily mandated census start date.<sup>84</sup> On July 2, however, the Justice and Commerce Departments formally conceded that the census would proceed without the citizenship question.<sup>85</sup> But the following day, chaotically, Mr. Trump called the report of that concession "FAKE," and he pledged to include the question in the census.<sup>86</sup> Justice Department lawyers, summoned by the federal trial court in Maryland to explain, confessed that they didn't know the president's reasoning, or under what legal grounds the question could be included. Exasperated, the judge suggested that further advocacy by the attorneys could be senseless unless Mr. Trump accompanied them in the courtroom to corroborate their stated positions.<sup>87</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10

6-27-19 +	[Continued.] On July 7, the Justice Department announced that it had appointed a new team of attorneys to represent the administration in the matter, seemingly because the original attorneys appeared to have balked in moving forward.<sup>88</sup> For CSD, that passionate advocacy for what would ordinarily have been a highly objective and technical matter (that is, what questions to include in a census) on the part of Mr. Trump – who was not a technical man – on its face appeared to demonstrate the political and racist underpinnings of the proposed question. (His having repeatedly blocked Congress from gaining documents and testimony about the motivation for including the question was equally telling.) A New York Times analysis advanced that, regardless of the Court's decision and the government's plans for the census, Mr. Trump's anti-immigration policies would already likely effect an under-count of migrants, due to their fear of federal authorities coming to their doors.<sup>89</sup> As to Mr. Trump's threat to defy the Supreme Court's ruling, a subsequent Washington Post analysis placed it within the context of his overall approach to the court system as president. He had lost over 60 cases in two years as president, including those pertaining to his efforts to strip money from sanctuary cities, block congressional inquiries into his finances, overturn certain environmental regulations, and fund the Mexican border wall without congressional approval. But there had been a method to his madness: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Favoring hostility and theatre over a careful legal strategy – in order to gin up his voter base, even if it meant losing the case.</li> <li>• Upon a court win, claiming victory; upon a loss, claiming that the system was rigged.</li> <li>• Never conceding defeat; rather, defying, or appealing to, a Supreme Court that he, through his appointments, had made friendly to himself.<sup>90</sup></li> </ul>	6, 7, 9, 10

6-28-19 +	In Japan and Korea. Seated with Russian President Vladimir Putin before television cameras on June 28 at a G-20 conference in Osaka, Japan, Mr. Trump joked with Putin. Referring to reporters, he said, "Get rid of them." He added, "Fake news is a great term, isn't it? You don't have this problem in Russia, but we do." (Some 26 journalists had been murdered in Russia under Putin's reign.) Asked by a reporter if he would tell Putin not to meddle in American elections, Mr. Trump smiled, wagged his finger at Putin, and said, "Don't meddle in the election," drawing a laugh from the man who had grievously meddled in 2016 and was expected to meddle again in 2020.<sup>91</sup> That sardonic camaraderie followed Mr. Trump's attacks the previous day on American allies Japan and Germany for not spending enough on their own military protection, while implying that he might abandon our military treaties with them.<sup>92</sup> Indeed, Mr. Trump spent most of his time at the conference huddling with dictators and ethno-nationalists, not with America's democratic allies. Of Putin in particular he said, "We've had great meetings. We have had a very, very good relationship. And we look forward to spending some pretty good time together. A lot of very positive things going to come out of the relationship." Putin, for his part, told the press that the liberal international order was obsolete, that multiculturalism was "no longer tenable," and that "migrants can kill, plunder and rape with impunity." Mr. Trump did not dispute any of that.<sup>93</sup> In fact on June 29, still in Osaka, he expressly acknowledged to American reporters that he had been getting along with the dictators better than with the reporters.<sup>94</sup> Also on June 28, Mr. Trump said that Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Mohammad bin Salman – widely suspected of having ordered the murder of Saudi dissident journalist and Washington Post columnist Jamal Khashoggi – was his "friend" and was innocent of the murder. He also heralded the "great honor" of being with the prince, noting that Saudi Arabia was a "good purchaser of American products." Addressing the prince, he said, "I want to just thank you on behalf of a lot of people, and I want to congratulate you. You've done, really, a spectacular job."<sup>95</sup> On the topic of climate change, Mr. Trump stood alone among the attending democratic leaders in resisting a joint communiqué calling out the peril.<sup>96</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

6-28-19 +	[Continued.] On the topics of sex, power, ignorance, brutality and nepotism, the presidential daughter, senior advisor and former fashion model Ivanka Trump – a woman of no known diplomatic capability but of sometimes embarrassing diplomatic pretense<sup>97</sup> – appeared prominently throughout the Asian adventure, at one point eliciting joyous whoops of something (what?) from American troops as Mr. Trump paraded her on stage during their side visit to the Korean de-militarized zone. (Mr. Trump had just met with and gratuitously flattered North Korean dictator and butcher Kim Jong-un there).<sup>98</sup> Further on entertaining the troops, Mr. Trump told them that he had given them their first pay raise in ten years, a statement that was flagrantly false.<sup>99</sup> He also continued to betray the custom of not delivering political speeches to uniformed service members: he berated Democrats, claiming that they had not funded purchases of new military equipment for the troops in attendance.<sup>100</sup> Finishing up in Seoul, South Korea, Mr. Trump crowed that while he himself had met with Kim three times, President Obama had repeatedly begged for such a meeting and had been rebuffed – another fabrication.<sup>101</sup> (By all credible news accounts, despite his meetings, Mr. Trump had not yet demonstrably achieved anything of substance with Kim toward the singular goal of North Korean denuclearization. In fact Kim's nuclear capabilities appeared to have increased despite Mr. Trump's negotiations. But Mr. Trump had certainly elevated Kim's domestic and international stature by having met with and befriended him.) A New York Times analysis encapsulated Mr. Trump's demagogic, egomaniacal expedition in East Asia as follows: [Continued below.]	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

His whirlwind 72 hours in Japan and South Korea could be seen as his pitch for posterity. He had, in his telling, built 'the best economy in the world.' The deal he hoped to reach with China 'could be very historic.' And when he went where no president had gone before by stepping across the border into North Korea, 'historic' was not good enough. Even before the visit was over, he was characterizing it as 'legendary.' More than most presidents, Mr. Trump appears driven by a quest for superlatives — whatever he is doing must be the first, the most, the biggest — and it shapes his policy choices even as he frames his own narrative with the branding skills of a career in business and entertainment. During one news conference on the trip, he used the word 'best' nine times, 'incredible' 16 times, 'tremendous' 28 times and 'great' or 'greatest' 50 times. 'We're the hottest show in town,' he told reporters  ....<sup>102</sup>	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
6-29-19, 7-1-19	Pampered, insouciant, or just plain out of it? Mr. Trump – a lifelong urban resident, albeit a coddled one – unintentionally revealed in a series of media interviews that he did not know that, for decades, (a) minority children had been bussed from poor urban areas to wealthier ones as a means of remediating school segregation and (b) urban homelessness had been a well-recognized and much-addressed humanitarian problem. In fact he seemed shocked to learn of urban homelessness, and he vowed to "clean up" the cities for the benefit of the non-homeless who had to encounter the homeless on work days. Naturally, and nonsensically, he blamed Democrats for the problem.<sup>103</sup>	9, 11
7-3-19	Court bars Barr. A federal district court in Seattle ruled that Attorney General William Barr's April order to categorically deny bond to, and thus to indefinitely detain, certain apprehended asylum seekers unconstitutionally deprived them of their right to due process. 7-3-19	A champion for war crimes. In a stunning and gratuitous demonstration of Islamophobia, sadism, militarism, inappropriate judicial intervention, disdain for the principles of American and international law, an aspirational machismo, and simply mouthing off on a matter in which he had no knowledge or constitutional prerogative, Mr. Trump, by way of Twitter, congratulated a Navy Seal upon being found not guilty of war crimes by a military tribunal. (The charges had included murdering a captive in Iraq and attempting to murder civilians there.) Mr. Trump also boasted about having helped the accused man: through presidential intercession, the accused had been moved from an uncomfortable prison.<sup>105</sup> Ironically, the court-martial outcome was not viewed favorably within the SEALs by either commanders (who felt that the unit's mission and reputation had been compromised by the reprieve) or witnesses (who now feared retaliation from within the ranks). That is, Mr. Trump was viewed by many SEALs as having been fighting against them, not for them.<sup>106</sup>	2, 9, 17 (14)

Independence Day, 2019

On July 4, Mr. Trump was the featured speaker at a controversial Independence Day extravaganza of his design at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, DC. Mr. Trump managed to read faithfully from his non-partisan script, for which critics damned him with faint praise. But unusual features of the over-the-top event still abounded, including the following:

- Mr. Trump's starring role. (Recent presidents had spent the July 4 holiday visiting hospitalized service members and the like.)
- Mr. Trump's having arrogated to himself the memory of Abraham Lincoln (whose stony figure loomed in the background) and of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. (whose 1963 civil rights speech at the same site had become historically sacred).
- Mr. Trump's having ordered the positioning of armored military vehicles near where he was speaking, including some tanks that were no longer being deployed and others that were barely useful in current military campaigns. (He had keenly sought to have the vehicles roll over the streets and the Mall, as in the Bastille Day parade that had so impressed him in Paris in 2017, but their treads would have wrecked the lawn and paving, and reportedly they might have gotten stuck in the soft earth.)
- Mr. Trump's having ordered military aircraft fly-overs of the event.
- Mr. Trump's having awarded many VIP seating tickets to his donors and political appointees.
- Mr. Trump's having spent millions in National Park Service and other federal monies to mount the spectacle – which included not only the expensive fly-overs but a military band and a military chorus, plus extensive security and logistical arrangements – while the White House had refused to disclose the total cost.
- Mr. Trump's actual speech consisting in great measure of a banal, jingoistic and sometimes faulty recitation of historical American military glories – extolling a martial past while ignoring America's socially and politically troubled present and its challenging future.
- Mr. Trump's having promised in the run-up to the event that it would be "the show of a life-time."
- The crowd having divided itself between Mr. Trump's supporters (at the Lincoln Memorial) and his opponents (at the other end of the Mall), with occasional verbal and even physical hostilities arising when they intersected.
- Shortly after his speech, Mr. Trump's having taken to Twitter to attack his critics, rail at flag-burning "communist" protestors, and post photos demonstrating what he claimed to be a large crowd size.

The event was not only the most martial Independence Day celebration in the nation's capital in recent memory. It also amounted, at taxpayer expense, to a political rally for Mr. Trump, and to his expropriation of the military for his personal demagogic purposes. Although some ranking Pentagon figures appeared with him on the stage (on command), overall the nation's military leadership did not seem to support it. Rather, they seemed to be mindful of and to seek a distance from the military parades and similar pageantry that had routinely been mounted by ruthless modern dictatorships.

For the avoidance of doubt, CSD here reiterates its grave concerns about Mr. Trump's attempts to wed his political persona with the nation's military establishment: from time immemorial, that has been a tyrant's errand. Recent presidents of genuine military experience and valor, such as Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy, Jimmy Carter and George H.W. Bush had universally declined to do so. Of course Mr. Trump himself had not served in the military; and he had long been accused of nursing a schoolboy's fascination with it rather than any genuine understanding of or appreciation for military operations, military strategies, or the lives or hardships of military service members, let alone the horrors of war.

Mr. Trump also reportedly profited handsomely at his Trump International Hotel in Washington, as supporters flocked to patronize it for the holiday weekend.

The last Independence Day celebration at the Mall that was polarized and politicized had been directed by Richard Nixon in 1970.

But what disturbed CSD most was Mr. Trump's desecration of the memory of George Washington, the city's namesake, who more than any other individual had been responsible for the nation having gained and consolidated its democratic independence nearly 250 years previous. Washington was a man of vision, eloquence, courage, duty, sacrifice, integrity and modesty. He was horrified at any suggestion of governmental pomp, and he warned his countrymen about the dangers of despotism, phony patriotism, and "mountebanks" who would defy the Constitution. Unlike Mr. Trump, he had lived the grueling life of a soldier, had prevailed in leading a seven-year military conflict for freedom, then had pointedly declined to become America's dictator or king when invited by the new country's political leaders to do so. After serving two terms as president, he retired to his estate to attend to his crops, his trees and a life of reflection, thereby saving the nation from becoming just one more autocracy.

Had Washington been captured by the British, he could have been drawn and quartered for his manifest acts of treason.

Mr. Trump in the recent past had compared himself favorably to Washington. But Mr. Trump had taken no such risks as Washington had taken; he had performed no such service to the country; he had demonstrated no such philosophical vision; and he had incurred no such sacrifice. CSD speculates that he could not even conceive of what any of that in his or Washington's life would mean. Prior to his presidency, Mr. Trump's greatest exploits had been as a self-promoter and a philanderer. He had never even served the community in prosaic ways: even his charitable foundation had operated without any apparent philanthropic mission, but rather as a sort of personal slush fund, and it had come under investigation for systemic tax fraud.

As for leading our democracy, Washington had been handed the opportunity become a dictator, and he had declined, for moral and philosophical reasons. Mr. Trump had been persistently seeking the opportunity to become a dictator, on grounds that appeared to be informed by neither morality nor philosophy.

Independence Day celebrations around the country in 2019 reflected an appreciation for the high-minded, death-defying, democratic vision of Washington and the other early patriots. Some of CSD's members attended one such celebration, in a small village in rural Pennsylvania, where they found the plain-spoken tributes to the heroism and the idealism of the signers of the Declaration of Independence to be emotionally compelling. But Mr. Trump's celebration did not reflect any of that. George Washington's sort of thinking and moral designs were beyond the current president's petty, sadistic, self-absorbed, uninformed, ahistorical, vainglorious and grifting ways. The best Mr. Trump could do on July 4 was to urinate on the spirit of President Washington, the way a dog urinates on a tree to leave its passing mark on the landscape.

CITIZENS FOR A STRONG DEMOCRACY

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 25 – August 29, 2019

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

7-9-19	Environmental fraud. Mr. Trump conducted a press briefing during which, with an apparent view to winning votes in the 2020 election, he touted his record as a strong steward of the environment. A New York Times analysis, however, pointed out that none of it was true – that all of the claimed achievements were those of his predecessors in office; that he had long been a fervent champion of polluting industries; that he didn't even mention climate change during the session; and that he himself had hobbled environmental protection in many ways: such as by encouraging the commercial exploitation of public lands and coastal waters, and by rolling back clean water, coal-burning and auto emission regulations. Critics called the presentation "surreal" and "a 1984 moment."<sup>1</sup> A second Times analysis reported that, contrary to Mr. Trump's claims during the session: air pollution in the U.S. had actually increased under his watch; the U.S. remained one of the world's biggest air polluters and had reduced emissions less than other Western nations had during his administration; and he had consistently sought to cut funding for super-fund site clean-up.<sup>2</sup>	7, 8

7-9-19, 7-11-19	On free speech. On July 9, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that Mr. Trump's practice of blocking critics from access to his otherwise open Twitter account that he had routinely used for official purposes – that is, barring them from viewing, replying to, liking, or re-tweeting his posts – was unconstitutional, on First Amendment grounds.<sup>3</sup> At a conclave for right-wing social media provocateurs that Mr. Trump convened at the White House on July 11, he effectively stated that his critics should not enjoy First Amendment protections.<sup>4</sup> In addition, he falsely stated that the major social media platforms had been wrongfully culling his supporters.<sup>5</sup>	3, 7
7-9-19 +	Down with the U.K.! (And up with me!). After internal emails by British ambassador Kim Darroch criticizing Mr. Trump as "inept," "insecure," "incompetent" and "dysfunctional" were leaked, Mr. Trump tweeted on July 9 that he would no longer deal with the man, calling him "wacky," a "very stupid guy" and a "pompous fool." For good measure, in the same Twitter episode, he criticized British Prime Minister Theresa May for her failed Brexit negotiations, writing, "I told [her] how to do that deal, but she went her own foolish way – was unable to get it done. A disaster!" He added: "Tell [Darroch] the USA now has the best Economy &amp; Military anywhere in the World, by far, and they are both only getting bigger, better and stronger.....Thank you, Mr. President [sic]!" The next day Darroch resigned, amid praise from the British Foreign Office for his decades of distinguished service and for doing his job properly.<sup>6</sup> The foreign secretary then chided Mr. Trump for disrespecting the U.S.-U.K. alliance – which for a century had been America's strongest.<sup>7</sup> On July 10, citing diplomatic sources, The New York Times wrote that many other foreign diplomats had likely expressed similar opinions about Mr. Trump internally; and that they had been bristling about having been virtually shut out from communications with the administration since its beginning; but that Mr. Trump's advisors themselves often knew little about his plans and intentions anyway.<sup>8</sup>	10, 11, 13

7-9-19 +	Defying congressional inquiries. (This entry continues CSD's entries of April 16 + and June 3 +, reporting the many and extraordinary refusals to comply with congressional information requests and subpoenas on the part of Mr. Trump, his subordinates and his associates.) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• On July 9, The New York Times reported that the Justice Department had instructed two of special prosecutor Robert Mueller's deputies not to appear before the House Intelligence and Judiciary Committees, even though they had left the government's service.<sup>9</sup></li> <li>• On the same day, Politico reported that Felix Sater – a felon and former business associate of Mr. Trump's who had sought to promote Mr. Trump's Moscow hotel project during the run-up to the 2016 election – had stonewalled during his closed-door interview with the House Intelligence Committee that day, after having skipped a previously scheduled hearing entirely.<sup>10</sup></li> <li>• On July 15, on the White House's instructions, presidential advisor and political surrogate Kellyanne Conway defied a subpoena from and refused to appear before the House Oversight Committee to testify about her alleged violations of the Hatch Act (which forbids most senior federal employees from participating in political campaigns).<sup>11</sup></li> <li>• On July 24, the Justice Department announced that it would not prosecute Attorney General William Barr or Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross for having criminally defied subpoenas issued by the House of Representatives relative to their attempts to fix the U.S. decennial census so as to favor Republicans and disfavor immigrant minorities.<sup>12</sup></li> <li>• On July 31, the inspector general for all of the country's intelligence organizations refused a congressional request to investigate the highly suspicious granting of security clearances to presidential relatives/advisors Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump, unless he were to be so directed by Mr. Trump.<sup>13</sup></li> <li>• On August 20, CNN reported that Mr. Trump's Justice Department was opposing a House subpoena of his financial records directed to two banks with which he had personally done business.<sup>14</sup></li> </ul>	9

7-11-19	Ranting. In a sequence of more than 20 rambling and seemingly disconnected morning tweets, Mr. Trump yet again: denigrated the "Fake News"; hinted that he could serve more than two terms in office; falsely claimed that many banks had been willing to lend to his troubled real estate business; and referred to Democratic primary candidate Elizabeth Warren as "Pocahontas," to candidate Pete Buttigieg as "Alfred E. Neuman," and to himself as "so great looking and smart, a truly Stable Genius."<sup>15</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
7-11-19 +	Conceding. Flanked by his Attorney General William Barr and his Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross, on July 11 Mr. Trump publicly conceded that, by order of the Supreme Court, the 2020 decennial census would not contain the notorious question – inquiring about respondents' citizenship – that the three of them had been battling to insert. The concession brought to an end days of chaotically inconsistent messages from the administration on the topic, following the Supreme Court's determination that the question could not be inserted unless the administration quickly advanced a legitimate reason for doing so. (The court found the administration to have lied about its actual reasons for wishing to include the question.) In announcing the concession, Mr. Trump said that he would learn how many non-citizens live in the U.S. (which had never even been the actual or professed purpose of inserting the question) through other, existing federal resources (which had always been available to him anyway and which the Census Bureau had expressly offered him months ago), even though (he stated falsely) Democrats had been determined to hide that information from the public. Obsequiously, Barr then congratulated him on his decision, and, dubiously, Barr boasted that he could have convinced the Supreme Court to allow the question's inclusion if there were more time to re-litigate the matter and to re-print the census forms.<sup>16</sup> The next day, Mr. Trump denied having conceded anything, and he claimed somehow to have been victorious and to have invented a better solution – as he had typically done after taking a drubbing.<sup>17</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8

7-11-19 +	[Continued.] CSD felt that all of that amounted to putting lipstick on a pig. Neither man acknowledged that the Supreme Court had found that the Trump administration had lied about its motives for including the question in the census – to depress the count of Hispanics for the political benefit of white Republicans – and had desperately tried to conceal its motives from congressional investigations. (See CSD's most recent recounting of those motives and efforts in our entries of June 3 + and June 27 +.)	6, 7, 8
7-12-19	Acosta out. Labor Secretary Alex Acosta resigned amid scrutiny of his having, as a U.S. attorney in Florida, agreed to a light sentence for a wealthy, accused pedophile, Jeffrey Epstein, in 2007 without the consent of the victims and thus illegally. The scrutiny, which had arisen previously, resumed as Epstein, a former partying friend of Mr. Trump, was arrested on July 6 for having committed additional sex crimes. Mr. Trump praised Acosta on his way out the door, and he denied having ever been friendly with Epstein. Acosta joined the ranks of Mr. Trump's cabinet members who had left office, belatedly, on ethical grounds: Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt, Veterans Affairs Secretary David Shulkin, and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke – all as described above in this Chronology. Mr. Trump had now lost more cabinet members to corruption and other ethical issues in his first term than any other president in history. And he had often replaced them with former lobbyists for the industries that they would now regulate.<sup>18</sup> While it was not necessarily Mr. Trump's fault that he had chosen corrupt and unethical men to serve as some of his highest ranking officials, or had chosen sexual deviants and misogynists as many of his political and partying friends,<sup>19</sup> CSD is convinced that birds of a feather, instinctively, often do flock together; that somehow they are preternaturally drawn toward and comfortable with one another, through a common code of (or possibly common pheromones that advertise) charisma, narcissism, sexual appetite, avarice, and/or utter amorality. [Continued below.]	7, 17 (All manner of debasement)

7-12-19	[Continued.] Notably, the overall churn rate for Mr. Trump's top advisors was now measured at 74% – far in excess of any other modern president. (The churn rate included not only separations prompted by ethical scandal, but those prompted by the officials' having insufficiently adhered to Mr. Trump's chaotic, unsupportable, and sometimes brutal policy demands.)<sup>20</sup>	7, 17 (All manner of debasement)
7-12-19, 7-13-19	Ruling by tirade. On July 12, Mr. Trump ranted to the press for half an hour about a good number of his critics, now including former House Speaker Paul Ryan, presidential contenders Joe Biden and Bill De Blasio, several Democratic members of Congress, and especially The New York Times, which he called "very dishonest" and "truly the enemy of the people."<sup>21</sup> On July 13, Mr. Trump spent part of his Saturday morning sending over two dozen re-tweets, including messages demonizing former electoral opponent Hillary Clinton and special prosecutor Robert Mueller, as well as one message brazenly promoting his golf courses in Ireland and Scotland.<sup>22</sup>	1, 9, 11, 15
7-14-19 +	Minority congresswomen: "Go home." On July 14, Mr. Trump provoked a firestorm of criticism by tweeting that four progressive freshmen Democratic members of Congress who were women of color and who had been highly critical of him and of moderate Democrats should go back to their countries of origin. He wrote: "So interesting to see 'Progressive' Democrat Congresswomen, who originally came from countries whose governments are a complete and total catastrophe, the worst, most corrupt and inept anywhere in the world (if they even have a functioning government at all), now loudly and viciously telling the people of the United States, the greatest and most powerful Nation on earth, how our government is to be run. Why don't they go back and help fix the totally broken and crime infested places from which they came. Then come back and show us how it is done." [Emphasis added.] [Continued below.]	6, 9

7-14-19 +	[Continued.] His targets were Ilhan Omar, Rashida Tlaib, Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, and Ayanna Pressley, who together had dubbed themselves "the Squad." In fact three of the four had been born in the U.S., and the family of one of those three – an African American – had been here for generations, possibly longer than Mr. Trump's. Later he tweeted that the women were "disgusting" and "a bunch of communists."<sup>23</sup> On July 16, amid the clamor he had generated, Mr. Trump doubled-down, tweeting that the women were "vile," "anti-USA" and "pro-terrorist," and he again invited them to leave the country. White nationalists celebrated.<sup>24</sup> Mr. Trump's senior advisor and political surrogate Kellyanne Conway said that the four congresswomen "represent a dark underbelly of this country."<sup>25</sup> But many or all Democrats in Congress, a number of Republicans there, leading British government officials and others around the world expressed disgust with Mr. Trump's demagogic remarks, in that they treated people of color and naturalized citizens as foreigners and treated critics as traitors.<sup>26</sup> A prominent presidential historian said on MSNBC that Mr. Trump's behavior had now established him as the most racist president since Andrew Johnson (President Lincoln's slave-holding vice president and the first president to have been impeached).<sup>27</sup> A New York Times reporter wrote of the episode: "While others who occupied the White House at times skirted close to or even over the line, finding ways to appeal to the resentments of white Americans with subtle and not-so-subtle appeals, none of them in modern times fanned the flames [of racism] as overtly, relentlessly and even eagerly as Mr. Trump."<sup>28</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 9
------------------	---	-------------

7-14-19 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump complained privately that more Republicans hadn't vocally defended his provocative tweets.<sup>29</sup> But he also privately exulted that he had found a core theme for his 2020 reelection campaign: demonizing the four congresswomen as foreign, traitorous and racially unwelcome, while tarring the entire Democratic party as their supporters.<sup>30</sup> Indeed, at a reelection campaign rally in Greenville, North Carolina on July 17, he railed at the four by name: inviting them to leave the country, eliciting from his (mostly white) audience loud jeers, and – as to one of the four, Omar, who had been born in Somalia – drawing from the crowd the chant, "Send her back!" The chant continued for 10 to 15 seconds (counts varied, but video records abounded<sup>31</sup>), as Mr. Trump silently and imperiously basked in the clamor. Utter nonsense was afoot. Mr. Trump's attacks on the four women for criticizing elements of America's circumstances ignored the fact that he himself (like all politicians) had routinely criticized America as well. He condemned Omar for her alleged anti-Semitism, despite having previously declined to condemn whites who were much more flagrantly anti-Semitic. He condemned the four as "communists," but he himself had wildly touted his affection and respect for the truly (and brutally) communist leaders of North Korea and China. And he had never suggested that any white or Asian critic of his who (or whose recent family) had immigrated here leave the country. The nonsense was categorical. Also at the rally, Mr. Trump claimed that any vote for a Democrat in 2020 would be a vote for "radical socialism" and "the destruction of the country." CNN counted 20 false statements in his address.<sup>32</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 9
------------------	--	-------------

7-14-19 +	[Continued.] The day after the rally, under a barrage of criticism for eliciting and then tolerating the xenophobic chant, Mr. Trump falsely claimed that he had disliked it and had tried to stop it. But thereafter he continued his attacks on the four women almost daily; he said that no American should be allowed to criticize our country; and – flipping back to the original – he praised those who had participated in the chant as "incredible patriots."<sup>33</sup> On July 22, he tweeted that the four were a "very Racist group of troublemakers," thus deftly projecting onto them his own moral stain. As of July 23 he had not let up: he tweeted that Omar was an "America-hating anti-Semite"; and in a speech to a conservative youth conference, he raged at the women; he especially mocked the foreign surname of Tlaib, then shook his head in disgust, drawing jeers from the crowd. He also again drew the chant, "Send her back!"<sup>34</sup> (He had previously mocked the foreign surname of Ocasio-Cortez.<sup>35</sup>) CSD's members do not agree with many of the statements and policy positions of the four congresswomen. We nevertheless condemn their demonization on racial grounds and their use as props for Mr. Trump's demagoguery – wholly extraordinary developments coming from the party of Abraham Lincoln, and from a man with family ties (through his daughter's marriage) to Holocaust survivors.	6, 9
7-15-19 +	No asylum; no refugees. On July 15, the Trump administration announced that it would almost categorically deny asylum to anyone who sought to enter the U.S. from Mexico after having traveled through other countries to get there. The order defied international asylum law.<sup>36</sup> On July 24, a federal court temporarily enjoined the order.<sup>37</sup> On July 18, Politico reported that the White House was considering virtually ending the admission of refugees to the U.S. in 2020. (Refugees are migrants who are approved and processed for resettlement in the U.S. by the U.N., the State Department and U.S. security agencies while they are still overseas.) Observers noted with alarm that even a one-year hiatus in the program could unwind the entire American refugee resettlement mechanism, to the point of crippling any effort to reestablish it later.<sup>38</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 14

7-15-19 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump had already cut refugee admissions to a fraction of what they had been prior to his presidency. The further evisceration of the American refugee admissions program would amount to a radical break from post-World War II policy and practice; it would defy the spirit and letter of multiple international compacts; and, in the view of CSD and many other observers, it would compromise America's long-term moral and political stature, our military security and our economic growth.	6, 14
7-15-19	Hacks vs. scientists. The Government Accountability Office, a leading federal watchdog agency, ruled that the Environmental Protection Agency under disgraced former administrator Scott Pruitt in 2018 had violated ethics rules when replacing scientists with pro-industry partisans on its advisory panels.<sup>39</sup>	17 (8, 9)
7-16-19	International religious freedom: grow it or stow it? Amid a major conference on international religious freedom in Washington that the Trump administration had convened and promoted, the International Rescue Committee – a prominent American relief and refugee agency – called out the administration for having radically slashed the number of persecuted religionists abroad (such as Iraqi and Iranian Christians) that it was willing to receive as refugees here.<sup>40</sup> That is to say, even in its high-minded promotion of religious freedom here and abroad, the administration had drawn the line: effectively not allowing the persecuted to contaminate American soil if they were from poor countries.	6, 14
7-23-19, 8-19-19	Voter fraud (still?). Speaking to a conservative youth conference in Washington, on July 23 Trump stated falsely that in California the voting would be "rigged" against him in 2020, and that Democrats did well in the 2018 midterm congressional elections because undocumented migrants fraudulently voted, and voted many times.<sup>41</sup> On August 18, he repeated to reporters his unsubstantiated claim that massive voter fraud had robbed him of New Hampshire's electoral votes in 2016.<sup>42</sup> On August 19, Mr. Trump – following a Fox News report on the subject – falsely tweeted that Google had "manipulated" millions of votes in favor of his 2016 rival Hillary Clinton.<sup>43</sup>	4, 7

7-23-19	It's good to be the king. At the same conservative youth conference, Mr. Trump notably said that Article II of the Constitution provides that "I have the right to do whatever I want as president."<sup>44</sup> He apparently had not read the rest of the Constitution.	7, 9
7-24-19 +	Mueller testifies before Congress. Appearing reluctantly before the House Judiciary and Intelligence Committees on July 24 pursuant to subpoena, special prosecutor Robert Mueller adhered to his vow to say little in hindsight about the investigation of Russian election meddling that didn't already appear in his public report. He seemed tired, sometimes unfamiliar with the details of the report, and occasionally forgetful. Republicans on the two panels savagely attempted to portray him as politically motivated, unfair, and even "un-American." Democrats were disappointed that he didn't score a media splash in condemning Mr. Trump. But in numerous areas he did unmask the president: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He confirmed that the Russian government had attempted to influence the 2020 presidential election; that that had been one of the most serious challenges to our democracy that he had ever seen; that the Trump campaign had welcomed it; and that Russia was continuing such attempts to this day (a fact that Mr. Trump had and has long sought to obscure and ignore).</li> <li>• He said that receiving campaign assistance from a foreign country – as the Trump campaign had sought to do – was "unpatriotic" and "wrong."</li> <li>• He confirmed that his report did not find Mr. Trump to have not obstructed justice, and did not "exonerate" Mr. Trump from that, contrary to Mr. Trump's claims.</li> <li>• He said that Mr. Trump could be indicted after he leaves office.</li> <li>• He said that Mr. Trump's written answers under oath to Mueller's questions had not always been true.</li> <li>• He said that calling Mr. Trump's encouragement of the WikiLeaks releases of stolen Democratic campaign emails "problematic" would be an "understatement" – that is, that Mr. Trump had flatly promoted illegal activity.</li> <li>• He said that, contrary to Mr. Trump's endless refrain, the investigation had been neither a "witch hunt" nor a "hoax." [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	7, 9, 11

7-24-19 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He acknowledged that the investigation had not targeted Mr. Trump's questionable business dealings with Russians, and thus had not reported on them or blessed them.</li> <li>• He denied that he had hired his staff based on their political views, contrary to Mr. Trump's frequent claims.<sup>45</sup></li> </ul> In the days prior to the testimony, and by Twitter in the hours before the event,<sup>46</sup> Mr. Trump had disparaged Mueller and the upcoming hearing relentlessly.<sup>47</sup> He indeed had urged that Mueller not testify at all, and his Justice Department had demanded that Mueller not testify to anything beyond what had already appeared in his published report.<sup>48</sup> Patently, Mr. Trump had feared what Mueller might reveal to Congress and the public. But after the testimony, notwithstanding Mueller's damning statements bulleted above, Mr. Trump claimed a complete victory, charging (as often before) that the investigation had been a "hoax" and a "witch hunt," mischaracterizing Mueller's testimony on points he found threatening, and – true to his orientation as an entertainer – blasting Mueller for "one of the worst performances in the history of our country." He also viciously tweeted that the testimony was "a disaster for the Democrats and a disaster for the reputation of Robert Mueller." When a Fox News commentator asked Mr. Trump about the Justice Department's Russia investigations generally, he called them "treason" and "high crimes." When a reporter asked him whether he was worried about the possibility of a post-presidency indictment, he called the person "fake news."<sup>49</sup> On July 27, Mr. Trump was still at it, tweeting about the "Witch Hunt Hoax," the "sick and disgusting" Democrats, and Mueller's "ineptitude and incompetence."	7, 9, 11

7-26-19, 8-16-19, 8-28-19	Fox as turncoat. By way of Twitter, on July 26 Trump again cast Fox News as a turncoat for objectively reporting on him – this time for publishing its new poll results showing that voters widely favored Democratic presidential contender Joe Biden over him. When on August 16 Fox reported that any one of four Democratic contenders would beat Mr. Trump in 2020, he again attacked Fox.<sup>50</sup> On August 28, he attacked Fox yet again, now for failing to sufficiently chastise Democrats, tweeting, "We have to start looking for a new News Outlet. Fox isn't working for us anymore!"<sup>51</sup>	1
7-26-19 +	The Guatemala deal. Under threat of punitive tariffs, on July 26 the Trump administration forced the outgoing Guatemalan government to sign an agreement pursuant to which migrants from El Salvador and Honduras could seek – and would have to be granted – asylum in Guatemala in the course of passing northward through that country; and if they failed to do so, U.S. border authorities could send them back to Guatemala, which the Trump administration had now characterized as a "safe" country. Because Guatemala is in fact not safe, such that even many of its own citizens had been seeking asylum in the U.S., the agreement likely violated American and international asylum law.<sup>52</sup> Indeed on August 13 the newly elected Guatemalan president withdrew from the agreement, stating that he couldn't even protect Guatemalans, let alone other nationals.<sup>53</sup>	6, 14
7-27-19, 8-3-19 +	Selecting one's terrorists: El Paso, Portland. On July 27, Mr. Trump tweeted his support for a pending Republican resolution in the Senate that would designate the sometimes violent Antifa (a loose collection of ad hoc, anti-fascist protestors) as a domestic "terror" organization for purposes of law enforcement; and he did this while remaining silent about the surge in white supremacist violence under his watch. Antifa had not yet killed anyone. White supremacists had recently killed dozens across multiple incidents.<sup>54</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 17 (6)

7-27-19, 8-3-19 +	[Continued.] In fact on August 3, a white nationalist perpetrated a mass murder targeting Hispanics in El Paso, Texas. Mr. Trump initially and instinctively responded by condemning "the Media," "Fake News" and "hate" for the crime, but not white nationalist violence or domestic terrorism. Many critics in turn condemned Mr. Trump's anti-immigrant demagoguery as having seeded the atrocity.<sup>55</sup> Breathtaking listings of Mr. Trump's previous racially-themed, incendiary rhetoric and actions quickly appeared in The Washington Post and The New York Times.<sup>56</sup> On August 5, Mr. Trump delivered a more formal and "presidential" condemnation of the massacre and of racism and white supremacy in general, and he called for unity to replace division within the country. But he did so without any acknowledgement of, or any indication that he would discontinue, his incendiary tweets and rally speeches.<sup>57</sup> And he read the address from a teleprompter, in a passionless, stilted and uncomfortable manner ... resembling, CSD believed, a forced and inauthentic public confession by a prisoner of war – much as he had done when (temporarily) repudiating white supremacists after their Charlottesville, Virginia protest march in 2017. True to form, on August 7, as he had done following the Charlottesville repudiation, Mr. Trump reverted. He deflected a reporter's question about white supremacists, equated all hate groups one to the next, and specifically denounced Antifa only.<sup>58</sup> Traveling to El Paso that day to comfort hospitalized victims (immediately after doing the same in Dayton, Ohio, another recent mass shooting site), he lashed out both at the news media and at Dayton's mayor and an Ohio senator who had criticized his divisive rhetoric. In El Paso, most of the hospitalized victims refused to meet with him (possibly an unprecedented rebuff of a president by crime victims); and many in the community protested his presence. (As chronicled above in this document, it was Mr. Trump's third unwelcome and inflammatory visit during his presidency to largely Hispanic El Paso.) [Continued below.]	1, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 17 (6)
------------------------------	--	--------------------------------------

7-27-19, 8-3-19 +	[Continued.] Still, Mr. Trump claimed afterwards that he had been met with "love" and "respect"; also that the "Fake News" was treating him unfairly.<sup>59</sup> In a graphic display of his self-absorption and inability to empathize with others' anguish, at the El Paso hospital he was filmed boasting to a group of first responders about his crowd sizes and disparaging a 2020 presidential election rival.<sup>60</sup> He also posed for photos while grinning and giving a "thumbs up" amid scenes of the tragedy.<sup>61</sup> White House aides shortly admitted that the Dayton and El Paso visits together amounted to a narcissistic "debacle."<sup>62</sup> Meanwhile, after being lashed by Mr. Trump, Dayton's mayor received a string of hate-filled and threatening messages such that she had to increase her security protections.<sup>63</sup> Ironically, although Mr. Trump declined to take any responsibility for the El Paso rampage, in the midst of the imbroglio news media reported, on August 5, that the defense attorneys for Cesar Sayoc – the Trump devotee convicted of sending pipe bombs to numerous Democratic figures in 2018 – had argued that Sayoc deserved a lenient sentence precisely because Mr. Trump's rhetoric had contributed to Sayoc's violent animus.<sup>64</sup> On August 14, ABC News reported that in 36 criminal cases nationally defendants had explicitly invoked Mr. Trump as their reason for violence or threats of violence; and that of those, 29 had been Trump supporters. Most of the perpetrators were white men, and most of the victims were religious, racial or gender minorities. ABC could not find any criminal records inspired by other recent presidents.<sup>65</sup> On August 17, in anticipation of a white nationalist march in Portland, Oregon, Mr. Trump again threatened to designate Antifa as a domestic terror organization, and again without commenting on the often violent white nationalists whom Antifa was expected to confront.<sup>66</sup> (A chilling photo of the hulking, gloating, defiant white nationalists at the Portland march appears at the link at this end note.<sup>67</sup>) On August 20, yet another incident arose: a neo-Nazi who was an avid Trump supporter was arrested for planning to massacre Hispanics in Miami.<sup>68</sup>	1, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 17 (6)
------------------------------	---	--------------------------------------

7-27-19 +	Rodents. On July 27, Mr. Trump Twitter-attacked Elijah Cummings, the African American congressman who chairs the House Oversight Committee and who had been aggressively investigating him on myriad counts and criticizing him for the suffering of migrants at the Mexican border. He wrote that Cummings's majority-black Baltimore district was a “disgusting, rat and rodent infested mess” and a "very dangerous and filthy place" where “no human being would want to live.” Mr. Trump contrasted the city to American detention facilities and practices at the border, which he described as “clean, efficient &amp; well run, just very crowded” – thus overlooking the many well-documented cases of personal distress occurring at the border, particularly among detained children. In addition, without evidence, he deflected Cummings's critiques of his policies and practices by accusing the Baltimore government (and seemingly Cummings himself) of massive corruption. Mr. Trump's information appeared, not atypically, to have been drawn from programming that he had just watched on Fox News. It also appeared to reflect his pampered, entitled, supercilious and racially insulated worldview and his admitted germophobia. Indeed his using the word "infested" to describe minority communities was not the first time he had so dehumanized the ethnic objects of his scorn – a rhetorical mechanism historically used by other demagogues worldwide. He meanwhile had initially expressed no sympathy for Baltimore's troubles or any desire to help its people. Rather, he had sought merely to defend, blame, disparage and divide.<sup>69</sup> On July 28, facing intense media backlash for the previous day's episodes, Mr. Trump once again by way of Twitter projected onto others his own deficiencies, calling Cummings (and Democrats generally) divisive racists who had done nothing to help African Americans while "wasting time on the Witch Hunt Hoax." On July 29 he tweeted further attacks on Baltimore, Cummings and (ad hominem) the African American activist Al Sharpton, who was protesting Mr. Trump's comments. On July 30 he again targeted Baltimore, Cummings and Sharpton, just after a ceremony in Jamestown, Virginia celebrating democracy. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 10, 11

7-27-19 +	[Continued.] Earlier that day Mr. Trump had preposterously told reporters, "I am the least racist person there is anywhere in the world. What I've done for African-Americans in two and a half years, no president has been able to do anything like it." He also dubiously said that he had received large numbers of letters and calls from African Americans praising his attacks on Baltimore's corruption. "The African American people have been calling the White House. They have never been so happy as [sic] what a president has done. They're so happy that I pointed out the corrupt politics of Baltimore. It's filthy, dirty. It's so horrible, and they are happy as hell." In fact polling data indicated that 80% of African Americans viewed Mr. Trump as a racist.<sup>70</sup> On August 2, in a tweet, he mocked Baltimore and Cummings by pointing to an attempted burglary at Cummings's home.<sup>71</sup>	6, 7, 9, 10, 11
7-28-19 +	Experts leaving; sycophants rising. On July 28, Dan Coats – the Director of National Intelligence who had long attempted to check Mr. Trump on the latter's wild disregard for objective intelligence operations and reporting – announced his resignation. Mr. Trump promptly announced that he would replace Coats with Congressman John Ratcliffe: a man with no background in intelligence gathering, and a highly partisan accomplice in Mr. Trump's mugging of the reputation of our intelligence agencies and in his pursuit of perceived enemies and conspiracies within the Justice Department. Critics termed Ratcliffe colossally unqualified, and the nomination an attempt by Mr. Trump not just to politicize the DNI position but to use it as an instrument to crush his political enemies.<sup>72</sup> On July 30, Mr. Trump admitted his goal. He told reporters that he wanted Ratcliffe to "rein in" the various intelligence agencies under him that had "run amok." "Running amok" presumably referred to investigating Russian support of Mr. Trump's 2016 presidential candidacy, investigating Russian plans to interfere in the 2020 election, and disagreeing with Mr. Trump in assessing security situations relative to North Korea, Saudi Arabia, Afghanistan, Iran, and the Islamic State.<sup>73</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 9, 13

7-28-19 +	[Continued.] Ratcliffe was then revealed to have falsely claimed on his resume as a federal prosecutor to have investigated and imprisoned terrorists and to have rounded up undocumented migrants.<sup>74</sup> On August 2, confronted with bipartisan congressional resistance to the nomination, Mr. Trump abruptly withdrew it, and he blamed the media.<sup>75</sup> On August 9, he removed Coats's deputy, Sue Gordon, from office, and he named Joseph Maguire as acting DNI in her stead. Gordon was a career intelligence officer; Maguire was not, and he was seen by critics as likely more pliable than Gordon.<sup>76</sup>	1, 9, 13
7-29-19	Corrupt nuclear sales to Saudi. The House Oversight Committee issued a report revealing that the Trump administration's secret and repeated transfers of nuclear technology to Saudi Arabia between 2017 and 2019 had corruptly advanced certain corporate interests without regard to America's security interests.<sup>77</sup> The transfers also violated federal rules requiring that Congress be advised of such transactions.<sup>78</sup>	17 (9, 15)
7-29-19 +	The Fed: I never get enough. On July 29 Mr. Trump, in two separate tweets, demanded that the Federal Reserve Board lower interest rates – thus continuing his unprecedented, months-long attempt to control and politicize the Fed's independent decision-making. In fact he had sent more than a dozen similar tweets since formally announcing his candidacy for re-election in June. The clear implication was that he wanted to gin up the economy's short-term performance in time for the 2020 election, at the risk of its longer-term economic health; or failing that, to be able to blame the Fed for any economic slow-down prior to the election.<sup>79</sup> On July 31, the Fed did lower interest rates slightly, in part due to worldwide economic risks that Mr. Trump's trade wars themselves had unleashed.<sup>80</sup> But on many days following, Mr. Trump complained that the rate cut wasn't steep enough.<sup>81</sup> On August 19 he went so far as to tweet the exact degree of interest rate reduction he sought, to chastise Fed chair Jerome Powell for a "horrendous lack of vision," and to blame Democrats for trying to sabotage the economy for political purposes.<sup>82</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 10

7-29-19 +	[Continued.] Then in a new twist, on August 18, amid increasingly common expressions of concerns by the financial community that the U.S. and global economies could be headed for recession, and amid the associated American stock market gyrations, Mr. Trump blamed the American press for attempting to engineer a recession as a means of subverting him.<sup>83</sup> On August 21, in a string of tweets he again blamed the press for attempted sabotage and the Fed for incompetence. On August 27 he tweeted that the Fed delighted in manufacturers' struggles, and on August 28 he tweeted that the Fed (Powell?) was "mentally unfit" to enable the U.S. to compete with other countries.<sup>84</sup> Although most economists were blaming Mr. Trump's tariffs at least in part for the potential downturn, he had never acknowledged that. Rather, after having long faulted the Fed, then Democrats, and finally the press for a potential recession, through the haze of his own erratic statements he now appeared to CSD to see in his rhetorical tactic a win-win: that he could ride to re-election on his laurels if the economy flowered, and ride on demagoguery if it tanked.	1, 7, 9, 10
7-31-19	Humiliating our war crimes prosecutors. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump revoked commendatory medals that had been given to a group of Navy prosecutors who had recently lost a war crimes trial of a Navy SEAL.<sup>85</sup> (See CSD's entry of July 3, 2019.) Humiliating those prosecutors and the Navy command above them seemed to CSD likely to terrorize military prosecutors generally and to chill future war crimes courts martial. The episode occurred only days after the SEALs' top officer had directed his commanders to address systemic discipline and ethics problems within the unit.<sup>86</sup>	9, 11, 14
8-1-19	Out for Amazon. Shortly before the Defense Department was expected to award a very large cloud computing contract, Mr. Trump intervened in the procurement process so as to prevent the contract's award to Amazon – a company he despised because its owner, Jeff Bezos, was wealthier than he, and also owned Mr. Trump's persistent critic, The Washington Post (as described often above in this Chronology).<sup>87</sup>	9, 11

8-1-19	In Ohio. At a campaign rally in Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Trump pointedly avoided a repeat of the "Send her back!" chants that had recently been directed toward Somali-American Congresswoman Ilhan Omar. Instead he just as pointedly elicited a repeat of the "Lock her up!" attacks on his former electoral rival Hillary Clinton. He goaded, "Crooked Hillary. She is a crooked one. She's crooked. She is crooked," and the crowd's response followed.<sup>88</sup> CSD wondered if a Trump entertainment spectacle could now be complete without the figurative savaging of a woman, as at an ancient Roman circus or the Salem witch trials. At the rally, Mr. Trump boasted repeatedly about the crowd size; also about America having the largest economy in the world, as though that were his doing (it had been the largest since 1871); also that "America is not being pushed around anymore" (mentioning nothing about continuing Russian election interference – although, after all, that was happening essentially by his invitation). In addition, he mocked special prosecutor Robert Mueller's recent congressional testimony; reiterated his continuing falsehood that China (rather than American consumers) were paying the tariffs he had imposed on imports from that country; falsely said that Democrats "want virtual immunity for illegal aliens who have committed horrible crimes and murder, horrible crimes and murder"; falsely said that the current visa lottery system awards immigration status to murderer after murderer; and questionably said that he would soon be ending AIDs and curing childhood cancer. He also elicited excited jeers when he slammed the "fake news." In an increasingly familiar theme pitting his largely white and non-urban base against diverse and liberal urbanites – while ignoring the robust renaissance of nearly every American city as corporate employers and educated young people were flocking to them – he blamed the poverty and crime in Baltimore and other named cities on privileged but corrupt Democrats having stolen all the money.<sup>89</sup> He as usual referred to campaign rival Elizabeth Warren as "Pocahontas," and without irony he claimed that she was "lying and cheating her way to the presidency."<sup>90</sup> He also said, "No matter what label they use, a vote for any Democrat in 2020 is a vote for the rise of radical socialism and the destruction of our great, our beautiful, our wonderful American dream."<sup>91</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9
---------------	---	-------------------

8-4-19	Golf, anyone? The cumulative cost to taxpayers of Mr. Trump's golf outings (much of which had been paid to his own golf resorts, where he would stay) was reported to have reached $110,000,000 in 2-1/2 years. The sum was larger than the total eight-year cost of President Obama's golf outings, which Mr. Trump had bitterly campaigned against while promising to never himself play golf as president. <sup>92</sup>	11, 15
8-7-19	Nixing foreign assistance. On August 7, the Trump administration froze foreign aid expenditures that Congress had appropriated for the rest of the September 30 fiscal year, including for development assistance, global health, contributions to international organizations, international narcotics control and peacekeeping activities. The move unlawfully defied Congress's appropriations powers while capriciously defunding programs that advanced America's international goodwill and security. <sup>93</sup> Following a bipartisan outcry in Congress, two days later the administration temporarily halted the freeze. <sup>94</sup> As of August 20 the administration appeared to still be considering imposing it (the freeze), notwithstanding congressional objections. <sup>95</sup> But on August 22 it gave up the ghost. <sup>96</sup>	9, 10, 13, 14
8-8-19	Draining the experts, not the swamp. A Washington Post columnist summarized how, despite Mr. Trump's campaign pledge to "drain the swamp" in Washington, he and his aides had in fact been persistently growing the swamp (appointing business insiders to regulatory positions, indulging self-dealing by cabinet members, receiving Trump hotel revenues from petitioners, etc.) while actually draining his agencies of scientific and other subject matter experts – most recently at the Agriculture Department, as reported by CSD on June 13. <sup>97</sup>	17 (8, 15)
8-8-19 +	Foreign service officer resigns. On August 8, Chuck Park, a mid-level foreign service officer, publicly resigned from the State Department by way of a column he wrote in The Washington Post. He was protesting how Mr. Trump's racism and cruelty to migrants and minorities had made it difficult for him, as a diplomat, to espouse traditional American values overseas. <sup>98</sup> [ Continued below. ]	6, 10, 13

8-8-19 +	[[Continued.] It was a radical move for an American diplomat. The following evening, in a televised CNN interview, Park elaborated. He said that the Trump administration was distinguishable for its "naked unapologetic cruelty" and "sheer managerial incompetence." He also said that Mr. Trump often tweeted ideas that contradicted talking points that diplomatic staff had been tasked with espousing, or took actions without having forewarned diplomatic staff – all of which made it difficult to conduct diplomacy, and which drew ridicule from foreign diplomats.<sup>99</sup> On August 26, in a column in The New York Times, another foreign service officer – Bethany Milton – similarly announced her resignation in print, scoring Mr. Trump for his "worldview characterized by bigotry, fear and small-minded chauvinism," which she wrote made it difficult for our diplomats to advance a favorable view of our country abroad.<sup>100</sup>	6, 10, 13
8-9-19	Hiring the undocumented. The Washington Post reported that despite Mr. Trump's continuous railing against undocumented migrants, and despite the previous year's revelations that Mr. Trump's company itself had consistently staffed its resorts with undocumented migrants (which crime the company had then claimed it had fixed), a construction unit of the company was still knowingly relying upon undocumented labor.<sup>101</sup> Journalists quickly raised questions as to whether Mr. Trump's company was the subject of an Immigration and Customs Enforcement investigation; if not, why not; and whether the Trump administration's general failure to prosecute illegal employers as well as migrants could evidence a nod to Mr. Trump's personal interests.<sup>102</sup>	15; Criminal hiring; hypocrisy of the highest order
8-9-19	Squeezing the immigration judges. The Trump administration moved to decertify the labor union that represents the nation's immigration judges and that had been critical of Mr. Trump's treatment of the judges and of asylum due process.<sup>103</sup> CSD saw unlawful retaliation in the move.	2, 17 (9)

8-9-19 +	Still loving Kim. On August 9, Mr. Trump boasted of having just received a "very beautiful letter" from North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un. Hours later, for the second time in a week, North Korea test-fired several projectiles, in protest of joint military exercises between the U.S. and South Korea. Mr. Trump took Kim's side. He said that the U.S. exercises were "ridiculous and expensive" (although the Pentagon felt they were necessary). He also maintained that North Korea's continued test firings had not violated U.N. resolutions (although South Korea and analysts had disagreed). Meanwhile, denuclearization talks with North Korea had completely stalled since Mr. Trump's hyperbolic promotion of his meetings with, and his "love" for, Kim.<sup>104</sup> On August 16, North Korea launched two more projectiles, for which analysts believed Mr. Trump had effectively given the green light.<sup>105</sup>	7, 12
8-9-19, 8-11-19	Schoolboy-in-chief. On August 9, at an event for wealthy donors in The Hamptons, New York, Mr. Trump mocked the accent of South Korean leader Moon-Jae-in while describing how Mr. Trump had crushed him in negotiations. He also mocked the accent of Japanese leader Shinzo Abe. And he reiterated his profession of love for North Korean leader Kim Jong-un.<sup>106</sup> On August 11, Mr. Trump tweeted an astonishingly petty, humiliating and boastful broadside against a cable news critic and one-time guest on Mr. Trump's television show "The Apprentice" – provided here in full so as to convey the depths of Mr. Trump's vanity, his self-absorption, and his debasement of the office of the presidency: "So funny to watch Little Donny Deutsch on TV with his own failing show. When I did The Apprentice, Donny would call me (along with @ErinBurnett &amp; others) and BEG to be on that VERY successful show. He had the TV 'bug' &amp; I would let him come on though he (&amp; Erin) had very little...TV talent. Then, during the 2016 Election, I would watch as Joe Scarborough &amp; his very angry Psycho wife(?) would push Donny to the point of total humiliation. He would never fight back because he wanted to stay on TV, even on a very low rated show, all in the name of ambition!"	6, 10, 11, 12, 13

8-10-19	Epstein death conspiracy. Hard on the news of the prison suicide of Jeffrey Epstein –a serial child molester and Mr. Trump's former party friend – Mr. Trump re-tweeted others' postings suggesting that fellow former-Epstein friend President Bill Clinton had conspired to murder Epstein.<sup>107</sup> The insinuation represented a baseless continuation of Mr. Trump's propagation of false and inflammatory conspiracy theories, unprecedented for an American president<sup>108</sup>; and in this instance a demagogic deflection of Mr. Trump's own tawdry social association with Epstein into the laps of some of his favorite whipping dogs, the Clintons.	7, 9, 11
8-12-19	Fact Checker. The Washington Post's Fact Check reported that Mr. Trump had made over 12,000 false or misleading claims during his presidency, now (with election season approaching) averaging 20 per day.<sup>109</sup>	7
8-13-19	Whites only. Kenneth Cuccinelli, the acting director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, supported Mr. Trump's newly proposed merit-based immigration overhaul regulation by stating that the famous Emma Lazarus poem ("Give me your tired, your poor ...") at the base of the Statue of Liberty was intended to welcome only immigrants who would not become public charges – that is, who would not need or seek government support. He later doubled-down by implying that the poem was intended to welcome only European immigrants.<sup>110</sup> CSD acknowledges that during the course of U.S. history immigration laws have often favored Europeans; that at times "public charge" restrictions have applied; and that some other developed countries impose education and other merit criteria on immigration. But the new immigration proposal clearly would operate to exclude brown people<sup>111</sup>; and it thus dovetailed with Mr. Trump's broad, cynical, divisive and anachronistic history of reviling certain races and nurturing racial animosities.	17 (6)

8-13-19	Cuomo. Mr. Trump laced into CNN commentator and Trump critic Chris Cuomo for Cuomo's off-hours explosion at a right-wing heckler who had been taunting him in a bar, and who had apparently set up the altercation to be videotaped. (The videotape had been publicly released the previous evening). Among other things, the heckler had referred to Cuomo as "Fredo," an inept Mafia character in "The Godfather" novel and movie, which Cuomo took as an ethnic slur, and Cuomo threatened to throw the man down the stairs. Mr. Trump tweeted and told reporters that Cuomo was an "animal," "nuts," "filthy," and a liar. He even tweeted, "I thought Chris was Fredo also."<sup>112</sup> On cue, the Trump re-election campaign promptly launched the sale of T-shirts bearing the phrase "Fredo unhinged."<sup>113</sup>	1, 6, 11
8-13-19	In Pennsylvania, again. Appearing at a chemical plant in Monaca, Pennsylvania to speak about energy policy – an event which the company paid its workers overtime to attend<sup>114</sup> – Mr. Trump (at taxpayer expense) conducted a campaign rally: blasting Democratic rivals President Obama, Hillary Clinton, Elizabeth Warren ("Pocahontas") and Joseph Biden ("Sleepy Joe"); complaining about his financial sacrifices as president ("$5 billion") and his treatment by the news media; boasting about his skills as a builder, his claim to having boosted Pennsylvania's economy, his 2016 electoral victories in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, his 2020 re-election prospects, and his having deployed 27,000 troops to the Mexican border; rhapsodizing about his lifelong love of trucks (although he may never have driven one) and about the size of industrial workers' hands (CSD won't go there); disparaging the low television ratings of the Academy Awards and attributing that to the celebrities' aversion to himself and to blue collar workers; demanding that union workers vote their leadership out of office if they don't support his re-election; and telling numerous falsehoods.<sup>115</sup>	1, 7, 9, 11
8-14-19	Hunting for profit. Politico reported that Secret Service agents had stayed at a Trump hotel in Vancouver on multiple occasions when accompanying Mr. Trump's children on hunting and business trips – enriching Mr. Trump by thousands of dollars, at government expense.<sup>116</sup>	11, 15

8-15-19	Hong Kong? No Problem. The New York Times recapped Mr. Trump's continuing refusal to support Hong Kong's two-month-long pro-democracy protests in the face of China's attempt to impose its authoritarian reach over that open society. Mr. Trump was opposed in his silence by leading Democrats, Republicans and administration officials. Undeterred, and without obvious knowledge, he said that if Chinese leader Xi Jinping (a "great leader" in whom he "had a lot of confidence") would meet with protest leaders, "things could be worked out pretty easily."<sup>117</sup>	12, 13, 14
8-15-19	Harassment at State. The State Department's inspector general issued a report detailing the illegal harassment and punishment of career staff who were perceived as being disloyal to the Trump administration's agenda.<sup>118</sup>	17 (9)
8-15-19	In New Hampshire: "Built on Love." At a campaign rally in Manchester, New Hampshire, Mr. Trump told his supporters that Democratic victories in 2020 would destroy the economy and their 401(k) retirement accounts. He boasted about the economy, his past electoral performance, and what he said was a likely cure for AIDs on his watch. As in Pennsylvania two days before, he mercilessly attacked and mocked his rivals Hillary Clinton (the "Lock her up!" chanting ensued), Elizabeth Warren ("Pocahontas") and Joseph Biden ("Sleepy Joe"). He also mercilessly mocked and commandingly directed the removal of a man in the crowd whom he took to be a protestor and whom he savaged for being overweight (?!). Directly after the man's removal he said that the Trump campaign was "built on love."<sup>119</sup> Although the attendees seemed to be in Mr. Trump's thrall, whether they believed (or even wanted) the "love" part wasn't reported.	4, 9, 11

8-15-19, 8-20-19+	Banned in Israel. At Mr. Trump's urging, the Israeli government banned two Muslim American members of Congress who were highly critical of Israel – Ilhan Omar and Rashida Tlaib – from entering that country. Both women are Democrats whom Mr. Trump had relentlessly and demagogically attacked some weeks previously for their political views and their immigrant heritage. (See CSD's entry of July 14 +, above.) Mr. Trump's action regarding Israel not only undercut the prerogatives of Congress but wrongfully deployed presidential power overseas to injure his domestic enemies, to sow divisions within the Democratic party, to boost his own electoral fortunes, and/or to influence upcoming Israeli elections. In urging a foreign state to interfere in the American political process, it also echoed his previous urging of Russia, during his 2016 election campaign, to interfere in that election – both firsts for an American president. The new development drew sharp criticism not only from Democrats but from a number of prominent Republicans and major, pro-Israel American Jewish organizations. But it also, by his design, further polarized the American electorate, including the Jewish American piece of that.<sup>120</sup> In fact on August 20, Mr. Trump said that any Jewish Americans who now vote for Democrats – because of Omar's and Tlaib's anti-Zionism and alleged anti-Semitism – would demonstrate "either a total lack of knowledge or great disloyalty" – thus raising a storm. The next day he repeated the charge, clarifying that he meant disloyalty to the Jewish people and to Israel. In sum, he effectively suggested that the majority of American Jews were ignorant and that they should feel a loyalty to Israel. American Jewish organizations did not appear to be troubled by the allegations of Jewish ignorance (coming as they did from Mr. Trump). But they expressed outrage that he would dabble with questions of Jewish loyalty toward another government, given historical anti-Semitic tropes in that regard.<sup>121</sup> Others saw in the dust-up Mr. Trump's primitive and insulting concepts of ethnicity, his delusional views that most Jewish Americans were single-issue (pro-Israel voters), and his apparent assumption that he could buy their affection by going over-the-top for Israel.<sup>122</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 9, 11
------------------------------	--	-----------------

8-15-19, 8-20-19+	[Continued.] But back to the banning of the congresswomen: An analysis in The Washington Post placed the episode more generally within the context of Mr. Trump's style of governing: "By pressuring the Israeli government to bar entry by two members of Congress, President Trump once again used the power and platform of his office to punish his political rivals. It's a pattern that has intensified during the first two and a half years of Trump's presidency, as he has increasingly governed to the tune of his grievances. The president has grounded a military jet set for use by the Democratic House speaker, yanked a security clearance from a former CIA director critical of him, threatened to withhold disaster aid from states led by Democrats, pushed to reopen a criminal investigation targeting Hillary Clinton and publicly called for federal action to punish technology and media companies he views as biased against him. Taken as a whole, Trump's use of political power to pursue personal vendettas is unprecedented in modern history."<sup>123</sup>	6, 9, 11
8-20-19	Russia, come back! Mr. Trump said that he would like to see Russia readmitted to the Group of 7 (formerly, with Russia, the Group of 8) – a continuing forum for the world's largest advanced economies, consisting of France, Italy, the U.S., Japan, Germany, Canada and the U.K. Russia had been evicted from the group in 2014 for having annexed Crimea.<sup>124</sup>	12
8-20-19	Tax chaos. Confronting widespread concerns that the economy was cooling, within a period of days Mr. Trump expressed both concern about and confidence in it (the economy). His office denied that he was considering cutting payroll taxes as a preventative, then he said he was considering such cuts, then he said he was no longer considering them. He also said that he could unilaterally cut capital gains taxes, which would principally benefit the wealthy, and which in truth required an act of Congress.<sup>125</sup>	9, 10

8-20-19 +	Buying Greenland. Four days after The Wall Street Journal revealed that Mr. Trump was thinking of asking Denmark if the U.S. could buy its territory Greenland, and two days after the Danish government dismissed the idea as "absurd," on August 20 Mr. Trump, by Twitter, canceled an upcoming state visit to Denmark – a NATO ally – on grounds that Denmark wouldn't sell. He had not previously told the Danes that the purpose of his trip was to buy Greenland.<sup>126</sup> The next day he called the Danish prime minister "nasty" and slammed Denmark for what he considered to be its inadequate level of financial support for NATO. Danish lawmakers found his intentions and remarks to be juvenile, undiplomatic and insulting.<sup>127</sup> No modern president had done anything like any of that before. The media lit up with protests about Mr. Trump's ignorance of history, protocol and the respective worldviews of the people of Denmark and Greenland (the latter mostly indigenous people whom Mr. Trump would ordinarily disdain). It also brimmed with speculations as to reasons for the cancellation and for Mr. Trump's rage: seeing an excuse to spend less time in Europe; having planned to visit Denmark principally to tender the offer and now having no reason to visit; seeking an excuse to bash NATO members; fearing protests and humiliation on the ground in Denmark, in advance of an adulatory reception that President Obama was expected to receive there shortly afterwards; or merely retaliating impulsively for a perceived slight and for the international mockery that Mr. Trump's proposal had already incurred (his staff reportedly did not know in advance that he would be cancelling the trip) – none of that having to do with advancing America's national interests.<sup>128</sup> The New York Times' editorial board wrote: "That the president of the United States would demonstrate such willful ignorance of how the world works, that he would treat a territory and its independent people like goods and chattel, that he would so readily damage relations with an old and important ally out of petty pique, is frightening."<sup>129</sup> For its part, CSD had no doubt that Mr. Trump had seen something for himself, post-presidency, in the proposed purchase – what he had characterized as "essentially ... a large real estate deal" – and that he was miffed at the loss of a personal opportunity.	10, 11, 13, 15

8-21-19	The end of birthright? Mr. Trump said that with a simple executive order he could end the doctrine of birthright citizenship, so as to deprive that right to the children of migrants who are born here. His doing so would violate a right that – forever and near-universally in the U.S. – had been viewed as guaranteed by the Constitution.<sup>130</sup>	6, 9
8-21-19	President for life. Mr. Trump told reporters that he might stay in the White House for an additional 10 or 14 years; that is, in violation of the Constitution. He had now repeated that speculation multiple times, and less and less jokingly.<sup>131</sup>	9
8-22-19	Friends at Fox. Mr. Trump's former press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders became the third high-ranking Trump communications official to join Fox News or its corporate parent after leaving the White House, thus further cementing the unprecedented symbiosis between a private news network and the presidency.<sup>132</sup> As described previously in this Chronology, the door had revolved in many directions, in that numerous Fox alumni had also come to work for Mr. Trump in the White House; Mr. Trump had looked to Fox commentators for daily political advice; Mr. Trump drew much of his information and inspiration in real time from Fox televised commentary; and Mr. Trump and Fox each infected the other with consistently paranoid, divisive and fact-challenged views. CSD saw in the symbiosis not only the cultivation of a dangerously state-affiliated media outlet and an instrument for Mr. Trump's rabid demagoguery, leadership cult and double-think, but a future profit center (somehow) for Mr. Trump as a private citizen.	9, 15
8-23-29 +	Enemies. Referring to thunderclouds over the country's economic horizon, on August 23 Mr. Trump tweeted, "My only question is, who is our bigger enemy, Jay Powel [sic] or Chairman Xi?" After having battered and intruded upon the independence of Federal Reserve chairman Jerome Powell for months, Mr. Trump compared him to China's dictator (with whom Mr. Trump was in a trade war), now finally identifying Powell as an American enemy for having not lowered interest rates at Mr. Trump's behest. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11, 15

8-23-29 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump also tweeted, “Our great American companies are hereby ordered to immediately start looking for an alternative to China, including bringing your companies HOME and making your products in the USA.” That directive likewise was well beyond his authority. The stock market dropped 600 points.<sup>133</sup> Doubling-down in the face of outrage, Mr. Trump subsequently argued that he had the "absolute right" to give the order, under the Emergency Economic Powers Act of 1977.<sup>134</sup> (He had often – as in the case of his border wall – claimed or threatened to exercise extraordinary powers on grounds of national "emergencies," much as other authoritarian leaders routinely have done.) On August 24, The Washington Post reported that if the Fed continued to lower interest rates (as Mr. Trump was insisting), he stood to save millions of dollars per year on a number of variable-rate loans owed by his real estate and resort businesses.<sup>135</sup>	9, 10, 11, 15
8-24-19 - 8-26-19	With the G-7, redux. Mr. Trump joined the other leaders of the Group of 7 – an association of highly industrialized nations – at their annual meeting in Biarritz, France. At the previous year's meeting, he had been radically hostile and incendiary (see CSD's entry of June 8, 2018 +). But this year, despite being at odds with Mr. Trump (regarding trade, Iran, North Korea, Russia and climate change), the other attendees were reportedly careful to flatter him; he said he was "treated beautifully" by them; and he did not publicly make a scene – in part because the group forewent attempting to issue a joint closing communiqué, which Mr. Trump had blown up the previous year and which he seemed prepared to blow up again.<sup>136</sup> Still he did raise eyebrows: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He admitted to having had "second thoughts" about his trade war with China, thus instantly affecting global financial markets; but then his Washington staff quickly denied any change of heart; and he himself, within hours, reversed by saying he wished he had imposed even higher tariffs on China. Accompanying that volatility were his alternating expressions of demonization of Chinese President Xi Jinping (the "enemy") and beatification of him (a "great leader" and a "brilliant man.")<sup>137</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15

8-24-19 - 8-26-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He announced that next year's G-7 meeting, scheduled to be in the U.S., would likely be held at his own (financially struggling and physically insecure) Doral golf resort in Miami. He publicly and brazenly advertised the qualities of the Doral, and he claimed that after his staff had conducted a nationwide search for a suitable venue they just happened to determine that the Doral would be the very best. But in truth convening the conference at the Doral would earn him millions in foreign emoluments, in defiance of the Constitution. In addition, the attendance by foreign leaders would amount to his forcing them (as well as U.S. taxpayers) to line his pockets. He reportedly had been pursuing the idea for months, despite his advisors' contrary advice, on ethical grounds.<sup>138</sup></li> <li>• As he had done the previous year, he suggested that Russian President Vladimir Putin be re-admitted to the group (formerly the "Group of 8") despite having been evicted after seizing Crimea from Ukraine, and he said that he would personally invite Putin to attend next year.<sup>139</sup></li> <li>• He disagreed with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe as to whether North Korea's recent missile tests had violated its stand-still agreement with Mr. Trump. (Mr. Trump, dubiously, said that they didn't.)</li> <li>• He skipped the session on Brazilian forest fires and climate change, as he had skipped the previous year's climate change session.<sup>140</sup></li> <li>• At a press conference following the close, he said, "I love the UK. I own great property in the UK." He then explicitly advertised his golf resorts in Scotland and in Ireland (which is not in the UK). Also, when dodging a question about climate change, he (preposterously) professed to be "an environmentalist"; in the same breath he bragged about his support for oil pipelines; and he said, "I think I know more about the environment than most people," because as a builder he had filed many environmental impact statements (presumably to game the environmental laws for personal profit – which is a perfunctory part of many builders' operations).<sup>141</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15
------------------------------	--	---

8-24-19 - 8-26-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>At the same press conference, Mr. Trump reprised his incessant disparagement of President Obama,<sup>142</sup> which (to CSD's understanding owed to his jealousy of the latter's literacy, cultural sophistication, ethical soundness and ongoing popularity. Specifically, he charged that Putin had "embarrassed" and "outsmarted" his predecessor when seizing Crimea. Those remarks followed at least a dozen other attacks on President Obama during the conference, and they advanced Mr. Trump's persistent projection onto President Obama that President Obama, not Mr. Trump, had been soft on Russia. They also continued Mr. Trump's habit of breaching American presidential protocol by criticizing his political opponents while overseas.<sup>143</sup></li> <li>His public comments about the conference – who was friendly with whom, who had agreed with whom, who had communicated with whom (including his claim that his wife Melania had come to know North Korean leader Kim Jong-un) – were otherwise filled with trivial but patent falsehoods.<sup>144</sup></li> </ul> Reportedly bored, Mr. Trump also found time during the conference to tweet birthday greetings to several American entertainment celebrities, to re-tweet false far-right conspiracy theories about some of his Democratic rivals, and to repeatedly bash the American press.<sup>145</sup>	1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15
8-27-19	Blessing the Amazon forest fires. Mr. Trump praised Jair Bolsonaro, the proto-fascist leader of Brazil, after the latter had rejected foreign offers of assistance in combating the raging forest fires that threatened to destroy the Amazon ecosystem and the human race's ability to survive.<sup>146</sup>	12, 17 (8)
8-27-19	Merry Christmas to me! The Washington Post reported that Attorney General William Barr had booked a private $30,000 holiday party at the Trump International Hotel in Washington. Critics observed that the country's top defender of our laws and Constitution was thus effectively putting money into Mr. Trump's pocket in order to curry favor with him – essentially bribing him – even while officially defending him in lawsuits that alleged the unconstitutionality of his accepting foreign governmental emoluments at the hotel.<sup>147</sup>	15, 17 (9)

8-27-19	Speeding the wall, illegally. Mr. Trump directed that contractors building his wall at the Mexican border ignore environmental restrictions and private property rights so as to speed their progress, and he said that he would pardon them if they were charged with illegal actions.<sup>148</sup> Mr. Trump had previously ordered the construction of the Keystone XL Pipeline in violation of permit requirements and a court order,<sup>149</sup> and as a private sector developer and property owner he had repeatedly flaunted permitting requirements.<sup>150</sup> He had also, as president, previously pardoned political friends and hinted that he would pardon others, as described frequently above in this Chronology and at the link at this end note.<sup>151</sup>	9
8-27-19, 8-28-19	Puerto Rico: nasty. As a new hurricane approached Puerto Rico – an island populated by Hispanic Americans and still reeling from the last two hurricanes to which Mr. Trump had notoriously failed to adequately respond – on August 27 the Department of Homeland Security shifted $271 million from its disaster assistance budget to enforcement efforts at the Mexican border.<sup>152</sup> On August 28, Mr. Trump tweeted: “Puerto Rico is one of the most corrupt places on earth. Their political system is broken and their politicians are either Incompetent or Corrupt. Congress approved Billions of Dollars last time, more than anyplace else has ever gotten, and it is sent to Crooked Pols. No good! And by the way, I’m the best thing that’s ever happened to Puerto Rico!” Mr. Trump had long inflated the amount of relief money he had provided to the island for the earlier disasters, had claimed that the death toll there had been exaggerated to embarrass him, and had charged the islanders with ingratitude toward him.<sup>153</sup> Providentially, the new hurricane missed Puerto.	6, 7, 11
8-28-19. 8-29-29	Throwing Ukraine to the bear. Politico reported that Mr. Trump, contrary to Pentagon views, was slow-walking the release of congressionally authorized military assistance to Ukraine for its defense of its territory from Russian aggression – seemingly owing to his fondness for Russia.<sup>154</sup>	9, 12, 13

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 26 – November 2, 2019

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

The current Addendum appears in two parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular chronology. The second part, beginning on p. 42, chronicles events surrounding the impeachment inquiry brought against Mr. Trump by the House of Representatives.

8-29-19, 9-17-19	Down on G.M. On August 29, Mr. Trump trashed General Motors for maintaining manufacturing plants overseas.<sup>1</sup> On September 17, the White House intervened in a labor strike at General Motors, taking the side of the union workers, in an apparent bid to shore up Mr. Trump's flagging standing with industrial workers in advance of the 2020 election.<sup>2</sup> As reported above in this Chronology, Mr. Trump had frequently, and inappropriately, singled out other American businesses for censure before in the service of his personal and political goals.	9

8-29-19 +	In the Hurricane's eye. As Hurricane Dorian bypassed Puerto Rico and appeared to bear down on southern Florida, on August 29 and 30 Mr. Trump pledged boundless support for Floridians, canceled a planned trip to Poland, and declared a state of emergency. He had not done any of that days earlier when hurricane devastation had threatened Puerto Rico: instead, he had raged at the (Hispanic) islanders. (See CSD's entry of August 27-28 above in this Chronology on the topic of the hurricane.) Notably, two of Mr. Trump's luxury resorts lay in the path of the projected Florida landfall.<sup>3</sup> But despite the continuing emergency, Mr. Trump found time on the morning of Saturday, August 31 to tweet about his friends, his enemies and his accomplishments: attacking former intelligence officials James Comey, James Clapper and John Brennan; praising numerous Republican congressional allies; extolling friendly cable news pundits for their high television ratings; touting the success of his prior television program "The Apprentice"; taking personal credit for low gasoline prices; announcing that one recently terminated aide had apologized to him and that he was suing "disgusting and foul mouthed" Omarosa Manigault Newman and "numerous other" ex-aides for breaching their confidentiality agreements with him; maintaining that he loved his daughter Tiffany despite others' comments criticizing her weight; falsely claiming success in his trade war with China; and dubiously boasting, "We are winning again, and we are respected again!"<sup>4</sup> That day – still amid the emergency – he also played golf at one of his resorts, at taxpayer expense, bringing the number of his golf outings as president to 213 – far eclipsing the number of President Obama's outings, which he had mocked while campaigning in 2016 while promising to not play at all if elected.<sup>5</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15
------------------	---	----------------------------------

8-29-19 +	[Continued.] On September 1, with the hurricane still raging offshore and threatening the eastern seaboard, Mr. Trump again took to Twitter petulantly: hounding Comey, the AFL-CIO's president, a New York Times columnist, the "LameStream Media" and the four Democratic congresswomen of color known as "The Squad" (see CSD's entry of July 14 + regarding Mr. Trump's invective against The Squad.) He also played golf again. On Tuesday, September 3, he attacked the Federal Reserve Board, the mayor of London, President Obama, and "the whole Witch Hunt against me." A Washington Post columnist presented that breathtaking synopsis of events with considerable effectiveness.<sup>6</sup> One of the most chaotic developments around the hurricane arose from Mr. Trump's September 1 misstatement that Alabama was at risk of incurring major storm damage. After being corrected by the National Weather Service, he repeatedly doubled-down on his error. On September 4 he televised an official National Weather Service storm map that he had personally (and criminally) doctored with a black Sharpie marker so as to falsely show Alabama as lying within the storm's path.<sup>7</sup> He shortly denied having been the one wielding the Sharpie.<sup>8</sup> Through September 6 he continued – seemingly obsessively – to maintain that he had not erred in his forecast.<sup>9</sup> Also on that date, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NWS's parent) issued a tweet vaguely supporting his Alabama claim and rebuking the agency's own scientists – a communication that was promptly denounced by the president of the national weather services union as "utterly disgusting and disingenuous."<sup>10</sup> Many others in the weather reporting community expressed outrage as well, with one former NOAA head calling NOAA's tweet "a major breach of scientific integrity that damages the NWS and stains the agency's leadership."<sup>11</sup> Meanwhile NOAA had gagged its current staff from speaking publicly about the matter.<sup>12</sup> On September 9, The New York Times reported that NOAA's disingenuous tweet had been precipitated by a threat on the part of Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross to fire top NOAA employees for having allowed the NWS to contradict the president.<sup>13</sup> On September 11, The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump, through his chief of staff, had directed Ross on that path.<sup>14</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15
------------------	---	------------------------------

8-29-19 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump's initially trivial misstatement about the storm's projected path had thus mushroomed into (1) an epic fray over his practice of denying scientific reality, speaking counter-factually, and pretending to infallibility, and (2) the exposure of another effort on the part of Ross to undermine scientific data gathering and reporting for political purposes (compare his having engineered the proposed addition of the racially motivated "citizenship question" to the decennial U.S. census – see above in this Chronology). Who else in the government stood to contradict Mr. Trump and Ross? Through all of this, as previously noted in this Chronology, both the Department of Homeland Security and its subordinate agency the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) were being directed by temporary, "acting" chiefs – not approved by Congress, and perilously perched in their respective careers as Mr. Trump's servants. (Fortunately, for them and for all Americans, after demolishing the Bahamas the hurricane largely skirted the southeastern coast of the U.S.)	1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15
8-30-19 +	Like a sieve. Possibly with a view to intimidating or embarrassing Iran, on August 30 Mr. Trump tweeted an aerial photo of an explosion at an Iranian missile launch pad, apparently without the approval of his intelligence advisors. Observers said that he could have thereby unwittingly revealed secret American intelligence-gathering methodologies and operations. Mr. Trump responded to the criticism by saying that he had "an absolute right" to release the photo (which of course was not the point).<sup>15</sup> On September 9, CNN reported that in 2017 the U.S. had extracted a high-level intelligence asset from Russia at least in part to prevent Mr. Trump from intentionally or inadvertently outing him while he was still in-country.<sup>16</sup> Indeed, as detailed above in this Chronology, Mr. Trump had repeatedly spilled classified data in an effort to look knowledgeable and strong to his listeners; and national security officials had revealed that they were reluctant to share some classified information with him for fear of such recklessness. Observers now voiced concern that America's reliability as a custodian of classified data might forever be suspect by our allies, even following Mr. Trump's exit.<sup>17</sup> [Continued below.]	10, 13

8-30-19 +	[Continued.] On September 18, immediately after Mr. Trump revealed on live television that his wall at the Mexican border was wired to detect intrusions, the commander of the Army Corps of Engineers told him (still on camera) not to discuss that classified information. Mr. Trump nevertheless persisted in boasting about it to the cameras.<sup>18</sup>	10, 13
9-2-19 +	Multi-tasking (we always knew he was a polymath!). The Vice President and golf. While visiting Ireland's prime minister and president in Dublin on September 2, Vice President Mike Pence and his retinue – at Mr. Trump's "suggestion" – stayed hours away at Mr. Trump's golf resort in Doonberg, Ireland. Pence thus at once (1) did his job, (2) wasted money, (3) wasted time, (4) advertised the resort, (5) enriched Mr. Trump with taxpayer funds, and (6) obsequiously flattered Mr. Trump, presumably for Pence's own professional benefit. (At the same time, Mr. Trump, for his part – and also at taxpayer expense – was playing golf at his resort in Virginia.)<sup>19</sup> The mafia and golf. One former federal organized crime prosecutor found in the Pence-Doonberg episode, and in Attorney General William Barr's recent booking of a large holiday party at Mr. Trump's Washington hotel (see CSD's entry of August 27 above in this Chronology), a mafia phenomenon known as "kicking up" or "paying tribute" – giving a portion of all criminal earnings to the mob boss. "From the member's point of view, 'kicking up' is a way to show respect, curry favor, and reinforce the hierarchical power structure. From the boss's point of view, it's a way to get rich."<sup>20</sup> When asked about the seeming irregularities in both episodes by reporters, Mr. Trump responded, "People like my product, what can I tell you? They can't help it."<sup>21</sup>  [Continued below.]	11, 15

9-2-19 +	[Continued.] The Air Force and golf. On September 7, Politico reported that the House Oversight Committee was investigating an Air Force crew having paid to stay at Mr. Trump's golf resort in Turnberry, Scotland during serial refueling stops at a nearby airport, and the military having spent large sums in making use of the airport. As details emerged, more and longer such stays by Air Force crews appeared, together with an aggregate spend of nearly $200,000 at the resort. In fairness, the airport's arrangement to steer hotel business to Mr. Trump had dated from 2014 (well before his presidency); and the Air Force claimed that it had paid market rates for the crews' rooms. Nevertheless, the stays had increased dramatically during the Trump presidency; they appeared to have filled otherwise vacant Trump beds, and thus were a boon to Mr. Trump regardless of market price; the airport's Air Force revenues had helped keep the financially vulnerable airport (and thus the resort) afloat; and both Air Force "deals" thus enriched Mr. Trump's business – all without public disclosure.<sup>22</sup> The "routine." Also on September 7, The New York Times reported that foreign and domestic figures who wished to curry Mr. Trump's favor now routinely patronized his properties. CSD has previously chronicled many episodes of that corruption. But to convey its staggering breadth, we now quote extensively from The Times: "To ethics lawyers, the most extraordinary aspect of the daily merging of Mr. Trump's official duties and his commercial interests both in Washington and around the world is that it has now become almost routine. Since Mr. Trump became president, there have been thousands of visits to his properties, not only by Mr. Trump himself, but by foreign leaders, lobbyists, Republican candidates, members of Congress, cabinet members and others with ties to the president. At least 90 members of Congress, 250 Trump administration officials and more than 110 foreign officials have been spotted at Trump properties since 2017 .... "It reflects the normalization of corruption — this is just how business works in Trump's Washington, D.C.," said Robert Weissman, the president of Public Citizen, a nonprofit ethics group. 'We have witnessed a stunning degradation of ethical norms.' ... [Continued below.]	11, 15

9-2-19 +	[Continued.] "Current and former White House officials insist they have never witnessed Mr. Trump making any explicit demand, or suggestion, that his cabinet members or Republican allies stay at a Trump property or use one to host an event. But they have noted that a president who is extremely effective at communicating between the lines does not have to be explicit. "Mr. Trump, they said, spends more time talking about his properties in private than he does in public, and even as president, remains intimately involved with club minutiae, like knowing all the names on his Mar-a-Lago membership roll. ... "[The] visits to Trump venues include 24 of the 32 people who have served in Mr. Trump's cabinet. And that in a way understates the pattern, as a number of these cabinet members have been to Trump properties again and again, like Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, who has been spotted at a Trump-owned venue at least 21 times. "Since he was sworn in, Mr. Trump himself has spent 293 days at one of his family businesses — that is nearly a third of his time in office. These visits have generated hundreds of thousands of dollars in federal government payments to cover the lodging expenses of the Secret Service and other personnel who accompany him."<sup>23</sup>	11, 15
9-3-13 +	"Emergency" raid of military funds. Claiming emergency powers, on September 3 Mr. Trump directed the Pentagon to move $3.6 billion in congressionally appropriated funding for military construction projects to the construction of his wall along the Mexican border. That diversion of funding violated congressional powers and thus the Constitution.<sup>24</sup> International diplomacy was shortly violated as well. Sticking a thumb in Europe's eye, on September 6 Defense Secretary Mark Esper urged European allies to fund the Pentagon's European-sited construction projects that he and Mr. Trump had just ripped money from.<sup>25</sup> On September 18, The Washington Post reported that the Pentagon had earlier warned of dire outcomes if Congress didn't fund the construction projects that were now to be raided, including projects to mitigate fire and explosives risks that were threatening troops and their families.<sup>26</sup>	6, 9, 13

9-6-19 +	Gunning for California. On September 6, news media reported that Mr. Trump's Justice Department, on antitrust grounds, was investigating four auto-makers for tentatively agreeing among themselves to partner with the State of California in reducing auto emissions. Not only did the investigation fly in the face of the public interest, and figure into Mr. Trump's vengeful and demagogic campaigns against both California and President Obama's environmental protection legacy, but it contrasted starkly with Mr. Trump's general laxity in antitrust enforcement.<sup>27</sup> (Mr. Trump's other high-profile antitrust effort had been a failed attempt in 2017 to block AT&amp;T's acquisition of Time Warner with a view to punishing his critic, CNN, a Time Warner subsidiary – all as described above in this Chronology.<sup>28</sup> That episode had amounted to an equally political abuse of the Justice Department's antitrust authority.) On September 17, media reported that Mr. Trump, in a further act of vengeance, would imminently revoke California's right to set stricter air pollution standards for vehicles than those imposed by the federal government.<sup>29</sup> On September 24 and 26, Andrew Wheeler, Mr. Trump's administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency – no friend of the environment – accused California of violating clean air and water standards and threatened to withhold federal highway funding on those grounds, while not accusing or threatening any other noncompliant state.<sup>30</sup>	9, 11

9-7-19 +	No Afghan deal for Bolton. Mr. Trump tweeted that he had canceled a secretly planned peace negotiation at Camp David among the U.S., the Taliban and the Afghan government. Irregularities in the episode included (a) his having invited the Taliban to U.S. soil at all, thus catapulting upwards the credibility of the enemy organization; (b) his public disclosure of a state secret for no apparent reason other than to appear in control; (c) the possibility that by doing so he had jeopardized future negotiations; (d) reports that he had planned the meeting as abruptly as he had canceled it, and without the usual circumspection or statecraft; (e) reports that he had planned the meeting's Camp David venue so as to promote his own role as the deal-maker (even though he had had none); (f) the consternation that he had left among his advisors in his wake; and (g) the possibility that violence and destabilization in Afghanistan would ensue.<sup>31</sup> On September 10, seemingly due in part to the Afghan fiasco, Mr. Trump unceremoniously fired John Bolton – his third, and ultra-hawkish, national security advisor, whose views he had come to disdain. (Or he claimed to have fired him – Bolton insisted he had resigned.)<sup>32</sup> How Mr. Trump would reconcile what was once his dangerously belligerent international rhetoric with his increasing ardor to accommodate any and all hostile actors remained to be seen. Although Bolton had been strongly disliked both within and without the administration, critics now observed that Mr. Trump had eliminated his last strong and informed foreign policy voice; that he would no longer be connected to any traditional foreign policy thinking; and that he would likely be flying solo going forward.<sup>33</sup>	10, 11, 13
9-9-19	President for life (again and again); in North Carolina. Mr. Trump twice in one day repeated his by now familiar "joke" that he might seek to extend his tenure as president beyond eight years: first at the White House, and then at a congressional candidate's rally in Fayetteville, North Carolina.<sup>34</sup> However hilarious (or not), the "joke" struck CSD as deliberately seeding and wooing his supporters for an eventual move in that direction. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 8, 9, 11

9-9-19	[Continued.] Also at the North Carolina rally, as characterized by The Washington Post, Mr. Trump delivered "a wide-ranging speech that mirrored his usual campaign rally fare. He defended his tariffs on Chinese goods, took aim at the media, denounced energy-efficient lightbulbs and warned that Democrats are 'not big believers in religion.'"<sup>35</sup> Although Mr. Trump and other recent presidents had long spoken to audiences' religious beliefs, CSD was not aware of any having previously denounced their perceived enemies as heathens. A broader portrait of the North Carolina demagoguery appeared in The New York Times, which characterized it as a pep rally for voters who felt persecuted as Christians and as whites, some of whom had travelled long distances to attend and to become fired up. The Times wrote: "North Carolina has released thousands of dangerous criminal aliens into your communities and you see it,' Mr. Trump said. 'The charges against these free criminals include sexual assault, robbery, drug crimes and homicide. Murder!' Of Democrats, Mr. Trump said: 'Your way of life is under assault by these people.' . . . "Mr. Trump brought his signature brand of identity politics — steeped in racial division and fears of white Christian replacement — to a crowd that was eager to embrace those themes. They cheered loudly, urging Mr. Trump on, as he talked about mass deportations, 'foreign refugees' overrunning communities and unproven allegations of voter fraud in California. They booed on cue with every mention of the Democratic enemies, all women or people of color: House Speaker Nancy Pelosi; Hillary Clinton; former President Barack Obama; and the group of freshman congresswomen nicknamed 'the squad.' Democrats were branded the 'America-hating left.' "In conversations with more than a dozen attendees before and after the rally, they made clear that their support for the president was not in spite of his inflammatory rhetoric, but because his chosen targets often match their own . . . . "[One attendee] said he felt Mr. Trump understood 'the people who experience most discrimination right now are us, Christians.' . . . 9-9-19	[Continued.] "[M]any of Mr. Trump's rally-going supporters said the outings were equally defined by the carnival-like atmosphere that greets attendees even before Mr. Trump speaks. It's in the hours before the rally, in the lines for refreshments and sunscreen and knockoff Make America Great Again merchandise, where Mr. Trump's crowds are ripened for the coming spectacle. Fears of illegal immigration are swapped over popcorn, and anecdotal stories about voter fraud and food stamp fraud committed by noncitizens and black Americans are rampant. A man wearing a 'Communism News Network' shirt with the CNN logo as a hammer and sickle said he wanted to see a more respectful political climate. A 'build the wall' chant broke out suddenly, after another man walked through the crowd carrying a large sign that said an immigrant killed one of his family members. "Trisha Hope, 55, was attending her 23rd rally for Mr. Trump. Ms. Hope sells a book of all the president's tweets since Inauguration Day. They are 'history that needs to be preserved,' she said, and have 'never been inaccurate.' Ms. Hope estimated that she's read every tweet about 50 times. 'President Trump touched something inside me,' Ms. Hope said. 'He speaks like me and he talks like me.'"<sup>36</sup> By CNN's count, Mr. Trump made 22 false claims at the rally, including his oft-repeated and utterly baseless charge that Democrats had engaged in massive voter fraud in California; that China (rather than American consumers) was paying for his Chinese tariffs; that labor unions were supporting his proposed USMCA trade agreement with Mexico and Canada; that Democrats wanted "open borders"; that most released asylum seekers don't show up for their asylum hearings; that he had been putting up "miles and miles" of border wall; that "100,000 people a year die from what comes across our southern border [i.e., drugs]"; that he was responsible for the recent dramatic growth in U.S. energy production (it had begun under President Obama); and that he had forever embraced the requirement that health insurance cover pre-existing conditions (he in truth never had, except rhetorically).<sup>37</sup> On the plus side, Mr. Trump boasted that he had created "the greatest economy in the history of our country," and that his hair was "a lot better than most of my friends who are the same age."<sup>38</sup>	1, 7, 8, 9, 11
---------------	---	-----------------------

9-11-19	Throttling science. The Union of Concerned Scientists identified 120 instances in which Mr. Trump and his administration had attacked scientific procedures and findings – thus intimidating government scientists from telling the truth, and thus threatening Americans' health, their safety, and their belief in what government says.<sup>39</sup>	8
9-11-19 +	Honoring 9-11. On the morning of the observance of the anniversary of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on the U.S., Mr. Trump defied the somberness of the day by railing at the mainstream media for publishing opinion polls that showed him trailing multiple Democratic presidential contenders. He called the polls "phony" and "fixed." Later, in commemorating the attack on the World Trade Center, he repeated his falsehood that he and many of his employees had assisted in the emergency response in Manhattan's financial district.<sup>40</sup> On September 18, The Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump had re-tweeted a video of the Muslim Congresswoman Ilhan Omar dancing at a party allegedly held on September 11. In fact the party was a Congressional Black Caucus event held on September 13.<sup>41</sup>	1, 6, 7, 11
9-11-19 +	Boneheads at the Fed. On September 11, Mr. Trump radically called upon the Federal Reserve bank to lower interest rates to less than zero, thus continuing his very public jawboning of the Fed – an institution that had long prized its independence from politics. He also called the bank's leaders "Boneheads."<sup>42</sup> On September 16, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's public calls for the Fed to lower rates had now been appearing almost daily.<sup>43</sup> On September 18, the Fed finally did lower rates; but Mr. Trump charged that the drop wasn't enough.<sup>44</sup> He tweeted, "{Fed chair} Jay Powell and the Federal Reserve Fail Again. No 'guts,' no sense, no vision!" (Mr. Trump's demands were seen by many as efforts to stoke the economy for his own benefit in advance of the 2020 election, regardless of the longer term economic impact.)	9

9-13-19	Purge of the immigration court system. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump's Justice Department had purged four of the top officials at its Executive Office for Immigration Review, the unit that operates immigration courts. Immigration judges had been protesting that, under Mr. Trump, they had been pressured to routinely order the deportation of Central American and other asylum seekers rather than giving them fair asylum hearings.<sup>45</sup> With the departure of EOIR's highly professional and sympathetic leadership, the judges' calls for their own ability to render justice independently now seemed even more imperiled.	2, 6
9-14-19 +	Kavanaugh: the wound still oozes. On September 14, a New York Times op-ed revealed a newly discovered episode of Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh's youthful history of sexual misconduct – a history that CSD believes he had falsely and thus unlawfully denied when testifying before Congress during his 2018 confirmation hearing, and that Mr. Trump and his allies had unlawfully prevented the FBI from investigating in full. The Times erred in some details, then published a correction of the new discovery. Mr. Trump's September 15 Twitter response to the error: “Brett Kavanaugh should start suing people for liable [sic], or the Justice Department should come to his rescue.”<sup>46</sup> Of course the Constitution, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, bars such suits by public figures in the event of a good faith newspaper error; and the Justice Department, at Mr. Trump's heavy-handed direction, had already come to Kavanaugh's rescue by preventing a full FBI investigation in the first instance. But Mr. Trump's attacks on the media regarding The Times' fleeting error continued, notwithstanding his own incessant and deliberate misstatements, none of which he ever corrected. By September 19 he had tweeted about the episode nine times, including this: “I call for the Resignation of everybody at The New York Times involved in the Kavanaugh SMEAR story, and while you're at it, the Russian Witch Hunt Hoax, which is just as phony!”<sup>47</sup>	1, 9

9-14-19 +	Saudi oil facility is attacked; the U.S. flails. Drones and cruise missiles attacked and largely destroyed the world's largest oil processing facility, in Saudi Arabia, thus disrupting the world's oil supply. The attack also inflamed Gulf tensions – tensions that had already soared due to the civil war in Yemen, in which American and Saudi military support for the Yemeni government was pitted against an Iranian-backed insurgency, and through which catastrophic famine had come to threaten the Yemeni people. Mr. Trump and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo were quick to blame Iran for the attack, and both hinted that the U.S. would go to war with Iran (although seemingly neither of them in truth wanted war, especially in the run-up to the 2020 American election).<sup>48</sup> While the U.S. was certainly not responsible for Iranian aggression, a New York Times analysis posed the acute diplomatic and strategic maelstrom that Mr. Trump – through his capricious, unreliable and bellicose behavior – had created for himself: "For a president with a loose relationship with the facts and poisonous relationships with allies, the attack on the Saudi oil fields poses a challenge: how to prove the administration's case that Iran was behind the strike and rally the world to respond. "President Trump must now confront that problem as he struggles with one of the most critical national security decisions of his presidency. Over the next few days or weeks, he will almost certainly face the reality that much of the world — angry at his tweets, tirades, untruths and accusations — could be disinclined to believe the arguments advanced by Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and others that Iran bears responsibility for the attack. "If Mr. Trump tries to gather a coalition to impose diplomatic penalties, tighten sanctions to further choke off Iranian oil exports or retaliate with a military or cyberstrike, he may discover that, like President George W. Bush heading into Iraq 16 years ago, he is largely alone. ... [Continued below.]	7, 10, 13, 14
------------------	--	----------------------

9-14-19 +	[Continued.] "Even if American and other experts who are now in Saudi Arabia to conduct a forensic study conclude that Iran built the drones or cruise missiles, they may have a hard time establishing — especially for the public — where the weapons were launched from, or who shot them toward the Saudi oil fields. ... "For Mr. Trump, the suspicions about any American assessment of responsibility will be colored by another problem: European officials blame him, as much as the Iranians, for creating the circumstances that led to the attack. In their telling, it was Mr. Trump's decision, soon after he fired [then Secretary of State Rex] Tillerson, to abandon the 2015 nuclear deal[signed by President Obama] that set in motion the events that culminated in the crippling of the two Saudi oil fields."<sup>49</sup> Politico made similar observations.<sup>50</sup>	7, 10, 13, 14
9-16-19 +	More testimony blocked. News media reported that Mr. Trump had blocked two more of his former senior aides – Staff Secretary Rob Porter and Deputy Chief of Staff Rick Dearborn – from testifying before the House Judiciary Committee on the subject of special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation of Mr. Trump's complicity in and cover-up of Russian election interference. He had also ordered that the testimony of a third former subordinate – campaign director Corey Lewandowski – be limited. The move followed Mr. Trump having previously blocked or limited the testimony of his former White House Counsel Don McGahn and his former communications director Hope Hicks. In response, the committee charged that Mr. Trump had no authority to so restrict private citizens and thus was in violation of the Constitution's separation of powers.<sup>51</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 17 (9)

9-16-19 +	[Continued.] Lewandowski – already known for his deviousness and pugnacity – then appeared before the committee on September 17. But as a consequence of the limitations imposed by Mr. Trump, he avoided all questions about the probe except to denounce “this fake Russia collusion narrative [as] the greatest crime committed against the American people in our generation, if not ever.” More generally, he treated the proceedings with contempt, using them as a platform for insulting and denouncing Democrats and for launching his campaign to run in New Hampshire for the U.S. Senate. As he was holding forth, Mr. Trump tweeted from aboard Air Force One: “Such a beautiful Opening Statement by Corey Lewandowski!”<sup>52</sup> Critics, and CSD, considered all of that to amount to obstruction of justice.	9, 17 (9)
9-18-19	Videos don't lie (but presidents do). Sparked by three recent episodes, a Washington Post columnist listed dozens of instances in which Mr. Trump had denied doing or saying something that had been plainly captured on video recordings. The recent episodes, only days past: disdainfully denying that he had ever met the late journalist Cokie Roberts (Mr. Trump had often claimed to have not known individuals as a means of disparaging them, implying that they had not merited his attention); denying that he had accused Iran of attacking the Saudi oil refineries; and denying that he had offered to meet with Iran's leaders without pre-conditions.<sup>53</sup> CSD encourages readers to review, and to attempt to absorb, the columnist's complete listing of video-captured statements that Mr. Trump had claimed had never occurred. As Chico Marx, playing a scoundrel, had protested in the movie Duck Soup, “Who ya gonna' believe, me or your own eyes?”<sup>54</sup>	7
9-19-19	Climate denial revealed. Democrats in the Senate Agriculture Committee released a reported documenting dozens of instances in which the Trump administration had censored or minimized client science across the Department of Agriculture, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Homeland Security. The implications were profound, including for farmers who had to rely on accurate climate reporting in their operations.<sup>55</sup>	8

9-23-19	The prize. Mr. Trump told reporters that he deserved the Nobel Peace Prize, and that he would win it but for the selection process being rigged against him.<sup>56</sup> – Harmless foolishness, except for Mr. Trump's continuing success in convincing substantial portions of the American electorate of his genius, his grandeur, his accomplishments ... and his victimization by his enemies.	9, 11
9-24-19	At the UN. Addressing the United Nations General Assembly, Mr. Trump spoke in favor of nationalism and national cultural identity, and against immigration and multi-lateral collaboration.<sup>57</sup>	6, 14
9-26-19	No to refugees. The White House proposed (and effectively established) a ceiling of 18,000 refugee admissions for fiscal year 2020 (that is, beginning October 1, 2019). During his term, Mr. Trump had thus steadily cut the annual figure from 110,000 to 50,000 to 45,000 to 30,000 and now to this, once again the lowest figure since the current refugee admissions program had begun in 1980.<sup>58</sup> But the reality was even worse: in each of those recent years, the actual refugee admissions had been far less than the authorized amount. And the cuts had come amid the continuing world refugee crisis, when some 26,000,000 refugees – a record number – were now struggling to survive outside of their home countries. Mr. Trump thus abandoned America's global leadership since World War II in welcoming refugees. He even gave the lie to his own calls to protect foreign victims of religious persecution – most recently at the United Nations on September 23 – by effectively denying all but a handful of them refuge here.<sup>59</sup> In announcing the cut, he also explicitly, fallaciously and gratuitously demonized refugees as drains on the economy and as security risks, while cynically titling his public release "President Donald J. Trump's Humanitarian and Responsible Approach On Refugees Protects the Welfare of American Citizens."<sup>60</sup> And contemporaneously with establishing the new, lower-than-ever refugee resettlement ceiling, Mr. Trump ordered that states and municipalities could elect to ban the resettlement of refugees within their territories – a radical move that enabled those governments to further demonize refugees, and to chill or even strangle the refugee admissions program generally.<sup>61</sup>	6, 14

9-28-19	Savages. Mr. Trump tweeted that six members of the House were "Do Nothing Democrat Savages." Four of those named were women of color (the self-described "Squad" whom Mr. Trump had previously mocked and demonized, consisting of Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, Ayanna Pressley, Ilhan Omar and Rashida Tlaib), and two were Jewish men (Judiciary Committee chair Jerry Nadler and Intelligence Committee chair Adam Schiff). In fact Nadler and Schiff were not doing nothing: they were leading the impeachment inquiry against him.	6, 9
9-28-19 +	Lock her up! (with the help of State). The Washington Post reported on September 28 that the State Department had resumed its probe of the unsecured emails of former secretary of state, former presidential contender and ongoing Trump whipping-girl Hillary Clinton, having contacted up to 130 department officials in recent weeks to that end.<sup>62</sup> The probe had been closed in 2016, without a finding of culpability. Possible motives appeared now to include tarnishing the careers of diplomats associated with Democratic administrations; revivifying Mr. Trump's anti-Clinton demagoguery in his 2020 re-election campaign; and establishing a "what about them?" defense relative to Mr. Trump's own repeated breaches of confidentiality protocols. On October 2, writing in The New York Times, a former leading diplomat recounted Mr. Trump's many efforts to intimidate, debilitate, demoralize and politicize the State Department: probing Clinton's email communications; firing and then threatening the U.S. ambassador to Ukraine for not facilitating his own corrupt undertakings there (see CSD's September 24 and 25 reports on the impeachment inquiry, below); telling U.S. diplomats at the United Nations that American whistleblowers were traitors (see CSD's September 26 report on the impeachment inquiry); directing his attorney Rudy Giuliani to hijack Ukraine policy from State for Mr. Trump's personal benefit (see our report on the impeachment inquiry generally); trying to slash the department's budget; failing to appoint senior career diplomats to important White House positions; and granting proportionately fewer ambassadorships to career diplomats (as opposed to political friends) than other administrations had done. The diplomat wrote: "The State Department is in crisis. Mr. Trump has done enormous harm to its mission and self-confidence."<sup>63</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11, 13

9-28-19 +	[Continued.] On October 7, The Washington Post similarly reported on the demoralization of the department caused by Secretary of State Mike Pompeo's abandonment of American interests in favor of those of Mr. Trump, and by his failure to defend American diplomats against Mr. Trump's corrupt wrath and Giuliani's smear campaigns – particularly in regard to the Ukraine scandal.<sup>64</sup> On October 13, Politico reported on the demoralizing effects of Mr. Trump's many politically-appointed ambassadors, who displayed not only an ignorance of diplomacy but an entitled arrogance toward career diplomats.<sup>65</sup>	9, 10, 11, 13
9-30-19, 10-4-19	An international conspiracy. On September 30, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump, at the suggestion of Attorney General William Barr, had asked Australia's prime minister to investigate his own government's 2016 tip-off to the FBI that Russians were seeking to meddle in the American election, with a view on Barr's part to discovering foul play in the tip-off. The White House had hidden the transcript of that call.<sup>66</sup> Similarly, on September 30, The Washington Post reported that Barr had held private meetings overseas with British and Italian intelligence officials, seeking their help in discrediting U.S. intelligence agencies' 2016 investigations of Russian election meddling.<sup>67</sup> On October 4, Mr. Trump told reporters outright that the British, Italian and Australian governments may have conspired with U.S. intelligence agencies to foil his election in 2016. In reporting the episode, The Times wrote that Barr had broken all Justice Department protocols by personally traveling abroad in pursuit of the conspiracy, personally leading the investigation, and refusing to inform Congress about any of it.<sup>68</sup> The apparent motive for all of the foregoing was Mr. Trump's and Barr's attempt to discredit the Mueller investigation of Russian election meddling in Mr. Trump's favor as having been politically motivated by a "deep state" conspiracy to deny the validity of his election. The narrative typified Mr. Trump's demagoguery: in this case, seeking to overcome charges that he had conspired with a foreign country in the election by accusing his adversaries of having done the very same thing.	4, 9

10-1-19	For communism. Notwithstanding his declared war on "radical socialist" (Democratic) politicians in the U.S., Mr. Trump tweeted his congratulations to Chinese dictator Xi Jinping on the 70th anniversary of Communist Party rule in China. His tweet came shortly after Chinese police had shot a democracy protester in Hong Kong, to huge negative international publicity.	12
10-3-19	In Florida. Announcing a new executive order on health care at the large (and largely conservative) retirement community The Villages near Orlando, Florida, Mr. Trump gave a campaign-style speech at taxpayer expense. Among other things, he bad-mouthed undocumented immigrants and his electoral opponents Elizabeth Warren and Joe Biden, and he repeatedly branded Democrats as socialists and the "radical left."<sup>69</sup>	6, 9
10-3-19, 10-4-19	The tax returns. On October 3, Manhattan prosecutors charged that the Justice Department was slowing down New York state court proceedings to get at Mr. Trump's tax returns in connection with their investigation of various criminal allegations against him. They said that the slow-down risked the running of the statute of limitations on the cases.<sup>70</sup> That is, Mr. Trump was not only abusing the court system (as he had long done as a private litigant before becoming president) but also corruptly deploying the full weight of the Justice Department to do so, and on personal matters. Separately on that date, media reported that an IRS whistleblower had privately told Congress in July that senior Trump political appointees at the Treasury Department had improperly interfered with the IRS's audit of Mr. Trump's tax returns.<sup>71</sup> On October 4, The Washington Post detailed the many court cases in which the Justice Department was serving the personal interests of Mr. Trump – both as plaintiff and as defendant.<sup>72</sup>	9, 11

10-6-19 +	Throwing the Kurds to Turkey, and Syria to Russia. On October 6, following a telephone call with Turkish strongman Recep Erdogan – whose authoritarian practices Mr. Trump had previously condoned – Mr. Trump announced that U.S. forces would pull out from Kurdish (northern) Syria and allow Turkey to swallow that region. The details of the call were not made public. But the announcement raised an uproar among both Republicans and Democrats in Congress, who feared not only that the Turks would massacre the Kurds – America's most loyal allies in the fight against ISIS – but that ISIS would regenerate in Syria. Russia, Iran and Syria's dictator-butcher Bashar al-Assad could also benefit from the U.S. pull-out. Mr. Trump had not consulted with his national security advisors, Congress or U.S. allies; and top American military and diplomatic officials were aghast not only at the potential chaos and slaughter but at the blow to American credibility and strategic planning that Mr. Trump had just landed.<sup>73</sup> Turkey's enmity toward the Kurds was founded on the latter's alleged support of Kurdish separatists and terrorists within Turkey. Syria's enmity toward the Kurds was founded on the latter's struggle for an autonomous Kurdish territory in Syria, as they had achieved in Iraq during the civil war there. The Kurdish authorities in those areas had long been widely seen as the most democratic and humane in the region. Only a year earlier, Mr. Trump had publicly assured the Kurds of his loyalty.<sup>74</sup> That Mr. Trump had previously boasted of a Trump-branded hotel located in Turkey was not lost on critics.<sup>75</sup> In fact, within three days, Turkey began an air offensive against the Kurds, followed by a ground assault.<sup>76</sup> On October 10, as they mowed down the Kurds, the Kurds announced the suspension of their operations against ISIS.<sup>77</sup> On October 11, Turkish artillery lobbed shells near U.S. troop positions in Syria, with the apparent goal of intimidating them and even pushing them back; but Mr. Trump didn't publicly object.<sup>78</sup> On October 13, Turkish troops cut U.S. supply lines and forced U.S. troops to abandon a base. The Kurds switched their alliance from the U.S. to Russian-backed Syrian forces – sworn enemies of the U.S.<sup>79</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15

10-6-19 +	[Continued.] As Turkish, Russian and Syrian regular troops as well as Syrian militias moved in, Mr. Trump reacted by confirming his order of a virtually complete withdrawal, ignoring public assurances advanced only a day or so earlier by Secretary of Defense Mark Esper and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo that that wouldn't happen.<sup>80</sup> The U.S. withdrawal was so hasty that, contrary to plan, dozens of high-profile ISIS detainees were left behind. By October 13, over 130,000 civilians in Syria had been displaced, and hundreds of ISIS supporters had escaped detention.<sup>81</sup> On October 15, Russian units were patrolling the region as peacekeepers. In sum, after years of vast military expenditure and the loss of thousands of lives, America's adversaries in the region – Russia, Syria and Iran – were all strengthened.<sup>82</sup> On October 16, Mr. Trump publicly and casually ceded the terrain to Russian operations and influence, abandoning decades of American policy in the Middle East.<sup>83</sup> America's allies in the region reacted with shock at Mr. Trump's impulsive betrayal of the Kurds and the pandemonium it had unleashed.<sup>84</sup> Several Green Berets told The Times that they felt ashamed for abandoning the Kurds, with whom they had long fought side by side.<sup>85</sup> Officer after officer told a columnist for The Post that that abandonment was a "dagger to the heart" and a "disgrace" that "would go down in infamy."<sup>86</sup> On October 16, Mr. Trump said that his abrupt withdrawal of American forces from Syria had been "strategically brilliant," because U.S. troops were out of harm's way (which they weren't yet) and would be returning home (which they wouldn't be at all – they were being re-deployed in the region). He also falsely said that Americans at home were not at risk from ISIS terrorists because the latter were so far away; that the Kurds were now far safer than before; that his former defense secretary James Mattis (who had overseen the final push against ISIS, who had resigned over Mr. Trump's desire to quit Syria after that, and whom Mr. Trump had once lionized) wasn't sufficiently "tough" and was "the world's most overrated general"; and that he personally (not Mattis or anyone actually commanding American troops) had been responsible for the battlefield defeat of ISIS earlier in the year.<sup>87</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
------------------	---	----------------------------------

10-6-19 +	[Continued.] On the same day, to display his own would-be toughness, Mr. Trump cited an astonishingly crude, impulsive, threatening and gratuitously insulting letter that he had sent to Erdogan on October 9 with a view to deterring Erdogan from invading Syrian. "Don't be a fool," the letter read in part. But it did not deter him; and Erdogan's staff claimed that he had thrown it in the trash.<sup>88</sup> Based on historical experience, the public insult of Turkey and Erdogan in fact appeared capable of damaging U.S.- Turkey relations for decades to come.<sup>89</sup> On the same day, Mr. Trump casually revealed that the U.S. had deployed 50 nuclear weapons in Turkey, thus violating a long-standing American tradition of not acknowledging where such arms were located.<sup>90</sup> Still on October 16, the House voted 354-60 to condemn the withdrawal.<sup>91</sup> On October 17, Turkey announced that it would pause its assault on the Kurds for five days to allow them to surrender their heavy weapons and to flee – all pursuant to a vague and hastily arranged agreement with U.S. negotiators (Vice President Mike Pence and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo) to which the Kurds had acquiesced, having had no other option. Mr. Trump thanked and lavishly praised Erdogan, whom he called his "friend" and a "hell of a leader." He said that Turkey needed to have a swath of Syria "cleaned out" in view of Kurdish terrorist threats (aka ethnic cleansing), and that by applying "a little rough love" Turkey had saved "millions and millions of lives" (from an onslaught that Mr. Trump himself had permitted and thus precipitated.) He also said, "We've gotten everything we've ever dreamed of," and that the Kurds are "incredibly happy with the solution." He called it a "great day for the United States. It's a great day for Turkey ... The Kurds were great. Great day for the Kurds. It's really a great day for civilization."<sup>92</sup> At a campaign rally in Dallas, Texas that evening, he called Erdogan a "gentleman" and said, "Sometimes you have to let them fight like two kids in a lot, you gotta let them fight, and then you pull them apart."<sup>93</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15
------------------	---	----------------------------------

10-6-19 +	[Continued.] In sum, Mr. Trump made clear that (a) he supported Turkey's assault against and ethnic cleansing of the Kurds (hundreds of thousands had fled) – he hadn't merely acquiesced to it; (b) he did not believe that he had erred in allowing the assault to proceed and in abandoning the Kurds, notwithstanding the bipartisan congressional condemnation and U.S. military objections to the contrary; (c) he approved of Turkey's threat of committing genocide against the Kurds; and (d) he was incapable of telling the truth about the Kurds' own view of their abandonment. Not surprisingly, pursuant to the "deal" of which Mr. Trump now boasted, he said that he would not impose on Turkey the economic sanctions that he had threatened (although Congress still appeared to be poised to do so). But observers characterized the "deal" as a near-total win for Erdogan and a complete capitulation on the part of the U.S. – the second one in two weeks. Many said that Erdogan had "rolled" Mr. Trump. The Pentagon, as well as Republicans and Democrats in Congress, remained stunned – by Turkey's effective annexation of northern Syria; the displacement of huge numbers of Kurds; the evisceration of years worth of counterterrorism gains against ISIS; the ceding of U.S. influence (and bases) to Russia, Syria and Iran; and the destruction of America's credibility as an ally.<sup>94</sup> Incidentally or not, Mr. Trump's "friend" Erdogan also had nuclear weapons ambitions, which he had been pursuing in partnership with Russia.<sup>95</sup> On October 21, Mr. Trump abruptly changed course, announcing that, at the request of Israel and Jordan, he would keep 200 American troops in Syria, to protect those countries' interests and to safeguard oil fields from falling under Syrian or ISIS control.<sup>96</sup> Also on that day, Kurdish civilians were filmed throwing rocks and rotten vegetables at U.S. troops as they withdrew.<sup>97</sup> CSD struggled to reconcile that scene with Mr. Trump's earlier boasts that he would make and had made America more respected around the world. [Continued below.]	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15

10-6-19 +	[Continued.] On October 22, media reported that Syrian militias under Turkish control had committed war crimes (murder and torture) against Kurds, and that Russia and Turkey had agreed to jointly patrol the region and to remove and disarm Kurdish fighters.<sup>98</sup> On October 23, Mr. Trump said that achieving the ceasefire between Turks and Kurds – relative to fighting that he himself had precipitated – was a "very special" accomplishment of his.<sup>99</sup> But from what CSD was able to draw from the news reporting, so far the winners and losers of Mr. Trump's withdrawal appeared to be the Assad regime in Syria (whose Kurdish adversaries had now been knee-capped); Turkey (which had gained a safe zone between its border and the Kurds); Russia (which had swiftly taken over the regional power-broker role from the U.S.); Iran (which was allied with Russia and Syria); and possibly ISIS.<sup>100</sup> The losers were the democracies: the Kurds, Israel and the U.S.	7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15

10-7-19	Closing the skies over Russia. Democrats on the House and Senate foreign relations committees exposed and denounced Mr. Trump's apparent intention to withdraw from a 1992 "Open Skies" treaty with Russia that allowed each nation to deploy surveillance flights over the other's territory. They expressed fear that the withdrawal could aid Russia in its military operations against Ukraine. Mr. Trump had reportedly signed a document the previous week stating his intention to withdraw, without having consulted any military officers, diplomats or members of the intelligence community.<sup>101</sup>	12, 13, 14
10-10-19	In Minnesota, profanely. Opening a campaign rally in Minneapolis, Minnesota – which The Washington Post characterized as "raucous ... interrupted frequently by pro-Trump chants, cheers and boos as protesters were hauled out of the arena" – Mr. Trump's son Eric led a "Lock him up!" cheer directed at presidential contender Joe Biden and his son Hunter. During the main event, Mr. Trump himself said: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Of the impeachment investigation that had recently begun in the House, falsely: "From day one, the wretched Washington swamp has been trying to nullify the results of a truly great and democratic election, the election of 2016. ... They want to erase your vote like it never existed, they want to erase your voice and they want to erase your future. But they will fail because in America the people rule again." Also: "Democrats are on a crusade to destroy our democracy. That's what's happening. We will never let it happen. We will defeat them." Of Democrats generally, he alleged their "brazen attempt to overthrow our government." (Neither President Nixon nor President Clinton had resorted to such incendiary and demagogic public statements when defending themselves against impeachment.)</li> <li>• Of presidential contender Joe Biden, falsely: "Sleepy Joe Biden" "got rich" and "sold out America" during the last administration. Also: "He was never considered smart. He was only a good vice president because he understood how to kiss Barack Obama's ass."</li> <li>• Of Biden's son Hunter (whom Mr. Trump and his allies, but no one else, had been falsely accusing of corruption in Ukraine): "[Y]ou're a loser." [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	1, 6, 7, 9, 11

10-11-19	The Trump boys on a tear. The New York Times reported on the overseas real estate development projects that Mr. Trump's sons Eric and Donald Jr. had been pursuing during Mr. Trump's presidency, for their own benefit and his – in Scotland, India and Indonesia. All of those endeavors involved obtaining foreign government approvals and/or enlisting high-level foreign political connections. The manifest conflicts of interest and abuse of power had appeared – astonishingly – as the boys were joining their father in publicly flogging presidential contender Joe Biden's son Hunter for leveraging his family's name in business dealings in Ukraine and China.<sup>103</sup>	15, 17 (15)

10-11-19 +	Fox submits; One America rises. On October 11, Shepard Smith, a Fox News anchor who had incurred Mr. Trump's wrath for occasionally criticizing him, announced his resignation from the network. The announcement followed a meeting that Attorney General Barr had had at the home of Fox's owner, Rupert Murdoch.<sup>104</sup> On the same day, The Washington Post reported on Mr. Trump's growing fondness for the One America News Network – a competitor of Fox that was even more pro-Trump, and even more embedded in the trafficking of conspiracy theories. Of One America, Mr. Trump had recently tweeted, “Thank you to @OANN One America News for your fair coverage and brilliant reporting. It is appreciated by many people trying so hard to find a new, consistent and powerful VOICE!”<sup>105</sup> On October 13, The New York Times detailed Mr. Trump's demand for complete loyalty from Fox, notwithstanding their already symbiotic relationship (also detailed by The Times).<sup>106</sup>	1, 9
10-11-19	McAleenan out. Acting Secretary of Homeland Security Kevin McAleenan resigned, after having served only six months. Observers speculated on the reasons: he had publicly criticized the "tone" of Mr. Trump's immigration policy; he was not liked by hard-line anti-immigration actors; and he was not trusted by Mr. Trump. McAleenan was the fourth person to head the department during the less than three years of the Trump presidency, following John Kelly, Elaine Duke and Kirstjen Nielsen.<sup>107</sup>	6, and Chaos
10-11-19	In Louisiana, profanely. At a campaign rally in Lake Charles, Louisiana, Mr. Trump denounced the impeachment inquiry profanely, to the crowd's delight. He called it "a lot of crap" and "bullshit." He condemned the "unholy alliance of corrupt Democrat politicians, deep-state bureaucrats and the fake news media." He attacked the Bidens (still without evidence) for alleged corrupt activities with respect to Ukraine, and he said that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi "hates the United States of America."<sup>108</sup>	1, 7, 9
10-11-19	An "absolute right" to rule. A Washington Post columnist compiled the many times Mr. Trump and his surrogates had claimed that he had the "absolute right" to govern as he wished.<sup>109</sup> CSD urges readers to review the episodes.	9

10-11-19	Here comes the judge. Mr. Trump lost five federal court cases in one day: three barring his restrictions on issuing green cards for immigrants who draw public benefits; one rejecting his raiding of military funds to build his border wall; and one allowing Congress to subpoena his business records from his accounting firm.<sup>110</sup> As a businessman Mr. Trump had litigated extensively and often abusively; and as president he had extensively and abusively tested the limits of presidential authority in ways that had delivered unprecedented amounts of court losses. Predictably, he planned to appeal all five of this day's rulings.<sup>111</sup>	9
10-12-19	Barr preaches. In a speech at Notre Dame Law School, Attorney General William Barr, a practicing Catholic, blamed progressives and secularists for a concerted attack on religion and "traditional moral values," which in turn (he said) had generated violence, mental illness, suicide, drug abuse, broken families, and so forth. Specifically, he said: "This is not decay. It is organized destruction. Secularists, and their allies among the 'progressives,' have marshaled all the force of mass communications, popular culture, the entertainment industry, and academia in an unremitting assault on religion and traditional values." The country's chief law enforcement officer, he said that only the Judeo-Christian tradition can save us – thus cutting out not only Hindus, Buddhists, Muslims and members of other faiths, but the religiously unaffiliated – who had come to comprise a fifth of Americans (the same number as Catholics).<sup>112</sup> He ignored Mr. Trump's simulation of coitus at the October 10 rally in Minnesota.	17 (6, 9)
10-13-19	The bloody video. At a conference for supporters at Mr. Trump's Doral resort in Miami, Florida, right-wing provocateurs showed a fanciful video depicting Mr. Trump shooting and stabbing his media and political adversaries.<sup>113</sup>	17 (1, 5)
10-14-19	Just the facts. The Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now made 13,435 false or misleading statements during his 1,000 days in office, for an average of 13.5 untruths per day. Some 250 of those claims pertained to the Ukraine scandal (which had begun only weeks previous) and the associated impeachment inquiry.<sup>114</sup>	7

10-16-19	The meltdown. At a White House news conference with the visiting Italian president haplessly looking on, Mr. Trump reacted to reporters' questions on various topics by attacking: the Kurds (the direct victims of the withdrawal); Senator Lindsey Graham (who had criticized it); James Comey, Andrew McCabe, James Clapper, John Brennan, Lisa Page and Peter Strzok (former Justice Department and national security figures whom he had long accused of corruptly targeting him); President Obama (now accusing his predecessor explicitly of trying to rig the 2016 election); NATO members (for what he considered to be their inadequate military spending); Pelosi and Schiff (who were leading the impeachment investigation in Congress); ABC News; and Google and Amazon (easy scapegoats for any mob). In answering questions about his withdrawal of American troops from Syria, he did not criticize Turkey or Russia.<sup>115</sup> Later that day, and for the third time in less than nine months, a meeting between Mr. Trump and Pelosi ended in incivility and with one of them walking out. In this instance, the purpose of the meeting was to seek a solution for the chaos that had erupted in northern Syria after Mr. Trump's troop withdrawal. Pelosi and other Democrats in attendance said that Mr. Trump, under pressure from both the Syria crisis and the impeachment inquiry, had a "meltdown" and resorted to a derogatory rant, aimed mainly at Pelosi, after which Pelosi left the room. True to form, Mr. Trump quickly reacted by accusing his adversary of his own shortcomings. He tweeted: "Nancy Pelosi needs help fast! There is either something wrong with her 'upstairs,' or she just plain doesn't like our great Country. She had a total meltdown in the White House today. It was very sad to watch. Pray for her, she is a very sick person!"<sup>116</sup> Who in fact had melted down? One of them was not telling the truth.	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12

10-17-19 +	G-7 to the Doral. On October 17, The White House announced that the 2020 G-7 meeting for world leaders would be held at Mr. Trump's Doral resort in Miami, Florida. Mr. Trump had drawn sharp criticism when floating that idea at the last G-7 meeting (see CSD's entry of August 24-26); but now he confirmed the plan. The resort was struggling financially, vacant rooms would now be filled during the slow summer season, and Mr. Trump stood to enjoy not only the revenues from the event but an international advertisement of the property at taxpayer expense. Ethics experts found the decision to be Mr. Trump's most obvious violation of the Constitution to date. The Washington Post reported pithily: "That decision is without precedent in modern American history: The president used his public office to direct a massive contract to himself." That is to say, it was a blatant act of self-dealing, a violation of the Constitution's emoluments clause, and a seemingly gratuitous and defiant taunt directed toward his critics – effectively, that he could act as corruptly as he wished with impunity, while branding others (such as the Bidens, President Obama, Hillary Clinton and the previous Justice Department) as corrupt. Indeed, Mr. Trump's acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney righteously said shortly afterwards that the White House would "absolutely not" reveal how the selection of the Doral for the event had occurred.<sup>117</sup> As the news sunk in, observers noted that if any other federal employee had awarded himself such a contract, he likely would have been convicted of a felony and jailed.<sup>118</sup> Reacting to the fierce outcry that ensued, including criticisms from some of the anticipated foreign attendees, on October 19 Mr. Trump reversed, announcing that the summit would not be held at the Doral. He blamed Democrats and the media; but in fact it was congressional Republicans who had forced him to withdraw his plan.<sup>119</sup> Mulvaney meanwhile said of him, "At the end of the day, he still considers himself to be in the hospitality business"<sup>120</sup> – remarkably appearing to characterize that outlook as a benign justification for the attempted self-dealing, rather than as evidence of its colossal wrongheadedness. [Continued below.]	15
-------------------	--	-----------

10-17-19 +	[Continued.] All of this fit the pattern (earlier reported in this Addendum on September 2 +) of Mr. Trump promoting his businesses while in office. On October 20, Politico detailed how Mr. Trump had been "constantly" boasting about his hotel and resort properties to foreign and domestic leaders, and how they had routinely flattered him by mentioning and patronizing those properties. "The remarks are permeating every membrane of his presidency so much that they've left aides and allies mastering verbal jiu-jitsu to defend his unprecedented approach to fusing personal business interests with his position in high office," Politico wrote. "He talks up his properties every chance he gets with anyone — with staff, with members of Congress, with the press, with the public, with foreign leaders, with anyone," said a former White House official. "That's what he has done. He's been a salesman. He's been a PR person for his properties for the last 50 years, so almost out of force of habit, that's what he does." But the problem went beyond mere self-promotion: it had threatened (or conceivably achieved) actual self-enrichment, by way of swapping diplomatic favors for foreign patronage of or assistance to his businesses. As president (Politico continued), by now Mr. Trump had met with leaders of at least 20 countries where he had had or was developing a property, and in three of those cases state-owned companies were involved in the development plans. Officials from up to 57 foreign countries had spent money at Trump properties. One member of Congress posed that Mr. Trump's foreign dealings could expose him to blackmail and to associated intelligence risks. But asked by reporters to explain, Mr. Trump denied any improprieties, instead responding, "I have a lot of hotels all over the place, and people, they use them because they're the best." As for Mr. Trump's own use of what was his, at taxpayer expense he had by now visited his properties more than 300 times since his presidency began. The White House had recently defied congressional requests for details on not only the Doral fiasco but Vice President Mike Pence's stay at a Trump resort in Ireland (see CSD's report of September 2 + on the Irish incident).<sup>121</sup>	15

10-18-19	Down the Hatch. Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, a watchdog organization, reported that Mr. Trump's surrogate Kellyanne Conway had by now violated the Hatch Act more than 50 times in 2019 by campaigning for Mr. Trump through her official Twitter posts alone – and that Mr .Trump had declined to discipline her. When previously confronted by a reporter with the pattern of those Hatch Act offenses, Conway had said, "Blah, blah, blah ... Let me know when the jail sentence starts."<sup>122</sup>	9, 17 (9)

10-21-19	One fumes; one's Cabinet submits. Mr. Trump conducted a televised Cabinet meeting. As measured by his chaotic, self-serving streaming and the other attendees' silent servility, it appeared to surpass even his June 2017 Cabinet session in which the attendees had serially and fawningly praised him, at his invitation. The Washington Post wrote of the new episode: "Under Trump, Cabinet meetings have become less about the business of his Cabinet than an opportunity for the president to invite in the assembled press to boast of his own accomplishments, lash out at his critics and to hear the praise flow forth from advisers seated around a large oval table." As reported by The Post, highlights of this day's meeting included the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• A large cardboard poster titled "CHAMPIONS" appeared behind Mr. Trump's head.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump again boasted of personally being responsible for the capture if ISIS soldiers. "I'm the one who did the capturing," he said. "I'm the one who knows more about it than you people [the press] or the fake pundits."</li> <li>• He advertised his Doral resort in Miami, Florida at length. "I'm very good at real estate," he said. He denied receiving constitutionally forbidden "emoluments" through his hotel and resort properties, calling either the emoluments clause or the charge against him "phony" (interpretations varied). He said that holding the summit at the Doral "would have been the best G-7 ever" had he not been forced to withdraw the plan. He denied that he would have benefited from the property's promotion had the summit been held there, claiming, "I don't need promotion. I get more promotion than any human that's ever lived." He falsely stated that a benefit of holding the event at the Doral would have been that the Miami airport is the world's largest – when in fact it's not even in the top 20. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	1, 7, 9, 11

10-21-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He repeated his claim that his presidency was costing him between $2 billion and $5 billion – a claim for which there was neither evidence nor reasoned explanation.</li> <li>• For his ability to draw crowds at rallies, he said, "I can set a world record for somebody without a guitar."</li> <li>• He implied that House Intelligence Committee chair Adam Schiff had conspired with the Ukraine scandal's whistleblower to unseat him.</li> <li>• He falsely accused President Obama of improperly making book and movie deals while still in office.</li> <li>• He mocked President Obama for not having succeeded in meeting with North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un (even though his own meetings with Kim appeared to have backfired thus far, by his having praised and legitimized the dictator while getting little if anything in return).</li> <li>• He said that "lowlifes" (including leading congressional Republicans?) were trying to keep him from extracting the U.S. from foreign wars, such as in Syria.<sup>123</sup></li> </ul>	1, 7, 9, 11
10-21-19	Isolation, capriciously. Following reports that in addition to unilaterally withdrawing troops from Syria Mr. Trump had been quietly and unilaterally withdrawing troops from Afghanistan, a New York Times analysis recounted the multiple occasions on which Mr. Trump had undertaken such grave actions: hastily, without the support of his advisors, without winning anything in return from America's adversaries, and without any apparent strategy other than to honor his campaign promise to end America's involvement in foreign wars. The Times wrote: "[V]eteran diplomats, foreign policy experts and key lawmakers fear that Mr. Trump is squandering American power and influence in the world with little to show for it. By pulling troops out unilaterally, they argue, Mr. Trump has emboldened America's enemies and distressed its allies. ... [Continued below.]	10, 12, 13

10-21-19	[Continued.] Paraphrasing a former diplomat, The Times continued: "Mr. Trump ... often seems more interested in pleasing autocrats like Kim Jong-un of North Korea and President Recep Tayyip Erdogan of Turkey than in organizing any kind of coherent policymaking process to consider the pros and cons. 'When he canceled the South Korea military exercises, the only person he consulted was Kim Jong-un,' [the ex-diplomat] said. 'The decision to abandon the Kurds [in Syria] came after a brief phone call with Erdogan. So they weren't taken because he had personally reflected on the strategic disposition of American forces around the world. They were taken after he took the counsel of strongmen over that of his own advisers.' The Times then noted Mr. Trump's response to those charges, as expressed in his October 21 Cabinet meeting: "You know what we're getting out of it? We're bringing our soldiers back home. That's a big thing. And it's going to probably work. But if it doesn't work, you're going to have people fighting like they've been fighting for 300 years. It's very simple. It's really very simple."<sup>124</sup> That is, in CSD's view, he ignored the benefits to American citizens of keeping foreign terrorism, nuclear adventurism and violent instability in check – all of which were indeed complicated.	10, 12, 13
10-22-19	The news: canceled. The White House announced that it had canceled its subscriptions to The New York Times and The Washington Post.<sup>125</sup> Presumably if White House staffers were now to access those leading repositories of objective truth they would have to do so on their own.	1
10-22-19	The business of science. After two years of latency, Mr. Trump revived the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology by appointing one member from academia and six from industry. Most recent presidents had placed academics in the majority.<sup>126</sup>	8

10-23-19	Provoking in Pittsburgh. Speaking at an energy industry event in Pittsburgh and backed on the podium by a phalanx of burly men wearing hardhats, Mr. Trump pointedly insinuated that a group of protesters at the event should be assaulted. The group was objecting to what it saw as Mr. Trump's racism and xenophobia having incited the massacre at the Tree of Life Synagogue in Pittsburgh a year previous. Mr. Trump said, with an exaggerated wink, and to laughter and applause from the crowd, “Yeah, don’t hurt him. Don’t hurt him, please. They don’t know they’re dealing with very tough people in this room. Oh, they don’t know who they’re dealing with. They don’t know who they’re dealing with. They just don’t understand. All right. Go home to mom. Explain to mom that you tried to take on very powerful people, and many of them physically as well as mentally. That’s not a good thing to do — not in this room. Be careful. Make sure you don’t hurt them, please. Thank you.”<sup>127</sup>	3, 5
10-23-19	A friend in Hungary. The New York Times exposed David Cornstein, Mr. Trump's ambassador to Hungary, as a slavish enabler of Victor Orban, that country's authoritarian, xenophobic and anti-Semitic strongman. Like U.S. Ambassador Gordon Sondland in the EU (as described below relative to the impeachment inquiry), Cornstein was a wealthy businessman with no diplomatic experience who appeared, at Mr. Trump's instruction; to have hijacked the State Department's agenda in-country; to have kept State's regular officials in the dark about his activities; to have foregone briefings; to have spent government funds lavishly in the performance of his mission; and to have indulged in-country corruption. Cornstein's qualification for the position? – his decades-long friendship with Mr. Trump.<sup>128</sup>	17 (12, 13)
10-24-19	Another judge "not qualified." For the fifth time, at Mr. Trump's behest, the Republican-majority Senate approved his nomination, for a lifetime position, of a judge rated "not qualified" by the non-partisan American Bar Association. The latest appointee had never participated in a court-room trial but was a conservative ideologue.<sup>129</sup> Although all recent presidents had nominated at least some judges based at least in part on their ideologies, Mr. Trump had consistently done so, and sometimes, as now, without regard to their technical abilities – a purely political abuse of the judiciary. Many of Mr. Trump's record-breaking number of appointees were in their 30s and 40s, such that they could be expected to serve – with or without qualification – for up to 50 years.	2

10-24-19	Investigating the investigators – criminally. The New York Times reported that Attorney General William Barr's Justice Department had newly launched a criminal investigation into the origins of DOJ's earlier investigation of Mr. Trump's campaign, relative to the campaign's involvement with Russia's election tampering in the 2016 election. Mr. Trump had long sought to prove an anti-Trump conspiracy within the DOJ in that regard – and that but for the conspiracy the large-scale Mueller investigation would never have arisen. Barr too had been keenly pursuing the theory; and now he apparently sought to put DOJ officials in jail for having properly done their jobs in investigating Russia's interference.<sup>130</sup> Implications of the investigation included criminalizing federal law enforcement efforts for political purposes, and thus chilling the willingness of investigators and prosecutors to probe the activities of the current president, any president, any other politician, or any other individual whom the then current presidential administration might want to protect or seek vengeance for.	9
10-24-19	Lining one's pockets. Open Secrets, a campaign finance watchdog organization, reported that Mr. Trump's properties had grossed approximately $20 million from campaign fundraising events since the start of the 2016 election cycle. Most of those receipts – $16.8 million – had come from Mr. Trump's own campaigns; that is, at Trump events, he had brought in not only donations but commercial revenues. Other receipts had come from the campaigns of some of Mr. Trump's congressional supporters.<sup>131</sup> (As to the latter phenomenon, see CSD's entry of September 2 + above, in which an observer had characterized such payments as mafia-style "tribute.")	15
10-25-19	No cloud for Amazon. The Defense Department awarded a $10 billion cloud computing contract to Microsoft rather than to industry leader and front-running bidder Amazon. As CSD had reported on August 1, Mr. Trump had personally intervened in the bidding with a suspected view to foiling Amazon's founder and leader Jeff Bezos, whom Mr. Trump detested. (Bezos also owned Mr. Trump's antagonist, The Washington Post, and he was wealthier than Mr. Trump.) Amazon was expected to contest the contract award as biased.<sup>132</sup>	9, 11

10-27-19	Baghdadi "died like a dog." In announcing the killing of ISIS leader Abu Bakr Al-Baghdadi by American troops in northwestern Syria – a significant military achievement – Mr. Trump risked ruining his moment by telling reporters that Baghdadi "died like a dog. He died like a coward. He was whimpering, screaming and crying. ... He was a gutless animal."<sup>133</sup> CSD and some other observers were alarmed at that language. First, it did not appear to be true: its accuracy was suspect from the beginning, and even days later journalists were not able to corroborate with any other officials Baghdadi's end-of-life behavior.<sup>134</sup> Second, Mr. Trump himself was not known to have ever shown physical valor; like many of his insults and boasts, his rant facially suggested that he would have been braver than Baghdadi, but actually suggested that he might be projecting onto Baghdadi a cowardice that was closer to home. Third, no other modern American president would have made such a vicious and inflammatory public statement when seeking to promote America's image as one of tolerance and reason, a national profile to be emulated. We doubt that the leaders of Europe, Russia or China would make such a boast in like circumstances. Rather, it was a statement such as might be uttered by a terrorist, a small-time dictator or a professional wrestler (the last of these roles being one that Mr. Trump had parodically aped on occasion); and Mr. Trump had now brought America down to those rhetorical levels. But most importantly, the statement was almost certainly counterproductive, relative to winning hearts and minds in the military and diplomatic theater. The politics of insult and resentment, on which Mr. Trump had long played in the U.S. domestically, knows no bounds in securing ethnic and religious animosities for generations. We feared that his words could be remembered by many Muslims, worldwide, forever.<sup>135</sup> Other significant features of Mr. Trump's remarks on the occasion of announcing Al-Baghdadi's death: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He described the death in gruesome detail, as no other world leader likely would have done. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	10, 11

10-27-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He described the operation extensively and theatrically, as President Obama had not done when announcing the elimination of Osama bin Laden. For example, true to his history as a television showman, he said that watching the operation unfold in real-time video from the White House's Situation Room had been "like you were watching a movie" – and he recited the dramatic elements. The New York Times wrote, "All presidents make military victories their own, but for Mr. Trump, that movie was a lot about him."</li> <li>• He said, with incoherent reasoning, that the outcome was more important than the elimination of Osama bin Laden.</li> <li>• He revealed what would ordinarily have been treated as classified information – such as the number of U.S. helicopters deployed in the raid and the method of breaching Al-Baghdadi's compound – drawing instant criticism from national security professionals.</li> <li>• He repeated his oft-told and highly exaggerated tale that in one of his books he had predicted Bin Laden's September 11, 2001 attacks on the U.S. He added, "I wrote 12 books, all did very well."</li> <li>• He lavished praise on Russia for its cooperation in the action. But he criticized Europe for not taking back captive ISIS terrorists of European origin. And he gave only a nod to the Kurds (who reportedly had provided the most useful intelligence), pointedly downplaying their role.</li> <li>• He had advised Russia in advance of the operation, as well as some Republican congressional leaders, but no Democratic leaders, for fear that they (but not Russia) would leak the news.</li> <li>• He repeated his frequent and highly inflammatory call for the U.S. to (illegally) seize and exploit for itself the oil fields in Syria as earned spoils of war.</li> <li>• Of ISIS leaders, he said, "They use the Internet better than almost anybody in the world, perhaps other than Donald Trump."<sup>136</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	10, 11
-----------------	---	---------------

10-27-19	[Continued.] In his comments Mr. Trump did not undertake to square the important and successful military operation with his precipitous withdrawal of troops from the theater only weeks previous.<sup>137</sup> In fact The New York Times reported that the withdrawal had complicated the operation and had made it more risky; even that "Mr. al-Baghdadi's death in the raid ... occurred largely in spite of, and not because of, Mr. Trump's actions."<sup>138</sup> The Times further wrote about Mr. Trump's strategic incoherence: "The death of the Islamic State's leader in a daring nighttime raid vindicated the value of three traditional American strengths: robust alliances, faith in intelligence agencies and the projection of military power around the world. But President Trump has regularly derided the first two. And even as he claimed a significant national security victory on Sunday, the outcome of the raid did little to quell doubts about the wisdom of his push to reduce the United States military presence in Syria at a time when terrorist threats continue to develop in the region."<sup>139</sup>	10, 11
10-31-19	Jimmying the UK election. Calling in to a U.K. radio show hosted by far-right politician Nigel Farage, Mr. Trump praised one candidate for prime minister (Conservative Boris Johnson) while disparaging another (Labour's Jeremy Corbyn). Many Britons were outraged by what they saw as foreign interference in their national election. Indeed, because Mr. Trump was widely reviled in the U.K., his disparagement of Corbyn was seen as a possible boost to Corbyn's campaign.<sup>140</sup>	10
11-1-19	In Mississippi. At a campaign rally in Tupelo, Mississippi, Mr. Trump told attendees that the House's recent vote to advance its impeachment inquiry against him was a "witch hunt" and an "attack on Democracy itself." He said that the charge that he had pressured Ukraine's president by phone to investigate presidential contender Joe Biden were preposterous. "Now I'm an honest person anyway," he said, "but do you think when I'm making a call to a newly elected president of a country that I would say something improper when I know so many people are listening on the line?" He also said, "The Democrats voted to potentially nullify the votes of 63 million Americans, disgracing themselves and bringing shame upon the House of Representatives. Make no mistake they are coming after the Republican Party and me because I'm fighting for you." [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 11

11-1-19	[Continued.] Mr. Trump also repeated without evidence that ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi had died cowering in fear; and he claimed that the press didn't sufficiently cover al-Baghdadi's elimination because a Republican administration had done it. As for his reelection campaign, Mr. Trump said that presidential contender Beto O'Rourke, "that poor bastard – poor, pathetic guy" who had just ended his candidacy, had "quit like a dog"; that contender Joe Biden was mentally deficient; and as for the Democrats generally, that "we're kicking their ass."<sup>141</sup>	1, 7, 9, 11

The Impeachment Inquiry
(A separate section of Addendum 26)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 1, 4, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 and 17 as defined in CSD's Statement of Principles.

9-5-19	A scheme is suspected. The Washington Post's editorial board opined with conviction that Mr. Trump's continuing refusal to release $250 million in congressionally appropriated military aid to Ukraine's new, reformist government was driven by two motives: Mr. Trump's well-known affection for and palliation of Ukraine's nemesis, Russian President Vladimir Putin; and his attempt to extort from Ukraine evidence of corruption on the part of Mr. Trump's presidential rival, Joe Biden, and Biden's son Hunter.<sup>142</sup> That is, as in his prior encouragement of Russian election meddling, Mr. Trump was now seen as seeking a foreign government's help in skewing an American election, and as compromising America's national security to advance his personal interests. (News media and CSD had originally reported on the withholding of the $250 million in military aid on August 8 and 9. The actual figure would subsequently be reported to be $391 million.) The corruption allegation had turned on Hunter having served for pay on the board of a Ukrainian gas company by having traded on his father's name to secure the position; and then on Joe (together with many other anti-corruption voices in the U.S. and Europe) having pressed Ukraine to remove a corrupt prosecutor who had been investigating that company. There had been no evidence that either Biden had acted corruptly. In fact for years Joe Biden had strenuously attempted to cleanse Ukraine of corruption.<sup>143</sup>
9-9-19	An investigation begins. Three House committees opened an investigation of the withholding of aid, and a Politico analysis advanced like suspicions.<sup>144</sup>
9-12-19	Military aid funds are released. Reacting to the uproar, the White House released the funds to Ukraine.<sup>145</sup>
9-13-19	A whistleblower's complaint. The House Intelligence Committee issued a subpoena to Joseph Maguire, the acting Director of National Intelligence, to produce to Congress an unidentified whistleblower's complaint which the intelligence community's inspector general, Michael Atkinson, had received and had characterized as credible and of "urgent concern." By law the intelligence agencies are obligated to inform Congress of such complaints immediately, but Maguire had declined to do so; instead he had improperly sought disclosure advice from Mr. Trump's highly partisan Justice Department; and so Atkinson had alerted the committee of the matter on his own.<sup>146</sup>

9-17-19	A secret promise. On September 17, media reported that the affair involved a leak and an inappropriate promise that Mr. Trump had recently made to a foreign leader. <sup>147</sup>
9-19-19	The whistleblower is blocked. CNN reported that both the White House and the Justice Department were blocking the delivery of the whistleblower's claim to Congress; also that the inspector general Atkinson and the whistleblower stood to be punished because of the Justice Department's willingness to second-guess the inspector general. <sup>148</sup>
9-19-19	It's Ukraine. The Washington Post and The New York Times reported that the episode involved Ukraine. <sup>149</sup>
9-19-19	Giuliani admits. Mr. Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani admitted on CNN television that he had asked the Ukrainian government to investigate presidential contender Joe Biden. <sup>150</sup> (News media and CSD had originally reported the same on May 9, above.)
9-20-19	Pointing the finger. Mr. Trump tweeted of the affair, " The Radical Left Democrats and their Fake News Media partners, headed up again by Little Adam Schiff [the Intelligence Committee chair], and batting Zero for 21 against me, are at it again! " But he then declined to deny to reporters that he had discussed Biden with a foreign leader, instead claiming that he could discuss anything he wanted. <sup>151</sup> He also alleged that the whistleblower was "partisan" (without knowing that person's identity), and that the charges were laughable. <sup>152</sup>
9-20-19	The ask. The Wall Street Journal reported that Mr. Trump had asked Ukraine's president, Volodymyr Zelensky, eight times to investigate Biden and his son. The Washington Post reported similarly, specifically noting a July 25 conversation between Mr. Trump and Zelensky. <sup>153</sup>
9-20-19	A quid pro quo? The Washington Post connected the dots among Giuliani's pressure on Ukraine, Mr. Trump's pressure on Ukraine, the withholding of the legislated military assistance, and an appearance of extortion for Mr. Trump's personal political gain; that is, that Mr. Trump had withheld the military assistance as a cudgel to force Ukraine to smear Biden, and had promised to deliver the aid only in exchange for the smear (soon to be widely referred to as a "quid pro quo.") <sup>154</sup> The New York Times reported similarly. <sup>155</sup> The Post also detailed the likelihood that Mr. Trump's ridicule and intimidation of the whistleblower out of a political animus could chill future federal whistleblowing. <sup>156</sup>

9-20-19	Blaming the press. Mr. Trump blamed the news media for the Ukrainian affair. <sup>157</sup>
9-21-19	Energized by the Mueller result. The Post noted that the call with Zelensky had occurred only a day after special prosecutor Robert Mueller's congressional testimony, when the Republican congressional reaction to that testimony had demonstrated that Mr. Trump could act illegally and corruptly with impunity – a conclusion that The Post felt he appeared to be eager to take advantage of by promptly pressuring his Ukrainian counterpart to smear Biden. The Post reported: "Trump's sense of himself as above the law has been reinforced throughout his time in office. As detailed in the Mueller report, he received help from a foreign adversary in 2016 without legal consequence. He sought to thwart the Russia investigation and possibly obstruct justice without consequence. Through the government, he has earned profits for his businesses without consequence. He has blocked Congress's ability to conduct oversight without consequence. Now he is alleged to have leveraged taxpayer dollars and U.S. military might to extort a foreign government for opposition research on a political opponent, and it is unclear what consequences, if any, he may face. Legal experts said it is extraordinary that Trump allegedly sought political assistance from a foreign government after a tortured, nearly three-year national conversation about the illegality of doing so. Asked what the president had learned from the Mueller investigation, former Watergate prosecutor Nick Akerman said, 'Nothing. Zero.'"<sup>158</sup>
9-22-19	Himself admits; and doesn't. On September 22, Mr. Trump acknowledged that he had raised corruption accusations against Biden during his July 25 call with Zelensky. But he maintained that that had been appropriate, and that he had not demanded anything in return. <sup>159</sup>
9-23-19	Closer to quid pro quo. On September 23, The Post reported that Mr. Trump, without consulting pertinent senior advisors and agencies, had frozen $391 million in military aid to Ukraine only days before his call with Zelensky. <sup>160</sup> Mr. Trump then confirmed that. <sup>161</sup>
9-24-19	Attacking Biden at the U.N. On September 24, The Post reported that Mr. Trump had made attacking Biden's alleged corruption (for which he had no evidence) his theme with reporters and foreign diplomats at the annual meeting of the United Nations General Assembly that was occurring at that time in New York. <sup>162</sup> (What he expected to gain by crusading on a domestic political matter with foreign leaders was unclear.)

9-24-19	The Yovanovitch ouster (1). The Post reported that some months previous Giuliani had orchestrated the ouster of Marie Yovanovitch – the corruption-fighting U.S. ambassador to Ukraine, who apparently had balked at Giuliani's efforts to smear Biden. With Yovanovitch gone, and in pursuit of those goals, Giuliani seized for himself the management of the U.S.-Ukraine relationship, without any diplomatic qualification or official portfolio, and for Mr. Trump's personal benefit.<sup>163</sup>
9-24-19	The impeachment inquiry begins. In a stunning move, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi announced that the House would begin an impeachment inquiry over the Ukraine matter.<sup>164</sup> Mr. Trump decried the new "Witch Hunt."<sup>165</sup>
9-24-19	The larger peril (1). A Post columnist pointed out the peril created by the vocal defense by Mr. Trump, Giuliani and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo of Mr. Trump's having asked Ukraine to investigate Biden. If left to stand, that behavior would create a precedent for future administrations to enlist the intelligence machinery of all manner of governments to spy on and denounce all manner of American citizens. It could even encourage those governments to initiate such spying, in the hopes of selling (for cash or otherwise) their findings to the then U.S. administration. The columnist asked rhetorically whether Pompeo would trust his own fate to a Ukrainian investigation.<sup>166</sup>
9-24-19	The larger peril (2). Still on September 24, another Post columnist pointed out that to deprive a foreign soldier of congressionally authorized military assistance on the political whim of an American president could decimate any trust that that soldier's government (or any government) would ever again have for an American strategic promise.<sup>167</sup>
9-25-19	The July 25 transcript; DOJ's blessing. The White House released a summary of the transcript of Mr. Trump's July 25 call with Zelensky. In it, Mr. Trump had persistently urged Zelensky to investigate Biden and to speak with Giuliani and Attorney General William Barr on that subject. Mr. Trump had also asked Zelensky to investigate and prove – baselessly<sup>168</sup> – that Ukrainians, not Russians, had hacked the Democratic National Committee's servers during his 2016 election campaign. In addition, Mr. Trump implied to Zelensky that he would further punish Yovanovitch – whom he considered to be an enemy but who still worked for the State Department – a new revelation that appalled and terrified American diplomats.<sup>169</sup> The summary also revealed Zelensky repeatedly flattering Mr. Trump and observing that he had stayed at the Trump Tower in New York.<sup>170</sup> After the release, Mr. Trump's Justice Department acknowledged that it had previously found the conversation not to have violated any law. The DOJ also, without authority, contradicted the findings of Atkinson (the inspector general) that the whistleblower's report was "urgent."<sup>171</sup>

9-25-19	An antecedent in April. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had called Zelensky in April within hours of Zelensky's election, urging him to speak with Giuliani about "corruption."
9-26-19	The whistleblower's complaint: out. The whistleblower's complaint, dated August 12, was released to the public. It had been sitting with Maguire (Mr. Trump's Director of National Intelligence) for over six weeks, notwithstanding Maguire's obligation under the law to send it to Congress within seven days. Congress had only learned of it and demanded to see it after Atkinson had told Intelligence Committee chair Adam Schiff of its existence in September. The complaint reported that (unnamed) White House officials had alerted the (still also unnamed) whistleblower to Mr. Trump's July 25 call with Zelensky and were "deeply disturbed" by it – that is, by Mr. Trump's apparent abuse of presidential power for personal gain. Those or other White House officials, however, then engaged in a concerted cover-up, as at least some of them had done before, according to the whistleblower. The complaint said that Mr. Trump “is using the power of his office to solicit interference from a foreign country in the 2020 U.S. election. This interference includes, among other things, pressuring a foreign country to investigate one of the President’s main domestic political rivals. The President’s personal lawyer, Mr. Rudolph W. Giuliani, is a central figure in this effort. Attorney General (William P.) Barr appears to be involved as well.”<sup>172</sup> The complaint also reported that the telephone transcript was being stored in a stand-alone, code-protected computer system together with other politically-sensitive transcripts, and that many named White House officials knew about and participated in that secret storage.<sup>173</sup>
9-26-19	Maguire testifies. Maguire – a Trump appointee – testified before the House Intelligence Committee. Although he dodged questions about why he had withheld the whistleblower's complaint from Congress, he praised the whistleblower himself.<sup>174</sup>
9-26-19	Intimidation. In a speech to US diplomats at the United Nations in New York, Mr. Trump shocked his audience by denouncing Biden, demanding to learn the whistleblower's identity, and accusing the whistleblower and/or his/her sources within the White House of treason, a capital offense – that is, in the Words of The Post, "alluding to violence and possible death." Mr. Trump thus not only turned the whistleblower's genuine patriotism on its head and demoralized diplomatic staff, but continued his pattern of attempting to intimidate witnesses and obstruct justice.<sup>175</sup> In a separate article, The Post reported that Mr. Trump and his allies had begun a "scorched-earth policy" "to attack the anonymous whistleblower, discredit the explosive accounts in their complaint, or malign the media for covering it."<sup>176</sup>

9-26-19	A timeline. The Post published a chronology of the Ukraine affair that it had assembled, demonstrating an alarming, months-long effort by Mr. Trump and Giuliani to pressure Zelensky into investigating Biden and into pinning the 2016 election interference on Ukraine rather than Russia. <sup>177</sup>
9-27-19	A pass for Russian meddling. The Post reported that, at a 2017 White House meeting, Mr. Trump had told two senior Russian officials that he would not object to Russia's meddling in American elections, because the U.S. did the same in other countries' elections. Aware of the seriousness of the episode, White House officials had hidden it from others, much as they more recently had hidden the Ukrainian transcript from others. <sup>178</sup>
9-27-19	Volker resigns. Kurt Volker, the State Department's Special Representative for Ukraine Negotiations, having been implicated in the scandal, resigned. <sup>179</sup>
9-28-19	Other secrets. CNN reported that the White House had also kept secret, to an extraordinary extent, the substance of phone calls between Mr. Trump and, respectively, Russian President Vladimir Putin and Saudi royalty. <sup>180</sup>
9-28-19	Rage. In a chilling news analysis, The Post wrote that Mr. Trump's rhetoric of victimization – how Democrats and the press had been relentlessly persecuting him – had grown inflamed in the course of the new Ukrainian scandal. For example, shortly after Pelosi announced the formalization of the impeachment inquiry, he had tweeted, "There has been no President in the history of our Country who has been treated so badly as I have." That type of rhetoric had served, and now continued to serve, as a major electoral theme that connected him to, and stoked the rage of, credulous voters who themselves felt persecuted by allegedly corrupt and conspiratorial government bureaucracies and by so-called cultural elites who allegedly looked down on them (regardless of whether his policies were actually helping them in any way). <sup>181</sup> Indeed, Mr. Trump's rage-based fundraising success was now reportedly turbo-charged. <sup>182</sup>
9-29-19	Traitors. Mr. Trump tweeted again that the whistleblower and/or his/her sources were "spies," now adding that Schiff should be "arrested for treason." Neither President Nixon nor President Clinton had resorted publicly to such demagogic and inflammatory allegations when defending themselves against impeachment.
9-29-19	Civil war. Mr. Trump re-tweeted this post by the fiery evangelical pastor and religious bigot Robert Jeffress: "If the Democrats are successful in removing the President from office (which they will never be), it will cause a Civil War like fracture in this Nation from which our Country will never heal." The tweet played to long-held right-wing conspiracy theories of an impending civil war initiated by the left. [ Continued below. ]

9-29-19	[Continued.] A Times columnist wrote of that: "[T]he Trump-media conspiracy flow chart is circular. Outlandish theories burble up from the depths and are laundered up through increasingly mainstream channels until they reach the president. Once amplified by Mr. Trump, the idea is lent more credence and is cited more frequently in right-wing media, which ultimately leads Mr. Trump to amplify it more aggressively. We're no closer to a (frankly ridiculous) civil war than we were two days or two weeks or two years ago. But it feels to some like we could be, and that matters."<sup>183</sup>          Nevertheless: for its own part, CSD found it well within the realm of possibility that Mr. Trump could call for or exploit civil violence as a means of remaining in office if he were to be removed, or even if he were to lose reelection in 2020.
9-30-19	A coup, and a bounty. MSNBC television reported that Mr. Trump had attacked the whistleblower's report and the impeachment inquiry more than 75 times on Twitter within the past three days.<sup>184</sup> Media also reported that Mr. Trump's campaign organization and several of his prominent supporters had come to publicly characterize the inquiry as a "coup d'état by elitist bureaucrats and Democrats" and an attempt to "steal" the 2020 presidential election.<sup>185</sup> Other Trump supporters were sleuthing the Internet with a view to unmasking the whistleblower, and some were offering a reward for his or her identification. The whistleblower's lawyer said that his client's life was imperiled.<sup>186</sup>
9-30-19	Pompeo's fib. The Wall Street Journal reported that Pompeo had himself participated in Mr. Trump's July 25 call with Zelensky, even though Pompeo had subsequently and publicly denied knowledge of the affair and had challenged the whistleblower's information as being second-hand.<sup>187</sup>
10-1-19	Pompeo's lock-down (1). Pompeo ripped a September 27 House Foreign Affairs Committee subpoena that was directed to himself and five other State Department officials who appeared likely to have knowledge of the Ukraine scandal. Pompeo claimed that the subpoena was an attempt to intimidate them, and he barred the subpoena targets from complying. The committee responded that that defiance was illegal, would amount to obstruction of justice, and was an obvious attempt to cover up some manner of wrongdoing.<sup>188</sup> Thus Pompeo, like Barr and Giuliani, appeared to be part of both the misdeeds and their cover-up. And thus, whether through servility or appetite, two top cabinet officials appeared to be directing their respective departments – State and Justice – in conducting high level undertakings for the personal benefit of Mr. Trump. For his part, Mr. Trump appeared to see those departments as his personal fiefdoms, comparable to the Trump Organization.

10-1-19 +	A coup and treason, again. Mr. Trump tweeted that the Democrats were attempting a "coup" against him. And for the third day in a row, he publicly demanded to learn the whistleblower's identity – contrary to the federal statute that expressly protects whistleblowers from being exposed and punished.<sup>189</sup> On October 2 he repeated that demand, and he again accused Schiff of "treason." As noted above, neither President Nixon nor President Clinton had resorted to such inflammatory and demagogic statements when defending themselves against impeachment.<sup>190</sup>
10-2-19	Giuliani's dossier. Giuliani delivered to the State Department's inspector general, Steve Linick, a package of documents advancing false conspiracy theories that attacked Biden and Yovanovitch. Linick then delivered them to Congress for its urgent attention – further demonstrating that Giuliani – presumably with Pompeo's consent – had commandeered the machinery of State to tarnish Mr. Trump's enemies and to advance his re-election campaign.<sup>191</sup>
10-3-19	Enlisting China. Doubling down despite the raging scandal, Mr. Trump publicly called for not only the Ukrainian government but also the Chinese government to investigate Biden – that is, for the ruthless Chinese dictatorship to influence a democratic American election.<sup>192</sup> Media then reported that Mr. Trump had raised the topic of Biden's candidacy directly with Chinese dictator Xi Jinping previously – by telephone, on June 18 – and had stored the record of that call in the same highly secured electronic system in which the record of the July 25 call with Zelensky would be stored.<sup>193</sup>
10-3-19	Pharma at fault. Without evidence, Mr. Trump accused the (unpopular) pharmaceutical industry of funding the Democrats' impeachment drive.<sup>194</sup>
10-3-19	Ads against Biden (1). CNN announced that it had refused to run Trump re-election campaign ads that falsely smeared Biden and CNN itself.<sup>195</sup>
10-3-19	The texts; Sondland. Three Democratic House committee chairs released texts by senior government officials from July and September making clear that Mr. Trump had planned to withhold from Zelensky both military assistance and an invitation to the White House unless he agreed to investigate Biden.<sup>196</sup> The main actor pressing Ukraine appeared to be Gordon Sondland, the U.S. ambassador to the European Union, who had had no previous diplomatic experience but whom Mr. Trump had appointed after he had given $1,000,000 to Mr. Trump's inauguration fund. The conspirators had communicated secretly by WhatsApp rather than through official State Department email.<sup>197</sup>

10-3-19	The Yovanovitch ouster (2). The Wall Street Journal confirmed that Mr. Trump had removed Yovanovitch from her ambassadorship because she had resisted pressing Ukraine to investigate Biden.<sup>198</sup>
10-4-19	Dangerous calls. The Post reported that interviews with a dozen top administration aides had revealed that they had long dreaded Mr. Trump's calls with foreign leaders such as the now notorious July 25 call with Zelensky. They had worried that Mr. Trump would "make promises he shouldn't keep, endorse policies the United States long opposed, commit a diplomatic blunder that jeopardized a critical alliance, or simply pressure a counterpart for a personal favor. There was a constant undercurrent ... [within senior staff] who were genuinely horrified by the things they saw that were happening on these calls," said one former White House official .... 'Phone calls that were embarrassing, huge mistakes he made, months and months of work that were upended by one impulsive tweet.'" Mr. Trump would enter the phone calls without preparation, veer wildly from prepared talking points, and unnecessarily cozy up to foreign dictators. Gory details appear in The Post's report. For example, at one point in 2018 he had harangued then British Prime Minister Theresa May at length, insisting – contrary to overwhelming evidence – that the Russians had not poisoned a former Russian spy, Sergei Skripal, on British soil.<sup>199</sup>
Various	Excuses and attacks. As the days passed, Mr. Trump – seemingly unable to defend the July 25 call on substance – instead resorted to a series of rhetorical defenses and excuses: that his conduct on the telephone call had been "perfect"; that the whistleblower's report was fallacious; that a more complete transcript existed (but that he did not produce); that even if he had pressured Zelensky, protecting America from corruption was the right thing to do; that if he himself was at fault, so was Pence; that Energy Secretary Rick Perry had been the one to press for the phone call; that bureaucrats and Democrats were gunning for him. He soon began charging his adversaries with his own misdeeds, displaying characteristic deception and cruelty – once again, something that neither Presidents Nixon nor Clinton had done when defending themselves against impeachment. For example: [Continued below.]

Various	[Continued.] On October 5, responding to Senator Mitt Romney's criticism of the July 25 call and the invitation to China to investigate Biden, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Somebody please wake up Mitt Romney and tell him that my conversation with the Ukrainian President was a congenial and very appropriate one, and my statement on China pertained to corruption, not politics. If Mitt worked this hard on Obama, he could have won. Sadly, he choked! ... Mitt Romney never knew how to win. He is a pompous 'ass' who has been fighting me from the beginning, except when he begged me for my endorsement for his Senate run (I gave it to him), and when he begged me to be Secretary of State (I didn't give it to him). He is so bad for R's! ... I'm hearing that the Great People of Utah are considering their vote for their Pompous Senator, Mitt Romney, to be a big mistake. I agree! He is a fool who is playing right into the hands of the Do Nothing Democrats! #IMPEACHMITTROMNEY."<sup>200</sup> (U.S. senators cannot be impeached.) (On October 11, Mr. Trump confirmed to reporters that his invitation for China to investigate Biden was not a joke.<sup>201</sup>) Also: On October 6, Mr. Trump tweeted: "Nancy Pelosi knew of all of the many Shifty Adam Schiff lies and massive frauds perpetrated upon Congress and the American people, in the form of a fraudulent speech [in which Schiff, for effect, had plainly exaggerated the contents of the July 25 call<sup>202</sup>] knowingly delivered as a ruthless con, and the illegal meetings [by Schiff's staff] with a highly partisan 'Whistleblower' &amp; lawyer. ... This makes Nervous Nancy every bit as guilty as Liddle' Adam Schiff for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and even Treason. I guess that means that they, along with all of those that evilly 'Colluded' with them, must all be immediately Impeached!" As noted above, neither President Nixon nor President Clinton had resorted to such inflammatory, demagogic statements when defending themselves against impeachment. Also: On October 7, Mr. Trump told reporters: "What they [the Democrats] did to this country is unthinkable. It's lucky that I'm the president. A lot of people said very few people could handle it. I sort of thrive on it. You can't impeach a president for doing a great job. This is a scam."<sup>203</sup>
10-4-19	Pompeo's lock-down (2). Pompeo failed to meet a deadline set forth in a House committee subpoena for turning over documents relating to the impeachment inquiry, and he indicated that he might not comply.<sup>204</sup>
10-6-19	A first. The Times reported that a broad survey of top aides to previous presidents confirmed that none had ever sought or would have even considered seeking political assistance from a foreign government.<sup>205</sup>
10-7-19	Pompeo's lock-down (3). A State Department official failed to appear at a planned committee deposition.<sup>206</sup>

10-8-19	Pompeo's lock-down (4). Mr. Trump and the State Department blocked Sondland from testifying before Congress just hours prior to his scheduled deposition. The department also refused to turn over text messages from Sondland's personal electronic device. The department was patently hiding something about Sondland's involvement in the Ukraine scandal from Congress, and thus obstructing Congress.<sup>207</sup>
10-8-19	A lawyer letter. In an invective-filled letter addressed to Pelosi and the (Democratic) chairs of three House committees that were investigating the Ukraine affair, White House counsel Pat Cipollone wrote that the Trump administration would not cooperate in the investigation.<sup>208</sup> True to Mr. Trump's style, Cipollone charged the Democrats with his own client's misdeeds – acting politically and unconstitutionally, with a view to influencing the 2020 presidential election. His arguments: that the impeachment inquiry was proceeding without a House floor vote; without presentation of evidence; without an opportunity for Mr. Trump to confront witnesses, to have counsel at hearings, and to respond with his own evidence; without Republican committee members being allowed to issue subpoenas; and while threatening punishment for witnesses who refused to appear under claim of executive privilege. He also insisted that the July 25 phone call, as evidenced by the transcript, had been completely "appropriate." He claimed that Schiff's exaggerated parody of the transcript amounted to fraud; that Schiff had lied in publicly denying having had direct contact with the whistleblower before the whistleblower had filed his/her complaint with the inspector general; and that Schiff had actually orchestrated the complaint. Cipollone closed his letter with a salute to Mr. Trump's extraordinary leadership of the country, and a demand that Mr. Trump not be distracted from that honorable work by an impeachment inquiry.<sup>209</sup> None of that was true. The transcript of the call showed Mr. Trump's plainly corrupt shake-down of Zelensky. Schiff himself had quickly made clear that his parody of the transcript was just that. Schiff's early involvement with the whistleblower had been quite indirect, having consisted of an Intelligence Committee staffer receiving the whistleblower's call and then directing him/her to the inspector general.<sup>210</sup> And Mr. Trump had not exhibited anything remotely resembling extraordinary leadership of the country.  [Continued below.]

10-8-19	[Continued.] As for Cipollone's technical characterization of the proceedings to date, it was largely accurate. But he had no legal or ethical grounds to demand that the House proceed otherwise: because impeachment is not a criminal proceeding, the president is not entitled to criminal standards of due process; rather, the Constitution allows the House to impeach as it will. Indeed, Cipollone did not claim executive privilege in declining to cooperate, or any other compelling legal doctrine – only, seemingly, the president's (claimed) right to decide what was constitutional relative to his own impeachment – which made no sense under the Constitution.<sup>211</sup> Most importantly, Cipollone's motive for objecting to the House proceedings appeared utterly corrupt – an attempt to politically disparage a legitimate inquiry, and to deploy abusive and dilatory forensic tactics comparable to those that Mr. Trump had relied on throughout his career to evade the law. Cipollone's characterization of the forensics also ignored the stonewalling that Mr. Trump and his supporters had proudly committed to throughout the Mueller investigation and the post-Mueller congressional investigations – well before the existence of any impeachment phenomenon. It ignored that Mr. Trump would have the opportunity to defend himself if and when he were impeached. It ignored that the very substance of the impeachment inquiry was Mr. Trump's own attempt to wrongfully influence the 2020 election. And of course it ignored the depraved and deeply unconstitutional behavior of Mr. Trump himself throughout his presidency, as documented in this Chronology. In reality, Mr. Trump's refusal to cooperate with the impeachment inquiry was simply one more effort to hide the truth and to obstruct Congress with respect to the Ukraine scandal. But through his many lawyers, and across many forensic proceedings – including this one, the Mueller investigation, the post-Mueller congressional investigations, and state financial and income tax investigations – he was also seen as advancing, sometimes to the horror of presiding judges, a heretical and (for America) a potentially calamitous ideological outlook: that the president has absolute power and is immune from all legal and constitutional checks.<sup>212</sup> Mr. Trump had expressly said as much on several occasions.<sup>213</sup> (See also CSD's entry of October 11 in the first portion of this Addendum for a discussion of Mr. Trump's repeated claim of an "absolute right" to govern.)

10-10-19	Fruman and Parnas. Federal agents arrested Igor Fruman and Lev Parnas at Dulles International Airport on charges of election finance violations as the two men were leaving the country on one-way air tickets. U.S. citizens, they had been born in Belarus and Ukraine, respectively. They were now accused of illegally contributing foreign money to American election campaigns through secret means; and their contributions appeared to be intended at least in part to buy influence for the benefit of their businesses (which included the sale of recreational marijuana) and of a Ukrainian political figure (later revealed to be the country's former chief prosecutor Yuriy Lutsenko, who had wanted Yovanovitch removed from her ambassadorship). They were now also revealed to have been engaged by Giuliani to dig up dirt on Biden in Ukraine, to investigate Giuliani's claim that Democrats had conspired with Ukrainians in the 2016 election, and to advance the removal of Yovanovitch. Together the men had contributed nearly $1,000,000 to Republican election campaigns, including at least $50,000 to Mr. Trump's 2016 campaign. Some of their funds had allegedly come from an unnamed Russian national. Some of their illegal election contributions had gone to former Texas Congressman Pete Sessions, who had then joined in the campaign against Yovanovitch. The men had at least once met personally with Mr. Trump, and they had attended events at the White House and at his Florida resort, Mar-a-Lago. They had also been substantial clients of Giuliani's law practice (and were later revealed to have paid his firm $500,000 in 2018 and 2019). They had been lunching with Giuliani only hours before their arrest.<sup>214</sup>
10-10-19	A Fox poll. Mr. Trump berated as inaccurate a Fox News poll showing that a majority of voters now wanted Mr. Trump impeached and removed from office. (He had previously praised the accuracy of Fox's polls when they had favored him.)<sup>215</sup>
10-10-19	The demagogue (1). At a campaign rally in Minneapolis, Minnesota, Mr. Trump said of the impeachment inquiry: “Democrats are on a crusade to destroy our democracy. That’s what’s happening. We will never let it happen. We will defeat them.”<sup>216</sup>
10-11-19	Pompeo's lock-down (5). Politico reported that the State Department was on "lockdown" relative to answering reporters' questions about Ukraine.<sup>217</sup>
10-10-19, 10-11-19	Giuliani in trouble (1). Media reported that federal prosecutors were investigating Giuliani's financial dealings with Fruman and Parnas, and his possible violation of lobbying laws that forbid covert foreign influence.<sup>218</sup>

10-11-19	Ads against Biden (2). Politico reported that Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, Fox and MSNBC were all running Mr. Trump's campaign ad that baselessly accused Biden of corruptly protecting his son Hunter in Ukraine. CNN had refused to air it.<sup>219</sup>
10-11-19	The demagogue (2). At a campaign rally in Lake Charles, Louisiana, Mr. Trump denounced the impeachment inquiry profanely, to the crowd's delight. He called it "a lot of crap" and "bullshit."<sup>220</sup>
10-11-19 +	Yovanovitch speaks. On October 11, Yovanovitch defied Pompeo's order, honored a congressional subpoena, and testified privately to House impeachment investigators. She confirmed that she had been relieved of her ambassadorship in Ukraine suddenly and at Mr. Trump's direction, following Giuliani's concerted and unfounded smear campaign. In particular, she said that Giuliani had falsely accused her of badmouthing the president and of seeking to protect the interests of Biden and his son Hunter.<sup>221</sup> Yovanovitch's courageous, honorable and patriotic opening statement (which was made public) was gripping, and it contrasted sharply with the corrupt designs of those who caused her removal.<sup>222</sup> Observers gradually pieced together the stunning implications of all this, that went well beyond the initially reported scandal: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. That evening, CNN television commentators observed that Giuliani's campaign against Yovanovitch (for Mr. Trump's benefit) had come together with the Ukrainian campaign against her (due to her anti-corruption efforts); also that the Trump/Giuliani "shadow foreign policy" in Ukraine (tolerating corruption and favoring Russia) had been the dead opposite of official U.S. policy (fighting corruption and seeking to protect Ukraine from Russia).<sup>223</sup></li> <li>2. On October 12, a Times columnist detailed how Mr. Trump and Giuliani had methodically allied themselves with some of Ukraine's most corrupt leaders and against the country's reformers. They thus had transformed the U.S. from a model for Ukraine's struggling but vibrant and forward-looking democracy into democracy's nemesis there.<sup>224</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ol>

10-11-19 +	[Continued.]  3. On October 14, The Post's editorial board wrote: "[Parnas and Fruman] sought the removal of Ambassador Marie Yovanovitch, whom they saw as an obstacle to their scheme to change the management of Ukraine's state energy company and strike a deal to sell it liquefied natural gas. ... [T]he bottom line is that there are now two dimensions to Mr. Trump's abuse of his office in Ukraine: his attempt to induce President Volodymyr Zelensky to launch investigations of former vice president Joe Biden and Ukraine's purported role in the 2016 election; and his removal of a competent and corruption-fighting ambassador who opposed a questionable venture by men who contributed to Mr. Trump's campaigns and did business with his personal lawyer. In one instance, Mr. Trump was attempting to advance his personal political interest. In the other, he was trashing the career of a distinguished Foreign Service professional and subverting U.S. foreign policy to serve shady private interests."<sup>225</sup>
10-11-19, 10-12-19	Giuliani in trouble (2). On October 11, The Times confirmed that federal prosecutors were investigating Giuliani for possible violations of lobbying laws that forbid covert foreign influence – specifically, for advocating for the removal of Yovanovitch as ambassador on behalf of a Ukrainian official. His financial ties to Fruman and Parnas were also being investigated.<sup>226</sup> Mr. Trump reacted the following day by tweeting that the "Deep State" was conducting a "Witch Hunt" against Giuliani.
10-12-19	Sue them! Speaking to a conservative group in Washington, Mr. Trump threatened to sue Schiff and Pelosi, and (again, as on October 6) he called for their impeachment. He said he didn't care if he would lose the lawsuit.<sup>227</sup> But no legitimate cause of action would lie in a lawsuit against the two; and thus Mr. Trump and his attorneys could incur penalties for abusing the court system by bringing such suits. And members of Congress are not subject to impeachment. Mr. Trump's threats nevertheless seemed intended to foment public fury against the two members of Congress – and, CSD feared, to jeopardize their physical security.
10-13-19	The whistleblower imperiled. Schiff said that the initial whistleblower might not testify before Congress, out of fear for his or her physical safety – fears stoked by Mr. Trump's tirades against that (as yet unidentified) person.<sup>228</sup>

10-14-19 +	Staffers speak. On October 14, Fiona Hill, a ranking National Security Council staffer and the White House's former top Russia advisor, defied a State Department order, complied with a congressional subpoena, and confirmed in testimony before House impeachment investigators that Giuliani and Sondland had run a shadow foreign policy in Ukraine that circumvented U.S. officials and career diplomats in order to personally benefit Mr. Trump. She stated that she considered Sondland to be a national security risk.<sup>229</sup> On October 15, George Kent, still the top State Department official tasked with Ukrainian Affairs – likewise defying State Department orders and complying with a subpoena – told the investigators much the same; also that he himself had been sidelined from Ukraine policy decision-making; also that Volker, Sondland, Mr. Trump's acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, and Energy Secretary Rick Perry had taken over in that decision-making.<sup>230</sup> On October 16, Michael McKinley, who had been one of Pompeo's top aides, told House impeachment investigators that he had resigned the previous week over Pompeo's mistreatment of Yovanovitch and over the administration's pressuring Ukraine to smear political adversaries.<sup>231</sup> On October 17, Sondland defied State Department orders, complied with a subpoena, and confirmed in testimony that Giuliani had wrongly taken over in Ukraine and pressured Ukraine to investigate the Bidens and the 2016 election. He also defended Yovanovitch and (dubiously) himself.<sup>232</sup>
10-15-19	More lock-downs. Pence, Giuliani, the Defense Department, the Office of Management and Budget all notified Congress that they would not cooperate with the impeachment investigation and would defy any congressional subpoenas.<sup>233</sup>
10-17-19	Mulvaney admits. Mulvaney casually admitted to reporters that Mr. Trump had withheld military aid from Ukraine in order to procure that country's help in the upcoming U.S. election. "We do that all the time with foreign policy," he said. "Get over it," he added later. "There's going to be political influence in foreign policy." Mr. Trump had previously denied that there was a "quid pro quo" as between his withholding of the aid and his pressure on Ukraine to investigate Democrats. Within hours, Mulvaney retracted his remarks and blamed the press for misrepresenting his (clear) statements.<sup>234</sup> But it barely mattered: the "quid pro quo" had already been amply established – by testimony, by documentary evidence, and by Mr. Trump's desperate attempts to block all pertinent fact-finding.

10-17-19	The demagogue (3). At a campaign rally in Dallas, Texas, Mr. Trump tore into the impeachment investigation. He said that the Democratic Party (not he) had "betrayed our country"; that "[a]t stake in this fight is the survival of American democracy itself" (true); that the Bidens had acted corruptly in Ukraine (still no evidence for this); that Pelosi is "crazy"; that "what they're really, really doing is they're coming after and fighting you, and we never lose"; and that he had a right to learn the identity of the whistleblower who had flagged the Ukraine shake-down (which would be illegal – and for that reason, despite his public exhortations to his supporters, even as president he had not been able to force his subordinates to unmask the person).<sup>235</sup>
10-18-19, 10-19-19	Still more lock-downs. On October 18, Perry – reportedly one of the masterminds of the Ukraine shake-down – announced his refusal to comply with a congressional subpoena one day after announcing his resignation.<sup>236</sup> On October 19, Russ Vought, the acting director of the Office of Management and Budget, announced that he would defy the subpoena that the House impeachment investigators had served on him.<sup>237</sup>
10-21-19	Whispering in the (orange) ear. Drawing on interviews and recent transcripts from the impeachment investigation, media reported that Mr. Trump appeared to truly believed that Ukraine had attempted to fix the 2016 American election against him by hacking the Democratic National Committee's computers and blaming that on Russia. He had come to that thinking from tales by Giuliani and from far-right American conspiracy websites; and his disdain for and suspicions about Ukraine had been further stoked by his conversations with two of Ukraine's anti-democratic adversaries – Russia's strongman Vladimir Putin and Putin's leading regional ally, Hungary's strongman Victor Orban. No one in the American intelligence community had believed any of the canards about Ukraine; and even Mr. Trump's staff had tried, unsuccessfully, to disabuse him of those views.<sup>238</sup>
10-21-19 +	Impeach Obama. On October 21, Mr. Trump told a Fox News interviewer that President Obama, not he, should have been impeached.<sup>239</sup> On October 22, he tweeted that the impeachment inquiry was a "lynching," thus incensing African American members of Congress.<sup>240</sup>
10-22-19 +	Taylor speaks. On October 22, William Taylor – the former ambassador to Ukraine, and now the chargé d'affaires and acting ambassador there – appeared privately before House impeachment investigators, in compliance with their subpoena and in defiance of Pompeo's prohibition. He confirmed in testimony that Mr. Trump had conditioned two things – delivering military aid to Ukraine and inviting Zelensky to the White House – on Zelensky announcing publicly that Ukraine would investigate both Biden and Ukraine's (non-existent) tampering with the 2016 U.S. election. [Continued below.]

10-22-19 +	[Continued.] Taylor also said that the Pentagon, the State Department, the CIA and the then national security advisor John Bolton had tried unsuccessfully to meet with Mr. Trump to convince him to release the aid. Taylor said that the White House's release of the transcript of Mr. Trump's July 25 call with Zelensky had blindsided and infuriated Zelensky. Taylor also confirmed that Sondland had directed the effort to smear Biden and to smear Democrats relative to the 2016 election, at Mr. Trump's instruction, and contrary to Sondland's recent congressional testimony. Giuliani, Perry, Mulvaney and Volker were also implicated in the scheme. The conspirators had originally attempted to keep Taylor from learning their plot, but when eventually they had let him in on it he had objected. A staunch advocate for the Ukrainian people and the democratization of their country, Taylor also said that it had been apparent to him that if the military aid were withheld, Ukrainian soldiers would die. Referring to other recent impeachment investigations, a Times reporter wrote: "While the Watergate and Monica Lewinsky cover-ups involved the integrity of America's democracy and system of justice, the Ukraine scandal also extends to matters of life and death, as well as geopolitics on a grand scale." Taylor appeared to be a man of unassailable military, academic and diplomatic credentials, as well as unquestionable patriotism and integrity, who had served both Democratic and Republican administrations. Mr. Trump himself had appointed him to his current position in Kiev after removing Yovanovitch from her ambassadorship in June.<sup>241</sup> The White House reacted to Taylor's testimony by calling it "a coordinated smear campaign from far-left lawmakers and radical unelected bureaucrats waging war on the Constitution."<sup>242</sup> Mr. Trump himself, by way of Twitter, called Taylor a "Never Trumper" (an anti-Trump Republican), and he called Never-Trumpers "human scum." He also said that he didn't know Taylor – his ultimate disparagement of someone whom he seeks to portray as insignificant.<sup>243</sup> On October 24, White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham heartily endorsed Mr. Trump's use of the word "scum" to describe Mr. Trump's adversaries.<sup>244</sup> Also on October 24, The Times reported from the front line in Ukraine's war with Russian-supported separatists, in which 13,000 so far had died. The Times went on to describe the potentially bleak consequences of U.S. withholding military assistance from Ukraine, as well as Mr. Trump's coddling of Russia in the conflict.<sup>245</sup>
10-23-19	Budget cuts for corruption. The Post reported that the Trump administration had sought repeatedly to cut foreign aid programs directed to combating corruption in Ukraine. [Continued below.]

10-23-19	[Continued.] Throughout the impeachment investigation, Mr. Trump and his subordinates had been claiming that Mr. Trump's stalling of military aid to the country and his request for dirt on the Bidens had been motivated by a desire to root out corruption there, and that he was obligated to Americans to effect that rooting out. But neither on his July 25 phone call with Zelensky nor otherwise did he appear to have been interested in fighting corruption in Ukraine more generally. His removal of the corruption-fighting Yovanovitch from the ambassadorship also belied his general interest in that topic. Meanwhile several federal agencies had found that anti-corruption efforts in Ukraine were making headway – that beating corruption there was actually possible.<sup>246</sup> So in reality, Mr. Trump seemed to be only after the Bidens.
10-23-19	Above the law, radically. One of Mr. Trump's lawyers argued that because and while he was serving as president, he constitutionally could not be subjected to any criminal investigation whatsoever – that only Congress could investigate (and then impeach) him. Responding to a judge's question as to whether a president could avoid investigation if he literally shot someone on Fifth Avenue (as Mr. Trump had once boasted he could do without losing votes), the lawyer affirmed that Mr. Trump could not then be investigated.<sup>247</sup> At the same time, Mr. Trump's lawyers and congressional allies were arguing that the House's impeachment inquiry was unconstitutional unless Mr. Trump approved the procedural rules (see CSD's entry of October 8, above). That is, as the arguments went, Mr. Trump was immune from both a criminal investigation and an impeachment inquiry he didn't like. In a different proceeding, Mr. Trump's lawyers had recently argued that a unanimous 1974 Supreme Court decision, holding that the president may not exercise executive privilege to defy a subpoena, had been decided wrongly – an extraordinary attack on the doctrine of judicial precedent.<sup>248</sup> Any litigant, of course, is entitled to argue the law creatively. But taken together, the legal arguments proffered by Mr. Trump, his lawyers and his congressional supporters amounted to a direct and comprehensive attack on Mr. Trump's accountability under the law and the Constitution. CSD saw this undertaking not just as benignly creative lawyering, but as an affirmation of Mr. Trump's daily autocratic designs that are the subject of this Chronology.

10-23-19 +	Storming the House. On October 23, approximately 30 Republican members of Congress – many or most of them appearing from photographs and videos to be burly white males – stormed the secure impeachment inquiry room as Laura Cooper, a witness from the Pentagon, was about to testify before the House Intelligence Committee. (Like the State Department officials, Cooper had been forbidden by her department to testify; but she complied with a subpoena and did so.) A shouting match between Democrats and Republicans ensued. The protesters were objecting to Democrat-imposed secrecy rules which, among other things, barred unrestricted media and congressional attendance at the hearings and the immediate release of transcripts. But Democrats credibly argued that the secrecy rules were intended to prevent one witness's testimony from influencing another's; that those rules were consistent both with grand jury proceedings and with the conduct of some prior non-presidential impeachment investigations (where judges had been the impeachment targets); that full transcripts would eventually be provided to all; that scores of Republicans – those who sat on the pertinent committees – had been attending (or entitled to attend) the hearings and to have had an equal amount of questioning time; and that Mr. Trump and his Republican allies were now categorically denying the legitimacy of, and were attempting to subvert, the impeachment process – calling it a "lynching" and a "kangaroo court" – as the "defending" political parties had not done in the course of prior presidential impeachment inquiries. Nevertheless, other Republicans, including some of Mr. Trump's chief supporters, wanted in. They declared that the proceedings were illegal.<sup>249</sup> (On October 25, a federal judge would rule that they were legal.<sup>250</sup>) A verbatim description of the episode, as related by a Post columnist, follows: “We’re going to try to go in there,’ Rep. Matt Gaetz (Fla.), a leading Trump defender, announced to reporters. “We’re gonna go!’ somebody else announced. “Let’s do it!’ “Yeah!’ "With that, they rushed past Capitol Police officers and burst into the secure meeting room of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. ... The intruders shouted grievances about the process and defenses of the president — one reportedly got in Chairman Adam Schiff’s face — until Schiff [and Cooper] abandoned the room." [Continued below.]
-------------------	--

10-23-19 +	[Continued.] The protesters then ordered in pizza and held out in the room for hours.<sup>251</sup> On October 24, Mr. Trump thanked and praised them.<sup>252</sup> The development was shocking. First, it was illegal, in that the protesters had brought cell phones into the secure chamber – an offense for which a member of Congress who was a combat military veteran subsequently said a soldier would likely have been discharged dishonorably.<sup>253</sup> Worse, to the cascades of untruths, anti-democratic demagoguery and unlawful evidentiary stonewalling<sup>254</sup> purveyed by Mr. Trump and his supporters relative to the impeachment inquiry, it added procedural disruption and physical intimidation. CSD now foresaw the possibility of fistfights on the floor of the House, such as Americans commonly mock when they are captured in overseas legislatures and are broadcast in the U.S.
10-24-19, 10-25-19	Ukraine trade privileges strangled. On October 24, The Post reported that the Trump administration had appeared to withhold certain trade privileges from Ukraine in August. Specifically, the administration had delayed a scheduled restoration of some of the tariff relief that had earlier been cut on grounds of Ukraine's improper intellectual property practices, which practices had since been corrected by the Ukrainian government. The delay in August of the restoration of tariff relief gave the appearance that the administration had conditioned even more than a White House visit and military assistance on Ukraine helping Mr. Trump politically.<sup>255</sup> The next day, seemingly in reaction to The Post's report, the subject trade privileges were restored.<sup>256</sup>
10-25-19	Inspectors general revolt. In a letter to the Justice Department, scores of inspectors general from other federal departments and agencies denounced the DOJ's determination earlier in the month that the whistleblower's complaint that had set off the impeachment inquiry did not have to be relayed to Congress right away. They wrote that that determination not only was legally wrong but operated to chill whistleblowing and governmental oversight generally.<sup>257</sup> CSD found the letter to be extraordinary, in that it represented the collective view of most or all of the members of the Council of Inspectors General on Integrity and Efficiency; it criticized a federal department over which the signatories had no jurisdiction; and at least some of the signatories likely incurred professional risk in joining the letter. In itself it seemed a form of whistleblowing. In sum, it was an extreme response to what the signatories felt had been a plainly extreme and illegal event at DOJ.

10-26-19	Hounding the whistleblower. The Post reported that, following Mr. Trump's goading of congressional Republicans for them to do more to defend him and (in at least 40 tweets so far) to unmask the whistleblower, many of those members of Congress were doing just that: questioning impeachment inquiry witnesses with a view solely to discrediting them rather than eliciting facts about Mr. Trump's behavior, and racing to identify and ultimately discredit the whistleblower. Outing the whistleblower would be illegal; would work to chill and eviscerate whistleblowers coming forward generally; appeared to be unprecedented as a presidential and congressional phenomenon; and was believed by the whistleblower's counsel to threaten the immediate whistleblower's physical security.<sup>258</sup>
10-27-19	U.S.-Ukraine relationship in tatters. Politico detailed the chaos that the Ukraine scandal had generated in the two countries' relationship. In particular, U.S. support for Ukraine in its struggles for democracy and against Russia had come to be seen as unreliable, politicized, and largely denuded of experienced U.S. diplomatic staff. Politico wrote: "The president's lawyer is under investigation, his days of moonlighting as a freelance diplomat now over. The donor who gave $1 million for his inauguration, then helped run a backdoor channel from Ukraine to the Oval Office, has seen his credibility damaged. "His special envoy to Kyiv has resigned, as has the energy secretary who played a key role in the alleged military aid-for-dirt scheme. Former and current officials are providing lurid testimony on Capitol Hill in defiance of White House orders. ... "U.S. policy toward Ukraine is in shambles .... 'This is going to do lasting damage,' said [a former National Security Council staffer]. 'For the last five years it was a given that the U.S. had Ukraine's back. ... Now that's going to be far more complicated, with a lot more distrust and a lot more scrutiny.'"<sup>259</sup>
10-29-19 +	Vindman speaks. On October 29, Lt. Colonel Alexander Vindman, an Army veteran who had been wounded in Iraq and who was now the top Ukraine expert serving the National Security Council, appeared before the impeachment investigators. In doing so, like other recent witnesses, he defied a White House directive not to cooperate with the investigators, and he honored a congressional subpoena. Vindman had attended Mr. Trump's July 25 phone call with Zelensky, and that was one of the topics that he now addressed. [Continued below.]

10-29-19 +	[Continued.] Born in Ukraine and brought to the U.S. as a child, he testified that he had been so alarmed by Mr. Trump's and Sondland's attempts to pressure Zelensky into investigating the Bidens, and had found that pressure so contrary to America's national security interests, that he had twice reported those concerns to the NSC's counsel. Vindman had also been alarmed at Mr. Trump's withholding of the promised military assistance to Ukraine; also at the efforts of Giuliani to smear the Bidens and to protect or rehabilitate Mr. Trump's now imprisoned (former) campaign manager Paul Manafort. His testimony was consistent with that of several other recent witnesses who had defied their superiors – at risk to their own careers.<sup>260</sup> It conflicted with Sondland's protestations during testimony of his own innocence.<sup>261</sup> Vindman also testified that he had found the transcript of the July 25 phone call to be incomplete, and that his efforts to correct the record had been partly ignored by White House staffers.<sup>262</sup> Vindman began his testimony by stating that he wasn't the whistleblower and didn't know the whistleblower's identity. Reportedly, however, the Republican members of Congress participating in the deposition spent significant time trying to extract from Vindman that identity, with a view to (illegally) outing and discrediting him or her.<sup>263</sup> As evidence of the contra-factual hysteria into which much of the airwaves had descended, and in a grotesque perversion of patriotism, some of Mr. Trump's prominent media supporters quickly insinuated that Vindman was more loyal to Ukraine than to the U.S.; that he was possibly even a Ukrainian agent.<sup>264</sup> Mr. Trump himself slammed Vindman as a "Never Trumper" whom he had never heard of (and thus whose views, impliedly, were insignificant).<sup>265</sup> But to the credit of our country's better instincts, Republican leaders in Congress denounced those charges. Of course many of them still said (without explanation) that Vindman was mistaken; that is, that he had not properly heard what he claimed to have repeatedly heard in the White House.<sup>266</sup> On October 30, news media reported that it was promptly after Vindman had alerted White House counsel for national security of his (Vindman's) alarm about the July 25 telephone call that the White House took the extraordinary step of moving the transcript of the call to the now notorious secret computer system.<sup>267</sup>
10-30-19	Sullivan speaks. In testimony before the impeachment investigators, Deputy Secretary of State John Sullivan confirmed that Giuliani had improperly smeared Yovanovitch (the former U.S. ambassador to Ukraine), and that he viewed any attempt by a president to demand foreign investigations of his domestic political opponents to be improper.<sup>268</sup>

10-31-10	Morrison speaks. National Security Council aide and Trump appointee Timothy Morrison testified to the impeachment investigators that the military assistance package to Ukraine appeared to have been conditioned on Ukraine investigating Mr. Trump's political rivals, and that he (Morrison) had drawn Mr. Trump's July 25 phone call with Zelensky to the attention of the NSC's chief counsel.<sup>269</sup>
10-31-10	The House votes. The House of Representatives voted to adopt rules for public hearings in Mr. Trump's impeachment and to formalize the impeachment inquiry. No Republicans voted with the majority.<sup>270</sup>

Addendum 27 – December 29, 2019

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

The current Addendum appears in two parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular chronology. The second part, beginning on p. 25, chronicles events surrounding the impeachment of Mr. Trump by Congress.

Date	Episode	Category
10-27-19, 11-13-19	The oil. Mr. Trump twice restated his desire to seize Syrian oilfields as spoils of war – contrary to Pentagon statements, international law, and diplomatic wisdom; a war crime. <sup>1</sup>	10, 13, 14
11-2-19	Re-tweeting conspiracies. The New York Times reported, in chilling and analytic detail, how Mr. Trump, while in office, had re-tweeted hundreds of false and inflammatory Twitter postings authored by fringe hate groups, conspiracy theorists and unverifiable sources. Reportedly he was susceptible to being duped by the original writers: often he had re-tweeted malicious messages without investigation because the content had been flattering to him. His re-tweets in turn had been re-tweeted by others, in a shrill and reality-defying cascade. And he had not expressed concern about any of this. In fact, at a White House conference in July, he had praised far-right social media provocateurs: " The crap that you think of is unbelievable. " <sup>2</sup> (Presumably he had used the word "unbelievable" figuratively and positively.)	6, 9, 10

11-4-19	My son, the writer. By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump promoted sales of his son and surrogate Donald, Jr.'s soon-to-be-published book, titled Triggered: How the Left Thrives on Hate and Wants to Silence Us. Mr. Trump (the elder) tweeted to his 66.5 million followers, "Go order it today!" But for the president's statutory immunity to pertinent federal ethics rules, Mr. Trump would have been criminally liable for that tweet.<sup>3</sup>	9, 16
11-6-19	Fomenting electoral violence? The Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump's re-election campaign was advertising on Facebook that the "radical left" had "resorted to violence" to prevent Mr. Trump's election. Although there appeared to have been a few such episodes, the clear implication that the violence was widespread, coordinated, or orchestrated/sanctioned by the Democratic Party was false. It meanwhile was seen as giving rise to a risk of stoking violence on the part of Mr. Trump's supporters.<sup>4</sup>	17 (5, 7)
11-6-19 +	Litigation unchained. On November 6, The New York Times reported on Mr. Trump's rampant litigation as president – both personal and official, both as plaintiff and as defendant. Matters included his alleged acts of defamation, his anti-abortion policies, his immigration policies, his tax returns, his self-enrichment versus the emoluments clause, and his attempts to prevent subordinates from testifying before Congress. The Times also noted his many (hollow) threats to bring meritless lawsuits against his political adversaries. Mr. Trump had previously boasted about the 4,000 + lawsuits that he had engaged in as a businessman. He had once even said, "Does anyone know more about litigation than Trump? I'm like a Ph.D. in litigation." In addition to reflecting a take-no-prisoners philosophy of governance where comity and compromise had traditionally held stronger sway, many or most of the pending matters appeared to have involved an overreach in presidential powers, and Mr. Trump's presumptions of constitutional unaccountability and legal immunity. But those attitudes and behaviors had cost him: he, his White House, his business and his foundation were all under investigation; one of his lawyers (Michael Cohen) was now in jail; and another (Rudy Giuliani) was under federal criminal investigation.<sup>5</sup> [Continued below.]	9 (overreaching in presidential powers; abuse of legal process; tax fraud)

11-6-19 +	[Continued.] On November 7, a New York judge fined Mr. Trump $2 million for having used his private foundation to commit tax fraud prior to his presidency, including to defraud veterans. No such finding of charitable fraud had been levied against any other sitting president.<sup>6</sup>	9 (overreaching in presidential powers; abuse of legal process; tax fraud)
11-6-19	In Louisiana. At a campaign rally in Monroe, Louisiana, Mr. Trump deployed his perennial tactic of accusing his opponents of his own misdeeds. He thundered, "Democrats are becoming increasingly totalitarian. Suppressing dissent, defaming the innocent, eliminating due process, staging show trials and trying to overthrow the American democracy to impose their socialist agenda." He said that Democrats were trying to "rip the guts out of our country." He also elicited "Lock her up!" chants from the crowd – still, after years, scapegoating his previous electoral opponent Hillary Clinton – and with breathtaking effectiveness.<sup>7</sup>	7, 9
11-7-19	Barr complicit. The Washington Post recapped the many instances in which Attorney General William Barr, within the short period since his appointment and presumably with Mr. Trump's encouragement, had abrogated his law enforcement mandate and had affirmatively enabled Mr. Trump's authoritarian activities: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He had written a misleadingly pro-Trump summary of the Mueller report on Russian election interference.</li> <li>• He had cleared Mr. Trump of obstruction of justice charges even though special prosecutor Robert Mueller had found substantial evidence of obstruction.</li> <li>• He had said that Mueller had found Mr. Trump not to have colluded with the Russians, even though Mueller had not concluded that.</li> <li>• He had launched an internal investigation as to whether Justice Department officials had initiated the original probe of Russian election interference for partisan (anti-Trump) purposes.</li> <li>• He had traveled to Europe to pressure foreign governments to cooperate with that investigation.</li> <li>• He had caused or allowed the Justice Department to prevent the Ukraine whistleblower's complaint from going to Congress, and he had declined to investigate the charges contained in the complaint.<sup>8</sup></li> </ul>	17 (9)

11-7-19	The most. A Washington Post columnist argued, by way of credible historical comparisons, that Mr. Trump had become America's most anti-immigrant president and the only one to have deployed demagoguery against immigrants. Of 10 types of anti-immigrant animus, Mr. Trump had vocalized all of them. In the columnist's words, "They bring crime; they import poverty; they spread disease; they don't assimilate; they corrupt our politics; they steal our jobs; they cause our taxes to increase; they're a security risk; their religion is incompatible with American values; they can never be 'true Americans.'"<sup>9</sup>	6, 9
11-8-19	Wildly. Under pressure from the impeachment inquiry, Mr. Trump, speaking to reporters, lashed out in all directions: denying the obvious, inventing realities and insulting his adversaries. He said: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He had "never heard of most of these people" – senior officials who had been tasked with national security and Ukrainian affairs, and who had recently testified against him in connection with the impeachment inquiry. (Although possibly he had not in fact heard of them, being oblivious to normal governmental structure, staffing and operation.)</li> <li>• "There is no firsthand knowledge" of his extortion attempt in Ukraine. (In fact witness Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman had been on Mr. Trump's July 25 call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky.)</li> <li>• "All that matters is one thing: the transcript. And the transcript is perfect." (The transcript of Mr. Trump's July 25 phone call with Zelensky was actually damning, and the extortion scheme it revealed was corroborated by the testimony of many witnesses.)</li> <li>• "[T]ake a look at Biden and you will see tremendous corruption." (No credible person had identified any.)</li> <li>• "I caught the swamp. I caught 'em all." (He had not; rather, from the outset, his administration had become its own monumental swamp.)</li> <li>• "My charity was great. I gave a lot of money away." (He had just been personally fined $2,000,000 for tax fraud in connection with the operation of his charity. Its charitable giving had been conducted mainly for his personal political purposes.)</li> <li>• "I'm very transparent. Nobody is more transparent than me." (He was the first recent president not to have released his tax returns.) [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	7, 9, 11

11-8-19	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• "I hardly know the gentleman." (He was referring to Gordon Sondland, his handpicked ambassador to the EU and his hatchet man in Ukraine, whom he had previously praised but who had now delivered damning testimony in the impeachment inquiry.)</li> <li>• "And if I asked Bill Barr to have a press conference I think he'd do it. But I never asked him to have a press conference." (In truth, as had been recently reported, Mr. Trump had asked Barr to hold a press conference in which Barr would exculpate him from all wrongdoing in connection with the Ukraine scandal; and Barr had refused.)</li> <li>• "They [Democrats] lost an election and they lost it big." (Hillary Clinton had actually won 3,000,000 more votes than Mr. Trump in the 2016 presidential election.)</li> <li>• "My polls are up." (They were not.)</li> <li>• "[T]he whistleblower gave a fake report of my [July 25] phone call [with Zelensky]." (In truth, the whistleblower's report had been corroborated by others many times over.)</li> <li>• "[T]he whistleblower is a disgrace to our country ... and should be revealed." (That could be illegal and would imperil the whistleblower's safety.)</li> <li>• The whistleblower's lawyer should be "sued" for "treason." (None of that would be possible. And the treason in the Ukraine matter lay elsewhere.)</li> <li>• "I'm leading in all of the states, in every swing state." (Totally false.)</li> <li>• "We're doing very well with African Americans." (Some 86% of African American voters were polling against him.)</li> <li>• "Little Michael [Bloomberg] [the former mayor of New York] will fail" in his recently announced quest for the presidency. "He's got some personal problems and he's got a lot of other problems." (Pots versus kettles.)</li> <li>• "They [the congressional impeachment investigators] shouldn't be having public hearings. That's a hoax." (But Republicans in Congress had been clamoring for the hearings to become public.)<sup>10</sup></li> </ul>	7, 9, 11

11-8-19	Campaigning on the public nickel. The New York Times recapped a pattern of events (some previously reported by CSD) in which Mr. Trump had illegally and profligately campaigned for himself at official events and at public expense. He had also expressly declined to enforce the Hatch Act against his staffers who had campaigned for him, citing their entitlement to freedom of expression.<sup>11</sup>	9
11-9-19	Ethics at Interior (again). The New York Times reported on how Interior Secretary David Bernhardt had been routinely skirting conflict of interest rules by making environmental policy that benefited his former lobbying clients, and by pressing his ethics attorney to bless that. As CSD had documented earlier in this Chronology, Bernhardt's predecessor, Ryan Zinke, had been ridden out of Washington on a rail for his repeated ethics violations.<sup>12</sup>	17 (15)
11-11-19	"No" to health data at the EPA. The New York Times reported that the Environmental Protection Agency was reviving and expanding its stalled 2018 effort to ban from agency consideration any medical and other studies – past and future – that did not make public the confidential patient information on which the studies were based. The effect would be to gut such scientific inputs from environmental policy making – to the benefit of industrial polluters and to the detriment of the public's health. (CSD had reported on the EPA's original gambit in 2018.)<sup>13</sup>	8
11-11-19 +	Rogues: on the loose, and on the take. Giuliani. On November 11, CNN reported that Rudy Giuliani had met with senior figures in at least seven foreign governments while serving as Mr. Trump's personal lawyer during Mr. Trump's presidency, typically conducting rogue diplomacy outside of the State Department (opaque, unauthorized, unaccountable) while promoting his international consulting business on the strength of his relationship with Mr. Trump.<sup>14</sup> Those activities had likewise characterized Giuliani's orchestration of the events in Ukraine that had flatly contradicted American policy and principles there, for Mr. Trump's and Giuliani's personal benefit, and that had flowered into the extortion scandal and the impeachment proceedings against Mr. Trump. [Continued below.]	9, 11, 13, 17 (15, 16)

11-11-19 +	[Continued.] On December 8, a riveting profile of Giuliani's wild and sordid forays into those realms, and into the realm of consorting with unsavory international characters, appeared in The New York Times. There he was characterized as needing cash to support a lavish lifestyle, and as seeking to be in the national limelight regardless of his message.<sup>15</sup> On the same day, The Washington Post reported on Giuliani's broadly suspicious profile as a paid advisor to foreign interests who contemporaneously was representing the president of the United States free of charge and had the president's ear on foreign policy.<sup>16</sup> On December 13, The Times exposed Giuliani's staggering volume of free legal services for Mr. Trump as either a gift to the president in his capacity as president (in which case Mr. Trump had violated ethics rules by not reporting the gift's multi-million dollar value) or as legally permitted pro bono services for Mr. Trump's re-election campaign (in which case Giuliani and Mr. Trump had repeatedly lied in claiming that Giuliani's work relative to the Ukraine scandal had nothing to do with Mr. Trump's re-election).<sup>17</sup> On December 29, The Post reported that in 2018 Giuliani had attempted to negotiate the resignation of Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro – unaccountably, and from the shadows – to the outrage of legitimate American diplomats who were contemporaneously engaged in Venezuelan matters. Kushner. On November 12, The Times reported that Jared Kushner – a businessman, Mr. Trump's son-in-law, and a senior advisor of his – was active in orchestrating America's fraught relationship with Turkey. As he had been doing in Saudi Arabia, Kushner pursued his efforts through the family members of that country's leader – again without transparency or accountability. According to The Times, John Bolton – Mr. Trump's former national security advisor – had told a gathering since his recent departure that Mr. Trump had indeed often confused personal relationships with national relationships when setting policy. [Continued below.]	9, 11, 13, 17 (15, 16)
-------------------	---	-------------------------------

11-11-19 +	[Continued.] A former ambassador to Turkey said, “Trump is replacing formal relations among nations in several cases with family-to-family relationship [sic], or crony-to-crony relationships. Certainly [Turkey's president Recep] Erdogan would prefer that kind of relationship as he runs a crony capitalist regime of his own. But it ought to be a matter of concern to all Americans.”<sup>18</sup>	9, 11, 13, 17 (15, 16)
11-12-19	Ivanka and dictators: winning and winning. In a speech in New York, Mr. Trump said that his daughter Ivanka was personally responsible for creating 14 million jobs. In fact only 6 million jobs had been created during his presidency altogether, and none by his daughter.<sup>19</sup> In the same speech, Mr. Trump said that all foreign dictators were welcome in the U.S., if it was "good for the United States" (whatever that may have meant).<sup>20</sup>	7, 11, 12
11-12-19	The great wall video. The Washington Post reported that the Trump administration had determined to deploy live-stream video showing the construction of the wall at the Mexican border, so as to demonstrate to voters that construction was indeed proceeding and thus to stir their confidence in Mr. Trump. Both the Army Corps of Engineers and Customs and Border Patrol had objected to the plan, on grounds of American-Mexican diplomacy and the protection of the construction contractors' proprietary building techniques.<sup>21</sup> CSD also saw in the move an expenditure of taxpayer funds for Mr. Trump's political campaign purposes, and a demagogic stirring of anti-immigrant sentiment.	6, 9, 11, 13
11-12-19, 11-13-19	Negative interest. Mr. Trump continued his attacks on the Federal Reserve Bank and his demands for it to effect zero or even negative interest rates. The next day, the Fed's chair Jerome Powell called those attacks not only economically unsupportable but politically "inappropriate."<sup>22</sup>	9
11-13-19	One more DHS chief, for the road. Chad Wolf was sworn in as acting Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security – the fifth person to lead the agency under Mr. Trump. As chief of staff for then Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen, Wolf had been instrumental in separating Central American children from their parents in 2018. But Mr. Trump reportedly still did not view him as sufficiently anti-immigrant to nominate him as permanent secretary.<sup>23</sup>	6, 10

11-13-19	Erdogan at the White House. Mr. Trump welcomed the authoritarian Turkish strongman Recep Erdogan to the White House, only months after Erdogan, over U.S. objections, had invaded Syria and had begun committing war crimes against America's Kurdish allies there. In connection with the meeting, Mr. Trump offered Erdogan a $100 billion trade deal and a continued delay in imposing legally required sanctions stemming from Turkey's purchase of a Russian missile defense system, all to the outrage of both Republicans and Democrats in Congress. Of Erdogan, Mr. Trump told reporters, "I'm a big fan of the president." Also: "The president and I are very good friends. We have been for a long time — almost from Day 1." For his part, Erdogan referred to Mr. Trump as "my dear friend." In fact Erdogan presented Mr. Trump with the threatening and juvenile letter that Mr. Trump had famously sent him on October 9 and that Erdogan had reportedly thrown in the trash. So it appeared not only that the letter had been saved but that the two authoritarian leaders had made up; also that Mr. Trump had been rolled by Erdogan – in Syria and beyond.<sup>24</sup>	9, 12, 13
11-13-19	Miller hyped white nationalism. Media widely relayed a new Southern Poverty Law Center report that, during Mr. Trump's 2016 presidential campaign, his current senior immigration advisor and speechwriter Stephen Miller had relentlessly promoted white nationalism, far-right extremism and anti-immigrant messaging through Breitbart's online news site. Miller had long been seen as the whisperer behind Mr. Trump's anti-immigrant demagoguery. The SPLC's report prompted dozens of members of Congress (all Democrats) to demand Miller's resignation.<sup>25</sup>	17 (6)
11-14-19	Tax return question to the Supremes. After a federal district court and then a federal appeals court ruled that Mr. Trump 's accounting firm must provide his tax returns to New York state criminal investigators, Mr. Trump asked the Supreme Court to overrule them, claiming that a sitting U.S. president enjoys immunity from all investigations while in office – that is, shielding him relative to any criminal charges whatever.<sup>26</sup>	9

11-15-19	Stone guilty. A federal court convicted Mr. Trump's long-time friend and associate Roger Stone of attempting to thwart the Mueller investigation of Russia's interference in the 2016 presidential election: by lying to investigators, obstructing a congressional investigation, and tampering with witnesses, all seemingly so as to protect Mr. Trump from the probe. The charges involved Stone's complicity in WikiLeaks' publication of the Democratic party emails stolen by Russia, for the benefit of the Trump campaign. Stone had arrived at the courthouse carrying a Bible. Stone was the latest associate of Mr. Trump to be convicted of or to have pleaded guilty to felonies in connection with Mr. Trump's election campaign or his transition into office. The others had been campaign manager Paul Manafort, Manafort's deputy Rick Gates, national security advisor Michael Flynn, Mr. Trump's attorney Michael Cohen, and campaign foreign policy advisor George Papadopoulos.<sup>27</sup> Whether Mr. Trump would pardon Stone or commute his sentence was a subject of speculation – as it had been and remained relative to some of the other felons. In any event, he promptly came to Stone's defense, claiming that a double standard had spared a long list of Mr. Trump's adversaries from the punitive justice that they had deserved.<sup>28</sup> Evidence in Stone's case also established that Mr. Trump appeared to have lied to Mueller's investigators in denying that he had discussed WikiLeaks with Stone; and a congressional investigation was promptly opened on that subject.<sup>29</sup> CSD notes that Stone had previously worked for President Nixon as a self-acknowledged "dirty trickster," and that he famously wore a tattoo of Nixon's face on his back.<sup>30</sup>	17 (9); a den of scoundrels
11-15-19 +	Clemency for war criminals. Heeding advocates outside the government such as Fox News and ignoring Pentagon advice, on November 15 – presumably for domestic political gain – Mr. Trump pardoned two Americans who had been court-martialed for war crimes. He also restored the rank of a third, Eddie Gallagher, a SEAL who had been demoted after members of his unit in Iraq had found him to be a "psychopath" and (at peril to their own careers) had reported his atrocities.<sup>31</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 17(9)

11-15-19 +	[Continued.] CNN wrote: "Defense Secretary Mark Esper and other senior military leaders had told the President that a presidential pardon could potentially damage the integrity of the military judicial system, the ability of military leaders to ensure good order and discipline, and the confidence of US allies and partners who host US troops."<sup>32</sup> Excusing American war crimes was also seen as placing American troops at risk of retaliation in-theater, and as denigrating the service of tens of thousands of troops who had served honorably.<sup>33</sup> Mr. Trump also was seen as sabotaging his own military command, as he had sabotaged the State Department's operations in Ukraine, and the CIA's and FBI's leadership.<sup>34</sup> By way of justification, the White House said that Mr. Trump was the ultimate arbiter of military justice. But few if any other modern presidents had articulated that entitlement so roundly, even though some had extended clemency to service members (e.g., President Carter for Vietnam War deserters and draft evaders).<sup>35</sup> In any event, it was the first time that a president had pardoned a service member for war crimes.<sup>36</sup> Emboldened by the president, Gallagher himself then gave television interviews protesting the military's treatment of him, in extraordinary defiance of his chain of command. Chaos ensued. Defying the thunderous criticism that his actions had unleashed, on November 21 Mr. Trump countermanded the commander of the Navy SEALs and (by way of Twitter) announced that Gallagher would not be ousted from the SEALs.<sup>37</sup> On November 22, Richard Spencer, the Secretary of the Navy, appeared to defy Mr. Trump by resolving to proceed with Gallagher's disciplinary review.<sup>38</sup> On November 23, Spencer reportedly threatened to resign over the issue.<sup>39</sup> On November 24, Defense Secretary Mark Esper fired Spencer – purportedly for having bypassed Esper by attempting to cut a secret deal with the White House that the disciplinary review would allow Gallagher to remain in the SEALs if Mr. Trump allowed the review to proceed.<sup>40</sup> But in truth, Mr. Trump had ordered Esper to fire Spencer for having publicly questioned Mr. Trump's command and having threatened to resign. 11-15-19 +	[Continued.] In his resignation letter – clearly prepared in advance of his being fired – Spencer wrote: “I no longer share the same understanding with the commander in chief who appointed me, in regards to the key principle of good order and discipline. I cannot in good conscience obey an order that I believe violates the sacred oath I took ... .”<sup>41</sup> On November 25, Esper said that Mr. Trump had now directly ordered him (Esper) to halt disciplinary proceedings against Gallagher.<sup>42</sup> On November 27, writing in The Washington Post, Spencer provided a chronology of the events – including the three times in which Mr. Trump had intervened on Gallagher's behalf, seemingly for political reasons. Spencer called Mr. Trump's intervention "shocking and unprecedented." A former Marine, he wrote: “[Mr. Trump] has very little understanding of what it means to be in the military, to fight ethically or to be governed by a uniform set of rules and practices.”<sup>43</sup> At the end of the day, Mr. Trump and Esper had taken the knife to military justice and discipline. The Post's editorial board concluded that Esper had now joined the parade of Mr. Trump's authoritarian enablers, hitherto headlined by such senior officials as Secretary of State Mike Pompeo (for facilitating the Ukraine extortion), chief of staff Mick Mulvaney (similar), and Attorney General William Barr (for downplaying the Mueller report's damning conclusions, for bringing a politically motivated antitrust suit against auto manufacturers, and otherwise).<sup>44</sup> Observers contended that future service members in the field could now think to commit atrocities with impunity. And those subject to disciplinary proceedings could now hope to prevail in their cases by appealing to the public, the president and other political actors. CSD does not maintain that politics and personal pleas have never figured into the rendering of American military justice. But commentators characterized the baldness and arrogance of Gallagher's protestations and of Mr. Trump's intervention as unprecedented. Gallagher's lawyers were former partners of Mr. Trump's personal lawyer, Rudy Giuliani.<sup>45</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 17(9)

11-15-19 +	[Continued.] A CNN analysis placed the Gallagher controversy within the larger context of Mr. Trump's relationship with the military: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump's references to service members as "my warfighters" during the Gallagher controversy – like his earlier, boastful references to "my generals" – highlighted his apparent view that that the military served him more than (or rather than) the country.</li> <li>• While troops had come to be split between embracing and rejecting Mr. Trump's style of command, ranking officers had widely disdained it, and the top command had been unanimous in rejecting his intervention in the Gallagher affair.</li> <li>• Dismay among senior officers had also attended Mr. Trump's impulsive pullback of troops in Syria; his subsequent return of troops to Syria without a clear statement of mission; his undermining of U.S. relationships with NATO, South Korea and Japan; his attacks on a uniformed impeachment inquiry witness, Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman; his expression of interest in visiting Moscow during its annual May Day military parade; and his call for "thank you" campaign donations on the occasion of Veteran's Day.</li> <li>• The dismay also extended more generally to Mr. Trump's mercurial moods, his impulsive tweeting and decision-making, his resistance to data, his politicization of the military, and his reliance on Fox News for the formulation of his military policies.</li> <li>• Some senior officers had been reluctant to appear alongside Mr. Trump during his public addresses, for fear that he would make partisan political remarks in their presence.<sup>46</sup></li> </ul> A poll of active duty military personnel conducted by Military Times revealed additional resentments, especially among officers: for Mr. Trump's poor treatment of his former defense secretary James Mattis; his withholding of military aid to Ukraine; and his raiding of military construction funds to build the wall at the Mexican border. The New York Times characterized Mr. Trump's acts of clemency as reflecting his "finely-honed sense of grievance against authority" – here, against the military command that he had once lionized. 11-15-19 +	[Continued.] "While he boasts of supporting the military, he has come to distrust the generals and admirals who run it. Rather than accept information from his own government, he responds to television reports that grab his interest. ...[T]he president finds himself more removed than ever from a disenchanted military command, adding the armed forces to the institutions under his authority that he has feuded with, along with the intelligence community, law enforcement agencies and diplomatic corps."<sup>47</sup> Flaunting it all, on December 8 Mr. Trump brought two of those he had pardoned on stage at a political fundraiser in Florida,<sup>48</sup> And on December 21 he and First Lady Melania Trump hosted Gallagher and his wife at Mar-a-Lago.<sup>49</sup>	2, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 17(9)

11-20-19, 12-8-19	Verma, grabbing. On November 20, media reported that Mr. Trump's chief of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid, Seema Verma, had caused the agency to pay outside public relations contractors $3,000,000 to promote herself and the agency.<sup>51</sup> On December 8, media reported that Verma had asked the agency to reimburse her for $43,000 worth of uninsured jewelry that had been stolen from her during an official business trip.<sup>52</sup> Ethics experts criticized both actions.	17 (11)
11-24-19	The chosen one. Energy Secretary Rick Perry said that Mr. Trump was "the chosen one" sent by God to govern America.<sup>53</sup>	17 (9)
11-28-19	Delay, by litigation. The New York Times detailed how Mr. Trump, in multiple lawsuits and citing highly questionable legal theories, was delaying the release of information that could damage him in the House's impeachment proceedings and in the upcoming 2020 election. The actions included preventing former White House Counsel Donald McGahn from testifying; protecting Mr. Trump's financial records; and sequestering grand jury records relative to the Mueller investigation. In much or all of this, Mr. Trump's Justice Department was avidly pleading on his behalf. The Times reported: [Continued below.]	7, 9

11-28-19	[Continued.] "The [legal] theories include asserting that Congress lacks legitimate legislative authority to conduct oversight of whether government officials are engaged in wrongdoing, even though lawmakers have done so for generations; that impeachment investigators cannot gain access to grand-jury evidence, even though an appeals court permitted just that during Watergate; and that senior presidential aides are immune from subpoenas, even though a judge rejected that theory in 2008." Despite losing lower court cases, Mr. Trump appeared to be prepared to take his arguments far higher. The Times wrote: "Many administrations have sometimes made privilege and immunity claims to fend off or delay congressional attempts to pry information out of the executive branch .... But prior presidents, unlike Mr. Trump, were willing to resolve disputes through negotiation and compromise long before they could reach the Supreme Court." Mr. Trump claimed that he was protecting presidential prerogatives for all future presidents; but in truth he appeared simply to be trying to run out the clock on his own political exposure, in advance of the 2020 election.<sup>54</sup>	7, 9
12-2-19, 12-12-19	The crony wall. On December 2, the Defense Department awarded a $400 million contract to build a span of Mr. Trump's border wall in Arizona to Fisher Sand and Gravel Company, a politically-active firm that had never before entered into a construction contract but that had vocally supported the wall-building enterprise on Fox News and elsewhere. Mr. Trump had been pushing for Fisher to win the award, despite resistance from the Army Corps of Engineers.<sup>55</sup> On December 12, the department's inspector general opened an investigation.<sup>56</sup>	13, 16
12-3-19	The polls don't lie. Media widely reported a late November survey conducted by The Economist magazine that found that 53% of Republicans now considered Mr. Trump to be a better president than Abraham Lincoln.<sup>57</sup> Media also reported an August survey conducted by Pew Research Center that had found that 43% of Republicans would prefer that Congress and the courts exert fewer checks on presidential powers.<sup>58</sup> On November 5, media had reported that 62% of Mr. Trump's supporters said that they would continue to support him, no matter what he did while in office.<sup>59</sup> Apparently Mr. Trump had convinced them.	9

12-3-19	No police for you. Attorney General William Barr, the country's top law enforcement official, vaguely threatened urban communities to withhold police support if they wouldn't show respect for the police. <sup>60</sup> Barr meanwhile – as presented above in this Addendum – was viewed by critics as having broadly enabled Mr. Trump's legal and constitutional breaches.	17 (6, 9)
12-3-19	No foundation for intelligence. Susan Gordon – Mr. Trump's former deputy director of intelligence whom he had passed over for the director's position because he had questioned her loyalty – now proved him correct in an address to a foreign policy group in Washington. She said that he had no "framework or foundation" for understanding intelligence; that he routinely questioned the analyses of intelligence officials while instead routinely embracing those of right-wing news commentators; and that he tended to view international strategic issues mainly in terms of economic benefit rather than other policy considerations. <sup>61</sup>	10, 13
12-4-19	Two-faced. At a NATO meeting in the UK, a group of world leaders was caught on video mildly mocking Mr. Trump. He reacted by telling reporters that one of the participants, Canadian prime minister Justin Trudeau, was "two-faced." <sup>62</sup>	10, 11
12-5-19	Rocket Man vs. the dotard. As Mr. Trump's heavily hyped breakthrough in relations with North Korea appeared to continue to be going nowhere, Mr. Trump again referred to North Korean President Kim Jung-un as "Rocket Man." Kim's staff retaliated by threatening to resume calling Mr. Trump a senile "dotard." Each man also resumed threatening the other with military hostilities. <sup>63</sup>	10
12-7-19	The other quid pro quos. Almost as though to confirm his extortion of a reluctant Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky – that is, withholding desperately needed military aid unless Zelensky agreed to slander the U.S. Democratic presidential contender Joe Biden – Mr. Trump demonstrated a similar zeal to forcibly extract electoral support from Americans who might be loath to give it. In a speech to a largely Jewish audience at the Israeli American Council in Boca Raton, Florida, Mr. Trump viciously said: [ Continued below. ]	6, 9

12-7-19	[Continued.] “A lot of you are in the real estate business, because I know you very well. You’re brutal killers, not nice people at all. But you have to vote for me — you have no choice. You’re not gonna vote for Pocahontas [Democratic presidential contender Elizabeth Warren], I can tell you that. You’re not gonna vote for the wealth tax. Yeah, let’s take 100 percent of your wealth away! Some of you don’t like me. Some of you I don’t like at all, actually. And you’re going to be my biggest supporters because you’re going to be out of business in about 15 minutes if they get it.”<sup>64</sup> Mr. Trump had long been telling Evangelical Christians something similar: that even if they disliked his character, they had no choice but to vote for him, because his opponents were unfriendly on the political issues they cared about.<sup>65</sup>	6, 9
12-7-19	Sobbing for the Saudis. After a Saudi Arabian air force pilot massacred Americans at an air base in Pensacola, Florida where they all had been training, Mr. Trump publicized the Saudi regime's condolences before he extended his own condolences to the families of the murdered Americans. He offered no suggestion that the episode amounted to terrorism. And he offered no assurances that the Saudis would help investigate the episode. Observers noted that if a Muslim from any other foreign country had committed the crime, Mr. Trump instead would likely have been ranting against jihadists.<sup>66</sup> And in fact security officials evaluating the Pensacola incident quickly suspected a concerted act of terrorism and began an investigation.<sup>67</sup>	12
12-8-19	Barr vs. conservatism. A New York Times analysis detailed William Barr's radical departure from the traditional role of attorney general – to the dismay of mainstream conservatives who, when he was nominated for the position, had expected him to perform in that role as one of them. Not only had he come to embrace and facilitate Mr. Trump's authoritarian view of executive power, but – vividly and increasingly – he had unabashedly advanced imposing sectarian cultural views on the nation.<sup>68</sup>	17 (6, 9)

12-9-19	North Korea: the transaction continues. Attempting to curry favor with the brutal North Korean regime, for the second year in a row the Trump administration blocked a discussion of that country's human rights abuses at the United Nations Security Council. The North Korean government nevertheless called Mr. Trump "a heedless and erratic old man."<sup>69</sup>	14
12-9-19 +	Barr vs. the inspector general. On December 9, Michael Horowitz, the Justice Department's inspector general, issued a long-awaited and lengthy report on its investigation of the department's earlier investigation of Mr. Trump's election campaign. The report found a number of irregularities in the investigation that warranted systemic correction going forward. But – contrary to the shrill and ceaseless claims of Mr. Trump and his supporters – the report found (a) no political conspiracy within the department either to undermine Mr. Trump or to launch the initial investigation (which had begun directly after the FBI had received alarming tips about possible Russian election interference), and (b) no "spying" on the campaign by the Obama administration. Mr. Trump's attorney general, William Barr, had been one of those who had dramatically and falsely alleged the spying. Upon the release of the Horowitz report, much as he had cynically spun the Mueller report on Russian election meddling in Mr. Trump's favor upon that report's release, Barr again leapt into spin action – now disagreeing with Horowitz, and insisting that the investigation had begun out of a political animus. Indeed in July – remarkably, politically, and undemocratically – Barr had caused the department to hire its own special attorney to conduct a criminal investigation of his department's staff, with a view to second-guessing the inspector general. Barr now indicated that he was looking toward that special attorney's forthcoming report, which he expected to be more damning of the department's prior conduct, and more aligned with Mr. Trump's allegations.<sup>70</sup> The following day, in an NBC News interview, Barr more explicitly denounced the Horowitz report; he said that he suspected Horowitz of "bad faith"; and he reiterated his (and Mr. Trump's) claim that the FBI had "spied" on the campaign.<sup>71</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 17 (7, 9)

12-9-19 +	[Continued.] Walter Shaub, who had resigned as the chief of the Office of Government Ethics early in Mr. Trump's tenure, now blasted Barr as a "threat to democracy" who was likely to raise unfounded allegations against department staff in the service of Mr. Trump's reelection campaign.<sup>72</sup> Former Attorney General Eric Holder, in an extraordinary rebuke of a successor in that office, wrote in The Washington Post on December 11 that Barr's recent behavior was "so plainly ideological, so nakedly partisan and so deeply inappropriate for America's chief law enforcement official" that it resembled "the tactics of an unscrupulous criminal defense lawyer"; was "fundamentally inconsistent with his duty to the Constitution"; and rendered him "unfit to lead the Justice Department."<sup>73</sup> Mr. Trump, for his part, called the Justice Department's failings as detailed in the Horowitz report "far worse than I ever thought possible" and "an attempted overthrow of the government."<sup>74</sup> On December 10, he lashed out at the current FBI director, Christopher Wray – whom he himself had appointed – for endorsing the report.<sup>75</sup> At a campaign rally in Hershey, Pennsylvania that evening, Mr. Trump falsely claimed that the report proved that politically motivated FBI agents had spied on his campaign in "scandalous abuses of power."<sup>76</sup> He also said that the investigation of Russian election meddling resulted in the lives of (his) "great people" being "destroyed by scum."<sup>77</sup> On December 15, Mr. Trump hinted that former FBI Director James Comey, under whose watch the irregularities had occurred and who later had become Mr. Trump's adversary, should be jailed.<sup>78</sup> A New York Times columnist wrote, "By the end of the week, Americans could be forgiven for thinking that the F.B.I. was indeed part of some sinister coup attempt — precisely the opposite of what Mr. Horowitz had concluded."<sup>79</sup> Current FBI staffers reportedly expressed dismay that Wray and their former colleagues were being hunted by Barr and Mr. Trump for doing their jobs properly; that the apolitical reputation of the agency was being compromised; and that the campaign against law enforcement could have a chilling effect on the performance of sensitive investigations.<sup>80</sup> For CSD, it now appeared questionable whether the agency could ever investigate Mr. Trump or those around him again, regardless of the nature or scope of suspected crimes.	7, 9, 17 (7, 9)
------------------	---	------------------------

12-10-19	Ripping out their hearts. At the rally in Hershey, Pennsylvania described above, Mr. Trump launched his usual battery of boasts and insults. He also returned to his theme which, however shocking it once may have been, was barely even reported upon anymore: the demonization of migrants. He said, “Thanks to Democrat immigration policies, innocent Americans in all 50 states are being brutalized and murdered by illegal alien criminals. Last summer, at least 19 illegal aliens were charged in connection with grisly homicides, including hacking victims to death and ripping out, in two cases, their hearts.”<sup>81</sup> Also in Hershey, Mr. Trump told his cheering fans that the Democrats' impeachment proceedings were a "witch hunt" intended to "erase your votes, nullify the election, and overthrow our democracy."<sup>82</sup> He falsely said that the articles of impeachment proved his innocence and undercut the Democrats' own credibility – because they alleged "no crimes."<sup>83</sup> And he urged a security guard to use physical force in ejecting a protester, as he had done at multiple previous rallies.<sup>84</sup>	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11
12-12-19	Giving it to Greta. By way of Twitter, on December 12 Mr. Trump mercilessly mocked Greta Thunberg, the 16-year-old Swedish climate activist, promptly after she had won Time Magazine's person of the year designation.<sup>85</sup> His anger appeared to have derived both from jealousy (that is, from his desire to have won the designation himself) and from his disdain for climate activism. For many observers, the episode made for acute dissonance relative to first lady Melania Trump's campaign against cyber-bullying of children.<sup>86</sup> For CSD, the episode represented the merging of, and the apotheosis of, the politics of ignorance and cruelty. The tweet was part of barrage of more than 100 rage- and falsehood-filled dispatches that Mr. Trump unleashed that morning, just before the House Judiciary Committee was about to vote on articles of impeachment against him. Many of the tweets attacked the impeachment; another was an advertisement for Mr. Trump's Florida resort, Mar-a-Lago. [Continued below.]	1, 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15

12-12-19	[Continued.] The tweet-storm followed a 105-message storm on December 8 that had featured attacks on the impeachment, Democrats and the media. That day's tweets had included praise for a mixed martial artist who supported Mr. Trump, plus a video of another martial artist offering to beat up Mr. Trump's political opponents. During the December 12 storm, Mr. Trump praised the latter fighter and yet another martial arts fighter who supported him, and he implied that the fighters could beat up any antifa agitators who might cross them.<sup>87</sup>	1, 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15
12-14-19	Frying the press. Mr. Trump issued a pair of excited attacks on the press, in which he called MSNBC communistic, upbraided Fox for interviewing his adversaries, highlighted his fixation with the press as ratings-driven entertainment, and viciously mocked an array of TV hosts and public officials, as follows: "Hard to believe that @FoxNews will be interviewing sleazebag &amp; totally discredited former FBI Director James Comey, &amp; also corrupt politician Adam "Shifty" Schiff. Fox is trying sooo hard to be politically correct, and yet they were totally shut out from the failed Dem debates! ... Both Commiecast MSNBC &amp; Fake News CNN are watching their Ratings TANK. Fredo [Chris Cuomo] on CNN is dying. Don't know why @FoxNews wants to be more like them? They'll all die together as other outlets take their place. Only pro Trump Fox shows do well. Rest are nothing. How's Shep [Shepard Smith, a sometimes Trump critic who had been forced out of Fox] doing?"<sup>88</sup>	1, 9, 11
12-16-19	The Fact Checker. The Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now made 15,413 false or misleading claims while in office, for an average of 15 per day. And the pace was quickening: in 2019 he had more than doubled the number of such claims over the previous two years.<sup>89</sup>	7

12-18-19	In Michigan. During the final impeachment voting in the House of Representatives, Mr. Trump scorned the proceedings by holding a campaign rally in Battle Creek, Michigan. Unlike the two previous modern presidents who had faced impeachment, he remained defiant. He slammed the impeachment process and the Democrats, boasted of his polling numbers (which were not strong, and no stronger than they had typically been), slandered the mainstream press, condemned former electoral opponent "Crooked Hillary" Clinton (and after three years still drawing the crowd's chant, "Lock her up!"), pounded former presidents Clinton and Obama, mocked special counsel Robert Mueller and several Democratic presidential contenders, and said of former FBI Director James Comey, "Did I do a great job when I fired his ass?" In a casual gesture of cruelty that thrilled his fans at the rally but gained notoriety elsewhere, he ridiculed a recently deceased Michigan congressman and his wife (who had succeeded him and had just voted to impeach).<sup>90</sup> Also, much as he had done at a rally in Pennsylvania on December 10, Mr. Trump urged the use of force against a protester, and he attacked her physical appearance.<sup>91</sup>	1, 3, 5, 7, 9, 11
12-19-19 +	All roads to Putin. At a news conference in Moscow on December 19, Russian President Vladimir Putin echoed a number of Mr. Trump's protestations of his innocence. He said that after the Democratic party had accused Mr. Trump of having colluded with Russia in American election tampering, "it turned out there was no collusion." He also said that the impeachment charges against Mr. Trump relative to the Ukraine scandal "were completely made up" and "completely fabricated."<sup>92</sup> The following day, Mr. Trump boasted about Putin's backing by re-tweeting an article reporting on it.<sup>93</sup> Also on December 19, CNN reported that Mr. Trump was resisting a strongly bipartisan Senate bill meant to deter and punish Russian aggression and its interference in American elections.<sup>94</sup> As House Speaker Nancy Pelosi had said on October 17, "All roads seem to lead to Putin with the president."<sup>95</sup>	12

12-21-19, 12-24-19	Tilting at windmills. On December 21, Mr. Trump railed at "windmills" (actually wind turbines) in a lengthy and disjointed diatribe at a conservative student convention in West Palm Beach, Florida. "You know, I know windmills very much. I've studied it better than anybody I know," he said. He complained that turbines kill birds (including "many bald eagles"), cause carbon emissions in their manufacture (he had not often objected to carbon emissions before), and – with their unmaintained exteriors and sometimes mismatched colors, were unsightly compared to his own buildings ("I'm like a perfectionist; I really built good stuff.") He had previously claimed, without evidence, that the turbines cause cancer. His obsession appeared to date from ten years previous, when he had brought a lawsuit in Scotland to prevent the installation of an offshore wind farm that he believed would ruin the sea view from one of his golf courses. During his speech, Mr. Trump took additional opportunities to boast, exaggerate, rage and insult. He claimed that he had brought back to American parlance the expression "Merry Christmas" and that his administration had "achieved more in this month alone than almost any president has achieved in eight years in office." He blasted "Crazy Nancy" Pelosi, "Crooked Hillary" Clinton, Hunter Biden, Beto O'Rourke, the "almost totally corrupt" media, the "Washington swamp," and the "illegal, unconstitutional and hyper-partisan impeachment."<sup>96</sup> As he stoked the crowd's fury, he said that his supporters included "the toughest people" – hinting that someday they may do violence to Democrats.<sup>97</sup> As for the deaths of birds, on December 24 The New York Times reported that the Trump administration had stopped enforcing nearly all regulatory protections against bird deaths caused by industry, thus effectively causing untold numbers of avian deaths.<sup>98</sup>	1, 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15
-------------------------------	--	------------------------------

12-24-19	Pro-family? Mr. Trump's campaign urged his supporters to fight with their Democratic relatives at upcoming Christmas dinners.<sup>99</sup> The call to action echoed that of his son and surrogate, Donald Trump, Jr. in advance of the recent Thanksgiving holiday.<sup>100</sup> An adventure that had initially struck CSD as merely obnoxious now appeared to be a concerted tactic to sow chaos and disorder within the very core of American society, in the belief that Mr. Trump could benefit from that. Pundits on the left and the right had long been opining that, at a policy level, Mr. Trump saw himself as thriving in chaos and sought to create it whenever he could. It is CSD's understanding that authoritarian leaders elsewhere have often risen to power that way.	9
12-28-19	The war on science. In a wide-ranging analysis, The New York Times summarized Mr. Trump's war on federally funded and conducted scientific programs. His assaults had included defunding scientific units and studies, squeezing scientists out of employment, gagging scientific reports and voices, replacing scientists with lobbyists and ideology-driven administrators, and flat-out changing scientifically derived conclusions. The affected areas of inquiry included climate change, broader environmental and public health themes, and agricultural science. The assaults had been conducted for the benefit of industry. Concerns included not only the immediate advancement of science and public health, but the loss of institutional knowledge; the many years it would take to recover from the hollowing-out of federal scientific investigation; and the slowdown in scientific momentum that had profoundly improved American life over decades in such areas as life expectancy, air pollution and farm productivity.<sup>101</sup> (CSD had previously reported on many of the specific anti-scientific episodes in this Chronology. We nevertheless commend this recap to our readers.)	8

Date	Episode
11-1-19	The real polls. Mr. Trump disparaged both CNN and Fox News polls that showed that almost half of Americans wanted him impeached and removed from office. "I have the real polls," he said. "The CNN polls are fake. The Fox polls have always been lousy; I tell them they ought to get themselves a new pollster."<sup>102</sup> On the same day, The Washington Post reported that, since the emergence of the scandal about Mr. Trump extorting Ukraine's president to announce an investigation of American presidential contender Joe Biden, Mr. Trump had repeatedly tweeted poll numbers that exaggerated the extent to which Republican voters continued to support him.<sup>103</sup>
11-3-19 +	Outing the whistleblower. On November 3, Mr. Trump reiterated his calls to unmask the whistleblower who had reported his July 25 telephone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, and to discredit him or her as an allegedly Democratic partisan. (Whistleblowers' anonymity is protected by statute; and the attorneys for this particular whistleblower had made clear that outing him or her would imperil his or her safety.)<sup>104</sup> Mr. Trump also repeated to reporters – still without evidence, explanation or even reasoned argument – his claim that the whistleblower was a "fraud," even though the whistleblower's allegations had now been corroborated by more than a dozen witnesses.<sup>105</sup> On November 6, Mr. Trump's son and surrogate, Donald, Jr. re-tweeted to his 4 million followers a Breitbart News article naming the supposed whistleblower, after that name had been posted by many other pro-Trump partisans and right-wing conspiracy theorists over the previous weeks.<sup>106</sup>
11-4-19	More stones in the wall. Four White House officials defied the subpoenas of congressional impeachment investigators – the latest in a chain of such stonewalling on the part of administration figures.<sup>107</sup> One of the officials was John Eisenberg, lead attorney for the National Security Council, who had repeatedly declined to challenge the Ukraine extortion scheme and had helped decide to hide the July 25 telephone transcript.<sup>108</sup>

11-4-19 +	About Masha. On November 4, House impeachment investigators released transcripts of recent witness testimonies revealing details of Mr. Trump's abrupt recall of Marie ("Masha") Yovanovitch from her post as the corruption-fighting ambassador to Ukraine. Specifically, Mr. Trump had (obliquely and indirectly) threatened her "security" if she didn't take the next plane home, without even packing her personal effects. (Subsequent revelations appeared to indicate that that meant he would destroy her career if she disobeyed. Mr. Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani and his son Donald, Jr. had already been publicly slandering her.) Transcripts also revealed that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo had three times refused the entreaties of his senior aide Michael McKinley to stand by Yovanovitch, and that Pompeo had thus lied on television when he had denied that anyone had raised the topic with him.<sup>109</sup> (Pompeo had previously lied on television when implying that he knew nothing about Mr. Trump's July 25 telephone call with Zelensky. In fact Pompeo been on the call.) The Times reported that Pompeo was now seen by State Department staff as even more demoralizing than his predecessor Rex Tillerson had been: for abandoning Yovanovitch; for abandoning Yovanovitch's successor, William Taylor, in the face of Mr. Trump's attacks on Taylor's testimony about the Ukraine scandal; for forbidding diplomats from testifying before the impeachment investigators; for promoting Mr. Trump's unfounded theory that Ukraine rather than Russia had hacked the Democratic National Committee's emails; for allowing the State Department to be used to discredit Mr. Trump's political rival Biden; for empowering Giuliani's rogue diplomatic activities in Ukraine generally; and for traveling frequently to his home state of Kansas for personal political purposes at the department's expense.<sup>110</sup> On November 23, media reported on newly released State Department emails and documents that further placed Pompeo in the midst of the Ukraine scheme.<sup>111</sup>
11-5-19	Sondland remembers. House impeachment investigators released a deposition transcript in which Gordon Sondland – Mr. Trump's wealthy inaugural celebration donor, ambassador to the European Union, and irregular envoy in Ukraine – had testified before the House impeachment investigators. As the document showed, just the previous day Sondland had corrected his testimony to acknowledge that he in fact had conveyed an implicit "quid pro quo" to Ukrainian authorities. Specifically, and contrary to his original testimony, he now "recalled" that he and others had conditioned inviting Zelensky to the White House and releasing congressionally appropriated military aid to Ukraine upon Zelensky publicly announcing an investigation into Biden and into allegations of Ukrainian tampering in the 2016 American election.<sup>112</sup>

11-6-19	Defense by falsehood. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump's public defense of impeachment investigators' allegations to date had consisted largely of advancing, repeatedly, the following falsehoods, with no supporting evidence, and contrary to facts that were in plain view: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The whistleblower's characterization of the July 25 phone call with Zelensky was inaccurate, fraudulent, and inconsistent with the summary transcript of the call. (Belied by the transcript itself and by much corroborating evidence.)</li> <li>• Officials who had corroborated the scheme to extort Ukraine were "Never Trumpers" – politically motivated against him. (Belied by their records of probity, and by Mr. Trump having appointed a number of them himself.)</li> <li>• Various senators had proclaimed him "innocent." (Belied by them denying that.)</li> <li>• Opinion polls showing that popular support for his impeachment and removal were "fake." (Belied by the consistency of the polls.)<sup>113</sup></li> </ul>
11-6-19 - 11-8-19	The Kent transcript. The House impeachment investigators released the transcript of the October 15 testimony of Deputy Assistant Secretary of State George Kent, the government's top expert on Ukraine. (See CSD's entry of October 14 + for a report on his opening statement, which had been released at that time.) Kent described Mr. Trump's insistence that Zelensky publicly announce investigations of Biden, Hillary Clinton and the 2016 presidential election as a pre-condition for winning an invitation to the White House, and possibly also for receiving the $391 million in congressionally mandated U.S. military assistance. Kent also described Giuliani's "campaign of lies" to discredit then ambassador Yovanovitch in the service of Mr. Trump's personal agenda, and the complicity of other State Department officials in going along with the Trump-Giuliani scheme.<sup>114</sup> The newly released transcripts of the testimonies of Fiona Hill (until recently the top Europe and Russia expert at the National Security Council), Lt. Colonel Alexander Vindman (the current Ukraine expert at the National Security Council) and Taylor (the current acting U.S. ambassador to Ukraine) also corroborated and expanded upon their previously released opening statements – all describing the extortion scheme, as they had witnessed it.<sup>115</sup> (See CSD's entries from October.)
11-7-19	Saved by the bell. The New York Times reported that Zelensky had been preparing to capitulate to Mr. Trump's extortion – i.e., imminently announcing on CNN that he was initiating the investigations that Mr. Trump had demanded in order to procure the release of the military aid that his country desperately needed – when a Congressional uproar over the scandal saved him from that disgrace. Some of Mr. Trump's supporters had been arguing that the absence of a "quid pro quo" was proven by Mr. Trump's having eventually released the military aid without Zelensky having launched or announced the investigations. But it now became even more clear that Mr. Trump's attempted extortion had failed only because the Democratic Congress and the American media had foiled it.<sup>116</sup>

11-7-19, 11-8-19	Bolton stalls; Mulvaney waffles, refuses. On November 7, Mr. Trump's former national security advisor John Bolton refused to appear before the House impeachment investigators until a court might issue an order permitting him to honor a congressional subpoena while defying a presidential order that he not appear. Other witnesses had reported that Bolton had closely observed and keenly objected to Mr. Trump's extortion of Ukraine as it was unfolding.<sup>117</sup> On November 8, Mr. Trump's acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney flatly refused to appear, on grounds that he enjoyed "absolute immunity," a mysterious doctrine that had no apparent basis in legal precedent. Later that day Mulvaney reversed, asking the same court as Bolton's to rule on his obligation to testify.<sup>118</sup> Apparently struggling to find his principles, on November 12 Mulvaney re-reversed, now refusing once again to testify.<sup>119</sup> Mulvaney had been implicated by other witnesses as having actively fostered the extortion scheme. He was also reportedly engaged in a raging feud with White House counsel as to which of them would manage Mr. Trump's impeachment defense.<sup>120</sup> And he had notoriously admitted Mr. Trump's "quid pro quo" threat to Zelensky in October – and then, under pressure from Mr. Trump, he had promptly reversed himself.<sup>121</sup> For several weeks, a principal defense to the allegations leveled against Mr. Trump, as advanced by Mr. Trump and his supporters, had consisted of disparaging those allegations for being based on second-hand information. Missing from that defense was an acknowledgement that Mr. Trump had forbidden those having first-hand knowledge from testifying. A former federal prosecutor wrote compellingly in The Times how extraordinary that was: that (unlike in preceding impeachment inquiries) a president had now broadly blocked testimony by his subordinates who had actual knowledge of the subject events – Giuliani, Esper, Perry, Pompeo, Bolton, and others. The writer argued that that behavior in itself was impeachable.<sup>122</sup>
11-8-19	Making things up. Mr. Trump wildly fabricated facts about the impeachment inquiry in response to reporters' questions. See CSD's entry of November 8 in the first part of this Addendum.
11-9-19	Fear and loathing. The Times detailed the intimidation and disgust that the State Department's workface had widely come to feel as the Ukraine scandal – the shake-down of Zelensky, the hijacking of diplomacy, and the terrorizing of senior staff, all for Mr. Trump's personal political gain – had been revealed.<sup>123</sup>
11-10-19	Parnas flips. The Times reported that Lev Parnas, one of the indicted Soviet-born Americans who had collaborated with Giuliani in seeking dirt on the Bidens, had turned on Mr. Trump, at least in part. He now admitted that, in discussions with Ukrainian leadership as far back as May, he had linked U.S. military aid to their announcing an investigation of the Bidens, in a proposed quid pro quo.<sup>124</sup>

11-11-19	Bailing. The Times reported that as many as five senior American officials so far had resigned in connection with the Ukraine scandal: Kurt Volker, the special envoy to Ukraine; Tim Morrison, the National Security Council's Russia and Europe director; (possibly) Earl Matthews, another senior National Security Council official; Michael McKinley, a senior advisor to Pompeo; and (possibly) Rick Perry, Secretary of Energy.<sup>125</sup>
11-11-19	Is there a doctor in the House? Mr. Trump tweeted that Democrat Adam Schiff, who was managing the House's impeachment inquiry, would only release "doctored transcripts" of the proceedings, and thus that Republicans should put out their own versions of the transcripts. In fact Republicans and witnesses had already been approving all transcripts before being released by Schiff.<sup>126</sup>
11-13-19	Taylor, live. In the first live, televised testimony of the impeachment inquiry, Taylor recounted what mainstream news commentators considered to be a bombshell: that David Holmes, one of Taylor's staffers, had reported to Taylor on an overhead conversation between Sondland and Mr. Trump on July 26 – the day after Mr. Trump's infamous shakedown call with Zelensky. Holmes told Taylor that Mr. Trump had explicitly asked Sondland about the progress of the Ukrainian government announcing an investigation of the matters that interested Mr. Trump (the Bidens and the 2016 election meddling), and that Sondland had responded to Mr. Trump to the effect that the announcement would proceed. Immediately after the overheard call, Sondland told Holmes that "President Trump cares more about the investigations of Biden [than he does about the welfare of Ukraine]."<sup>127</sup> Mr. Trump's expression of keen interest in the investigation announcement on that occasion confirmed what to many had seemed obvious: that Mr. Trump himself was actively engaged in the extortion scheme. It also confirmed that the extortion was producing results: that Zelensky was prepared to announce the investigations. The revelations came at a time when some of Mr. Trump's supporters appeared to be moving toward blaming the scheme entirely on others, such as Giuliani, Sondland and Mulvaney. Mr. Trump responded to the day's open testimonies by Taylor and Kent – from a podium that he was sharing with Turkey's authoritarian president, Recep Erdogan – by calling the impeachment hearings a "joke" and a "sham" that "shouldn't be allowed."<sup>128</sup>
11-14-19, 11-16-19	Doing Schiff. At a campaign rally in Bossier City, Louisiana on November 14, Mr. Trump amped up his mockery of the lead impeachment investigator, California Congressman Adam Schiff, to a feral level. As the crowd laughed, he called out, "Little Shifty Schiff. He's got the little 10-inch neck. 'What size shirts do you need, Adam?' 'I wear a size nine.' Nine. He will not make the LSU football team, that I can tell you."<sup>129</sup> [Continued below.]

11-14-19, 11-16-19	[Continued.] CSD found in the slurs Mr. Trump's habitual, threatening identification of himself with burly and potentially violent workers and athletes; his habitual attempts to humiliate his adversaries; and his practice of doing so publicly – backed by a phalanx of supporters, rather than mano-a-mano. Schiff happened to be an active triathlon athlete. For his part, Mr. Trump could not navigate a golf course without riding a cart. On November 16, Mr. Trump resumed his insulting and juvenile parody of Schiff's name, first deployed in 2018, by misspelling his name "Schitt" in a tweet. He also tweeted that, if he were removed from office, the record-high stock market would plunge and a depression would ensue.<sup>130</sup>
11-15-19. 11-22-19	Yovanovitch, live. In the second day of live impeachment inquiry testimony, Yovanovitch appeared, in defiance of White House and State Department requests or directives that she not. Her parents had been refugees from the Soviet Union and Nazi Germany. Mr. Trump had now destroyed her diplomatic career. She now testified at likely risk to her professional future and possibly even her person. She nevertheless spoke compelling about: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Her unblemished, 33-year record as a diplomat and in fighting corruption abroad (she had often served under hardship and sometimes under fire).</li> <li>• Giuliani's efforts to smear and "knee-cap" her on fabricated grounds.</li> <li>• Giuliani's collaboration in that endeavor with Parnas, Parnas's partner Igor Fruman, and two corrupt Ukrainian prosecutors, as assisted and amplified by Donald Trump, Jr.</li> <li>• Giuliani's and his associates' "hijacking" of U.S. foreign policy in Ukraine, at an extraordinarily complex and sensitive time in U.S.-Ukraine-Russia relations.</li> <li>• The damage to U.S. interests threatened by such corrupt behavior.</li> <li>• Her sudden and inexplicable recall from her ambassadorship upon Mr. Trump's order.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump's shocking disparagement of and threats against her in his telephone conversation with Zelensky.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump's praise for one of the corrupt prosecutors in that conversation;</li> <li>• Pompeo's failure to defend her in his capacity as secretary of state, for fear of being undercut by a tweet from Mr. Trump.</li> <li>• Her dismay at how easy foreign actors might now feel it is to corruptly influence U.S. policy.</li> <li>• The courageous and selfless service of countless foreign service officers abroad.</li> <li>• Her concern that her colleagues now would fear retaliation for fighting corruption.</li> <li>• The unraveling of and loss of morale within the State Department under the Trump administration generally.</li> <li>• The unprecedented nature of all of this. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>

11-15-19. 11-22-19	[Continued.] Astonishingly, in what observers characterized as an unmitigated act of absurdity and character assassination, about an hour into Yovanovitch's testimony Mr. Trump tweeted: “Everywhere Marie Yovanovitch went turned bad. She started off in Somalia, how did that go? Then fast forward to Ukraine, where the new Ukrainian President spoke unfavorably about her in my second phone call with him. It is a U.S. President’s absolute right to appoint ambassadors.” Schiff interrupted the testimony to read the tweet to Yovanovitch. The audience gasped. She said she found it intimidating. Schiff observed that he considered the tweet to amount to witness intimidation – an impeachable offense.<sup>131</sup> Following bi-partisan criticism of the tweet, Mr. Trump defended it on grounds of his freedom of speech.<sup>132</sup> In doing so, he ignored his own attacks on the freedom of speech of journalists. He also implied that, as a legal matter, his freedom of speech was absolute; i.e., overriding well-established proscriptions against anti-social speech such as may lie in acts of extortion, intimidation, defamation, incitement and treason. CSD also notes that several of the key witnesses to date – Vindman, Taylor, Yovanovitch – had courageously served the U.S. in physically perilous circumstances. Yet some of Mr. Trump's supporters had questioned their patriotism, and Mr. Trump had questioned their integrity. He himself, of course had never served. As a Post columnist put it, Yovanovitch's life-long agenda had been to serve her country; Mr. Trump's, to serve himself.<sup>133</sup> On November 22, Mr. Trump once again attacked Yovanovitch, now during the course of a Fox News interview, alleging without evidence that she was partisan.<sup>134</sup>
11-15-19	Holmes speaks. Holmes, in private testimony before the impeachment investigators, corroborated Taylor's statements about what Holmes had told Taylor about the conversation between Sondland and Mr. Trump that Holmes had overheard. The report on the conversation was thus no longer second hand.<sup>135</sup>
11-15-19	The first call with Ukraine. The White House released a summary of a congratulatory call that Mr. Trump had had on April 21 with Zelensky upon the latter's election to Ukraine's presidency. In the call, Mr. Trump had made no mention of Ukrainian corruption. The summary thus contradicted the White House's April 21 read-out of the call to the effect that Mr. Trump had urged an end to that corruption. It also contradicted Mr. Trump's claim to have sought the investigations of the Bidens and of the 2016 election because of his deep antipathy toward corruption generally in Ukraine. As the press flagged the discrepancies, the White House promptly, fallaciously and remarkably blamed them on Vindman. In truth, Vindman had helped prepare the read-out (including a passage about corruption) in advance of the call; but on the actual call Mr. Trump had ignored the talking points that had been painstakingly prepared for him.<sup>136</sup>

11-15-19	Barr fumes. Attorney General William Barr – Mr. Trump's repeat enabler – made his first material comments about the impeachment inquiry. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He said that "in waging a scorched earth, no-holds-barred war of resistance against this administration, it is the left that is engaged in the systematic shredding of norms and the undermining of the rule of law."</li> <li>• He said that Democrats were "engaged in a war to cripple, by any means necessary, a duly elected government."</li> <li>• He said that Republicans "tend to have more scruple over their political tactics [than Democrats] and rarely feel that the ends justify the means."</li> <li>• He said that when elected, Mr. Trump "was up front about what he wanted to do and the people decided they wanted him to serve as president"; that is, that because the voters had elected Mr. Trump on his general agenda, Congress had no right to impeach him for being a scoundrel.</li> <li>• Barr also said that the impeachment inquiry being conducted by the Democrats contravened the intent of the drafters of the Constitution, who wanted the president to enjoy sweeping authority.<sup>137</sup></li> </ul> As to the first three of Barr's points, CSD finds them to be flatly false, revolting and demagogic. As to the fourth point, we regard it as well beyond reason that an official, because elected, could not be impeached under the Constitution. As to the fifth point, we believe that previous presidents had not viewed their powers under the Constitution to have been so sweeping as Mr. Trump and Barr now appeared to view Mr. Trump's. We also doubt that Mr. Trump and his supporters would be pleased with a Democratic president asserting such sweeping authority. And we doubt that Mr. Trump's seemingly instinctive attempts to seize and exercise extraordinary powers had come out of any sort of historical awareness, constitutional scholarship, or even experience as a political actor within our democracy – as opposed to his native avarice and brutishness, his pathological self-regard, and his life-long disdain and disregard for the law. Critics quickly called for Barr's impeachment and disbarment.<sup>138</sup>
11-16-19, 11-17-19	Williams speaks. Jennifer Williams, Vice President Mike Pence's special advisor for Europe and Russia, told impeachment investigators that she had attended the July 25 phone call between Mr. Trump and Zelensky and had found Mr. Trump's conduct on the call to have been politically motivated, "unusual and inappropriate." The next day, Mr. Trump – dismissing her and other witnesses as too insignificant for him to be acquainted with – tweeted: "Tell Jennifer Williams, whoever that is, to read BOTH transcripts of the presidential calls, &amp; see the just released ststement [sic] from Ukraine [in which Zelensky, seemingly out of intimidation, had denied that Trump had pressured him]. Then she should meet with the other Never Trumpers, who I don't know &amp; mostly never even heard of, &amp; work out a better presidential attack!"<sup>139</sup>

11-19-19	Vindman, live. On live TV, Vindman testified that, on the infamous July 25 phone call in which he (Vindman) had participated, Mr. Trump had clearly demanded that Zelensky investigate Mr. Trump's adversaries. Vindman also said that Mr. Trump had evidenced no interest in Ukrainian corruption generally, despite Mr. Trump's recent claims to the contrary. Mr. Trump's Republican supporters in the House attempted to ridicule Vindman for wearing his military uniform to the hearing (even though that was typical for testifying officers); to question his loyalty to America (because he had been born in Ukraine); and to force him to reveal the identity of the whistleblower (contrary to statutory protections).<sup>140</sup> The White House and Donald Trump, Jr. attacked Vindman by twitter while he was testifying.<sup>141</sup> The Army was reportedly considering moving Vindman and his family to a secure military base for their protection.<sup>142</sup>
11-20-19	Sondland, live. On live TV, defying the White House's instruction not to appear, and materially augmenting and revising his initial closed-door statements, Sondland testified. He said that Mr. Trump – through Giuliani, and with the knowledge of Pence, Perry, Mulvaney and their top aides – had personally ordered that U.S. diplomats condition military assistance and a meeting for Zelensky in Washington on Zelensky announcing a Ukrainian investigation into Burisma (and implicitly the Bidens) and into the 2016 American election. He testified that he himself had likely articulated parts of that quid pro quo to the Ukrainians. He testified that he had found the quid pro quo to be inappropriate, and that Taylor's alarm about it had been merited. He testified that Mr. Trump didn't care about Ukrainian corruption, only about undermining Biden. He specifically confirmed his telephone call with Mr. Trump, the day after the July 25 call with Zelensky, in which Mr. Trump had demanded to learn the progress of the agreement to announce an investigation, and after which Sondland had told Holmes that Mr. Trump cared only about the investigation announcement and not about Ukraine. He also testified that the State Department was refusing to share with him records of his own communications. Sondland's testimony was particularly notable in that only he, among the witnesses to date, was Mr. Trump's hand-picked operative, and had had direct contact with Giuliani and Mr. Trump on the Ukraine affair.<sup>143</sup> In addition, he made clear that Mr. Trump and Giuliani had demanded only a televised announcement of the investigations, not necessarily actual investigations. Observers noted that Mr. Trump likely would have used the video of the announcement in an electoral contest against Biden.<sup>144</sup> Mr. Trump responded, delusionally, by telling reporters that Sondland's testimony had vindicated him (Mr. Trump), and that "it's all over" for the impeachment hearings.<sup>145</sup> But he also distanced himself from Sondland, claiming to barely know him, even though he had previously praised him as "a really good man and great American."<sup>146</sup> Aides to Pence, Pompeo, Perry and Mulvaney denied the allegations against those officials; but they did not offer alternative narratives.<sup>147</sup> The Times drew a damning portrait of the depths of Pompeo's complicity, and of his betrayal of his subordinates, his agency and his country.<sup>148</sup>

11-21-19	Hill, live. On live TV, Hill testified – electrically – that the Russia-Trump-Giuliani effort to establish that Ukraine but not Russia had meddled in the 2016 American election promoted a baseless conspiracy theory. "Based on questions and statements I have heard, some of you on this committee appear to believe that Russia and its security services did not conduct a campaign against our country — and that perhaps, somehow, for some reason, Ukraine did," she said. "This is a fictional narrative that has been perpetrated and propagated by the Russian security services themselves. ... I refuse to be part of an effort to legitimize an alternative narrative that the Ukrainian government is a U.S. adversary, and that Ukraine — not Russia — attacked us in 2016."<sup>149</sup> "The impact of the successful 2016 Russian campaign remains evident today," Hill also said. "Our nation is being torn apart. Truth is questioned. Our highly professional and expert career foreign service is being undermined."<sup>150</sup> "Right now, Russia's security services and their proxies have geared up to repeat their interference. We are running out of time to stop them. In the course of this investigation, I would ask that you please not promote politically driven falsehoods that so clearly advance Russian interests."<sup>151</sup>
11-21-19	Holmes, live. On live TV, Holmes re-confirmed to the impeachment investigators his overhearing the July 26 Trump-Sondland telephone conversation, in which Mr. Trump had demanded to know the status of his extortion of Zelinsky, and after which Sondland had acknowledged to Holmes that Mr. Trump cared about damaging Biden, not about reducing corruption in Ukraine. Holmes noted the hypocrisy: "While we had advised our Ukrainian counterparts to voice a commitment to following the rule of law and generally investigating credible corruption allegations, this was a demand that President Zelensky personally commit, on a cable news channel, to a specific investigation of President Trump's political rival."<sup>152</sup> By way of Twitter, in real time, Mr. Trump disparaged Holmes's credibility.<sup>153</sup>
11-22-19	The Ukrainian server, and other myths. Mr. Trump continued to pursue his (and his supporters') theory that Ukraine, not Russia, had hacked the Democratic National Committee's emails in 2016. The theory held that one forensic analysis of the hack had been performed by CrowdStrike, an American company with a remote Ukrainian connection; that CrowdStrike had come to possess and had refused to turn over to the FBI the DNC's server housing the hacked emails; that the server now resided in Ukraine; and that Mr. Trump thus was somehow justified in shaking down Zelensky for dirt on the Bidens. On his July 25 call with Zelensky, Mr. Trump had alleged that Ukraine held the server. Now, on November 22, Mr. Trump spoke at length during a Fox News interview about the server being in Ukraine. But in truth, the DNC's data resided in the cloud, not on a server; the FBI had been provided with the pertinent cloud data; Mr. Trump had been advised of all of that repeatedly; and separate analyses (performed by Congress, by intelligence agencies, and by special prosecutor Robert Mueller) had also concluded that Russia had committed the hack.<sup>154</sup> [Continued below.]

11-22-19	[Continued.] In the same lengthy and rambling Fox interview, Mr. Trump said that the telephone conversation with Sondland (as reported by Holmes and not rebutted by Sondland) had not occurred; that he had not given Sondland any authority in Ukraine; that he barely knew Sondland ("I see him hanging around when I go to Europe"); that the whistleblower's report (since corroborated many times over by witnesses) was "fake"; and that the Obama administration had spied on his campaign and had "tried to overthrow the presidency." He also leveled gratuitous, ad hominem attacks against Schiff, Pelosi and Yovanovitch. Shamelessly but characteristically, he spewed many other falsehoods as well.<sup>155</sup>
11-22-19	Now bribing Congress. Mr. Trump was reported to have been funding the reelection campaigns of Republican members of Congress and entertaining them in retreats at Camp David, in an unusually pointed effort to convince them to vote against impeaching and convicting him.<sup>156</sup>
11-22-19 +	Nunes in cahoots? On November 22, CNN reported that, according to Parnas's attorney, Republican Congressman Devon Nunes had traveled to Vienna a year previous to meet with, and to seek dirt on Biden from, Victor Shokin – then the former, corrupt Ukrainian prosecutor general. Nunes was one of Mr. Trump's chief allies in the House in contesting first the Mueller investigation and now the impeachment inquiry, and one of the members most given to purveying wild conspiracy theories and to demonizing Democrats. Newsweek wrote: "If accurate, the claim would implicate Nunes in the events his committee is investigating: president Trump and associates allegedly attempting to enlist a foreign government to dig up dirt on a domestic political opponent, while Congressionally approved aid was withheld until the request was met." Promptly after the publication, Nunes threatened to sue CNN.<sup>157</sup> (Nunes had previously sued a parody Twitter account that had purported to be Nunes's cow; but he had subsequently dropped that lawsuit.<sup>158</sup>) On November 23, media confirmed that Nunes and two aides had traveled to Vienna on the date Parnas had alleged, at a cost to taxpayers of $63,000.<sup>159</sup> For his high jinx, Nunes now faced a possible congressional investigation – his second in two years, both of them for his complicity in Mr. Trump's wrongdoings. The previous episode had involved his disclosing classified information to the White House in connection with the Intelligence Committee's investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 election.<sup>160</sup> As reported by CSD in our December 3 entry below, Nunes's participation in the broader Ukrainian extortion scheme was shortly thereafter exposed.

11-22-19, 11-26-19	Evidence? What evidence? On November 22, A Post columnist decried the drumbeat of claims on the part of Mr. Trump and his supporters that impeachment investigators had produced only hearsay (if any) evidence, and no direct evidence, of Mr. Trump's extortion of Zelensky. First (wrote the columnist), those claims were fallacious: witnesses had produced ample direct evidence of the extortion. (CSD would add: one might shoot someone on Fifth Avenue in front of scores of witnesses and then roar hundreds of times that he had not done so, but that would not change the facts or the evidence of the crime.) Second, to the extent that evidence was missing, Mr. Trump had forbidden those who would likely know the most about the scheme – Pompeo, Giuliani, Mulvaney, Perry, Bolton – from both testifying and producing documents. (CSD would add: Mr. Trump's attempt to shield himself from the damning testimony of those officials might have been viewed almost universally by common sense Americans as being patent and preposterous – in another time.) Third, the categorical refusal to produce witnesses and documents was far broader than any other recent president of either party had dared deploy.<sup>161</sup> But on November 26, Mr. Trump tweeted that his ban on senior aides testifying was selfless. He wrote, "I am fighting for future Presidents and the Office of the President. Other than that, I would actually like people to testify. ... " "It is a Democrat Scam that is going nowhere but, future Presidents should in no way be compromised."
11-25-19, 11-27-19, 12-8-19	Giuliani's quids and quos. On November 25, The Times reported that Giuliani appeared to have solicited dirt on Biden from two Ukrainian oligarchs in exchange for helping them to fight U.S. law enforcement operations that targeted the oligarchs on unrelated matters.<sup>162</sup> On November 27, The Times and The Post reported that Giuliani, in early 2019, had been prospecting for lucrative legal engagements from Ukrainian officials at the same time as he was soliciting dirt on Biden from Ukrainian government figures. At least one of the officials targeted for a legal engagement, the corrupt top prosecutor Yuriy Lutsenko, had come to partner with Giuliani in smearing Biden. Giuliani had long publicly maintained that he had had no business dealings in Ukraine (just as Mr. Trump himself had long, and falsely, claimed to have had no business dealings in Russia during his electoral campaign).<sup>163</sup> One implication of the endeavor was that Giuliani may have been, or may have been trying to become, a paid agent for the Ukrainian government (not just an unpaid one for his client Mr. Trump) in attempting to influence an American election – which would have been illegal. Another implication was that Giuliani may have been peddling his professed influence with Mr. Trump in exchange for Ukrainian legal fees – which would also have been illegal. (For a broader view of Giuliani's unconstrained corruption, see CSD's entry of November 11, November 12 and December 8 above, in the first portion of this Addendum.)

12-2-19	Misquoting Zelensky. Orally and by Twitter, Mr. Trump falsely proclaimed that Zelensky had recently said that he (Mr. Trump) had done "nothing wrong" in their dealings. Mr. Trump appeared to be referring to an interview that Zelensky had just given to the American press. In that interview, as before, Mr. Zelensky had claimed that Mr. Trump had not pressured him to do anything and had not offered a quid pro quo; but he said that Mr. Trump did in fact do several things "wrong": publicly flagellating Ukraine for corruption, and suspending military aid.<sup>164</sup>
12-3-19	No Ukrainian interference. David Hale, the State Department's no. 3 official, said that Ukraine did not systematically interfere in the 2016 presidential election,<sup>165</sup> thus confirming the Senate Intelligence Committee's previous finding to that effect,<sup>166</sup> and utterly discrediting the claims of Mr. Trump and his supporters to the contrary.
12-3-19	The view from London. Responding to a reporter's question at a meeting of NATO leaders in London, Mr. Trump laid out an astonishing, stream-of-consciousness broadside about his victimization at the hands of the House impeachment investigators. Ladling falsehood upon falsehood, he described their inquiry as "a fix." He also adhered to his custom of criticizing American political figures while abroad, in defiance of well-established American political protocol. Specifically, seeking to disparage the physical appearance of the leader of the impeachment inquiry (as he had done often before), he said, "I think Adam Schiff is a deranged human being. I think he grew up with a complex for lots of reasons that are obvious. I think he's a very sick man and he lies." CSD encourages its readers to take in Mr. Trump's entire response, at the link that appears at this endnote.<sup>167</sup> In other comments to the press, Mr. Trump called Democrats "unpatriotic," issued an additional torrent of casual but demonstrable falsehoods, and suggested that Europe befriend Russia.<sup>168</sup>
12-3-19	The House Intel report. The House Intelligence Committee delivered its report on its impeachment investigation to the House Judiciary Committee and the press. The report included stark evidence of Mr. Trump's abuse of power in pressuring Zelensky to investigate Mr. Trump's political rivals – thereby placing Mr. Trump's personal political interests over those of the country. The report also included evidence of Mr. Trump's massive obstruction of Congress relative to the proceedings; his criminal intimidation of several witnesses; and the extensive incidence (although not the content) of telephone conversations among his band of conspirators (Giuliani, Nunes, Parnas, the White House, the Office of Management and Budget, and others). Politico's summaries of the report appear at the link at this endnote.<sup>169</sup>

12-4-19 +	Giuliani returns – to Europe. On December 4, Giuliani returned to Europe, now with One America, a right-wing American cable network, to gather video testimony from several corrupt Ukrainian officials purporting to incriminate Biden and defend Mr. Trump. His trip appeared to mock the ongoing impeachment proceedings, and to further undercut both the State Department and Zelensky.<sup>170</sup> When the video was released later that month, a Post columnist found it not even vaguely credible.<sup>171</sup>
12-6-19	Please spy on me. The Post reported that, despite many prior warnings and tutorials by security officials, Mr. Trump had continued to use unencrypted cell phones to discuss likely sensitive matters with his personal attorney Rudy Giuliani and others – thus exposing his conversations to foreign intelligence gathering. He had apparently done that at least in part to hide his call logs from White House officials, who may have disapproved of his conversations. The Post noted Mr. Trump's practice as especially troubling in that Russia may have eavesdropped on conversations relating to the Ukraine extortion scandal. One former CIA officer said, "[I]t is so likely that Russia tracked the calls of Giuliani and others that the Kremlin probably knows more now about those conversations than impeachment investigators." The Post wrote: "U.S. officials said that Russia has benefited from nearly every aspect of the Ukraine controversy, including the strain it has placed on Ukraine's relationship with the United States, the attempt to divert attention from Russia's attacks on a U.S. election, and the paralyzing impact the impeachment inquiry has had on Washington." (The Times had reported over a year previously that Chinese spies were routinely eavesdropping on Mr. Trump's cell phone calls.<sup>172</sup>) The Post also found Mr. Trump's irregular telephone practices "particularly remarkable" in that he had repeatedly called for Hillary Clinton to be prosecuted for having used an insecure email account while serving as secretary of state – a charge that had given rise to crowds at his rallies chanting "Lock her up!"<sup>173</sup>
12-7-19	The House Judiciary staff's report on constitutional grounds for impeachment. The Democratic staff of the House Judiciary Committee released a paper laying out American constitutional history and intent as they pertained to the House's ongoing formulation of articles of impeachment against Mr. Trump. The paper delivered commonsense guidance for determining whether this president warranted impeachment, and whether his statements were lies and his motives corrupt. CSD found the document to be rigorous, eloquent, stirring, and possibly of historic proportion.<sup>174</sup>

12-10-19	The articles of impeachment. The Democrat-controlled House of Representatives released two articles of impeachment against Mr. Trump, limited to elements of the Ukraine scandal, for the Judiciary Committee to mark up and finalize: abuse of power (for Mr. Trump's having solicited foreign interference in the 2020 president election), and obstruction of Congress (for his having blocked the House's efforts to investigate the matter).<sup>175</sup>
12-11-19	Outing the whistleblower, at last. During a televised debate of the articles of impeachment within the House Judiciary Committee, Republican Congressman Louie Gohmert from Texas publicly named the alleged whistleblower whose action had sparked the impeachment investigation. Mr. Trump and his supporters had long been clamoring for that public outing – even though the whistleblower's identity had become superfluous to the proceedings (in that his or her allegations had long been amply corroborated by others' testimony and documentary evidence). And they had clamored even though exposing the person's identity would violate the intent if not the letter of the whistleblower protection statute and would endanger the whistleblower's life.<sup>176</sup> It is hard for CSD to characterize the thrust to out the official as anything but pointlessly, rabidly vicious; the sadistic act of a seething mob.
12-11-19	The Inquirer votes. The editorial board of The Philadelphia Inquirer – the newspaper of record in CSD's geographical area – called for Mr. Trump's impeachment.<sup>177</sup>
12-13-19	Judiciary approves the articles. The Democrat-controlled House Judiciary Committee approved the two articles of impeachment that the House had put before it. The committee vote followed a turbulent and indecorous debate in which Republicans mainly railed against the Democrats' alleged procedural unfairness and political motives, launched brutal and irrelevant ad hominem attacks, and advanced patently false characterizations of evidence – rather than defending Mr. Trump on the actual merits.<sup>178</sup>
12-13-19	McConnell submits. As the House neared a floor vote on the articles of impeachment, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell told Fox News, relative to the procedures he would put in place for Mr. Trump's trial before the Republican-controlled Senate that would follow the House vote: "Everything I do during this, I'm coordinating with the White House counsel. There will be no difference between the president's position and our position as to how to handle this. ... We'll be working through this process ... in total coordination with the White House counsel's office and the people representing the president in the well of the Senate."<sup>179</sup> [Continued below.]

12-13-19	[Continued.] Since Mr. Trump's election nearly three years previous, it had been apparent that Mr. Trump's ownership of the Senate was complete, in a subjective sense. But McConnell's statement now established incontrovertibly and unabashedly that Mr. Trump had succeeded in causing the Republican Senate to abrogate its constitutional and historical mandate to decide the charges brought against him independently and objectively. Not incidentally, McConnell's undertaking, if acted upon, would also flatly violate the oath that he was required to take as an impeachment juror in the Senate: "I solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that in all things appertaining to the trial of the impeachment of _____, now pending, I will do impartial justice according to the Constitution and laws: So help me God."<sup>180</sup> For a man who had long purported to value and to act on his faith, he was on the threshold of taking a false oath, and of committing sacrilege.
12-16-19	Bribery. The House Democrats added detail to their impeachment charges, noting that the abuse of power article included allegations that, in extorting Zelensky, Mr. Trump had committed criminal bribery and wire fraud.<sup>181</sup>
12-17-19	The letter. On the eve of the House impeachment vote, Mr. Trump sent a six-page open letter to House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, decrying the proceedings as illegitimate. The letter was filled with irrelevancies, rage, self-pity, boasting and untruths. In it, Mr. Trump wrote that Pelosi was "offending Americans of faith by continually saying 'I pray for the President.'" He fired off ad hominem attacks against his adversaries: Pelosi, Biden, former FBI director James Comey ("one of the dirtiest cops our Nation has ever seen"), Muslim Congresswoman Rashida Tlaib ("ranting and raving") and Schiff ("cheated and lied"). He presented a long list of his accomplishments as president, many of which were misstated or overstated. He charged Democrats, mostly falsely, with supporting "open borders, mass migration, high crime, crippling taxes, socialized healthcare, destruction of American energy, late-term taxpayer-funded abortion, elimination of the Second Amendment, radical far-left theories of law and justice, and constant partisan obstruction ... ." He decried the Mueller investigation. As for the impeachment itself, he called it "an unprecedented and unconstitutional abuse of power by Democrat Lawmakers, unequalled in nearly two and a half centuries of American legislative history." He wrote that Pelosi was "breaking [her] allegiance to the Constitution, and ... declaring open war on American Democracy." He called the proceedings an "election-nullification scheme." He addressed the forensic evidence of his guilt by writing falsehood upon falsehood, libeling the Bidens and misrepresenting the plain facts of his wrongdoings. [Continued below.]

12-17-19	[Continued.] In the very epitome of projection, he wrote of the Democrats, "You are the ones interfering in America's elections. You are the ones subverting America's Democracy. You are the ones Obstructing Justice. You are the ones bringing pain and suffering to our Republic for your own selfish personal, political, and partisan gain." He claimed to have been denied due process in the proceedings, writing "More due process was afforded to those accused in the Salem Witch Trials." He called the proceedings an "attempted coup." He closed by writing, "One hundred years from now, when people look back at this affair, I want them to understand it, and learn from it, so that it can never happen to another President again."<sup>182</sup> The White House delivered a copy of the letter, together with a large "Merry Christmas" card, to each member of the Senate.<sup>183</sup> To CSD's understanding, no previous president facing impeachment had made such a public statement, let alone such a vicious and preposterous one. But we agree with the historical significance of the letter.
12-18-19	Impeached. The House of Representatives, on an almost pure party-line vote, impeached Mr. Trump, on two counts: abuse of power and obstruction of Congress. But as a columnist for The Post observed, Mr. Trump in some ways had prevailed. He had swept the House's entire Republican delegation into a surreal orgy of loyalty. Its members had repeatedly jeered, falsified, inflamed and projected. They had accused the Democrats of "abuse of power," "collud[ing] with Russia and Ukraine," a "massive cover-up," an "assault on the Constitution," "interfering in America's election," "threaten[ing] the republic," "betrayal," "conspir[ing] to overthrow President Trump," and offenses equivalent to the bombing of Pearl Harbor and the crucifixion of Jesus. Some called for Schiff's indictment and Pelosi's expulsion from Congress. They called Democrats "phony," "fraudulent," "socialist," "Stalinist," "McCarthy[ist]," "delusional," "elitist"; and they called the proceedings a "sham," a "witch-hunt," a "coup," a "kangaroo court," a "joke," "rigged," a "hoax," a "charade," a "circus," a "stunt," "lies," "corruption," a "star chamber," "illegal," "illegitimate," and a "hit job." For the most part they did not contest the evidence against Mr. Trump, and they did not defend Mr. Trump's moral character.<sup>184</sup> [Continued below.]

12-18-19	[Continued.] A group of prominent Republican outliers wrote in The Times: "Indeed, national Republicans have done far worse than simply march along to Mr. Trump's beat. Their defense of him is imbued with an ugliness, a meanness and a willingness to attack and slander those who have shed blood for our country, who have dedicated their lives and careers to its defense and its security, and whose job is to preserve the nation's status as a beacon of hope. Congressional Republicans have embraced and copied Mr. Trump's cruelty and defended and even adopted his corruption. Mr. Trump and his enablers have abandoned conservatism and longstanding Republican principles and replaced it with Trumpism, an empty faith led by a bogus prophet."<sup>185</sup>
12-19-19	The wrath of God. Protesting the House Democrats having voted to impeach him the previous day, Mr. Trump tweeted that they were un-American, that they were seeking to "overthrow" him, and that they would "feel the almighty wrath of God."<sup>186</sup>
12-19-19 +	An Evangelical call for removal. On December 19, Christianity Today, the influential magazine founded by the late Evangelical leader Billy Graham, called for Mr. Trump to be removed from office – either by the Senate in the upcoming impeachment trial or in the 2020 presidential election. The magazine's editor found that although Mr. Trump had favorably advanced the Evangelical political agenda, he had indeed committed the offenses alleged in the House's articles of impeachment. The editor wrote: "We believe the impeachment hearings have made it absolutely clear ... that President Trump has abused his authority for personal gain and betrayed his constitutional oath. The impeachment hearings have illuminated the president's moral deficiencies for all to see. This damages the institution of the presidency, damages the reputation of our country, and damages both the spirit and the future of our people. None of the president's positives can balance the moral and political danger we face under a leader of such grossly immoral character. The editor also found Mr. Trump to be morally repugnant more generally. Of the president, he wrote: "He has hired and fired a number of people who are now convicted criminals. He himself has admitted to immoral actions in business and his relationship with women, about which he remains proud. His Twitter feed alone—with its habitual string of mischaracterizations, lies, and slanders—is a near perfect example of a human being who is morally lost and confused." The editor also wrote that continued support of Mr. Trump by Evangelicals posed a grave danger not only to the country but to the credibility of the Evangelical movement. The op-ed represented a significant break in the support for Mr. Trump by white Evangelical Christians, who polls indicated had represented his single most loyal demographic group. [Continued below.]

12-19-19 +	[Continued.] The following day, Mr. Trump defended by way of Twitter: yet again calling his July 15 phone call with Zelensky "perfect"; preposterously accusing the magazine's center-right editor of being "a Radical Left nonbeliever, who wants to take your religion and your guns"; and falsely claiming that the magazine was struggling financially.<sup>187</sup> (In fact immediately after the op-ed's publication, the magazine lost 2,000 subscribers and gained 5,000.)<sup>188</sup>
12-23-19	Soros pulling the strings. New York Magazine reported that, in a December 8 interview with Giuliani, he (Giuliani) had said that George Soros – the Hungarian-American investor, survivor of Nazi occupation, and visionary pro-democracy activist – was in control of Yovanovitch, three other American ambassadors who had served in Ukraine, a number of FBI agents working the Ukraine matter, eight "anarchist" district attorneys in the United States, and the mainstream American media that printed "lies" about Giuliani himself.<sup>189</sup> Soros had long served as one of the leading whipping-boys of right-wing Europeans, who – deploying a time-worn anti-Semitic trope – claimed that he was nefariously pulling the strings of his puppets in high places. Mr. Trump and some other Republicans had recently jumped on board that wagon.<sup>190</sup>
12-25-19	Meanwhile, back in Ukraine .... The Post recapped the destruction of American diplomacy and diplomats in Ukraine in 2019: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Yovanovitch, once the ambassador, had been banished from the Foreign Service to a teaching position at Georgetown.</li> <li>• With Taylor's recent announcement that on January 2 he would stand down as acting ambassador, there would be no one in that position.</li> <li>• Giuliani, unrepentant and bulldozing past Taylor in-country, had recently returned to Ukraine to film an exposé on Biden for a right-wing television network.</li> <li>• Hill, a woman of commanding dignity and integrity and now gone from the government, was receiving threatening phone calls. Conspiracy theorist and InfoWars chief Alex Jones had broadcast this about her in November: "I want her ass indicted. I want her indicted for perjury. Today. Indict that whore."</li> <li>• Hill's short-lived replacement as Russia advisor at the White House, Tim Morrison, who likewise had testified against Mr. Trump, also was gone.</li> <li>• The new Russia adviser, Andrew Peek, arrived with no prior experience regarding Russia.</li> <li>• Volker too was gone from the government.</li> <li>• Vindman, a Purple Heart recipient and the only Ukraine expert serving in the White House, had been taunted and smeared by Mr. Trump and his allies.</li> <li>• The whistleblower was sometimes being driven to and from work by armed security officers.<sup>191</sup></li> </ul>

12-27-19, 12-28-19	A presidential outing. On December 27, Mr. Trump re-tweeted the name of the whistleblower, at last outing the person in a direct presidential statement: thus further jeopardizing the whistleblower's physical safety, and possibly violating the statute that protects whistleblowers. The whistleblower had previously been outed by Breitbart News, Fox News, Congressman Louie Gohmert, Donald Trump, Jr. and others. On December 28, Mr. Trump deleted his re-tweet.<sup>192</sup>

Addendum 28 – February 20, 2020

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

The current Addendum appears in two parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular chronology. The second part, beginning on p.28, chronicles events surrounding the impeachment of Mr. Trump by Congress.

Date	Episode	Category
12-31-19	Hiring the undocumented. The New York Times published an update on the practice of Mr. Trump's businesses in hiring undocumented workers. By now dozens of the undocumented had surfaced and had been terminated. But some had been terminated only recently – and, at the Trump Winery, only after they had brought in the harvest. <sup>1</sup>	9, 11
12-31-19	Still in love. After North Korean dictator and butcher Kim Jong-un amped up his nuclear threats against the U.S., Mr. Trump reiterated his affection for the man, telling reporters, “He likes me, I like him, we get along. He’s representing his country, I’m representing my country, we have to do what we have to do. ... I think he’s a man of his word ....” <sup>2</sup>	11, 12

1-3-20	Campaigning in church. Mr. Trump conducted a campaign rally at an evangelical mega-church in Miami, Florida, in flagrant defiance of IRS rules prohibiting non-profit organizations from endorsing political candidates. His message itself was also in significant part sectarian. He falsely charged that Democrats were "tearing down crosses," "banning religious believers from public life," and seeking to "replace God with socialism." In another argument that would be difficult to prove or disprove, he alleged that God was "on our side" and against "radical left" Democrats. In addition, while mercilessly mocking the name and the appearance of Democratic presidential contender Pete Buttigieg, Mr. Trump called him a "pretend" Christian. It was an allegation that, for CSD, collided Mr. Trump's own much-photographed displays of (seemingly pretend) prayerful piety when in the company of evangelical pastors, including at the Miami rally.<sup>3</sup> An evangelical critic writing in USA Today said that, at the event, Mr. Trump had boasted profusely and had shown no Christian kindness or humility. Rather, he had basked in the blessings and even the worship of many of the clergy and the congregation present, as well as in the crowd's "screaming" patriotism and anti-Democrat wrath. The critic wrote: "Such a display by evangelicals is unprecedented in American history."<sup>4</sup>	9
1-3-20 +	Suleimani assassination. Upon Mr. Trump's direct order – issued between rounds of golf at his resorts in Florida – on January 3 the U.S. assassinated Qassem Suleimani, a top Iranian general, by way of a drone strike at an airport in Iraq. The target. Suleimani had led Iran's efforts in spreading its military influence across Lebanon, Yemen, Iraq and elsewhere in the Middle East. Iran's proxies had killed thousands – including hundreds of American troops – and had destabilized the entire region. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14

1-3-20 +	[Continued.]  Background: the U.S. and Iran. Iran's hostility to the U.S. was decades old. The country had long been seen as developing nuclear weapons, and the U.S. and others had imposed crippling economic sanctions with a view to forestalling that. In 2015 the Obama administration had joined with the European Union and the four other permanent members of the United Nations in signing an agreement pursuant to which Iran would halt its nuclear program in exchange for a lifting of the sanctions. But from the start of his presidency Mr. Trump had demonized Iran, and he had quickly withdrawn from the agreement – enraging Iran, Europe and many in the U.S. In recent months, Iranian forces had been provoking the U.S. with hostile actions. Most notably, Iran had conducted a series of rocket attacks against U.S. bases, including one that had killed a civilian American contractor. U.S. intelligence had now determined that Iran was planning additional – and possibly larger – attacks against Americans. Mr. Trump announced the assassination as a protective measure, then quickly ordered the deployment of several thousand more troops to the theater. The blowback: here and abroad. After the assassination, American observers on the left and the right, in Congress and out, expressed satisfaction that Suleimani was gone. Democrats, strategic experts and mainstream media voices, however, were unnerved by the particular strike and its genesis. Mr. Trump had not consulted Congress in advance; his own advisors had been mixed in their advice; he had reportedly been eager to take the most radical retaliatory action offered to him; and he publicly released no detail on why the U.S. had struck now. Contemporaneously, massive street protests arose in Iran. The regime now threatened – and the U.S. military command expected – reprisal attacks and a potentially grave escalation of the conflict. The regime also announced the suspension of its commitments under the denuclearization agreement. European allies pulled back their troops in-theater. Iraq's government threatened to expel U.S. forces, and its parliament voted to do so. (An expulsion would amount to wins for Iran, Russia and ISIS.) What with the strategic pandemonium, the U.S.-led coalition suspended its fight against ISIS in Iraq. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14
-----------------	---	----------------------------

1-3-20 +	[Continued.] Evaluation. As ever, CSD does not second-guess the wisdom of America's international diplomatic and military strategies. But because Mr. Trump had long established himself in that area as capricious, uninformed and focused on domestic political gain, we note that a broad swath of observers did quickly question the assassination's wisdom and motives. Some also questioned whether the killing of an Iranian on Iraqi soil, and the attack in the (possible) absence of an imminent threat to the U.S., met U.S. and international legal standards. Concerns also arose over Mr. Trump entering the crisis saddled with a dearth of experienced advisors, strains he had caused with America's allies, and a reputation for unreliability.<sup>5</sup> Indeed, other than Mr. Trump's followers, most observers, including foreign heads of state, seemed agitated by the sudden crisis and baffled as to whether any strategic logic underlay it.<sup>6</sup> Some alleged that the strike may have been timed to distract from Mr. Trump's impeachment.<sup>7</sup> One New York Times columnist wrote that Iran's likely retaliation, as now anticipated by the Pentagon, would demonstrate yet again – after Mr. Trump had already been outmaneuvered by North Korea and China – that his belief in the effectiveness of his bullying was delusional.<sup>8</sup> Even America's closest allies in the Middle East were alarmed.<sup>9</sup> In sum, regardless of the strategic and tactical merits of Mr. Trump's decision to strike, that decision was widely mistrusted (except by Trump acolytes); and the world was unnerved by suspicions that Mr. Trump was over his head, out of control, and flirting with cataclysm. The next loud noises. Mr. Trump's rhetoric after the strike was disturbing as well. On January 4 he tweeted: "Let this serve as a WARNING that if Iran strikes any Americans, or American assets, we have targeted 52 Iranian sites (representing the 52 American hostages taken by Iran many years ago), some at a very high level &amp; important to Iran &amp; the Iranian culture, and those targets, and Iran itself, WILL BE HIT VERY FAST AND VERY HARD. The USA wants no more threats!" On January 5, speaking to reporters and responding to the international uproar that his tweet had drawn, he doubled-down on his threat to destroy cultural sites. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14
-----------------	--	----------------------------

1-3-20 +	[Continued.] The incendiary language, probably unprecedented for an American president, smacked of the very sort of primal, vengeful, laughable, useless and ultimately counter-productive rhetoric that Middle Eastern dictators themselves had commonly flung at their enemies. It also explicitly threatened the perpetration of war crimes – the destruction of Iranian cultural sites – comparable to such crimes as had been committed in recent years by the Taliban in Afghanistan and by ISIS in Syria and Iraq, and as had been condemned worldwide on those occasions.<sup>10</sup> For CSD, Mr. Trump's threat to target those sites in retribution embodied not only his cruelty, volatility and diplomatic incompetence, and his utter disregard for domestic and international ethical and legal norms, but his incuriosity about and disdain for foreign cultures – an ignorance that had once seemed merely parochial, dull-witted and tasteless, but the barbarity and danger of which had now exploded in full daylight. On January 6, Defense Secretary Mark Esper rejected the targeting of cultural sites, acknowledging that doing so would be illegal.<sup>11</sup> But only after Secretary of State Mike Pompeo did the same on January 7 did Mr. Trump back off from that element of his threats.<sup>12</sup> The strategic chaos after the strike. Also on January 6, in another remarkable snafu illustrating the strategic and bureaucratic chaos that the assassination had generated within the U.S. command, the Pentagon released a letter suggesting that the U.S. would withdraw its troops from Iraq, and then quickly reversed itself. Not only was the reversal an embarrassment, but it further crippled the credibility of U.S. statements in and about the region.<sup>13</sup> Commentaries condemning the bedlam underlying Mr. Trump's strategy, decision-making and communications proliferated, as did charges that that bedlam was compromising the reputation and the effectiveness of America's military more generally.<sup>14</sup> Iran retaliates. On January 7, Iran retaliated. It fired over a dozen missiles at two bases in Iraq housing American troops. The U.S. and Iran appeared to be on the brink of war. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14
-----------------	---	----------------------------

1-3-20 +	[Continued.]  The truce; and additional noise. But the attack (at that point) was seen to have caused no casualties, which American observers speculated and Iranian officials claimed had been intentional on Iran's part. Although Iran's intent to actually injure was later forensically demonstrated, and although eight injured service members were in fact soon evacuated from the bases, the stage was set for a White House victory lap. On January 8, in a speech laden with distortions, Mr. Trump boasted that Iran appeared to be "standing down," and that rather than retaliating again in-kind he would impose further economic sanctions on the country. He thus had declined to act on his own previous threats of massive military retaliation for any follow-on Iranian strikes. That is, seeming at last to have recognized the strong likelihood of an American calamity, Mr. Trump too appeared to have stood down. And on his way down, he blamed President Obama for having empowered Iran. Critics saw in the zig-zagging yet another example of Mr. Trump having created a domestic or international crisis, having backed down from it, then having claimed to have won – all without having articulated a coherent strategy going forward.<sup>15</sup> After the reciprocal stand-down, the White House continued to issue opaque and contradictory accounts of the reasons for and the timing of Suleimani's assassination, to the great distress of many Democrats and several Republicans in the Senate.<sup>16</sup> Many believed that, under American and international law, the legitimacy of the killing turned on whether an Iranian attack against Americans had been imminent. Among other inconsistencies, Mr. Trump insisted that Iran had been about to attack four American embassies, but senior officials denied that. Democratic and (irate) Republican senators whom the White House had briefed after the fact claimed that no imminent attack whatever had been described to them. On January 13, under pressure to explain, Mr. Trump tweeted that it didn't matter whether an attack plotted by Suleimani had been imminent, given the general's prior atrocities. In any event, whether Mr. Trump had relied on intelligence findings in planning the assassination or had scorned them (as he had done in the matter of Russian interference in the 2016 American election) was not made public.<sup>17</sup> And with his repeated shifts in justifying the strike, Mr. Trump's international credibility continued to plummet.<sup>18</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14
-----------------	---	----------------------------

1-3-20 +	[Continued.]          One New York Times columnist listed the many U.S. strategic setbacks that had arisen from the sudden crisis and that now continued: Iran's resumption of its nuclear weapons development program; the pause in the U.S.'s fight against ISIS; the possible expulsion of the U.S. from Iraq; the potential domestic political bonanza won by the struggling Iranian regime by having stood up to the U.S.; the deployment of additional U.S. troops to the Middle East; and the emboldening of North Korea.<sup>19</sup> CSD cites those concerns – again, not to engage in strategic second-guessing – but rather to chronicle the apparent havoc that Mr. Trump had unleashed; the false triumphalism that he seemed bent on propagating; and the loss of American credibility that he continued to generate overseas. Getting political. The Trump re-election campaign, meanwhile, was touting Mr. Trump's leadership in the assassination of Suleimani.<sup>20</sup> Mr. Trump's supporters in Congress lauded his performance, and some denounced Democrats as allied with terrorists or soft on Iran.<sup>21</sup> Mr. Trump and his supporters likewise denounced as traitors and liars those few Republicans who had otherwise been fervent Trump loyalists but who now had voiced concerns about the Suleimani assassination<sup>22</sup> – reminding CSD of world dictators over the decades who had similarly denounced even their loyalists for any imperfections in their allegiance. On January 13, Mr. Trump re-tweeted a doctored image of Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi wearing Muslim garb, plus a separate message falsely claiming that Pelosi supported the Iranian regime's killing of anti-regime protesters. (On January 8, when U.S.-Iran tensions were at their peak, Iranian troops had unintentionally downed a commercial flight from Tehran to Ukraine, killing everyone on board – mostly Iranians and Canadians. The tragedy had resulted in anti-regime protests and regime reprisals within Iran, including some reported deaths.)<sup>23</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14
-----------------	--	----------------------------

1-3-20 +	[Continued.]  Extorting Europe. On January 15, The Post reported that Mr. Trump had threatened Germany, France and Britain with substantial automobile tariffs unless they would formally accuse Iran of breaching the 2015 international nuclear deal (which breach Iran had announced following Mr. Trump's assassination of Suleimani). The three countries bridled at what they considered to be "extortion"; but they complied.<sup>24</sup> On January 22, Mr. Trump trivialized the injuries suffered by the evacuated service members – an act not only of military and political irresponsibility but of science denial.<sup>25</sup> On January 24, the Veterans of Foreign Wars demanded that Mr. Trump apologize for that trivialization.<sup>26</sup> Also on that day, the Pentagon revealed that the count of troops who had experienced traumatic brain injuries in the attack had risen to 34.<sup>27</sup> By January 30, the number had risen to 64.<sup>28</sup> By February 10, the number was over 100.<sup>29</sup> On February 14, the White House told Congress that the assassination was not precipitated by any threat of an imminent attack on U.S. forces or interests.<sup>30</sup>	6, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14
1-6-20, 1-11-20	The people's press secretary. CNN and The Washington Post reported that White House Press Secretary Stephanie Grisham had not given a press conference in the 301 days she had served as press secretary, far and away a modern record. During that period, however, she had appeared repeatedly on Fox News and One America News, offering furiously partisan, rancorous, often untruthful remarks, and all at taxpayer expense.<sup>31</sup>	9, 17 (7, 9)
1-9-20	Curing cancer. Mr. Trump took credit for a recently announced, substantial, years-long drop in cancer deaths – a phenomenon that he had had nothing to do with. To the contrary, he had sought to cut cancer research funding.<sup>32</sup>	7
1-9-20	In Ohio. At a marathon campaign rally in Toledo, Ohio, Mr. Trump: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Boasted triumphantly about having assassinated Iranian general Qassim Suleimani;</li> <li>• Assured multiple times that he had been ready to devastate Iran had that country responded to the assassination more damagingly than it did;</li> </ul> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 9, 11

1-9-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Defended his having not consulted Congress prior to the assassination, by alleging the likelihood of leaks by Democrats – in particular "little pencil-neck" Adam Schiff, the chair of the House Intelligence Committee who had led that body's impeachment inquiry and who Mr. Trump now bellowed "wears the smallest shirt collars";</li> <li>• Falsely claimed that "the radical left Democrats" were outraged that Suleimani had been eliminated;</li> <li>• Flogged President Obama for having returned previously seized Iranian assets to that country in connection with the 2015 international nuclear accord;</li> <li>• Mercilessly pounded the "fake news" in attendance for its "corruption";</li> <li>• Claimed that "thousands and thousands" of his fans were outside and unable to enter the filled hall (dubious);</li> <li>• Said that "Crooked Hillary" Clinton should be locked up (still stewing, more than three years after having lost to her in the 2016 popular vote, and evoking the usual chants from the crowd);</li> <li>• Falsely claimed to be "doing great in the polls";</li> <li>• Cited polls showing that among Republicans today he was more popular than Ronald Reagan and Abraham Lincoln;</li> <li>• Flayed Democratic presidential candidates Elizabeth Warren ("Pocahontas"), Bernie Sanders ("Crazy Bernie"), Joe Biden ("Where's Hunter?"), Pete Buttigieg ("Alfred E. 1-10-20	Mercenaries. Mr. Trump boasted to a Fox News interviewer that Saudi Arabia was paying the U.S. at least $1 billion to send troops to the Middle East. For that he was criticized, on grounds of hiring out American troops as mercenaries.<sup>34</sup> In truth, Mr. Trump had made a similar boast before – and had been criticized for it before.<sup>35</sup> But the new episode coincided with a Washington Post analysis positing that Mr. Trump, as president, had consistently treated international interactions as fundamentally commercial transactions – that he himself had often boasted that he was commercial to the core – and that for him opportunities to realize cash commonly outweighed both policy principles and strategic consequences.<sup>36</sup>	Selling the lives of American soldiers
1-13-20	Credit where due. Mr. Trump tweeted that he had "saved" the ban on insurance companies' discriminating against subscribers with pre-existing medical conditions, and that Democrats now wanted to eliminate that ban. The opposite was true. In fact the ban was and remained part of the Democrats' Affordable Care Act ("Obamacare"), which Mr. Trump had done his best to dismantle. Indeed, seemingly out of anger and jealousy toward President Obama, he was still trying to eliminate the generally popular program by way of Supreme Court action (although fearing voter outrage, he had asked the Court to postpone its decision until after the 2020 presidential election). The Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had made similarly false claims – of having supported coverage for pre-existing conditions – almost 70 times.<sup>37</sup>	7, 11
1-14-20	More funds swiped for the wall. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump was planning to divert $7.2 billion from existing military counterdrug and construction programs in 2020 to build his border wall. That amount would supplement the $6.1 billion diverted from the military in 2019. Congress had only appropriated $1.4 billion for the wall; the diversion was unlawful.<sup>38</sup>	6, 9

1-15-20	State and local refugee ban enjoined. A federal court issued a temporary injunction blocking Mr. Trump's unprecedented September 2019 executive order that enabled states and local governments to prohibit refugees from being resettled within their territories. Refugees are people whom the United Nations has determined have fled persecution in their home countries and whom the State and Homeland Security Departments have thoroughly vetted for medical and security risks prior to resettlement here. The judge said that the order was likely unlawful, contrary to the public interest, contrary to "clear Congressional intent," and "arbitrary and capricious as well as inherently susceptible to hidden bias."<sup>39</sup>	6, 9
1-15-20	"The biggest deal there is." Mr. Trump characterized a trade agreement that he had just signed with China, to mixed reviews (mixed within parties, and many reviewers themselves feeling mixed),<sup>40</sup> as follows: "Nobody has ever seen anything like it. This is the biggest deal there is anywhere in the world by far and that is good. We are doing another big one next week. But this is the biggest deal anybody has ever seen." None of that was true.<sup>41</sup>	7
1-17-20	Losers, babies and dopes. The Washington Post published a new report on a July 2017 briefing session that Mr. Trump had had with his top generals and strategic advisors. When three cabinet secretaries then had attempted to explain to him, in color charts punctuated by dollar signs, why the U.S. needed its overseas bases, trade agreements and alliances, Mr. Trump had exploded in rage. He had told those assembled – the defense secretary, the chair of the joint chiefs of staff, four star generals and other flag officers, many or all of them combat veterans – that they were "losers," "babies" and "dopes" who had failed to win wars and to make money from America's military deployments. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson had objected on the spot, and directly afterwards he had told his colleagues that Mr. Trump was a "fucking moron" (that last part had been previously reported) – for all of which Mr. Trump eventually fired him, ignominiously.<sup>42</sup> [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13, 14

1-17-20	[Continued.] Other media outlets lit up with outrage at the report of Mr. Trump's ignorance and cruelty. Not only had he spoken without knowledge and attempted to corrupt America's international motivations, but he had scathingly insulted the entire military and its leadership. For CSD's part, as we have noted before, Mr. Trump himself had avoided the draft and had never served the country or any community in any capacity whatever. He had long appeared to not know basic historical facts and where many countries were located on the map. Yet at rallies and other public events he had proclaimed himself to be the military's greatest supporter. And he had repeatedly told vignettes in which military officers had called him "Sir."	10, 11, 13, 14
1-20-20	The Fact Checker. The Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now made 16,241 false or misleading statements in the three years since his inauguration, and at an ever-increasing pace: six such claims per day in 2017, nearly 16 per day in 2018, and more than 22 per day in 2019.<sup>43</sup> CSD conjectures that although The Post had continued to announce its figures from time to time, the American public had appeared to have grown so inured to the phenomenon of an utterly unreliable and unscrupulous president that the statistics had ceased to shock.	7
1-21-20, 1-22-20	In your face (and the world's), at Davos. In an address at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland on January 21, Mr. Trump ridiculed predictions of catastrophic climate change and said that environmental activism threatened economic growth.<sup>44</sup> In a press conference that he called the following day, before a world audience, he defended himself against the impeachment trial now going full throttle in the Senate, by way of multiple falsehoods and ad hominem insults thrown at House impeachment managers.<sup>45</sup>	7, 8, 13

1-22-20, 1-23-20	[Continued.] The following day, media reported that the financially troubled Trump National Doral in Florida had more than doubled its room rates contemporaneously with booking the Republican National Committee's January 2020 winter meeting there. The price hike followed a pattern of similarly extraordinary hikes that had been charged for friendly political events, thus profiting Mr. Trump triply: by filling rooms, by raising prices for a captive clientele, and by promoting the pertinent properties. It was not known whether Mr. Trump's taxpayer-funded staff and security escorts would be paying the higher price at the Doral; but they would certainly be paying a price.<sup>47</sup> Those episodes shortly followed a Politico report summarizing many of Mr. Trump's rampant acts of self-dealing throughout his presidency, as covered in this Chronology as they had initially arisen or been reported.<sup>48</sup> Estimates of the extraordinary figures paid by taxpayers to fund Mr. Trump's profligately frequent golf outings at his resorts (and to enrich Mr. Trump in the process) had also continued to appear, despite the administration's refusal to disclose the exact costs.<sup>49</sup>	15
1-23-20	Science no more. The Washington Post provided a lengthy update on the widespread shrinking, muting and ignoring of federally sponsored scientists and science under the Trump administration. In the first two years, more than 1600 scientists had left the government; in three years, almost 700 scientists had left the EPA alone; and to the date of the report, one-fifth of high-level appointee positions were vacant.	8
1-24-20	The ungodly. Speaking at the March for Life – an annual, faith-based anti-abortion rally in Washington – Mr. Trump thundered to the cheering crowd, “Sadly, the far left is actively working to erase our God-given rights. They are coming after me because I am fighting for you.”<sup>50</sup> Amid an atmosphere that reportedly resembled a campaign rally, one attendee called the corrupt, profane and debauched Mr. Trump “the most religious president we’ve seen,” who was “setting a great example for our children.”<sup>51</sup> [Continued below.]	9

1-24-20	[Continued.] Some previous presidents had supported the March for Life, but none had appeared there. To CSD's knowledge, no recent president had claimed that Democrats were against God. And none had defended himself in an impeachment trial on grounds of his opponents' views on reproductive rights.	9
1-26-20	Down in the swamp. The New York Times reported on a 2018 video and audio recording of a posh dinner for major campaign donors at which Mr. Trump had discussed policy that could benefit them. (It was the same dinner in which Mr. Trump had abruptly ordered the removal of his then ambassador to Ukraine, Marie Yovanovitch, for standing in the way of corruption in that country. See CSD's January 25 entry in the second portion of this Addendum, on the topic of Mr. Trump's impeachment.) CSD does not maintain that presidents never discuss policy issues with their large donors. We only note, as did The Times, the distance between Mr. Trump's behavior in that regard and his continuous insistence that he had "drained the swamp" of such behavior. <sup>52</sup>	7, 16
1-28-20	Doing the job. After Secretary of State Mike Pompeo had scandalized himself by protractedly cursing and insulting a seasoned and highly professional NPR reporter when she had asked him about his role in the Ukraine scandal, and later by removing a different NPR reporter from his plane in retribution, Mr. Trump said approvingly that Pompeo had done "a good job on her" (the first reporter). <sup>53</sup>	1, 17 (1)
1-28-20	Fox in the doghouse. Mr. Trump yet again chastised Fox News for deviating from being purely supportive of him. He tweeted that the airing of an interview with "no name" Democratic Senator Chris Van Hollen signaled a potential drop in Fox's ratings and "the beginning of the end" of the network. The topic of the interview had been Van Hollen's call for the Senate to subpoena former national security advisor John Bolton to testify in Mr. Trump's impeachment trial. <sup>54</sup>	1

1-28-20	Hiding it. John Sopko, the special inspector general for Afghanistan reconstruction (SIGAR), testified before a House Oversight and Reform subcommittee that the Trump administration was hiding from Congress data about the U.S. military's progress in Afghanistan that had been routinely provided to Congress for years, such as data about the significant portion of the country under Taliban control. Subcommittee members repeatedly noted that the State and Defense Departments held the missing information, and they called out those departments for having defied the subcommittee's bipartisan requests that they too attend and testify at the hearing.<sup>55</sup>	9
1-29-20 +	Is there a doctor in the house? On January 29, Politico included Mr. Trump's recent and erroneous trivialization of the brain injuries suffered by troops in Iraq as a result of an Iranian missile attack (see CSD's entry of January 3 +) within a long list of medical matters on which Mr. Trump had opined without knowledge or accuracy – including his statement on January 22 that the coronavirus outbreak, then rampaging through China, was "totally under control."<sup>56</sup> In fact on January 31, the White House declared that outbreak to be a national public health emergency, and it quarantined Americans returning from parts of China – the first federal quarantine in over 50 years.<sup>57</sup> On February 10, Mr. Trump said that the arrival of warm weather in April would quell the virus, to the skepticism of epidemiologists who feared a growing crisis.<sup>58</sup> On February 13, CDC's director Robert Redfield told CNN that the outbreak was by no means under control.<sup>59</sup>	7, 8, 10, 11
1-30-20	In Iowa: summing it up. At a campaign rally in Des Moines, Iowa, Mr. Trump said: “We’re having probably the best years that we’ve ever had in the history of our country, and I just got impeached! Can you believe these people? They want to nullify your ballots, poison our democracy, and overthrow the entire system of government. ... All I have to do is say, ‘Uh, hello Iowa. You have no choice but to vote for me. Otherwise, everything you have loved in your entire life will be gone. Goodbye, Iowa. Have a good time.’ Instead, I work my ass off up here, OK? True. You think this is easy?”<sup>60</sup> It was a concise display of some of Mr. Trump's most consistent motifs: boasting, self-pity, demagoguery, extortion, vulgarity, and all in one box.	9, 11

1-31-20	The travel ban, expanded. Claiming to be acting on security grounds, Mr. Trump ordered that nationals of Sudan and Tanzania would no longer be granted diversity (lottery) immigrant visas, and that nationals of Eritrea, Myanmar, Nigeria and Kyrgyzstan would no longer be issued any type of immigrant visas – such as diversity visas and family re-unification visas. He characterized the order as an expansion of his 2017 travel ban (the "Muslim ban") – which had eliminated both immigrant and visitor visas for nationals of eight countries and which, after much chaos, much controversy and several setbacks in the courts, was modified and then upheld. Among other things, the new restrictions would operate to prevent the reunification of spouses and other close family members of those already having citizenship or permanent residency in the U.S. Altogether some 13 countries were now subject to the travel restrictions, almost all of them African, materially or mainly Muslim, or both. The newly targeted countries were not known to be exporters of terrorism; the U.S. had been trying to build its relations with some of them; the restrictions were expected to cost the U.S. substantial sums in business and educational revenues; and critics struggled to find any logic in the order, other than a flamboyant display of animus against brown and Muslim immigrants in an election year.<sup>61</sup> The imposition of the new restrictions did not appear to raise the same level of immediate outrage as in 2017. CSD speculates that that was because visitor visas were not affected; because it was not effective immediately and thus didn't create chaos at airports; because the order was issued on a Friday evening, saved from the brunt of the weekday news cycle; and because the nation was becoming exhausted from contesting Mr. Trump's demagogic behavior.	6
1-31-20	Land mines, for posterity. The White House announced that the U.S. would no longer limit its deployment of land mines to the North Korean border, and would instead deploy them more widely. Critics objected, claiming that few other countries deploy land mines at all (some 164 had signed the international Mine Ban Treaty); dormant land mines kill, maim and blind many people (especially children) every year; they can remain lethal for 300 years; and their proliferation will never be safe.<sup>62</sup>	14

1-31-20, 2-4-20	Shredding history. On January 31, The Washington Post reported that in 2019 the Library of Congress had removed from a planned exhibit on the history of women's suffrage a large photograph that documented the 2017 Women's March in Washington, because the photograph contained posters protesting Mr. Trump. That report followed another report, weeks earlier, that the National Archives had blurred out signs protesting Mr. Trump when exhibiting a different large photograph of the same event but in a separate exhibit about women's suffrage.<sup>63</sup> Initial reports did not indicate that Mr. Trump, his advisors or his political operatives had ordered the censorship. Rather, the episodes appeared to have involved self-censorship by government employees who feared the administration's wrath. CSD notes that that is a typical dynamic of censorship in non-democratic countries. On February 4, a New York Times guest columnist exposed another censorship episode – this time directed by the Trump administration itself – to eliminate vast quantities of records from the National Archives, in ways that would protect regulatory and enforcement agencies from current and historical scrutiny.<sup>64</sup>	9 (Hiding and re-writing history)
2-2-20 +	Stature. As former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg gained ground in competing for the Democratic nomination to run against Mr. Trump in November, Mr. Trump had taken to mocking him on the basis of his height. He had already been referring to Bloomberg, who stands 5'7", as "Mini Mike." But now he advanced a canard that Bloomberg demanded to stand on a box during the Democratic debates. This followed Mr. Trump's earlier mockery of antagonists Marco Rubio, Adam Schiff and Pete Buttigieg for their respective physiques.<sup>65</sup> (CSD notes that Schiff's physique appears to be similar to that of Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner; except that Schiff is an active triathlon athlete; and except that his stature is enhanced by his character.) Filling out the rhetorical picture, The New York Times wrote that Mr. Trump "has made clear he will paint former Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr. as corrupt if he faces him in the fall and will assail other possible Democratic challengers as socialists."<sup>66</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 11

2-2-20 +	[Continued.] On February 13, Mr. Trump repeated his earlier false claim that Bloomberg stood only 5'4" tall. (Mr. Trump had long claimed his own height to be 6'3", but others commonly pegged it at 6'2".)	7, 11
2-5-20	DHS fingers New York. In retaliation for New York's new law granting driver's licenses to undocumented immigrants – or possibly in an extortionate effort to undo that law – the Department of Homeland Security suspended the Global Entry and other trusted traveler programs for New Yorkers, thus depriving them of expedited security clearances at airports. A court challenge quickly followed.<sup>67</sup>	9, 11
2-6--20	Treasury fingers Hunter. Media reported that the Treasury Department had handed over to Republican members of Congress highly confidential financial information about presidential hopeful Joe Biden's son Hunter, in their continuing attempt to smear both Bidens for corruption. (The Treasury had refused to disclose Mr. Trump's tax returns to Democrats.)<sup>68</sup>	9
2-7-20	Grabbing (again). The Washington Post and other media reported that Mr. Trump was overcharging the Secret Service for hotel space at his properties, mischaracterizing the reporting, and keeping the records hidden.<sup>69</sup> The House followed by asking the Secret Service for an accounting.<sup>70</sup>	7, 15
2-10-20	In New Hampshire. At a campaign rally in Manchester, New Hampshire, Mr. Trump's fans chanted "Lock her up!" about House Speaker Pelosi, the leader of Mr. Trump's (failed) impeachment – a cry formerly reserved for former presidential contender Hillary Clinton.<sup>71</sup> For his part, Mr. Trump resurrected his false claim from 2016 that busloads of Massachusetts residents had fraudulently driven into New Hampshire to vote against him, causing him to lose New Hampshire to Clinton.<sup>72</sup> Politico reported of the event: "The president ... leaned most heavily into his tough-on-immigration message, floating a general-election cornerstone issue. He bragged about heightened deportations, derided sanctuary cities and [as often before] recited the lyrics to the song 'The Snake,' comparing undocumented immigrants to a venomous snake that bites a woman who helps it."<sup>73</sup>	6, 7, 9

2-11-20 +	Saving Stone. On February 11, Mr. Trump's Attorney General William Barr overruled the Justice Department's own prosecutors' sentencing recommendations for recently convicted felon Roger Stone – Mr. Trump's longtime friend and early campaign associate. Stone had been found guilty of having lied to Congress, tampered with witnesses and obstructed justice in connection with a federal investigation of his campaign activities; that is, effectively, for covering up Mr. Trump's misdeeds. The prosecutors, all career professionals, had recommended seven to nine years imprisonment for Stone. Barr's superseding action came shortly after a tweet by Mr. Trump complaining that the recommended sentence was too severe. Barr's action violated the department's longstanding practice and custom of granting and protecting the independence of line prosecutors. Outraged at the extraordinary act of political interference – which they had first learned of through a Fox News report, not through their superiors – all four of the prosecutors promptly withdrew from the case, and one of them resigned from the department altogether.<sup>74</sup> No mass resignations in protest had happened before at the department. A Washington Post columnist captured the import: "[T]his is an egregious perversion of the rule of law. The president, like a tin-pot dictator, now uses the Justice Department to shield his criminal cronies, putting his finger on the scale in a way no other president has done in the modern era."<sup>75</sup> Outrage swelled among congressional Democrats and within the legal and law enforcement communities.<sup>76</sup> Demoralized, some prosecutors across the country feared taking on politically charged cases and Mr. Trump's wrath, as well as the loss of their credibility when arguing before federal judges.<sup>77</sup> Just weeks earlier, Barr had intervened to lessen the sentencing of admitted felon Michael Flynn, another Trump campaign associate (and later, briefly, Mr. Trump's national security advisor).<sup>78</sup> Also on February 11, Mr. Trump abruptly withdrew the nomination for Jessie Liu, the four Stone prosecutors' supervisor, to serve in a top Treasury Department position. That move was reportedly linked to her handling of the Stone prosecution.<sup>79</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 16

2-11-20 +	[Continued.] Later that day, Mr. Trump tweeted a string of attacks on the Stone prosecutors and on the federal judge who would be responsible for the sentencing decision.<sup>80</sup> On February 12, he publicly and explicitly commended Barr for "taking charge" of the Stone case.<sup>81</sup> He also hinted that he might pardon Stone.<sup>82</sup> On February 13, reacting to the firestorm of criticism directed at himself, Barr ran for cover. In an ABC News interview, he criticized Mr. Trump's tweets and the "constant background of commentary that undercuts me"; he downplayed his own act of interference so as to make it seem independent from Mr. Trump's, and benign; and he blamed "the news" for "spinning this." Notably he did not defend the integrity or judgment of the four prosecutors, nor did he criticize Mr. Trump's substantive position on Stone, nor did he acknowledge the irregularity of (Barr) himself having intervened in the case: he only defended his intervention, and condemned the tweets for making him look bad.<sup>83</sup> In the same interview, Barr said that he would never cause the Justice Department to investigate a domestic political opponent of Mr. Trump. Indeed, Mr. Trump had long called for the investigation and prosecution of a stunning array of his adversaries – Hillary Clinton, James Comey, Adam Schiff, John Brennan, Andrew McCabe, Peter Strzok, Lisa Page and others – and Barr hadn't heeded. But there were at least two exceptions. Barr had empowered U.S. Attorney John Durham to investigate whether any crimes had been committed by FBI and CIA officials in the pursuit of allegations in 2016 that Russia had interfered in the election to benefit Mr. Trump's campaign. Mr. Trump appeared to hope that that investigation would expose anti-Trump activities on the part of Comey, McCabe, Brennan and others. Also, a criminal probe of McCabe – begun by former Attorney General Jeff Sessions and alleging that McCabe had made inaccurate statements to FBI investigators about his actions during the 2016 election – was continuing under Barr.<sup>84</sup> Still, Mr. Trump couldn't be silent. On February 14, he tweeted in a retort to Barr that he (Mr. Trump) had the "legal right" to direct the prosecution of criminal cases.<sup>85</sup>  [Continued below.]	2, 9, 16
------------------	--	-----------------

2-11-20 +	[Continued.] The plot thickened. Hours later, Barr's Justice Department formally closed its investigation of McCabe.<sup>86</sup> But here too (some observers hazarded), Barr may have simply been running for cover, while otherwise continuing to cotton to Mr. Trump's wishes.<sup>87</sup> Indeed, that evening, media reported that Barr had ordered a re-examination of Flynn's case, and had appointed a team of outside prosecutors to grill the department's regular line prosecutors handling a range of politically sensitive cases – that is, those involving Mr. Trump's friends and enemies.<sup>88</sup> Barr had long abetted Mr. Trump in the latter's authoritarian gambits, as CSD has previously reported. A Washington Post columnist summarized: "He misled the public about the findings from special counsel Robert S. Mueller III, cleared Trump of obstruction of justice, embraced Trump's claim that the FBI was "spying" on him, worked to discredit the Russia probe, disputed the inspector general's finding that the probe had a proper basis, commissioned another probe in pursuit of his desired outcome, [and] declined to investigate the [whistleblower's] Ukraine allegations."<sup>89</sup> Barr had also delivered a highly partisan speech to the Federalist Society in which he had attacked Democrats for their opposition to Mr. Trump.<sup>90</sup> And, at the request of Mr. Trump (who reportedly had been acceding to the request of Turkish strongman Recep Erdogan), Barr reportedly had sought to quash a federal case against a Turkish bank for evading Iranian sanctions.<sup>91</sup> On February 16, some 1100 former federal prosecutors and other Justice Department officials signed a letter calling for Barr's resignation.<sup>92</sup> By February 17, the number had risen to over 2000.<sup>93</sup> On February 18, Mr. Trump told reporters that he could intervene in Justice Department operations however he might wish, in that he was the country's "chief law enforcement officer," and he demanded (into the air) that Stone be given a new trial.<sup>94</sup> In defiance of (or with the indulgence of) Barr, on February 19 Mr. Trump continued to tweet about what he alleged was corruption in the Justice Department, and the need for Barr to "clean house" there.<sup>95</sup>	2, 9, 16
------------------	--	-----------------

2-13-20	Another theft, for the wall. The Trump administration told Congress that it would seize an additional $3.8 billion from the military to fund the border wall, in defiance of congressional appropriations. For the first time, the new theft came from appropriations for military hardware, such as fighter jets and ships. Bi-partisan outrage in Congress followed.<sup>96</sup>	6, 9
2-13-20	The prodigals return. Media reported that Mr. Trump's former communications director Hope Hicks was returning to the White House, now as a senior counselor. She had left the administration in 2019 to become the chief communications officer at Fox Corporation, after having been implicated in Mr. Trump's efforts to obstruct justice by the Mueller investigation and having refused to testify against Mr. Trump. Also returning, to head the presidential personnel office, was Johnny McEntee, Mr. Trump's former body man. McEntee had been fired in 2018 over gambling debts that had threatened his security clearance. Both developments were viewed as reflective of Mr. Trump surrounding himself with an increasingly narrow circle of personal and political loyalists.<sup>97</sup> They came amid an overall, post-impeachment surge in seemingly paranoid behavior on his part: dismissals, reassignments, punishing enemies, rewarding friends, shunning advisors, and pressing his mass of supporters within the electorate to mistrust his adversaries as well.<sup>98</sup> Hicks's return also was seen as perpetuating and escalating the symbiotic and propagandistic Fox-White House revolving door.<sup>99</sup> CSD notes that both of the re-appointees were telegenic – following Mr. Trump's preference for drawing staff from "central casting" – but of no particular accomplishment and of no obvious ethical stature.	9, 11, 16

2-16-20 +	Shredding history (again); and suing it. On February 16, The Washington Post reported on Mr. Trump's newly energized, post-acquittal efforts to (in his words) "expunge" from history the Mueller investigation of Russian election interference: "As his reelection campaign intensifies, Trump is using the powers of his office to manipulate the facts and settle the score. Advisers say the president is determined to protect his associates ensnared in the expansive Russia investigation, punish the prosecutors and investigators he believes betrayed him, and convince the public that the probe was exactly as he sees it: an illegal witch hunt." At the same time, Mr. Trump continued not to acknowledge the reportedly ongoing Russian efforts to tamper with the 2020 presidential election.<sup>100</sup> On February 18, Mr. Trump tweeted that he might sue "everyone" associated with the investigation – seemingly including Mueller himself.<sup>101</sup>	9, 12
2-18-20	Contracting hi-jinx. The Department of Homeland Security announced that it would waive federal procurement rules – such as the requirement for obtaining competitive bids – in order to speed up the construction of the wall at the Mexican border. Speeded construction was seen as enhancing Mr. Trump's standing with his political base in connection with his 2020 reelection campaign; and the waiver as facilitating the potential letting of contracts to cronies.<sup>102</sup> CSD notes that a federal court had only recently halted the start of a huge Pentagon cloud computing project that had been awarded to Microsoft, on charges brought by Amazon that Mr. Trump had diverted the contract from Amazon due to his hatred of its owner, Jeff Bezos (who also owns his antagonist, The Washington Post).<sup>103</sup>	9, 11, 16
2-18-20 +	Clemency fever. On February 18, Mr. Trump announced seven pardons and four commutations. All 11 recipients had had an inside connection to Mr. Trump or had been promoted on Fox News; and some were vocal supporters or substantial campaign donors of his. 2-18-20 +	[Continued.] Those pardoned included Bernie Kerik (former New York City police commissioner, current Fox News contributor, Mar-a-Lago habitué and long-standing friend of Mr. Trump, who had pleaded guilty to tax fraud in 2010); Michael Milken (former Wall Street financier, also a long-time Trump friend, who had pleaded guilty to insider trading in 1990); and Edward DeBartolo (former San Francisco 49ers owner, who had pleaded guilty to political corruption in 1998). Mr. Trump also commuted the sentence of Rod Blagojevich (former governor of Illinois, convicted in 2011 of soliciting political bribes and serving a prison sentence since then). He also pardoned Paul Pogue (a construction contractor who had pleaded guilty to tax fraud). The episode fit Mr. Trump's pattern in granting clemency, as reported above in this Chronology: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Indulging high profile criminals whose cases had been put to him by mutual friends and associates rather than by regular Justice Department channels. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ For example, Mr. Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani had advocated for Kerik. So had Newsmax Media's CEO Christopher Ruddy, Republican Congressman Peter King of New York, and television personality Geraldo Rivera. So had the attorney for Michael Flynn, Mr. Trump's campaign associate who had pleaded guilty to a felony and who himself still hoped to be pardoned. Edward Gallagher, the court-martialed Navy SEAL on whose behalf Mr. Trump had recently intervened and whom Mr. Trump had subsequently feted, had also advocated for Kerik, just as Kerik had advocated for Gallagher.</li> <li>○ Milken's plea had been supported by Mr. Trump's billionaire fundraiser Nelson Peltz, billionaire funders Sheldon and Miriam Adelson, New England Patriots' owner Robert Kraft, Fox host Maria Bartiromo, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao and Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner. At that time observers were speculating, many expecting, that Mr. Trump might pardon Stone, and that the immediate pardons were a preview for, or a softening up of, the public.<sup>104</sup> Some also speculated that by way of pardons and commutations, or the promise of the same, Mr. Trump could purchase the silence of convicted campaign figures such as Stone, Paul Manafort and Michael Flynn who might otherwise implicate him in crimes.<sup>105</sup> The Washington Post reported more fully on the context of the events: [Continued below.]	9, 16

2-19-20 +	Without intelligence. On February 19, Mr. Trump announced the appointment of his ambassador to Germany, Richard Grenell, as acting Director of National Intelligence. That conflicted with the express statutory requirement that the director's position be filled with someone having a deep intelligence background.  [Continued below.]	9, 13, 17 (6)

2-19-20 +	[Continued.] Grenell, rather, was a fierce political partisan. As ambassador, he had often tangled with what he called the "fake news." In addition, he had gained notoriety for publicly criticizing European governments and for gratuitously encouraging white nationalist political parties in Europe. Critics of his appointment found that sort of extreme partisanship to be antithetical to the role of the DNI – a position of weighty responsibility and sensitivity that required sober objectivity. Grenell was expected to remain ambassador to Germany while fulfilling his DNI duties. Commentators questioned how that could be accomplished, given the demanding nature of both positions. Grenell's "acting" appointment, like the many others made by Mr. Trump during his tenure, was not subject to Senate confirmation – as Mr. Trump had often acknowledged he intended.<sup>108</sup> Shortly after the announcement, media reported the event that had precipitated Grenell's appointment. Days before, Mr. Trump had become enraged with and had turned on Joseph Maguire, the then acting DNI who had been expected to be appointed as permanent DNI. Maguire's sin: having permitted one of his deputies to brief the House Intelligence Committee on new and significant developments in Russia's efforts to help Mr. Trump win reelection in 2020. Mr. Trump reportedly feared that House Democrats would weaponize that information against his candidacy; he simply didn't want it revealed. He also reportedly insisted that Russia wasn't in fact interfering or helping him. Thus once again Mr. Trump sought, for his personal benefit, to hide the gravest of Russian threats to the American democratic process. And Grenell appeared to have been chosen in service of that goal.<sup>109</sup> Indeed, on February 20, Politico reported that Kash Patel – a key Hill staffer who had helped to discredit the previous Russia probe – would now be working for Grenell.<sup>110</sup> Critics feared that the entire episode, and Mr. Trump's rage, could chill intelligence reporting not only to Congress, but to the White House itself.<sup>111</sup>	9, 13, 17 (6)

Date	Episode
1-14-20 +	The Parnas papers. On January 14, House impeachment investigators released to the public extensive documents that they had received from a federal court and that the court had obtained from Lev Parnas. Parnas, together with another Soviet-born American named Igor Fruman, had partnered with Mr. Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani in seeking (a) to undermine and remove the corruption-fighting Marie Yovanovitch when she had been ambassador to Ukraine, and (b) to assist Mr. Trump in extorting from Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky an announcement that Ukraine was investigating presidential contender Joe Biden for corruption. Just as the scheme was coming to light, Parnas and Fruman had been arrested and indicted for certain campaign finance violations associated with the scheme. The newly released documents appeared to establish, subject to corroboration, that in the spring of 2019 (a) a corrupt Ukrainian prosecutor had offered Parnas dirt on Biden in exchange for Mr. Trump recalling the prosecutor's antagonist, Yovanovitch; (b) a Trump donor, Connecticut businessman and reportedly out-of-control alcoholic named Robert Hyde had purported to Parnas to have been physically surveilling Yovanovitch in Kiev and possibly planning to injure her; (c) Giuliani had sought to meet with and to assist Zelensky on behalf of Mr. Trump in Giuliani's capacity as Mr. Trump's personal attorney – that is, expressly, outside of Mr. Trump's role as president of the United States; (d) while in Europe, Parnas had memorialized his undertaking to have Zelensky smear Biden; and (e) Parnas had been engaged in numerous related intrigues involving corrupt Ukrainian figures. MSNBC television was among the first to report on the document trove. Mr. Trump – who had later publicly denied knowing Parnas – had in fact appeared with Parnas in at least eight separate photographs, displayed by MSNBC on air. Congressional Democrats and other observers asserted that the new document dump not only was damning on its face, but demonstrated that Mr. Trump likely still continued to hide a great many details about the Ukraine scandal for which he was being impeached.<sup>112</sup> [Continued below.]

1-14-20 +	[Continued.] On January 15, Parnas appeared in a stunning MSNBC interview, in which he credibly alleged that (a) Mr. Trump's claims not to have personally known Parnas were "a lie"; (b) Mr. Trump had known and approved all aspects of the scheme, which had been directed entirely to tarring Biden for Mr. Trump's personal electoral benefit and had not involved fighting corruption in Ukraine; (c) Parnas and Giuliani had consistently represented themselves to Ukrainian officials as working for and at the behest of Mr. Trump; (d) Parnas had told Ukrainian officials repeatedly that the country would receive no military or diplomatic assistance until and unless the officials announced an investigation of Biden; (e) Vice President Mike Pence had been tasked with obtaining Zelensky's announcement of the investigation and had canceled a visit to Zelensky's inauguration because the announcement hadn't materialized; (f) a Ukrainian oligarch named Dimitri Firtash – whose corruption Yovanich had denounced and whom the U.S. was seeking to have extradited to the U.S. – had offered to pressure Zelensky to make the announcement, in exchange for removing Yovanovitch and quashing the extradition; (g) the entire American team (Mr. Trump, Pence, Giuliani, Parnas himself) had wanted Yovanovitch removed so as to facilitate the announcement; (h) Attorney General William Barr had been aware of the scheme and had been "on the team"; and (i) the House Intelligence Committee's ranking member Devin Nunes had also participated.<sup>113</sup> Contemporaneously with the airing of the MSNBC interview, The Washington Post reported on a second batch of the Parnas papers. Among other things, the papers established that Parnas had worked closely with corrupt Ukrainian chief prosecutor Yuri Lutsenko, and with Donald Trump, Jr. and other Trump campaign figures, to (a) allege that Ukrainian elements had sought to help Hillary Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign and (b) cause Yovanovitch to be removed – which removal Secretary of State Mike Pompeo had apparently approved. The documents also confirmed the previously reported efforts of Giuliani and Parnas to procure Lutsenko as a paying client.<sup>114</sup> Parnas also gave an interview that day to The New York Times.<sup>115</sup> On January 16, CNN television aired its own interview with Parnas.<sup>116</sup> Observers speculated as to Parnas's credibility and his motives for publicizing his breathtaking account.<sup>117</sup> But they widely noted that his narrative was in accord with the narratives of House impeachment inquiry witnesses. To even better test whether he was telling the truth, witnesses such as former national security advisor John Bolton and acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney would almost certainly know. Giuliani himself would quite certainly know. But, as noted above in this Chronology, Mr. Trump had forbidden any of them from testifying. [Continued below.]
-----------	--

1-14-20 +	[Continued.] Parnas did not cut a sympathetic figure on television or otherwise. He had come to Mr. Trump's Ukraine operation with a long record of bad debts and seamy business activities, and he had ended by being arrested for alleged campaign finance felonies.<sup>118</sup> If Mr. Trump had drawn on his favored criterion for selecting his staff – "central casting" – he might have tapped Parnas to play the hoodlum. But in any event, Parnas (like his colleague Hyde) could be seen to have contributed to the overall profile of Mr. Trump's "cast" of operatives and hangers-on: not just from the usual Washington swamp, but from a deeper and darker pool. Parnas also could now be seen as emblematic of the long and sordid list of accused and convicted felons in Mr. Trump's orbit.
1-15-20	Articles to the Senate. Largely on party lines, the House voted to send its articles of impeachment to the Senate so that the trial of Mr. Trump could begin. The articles were then hand delivered by the House to the Senate, in a solemn, silent procession of Democratic members of Congress through the Capitol. (Those actions had been delayed after the vote to impeach while the Democrats had sought – thus far unsuccessfully – to cause the Senate's Republican leadership to allow witnesses and other evidence to be presented at the Senate trial so as to ensure its fairness.) A video of the historic procession can be seen at the link to The Post's coverage at this endnote.<sup>119</sup>
1-16-20	GAO: Withholding Ukraine funds was illegal. The non-partisan Government Accountability Office ruled that the withholding of congressionally appropriated aid funds from Ukraine for policy reasons – by the Office of Management and Budget, and at the direction of Mr. Trump – violated the law; that is, that Mr. Trump had had no authority to do that.<sup>120</sup>
1-17-20	All in for bribery. Mr. Trump's White House economic advisor Larry Kudlow acknowledged that Mr. Trump was considering changing (presumably weakening) the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, which forbids Americans from bribing foreign governments. The acknowledgement appeared to confirm recent and earlier reports that Mr. Trump bitterly objected to the law – believing that American companies (such as his own) should be allowed to freely bribe overseas officials. It also appeared to match Mr. Trump's protestations that he had "done nothing wrong" in attempting – as a kind of bribery – to seek dirt on Biden from Zelensky in exchange for releasing military aid and granting Zelensky a White House meeting.<sup>121</sup>
1-19-20	More secrets. House Intelligence Committee chair Adam Schiff charged that the National Security Agency (NSA) and the CIA were withholding from Congress documents relevant to the events in Ukraine that underlay the impeachment.<sup>122</sup> If true, that stonewalling would add to the Trump administration's categorical refusal to provide witnesses or documents directly related to the Ukraine scandal, such as witnesses and records from the White House, the State Department and the Office of Management and Budget.

1-21-20 +	The trial begins. On January 21, the Senate began hearing arguments in Mr. Trump's impeachment case. As had long been predicted, the Republican majority, with virtually complete unanimity, sought to bar the subpoenaing of key witnesses such as Bolton and Mulvaney, and the introduction of evidence (described above in this Chronology) that had appeared since the House wrote its articles of impeachment.<sup>123</sup> Democratic impeachment managers nevertheless laid out the charges in detail. The Republicans did not much contest the facts of the case. Rather, in previewing their defense, their arguments from the floor (as had also been predicted) focused mainly on their outrage – vocalized loudly, and characterized by misstatements – that, to their belief, the House's impeachment proceedings had been unfair; that Mr. Trump's actions with respect to Ukraine had not been wrongful, or not sufficiently wrongful to merit impeachment; and that Democrats were targeting Mr. Trump for political rather than constitutional reasons – that is, to void his due election to the presidency in 2016, and to avoid his re-election in 2020. In the view of CSD and some other observers, the Republican majority was effectively arguing much broader doctrines that would allow Mr. Trump radically far-reaching powers – both retrospectively and prospectively: (a) to tamper with American elections; (b) to invite foreign powers to tamper with American elections; (c) to conduct foreign (and, by extension, domestic) policy for his personal benefit; (d) to undermine specific congressional appropriations; (d) to withhold data on any topic whatever from Congress; and (e) to violate laws and the Constitution at his whim, knowing that the current Senate majority would acquiesce to anything – possibly even to his shooting someone on Fifth Avenue. The majority also implicitly argued that no impeachment proceeding in the future should be based on fact, law or the Constitution, but instead on raw political power.<sup>124</sup> The Democrats continued to lay out their case – in painstaking detail, and often (CSD believes) with considerable eloquence – for the next three days.
1-25-20	Vengeance. The Times and Politico reported on the continuing professional intimidation, at the hands of Mr. Trump's supporters, of some of the key House impeachment inquiry witnesses. Politico also reported on fears of a purge and a further sidelining of State Department experts following Mr. Trump's expected impeachment acquittal.<sup>125</sup>
1-25-20	A new recording. Parnas's lawyer released a recording of an hour-long, April 2018 dinner conversation at the Trump International Hotel in Washington among Mr. Trump, Parnas, Fruman and various donors. The audio not only demonstrated that Mr. Trump knew Parnas and Fruman (contrary to his denials) but that he had issued an order on that occasion that Yovanovitch be immediately recalled from her post in Ukraine (just as Parnas had alleged).<sup>126</sup>

1-25-20 +	The defense. Mr. Trump's lawyers began his granular defense, following Mr. Trump's indecorous Twitter advertisement: "Our case against lyin', cheatin', liddle' Adam 'Shifty' Schiff, Cryin' Chuck Schumer, Nervous Nancy Pelosi, their leader, dumb as a rock AOC [Alexandria Octavio-Cortez, a House member of color who had nothing to do with the impeachment], &amp; the entire Radical Left, Do Nothing Democrat Party, starts today at 10:00 A.M. on @FoxNews, @OANN [the right wing One America Network] or Fake News @CNN or Fake News MSDNC [mocking the partisanship of MSNBC]!" Much of the thrust of his lawyers' opening presentation continued to be that Democrats were attempting through impeachment to unfairly overturn the 2016 presidential election. It was an argument that (as CSD had previously written), if enshrined in precedent, could operate to deny Congress an impeachment remedy for any wrongful presidential behavior whatever, now and in the future. Along those lines, counsel projected onto the Democrats, as Mr. Trump and his supporters had previously done, one of Mr. Trump's own gravest wrongdoings: "They're here to perpetrate the most massive interference in an election in American history ...." Counsel also argued speciously that Mr. Trump's withholding of military aid and his asking Zelensky to announce an investigation of Biden were legitimate exercises of Mr. Trump's foreign policy mandate, and legitimate efforts to fight corruption in Ukraine; also that Mr. Trump had a legitimate right to categorically quash the production of documents and witnesses sought by Congress.<sup>127</sup> Possibly stung by media charges that the defense had not appeared poised to contest the House Democrats' factual allegations, the attorneys also advanced a barrage of what they claimed were facts pertaining to Mr. Trump's shakedown of Ukraine – claims that Mr. Trump and his supporters had long maintained – but that objective evidence had amply demonstrated were cynical, tortured and untrue counter-facts. A Post columnist summarized and (by implication) rebutted the falsehoods as follows: "[T]heirs is a world in which Ukraine interfered in the U.S. election in 2016; where the FBI and intelligence community are disreputable; where the United States, not Europe, gives Ukraine the bulk of its foreign aid; where there was no quid pro quo with Ukraine and where a 'transcript' of President Trump's call conclusively proves it; where the halt of military aid to Ukraine was routine, and where Ukrainian officials didn't even know about it; where the president was barred from impeachment proceedings; and where Robert Mueller totally vindicated Trump."<sup>128</sup> The Post and CNN laid out comparable factual rebuttals in their respective news analyses that appear at this endnote.<sup>129</sup>
1-26-20	Threatening Schiff. Mr. Trump tweeted: "Shifty Adam Schiff is a CORRUPT POLITICIAN, and probably a very sick man. He has not paid the price, yet, for what he has done to our Country!" Schiff said that he took the tweet as a threat.<sup>130</sup>

1-26-20 +	What Bolton knew. On January 26, The Times reported that a confidential draft of Bolton's forthcoming memoir about his tenure in the Trump White House corroborated that – based on Bolton's first-hand experience with the matter – Mr. Trump had sought to freeze military assistance to Ukraine until Ukraine announced an investigation of Biden and other Democrats. The revelation matched the testimony of the many witnesses who had earlier characterized the affair to House impeachment investigators – only now the allegations came from Bolton, someone with direct and indisputable knowledge. It also appeared to further demonstrate not only that Mr. Trump had repeatedly lied when denying the alleged quid pro quo, but that his lawyers at the Senate trial – at least one of whom had been briefed on the book's content many weeks previous – had themselves lied when claiming that no evidence of a quid pro quo existed. The draft also reportedly revealed that, at least to an extent, Pompeo, Barr and Mulvaney were involved in the cover-up.<sup>131</sup> The Post characterized The Times' report as a "bombshell." As Senate Republicans still refused to subpoena Bolton to testify, they now appeared not just to be acquiescing to the others' cover-up, but to be actively participating in it.<sup>132</sup> Mr. Trump promptly tweeted his denial and his displeasure, claiming that Bolton was just trying to sell a book. Giuliani tweeted the same, calling Bolton a "backstabber." Other supporters of Mr. Trump piled on, including many of Bolton's former colleagues at Fox News.<sup>133</sup> On January 29, Mr. Trump trash-tweeted the following about Bolton: "For a guy who couldn't get approved for the Ambassador to the U.N. years ago, couldn't get approved for anything since, 'begged' me for a non Senate approved job, which I gave him despite many saying 'Don't do it, sir,' takes the job ... and ....many more mistakes of judgement, gets fired because frankly, if I listened to him, we would be in World War Six by now, and goes out and IMMEDIATELY writes a nasty &amp; untrue book. All Classified National Security. Who would do this?" Also on January 29, the White House ordered Bolton to not publish his book, claiming that it contained top secret information – but without specifying to Bolton what portions of the book were classified. Bolton had submitted his manuscript to the White House for its review a month previous, and he had heard no complaint until it appeared that he might testify in the impeachment trial.<sup>134</sup>
------------------	--

1-27-20 +	Counsel of distinction. Mr. Trump had sought to staff his legal defense with prominent figures – attorneys with reputations of distinction. Those selected did indeed represent him before the Senate zealously; but they distinguished themselves by their sophistry, their inconsistencies, and/or their questionable personal backgrounds. For example, former Florida attorney general Pam Bondi complained of the Bidens' corruption, when she herself had been investigated for corruption: dismissing a class action that had alleged fraud against Mr. Trump's diploma mill, Trump University, in exchange for an illegal $25,000 donation to her political campaign from the Trump Foundation. She also now complained of the Bidens' nepotism, even as Mr. Trump's children staffed the White House and sought to profit in their business activities from his presidency. For his part, Harvard University emeritus professor Alan Dershowitz had risen to national prominence in part by having successfully represented accused celebrity defendants O.J. Simpson, Claus von Bulow, Mike Tyson and Jeffrey Epstein in cases involving alleged murder, assault and/or sexual violence. He had also allegedly been a partying friend of and co-criminal with Epstein, an admitted pedophile.<sup>135</sup> He now claimed that Mr. Trump could not be impeached without having been accused of a statutory crime – even though courts routinely try individuals for common law crimes; even though presidents and other federal officials had previously been impeached for the offenses with which Mr. Trump had been charged; and even though at the time of President Clinton's impeachment Dershowitz had said that no statutory crime need be pleaded. Ken Starr, who likewise now maintained that abuse of power was not a proper charge for an article of impeachment, had fervently argued the opposite when prosecuting President Clinton's impeachment years before. He also maintained that impeachments were becoming too frequent – having himself started the fad. (President Clinton had been impeached, but not convicted, for having lied under oath about having had sex with a White House intern; not about having corrupted and endangered American security and foreign affairs by extorting another country for personal political favors.)<sup>136</sup> Mr. Trump's personal attorney, Jay Sekulow, sported a long personal history of legal and financial misadventures, including bankruptcies, fraud allegations, and (seemingly) raking tens of millions of dollars out of a tax-exempt, faith-based charity that he and his family operated and used to sustain their lavish lifestyles.<sup>137</sup> White House counsel Pat Cipollone was revealed to have gravely violated the ethical rules governing the conduct of attorneys, by advocating in a matter (the Ukraine scandal and the impeachment) with respect to which he had been a participant and should properly have been a fact witness.<sup>138</sup> [Continued below.]
-----------	--

1-27-20 +	[Continued.] In any event, according to Politico, at least in the first day of arguments, counsel spent more time trashing Mr. Trump's antagonists on unrelated matters than in attempting to defend his misdeeds – to the likely pleasure of their client.<sup>139</sup> On January 28, The Post reported that the Republican National Committee was paying for several of Mr. Trump's defense lawyers. Others, such as Dershowitz (who claimed that he was defending Mr. Trump "on principle" and wasn't being paid) stood to profit handsomely in future representations on the strength of the publicity they were gaining from the impeachment trial.<sup>140</sup> On January 29, astonishingly, Dershowitz argued that if a president believes that his re-election will serve the public interest, he may do whatever he wants in order to achieve that reelection.<sup>141</sup> On the same day, White House deputy counsel Patrick Philbin argued that an American political figure could lawfully seek negative information on his or her electoral rival from a foreign government, as long as the information was "credible."<sup>142</sup> Taken together, CSD sees those two views as authorizing such remarkable behaviors, among others, as these: (a) an American president allowing, urging, conspiring with or even paying Russia, China or another hostile and authoritarian government to slander a domestic political opponent, whether openly or surreptitiously, including through social media; (b) a president intentionally suppressing voting or causing vote tallies to be improperly counted; (c) a president blocking his adversary from campaigning, or even jailing that adversary and the adversary's supporters; (d) a president barring or censoring electoral news coverage; (e) a president maliciously and wrongfully destroying the reputation and career of any public servant or private citizen if it suited the president's whims; or even (f) a president shooting his opponent on Fifth Avenue. Of course in some countries such events do occur.
1-30-20, 2-4-20	Outing the whistleblower. Chief Justice John Roberts, presiding over the impeachment trial in the Senate on January 30 and serving as the conduit for senators' questions in the proceedings, refused to read a question submitted by Republican Senator Rand Paul that identified the whistleblower whose complaint about Mr. Trump's July 25 phone call with Zelensky had sparked the impeachment inquiry. Vengefully and pointlessly outing the whistleblower – whose privacy a federal statute had sought generally to protect – had been a Republican crusade since the inquiry began. After Roberts' rebuff, Paul stormed out of the chamber and gave the name to reporters.<sup>143</sup> On February 4, during the trial's closing presentations at which senators were at last allowed to speak on the floor, Paul directly identified the whistleblower.<sup>144</sup>

1-31-20	No witnesses. The Republican-controlled Senate voted not to call any witnesses to the trial – including Bolton, a first-hand observer of the subject events, whose testimony promised to incriminate Mr. Trump. It also voted not to admit any new documentary evidence, even as the Justice Department acknowledged that it possessed a trove of undisclosed emails on the topic.<sup>145</sup>
1-31-20 to 2-4-20	The sentiment. In the final days of the trial, several Republican senators acknowledged that Mr. Trump had behaved wrongfully with respect to Ukraine; but they were simply unwilling to remove him from office for doing so; and most other Republicans acknowledged nothing.<sup>146</sup>
2-4-20	The State of the Union. Consistent with American custom, Mr. Trump delivered his annual State of the Union address in the House chambers – the very venue where only weeks previous he had been impeached. And consistent with Mr. Trump's own custom, he stoked fear about undocumented immigration, inflated his claims of responsibility for the currently strong economy, falsely claimed that he had advanced peace between Israelis and Palestinians, and falsely claimed that he had sought and was seeking to protect Americans' insurance coverage for pre-existing medical conditions. The Washington Post's Fact Checker counted 31 dubious statements. Contrary to presidential custom, in his State of the Union remarks Mr. Trump played almost entirely to his base and made little attempt to bridge the gulf dividing the country, other than through some theatrical tokenism and pandering toward African American voters. He repeatedly trashed the Obama administration. He invoked the name of God eight times and said "America has always been a Christian nation." Campaign-style, he pledged to defend gun rights and fight abortion rights. He had his wife Melania drape a Medal of Freedom over the shoulders of Rush Limbaugh, a viciously hateful and divisive radio personality. Two of the anecdotes he told about his policies having helped African Americans were false.<sup>147</sup> But the critical context of the address lay in two things: the Senate's expected acquittal of Mr. Trump relative to the House's impeachment charges on the following day; and in a sudden spike – to a record 49% – in the Gallup poll's measurement of his popular approval rating. As he arrived at the dais triumphantly to begin his address, he refused to shake the hand of the Democratic House Speaker Nancy Pelosi. His Republican supporters boisterously chanted "Four More Years!" – not only in defiance of the impeachment but with apparent adulation. Throughout, he received robust applause from half of Congress and most of the guests, and that applause followed his conclusion. But Pelosi – who stood immediately behind him in the camera's eye and who apparently felt burned by his refusal to shake her hand – tore up her copy of his speech, page by page. The whole world was watching: as Mr. Trump defiled our democracy, as our country split down the middle, and as basic inter-branch protocol imploded.<sup>148</sup>

2-5-20	The Senate acquits. The Republican-controlled Senate voted to acquit Mr. Trump of charges under both of the articles of impeachment that the House had put forth. Only one Republican – Mitt Romney of Utah, citing his allegiance to his Christian faith – voted to convict, and only on the count of abuse of power.<sup>149</sup> Mr. Trump's ability to govern corruptly, illegally, unconstitutionally, demagogically and divisively, with minimal congressional checks on his authority, was now virtually assured for the remainder of his current term of office, if not beyond. Indeed, he appeared to be free, even encouraged, to manipulate the 2020 election to his advantage, both with the help of foreign governments and otherwise.<sup>150</sup>

The Impeachment's Aftermath

2-5-20 +	Vengeance. Immediately after the acquittal, Mr. Trump – not at all chastened – tweeted a meme calling for his re-election every four years, into infinity. He also re-tweeted a slander against Romney as an alleged Democratic agent. And his son Donald Jr. called for Romney to be expelled from the Republican Party. In the days that followed, commentators predicted that concerted vengeance campaigns on the part of Mr. Trump and his supporters – to destroy the careers, and even the personal lives, of Romney, House impeachment witness Lt. Colonel Alex Vindman, and others – were highly probable, if not already underway; also that the effect could be to quash all future dissent within Congress and whistle blowing within federal agencies during Mr. Trump's tenure. (Mr. Trump had already destroyed the careers of several mildly dissident Republican senators.) Indeed, on February 7, Vindman and his brother Yevgeny – also an Army lieutenant colonel and also detailed to the White House – were escorted out of the building; and Sondland was ordered home from Europe. Vindman and Sondland had already been planning their departures, but Mr. Trump had reportedly wanted to make a public display of their punishments. Yevgeny's end came as a surprise to him, and was gratuitous.<sup>151</sup> On February 8 and 9, a weekend, Mr. Trump launched dozens of tweets savagely attacking Vindman, Romney, and Pelosi and other congressional Democrats, all in connection with the impeachment.<sup>152</sup> The Romney tweets included allegations that Romney had conspired corruptly with the Bidens in Ukraine.<sup>153</sup> On February 11, Mr. Trump told reporters that the Defense Department should consider disciplining Vindman for his House impeachment testimony.<sup>154</sup> A Times columnist's summary of the retributive acts to that date appears at the link at this end note.<sup>155</sup> [Continued below.]
-----------------	--

2-5-20 +	[Continued.] On February 13, Mr. Trump's savaging of Vindman proceeded. Mr. Trump also belittled his former chief of staff – John Kelly, a retired four-star marine general – for having recently come to Vindman's defense.<sup>156</sup> On February 19, Mr. Trump ousted John Rood, the Pentagon's top policy official who had certified to Congress in May 2019 that Ukraine had made enough anti-corruption progress to justify the release of congressionally authorized military aid to that country. (Mr. Trump had subsequently ignored that advice and had insisted, including throughout the impeachment process, that he legitimately had continued to withhold aid from Ukraine on corruption grounds.)<sup>157</sup>
2-6-20	Faith. Speaking at the National Prayer Breakfast in Washington – a normally apolitical event – Mr. Trump held up high, for the audience to see, USA Today's print edition headline announcing his acquittal. He crowed about his victory and complained of his persecution. He chastised Romney for his vote to convict, claiming that Romney was treacherous and that he had falsely invoked his faith as the basis for his vote. He also chastised Pelosi, claiming she had lied some weeks previous when she had said that she prayed for him. He thus not only used a religious platform to eschew humility, to aggrandize himself and to demean his adversaries, but he initiated a type of religious war as to who was more faithful than the next. (Romney had been a missionary in his youth and had been a leader in his church for decades. Mr. Trump himself was not known to possess any religious faith or ethical grounding whatever.<sup>158</sup>) He even expressly refused to accept the event's theme, "love your enemy," instead suggesting that the attendees join him in hating his enemies. Although many of those assembled roared their approval as he spoke, many other Christian leaders subsequently voiced their disgust.<sup>159</sup>
2-6-20	Celebration. In what CSD considers to be one of the most disturbing episodes in Mr. Trump's tenure as president, he led what he termed a "celebration" of his acquittal in the East Room of the White House.<sup>160</sup> The event was televised live. As Mr. Trump entered the room, which was packed with congressional and other supporters, a recording of a trumpet flourish from "Hail to the Chief" sounded. For over an hour, he then viciously flayed his adversaries from both the Mueller investigation and the impeachment proceedings. He also singled out for praise his various congressional supporters – his "warriors," some of whom he commended for their looks, their athletic abilities or their physiques – citing their fierce defense of him. [Continued below.]

2-6-20	[Continued.] Unlike in the case of President Clinton's post-acquittal apology, Mr. Trump showed no contrition. He maintained that he had done nothing wrong. He boasted about the crowd size, his accomplishments as president, his single-handed responsibility for the rise in the stock market, his success in helping Republicans win their congressional elections, his toughness in the face of persecution (which he claimed other presidents couldn't have withstood), and his popularity – implying, as he had done before, that he was more popular than Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Trump also mocked and railed at Vindman, House Judiciary Committee chair and impeachment manager Jerry Nadler, House Intelligence Committee chair and fellow impeachment manager Adam Schiff, Senate minority leader Chuck Schumer, former FBI director James Comey, former deputy FBI director Andrew McCabe, and others. He crowed about having disparaged Pelosi that morning at the National Prayer Breakfast. He mocked Romney for his claim of religious faith and for having lost his 2012 presidential campaign. He excoriated the Democratic party for welcoming migrants, raising taxes, seeking to take away people's health insurance, "trying to overthrow the government," and wanting "to destroy our country." Without irony, he said that if the alleged corruption of Joe Biden's son Hunter was acceptable, "my kids could make a fortune." He brought his daughter Ivanka up onto the stage for a hug and a kiss, devoid of context. But all of that was consistent with Mr. Trump's routine. Had someone merely read the transcript, one might not have detected anything out of the usual. For CSD, rather, what was so stunning was the full-throated, cheering, hooting acclaim that Mr. Trump received from the crowd. Those assembled represented an entire class of America's most powerful political figures: mainly male and almost entirely white. They had swallowed his pitch, just as he had swallowed them whole. The dispiriting vision was that of a nation that had come to be fully 50% bewitched and corrupted, at the top.<sup>161</sup> CSD urges readers, if they have the fortitude and the time, to watch the complete video of the "celebration." It may serve as a record for future civilized societies, an object lesson in how a democracy can begin to fall.<sup>162</sup>
2-9-20	Romney in the cross-hairs. On January 31, after having voted for the Senate to call witnesses such as Bolton to testify prior to that body's vote on the conviction or acquittal of Mr. Trump, Romney had been disinvited from attending the annual Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC) in Maryland. On February 9, the conference's chairman – not a Romney fan – said that he had feared for Romney's safety should he have attended.<sup>163</sup>

2-15-20	Still the king. Mr. Trump tweeted a passage from a recent Times article that had pejoratively referred to him as a king; except that Mr. Trump himself appeared to embrace the royal characterization. The Times had quoted Ralph Waldo Emerson, and Mr. Trump now quoted the Times: "When you strike at the king, you must kill him," he wrote of his acquittal and his tempestuous vengeance.
2-20-20	A death threat. Federal prosecutors indicted a man for threatening the life of one of the Ukraine whistleblower's attorneys shortly after Mr. Trump, at a campaign rally in November, had held up the attorney's photo – implicitly as a target. <sup>164</sup>

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 29 – April 21, 2020

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

The current Addendum appears in two parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular chronology. The second part, beginning on p. 18, chronicles events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic.

Date	Episode	Category
2-21-20	Censoring Bolton. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had branded his former national security advisor John Bolton a "traitor" for professedly planning to reveal the truth behind the Ukraine scandal. In that regard, Mr. Trump had demanded that his staff, on national security grounds, block the publication prior to the November 2020 election of the entirety of Bolton's forthcoming memoir about his service in the White House, without regard to normal vetting pursuant to national security criteria. <sup>1</sup>	9

2-21-20, 2-23-20	National security, by Twitter and O'Brien. The New York Times reported that Robert O'Brien, Mr. Trump's national security advisor of the past five months (since John Bolton's departure), frequently began meetings with top national security officials by directing them to conform their internal inputs to Mr. Trump's recent tweets rather than by asking them for their own policy suggestions. The Times wrote: "That is the reverse of what the National Security Council was created to do at the Cold War's dawn — to inform and advise the president on national security decisions."	9, 17 (13)
2-21-20	Russian meddling, 2020. Mr. Trump called the recent alert that Russia was meddling in the 2020 election, and that Russia again favored Mr. Trump, a Democrat-inspired "hoax." The alert had been delivered by national security staff to the House Intelligence Committee days earlier, whereupon Mr. Trump had fired Joseph Maguire, his acting director of national intelligence.<sup>2</sup> (See CSD's entry of February 19 +, in the preceding Addendum to this Chronology.) On the same day as Mr. Trump's denial, presidential contender Bernie Sanders acknowledged that he had been briefed on Russian meddling in his favor relative to the Democratic primary contest. Sanders' reaction, by contrast, was to acknowledge and condemn the meddling.<sup>3</sup> Mr. Trump's national security advisor, Robert O'Brien, had recently denied that any alert had been delivered to Congress, and that any such intelligence existed. After the congressional alert became known he doubled-down, asserting that Russia was not trying to help Mr. Trump, but was likely trying to help Sanders.<sup>4</sup> Russia's preference for Mr. Trump was well-known. Interference on behalf of Sanders seemed incongruous, but it presumably had its own anti-democratic logic.<sup>5</sup>	7, 12, 17 (7, 12)
2-21-20	In Nevada. At a campaign rally in Las Vegas, Nevada – sticking his thumb in the eye of that state's contemporaneously held Democratic Party nominating caucuses – Mr. Trump thrilled his audience. The New York Times wrote: [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9

2-21-20	[Continued.] "Mr. Trump spoke for nearly two hours and fired the crowd up with a litany of claims about his accomplishments during his first three years in office, many of them exaggerated or misleading. "During an extended discussion about the dangers of illegal immigration, Mr. Trump noted that 'illegal crossings are down 75 percent from last spring.' He did not mention that the decrease followed a huge surge in border apprehensions on his watch, leaving the number about where it was when he took office. ... "The president described members of the media as 'the most dishonest human beings in the world' and accused law enforcement of harboring 'dirty cops.' He also repeatedly joked with the crowd that he would stay president longer than two terms, a comment he has made at other events." Also at the rally, Mr. Trump showered Democratic presidential hopefuls "Mini" Mike Bloomberg and "Pocahontas" (Elizabeth Warren) with his disgust. He referred to his predecessor as "Barack Hussein Obama." And, as noted above in this Addendum, he called recent reports of Russian meddling in his favor in the upcoming presidential election a Democratic Party "hoax."<sup>6</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9
2-22-20 +	The purge rolls on. On February 22, The Washington Post reported that Johnny McEntee – Mr. Trump's former body man whom he had recently re-hired as director of the White House's personnel office after he had been removed from the White House as a security risk due to his gambling debts – was now tasked with purging the government of officials who were deemed insufficiently loyal to Mr. Trump. It was a role that, for CSD, seemed reminiscent of those that had typified Eastern European communist regimes in the previous century. Unlike his predecessor, who had reported to the chief of staff, McEntee would report directly to Mr. Trump. Co-commissars for the purge reportedly included son Donald, Jr. and son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner. In recent days, the following officials had been purged (some as previously logged by CSD in the immediately preceding Addendum to this Chronology): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Lt. Colonel Alexander Vindman (NSC), who had reported Mr. Trump's extortionate phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky.</li> <li>• Lt. Colonel Yevgeny Vindman (NSC), Alexander's brother. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	9, 11

2-22-20 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Gordon Sondland, ambassador to the EU.</li> <li>• John Rood (DOD), who had certified Ukraine as sufficiently non-corrupt that it should receive the military assistance that Mr. Trump had been withholding.</li> <li>• Elaine McCusker (DOD), who had attempted to follow rules in releasing Ukraine aid.</li> <li>• Victoria Coates (NSC), seen as generally suspect.</li> <li>• Joseph Maguire, Director of National Intelligence, who was removed for having allowed a subordinate to inform Congress of Russia's current efforts to assist Mr. Trump in the 2020 election campaign.</li> <li>• Andrew Hallman, Maguire's deputy.</li> <li>• Jessie Liu, Roger Stone's DOJ prosecutor who had been nominated for a Treasury Department post; the nomination was now withdrawn.</li> </ul> Observers noted that the field of willing and experienced administrative talent would be even more restricted now that adherence to Mr. Trump's personality cult was an enforced requisite.<sup>7</sup> Writing in a guest column in The Post, retired admiral William McRaven, who had overseen the elimination of Osama bin Laden in 2011, wrote specifically of Maguire's removal: "As Americans, we should be frightened — deeply afraid for the future of the nation. When good men and women can't speak the truth, when facts are inconvenient, when integrity and character no longer matter, when presidential ego and self-preservation are more important than national security — then there is nothing left to stop the triumph of evil."<sup>8</sup> On February 26, Politico summarized Mr. Trump's increasingly successful efforts to silence and to dis-empower America's intelligence-gathering agencies: not only by way of the purges, but by repeatedly withholding their politically damaging data from Congress.<sup>9</sup>	9, 11

2-22-20	[Continued.] "From the beginning, his administration has been a turnstile of people who fall in and out of favor with the president. Including those with 'acting' designations, he is on his third chief of staff, his fourth national security adviser, his fourth defense secretary, his fifth secretary of homeland security, his sixth deputy national security adviser and his seventh communications director. "According to data compiled by ... a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, turnover among ... senior staff ... has hit 82 percent, more in three years than any of the previous five presidents saw in their first four years. Moreover, the Trump administration has been notable for a high level of serial turnover, with 38 percent of the top positions replaced more than once. "'Many key departments and White House entities have been hollowed out,' [the Brookings fellow] said. The president has thus been left with acting officials in many key areas. 'He seems completely unbothered,' she said. 'He claims that actings give him flexibility, but fails to see that temporary leaders cannot advance his policies nearly as well as a Senate-confirmed appointee who has the stature and all the powers to do so.'"<sup>10</sup>	10
2-24-20, 2-25-20	In India. On February 24, Mr. Trump arrived for a state visit in India, the country housing the largest number (four) of his overseas investment properties. Several of his business partners there had been reported to be corrupt, tied to the Indian government, and/or eager to trade on Mr. Trump's presidency in promoting the respective properties. Mr. Trump himself had announced that after his presidency he would likely expand his business operations in that country. Commentators noted that, in the visit, the mixing of Mr. Trump's presidential duties and his business goals in India seemed complete.<sup>11</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 11, 12, 15

2-24-20, 2-25-20	[Continued.] Others compared Mr. Trump to India's cruel, authoritarian, demagogic, fact-challenged, Islamophobic, Hindu-supremacist strongman, Narendra Modi, who was widely seen as presiding over an increasingly cutthroat and materialistic society – one that had abandoned its idealistic origins in favor of a devotion to profit and fame. Indeed, in connection with his visit to India, Mr. Trump spoke of Modi as his "good friend" and "an exceptional leader." In anticipation of the visit, one Indian observer wrote of India under Modi: "A quasi-Trumpian worldview was emerging, in which society appeared a mere sum of self-aggrandizing individuals locked in fiercely zero-sum competition with one another, with winners as well as losers racked by fear, distrust and envy."<sup>12</sup> Mr. Trump's itinerary took him from Ahmedabad to Agra to New Delhi. The New York Times wrote: "Major roads in the three cities were teeming with giant [government-installed] posters and billboards of Mr. Trump and Mr. Modi, along with inspiring slogans trumpeting the U.S.-India relationship." In addition, Modi had assembled crowds of loyalists to cheer Mr. Trump's motorcade in Ahmedabad. Mr. Trump had boasted that some 10,000,000 Indian fans would line his route; but despite Modi's efforts and Mr. Trump's projections, the real number proved to be in the tens of thousands. The crowd at a campaign-style rally in that city, however, did reach 100,000. As Mr. Trump entered the stadium, the song "Macho Man" blared. In his address, he roused the audience to cheers when he condemned Islamic terrorism. Afterwards he claimed that he had received "the greatest greeting ever given to any head of state by any country." [Continued below.]	2, 9, 11, 12, 15
-----------------------------	---	-------------------------

2-24-20, 2-25-20	[Continued.] The next day, in New Delhi, Mr. Trump spoke with reporters. For months India had been riven by Hindu-Muslim violence over several of Modi's recent orders: one that had facilitated citizenship for Hindu immigrants but not Muslim ones, another that had revoked autonomy from the largely Muslim state of Kashmir, and others that had operated to round up political critics and shut down Internet access in Kashmir. Even as Mr. Trump spoke in New Delhi, the city was being racked by its most explosive riots in decades – over a dozen people died in sectarian mob violence that very day, and dozens more in the following days. Indian police reportedly participated in the violence against Muslims. News reporters were brutalized and censored. But Mr. Trump declined to discuss with the press either the strife or Modi's provocations. Instead he praised Modi for advancing religious freedom.<sup>13</sup> In the days following, amid gruesome reports of the carnage, India's descent into ethno-nationalism and anti-democratic governance drew the condemnation of the United Nations, the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, and Freedom House.<sup>14</sup> Between travels to the two cities, Mr. Trump had enjoyed (or endured) a cultural interlude. In what struck CSD as an ultimate statement of something, Mr. Trump and Modi – by all accounts two masters of brutishness, invective, conflict, arrogance, gluttony, materialism and intolerance, together with Mr. Trump's expensively attired wife Melania – were filmed spinning cotton at Mahatma Gandhi's humble ashram on the Ganges, purportedly in tribute to the great ascetic leader, sage and pacifist.<sup>15</sup> In Agra, Mr. Trump and Melania also posed for the cameras before the grandiose Taj Mahal (after which one of Mr. Trump's eventually bankrupt casinos had been named).<sup>16</sup> So too posed daughter Ivanka and son-in-law Jared Kushner, the purpose of whose participation in the state visit at taxpayer expense wasn't obvious, except (CSD would surmise) to seed future business deals for themselves.<sup>17</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 11, 12, 15
-----------------------------	---	-------------------------

2-24-20, 2-25-20	[Continued.] For good measure, in addressing the reporters in New Delhi, Mr. Trump, without evidence, accused House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff of leaking intelligence reports about Russian election meddling to the press, and he threatened to punish Schiff. <sup>18</sup> He also said – as he had tweeted twice earlier in the day – that liberal Supreme Court Justices Sonia Sotomayor and Ruth Bader Ginsburg should recuse themselves from all cases that in any way involved him or his administration, claiming that they would not be fair to him. <sup>19</sup> Presidential ad hominem attacks on Supreme Court Justices had previously been rare. And before Mr. Trump, American political figures had sought not to criticize their political adversaries while overseas.	2, 9, 11, 12, 15
2-26-20	Riding high on sex trafficking. A New York Times columnist characterized the efforts of Mr. Trump and his daughter Ivanka to publicize their purported fight against child sex trafficking as empty deception. Under Mr. Trump, prosecutions of traffickers were down; protective visas for victims were increasingly denied and delayed, such that applicants couldn't legally work here and fewer were willing to come forward; fee waivers for those applications were increasingly being denied; women were discouraged from reporting to U.S. authorities for fear of deportation; funding of anti-poverty programs in high-risk areas overseas was reduced; and Mr. Trump had cynically used lurid (and inaccurate) reports of trafficking episodes to promote anti-immigrant sentiment and the construction of his border wall. <sup>20</sup> That commentary in The Times followed a similar piece by The Washington Post's editorial board on January 30. <sup>21</sup> Both columns appear to have been sparked by a boycott by at least eight anti-trafficking organizations of a January 31 White House summit on the trafficking issue. <sup>22</sup>	6, 7
2-26-20, 3-3-20	Suing The Times and The Post. On February 20, Mr. Trump's reelection campaign sued The New York Times for libel, in connection with a Times opinion column that had accused Mr. Trump of conspiring with Russia relative to the 2016 election. <sup>23</sup> On March 3, the campaign sued The Washington Post on similar grounds. <sup>24</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 9, 11

2-26-20, 3-3-20	[Continued.] Under the Supreme Court's long-established interpretation of the first Amendment to the Constitution, both lawsuits would fail unless the published statements could be proven to have been recklessly or knowingly false. The lawsuits thus appeared to amount to chest-thumping, harassment, and part of Mr. Trump's continuing abuse of the courts through meritless litigation – a pattern he had deployed throughout his business career and had continued as president. No other recent president had done anything like this to restrain the press or to punish his enemies.	1, 9, 11
2-28-20	In North Carolina. At a campaign rally in North Charleston, South Carolina, Mr. Trump suggested to his followers that they corrupt that state's upcoming Democratic primary election – an "open" contest in which Republicans were permitted to participate – by voting for Bernie Sanders, a candidate whom Mr. Trump believed he could easily defeat in November's general election. (On February 10, he had suggested the same to New Hampshire Republicans in advance of the open Democratic primary there.)<sup>25</sup> Also at the rally, Mr. Trump expressed rage at NBC's coverage of him, and he turned that rage toward NBC's parent company Comcast. He vowed to "do everything possible to destroy [Comcast's] image."<sup>26</sup>	1, 9
2-28-20	Ratcliffe for DNI (again). Mr. Trump announced that he would nominate Republican Congressman John Ratcliffe to serve as the permanent Director of National Intelligence, to replace the recently named acting director Richard Grenell. Ratcliffe was a fierce partisan of Mr. Trump's, having vocally and cynically defended Mr. Trump during the impeachment proceedings. Mr. Trump's previous nomination of Ratcliffe as DNI, in 2019, had foundered when exaggerations in Ratcliffe's resume had come to light. But Mr. Trump still appeared determined to place a partisan loyalist in the position – a position that was statutorily reserved for a deeply experienced intelligence professional. [Continued below.]	9, 11, 13, 16

2-28-20	[Continued.] The appointment of Grenell as acting director had also been controversial, on similar grounds – that he was hyper-partisan, and without substantive qualification. (See CSD's entry of February 19 +.) Grenell was also reported to be notoriously confrontational and devious, and he was suspected of having lobbied for foreign governments contrary to law.<sup>27</sup> Observers noted that Ratcliffe's nomination would halt the otherwise mandatory expiration of Grenell's temporary appointment; such that, in considering Ratcliffe's nomination, the Senate would have to decide between two unqualified sycophants – Grenell or Ratcliffe – to fill the country's top intelligence position.<sup>28</sup>	9, 11, 13, 16
2-29-20	With CPAC. Speaking in Maryland at the annual meeting of the Conservative Political Action Conference, Mr. Trump exaggerated his accomplishments; falsely insisted (still!) that Mexico would pay for the construction of his border wall; harshly mocked the Democratic presidential contenders one by one; claimed that radicals among the Democrats would “indoctrinate our children, . . . impose a fanatical code of political correctness, bombard our citizens with fake news propaganda and implement policies that would turn America very quickly into a large-scale Venezuela”; complained that Time magazine had featured a young European environmental activist rather than himself as its person of the year; insisted preposterously that the coronavirus epidemic was "under control" (see the Coronavirus section of this Addendum, below); accused Democrats of wanting to "let infected people pour into our country"; and closed by clownishly hugging and kissing the American flag. The crowd greeted Mr. Trump's remarks with great acclamation, and it booed the mention of Senator Mitt Romney – a former star of the conference – because he had recently voted to convict Mr. Trump on one of the House's two impeachment charges.<sup>29</sup>	6, 7, 9, 11
3-2-20	Fox in the doghouse (again). Mr. Trump criticized Fox News as being "politically correct" for having interviewed Democratic presidential candidate Mike Bloomberg. On previous occasions as well he had slapped the network for its minor deviations from serving as his own propaganda machine.<sup>30</sup>	1

3-4-20	Hitting Bloomberg. Even in the midst of the mounting coronavirus threat (see the Coronavirus section of this Addendum, below), Mr. Trump found time to harshly ridicule former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg for having lost a number of Democratic primary elections for the presidency the previous evening and then having withdrawn his candidacy. Mr. Trump tweeted: “Mini Mike Bloomberg just ‘quit’ the race for President. I could have told him long ago that he didn’t have what it takes.”<sup>31</sup>	11
3-5-20	Census deception. The Washington Post reported on the efforts of Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign to run campaign fund solicitations, via U.S. Mail and social media, in the guise of notices to participate in the 2020 decennial census.<sup>32</sup> The House Oversight Committee had complained of the illegal practice in February, but the practice had continued.<sup>33</sup> The deception had the potential to trick readers into seeing the campaign as an official government activity, and Mr. Trump as effectively equivalent to the government. It also had the potential to confuse and chill participation in the actual census – as the administration had earlier tried mightily to do relative to minority populations (see CSD’s previous reporting), and which taxpayers were now paying tens of millions of dollars to attempt to un-do.<sup>34</sup>	9
3-5-20	Self-dealing cover-up. The Washington Post reported that a public interest organization, The Post itself and others had managed – with great effort and over much time – to pry out of the Secret Service data on some of the amounts that it had paid to rent Mr. Trump’s properties while providing him protection there. Partial records showed cumulative payments in excess of $600,000; far greater payments were likely, and still hidden. Although Mr. Trump’s son Eric had previously told the press that the nightly charges for Secret Service rooms were minimal (e.g., “50.00”), at least some of the charges proved to have been as high as $650 per night and/or were at above-market rates. One monthly charge for a cottage was $17,000.<sup>35</sup> The Secret Service had spent at least $250,000 at Trump properties just in the first five months of Mr. Trump’s presidency.<sup>36</sup> Mr. Trump had spent 30% of his days in office visiting one or another of his properties. As of February 14, his golf hobby had cost taxpayers $33.8 million.<sup>37</sup> For CSD, the arrogance, entitlement, graft, deception, secrecy and defiance of public oversight were mind-numbing.	9, 15, 17 (7)

3-6-20	There goes another one. Mr. Trump replaced his acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney with Mark Meadows, a hard right congressman and defender of Mr. Trump. <sup>38</sup> Meadows was his fourth chief of staff in just over three years. <sup>39</sup>	10
3-10-20	Russian meddling, 2020 (revisited). House Democrats, following a new, confidential intelligence hearing, accused the Trump administration of playing down and withholding from Congress the findings of intelligence officials that Russia was currently interfering in the American election process for the benefit of Mr. Trump – including by stoking racial hatred here. The down-playing was seen by critics as a scripted effort by the intelligence officials to cover for the reports of Russian meddling shared with Congress some weeks earlier – reports that had so enraged Mr. Trump that he had fired his acting director of national intelligence. <sup>40</sup> (See CSD's entry of February 21, above.)	9, 12
3-18-20	The purge continues. Mr. Trump dismissed Russell Travers, the well-regarded acting director of the National Counterterrorism Center, in what observers believed was a continuation of the political purge of the non-partisan intelligence agencies. <sup>41</sup> (See CSD's entry of February 22, above.) Travers's deputy was removed as well. Seven former intelligence agency heads objected, in a signed column in The Washington Post. <sup>42</sup>	9
3-30-20 +	Please, don't let them vote! On March 30, Mr. Trump validated the ongoing effort by many Republican governors and state legislators to suppress voting in their states for partisan purposes. He told a Fox News interviewer that a push by congressional Democrats to make it easier for Americans to vote amid the coronavirus pandemic would result in “levels of voting that if you'd ever agreed to it, you'd never have a Republican elected in this country again.” <sup>43</sup> (See the Coronavirus section of this Addendum, below.) Within days, the Republican speaker of the Georgia legislature agreed, expressly echoing Mr. Trump's remarks. <sup>44</sup> On April 3, Politico reported that the Trump campaign was spending millions in legal fees to thwart protections in the face of the pandemic. <sup>45</sup> On April 7, in his daily coronavirus news conference, Mr. Trump repeated his sentiment: challenging mail-in voting as “corrupt,” prone to massive fraud, and bad for Republicans. <sup>46</sup> He seemed to prefer that citizens risk their lives in order to vote – or else stay home. <sup>47</sup>	9

4-2-20	My friend, the butcher. Mr. Trump tweeted that his “friend” – Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS) – had agreed with Russian President Vladimir Putin to cut back oil production, thus propping up U.S. production and prices. The tweet came 18 months after MBS had ordered the assassination and dismemberment of the Washington Post columnist Jamal Khashoggi in Turkey, a crime for which – despite its international notoriety and exhaustive media and congressional scrutiny – the U.S. had declined to hold MBS accountable. Meanwhile, both Russia and Saudi Arabia denied Mr. Trump’s account.<sup>48</sup>	7, 12
4-2-20	Jared caught cheating, again. The watchdog organization Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW) filed a Hatch Act complaint against presidential son-in-law Jared Kushner for running Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign from Kushner’s office in the White House – contrary to law.<sup>49</sup>	9, 11, 17 (9)
4-3-20 +	Still purging – and now knee-capping IGs. On April 3, Mr. Trump fired Michael Atkinson, the intelligence community’s inspector general, who had been the first to alert Congress to the complaint by the Ukraine whistle-blower about Mr. Trump’s attempts to extort Ukraine’s president into smearing Mr. Trump’s likely electoral opponent, Joe Biden. Mr. Trump frankly touted the firing of Atkinson as vengeful, a pay-back for what he considered to be Atkinson’s disloyalty to him. Democrats blasted the firing as “unconscionable,” and as Mr. Trump’s latest effort to politicize American intelligence gathering and reporting for his personal benefit.<sup>50</sup> Mr. Trump made the move on a Friday evening and amid the fog of the coronavirus emergency (see the Coronavirus section of this Addendum, below); and as such it was crowded out of much of the regular news coverage.<sup>51</sup> Of particular concern was that Atkinson’s firing was not an isolated attack on the independence of inspectors general. Rather, it came only days after Mr. Trump, when signing major coronavirus response legislation, had issued a signing statement to the effect that he would not honor the requirement of the legislation that the newly appointed coronavirus response inspector general – whom he had drawn from the White House counsel’s office, and thus who presumably was a Trump loyalist – be empowered to issue reports to Congress. [Continued below.]	9, 11

4-3-20 +	[Continued.] The Washington Post, in discussing both episodes, described how the Trump administration had repeatedly disempowered the nation’s corps of inspectors general – in an apparently concerted effort to make government less accountable to anyone but Mr. Trump himself.<sup>52</sup> A New York Times guest columnist wrote similarly.<sup>53</sup> But the mobilization against IGs didn’t end there. At an April 6 press briefing, Mr. Trump angrily disparaged a report issued by the office of the inspector general for the Department of Health and Human Services. The report documented the insufficiency of equipment at many hospitals in the face of the coronavirus pandemic. (See the Coronavirus section of this Addendum, below.) Mr. Trump supplied no evidence to rebut the report – in fact, he appeared not to have read it. But he castigated the report’s author, insinuating that she and her report were politically motivated against him.<sup>54</sup> Further, on April 7, Mr. Trump removed Glenn Fine, the Pentagon’s acting inspector general and the lead among 10 inspectors general who were tasked with overseeing the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee. That committee had been created by Congress days earlier to limit fraud and mismanagement relative to the government’s new $2 trillion dollar coronavirus response law. Thus within the space of only a few days, Mr. Trump had summarily removed two inspectors general, chosen as a third a political servant whom he nevertheless vowed to disempower, and sought to humiliate a fourth I.G. staffer. Civilian inspectors general are appointed and may be dismissed by presidents. But, statutorily, they are free to report their concerns and findings directly to Congress, thus bypassing the president and – contrary to Mr. Trump’s stated belief – owing him or her no duty of loyalty. Civilian I.G. positions were created in 1978, in the wake of the Nixon presidency. Mr. Trump’s behavior in the above episodes amounted to what one observer called “a full-on assault” on the institution of civilian inspectors general; and it was plainly and utterly corrupt.<sup>55</sup>	9, 11
-----------------	--	--------------

4-7-20	Yet another one. Mr. Trump replaced his press secretary Stephanie Grisham with Kayleigh McEnany. McEnany – a disingenuous and virulent Trump campaign spokeswoman, as well as an Obama birther enthusiast and a coronavirus denier – thus became Mr. Trump’s forth press secretary, following Sean Spicer, Sarah Huckabee Sanders, and then Grisham. Grisham had distinguished her tenure in the position by having never given a single press conference.<sup>56</sup>	10, 11
4-7-20, 4-20-20	Grenell purges intelligence. Politico reported on April 7 that Mr. Trump’s acting director of national intelligence, Richard Grenell, had terminated every Senate-appointed staffer under him and was keeping secret from Congress his motives and plans for overhauling the intelligence community, presumably staffing up with Trump loyalists. (Grenell himself was a Trump loyalist with virtually no background in intelligence or national security – see CSD’s entry of February 28, above.)<sup>57</sup> On April 20, Grenell defied House Democrats’ oversight requests.<sup>58</sup>	17 (9)
4-8-20, 4-9-20	Barr steps out. On April 8, Mr. Trump’s attorney general and anti-democratic facilitator William Barr told Fox News that the coronavirus crisis had created an opportunity for the U.S. to tighten its borders, and that foreigners bringing in microbes were posing a far greater threat to Americans than was global warming. He also said that the “draconian” shelter-at-home coronavirus restrictions should begin lifting after April.<sup>59</sup> CSD notes that, at least as of this writing, Barr was not a physician, an epidemiologist, an environmental scientist or an economist. He was a lawyer, and seemingly out of his lane. (See the Coronavirus section of this Addendum, below.) The next day, Barr told Fox that he agreed with Mr. Trump’s firing of Michael Atkinson, the intelligence community’s inspector general who had advised Congress of the Ukraine whistleblower’s damning letter. But here Barr was back in his lane: he had tried to gag the whistleblower and Atkinson at the time of the original blowing. Barr also told Fox that day that he disapproved of mail-in voting – again echoing the authoritarian sentiments of Mr. Trump and many in his party (see CSD’s entry of March 30 +, above).<sup>60</sup> Congressional Democrats reacted by seeking an investigation of Barr’s comments about, and his prior attempts to hamstring, Atkinson.<sup>61</sup>	17 (4, 6, 8, 9)

4-9-20	Who loves China more? Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign released a video that slammed his presumptive opponent Joe Biden, alleging that the latter was friendly with China – the country where the coronavirus pandemic had begun. (See the Coronavirus section of this Addendum, below.) The video included a clip of Gary Locke, a Chinese-American former governor, commerce secretary and ambassador, implying that he was a Chinese government official, and thus continuing to foment anti-Asian sentiment in the U.S. on account of the pandemic. The video ignored Mr. Trump’s having repeatedly fawned over Chinese dictator and president Xi Jinping to an extent that dwarfed any favorable attitudes toward China that Biden may have displayed over the years.<sup>62</sup>	6, 9
4-14-20	The Fact Checker. The Washington Post’s Fact Checker reported that, though April 3, Mr. Trump had made 18,000 false or misleading claims, for an average of 15 per day, and 23 per day over the previous 75 days. Many of the claims involved the coronavirus. (See the Coronavirus section of this Addendum, below.) Many others involved his touting of the strength of the pre-coronavirus economy.	7
4-15-20	Threat to adjourn Congress. Under color of a little known and never used provision of the Constitution, Mr. Trump threatened to adjourn Congress so that he could appoint several dozen high level officials without congressional approval. Recent presidents had sometimes, controversially, effected appointments during scheduled congressional recesses; but no president had ever adjourned Congress, threatened to do so, or claimed to be able to do so. Adjourning national legislatures is a common move of authoritarian tyrants – particularly during alleged or actual national emergencies, such as the U.S. was currently experiencing with the coronavirus pandemic.<sup>63</sup> Mr. Trump’s threat followed by two days his constitutionally preposterous claim to possess “total” authority to force states to re-open their economies in the face of the coronavirus pandemic. (See CSD’s April 13 entry in the second section of this Addendum, relating to that pandemic.)	9

4-15-20	The JEDI theft. Politico reported that the Pentagon had blocked its staff from cooperating with its inspector general’s inquiry as to whether Mr. Trump had wrongfully interfered in diverting the massive JEDI cloud computing contract to Microsoft from Amazon.<sup>64</sup> As reported above in this Chronology, Mr. Trump detested Amazon because its principal shareholder, Jeff Bezos, was richer than him and owned his antagonist The Washington Post.	9, 15
4-17-20	On the campaign trail. Media reported that Mr. Trump’s campaign was secretly paying his son Eric’s wife Lara and his son Donald Jr.’s girlfriend Kimberly Guilfoyle $180,000 per year for unspecified campaign services, and carrying the expenses off the books so as not to disclose them. Media also reported that Mr. Trump’s campaign was circulating a photograph in which shirtless and heavily tattooed MS-13 gang members were spuriously shown as supporting Mr. Trump’s presumptive opponent, Joe Biden.<sup>65</sup>	6, 9, 11, 16
4-18-20	Friends in high places. During his daily coronavirus briefing, Mr. Trump told reporters that Russian President Vladimir Putin was “a total gentleman” and that he had recently received a “nice note” from North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un.<sup>66</sup>	12

The Coronavirus Pandemic
(A separate section of Addendum 29)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13 and 15 as defined in CSD's Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic have moved rapidly. CSD's observations below that have been recorded as of a given date may have been superseded, or may yet be superseded, on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD's concerns about the Trump administration's coronavirus response are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that have recurred, that news media have reported anew, and that, as of the date of this Addendum, have continued to threaten lives – day after day.

On January 31, Mr. Trump had banned in-bound travel from China for most foreign nationals, effective February 2, after some 40 other countries had restricted travel from China.<sup>67</sup> (See CSD's entry of January 29 + in the preceding Addendum.) But he then did little more to deal with the spread of the coronavirus for many weeks. Through February 24, as Mr. Trump continued to play golf and mount campaign rallies, he and his chief economic advisor Larry Kudlow continued to downplay the threat of a pandemic. That behavior persisted as the disease continued to spread from China, across the globe and into the U.S., and as the Centers for Disease Control, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Alex Azar), and other federal agencies and voices issued public health cautions for Americans. The stock market – fearing disruptions to global supply chains, and not to be fooled by the White House – swooned. Attempting to juice the market, Mr. Trump and Kudlow told investors to "buy low." The market dropped further. Kudlow frankly acknowledged that while the CDC was attempting to protect the health of the American people, the White House was attempting to protect the securities markets. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump was enraged – at the markets, and at his own government – and that he had ordered aides not to issue troubling medical predictions. The CDC shortly tempered its cautions, but not based on any change in the scientific data. Mr. Trump blamed Democrats and the media for attempting to instill panic. Lawmakers of both parties expressed outrage at his conduct.<sup>68</sup>

But Mr. Trump's acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney and Mr. Trump's right-wing media supporters took up a continuing battle cry tarring other media and Democrats.<sup>69</sup> Mr. Trump's son Donald, Jr. said that Democrats hoped that millions of Americans would die from the disease so that Mr. Trump would be blamed.<sup>70</sup>

This was not Mr. Trump's first dismissal of the science of epidemiology. In 2014 he had pummeled science-driven conclusions for containing the Ebola epidemic, and his administration had cut the anti-pandemic officer on the National Security Council as well as funding of anti-pandemic research and operations.<sup>71</sup>

In all, Mr. Trump's initial response to the epidemic threatened American public health preparedness; dispensed foolish market advice to gullible investors (and arguably even defrauded the markets); further tarnished his national and international credibility on major matters of national security and economic reality; further divided the country on partisan grounds, even relative to a potential national security crisis and the physical health of his supporters; and further evidenced his willingness to muzzle federal agencies and to distort federal data in support of his personal political fortunes.

In addition, The Washington Post reported that the coronavirus response of the White House was saddled by internal chaos – attributable to an extent to the endemic chaos there, involving competing power centers, Mr. Trump's capricious style, his fixation with media outputs rather than scientific ones, the challenges inherent in governing by falsehood, a reliance on loyalists and their loyalty (as opposed to expertise), the primacy of political motives over practical ones, and deficient preparation for genuine crises not of the president's own making.<sup>72</sup>

At a news conference on February 26, Mr. Trump at last stepped to the fore. He boasted about his administration's response to the epidemic; blamed Democrats for politicizing the issue; falsely attributed the continuing stock market drop on other factors and on named actors (including what he said was the markets' fear of a Democratic victory in the November presidential election); assured the country that if he were reelected the market would recover; and continued to downplay the risk of U.S. infections – even as an HHS official, from the podium, pointedly acknowledged that risk.

At the news conference, Mr. Trump also announced the appointment of Vice President Mike Pence – a perennial science denier – to lead the U.S. emergency response, in an apparent attempt to remove messaging from scientists and place it in the hands of a political commissar. Azar, who still purported to head the country's coronavirus task force, had been informed of Pence's role only moments before the news conference. Both of those positions were part-time: the officials had other day jobs (which in Pence's case included campaigning for reelection).<sup>73</sup>

Given Mr. Trump's disinterest in science and his unreliability in factual matters generally, how the country would respond to his leadership during a coronavirus crisis – now that he had finally undertaken to lead – was unknown.<sup>74</sup> In any event, on February 27, he ordered that all federal health officials and scientists obtain the approval of Pence's office before issuing any public statements.<sup>75</sup> Avoiding confusion in public messaging would be a salutary goal if performed by scientists; but if performed by political figures – and particularly those under Mr. Trump's yoke – the gag order risked the dissemination of dishonest and damaging propaganda.

At a campaign rally in North Charleston, South Carolina on February 28, Mr. Trump falsely implied that the coronavirus was less threatening than the flu (in truth it was many times more virulent and deadly, and no vaccine yet existed for it). He also said that his wall at the Mexican border would stop migrants from bringing the coronavirus into the country. But otherwise he claimed that the epidemic (or possibly the Democrats' criticism of how he had been handling the epidemic – his precise meaning was unclear) was the Democrats' "new hoax."<sup>76</sup>

On March 2, Mr. Trump told reporters that, notwithstanding the virulence of the coronavirus, it was "very safe" for crowds of his supporters to attend his upcoming political rallies – a strikingly bold statement for a non-scientist.<sup>77</sup> Also on March 2, at a televised meeting with coronavirus task force members and pharmaceutical industry executives, Mr. Trump appeared unfamiliar with the rudiments of vaccine development, despite having been briefed on them; and he repeatedly puffed what he believed would be a short time period in which a vaccine would be ready for deployment, only to be repeatedly corrected by experts in attendance.<sup>78</sup>

On March 4, Mr. Trump blamed the Obama administration for having issued rules that caused the recent rollout of testing for the coronavirus to be slow. But whether such rules had been issued was questionable. And in any event, for three years the Trump administration had acquiesced to any such rules that it may have inherited.<sup>79</sup>

On March 5, in an interview on Fox News, Mr. Trump casually questioned official statistics about the virulence of the coronavirus. He also casually suggested that infected people could go to work without concern – contrary to all public health advice.<sup>80</sup>

On March 5, Mr. Trump hosted a 900-person fundraising gala at Mar-a-Lago, his Florida resort, and the next evening he hosted a 200-person birthday party there for Kimberly Guilfoyle, his son Donald, Jr.'s girlfriend – all at a time when public health experts were advising against large gatherings and urging seniors to avoid contact with others.<sup>81</sup>

On March 6, at the Centers for Disease Control headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia, Mr. Trump – wearing a campaign hat for the cameras and in all respects defying the views of experts – told reporters that:

- He preferred that passengers on an infected cruise ship floating off the coast of California remain onboard rather than receiving treatment on land, so as to reduce the optics of the numbers of those being treated here.
- The dense crowds attending his political rallies should have no concerns about becoming infected.
- People should not cancel their travel and convention plans on account of the disease.
- The media's reporting on the epidemic was unduly negative.
- Anyone who wanted a test could have one. (The truth: only a health care professional could order a test; and there was still an enormous shortage of test kits.)

At the CDC, Mr. Trump also:

- Told the reporters that the kits were "perfect," like "the transcription" (of his call in which he had extorted Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky to smear presidential contender Joe Biden).
- Gratuitously attacked CNN.
- Said that Pence shouldn't compliment Washington Governor Jay Inslee for the latter's handling of the serious outbreak in his state, because Inslee was "a snake" for having criticized Mr. Trump's statements (actually misrepresentations) about the risks of the disease.
- Boasted about his television ratings relative to a town hall meeting he had conducted with Fox News the previous evening.

- Listened attentively as the CDC's director praised his leadership in the coronavirus crisis.
- Pointed to his own prowess as an epidemiologist, saying, “You know my uncle was a great — he was at MIT. He taught at MIT for a record number of years. He was a great super genius, Dr. John Trump. I like this stuff. I really get it. People are surprised that I understand it. ... Maybe I have a natural ability.”<sup>82</sup> (In response to that boast, a columnist for The Post assembled a telling compendium of Mr. Trump's false scientific pronouncements over the years.<sup>83</sup>)

Also on March 6, a Reuters/Ipsos poll revealed that Democrats were twice as likely as Republicans to say that the coronavirus posed an imminent threat to the U.S. The poll also revealed that more Democrats than Republicans said that they were taking steps to be prepared, such as by washing their hands and limiting their travel plans.<sup>84</sup> Whether Mr. Trump had convinced Republicans to ignore science, or vice versa, was not reported by the polling organizations.

On March 6 and March 7, respectively, Politico and The Post reported on the U.S. government's slow and error-ridden response to the epidemic, which (they reported) likely resulted in its spread.<sup>85</sup> Errors included the inadequate and misdirected rollout of screening and testing mechanisms – resulting in weeks and even months of delay, as American infections had mounted. CSD is wary of rushing to criticize federal agencies for what may have been, under the extraordinary circumstances, good faith errors and/or commonplace administrative glitches, visible only in hindsight. And we were initially reluctant to compare the efficacy of the administration's coronavirus response to what transpired during other epidemics in the U.S. and during this epidemic abroad. But The Post's reporters in particular – followed by many others in the weeks to come (see below in this Addendum) – concluded that many of the errors (and thus much of the disease's spread) owed specifically to Mr. Trump's early lack of attention to the matter, his early failure to coordinate competing bureaucracies, his preference for political gain over scientific solution, his subordinates' reluctance to question his approach, and his false assurances to the public.<sup>86</sup>

New York Times columnists on both the left and the right similarly faulted Mr. Trump for his indirection and his rhetorical fakery as the coronavirus spread.<sup>87</sup>

On March 7, The Associated Press reported that the White House had overruled the CDC's recommendation that all elderly and physically fragile people avoid crowds and air travel. Pence denied that; but afterwards the CDC's website was "quietly" changed at several spots to include the missing recommendations. CSD was able to locate the newly posted advisories only with effort.<sup>88</sup>

Over the March 7-9 weekend, Mr. Trump reportedly was in "gleeful" spirits as he visited his Florida properties. Despite the CDC's cautions for the general population, he publicly shook countless hands.<sup>89</sup>

On March 9, before the financial markets opened, Mr. Trump dispatched two dozen tweets on everything but the coronavirus, including calling President Obama's administration the “most corrupt Administration in the history of our Country,” and blaming “very bad, sick people” for trying to undermine him from within the government. When the markets cratered upon opening, he blamed everything but the coronavirus, including "the Fake News."<sup>90</sup> But he still minimized the virus's threat, tweeting, "So last year 37,000 Americans died from the common Flu. It averages between 27,000 and 70,000 per year. Nothing is shut down, life & the economy go on. At this moment there are 546 confirmed cases of CoronaVirus, with 22 deaths. Think about that!"<sup>91</sup> He further tweeted, "Nothing is shut down, and life and the economy go on."<sup>92</sup>

Contemporaneously, The Post reported on the White House's floundering response to the spread of the virus and the turmoil in the financial markets. The Post cited as causes: internal disagreements and thin experience among Mr. Trump's top advisors; vacancies in top economic positions; Mr. Trump's hostility toward the Federal Reserve Board; his skewed outlook favoring his own political fortunes over public health; and his disdain for global institutions and cooperation.<sup>93</sup>

On March 10, Mr. Trump said that he would not get tested for the disease, even though several congressmen who had recently been with him at the Conservative Political Action Conference in Maryland and who had been exposed to a carrier had undergone testing. He told a reporter, "I don't think it's a big deal, I would do it, I don't feel any reason -- I feel extremely good." He then added that he had "no symptoms, no anything." He thus at once (1) demonstrated his ignorance of the disease (which an infected person can carry for several days before experiencing symptoms); (2) encouraged millions of other Americans to be equally misinformed and blasé, to their great peril; and (3) threatened the well-being of the entire country over the unattended risk to the health of the commander-in-chief.<sup>94</sup>

On March 11, the World Health Organization finally characterized the coronavirus outbreak as a pandemic.<sup>95</sup>

Mr. Trump and Joe Biden both canceled campaign rallies due to the pandemic.<sup>96</sup>

Dr. Anthony Fauci, the country's leading infectious disease specialist and a member of Mr. Trump's coronavirus task force, told the House Oversight and Reform Committee repeatedly that Mr. Trump's many benign characterizations of the disease had been inaccurate.<sup>97</sup>

Also on March 11, at long last, Mr. Trump publicly acknowledged the severity of the threat. Reading from a teleprompter in a primetime address on all major television networks – an event ordinarily reserved for national crises such as this – he spoke soberly and credibly of concern, caution and hope. He did not acknowledge his errors (other presidents likely would not have done so either); nor did he map a medical response plan (other presidents might have). Unusually, he did not blame the Democrats or the media for anything, but rather urged the nation to "put politics aside" and to "stop the partisanship." He also announced (in general terms) a number of measures he planned to take to provide financial assistance to individuals and businesses that were negatively affected by the pandemic. In addition, as the CDC had done (somewhat belatedly) before him, he cautioned seniors and those seriously ill against air travel and large gatherings.

Mr. Trump did, however, remain true to himself. First, he used the occasion to flog rather than support other countries, at a time when the world should have been pulling together. Specifically:

- He attributed the pandemic to a "foreign virus." He blamed Europeans for having infected Americans. And he announced a broad ban on travel to the U.S. from Europe – not in itself a bad move, but one seemingly predicated at the time as much on popular xenophobia and facile political wins as on science.
- He boasted of U.S. medical expertise in comparison to that of other countries. He assured that the U.S. would best other countries in our medical response to the pandemic. He claimed to have acted swiftly and robustly in having stopped in-bound Chinese travel some weeks previous. But he was silent as to the actual slackness of his administration's response compared to that of some other countries, including with respect to the still ponderous roll-out of testing capabilities, and the apparently gross inadequacy of hospital facilities here.
- He expressed no sympathy for America's allies or for other peoples of the world, and no sadness over the many deaths that were occurring elsewhere.

In sum, even at that dire moment, Mr. Trump seemed incapable of rallying his American audience without crowing about his achievements, obfuscating his shortcomings, and leaning on themes of division and ethno-nationalist resentment. In a formal statement, the European Union expressed exasperation. It had not been consulted before the travel ban. A prominent global health scientist said that the U.S. response to the pandemic was "among the very worst in the world."

Second, Mr. Trump made two significant errors in his address. He said that all travel and cargo from Europe to the U.S. would be banned. In fact the plan, as subsequently confirmed by the Department of Homeland Security, was to allow American citizens and green card holders to travel, and to not restrict cargo. He also stated broadly that private health insurance would cover all coronavirus-related costs, when that had not been agreed to by the insurers.

Third, critics on both the left and the right found the address to be missing what should have been its core: the statement of a specific plan to halt the spread of the virus and to save the economy from recession. In apparent reaction, the next day the American stock markets plunged even further, suffering their biggest one-day loss in history. State and municipal governments, businesses and schools were left to fend for themselves – which they did, by announcing their own solutions relative to closings and attendance.<sup>98</sup>

Mr. Trump announced that the new travel ban would not touch the U.K. or Ireland. Notably, those were the only European countries in which Mr. Trump owned (struggling) resort properties.<sup>99</sup>

Panic ensued at foreign airports. Public health critics harshly denounced the speech, for its emphasis on foreign threats and its weakness on domestic planning.<sup>100</sup>

Contrary to his plea for non-partisanship, within hours Mr. Trump falsely attacked Democratic presidential contender Joe Biden on grounds of the latter's response to an earlier epidemic.<sup>101</sup>

In a televised address on March 13, after praising his own response to the crisis, Mr. Trump declared a national emergency. He was surrounded by staff and supporters who lavished him with praise before the cameras, and with whom he convivially shook hands and patted backs -- contrary to public health warnings. He criticized House Democrats relative to ongoing negotiations for an emergency coronavirus spending bill. He waffled about whether he himself would be getting tested himself, given that he had been personally exposed to several coronavirus carriers. He vastly overstated the progress of Google in developing a website for coronavirus tracking. In response to reporters' questions, he expressly declined to take responsibility for the slow roll-out of emergency virus testing, and he claimed to have no knowledge of the previous dissolution, under his administration, of the White House unit tasked with pandemic response.<sup>102</sup>

As of that date, getting tested for the coronavirus was still impossible for many or most people, notwithstanding Mr. Trump's assurance five days earlier that anyone who wished could be tested.<sup>103</sup>

The Post reported that the Trump administration's "zigzagging, defensive, inconsistent messages" about the pandemic had continued through the March 13 press appearance, thus "breaking almost every rule" in the CDC's manual on public communication. The manual, composed after the 2001 anthrax scare, called for the government to speak "early, accurately and credibly" about public health dangers. The report concluded that Mr. Trump had squandered "the most powerful weapon officials possess: Public trust."

On March 14, The Post reported on the White House's response to the pandemic: with "infighting and blame-shifting, misinformation and missteps, and a slow recognition of the danger. Warring factions have wrestled for control internally and for approval from a president who has been preoccupied with the beating his image is taking."<sup>104</sup>

On March 14, the White House ordered that British and Irish nationals would also be barred from coming to the U.S.<sup>105</sup>

On March 15, a columnist for The Times set forth a comprehensive list of Mr. Trump's attempts to downplay the threat of coronavirus over the previous two months, sometimes through outright falsehoods.<sup>106</sup> On the same day, Mr. Trump told reporters that he had "tremendous control" of the virus.<sup>107</sup> And in response to a reporter's question on March 16 about how he would rate his response to the outbreak on a scale of 1 to 10, he said, "I'd rate it a 10. I think we've done a great job."<sup>108</sup>

On March 16, the Trump administration finally issued discretionary social distancing guidelines, including sheltering at home and avoiding gatherings of more than 10 people.<sup>109</sup> In the weeks that followed, the governors of most states issued mandatory orders along similar lines, and they ordered non-essential businesses to curtail public-facing operations.

On March 17, Mr. Trump escalated his criticism of China's government for having reacted slowly to the virus when it had first appeared there – thus, CSD feared, beginning to shift all blame for American suffering to that country, and positioning himself as the “wartime” president that he now claimed to be.<sup>110</sup>

Also on that date, after by now having followed the lead of House Democrats to announce a broad and robust crisis response, Mr. Trump falsely told reporters that he had not changed his views as to the seriousness of the crisis at all. Rather, he said, he had always acknowledged the threat of a devastating pandemic, and that his administration had made no mistakes in handling it.<sup>111</sup>

But his followers didn’t get that. The results of an NPR poll published on March 17 indicated that only 40% of Republicans believed that the coronavirus threat was real, down from 72% in February.<sup>112</sup> That skepticism appeared to be the direct result of Mr. Trump’s previous denial of the threat. In CSD’s view, if the grass roots skeptics were to fail to adhere to the behavioral cautions that Mr. Trump had now belatedly issued, they would directly and materially endanger themselves, the country and the world.

At a news conference on March 18, Mr. Trump defended his pointed and repeated use of the term “Chinese virus” in recent days. He also falsely accused the Chinese government of failing to timely alert the U.S. to the disease, and falsely claimed that the pandemic could not have been anticipated but instead had “snuck up on us.” He amplified the attacks on China the next day.<sup>113</sup> That rhetoric coincided with incidents of racial intimidation against Chinese citizens in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania and elsewhere.<sup>114</sup> By March 31, reported attacks in the U.S. against Asians on account of the coronavirus had reached 100 per day.<sup>115</sup>

On March 19, The Times reported that, based on emergency simulation exercises conducted several years earlier, the Trump administration had had ample warning of America’s vulnerability to a potential pandemic, and had chosen to ignore it.<sup>116</sup> On March 20, The Post reported that U.S. intelligence agencies were issuing alarms about the specific coronavirus threat (not just pandemics generally) in January and February, and that Mr. Trump had ignored those alarms.<sup>117</sup> CSD offers these observations not because the administration had gravely erred – all administrations gravely err in at least something, even amid national and international crises – but because of Mr. Trump’s false claims that the pandemic could not have been anticipated. In addition, to that date, according to The Post’s editorial board and others, Mr. Trump was still dithering in not ordering the emergency production and distribution of face masks, ventilators and other disease-fighting materiel under the Defense Production Act (DPA).<sup>118</sup> Instead, on March 21, Mr. Trump blamed the Obama administration, which was three years gone, for the shortages.<sup>119</sup>

At news conferences on both March 19 and March 20, Mr. Trump touted the promise of existing drug products, such as the anti-malarial hydroxychloroquine, for potential off-label application to treating the coronavirus – even as ranking public health officials, almost contemporaneously, said that absent extensive field testing – for medical efficacy and for negative side effects – there was nothing yet to tout.<sup>120</sup> (Shortages of the drugs for even their approved uses were already arising.<sup>121</sup>) He also attacked several prominent reporters for questioning the accuracy of his statements and the purported success of his emergency measures.<sup>122</sup>

On March 20, The Times reported that although Mr. Trump's reelection campaign had by now canceled in-person rallies and fundraising events, the media operations of the campaign were continuing: insulting Democrats, portraying an America made great again by Mr. Trump, being silent about the coronavirus – all as though the country were not in crisis. Critics noted that with Mr. Trump's tens of millions of social media followers and his vast email lists, he could be reaching out to caution on personal safety during the pandemic, but that he was not doing so.<sup>123</sup>

Also on March 20, Mr. Trump, through the CDC, ordered a virtually complete closure of the Mexican border to asylum seekers, likely contrary to international law.<sup>124</sup>

On March 21, two leading reporters from The Times reflected on Mr. Trump's overall response to the coronavirus:

“Mr. Trump is no stranger to crisis. He has spent a lifetime grappling with bankruptcy, fending off creditors, evading tax collectors, defending lawsuits, deflecting regulators, spinning reporters and dueling with estranged wives, usually coming out ahead, at least as he defines it. But these were crises of his own creation involving human adversaries he knew how to confront. Nothing in his background in business, entertainment or multiple marriages prepared him for the coronavirus pandemic now threatening America's health and wealth.

“Mr. Trump's performance on the national stage in recent weeks has put on display the traits that Democrats and some Republicans consider so jarring — the profound need for personal praise, the propensity to blame others, the lack of human empathy, the penchant for rewriting history, the disregard for expertise, the distortion of facts, the impatience with scrutiny or criticism. For years, skeptics expressed concern about how he would handle a genuine crisis threatening the nation, and now they know. ...

“‘We've done a fantastic job from just about every standpoint,’ he said Tuesday. ‘We've done a great job,’ he said Wednesday. ‘We've done a phenomenal job on this,’ he said Thursday. ...

“The White House rejects any criticism of the president as illegitimate. ‘This great country has been faced with an unprecedented crisis, and while the Democrats and the media shamelessly try and destroy this president with a coordinated, relentless, biased political assault, President Trump has risen to fight this crisis head-on by taking aggressive historic action to protect the health, wealth and well-being of the American people,’ Hogan Gidley, a White House spokesman, said in a statement.”<sup>125</sup>

Similarly, a Times columnist wrote of one of Mr. Trump's recent press conferences:

“[T]his is the footage historians will be looking at 100 years from now — the president rambling on incoherently, vainly, angrily, deceitfully ....”<sup>126</sup>

Another Times reporter wrote, of Mr. Trump's radical distancing of the U.S. from leading a global response:

“As the coronavirus crisis escalates across the globe, the United States is stepping back ..., abandoning its longtime role as a generous global leader able to coordinate an ambitious, multinational response to a worldwide emergency.

“During both the economic meltdown in 2008 and the Ebola crisis of 2014, the United States assumed the role of global coordinator of responses — sometimes imperfectly, but with the acceptance and gratitude of its allies and even its foes.

“In 2003, President George W. Bush established a program, the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, that has provided as much as $90 billion and is considered the largest single effort against a single disease. It is credited for saving many thousands of lives in Africa alone.

“But the United States is not taking those kinds of steps today.

“‘There is from President Trump’s America a selfishness that is new,’ said Jan Techau, a senior fellow at the German Marshall Fund in Berlin. While all nations act to protect themselves, he said, the United States traditionally saw that responsibility as having a broader reach.

“With Mr. Trump’s unembellished nationalism and slogan of ‘America First,’ his efforts to blame first China and then Europe for the coronavirus, and his various misstatements of fact, ‘it means that America no longer serves the planet,’ Mr. Techau said.

“‘America was always strong on self-interest but it has been very generous,’ he said. ‘That generosity seems to be gone, and that’s bad news for the world.’”<sup>127</sup>

During a press conference about the coronavirus on March 22, when told by reporters that Senator Mitt Romney had placed himself in isolation pending a test for the disease, Mr. Trump sneered at Romney’s possible demise. (Since Romney had voted to convict Mr. Trump of one of the two impeachment charges in early February, Mr. Trump had demonized him.) Mr. Trump also complained that his having become president had cost him “billions and billions” in business opportunities – he made the statement four times – while coronavirus patients were dying, health care teams were risking their lives, and the much more modest life savings of countless Americans were being at least temporarily crippled by the stock market’s continuing tumble.<sup>128</sup> Also, for the third straight briefing session, he blamed the Obama administration for the country’s present peril.<sup>129</sup>

As The Post reported that day, the substance of Mr. Trump’s crisis response, continuing through that briefing, had “sparked uproar and alarm among governors and mayors.” For example, he had claimed to have “invoked” the DPA to compel manufacturers to produce and to optimally distribute needed materiel, but under pressure from business interests he had done little under the statute to actually exercise the invocation. He had claimed that major auto makers had committed to produce some of the materiel, yet they had not done that so far. He purported to be a “wartime president,” but he placed the burden of procurement response primarily on the various states. And he had reacted to criticisms “with a torrent of soaring boasts and searing grievances,” per The Post, which wrote: “[T]he growing gulf between the White House and officials on the front lines of the pandemic underscored concerns in cities, states and Congress that Trump does not have a coherent or ready plan to mobilize private and public entities to confront a crisis that could soon push the nation's health-care system to the brink of collapse." Politico reported similarly. The Times reported on the dire confusion about production and distribution, from the manufacturers' viewpoint, stating that Mr. Trump was "avoiding taking personal responsibility for how fast the acute shortages of personal protective gear and lifesaving equipment are addressed."<sup>130</sup>

On March 24, Mr. Trump expressed hope to reporters that the partial lock-down of the country, especially the self-isolation of seniors, could end by Easter – that is, by April 12 – for the good of the economy. He said that he disagreed with his public health advisors about the need for the current restrictions, and that he had only acquiesced to their urgings (on March 16) so as to avoid public criticism. In passing, he asserted wildly inaccurate medical data, and he bashed Democratic leaders – having only days earlier said, while reading his speechwriters' words from a teleprompter, that the country's response must be non-partisan. Epidemiologists, governors, Democrats and the mainstream media expressed outrage, claiming that relaxing the restrictions at that time had no support in scientific data and could be medically catastrophic.<sup>131</sup>

One report cited the losses that Mr. Trump's own hotel businesses were experiencing as fueling a possible motive for his eagerness to re-open commerce and consumer spending.<sup>132</sup>

As of the date of his statements, Mr. Trump had also continued more generally to wrestle with his top public health officials – publicly sugar-coating their findings and attempting to draw them onto his side in partisan political squabbles.<sup>133</sup>

CSD notes that Mr. Trump's "hope" for an Easter opening was not inappropriate or damaging in and of itself: everyone could (and in the abstract, probably should) "hope" for a timely return to commercial and economic normalcy. Further, in proposing the Easter opening, Mr. Trump may have simply been testing the waters politically, as he often had done when floating controversial ideas (such as clemency for convicted criminals). Or he might have been attempting to establish a record upon which he could blame others for America's economic losses to come – that is, that he had been the champion of economic normalcy while others had dawdled. But in effect, he was resurrecting his original trivialization of the disease and of its scientific evaluation, even as the pandemic was mushrooming in the U.S. His media supporters followed in lock-step, and he likewise followed them;<sup>134</sup> right-wing pundits had begun attacking Fauci<sup>135</sup>; and Fauci shortly began receiving (human) threats to his personal safety.<sup>136</sup> Mr. Trump's other highly visible experts had meanwhile taken to flattering him publicly in order to protect themselves;<sup>137</sup> his polling numbers ticked upwards to record highs as he conducted daily televised briefings, however ill-informed and reckless some of his statements in those briefings were;<sup>138</sup> and in all, CSD and other observers believed that he had quickly reverted to playing a perilous game of arrogance, ignorance, denial, narcissism, self-puffery and self-interest with millions of American lives.<sup>139</sup>

A columnist from The Post subsequently revealed that Mr. Trump had expressed his "Easter" hope only moments after the head of his Washington hotel had tweeted a video promoting a spectacular, upcoming Easter celebration there.<sup>140</sup>

After Senator Romney announced on March 25 that he had tested negative for the coronavirus, Mr. Trump again, in a new tweet, appeared to wish Romney ill.<sup>141</sup> He also targeted Joe Biden, Adam Schiff and Robert Mueller with mocking tweets, while boasting about his own poll numbers.<sup>142</sup>

Also on March 25, Politico reported that a 69-page National Security Council playbook on how to respond to a pandemic had actually been in place prior to the spread of the coronavirus, having been written in 2016 after the 2014-2015 Ebola epidemic had stricken Africa. When the coronavirus arrived, the Trump administration apparently ignored the document, including many of its action points that have since, in their breach, proven to have been essential for mounting an early and effective response.<sup>143</sup> The Department of Homeland Security under Mr. Trump had also wound down its simulations of pandemic response.<sup>144</sup> On March 31, The Times reported on a September 2019 study by White House economists warning that a pandemic could kill half a million Americans and devastate the economy.<sup>145</sup> All of this was in addition to the Trump administration having removed the National Security Council's pandemic response expert (as described above in this Addendum), and having generated and sustained widespread vacancies and inexperience at the top of agencies that would ultimately be tasked with pieces of the coronavirus response: DHS, the Pentagon, the National Park Service, the FDA, Veterans Affairs and the IRS.<sup>146</sup>

Still on March 25, Mr. Trump's reelection campaign threatened to sue television stations for airing a political advertisement that superimposed Mr. Trump's spoken statements downplaying the crisis upon a graph showing the rising tide of infections.<sup>147</sup>

By March 26, the U.S. had recorded over 80,000 coronavirus cases – the largest number for any country in the world – and over 1000 deaths.<sup>148</sup>

On March 27, Mr. Trump signed into law a strongly bipartisan congressional bill, the CARES Act, directing the spending of over $2 trillion on the country's coronavirus response (most of it to be directed toward economic stabilization) – legislation that Congress, not the White House, had led, and that dwarfed his own earlier request for a mere $1 billion response. He personally took credit for some of the Democrats' provisions; but he excluded Democrats from the signing ceremony – again shunning his earlier condemnation of partisanship amid the crisis. Shortly after signing the bill, he issued a “signing statement” pursuant to which he expressed his intention to defy the bill's provisions for congressional oversight of the spending, thus keeping for himself – and, many in Congress believed, for his personal and political benefit – the power to choose winners and losers among the funds' distributees.<sup>149</sup> That is, he seemingly sought, in the thick of the crisis, an opportunity to grasp not only authoritarian powers, but possibly personal gain. (See also CSD's April 3 entry in the first part of this Addendum, relating to inspectors general and oversight.)

Just as disturbingly, the CARES Act included $170 in tax benefits for real estate developers and certain types of investors – a provision that would likely, and handsomely, benefit Mr. Trump, his son-in-law Jared Kushner, and their developer friends.<sup>150</sup>

Also on March 27, Mr. Trump called – at least rhetorically – for his administration not to communicate with the governors of Washington and Michigan because they had not expressed sufficient appreciation for his coronavirus response efforts.<sup>151</sup> Michigan’s governor then claimed that emergency equipment vendors appeared to be boycotting her state.<sup>152</sup> The next day Mr. Trump relented. But a columnist from The Times disturbingly observed that Mr. Trump’s demand for appreciation from governors in exchange for coronavirus assistance, during an election year for Mr. Trump, evoked a comparison with his demand in 2019 that Ukraine’s president Volodymyr Zelensky smear Joe Biden’s competing presidential bid in exchange for delivering military assistance.<sup>153</sup>

Likewise on March 27, several news journals reported that Mr. Trump was seeking to have his own signature appear on the $1200 relief checks to be mailed to most Americans under the $2 trillion CARES Act.<sup>154</sup> That report followed the mass mailing to Americans of CDC postcards calling for social distancing and featuring the prominent headline, “President Trump’s Coronavirus Guidelines for America.”<sup>155</sup> Unlike some critics of the administration, CSD had given Mr. Trump and the CDC the benefit of the doubt on the postcard, believing that Mr. Trump’s endorsement could well convince his followers and other coronavirus skeptics to abide by social distancing; but we had no doubt about the authoritarian and political (reelection) motives behind the idea for the relief check signature. On April 14, Mr. Trump ordered that the checks bear his printed name in the memorandum space – the first time that a president’s name had appeared on IRS checks. (By law Mr. Trump’s actual signature could not appear – he was not an authorized signatory.) He told reporters, “I’m sure people will be very happy to get a big, fat, beautiful check and my name is on it.”<sup>156</sup> That is, he was frankly seeking to portray a congressionally conceived distribution of taxpayer money as his personal gift to Americans. But, likely seeking to avoid a disruption of the scheme by critics, he had kept the plan secret until just before the issuance of the checks.<sup>157</sup>

On March 29, Mr. Trump, in a press conference, withdrew his March 24 “hope” that federal social distancing guidelines could terminate by Easter; he extended those guidelines to at least the end of April; and he acknowledged the staggering number of American lives that were at risk from the virus.<sup>158</sup> That change of heart presumably resulted from the clamor raised by governors of both parties, the mainstream press, Democrats in Congress, and – especially, and blessedly – the scientists on his coronavirus task force. But ever the one to boast, Mr. Trump said that if coronavirus-related deaths remained under 200,000, “we all together have done a very good job.”<sup>159</sup> He did not note, however, that China – a vastly larger country, and the country where the pandemic had begun – had thus far (accurately or inaccurately) reported only 3300 deaths. Nor did he note that 200,000 was a multiple of the 58,000 Americans who had died in the Vietnam War. Nor did he speculate as to whether his own delay and denial had caused the projected death toll to be so large.

The change of heart also did not stop Mr. Trump from boasting about his television ratings, on multiple occasions, on the same day as the press conference.<sup>160</sup>

On March 30, Mr. Trump showcased his coronavirus response by holding a press conference with fawning corporate executives on the White House lawn. One of the executives (a well-known television salesman of bedding products) said that Mr. Trump was “the greatest president in history,” who had brought America back to God. When a CNN reporter confronted Mr. Trump with his previous mistaken predictions that the coronavirus outbreak was under control, Mr. Trump upbraided the reporter and said, “It’s almost a miracle the way it’s all come together.”<sup>161</sup>

Also on March 30, Mr. Trump told governors on a conference call that he had not heard any concerns about insufficient coronavirus testing resources “in weeks.” In fact the governors had been pleading for better testing resources continuously. He also said, “We’ve tested more now than any nation in the world,” ignoring the fact that per capita the U.S. had tested far fewer of its citizens than had some other countries. He also projected that the U.S. would soon have manufactured a surplus of ventilators, implicitly defying the universal panic among public health officials of imminent shortages of the devices. “I think we’re going to be in very good shape,” he said.<sup>162</sup>

As of March 31, state governors were still pleading for emergency medical equipment from federal stockpiles. Only Florida, a state with a Republican governor who was friendly with Mr. Trump, and a must-win swing state for Mr. Trump’s November reelection, had had its requests satisfied in full.<sup>163</sup>

At a news conference on March 31, Mr. Trump acknowledged that coronavirus deaths in the U.S. would likely reach at least 100,000 to 240,000. But he profusely praised his own response to the pandemic, on grounds of his earlier Chinese and European travel bans, and on grounds of his having taken action to avert fully millions of U.S. deaths. He claimed to be “way ahead of schedule” in mitigating the disaster, and to be “getting very high marks” for his success – as though a mere 100,000 or 240,000 deaths should be considered a victory. (The U.S. sustained 291,000 combat deaths in World War II.) In response to a reporter’s question about his having earlier downplayed the threat, he said that he had always known of the peril, but that he was a “cheerleader” and a “positive person” bound to giving Americans “hope.” He disparaged a number of Democratic political figures, including on grounds that they had been slow to respond to the pandemic. When asked whether the recent impeachment proceedings had distracted him from attending to the threat, he launched into a rant about the “illegal” and “disgraceful” impeachment which, he said, had amounted to a “hoax.” He said he was “getting A-pluses” for how he had handled himself during the “phony” impeachment, which he said was “a tribute to me.”<sup>164</sup>

Also on March 31, The Post’s Fact Checker described a new Trump campaign video laden with clips of Democrats, mainstream journalists and public health officials seemingly praising Mr. Trump’s response to the pandemic. In fact all of those speakers had reviled Mr. Trump’s response; the clips had been taken utterly and appallingly out of context.<sup>165</sup>

As of April 1, more than 210,000 Americans had been infected by the coronavirus, and over 4600 had died – more than twice the number of U.S. service members who had been killed in Afghanistan. Although Mr. Trump had come to take the pandemic seriously, he continued to resist calls by governors, Democrats and the mainstream media to assert his authority under the DPA to direct manufacturers in producing and efficiently distributing needed medical equipment. And although governors of 38 states had directed their residents to shelter in place, 12 – all of them leading states that had voted for Mr. Trump in 2016 – had not done so, and Mr. Trump resisted widespread calls to direct or encourage them to do so. To the latter point, Mr. Trump told reporters on April 1 that states with few known coronavirus cases could be safe and should be free to determine their own course – an approach with which none of his senior public health advisors appeared to agree.<sup>166</sup> Yet in what was now his daily press briefing, he managed to boast that he had become “number one [in popularity] on Facebook.”<sup>167</sup> It was difficult for CSD not to conclude that Mr. Trump was still playing to some of his perceived political constituencies rather than to science and the nation’s welfare; that is, the play seemed to be among a confederacy of science deniers.

Tweeting on April 2, Mr. Trump blamed states and governors for not having stocked up on emergency supplies prior to the pandemic, and he chided them as complainers.<sup>168</sup> He also falsely claimed that he was early among nations in banning in-bound travel from China, and he falsely implied that that ban had been categorical (some 40,000 Americans and others had been allowed to enter the U.S. from China despite the ban).<sup>169</sup>

Also on April 2, Vice President Mike Pence announced that Mr. Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner would coordinate private sector enterprises in the government’s coronavirus response. Kushner had no background in public health, manufacture, distribution or emergency operations. As a businessman, he was also positioned to direct contracts in a manner through which he could personally profit in the future. He immediately sparked controversy by disclaiming the federal government’s obligation to share its Strategic National Stockpile of medical equipment with states.<sup>170</sup>

On April 3, Mr. Trump announced to reporters that the CDC had advised the public to wear masks when leaving home. But he repeatedly stressed that the advice was voluntary and that he himself would not be following it.<sup>171</sup>

Also on April 3, Mr. Trump announced that he would nominate White House lawyer Brian Miller as the inspector general for the new, multi-trillion dollar coronavirus relief program. Democrats had taken pains in the legislation to protect the funds against self-dealing on the part of Mr. Trump and his family. The appointment of Miller, a man who had zealously defended Mr. Trump during his impeachment, appeared to jeopardize that protection.<sup>172</sup> (See again CSD’s entry of April 3 + in the first part of this Addendum, relating to inspectors general.)

In the aggregate, as of that date, when 40,000 Europeans had already died from the virus and 1,000 Americans had died in a single day,<sup>173</sup> Mr. Trump still was blaming others (states, hospitals, his predecessors) for the shortfalls of medical equipment in the U.S. He was also denying his prior downplaying of the threat; declining to order individuals to stay at home or wear protective masks, expressly deferring to their preferences as to whether to do so; deferring to and placing responsibility on governors relative to the wearing of masks, social distancing, business closures and other matters; speculating chaotically about medicine and confusing large swathes of the population in the process; and dithering in fully deploying the DPA to force the production and domestic distribution of equipment. At the same time he was claiming nightly on television that history had never seen a crisis response as strong as his own, and haranguing reporters for reminding him of the truth.<sup>174</sup>

On April 4, The Post recapped in detail and at length how the Trump administration had bungled and delayed its response to the pandemic for over two months, thus likely becoming responsible for untold suffering.<sup>175</sup> Susan Rice, who had been President Obama’s national security advisor, made similar observations in The Times on April 7.<sup>176</sup>

On April 5, Mr. Trump again publicly encouraged the use of the anti-malarial drug hydroxychloroquine as a treatment for coronavirus, and in that regard he asked his television audience rhetorically, “What do you have to lose?” He also announced that the federal government was stockpiling the drug. The American Medical Association, Mr. Trump’s top public health advisors and many other medical professionals agreed that hydroxychloroquine might well prove effective; and various U.S. hospitals and foreign governments were already deploying it to treat the coronavirus. But absent systematic and methodical testing of the drug for that off-label application, medical experts cautioned that patients could die, and they expressly declined to endorse its use for coronavirus. Indeed, it appeared to be Mr. Trump’s political advisors and Fox News personalities who were urging him to promote the drug.<sup>177</sup>

At the April 5 news conference, Mr. Trump also attacked Illinois’ Democratic Governor J.B. Pritzger for criticizing the federal pandemic response, as he had previously criticized the Democratic governors of New York and Michigan. Among other things, he accused Pritzger of “complaining all the time” – surely one of Mr. Trump’s own favorite pastimes.<sup>178</sup>

As noted in the first part of this Addendum relative to Mr. Trump’s campaign against inspectors general (see the entry of April 3 +), on April 6, at a press briefing, Mr. Trump angrily disparaged a report by the office of the inspector general for the Department of Health and Human Services. The report had documented the insufficiency of equipment at many hospitals in the face of the coronavirus pandemic. Mr. Trump supplied no evidence to rebut the report, but he appeared to threaten or intimidate the author of the report, insinuating that the report was politically motivated against him.<sup>179</sup>

Also as noted above with regard to inspectors general, on April 7 Mr. Trump removed Glenn Fine, the Pentagon’s acting inspector general and the lead among 10 inspectors general who were tasked with overseeing the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee. That committee had been created by Congress days earlier to limit fraud and mismanagement relative to the government’s new $2 trillion dollar coronavirus response and economic stabilization law, the CARES Act.<sup>180</sup>

Also on April 7, Mr. Trump threatened to de-fund the World Health Organization, blaming the organization for the types of failures he himself had committed, and seeking to deflect some of his own faulty coronavirus response to the organization relative to its weak oversight of China’s delayed disease reporting. Mr. Trump was by no means alone in criticizing the WHO for its coronavirus failures. But his hypocrisy and scapegoating were distinctive.<sup>181</sup> As of April 10, he was reportedly still pursuing some sort of radical action against the organization – an action which, if taken at that time, was seen as likely to threaten worldwide coronavirus response efforts and to enable China to take over the organization.<sup>182</sup>

Still on April 7, as noted above in the March 30 + entry in the first part of this Addendum, on the topic of voter suppression, Mr. Trump fiercely criticized the swelling advocacy movement to facilitate mail-in voting for all 50 states for the upcoming November general election. Mail-in voting was seen by Democrats and many others as a means to encourage voting during periods of coronavirus social distancing. But like some Republican governors and legislatures across the country, Mr. Trump had sought to actually depress the vote, and he now expressly said (as he had done before) that broader voting would be bad for Republican candidates. And he said it yet again on Twitter, the following day. In fact the Wisconsin legislature (with its Republican majority), as supported by both the Wisconsin and U.S. Supreme Courts (both with Republican majorities), had refused to delay Wisconsin's April 7 primary election, even while citizens were under a statewide stay-at-home order. At stake in that election was a Democratic-Republican race for a state supreme court seat, in which Mr. Trump had vocally supported the Republican candidate, and where the winner stood to rule on other Republican-favored measures to suppress voting. Wisconsin thus became the only state to hold a primary election that April – all other states with primaries on their calendars for that month had postponed. Those who voted that day in Wisconsin did so with great effort, in long lines, often wearing face masks, and at risk to their lives. The state's Republicans at first appeared to have succeeded: voter turn-out in Milwaukee, a Democratic stronghold, was materially depressed.<sup>183</sup> Remarkably, the Democratic candidate for the judgeship nevertheless won.<sup>184</sup>

Throughout the coronavirus crisis, Mr. Trump had festooned himself with a continuous stream of falsehoods, errors, delusional thinking and braggadocio. On April 8, the Times now added to that pageantry: it characterized his daily press conferences on the coronavirus as exercises in self-contradiction: praising China, then demonizing that country; demanding an investigation of the World Health Organization, then denying that he had done so; lambasting governors, then denying that as well. The reporter speculated that for many Americans, Mr. Trump's incoherent press conferences were their principal source of information on the pandemic.<sup>185</sup>

On April 9, Mr. Trump tweeted that the conservative Wall St. Journal was "Fake News" because it had failed to report on the high television ratings that his press conferences were receiving.<sup>186</sup>

On April 10, media reported that Mr. Trump was pressing to call for governors to reopen business activities by May 1 or sooner, contrary to the advice of medical experts.<sup>187</sup> But whether he truly intended that, or instead was simply positioning himself to blame the "Deep State" for a prolonged recession under the assumption that his expressed wishes wouldn't be heeded, was a matter of conjecture.<sup>188</sup>

On April 10, the White House launched an extraordinary attack on Voice of America, the independent but U.S.-funded media outlet that reaches millions of readers and listeners around the world. The White House was displeased that VOA had compared China's low (albeit questionable) coronavirus mortality statistics with the far higher number in the U.S. – even though VOA's reporting had been consistently critical of China's response to the outbreak and its attendant disinformation campaign.<sup>189</sup> The episode was further evidence of Mr. Trump's positioning himself to scapegoat China for his own problematic performance in the face of the pandemic.

During his April 10 press briefing, Mr. Trump said that he would re-open the economy based on his own judgment, more than on medical or economic metrics. (In truth, re-opening the economy at that point was primarily a state-by-state decision, not his.) He also repeated his frequent misleading assertion that the U.S. was leading the world in testing for the coronavirus, based on the raw number of tests – misleading in that the U.S. lagged other countries in testing per capita.<sup>190</sup>

On April 10, Huffington Post (sometimes referred to in this Chronology as “HuffPost”) reported on the incompetence, chaos, duplicity and corruption at play in Mr. Trump’s management of medical supply procurement. On the one hand, for weeks he had been insisting that states had to procure their own equipment, such as ventilators. But in reality he had sometimes seized states’ procurement orders and deliveries for the federal stockpile. And he appeared to have allocated some of the stockpiled items to states for partisan political gain – that is, to curry favor with their voters and governors.<sup>191</sup> As of April 11, as reported by The Washington Post (commonly referred to in this Chronology as “The Post”), states were still frantically competing against one other and against the federal government in the “cutthroat” global market to procure the scarce equipment that they needed. Some states were having to pay up to 10 times normal prices for the goods.<sup>192</sup> As of April 13, Politico reported similarly; but it speculated (contrary to some other voices) that whether the federal government was sending medical equipment to any particular needy state appeared to turn less on partisan politics than on whether the governor had recently flattered Mr. Trump; on who knew whom within a chain of personal connections; on what topics Mr. Trump had been able to muster his concentration for on a given day; and on the random consequences of the administration’s chronic chaos.<sup>193</sup>

In a related vein, also on April 10, The Post characterized Mr. Trump, rhetorically, as posing as a benevolent monarch in distributing medical equipment and cash payments around the country – as though he was showering the nation with gifts of his own property (as opposed to the taxpayers’ rightful property). The Post also wrote that he had been taking personal credit for the government’s coronavirus response to a far greater degree than previous presidents had done in other emergency situations, and to a far greater degree than was merited. (Congress had negotiated the CARES Act; Democrats, governors and the media had promoted social distancing measures as Mr. Trump had resisted every step of the way; and absent federal direction, governors, industry leaders and scientists were devising the next necessary steps in disease response among themselves.) He now persistently characterized the spending program as the biggest and the best: “[N]obody has ever seen anything like what we’ve done.” He repeatedly called attention to his polling numbers amid the crisis (which in truth were far lower than those of other recent presidents in times of crisis). As for failures, such as the shortages of medical equipment, he continued to blame others. All of this, wrote the Post, was consistent with Mr. Trump’s lifelong addiction to self-promotion – which now seemed to gush, unstoppably, even in a national emergency.<sup>194</sup>

On April 10, a highly partisan but nevertheless compelling video was posted on Twitter, concisely juxtaposing Mr. Trump’s many dismissive statements about the coronavirus threat with the rising numbers of infections and deaths in the U.S. Other similar montages had appeared on network television, and likely on the Internet. CSD considers them to be among the very instructive documents that it has seen on the subject of Mr. Trump and the pandemic, and we commend them to our readers. The particular Twitter posting appears at the link at this end note.<sup>195</sup>

On April 11, The Post reported on the chaos besetting Mr. Trump’s multiple coronavirus response teams: sometimes as between one team and another, but more often as between a team and Mr. Trump himself, whom the teams would struggle to bring to reason, and whose capricious whims they had to waste precious time and energy trying to fend off. The Post’s analysis also decried the absence thus far of clear goals and methods for managing the crisis – that is, after three months from the appearance of the disease, with the government stuck in reactive mode. It also pointed to the jockeying for power, or for Mr. Trump’s favor, among competing response leaders. In all, the report characterized the chaos as not simply that which might normally accompany a sudden crisis of indeterminate solution and international dimension, but as built-in to the Trump administration’s habitual, dizzying dysfunction.<sup>196</sup>

The Times wrote on April 11 of the many instances since late January when Mr. Trump had ignored warnings of the oncoming coronavirus crisis. Driven by antipathy toward the “Deep State,” a desire to placate and later demonize China, a fear of depressing the stock market, a persistent proclivity to filter reality, and “the chaotic culture of the Trump White House” (which was fed by “the rivalries and factionalism that swirl around Mr. Trump”), he had ignored early cautions and action recommendations by the National Security Council, trade adviser Peter Navarro, HHS Secretary Alex Azar, several senators and the country’s top public health experts – until he had finally lurched into action.<sup>197</sup>

On April 12, Fauci told CNN that a stronger early response by the administration to the coronavirus outbreak “could have saved lives,” and that in February he had received “a lot of pushback about shutting things down.” Mr. Trump reacted by retweeting someone else’s call for him to fire Fauci, and by tweet-storming a defense of his own response: emphasizing his partial ban on in-bound travel from China while blaming others for the disease’s spread (China, the WHO, President Obama, governors, Congress, Democrats generally and the news media).<sup>198</sup> But nearly 80% of Republicans appeared to approve and trust Fauci; and following a fierce media storm over the re-tweet, the White House said that Fauci wouldn’t be fired.<sup>199</sup>

On April 13, Mr. Trump tweeted, then stated at length in his daily briefing, that he had “total, unilateral authority to re-open the economy nationally – even though for weeks he had been insisting that, constitutionally, it fell to the states to decide whether to close or to open, as well as to find their own medical equipment.<sup>200</sup> Democrats and the media expressed outrage and incredulity, on constitutional grounds. The claim also was inconsistent with Mr. Trump’s previous claim to not have any responsibility for state-level operations.<sup>201</sup> He thus created more confusion; further undercut his national and international credibility; reaffirmed his belief that he held authoritarian powers; and continued his hypocritical and fraudulent off-loading to others of painful responsibilities (such as closing) while keeping for himself the prerogative to bestow bounty (such as opening). By the following day, several governors had threatened to defy any ill-conceived orders that he might issue to open their economies, and constitutional scholars across the ideological spectrum said that his claim of authority was witless.<sup>202</sup> Several Republican senators and congressmembers objected as well.<sup>203</sup> That evening, on April 14, Mr. Trump walked back the claim.<sup>204</sup>

At the same April 13 press briefing, at taxpayer expense, and possibly in reaction to the April 11 report by The Times on his incompetent coronavirus response, Mr. Trump's staff played a hastily produced, campaign-style video that lauded his leadership through the pandemic, at the same time as criticizing the mainstream press. The video contained little or no footage for the month of February, when infections and dire warnings were mounting and he was dithering; and it did not include his many characterizations of the outbreak during that period as trivial. When a CBS reporter at the briefing pressed him on the February gap and the medical and economic damage that had resulted, he called her and CBS "fake" and "disgraceful," and he mocked what he said were the network's low television ratings.<sup>205</sup>

On April 14, Mr. Trump made good on his threat to suspend funding for the WHO, publicly blasting the organization for having failed to properly investigate the coronavirus as it had begun percolating in China some months earlier; for "covering up" the spread of the disease; and for failing to timely share information. But in truth his administration's staff had been embedded in all of the WHO's pertinent operations; Mr. Trump's top public health advisers were consulting with the WHO in real time; Mr. Trump himself had initially praised China's response, on 12 to 15 separate occasions; and at one point in March he actually claimed that WHO's coronavirus cautions were overstated. He was now plainly and increasingly playing the demagogue's card. Meanwhile the defunding of the WHO raised alarms within the medical community, which feared that that action could horribly impede the fight against the pandemic.<sup>206</sup> A columnist for The Times compellingly described the organization's critical contributions to world health, and Mr. Trump's own failure to heed its coronavirus cautions in late January and February.<sup>207</sup> A Times reporter also recounted the WHO's early cautions.<sup>208</sup> In announcing the funding cut-off, Mr. Trump petulantly said of the WHO, "We have not been treated properly."<sup>209</sup>

On April 15, Politico reported that Mr. Trump had appointed Michael Caputo to serve as the public voice for the Department of Health and Human Services. Caputo was a former protégé of self-proclaimed "dirty trickster," Trump campaign figure and convicted felon Roger Stone, and he was a fierce Trump loyalist who had written a book in Mr. Trump's defense titled The Ukraine Hoax. The new appointment sidelined HHS Secretary Alex Azar, with whom Mr. Trump was unhappy because media had been reporting that Mr. Trump had ignored Azar's early coronavirus warnings.<sup>210</sup>

Also on April 15, Mr. Trump continued to boast of his coronavirus testing program: "[W]e have great tests and we want the states to administer these tests for the most part, but we're standing behind them. We have great tests. We've done more testing now than any country, as you know, in the world by far. We have the best tests of any country in the world. Nobody has the quality of tests." But states were still starving for test kits; testing volume had actually plummeted that week; the U.S. still had tested far few people per capita than had some other countries; and on April 19, even as Mr. Trump continued to defer to states to solve their own testing problems, one governor said, "Every governor in America has been pushing and fighting and clawing to get more tests ... from the federal government ...."<sup>211</sup>

Also on April 15, mass protests against state lock-down laws and in favor of Mr. Trump were staged in the capitals of Michigan, Kentucky and North Carolina. Some of the protesters carried automatic weapons and some carried confederate flags; some carried placards accusing their governors of Nazism; and, contrary to state law, few wore face masks or physically distanced themselves from one another. Referring to Democratic Governor Gretchen Whitmer in Michigan, protesters there chanted “Lock her up!” By any objective measure, the protesters not only flaunted the law, but appeared to have risked their own and others’ lives by congregating and by calling for governmental encouragement of that type of risk-taking. For their rage, their ignorance, their misfeasance, their puerility, their selfishness and their short-sightedness – all cast in their own minds as libertarianism, a devotion to Mr. Trump’s authoritarianism, or (oddly) both – Fox News commentators praised them.<sup>212</sup> Stephen Moore, one of Mr. Trump’s economic advisors and his failed nominee for the Federal Reserve Board, compared the protesters to the legendary civil rights activist Rosa Park.<sup>213</sup> On April 17, as the protests spread to additional states, Mr. Trump praised them as well: he tweeted “LIBERATE MINNESOTA” and “LIBERATE MICHIGAN” and “LIBERATE VIRGINIA, and save your great 2nd Amendment. It is under siege!”<sup>214</sup> (All of those states had Democratic governors.) When asked by a reporter during his daily coronavirus press briefing whether the protesters were being irresponsible for not socially distancing, he responded that they seemed “very responsible.” And when asked whether his own call for revolt was irresponsible, he launched into a defense of the Second Amendment and disparaged Virginia’s governor. In all of that, he was not only contradicting his own administration’s guidance on social distancing, and his own recent acknowledgement of the authority of state governors to determine how to protect their citizens from the pandemic, but he was dividing the American people and even tinkering at the edges of fomenting civil insurrection: a “war president” at war with his own country’s governing authorities.<sup>215</sup> To CSD’s mind – almost inconceivably in a modern democracy – white supremacy, science denial and vigilantism appeared yet again to have converged and flowered under Mr. Trump’s hand. Indeed, judging from photographic and video reporting, CSD found that almost all of the protesters appeared to be white. Fortunately, the vast majority of Americans were not trending in that direction – at least not visibly, and not yet: a Yahoo poll indicated that, unlike Mr. Trump, most were against the protests.<sup>216</sup> But they continued to spread.<sup>217</sup> On April 19, Mr. Trump characterized the protesters as “great people.”<sup>218</sup> And, led by Mr. Trump, a movement to “open” in defiance of all public health warnings was growing as a mainstream (as opposed to fringe) Republican position<sup>219</sup> – itself a previously unimaginable manifestation of the country’s deep cultural and political polarization that he had long stoked.

At the April 17 daily briefing, Vice President Mike Pence firmly and falsely stated that the country had enough coronavirus testing resources such that any state, if it wanted, could safely and immediately begin to re-open its economy. (One governor subsequently said that Pence’s claim was “delusional.”) Later in the show, Mr. Trump, in taking questions from reporters, managed to skewer Democrats at every turn. He said that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi was “on vacation” and “should come back to do her job.” (Congress was in extended recess due to the coronavirus, and its members were working mainly from their homes.) He complained that President Obama had wasted money on the Obamacare online marketplace roll-out and had given a $3.7 million research grant to the laboratory in Wuhan, China that was now being investigated for possibly having allowed the coronavirus to escape. He also boasted about the stock market’s partial recovery since its March 23 low (as though that recovery was assured of continuing), and about the crowd size at his pre-coronavirus rallies.<sup>220</sup>

On the same day, in the face of significant glitches in delivering checks, loans and unemployment benefits to the intended CARES Act recipients, Mr. Trump blew off the problems and advanced his “we’re better than Obama” campaign: faulting his predecessor for previous epidemic deaths and, as above, for the expensive Obamacare website.<sup>221</sup>

Also on April 17, a Post reporter detailed some of the many threats and promises that Mr. Trump had capriciously made and then had not followed through on in connection with the coronavirus crisis: compelling states to reopen, compelling states to close, quarantining the New York metro area, adjourning Congress, opening the country by Easter, labeling regions by risk, not talking to “ungrateful” governors, and more.<sup>222</sup>

By April 17, the U.S. had recorded over 36,000 deaths from the coronavirus.<sup>223</sup>

On April 18, Politico reported that many of Mr. Trump’s supporters had settled upon their principal coronavirus scapegoats: the WHO, Fauci and Bill Gates – the last of whom was the subject of a growing torrent of conspiracy theories.<sup>224</sup> Some also scapegoated China.<sup>225</sup> (For the time, at least, it appeared that they had moved on from scapegoating George Soros, Adam Schiff, Robert Mueller and Hillary Clinton.)

On April 18, The Post reported that although thousands of U.S. hotels had volunteered to house coronavirus medical personnel for free or at reduced rates – to the praise of the White House – none of Mr. Trump’s hotels was known to local authorities to have done so.<sup>226</sup>

At his April 18 press conference, Mr. Trump boasted that his coronavirus response had produced the best outcome in the world other than that of Germany (flatly false) and had saved “billions” of lives (preposterous). He also blamed Democratic governors for having “gotten carried away” with their social distancing orders, for “complaining,” for not doing enough testing, and for deceiving the public about what he claimed was the ample availability of testing materials.<sup>227</sup> He also implied that China may have knowingly or intentionally (that is, not just negligently) released the virus from a laboratory and thus caused the pandemic.<sup>228</sup>

On April 20, Pence repeated his assertion that all states then had enough testing capacity to begin reopening their economies. Georgia’s governor then did so, as coronavirus deaths in the state were still rising daily.<sup>229</sup>

Purporting to have been an early adopter of social distancing, Mr. Trump blithely said at his April 20 press conference that he hadn’t left the White House in months. In truth, he had held six rallies and other campaign events in February and March. He also maintained yet again, that coronavirus testing resources were ample and that governors’ claims to the contrary were partisan.<sup>230</sup>

Late in the evening on April 20, Mr. Trump tweeted that all immigration would be suspended due to “the Invisible Enemy” (a term he didn’t define) and “the need to protect the jobs of our GREAT American Citizens.” At least some of Mr. Trump’s staff, characteristically, appeared to have been blindsided by the announcement, which on its face represented an unprecedented immigration restriction. Among other things, after having (like previous presidents) struggled to shut off illegal immigration, he now, under cover of the national emergency, seemed to seek to broadly shut off legal immigration as well – an extension and amplification of the signature xenophobic theme that had propelled him to the presidency. It was not immediately clear to CSD (and possibly to staff) whether the ban – in addition to visas for permanent residence, such as for family members of U.S. citizens and existing permanent residents – would apply to temporary visas, such as for health care professionals, agricultural workers and students, all of whom are essential to various American economic sectors, and many of whom could not readily be replaced by Americans. It was also unclear whether the ban would apply to inbound travel by already approved prospective immigrants; administering the immigration process for prospective immigrants who were still overseas; administering the immigration process for prospective immigrants who were already in the U.S.; or all of the above. Also unclear was whether the order, when formally issued, would survive the likely legal challenges. But at a minimum, the planning and financial investments of potentially thousands of individuals already in line for legal immigration and for work visas stood to be frustrated – and having little if anything to do with stopping the spread of the coronavirus.<sup>231</sup>

In a disturbing news analysis, on April 20 The Post reported that participants in Mr. Trump’s daily briefings – including at least one of his supporters – had frequently characterized the media events as “surreal.” The Post’s reporters themselves saw the spectacles as continuations of Mr. Trump’s pre-presidential reality television program, his bankruptcy court maneuverings and his sales campaigns for over-priced products. In particular, the reporters wrote, he now hogged the limelight, raged at reporters in a “cage match,” incessantly spewed untruths, boasted, pitied himself, contradicted himself, defied scientific advice, blamed everyone else for the nation’s coronavirus crisis, yet commanded a large viewing audience – to the benefit of his reelection campaign.<sup>232</sup>

On the same day, a Post columnist characterized Mr. Trump’s coronavirus performance somewhat differently, but again based on his history of stiffing his creditors in bankruptcy court: shrewdly risking American lives and even the American economy in a last-ditch, Hail Mary gambit to save himself from electoral defeat.<sup>233</sup>

As of April 21, the U.S. had experienced over 45,000 coronavirus deaths.<sup>234</sup>

Addendum 30 – June 12, 2020

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

The current Addendum appears in two parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular chronology. The second part, beginning on p. 30 chronicles events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic.

Date	Episode	Category
4-22-20	A new model. Reporters without Borders wrote that the U.S. was becoming a world model for hostility toward the news media, and that under Mr. Trump it had come to rank only 45 th among the world's countries for press freedom. <sup>1</sup>	1
4-22-20 +	A new urge to purge: the coronavirus. On April 22, media reported that Dr. Rick Bright, a top vaccine expert at the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), had been demoted – according to Dr. Bright, for his having contested Mr. Trump's promotion of the antimalarial drug hydroxychloroquine as a miracle prophylaxis for Covid-19. <sup>2</sup> On May 5, Dr. Bright filed a whistleblower complaint in which he alleged that he had also been targeted for objecting to having been pressured to place lucrative procurement contracts with administration cronies. <sup>3</sup> On May 8, the Office of Special Counsel, a permanent federal watchdog, found that Dr. Bright's demotion may have been retaliatory and thus unlawful, and it recommended that he be temporarily reinstated pending an investigation. <sup>4</sup> [ Continued below. ]	8, 9, 16

4-22-20 +	[Continued.] Separately, after business hours on a Friday evening, May 1, the White House announced that Mr. Trump would nominate a new inspector general for HHS. The appointee would effectively operate to replace Christi Grimm, the HHS deputy inspector general who in April had angered Mr. Trump by her report about equipment shortages and testing delays at hospitals amid the coronavirus. That development followed a broad purging of inspectors general and other officials whom Mr. Trump had considered to have been disloyal to him in connection with his Ukraine scandal and his impeachment, as detailed above in this Chronology.<sup>5</sup>	8, 9, 16
4-22-20	The real motive. Mr. Trump signed an order temporarily suspending certain elements of the U.S.'s immigration program that had long enabled citizens and permanent residents to seek permanent residence visas for some of their close relatives overseas. The order also temporarily suspended permanent immigration visas for most foreigners pursuing specific employment opportunities here. The order nevertheless was a far cry from Mr. Trump's hysterical and xenophobic but cryptic tweet on April 20 that he was suspending all immigration due to the coronavirus pandemic (See CSD's April 20 entry in Addendum 29): he did not suspend all immigration, and the order identified protection of American jobs (not the coronavirus) as its motive.<sup>6</sup> Indeed, as subsequently revealed in a leaked audio of a private address given by his anti-immigration aide Stephen Miller, the temporary order was a cover for, and a beginning of a move toward, an endeavor to permanently and comprehensively shrink legal immigration.<sup>7</sup> But, CSD believed, the initial tweet likely advanced Mr. Trump's purpose of sowing anti-foreigner panic in an election year. And the final order appeared certain to be challenged in court, as exceeding Mr. Trump's executive authority relative to congressionally enacted immigration laws.	6, 9
4-24-20	Bring me my cadets! Media widely reported that Mr. Trump had ordered West Point to call back its graduating cadets from their homes so that he could address them in person and with pomp at a graduation ceremony. They had been sent home early from school because of the coronavirus, and the order now appeared both to place their health at risk and to direct the wasting of taxpayer dollars on the arrangements, all for the sake of Mr. Trump's reelection campaign.<sup>8</sup>	9, 10, 11

4-26-20	Twitter rants. In the midst of the coronavirus crisis, Mr. Trump yet again revealed his obsessions with himself, with media ratings, and with his view of particular media outlets as his partisan friends or enemies. On April 26, he dispatched over a dozen tweets along those lines.<sup>9</sup> For example, he ranted against his mostly favorite network, Fox News, possibly for having criticized his suggestion that disinfectant injections could cure Covid-19: "@FoxNews just doesn't get what's happening! They are being fed Democrat talking points, and they play them without hesitation or research. They forgot that Fake News @CNN &amp; MSDNC [MSNBC] wouldn't let @FoxNews participate, even a little bit, in the poor ratings Democrat Debates. ...No respect for the people running @FoxNews. But Fox keeps on plugging to try and become politically correct. They put RINO Paul Ryan on their Board. They hire 'debate questions to Crooked Hillary' fraud @donnabrazile (and others who are even worse). Chris Wallace is nastier to Republicans than even Deface the Nation or Sleepy Eyes [Chuck Todd]. The people who are watching @FoxNews, in record numbers (thank you President Trump), are angry. They want an alternative now. So do I!"<sup>10</sup> Offering up additional views on the media, mistaking the Pulitzer prize for the Nobel Prize, and misspelling the Nobel, Mr. Trump tweeted: "When will all of the 'reporters' who have received Noble Prizes for their work on Russia, Russia, Russia, only to have been proven totally wrong (and, in fact, it was the other side who committed the crimes), be turning back their cherished "Nobles" so that they can be given to the REAL REPORTERS &amp; JOURNALISTS who got it right. I can give the Committee a very comprehensive list. When will the Noble Committee DEMAND the Prizes back, especially since they were gotten under fraud? The reporters and Lamestream Media knew the truth all along. Lawsuits should be brought against all, including the Fake News Organizations, to rectify this terrible injustice. For all of the great lawyers out there, do we have any takers? When will the Noble Committee Act? Better be fast!"<sup>11</sup> Following the ridicule that those tweets drew, Mr. Trump first claimed to have been misspelling the word Nobel "sarcastically," then he deleted them. 4-26-20	[Continued.] Mr. Trump also tweeted on April 26 that his political adversaries had made “three failed coup attempts” and were planning to steal the 2020 election from him by exaggerating the coronavirus’s devastation.	1, 7, 9
4-28-20	Oh, all that science stuff .... A New York Times news analysis placed Mr. Trump’s continuing conflicts with his public health officials about the science of treating and limiting the spread of Covid-19 within the context of his overall disrespect for science. The journalists wrote that although he had boasted (without foundation) that he had an innate understanding of science, “a disregard for scientific advice has been a defining characteristic of Mr. Trump’s administration.” They pointed to his previous disparagement of vaccines, his claiming that global warming was a Chinese hoax, and his systematic and sometimes explicit ignoring and silencing of scientific inputs while undoing a wide array of environmental protections. <sup>12</sup> CSD has reported on many of the prior episodes; but like The Times, we see merit in posting a reminder of the pattern.	8
4-30-20	The Secret Service, in his service. The Washington Post reported that the Secret Service had paid Mr. Trump’s Washington hotel $33,000 to house its agents who were guarding Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin while he lived there after first being appointed in 2017. <sup>13</sup>	15
4-30-20 +	Doing a Ukraine, in the U.S. On April 30, a columnist for The Washington Post assembled recent instances in which Mr. Trump had attempted or threatened to extort personal political favors in exchange for life-saving executive actions – comparable to his having extorted Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky to announce an investigation of Mr. Trump’s electoral opponent Joe Biden in exchange for releasing life-saving military assistance that Congress had already legislated: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Requiring governors to praise Mr, Trump’s coronavirus response as a condition for receiving critical medical equipment.</li> <li>• Requiring states to re-open their economies amid the pandemic as a condition for assisting them financially.</li> <li>• Requiring states to eliminate sanctuary cities protection as a condition for assisting them financially. 4-30-20 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Requiring the U.S. Postal Service to raise postage rates on Amazon – a company led by Jeff Bezos, who also owned Mr. Trump’s persistent critic, The Washington Post – as a condition for bailing out the financially distressed service.<sup>14</sup> (On May 6, The Post reported that the Trump administration announced that it would name Louis DeJoy, a top Trump campaign donor with no experience pertinent to USPS, as Postmaster General, and that he was likely to assist in the extortion.<sup>15</sup>)</li> </ul> In similar fashion, on May 20 Mr. Trump threatened via Twitter to “hold up [unspecified] funding” for Michigan and Nevada if their Democratic governors persisted in encouraging mail-in voting. (See also CSD’s May 2 + entry below about election conspiracies.)<sup>16</sup>	9, 16
5-2-20 +	Election conspiracy bleeds into Twitter conspiracy.  Referring to the primarily (but not exclusively) Democrat-led movement to broaden mail-in voting for the November general election, on May 2 Mr. Trump tweeted, “Don’t allow RIGGED ELECTIONS!” The movement saw mail-in voting as a means to encourage voting in the face of the coronavirus pandemic and the associated regimen of social distancing; but Mr. Trump and his supporters portrayed the movement as a plot by Democrats to enable widespread voter fraud. ABC News reported that social media had become rife with similar disinformation campaigns – and that national security experts feared that Russia and other foreign actors could join in and seek to sow civil pandemonium if and when mail-in voting plans were to advance.<sup>17</sup> On May 7, Politico reported that Mr. Trump’s political operation – consisting of the Republican National Committee and the Trump reelection campaign – was spending $20 million to litigate remote voting initiatives.<sup>18</sup> On May 18, The New York Times reported on the Republican Party’s upcoming massive efforts to suppress, and to challenge as fraudulent, Democratic votes in the November general election.<sup>19</sup> On May 20, as noted in CSD’s April 30 entry above about Ukraine-type extortion, Mr. Trump threatened by Twitter to “hold up [unspecified] funding” for Michigan and Nevada if they persisted in encouraging mail-in voting – which he said again (volubly but without evidence) was a recipe for voter fraud.<sup>20</sup> [Continued below.]	4, 9, 11

5-2-20 +	[Continued.] On May 25, Politico reported on the growing concern among Democrats and democracy-watchers that Mr. Trump might contest a loss in the November 2020 election on grounds of (non-existent) fraud and provoke a constitutional crisis by refusing to vacate the White House.<sup>21</sup>  On May 26, The New York Times reported similarly,<sup>22</sup> as did New York magazine.<sup>23</sup> On May 26, increasingly implementing a recent protocol to protect its readers from misinformation, Twitter added fact checks to two of Mr. Trump’s tweets in which he claimed that states’ coronavirus-inspired mail-in voting measures would give rise to massive fraud. He responded by threatening to regulate or even to close Twitter – the very outlet that had propelled and sustained his presidency.<sup>24</sup> On May 28, with Attorney General William Barr standing in attendance, Mr. Trump followed through by issuing an executive order encouraging the Federal Communications Commission to consider making social media companies liable for postings on their platform, and the Federal Trade Commission to probe the platforms’ alleged anti-conservative bias. Those efforts appeared intended to enable Mr. Trump to censor the social media platforms for his personal political benefit, at the same time as allowing him to continue his own unfettered use of the platforms for distributing his inaccurate, barbarous and incendiary messaging. They also reflected a stark deviation from his anti-regulatory agenda – still seeking to deregulate traditional industries from which he and many of his high-end supporters could prosper, while now seeking to regulate tech giants because they criticized him. The new order also undertook to unilaterally and unconstitutionally un-do statutory protections of tech platforms that had been mandated by Congress years before. Most disturbingly, in the name of “free speech” (Mr. Trump’s), he now sought unconstitutionally to deny Twitter its own right to speak. Critics expressed outrage. Litigation appeared likely.<sup>25</sup> (In fairness, presidential candidate Joe Biden had also called for lifting limits on social media’s liability for its content, but for the opposite reason: protecting the public from the false and savage postings of Mr. Trump and others on the far right.<sup>26</sup>)	4, 9, 11

5-6-20	Paint it black. The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump had revived his demand that his border wall be painted black, so as to make it visually imposing and hot to the touch in the desert heat. Military commanders had found the paint job unnecessary and expensive – at least $500 million up front, and costly to maintain long term.<sup>27</sup>	11
5-7-20 +	Barr rescues Flynn; Grenell fingers conspirators; a noose for Obama. In a highly unusual and nakedly political move, on May 7 Attorney General William Barr dropped the Justice Department’s case against Michael Flynn, a top figure in Mr. Trump’s 2016 campaign and then briefly Mr. Trump’s national security advisor. Flynn had pleaded guilty to lying to federal investigators about his contacts with the Russian ambassador to the U.S. during the presidential transition period; but due to a series of aggressive post-pleading maneuvers he had not yet been punished. Barr’s move followed Mr. Trump’s long public and private agitation against former Justice Department leadership and in favor of Flynn and other Trump associates who had been DOJ targets. The move was seen as Barr freeing Mr. Trump from the latter’s apparent but politically awkward path toward pardoning Flynn. It also followed Barr’s recent efforts to soften the sentencing of Roger Stone, another felon and top Trump campaign associate (see the February 11, 2020 entry above in this Chronology); Barr’s ongoing campaign to undercut and undo the entire Mueller investigation; and his initial effort to bury the report of the Ukraine whistleblower that ultimately led to Mr. Trump’s impeachment. Commenting on Barr’s intervention, Mr. Trump called the senior FBI and Justice Department officials who had pursued Flynn “human scum.”<sup>28</sup> On May 10, as deaths from the coronavirus pandemic neared 80,000 and administration officials were issuing dire warnings about the economy, Mr. Trump spent most of his Sunday on Twitter – dispatching some 125 tweets and re-tweets, most of which alleged that the Obama administration and the (pre-Barr) Justice Department had tried to frame him in connection with their investigations of Russia’s election interference, and one of which went so far as to accuse President Obama of committing an unspecified crime.<sup>29</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 11, 17 (2, 9, 12, 16)

5-7-20 +	[Continued.] Current and former prosecutors found Barr’s latest attack on his own agency – in the service of Mr. Trump’s authoritarian agenda – to be unprecedented, cannibalistic, utterly corrupt, and an assault on the rule of law.<sup>30</sup> On May 11, almost 2,000 former Justice Department officials who collectively had served both Republican and Democratic administrations published an open letter calling for Barr to resign and for Congress to censure him – a protest within DOJ the likes of which had never before occurred.<sup>31</sup> By May 13, the number of signatories had come to exceed 2,300.<sup>32</sup> On May 12, in a parallel assault, Mr. Trump’s acting director of national intelligence Richard Grenell – seen by critics as an unqualified and hyper-partisan sycophant (see above in this Chronology, at February 19 + and February 28) – declassified the names of numerous Obama-era officials who had, in the ordinary course, sought to “unmask” (learn) the identities of Mr. Trump’s associates who were being investigated as security risks. Flynn’s name had then been unmasked. Critics saw Grenell’s purely political and highly unusual move as a new predicate for alleging a conspiracy against Mr. Trump by President Obama and Biden.<sup>33</sup> On May 13, Republican senators publicized the names of those officials who had sought the unmasking. They included such top Obama administration figures as Biden, John Brennan, the C.I.A. director; Samantha Power, the ambassador to the United Nations; James Clapper, the director of national intelligence; James Comey, the F.B.I. director; and Douglas Lute, the American ambassador to NATO.<sup>34</sup> Confirming the flowering of the conspiracy theory being advanced by Barr and Grenell, on May 12 Politico reported that Mr. Trump had taken up a new and sensational battle cry – “OBAMAGATE – makes Watergate look small time!” The taunt appeared to refer not just to Barr’s allegations of inappropriate prosecution of Flynn, but to the broader (and vaguer) allegation that President Obama had criminally and methodically sought to undermine the Trump presidency. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 11, 17 (2, 9, 12, 16)
-----------------	--	---------------------------------------

5-7-20 +	[Continued.] This latest conspiracy theory fit the pattern of Mr. Trump’s prior false allegations about his predecessor: that President Obama had been born in Africa; that he had tapped Mr. Trump’s telephones during the 2016 election campaign; that he had shipped planeloads of cash to Iran; that he had left empty the strategic national stockpile of medical equipment. Politico saw Mr. Trump’s motives as including his attempt to divert the public’s attention from his own disastrous response to the coronavirus pandemic, and his desire to weaken the presidential candidacy of Joe Biden, who had served as President Obama’s vice president and for whom President Obama was expected to campaign.<sup>35</sup> The New York Times offered a similar analysis on May 14, reporting that Mr. Trump had quickly convinced his Senate allies to begin an investigation of President Obama. The Times also noted that the White House Facebook page now carried an “Obamagate” video (“an overtly partisan message that would have been seen as crossing a line in past administrations”), and it cited Mr. Trump’s new round of attacks on a recent predecessor as unprecedented in modern times.<sup>36</sup> For CSD, additional and more visceral motives for the “Obamagate” canard appeared: Mr. Trump’s innate instinct to inflame and to campaign on the basis of racial animus; and his profound jealousy of President Obama. On May 4, CNN commentator Don Lemon had parsed that jealousy by posing to Mr. Trump in absentia these questions, which CSD finds too accurate and too pertinent to Mr. Trump’s anti-democratic behavior for them to be dismissed as mere snarkiness: “What is it about President Obama that really gets under your skin? Is it because he’s smarter than you? Better educated? Made it on his own? Didn’t need Daddy’s help? Wife is more accomplished?... I don’t know, what is it? What is it about him? That he’s a black man that’s accomplished, became president? That he punked you [called you out publicly] on the whole birth certificate thing? What is it about him? Just wondering.”<sup>37</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 11, 17 (2, 9, 12, 16)
-----------------	---	---------------------------------------

5-7-20 +	[Continued.] On May 18, Washington Post columnist Eugene Robinson similarly wrote: “So maybe his Obama obsession is not even tactical, but instead purely personal. Maybe Trump just cannot abide the fact that Obama is a Nobel laureate, respected around the world, while he has had to endure being snickered at by world leaders and portrayed as hapless and ignorant by the “fake news” media he claims to hate yet compulsively devours. Increasingly, his imagined victimizer is Obama himself. Trump even tries to blame Obama for his own administration’s botched response to a disease that did not exist when Obama was in office.”<sup>38</sup> As if on cue, on May 16, Mr. Trump tweeted, “The Obama administration is turning out to be one of the most corrupt and incompetent in U.S. history.” Mr. Trump’s Orwellian doublespeak at that moment was seemingly based on President Obama’s attempts to thwart Russian election interference. In fact, the Obama administration had been virtually spotless when it came to corruption. Rather, it was Mr. Trump’s administration that was among the most corrupt and incompetent historically, for over three years embarking on new dimensions of depravity on a nearly daily basis. In any event, on May 14, Politico reported that Mr. Trump, his allies and his family were “exulting” in his Obama/Mueller “revenge play,” retweeting this meme: “Hope you had fun investigating me. Now it’s my turn.” The journal also reported that, for their respective roles in Mr. Trump’s new movement toward criminally investigating those who had previously investigated him, he and his associates had begun lionizing Grenell as well as Barr.<sup>39</sup> (The “unmasking” episode appeared to have been Grenell’s swan song. On May 20, the Senate confirmed John Ratcliffe – one of Mr. Trump’s loudest and most cynical defenders in the House impeachment hearings, who was as unqualified as Grenell – as Grenell’s permanent replacement.<sup>40</sup> See CSD’s entry of February 28 above in this Chronology regarding the Ratcliffe/Grenell lesser-of-evils gambit. Although no Democrats voted to confirm Ratcliffe – the first time in 16 years that a president’s pick for the position had drawn no bipartisan support – Democrats allowed the vote to proceed quickly, in order to unseat Grenell.<sup>41</sup> On May 26, Politico reported that Grenell was taking a position in Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign – a remarkable turn for an immediate past head of national intelligence.<sup>42</sup>) [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9, 11, 17 (2, 9, 12, 16)

5-7-20 +	[Continued.] On May 20, media reported that Mr. Trump and President Obama had reciprocally determined that the latter would not attend the unveiling of his new portrait in the White House – yet another first in many decades.<sup>43</sup>	6, 7, 9, 11, 17 (2, 9, 12, 16)
5-12-20 +	Scarborough’s crime. On May 12, just after an early morning segment in which MSNBC commentator Joe Scarborough criticized Mr. Trump’s coronavirus response, Mr. Trump baselessly insinuated by Twitter that in 2001 Scarborough, then a Florida congressman, had murdered one of his staffers, a young married woman, after having had an affair with her. Mr. Trump had tweeted the same accusation on May 4, while boasting that he had “dumped” Scarborough after the 2016 election (the reverse was actually true – Scarborough had grown disgusted with Mr. Trump), and gloating that Scarborough’s television ratings were low.<sup>44</sup> But Scarborough was not alone in that arena. According to The Washington Post, within a 48-hour period Mr. Trump, by way of Twitter, had accused at least 20 individuals and organizations whom he considered to be his political opponents of crimes – including two television news hosts, a comedian, at least five former officials from the FBI and the Justice Department, the state of California, a broadcast television station, and at least five top national security officials from the Obama administration, not to mention (as CSD reports immediately above) President Obama himself. Mr. Trump had previously, and casually, accused a breathtaking array of other critics of crimes: former FBI director James Comey, former secretary of state John Kerry, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and House Intelligence Committee Chair Adam Schiff – all, seemingly, to distract from his own misdeeds.<sup>45</sup> Mr. Trump continued to accuse Scarborough of murder for weeks afterwards, including at a lectern at the White House on May 26, and by Twitter. The deceased staffer’s still-grieving widower implored Twitter to take down the tweets. The New York Times said that the accusation “once would have been unthinkable for a sitting president,” but was now tolerated by virtually every Republican in Congress.<sup>46</sup>	1, 7, 9, 11
5-14-20	In bed with himself. The Washington Post reported that, cumulatively, since Mr. Trump’s inauguration, the government had paid at least $970,000 to his company for hotel rooms for staff and Secret Service.<sup>47</sup>	15

5-15-20 +	Inspectors general: two more for the road. Late on a Friday evening (and thus out of the media’s glare), May 15, at the request of Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Mr. Trump fired the State Department’s inspector general, Steve Linick. Pompeo’s suspected motives were that Linick was investigating him for his use of government staff to handle his own and his wife’s personal affairs, and for Pompeo’s participation in the sale of arms to Saudi Arabia in 2019 against the will of Congress. It was the third time in six weeks that Mr. Trump had made such a move against inspector general offices on a Friday night. A (Democratic) House investigation quickly ensued.<sup>48</sup> Asked why he had fired Linick, Mr. Trump said, “I have the absolute right as president to terminate. But you would have to ask Mike [for the reasoning].” He also said that because Pompeo was so brilliant and important, whether Pompeo had directed a staffer to do his personal chores was a “stupid” issue.<sup>49</sup> But in truth, personal chore directives had often proven in recent years to be “gateway” offenses that presaged or revealed more serious acts of malfeasance – signals that an official believed that he or she was above the law.<sup>50</sup> (Example: Pompeo had already been under scrutiny for mixing political fundraising and networking, at taxpayer expense, with his official duties.<sup>51</sup>) Responding to reporters on May 20, Pompeo refused to answer questions about Linick’s termination, and he claimed, improbably, that he couldn’t have recommended termination based on Linick’s investigations of him because he was unaware of the investigations.<sup>52</sup> (Pompeo had lied to reporters before, feigning ignorance about Mr. Trump’s shake-down call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky. Pompeo later admitted that he had been on that call.<sup>53</sup>) Within a day after firing Linick, Mr. Trump fired Mitch Behm, the Transportation Department’s acting inspector general, who had been investigating whether Elaine Chao, the transportation secretary and wife of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, had given preferential treatment to her home state of Kentucky. (Mr. Trump replaced Behm with Howard Elliott, a freight and rail executive with no investigatory or law enforcement experience.)<sup>54</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 17 (9, 11)

5-15-20 +	[Continued.] Above in this Chronology on April 3 +, CSD had reported on Mr. Trump’s rolling dismissal and disempowerment of inspectors general as retribution for events related to his impeachment. On April 22 + in this Addendum, above, we report another such episode – reflecting retribution for an official in the Health and Human Services inspector general’s office having accurately characterized equipment shortages and testing delays that had hobbled the government’s coronavirus response. But inspectors general are independent watchdogs who are tasked with reporting abuses by agency officials to Congress. Their dismissal for retributive purposes is both corrupt and illegal.<sup>55</sup> Mr. Trump’s retributive actions not only punished existing IGs by removing them but served as warnings for all remaining IGs to toe his political line, and to serve him personally. The New York Times recapped, elaborated and condemned all of this at the link at this end note.<sup>56</sup> On May 24, The Washington Post reported that in several instances Mr. Trump had multiplied the impact of his IG removals by replacing those removed with new IGs who had “preposterous” conflicts of interest – for example, serving as IG while continuing to head agency units that they were now tasked with overseeing and investigating.<sup>57</sup>	9, 17 (9, 11)
5-16-20	The boys scrape the bottom. Mr. Trump’s son and campaign surrogate Donald Jr. accused his father’s presumptive presidential opponent Joe Biden, only half-jokingly, of being a pedophile.<sup>58</sup> On the same say, Mr. Trump’s other son, Eric, said that Democrats had engineered a coronavirus panic and its associated social distancing measures so as to keep his father from holding campaign rallies – and that after the November 3 election their interest in the pandemic would disappear.<sup>59</sup>	17 (7, 8, 9, 11)
5-18-20 +	Disciplining Fox. On May 18, Mr. Trump tweeted of Fox News that he was “looking for a new outlet” to serve as his unofficial propaganda arm. He had been provoked most recently by a Fox commentator having blasted him for claiming dangerously to have been taking the anti-malarial drug hydroxychloroquine as a prophylaxis for Covid-19. On May 21, Mr. Trump tweeted that Fox was “doing nothing” to help his re-election.<sup>60</sup> [Continued below.]	9

5-18-20 +	[Continued.] In truth, Fox remained one of Mr. Trump’s most committed and effective proponents. But for him, anything less than 100% fealty seemed insufficient; he seemed constitutionally incapable of not punching back when criticized, even by friends; and above all, he seemed instinctively to understand that he could keep Fox largely in line by assailing it through his Twitter feed, which was followed by many Fox viewers.	9
5-19-20	A crony builds the wall. Media reported that DHS and the Pentagon had secretly awarded a $1.3 billion contract to Fisher Sand and Gravel Company to build a portion of Mr. Trump’s border wall. That contract followed a $400 million contract to the same company to build a different portion of the wall. The company had no previous experience with that type of construction. But it had publicized its anti-immigration views; it had publicly lobbied to win the bid by way of appearances on Fox News and elsewhere; it had made substantial political contributions to Mr. Trump’s Republican allies; and Mr. Trump had openly expressed his favoritism toward them. The awarding of the previous contract was under audit by the Pentagon’s inspector general<sup>61</sup> – for whatever that may have been worth, given Mr. Trump’s intimidating behavior toward inspectors general.	16
5-21-20	In Michigan. In a campaign-style event – mounted at taxpayer expense – Mr. Trump toured a Ford Motor Co. plant in Ypsilanti, Michigan that had converted its operations to manufacturing ventilators and other PPE. The tour was intended to tout the promise of economic recovery from the coronavirus pandemic. But in truth it was the latest episode in recent weeks of campaign events masquerading as coronavirus response, all in electoral swing states – Pennsylvania, Arizona and Michigan, with many more planned in those states – where fans waving American flags had lined the streets. In his remarks in Michigan, veering from the economic recovery theme, Mr. Trump boasted about his trade policies and about the construction of his border wall. He encouraged citizens to resist state coronavirus lock-down laws, and to support “[u]nlike many politicians and journalists, ... those who earn a living with their own two hands.” (Mr. Trump is not known to have ever worked with his hands.) [Continued below.]	6, 8, 9

5-21-20	[Continued.] The Washington Post wrote of the Michigan event: “Trump and Pence have been able to resume their travel schedules with the aid of rapid coronavirus tests that are administered to all who come in close contact with them. Biden and his surrogates, including former president Barack Obama, do not have access to enough of those tests to ensure they and others are protected.”<sup>62</sup> Mr. Trump himself did most of the tour without wearing a face mask – in defiance of social distancing guidelines, of company rules, and of the (Democratic) governor’s social distancing orders.<sup>63</sup> Also in his remarks at the plant, incidentally but pointedly and repeatedly, Mr. Trump praised company founder Henry Ford’s “good bloodlines” – either in woeful ignorance of Ford’s notorious, genetically-grounded, anti-Semitic, pro-Hitler tracts of the 1920s, or deliberately pandering to those in his base who held similar views.<sup>64</sup>	6, 8, 9
5-21-20	Closing the open skies. Mr. Trump announced that he would withdraw from the Open Skies Treaty, which allows countries (including the U.S. and Russia) to fly over the territory of others in order to monitor whether the latter are preparing for military action. Mainstream journalists registered mixed reactions; but the episode was concerning, in that this was the third major arms control treaty that Mr. Trump had renounced.<sup>65</sup>	14
5-24-20	Memorials. During the two days before Memorial Day, rather than remembering the war dead or acknowledging the rising death toll from the coronavirus – now nearing 100,000, a figure he had previously said would never materialize – Mr. Trump: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mocked House Speaker Nancy Pelosi’s looks and falsely accused her of being an alcoholic.</li> <li>• Yet again baselessly accused his television critic Joe Scarborough of having murdered an employee two decades before.</li> <li>• Fat-shamed a prominent female African American political figure (forgetting to look in the mirror).</li> </ul> [Continued below.]	11

5-29-20 +	Shoot the looters! On May 29, Mr. Trump threatened by Twitter to “assume control” and to order the National Guard to shoot looters in Minneapolis, Minnesota. The looters, and far greater numbers of peaceable individuals, were protesting the videotaped murder of George Floyd, an unarmed black man, by a white Minneapolis police officer on May 25. The officer had suffocated Floyd by casually kneeling on his neck for nearly nine minutes, as Floyd had gasped, “I can’t breathe.” “When the looting starts, the shooting starts. Thank you!” Mr. Trump also tweeted. (In response to that tweet, Twitter pursued its incipient policy of tagging Mr. Trump’s most incendiary messages with reader cautions – in this case for “glorifying violence.”)<sup>67</sup> The next day, as the protests spread across the country and to the gates of the White House, Mr. Trump invited supporters to engage in a “Make America Great” (Trump campaign) rally at the White House to counter them. He expressed little understanding of the motives behind the protests, instead suggesting that they were the fruit of professional, subversive operators. He seemed to see himself as personally under siege as he defended the country. Boasting with simulated toughness and genuine sadism about the quality of his Secret Service protection – while portraying the Service’s abject loyalty and deference to him, and while channeling racist dog whistles about black protests from decades ago – he tweeted: [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] “They let the ‘protesters’ scream &amp; rant as much as they wanted, but whenever someone ... got too frisky or out of line, they would quickly come down on them, hard — didn’t know what hit them. The front line was replaced with fresh agents, like magic. Big crowd, professionally organized, but nobody came close to breaching the fence. If they had they would ... have been greeted with the most vicious dogs, and most ominous weapons, I have ever seen. That’s when people would have been really badly hurt, at least. Many Secret Service agents just waiting for action. ‘We put the young ones on the front line, sir, they love it, and ... good practice.’”<sup>68</sup> In sum, as images of burning cars and buildings figured in non-stop television coverage, Mr. Trump did not attempt to unite the country or to defuse the tension. Rather, his condemnations continued to be directed mainly toward the rioting, the “Fake News” and Democratic mayors (whom he urged to “get tougher”) – not toward Floyd’s murder, racism or police brutality generally.<sup>69</sup> He did make a brief condolence phone call to Floyd’s brother; but the brother said that Mr. Trump did all the talking and wouldn’t let him speak.<sup>70</sup> (Compare to Floyd’s murderer, who had knelt on his throat and wouldn’t let him breathe.) A New York Times reporter summarized the week’s developments, first about the coronavirus, but as capped by Mr. Trump’s response to the rioting: “With a nation on edge, ravaged by disease, hammered by economic collapse, divided over lockdowns and even face masks and now convulsed once again by race, President Trump’s first instinct has been to look for someone to fight. Over the last week, America reeled from 100,000 pandemic deaths, 40 million people out of work and cities in flames over a brutal police killing of a subdued black man. But Mr. Trump was on the attack against China [for the coronavirus pandemic], the World Health Organization [for the same], Big Tech [for Twitter flagging his tweets as dangerous], former President Barack Obama [for investigating Russian election interference], a cable television host [Joe Scarborough] and the mayor of a riot-torn city [Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey]. 5-29-20 +	[Continued.] “While other presidents seek to cool the situation in tinderbox moments like this, Mr. Trump plays with matches. He roars into any melee he finds, encouraging street uprisings against public health measures advanced by his own government [protests against Democratic governors over their coronavirus lockdowns], hurling made-up murder charges against a critic [Joe Scarborough], accusing his predecessor [President Obama] of unspecified crimes, vowing to crack down on a social media company that angered him [Twitter] and then seemingly threatening to meet violence with violence in Minneapolis.”<sup>71</sup> On May 31, while local officials around the country were attempting to engage constructively with protesters and other citizens – sometimes in the street – Mr. Trump stayed in the White House and tweeted angrily and helplessly about Democratic mayors, the mainstream media and Joe Biden. Through Twitter he also blamed and scapegoated the anarchist-aping movement known as “antifa” for the protests, broadly associating it and the looters with the far more numerous peaceful protesters who had assembled spontaneously and who had had nothing to do with either antifa or the looting. He threatened to designate antifa as a domestic terror organization, even though antifa is not an organization; no such designation existed under U.S. law; the extent of antifa’s role in the looting was unknown; and Mr. Trump had repeatedly refused to characterize far right-wing groups as domestic terrorists. Then, at the urging of the Secret Service, he hid in a bunker beneath the White House. According to The Post, Mr. Trump declined to address the nation about the civil disturbances because he and his advisors realized that he had nothing to say – that he lacked the insight or moral authority to soothe or inspire the country under the fraught circumstances.<sup>72</sup> The Post’s editorial board wrote that any healing message “will not come from a White House that has used racial hatred as a wedge and repeatedly made clear its contempt for urban America.”<sup>73</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	---	---------------------------------

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] On June 1, shortly after speaking with Russian President Vladimir Putin – and possibly inspired or fortified by Putin – Mr. Trump held a conference call with the nation’s governors, during which he berated them as being “weak” in the face of the civil disturbances, and said that if they didn’t forcibly take back the streets they would look like “fools.” “You have to dominate,” he said.<sup>74</sup> Defense Secretary Mark Esper similarly urged states to “dominate the battle space” – referring to a battle against American citizens.<sup>75</sup> Mr. Trump and Esper, of course, had no experience with either policing or community relations; and whether Mr. Trump was being advised in those areas (other than by Putin) wasn’t reported. On the same call, Mr. Trump said, “What happened in the state of Minnesota [the looting] .... They were a laughing stock all over the world. I’ve never seen anything like it, and the whole world was laughing.”<sup>76</sup> Mr. Trump’s obsessive fear of being laughed at, and his standing as one of the most internationally mocked American presidents in history, have been well documented.<sup>77</sup> (See also CSD’s entry of May 7 + above in this Addendum touching on that topic.) But rather than the civil disturbances, it was Floyd’s murder, America’s troubled racial history and Mr. Trump’s mishandling of the new crisis that seemed to be spurring the world’s mockery and outrage. It was those themes that were sparking anti-racism protests in London, Berlin, Amsterdam, Auckland, Paris, Vancouver, Toronto, Sydney, and across Latin America and the Middle East, and that were drawing the ridicule and condemnation of America’s enemies and frenemies – including in China, Iran, Russia and Turkey.<sup>78</sup> U.S. diplomats around the world were reportedly chagrined, and they now felt stymied in defending America or in criticizing others’ human rights abuses abroad.<sup>79</sup> Later that day, Mr. Trump announced in the Rose Garden, Nixon-like, that he was the “president of law and order,” and that he was sending “thousands and thousands of heavily armed soldiers, military personnel and law enforcement officers” to stop the violence. He also threatened to send regular federal troops into the states (presumably under the Insurrection Act<sup>80</sup>) if governors didn’t deploy their National Guards. Several Democratic governors soon afterwards said that they would not accept federal troops, charging Mr. Trump with incompetence, inflammatory demagoguery and false bravado.<sup>81</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] Shortly after the conference call, Barr ordered that Lafayette Square, a park near the White House where protests are often staged, be cleared. Federal forces wearing gas masks then deployed rubber bullets and chemical irritants comparable to tear gas against peaceful protesters who were assembled there. Reportedly seeking to overcome criticism for his having hidden the day before, Mr. Trump – joined by Barr, Esper, Joint Chiefs Chair Mark Milley (in combat fatigues), Mr. Trump’s chief of staff, his press secretary, his son-in-law Jared Kushner and his daughter Ivanka (in stilettos and carrying a luxury handbag), all of them white people, all protected by a security detail, and none wearing face masks – strode across the now vacant park to an Episcopal church that had sustained minor fire damage during the protests. There, in front of the church, Mr. Trump raised a Bible (upside down) for a photo op. He said nothing – he only posed for the picture. Christian clergy were among those who had been gassed and removed from the scene.<sup>82</sup> For CSD and many others, the episode was the apotheosis of madness, mayhem, repression, deceit, vanity and sacrilege, mounted by one of America’s least righteous men. Outrage swelled. The Episcopal bishop told CNN of her disgust: that Mr. Trump had not come to the church to pray, but instead had brutishly cleared the church yard and had used the church and the Bible as props to deliver a roundly un-Christian message of belligerence.<sup>83</sup> The Catholic archbishop also condemned the gassing at the Episcopal church, after Mr. Trump and his wife Melania staged a follow-on photo op at a Catholic shrine on June 2.<sup>84</sup> Former top military commanders objected to the use of the military to repress dissent.<sup>85</sup> The Post’s editorial board recounted Mr. Trump’s long history of encouraging police brutality, with strong racial implications.<sup>86</sup> On the evening of June 1, the street protests grew in strength. With a view to intimidating the protesters, the administration ordered military helicopters to hover over a protest site, spewing wind and deafening noise.<sup>87</sup> As of the evening of June 2, as protests mounted, some 60 million people were under curfew in 200 cities and 27 states. At least 17,000 National Guard troops had been activated. [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	--	---------------------------------

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] On June 3, Mr. Trump told Fox News that he had not actually hidden in the bunker as protesters had gathered outside the White House – he had only gone there, with his wife and son, to “inspect” it for the eventuality that they someday might need it.<sup>88</sup> Consistent with its ongoing assumption of the stupidity of the American people, the White House issued several descriptions of and justifications for the events at Lafayette Square, the falsehood of which was equally obvious (“it wasn’t tear gas”; “it was curfew enforcement”; “it was self-defense”). Mr. Trump blamed presidential contender Joe Biden for police brutality.<sup>89</sup> Also that day, Esper – who had previously indicated that he had been tricked into accompanying Mr. Trump on the stroll through Lafayette Park – said that Mr. Trump should not deploy federal troops at this time.<sup>90</sup> Shortly afterwards, in an extraordinary event, Esper’s predecessor, Mr. Trump’s former defense secretary James Mattis, accused Mr. Trump in The Atlantic magazine of deliberately dividing the nation. Mattis referred to “the abuse of executive authority that we witnessed in Lafayette Square,” and he accused Mr. Trump of making “a mockery of our Constitution.”<sup>91</sup> Mattis was a retired four-star Marine general whom Mr. Trump had boastfully referred to as “Mad Dog” Mattis when he had brought him into the administration in 2017 as one of “my generals,” but who had quit after Mr. Trump’s hasty withdrawal from Syria in 2019 and the abandonment of America’s allies there. After Mattis’s denunciation of the Lafayette Square raid, Mr. Trump tweeted that he was “the world’s most overrated general,” and that it had been an “honor” to fire him. (In truth Mattis had resigned, without having been asked to do so.)<sup>92</sup> The Post reported that, over the past week, all four living ex-presidents had spoken out about systemic racism and injustice, while Mr. Trump was calling for using military force to “dominate” those protesting racism and injustice.<sup>93</sup> Mr. Trump’s perennially devious press secretary, Kayleigh McEnany, compared Mr. Trump’s photo op at the church to Winston Churchill’s photo ops amid bombed out London. But a CNN commentator drew the contrast: Churchill had been a combat veteran, a prisoner of war, a celebrated author and orator, and a great uniter of his country.<sup>94</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	---	---------------------------------

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] That evening, hundreds of thousands of protesters – white, black and brown – gathered across the country for a ninth night .<sup>95</sup> In Washington, armed forces from a hodgepodge of federal agencies under the direction of Barr but bearing no identifying insignia – a disturbing indicator of disorganization, secrecy and unaccountability, which prompted a demand for transparency by House Speaker Nancy Pelosi – stared down the protesters there.<sup>96</sup> Then and in the days following, police were filmed physically abusing protesters at various venues.<sup>97</sup> At other venues, white and black police officers were filmed kneeling in support of the Black Lives Matters movement<sup>98</sup> – when only a few weeks ago that movement had been considered radical, and mainstream figures had stayed away.<sup>99</sup> CSD believes that not only the murder of George Floyd but also Mr. Trump’s provocations had brought the movement such sudden respectability and popularity. (Also filmed at the various venues were many people wearing face masks to mitigate the spread of the coronavirus pandemic, and many not. Those without masks did not appear to be protesting government-ordered lock-downs or social distancing, as mask-less protesters agitating to re-open the economy had done elsewhere in recent weeks. Other than that distinction, CSD offers no explanation or excuse for the recklessness of the mask-less anti-racism protesters.) On June 4, Mr. Trump publicized a letter written to him by an attorney who had represented him during the investigation of Russia’s election interference, in which the attorney had hysterically and counter-factually written: “The phony protesters near Lafayette park were not peaceful and are not real. They are terrorists using idle hate filled students to burn and destroy.”<sup>100</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	---	---------------------------------

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] Also on June 4, The Post reported that tall black fencing, armed guards, sharpshooters and combat troops had been newly installed at the White House’s perimeter, turning the building into a “fortress.”<sup>101</sup> The Times then reported similarly.<sup>102</sup> The Post also reported on the growing number of former senior military officials, including three former chairmen of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who had expressed grave concerns about Mr. Trump’s willingness to use the military to repress protesters.<sup>103</sup> A fourth Joint Chiefs chair, Colin Powell, joined on June 7.<sup>104</sup> The Times reported that some current and former senior officers were speculating that the military might disobey orders in order to protect the country’s democratic institutions.<sup>105</sup> Freedom House too condemned the militarized response to the protests – the fencing, the appearance of forces in tactical gear, the anonymization of troop identities – comparing it to abuses by foreign dictators.<sup>106</sup> Only two Republican senators, however – Alaska’s Lisa Murkowski and Utah’s Mitt Romney – expressed concerns about Mr. Trump’s abuse of the military; and in response to Murkowski, Mr. Trump vowed to defeat her the next time she ran for reelection.<sup>107</sup> On June 5, a university in Kansas canceled Ivanka Trump’s address at its upcoming virtual graduation ceremony – for unspecified reasons, but seemingly related to her participation in the Lafayette Square photo op, which she had reportedly helped conceive. Notwithstanding the photo op having followed the gassing of peaceful protesters, she complained on Twitter that the university had violated her freedom of speech.<sup>108</sup> On June 5, after the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced better than expected unemployment figures, Mr. Trump held a triumphant press conference in which he claimed that the U.S. was “largely through” the coronavirus pandemic and that he had vanquished racial inequality. Specifically, he said that the jobs figures were a “tremendous tribute to equality.” He said, “Hopefully, George [Floyd] is looking down right now, and saying, ‘This is a great thing that’s happening for our country.’ This is a great day for him. ... this is a great, great day in terms of equality.” [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	---	---------------------------------

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] In those remarks, Mr. Trump did not reveal that the BLS had acknowledged that the new unemployment rate was substantially understated due to an error in its data collection (possibly he didn't know). He did not acknowledge that he had routinely dismissed the accuracy of the BLS's unemployment figures when they had made him look bad or President Obama good. He did not acknowledge that even the figures as reported remained abysmal, the worst since the Great Depression. He denied that the country was in recession. He did not reveal that, during the reporting period, black unemployment had risen while white unemployment had decreased. He did not indicate how unemployment numbers bore in any way on police brutality toward people of color. He did not mention that 20,000 new coronavirus infections were being reported every day and at increased rates in many parts of the country. And he said that wearing face masks was optional.<sup>109</sup> Mr. Trump also did not entertain reporters' questions at the event; and his staff crammed the reporters' seats together for a better photographic angle but in pointed and flagrant contravention of social distancing guidelines. The White House Correspondents' Association complained that its members had been used as props for his demagoguery<sup>110</sup> (just as Mr. Trump had used a church and a Bible as props in Lafayette Square only days earlier). At the event, Mr. Trump preposterously boasted, "Nobody's ever done for the black community what President Trump has done."<sup>111</sup> During a bill-signing ceremony immediately after his remarks, Mr. Trump was asked how he planned to combat systemic racism. He responded incoherently, delusionally, cynically, or all of the above: "What's happened to our country and what you now see, it's been happening, is the greatest thing that can happen for race relations, for the African American community, for the Asian American [community], for the Hispanic American community, for women, for everything. Because our country is so strong. And that's what my plan is."<sup>112</sup> Hours later, Mr. Trump retweeted a video in which a speaker trashed George Floyd for his criminal record and heatedly objected to his being viewed sympathetically, as a martyr.<sup>113</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	--	---------------------------------

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] Like Esper running for cover, on June 5 Barr claimed that he had not ordered the clearing of Lafayette Square.<sup>114</sup> On June 7, Barr admitted that he had ordered that the area in front of the White House be cleared, but he claimed that he didn't know then that Mr. Trump would be headed for the park.<sup>115</sup> For CSD, Barr's fitful and defensive story appeared to lack both candor and backbone, as had his previous protestation of his independence from Mr. Trump when urging that Roger Stone's sentence be shortened (see CSD's entry of February 11 + in this Chronology). Also on June 5, Esper and Milley refused to appear publicly before the House Armed Services Committee to testify about the use of the military to respond to protests throughout the country.<sup>116</sup> On Saturday, June 6, tens (or possibly hundreds) of thousands of people protesting the murder of George Floyd, and protesting racism and police violence in the U.S., marched, largely peacefully, in cities across the country and around the world. For many or most marchers, their participation also appeared to be an act of defiance of Mr. Trump. Geographically, it was one of the broadest political demonstrations in history.<sup>117</sup> On June 7, in a CBS News interview, Barr said that the Lafayette Square protesters had been violent before he had ordered the park to be cleared. That was contradicted in a multitude of accounts by news reporters and National Guardsmen who had been present. Barr also denied that the protesters had been gassed, contrary to all other credible reports.<sup>118</sup> On June 8, Barr confirmed to CBS News that Mr. Trump had hidden in a bunker during a protest – rather than having merely “inspected” the bunker, as Mr. Trump had claimed.<sup>119</sup> Also on June 8, Mr. Trump hosted a meeting of law enforcement officials, praised their collective character, and expressed solidarity with them. But he had not yet met with African American or protest leaders; rather, whether strategically or viscerally, he continued to be all on one side of the matter.<sup>120</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
------------------	--	---------------------------------

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] On June 9, Mr. Trump tweeted that an act of police violence that had seriously injured an elderly protester in Buffalo, New York – as captured on video and widely circulated – could have been a set-up by the protester and antifa. Mr. Trump appeared to have been informed on the alleged conspiracy by far right media, rather than by law enforcement officials or any federal fact-finding. The Post’s critique of the claim found it “deranged.”<sup>121</sup> The Times portrayed the man as a gentle and earnest soul.<sup>122</sup> CSD and many others found Mr. Trump’s opportunistic demagoguery to be both outrageous and typical.<sup>123</sup> Also on June 9, Politico reported that many National Guardsmen had felt that their deployment at the protests, including at Lafayette Square, had amounted to a politically driven abuse of their mission; some were deeply troubled to find themselves facing off against protesters, as many in the Guard had experienced during Vietnam War demonstrations; and some felt that their mission was (or should have been) to protect the protesters from the police.<sup>124</sup> On June 10, after Esper (the Secretary of Defense) and Ryan McCarthy (Secretary of the Army), in response to the continuing anti-racism protests, expressed a willingness to rename military bases honoring confederate generals, Mr. Trump said that he would not even consider it.<sup>125</sup> On June 11, Mr. Trump boastfully and sadistically claimed on Twitter that the National Guard, the DC police and the Secret Service had easily manhandled “protesters, agitators, anarchists (ANTIFA) and others” near the White House. With horrific ignorance, he referred to the Secret Service as the “S.S.” – the acronym for Adolf Hitler’s notorious, genocidal military unit.<sup>126</sup> As if in rebuttal to Mr. Trump’s armchair military braggadocio, on the same day the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Mark Milley, publicly apologized for having appeared alongside Mr. Trump at the Lafayette Square photo op. He called it “a mistake I have learned from,” and he said, “I should not have been there. My presence in that moment, and in that environment, created the perception of the military involved in domestic politics.”<sup>127</sup> [Continued below.]	1,3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11

5-29-20 +	[Continued.] On June 12, after long claiming to be a more popular president than Abraham Lincoln had been, and after largely ignoring the legitimacy of black grievances amid the still boiling protests in American cities, Mr. Trump now suggested that he had done more for African Americans than Lincoln had. He told Fox News: “So, I think I’ve done more for the Black community than any other president, and let’s take a pass on Abraham Lincoln, cause he did good, although it’s always questionable.”<sup>128</sup> Only two days earlier, a columnist for the Post had assembled, to refresh the country’s memory, an entire piece consisting of a string of Mr. Trump’s bigoted, condescending and racist remarks about blacks.<sup>129</sup>	1,3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11
5-30-20	Welcome, Russia! (again). After German Chancellor Angela Merkel declined to attend an upcoming G-7 conference in Washington, on May 30 Mr. Trump postponed the event until the fall. Merkel had purportedly canceled due to coronavirus risks. But in reality, as was widely reported, she had canceled due to policy disagreements with Mr. Trump. In announcing the postponement, Mr. Trump again proposed to invite Russia – which had been kicked out of the G-8 in 2014 after having invaded and annexed Crimea. Media reported that the collapse of the G-7 conference evidenced ever further mistrust of and disdain toward Mr. Trump on the part of foreign allies and enemies alike, and his ever greater isolation.<sup>130</sup> On June 1, by telephone, Mr. Trump nevertheless invited Russian President Vladimir Putin to attend a rescheduled conference.<sup>131</sup>	12, 13, 14
6-1-20	The Fact Checker. The Washington Post’s Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now made 19,217 false or misleading claims during his presidency, averaging almost 16 claims per day, and 22 claims per day in each of 2019 and 2020.<sup>132</sup>	7
6-3-20	Fly-overs. Politico reported that the White House was planning military fly-overs at Mt. Rushmore and Washington, DC to celebrate Independence Day on July 3 and 4. Critics saw the assembling of large public events for the fly-overs as further politicizing the military in the midst of Mr. Trump’s deployment of federal forces to quell street protests against racism and police brutality; as defying social distancing guidelines relative to the coronavirus pandemic; and as wasting millions of dollars that could be better deployed by fighting the pandemic.<sup>133</sup>	8, 9, 11

6-5-20	By fiat. The Washington Post reported that, beginning two weeks previously, Mr. Trump – on grounds of the economic slowdown spawned by the coronavirus pandemic – had ordered agencies across the government to bypass ordinary rulemaking procedures and to unilaterally rescind, modify or stop enforcing regulations if they burdened the economy. The action affected consumer protection, transportation, banking, environmental, labor, and food and drug regulation. But Mr. Trump had lacked the legal authority to do that – that is, to dispense with standard rule-making procedures, which include the opportunity for the public to examine and submit comments on (and thus, effectively, to contest) proposed rules.<sup>134</sup> In now achieving by fiat deregulatory outcomes that he had long sought before the pandemic struck, Mr. Trump had seized powers that did not belong to him, and – as he had repeatedly done during his presidency – had forced others to bear the costly and draining burden of litigating his extra-legal actions.	9
6-8-20	A hunting we will go. Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW), a governmental oversight NGO, reported that Mr. Trump’s son and campaign surrogate Donald Trump Jr. had incurred $77,000 in Secret Service costs on a hunting trip in Mongolia a year previous – not the $17,000 that the Secret Service had initially revealed. Altogether, the Trump family had taken 12 times as many Secret-Service protected trips as the Obama family had.<sup>135</sup>	17 (7, 9; outright graft)
6-10-20	Barr’s thuggery. In a disturbing exposé of Attorney General William Barr’s distant history as a sadistic high school bully, a Washington Post columnist recapped his more recent history of ordering the repression of the peaceful protest against racism and police brutality at Lafayette Square, and before that of broadly and single-mindedly enabling Mr. Trump’s authoritarianism. CSD had previously reported most or all of the listed episodes; but we now present the columnist’s summation verbatim: “Barr has ... championed the president’s authority to use the military against protesters, even as Pentagon leaders recoiled. He assembled a militia-like force of often-identified federal police in Washington. He blamed antifa for recent ‘domestic terrorism,’ but no new criminal complaint mentions antifa. He claims there is no systemic racism in law enforcement. [Continued below.]	17 (7, 9)

	[Continued.] “That’s consistent with his earlier management of the Justice Department as a thugocracy: mischaracterizing the Mueller report; alleging the Obama administration ‘spied’ on the Trump campaign; naming a special prosecutor to investigate — and deliver an election-season report on — the Russia-probe Barr already declared a ‘travesty’; attempting to indict the official who approved the probe; overruling prosecutors to seek leniency for Trump friend Roger Stone; getting mentioned by Trump as participating in the attempt to get political dirt on Democrats from Ukraine; lending credibility to Rudy Giuliani’s allegations about the Bidens; dropping an investigation into campaign finance allegations against Trump; dropping the election-interference prosecution of a Russian firm; trying to drop the prosecution of former Trump national security adviser Michael Flynn; asserting his sole authority to approve election-related probes; and has just assigned another special prosecutor to fulfill Trump’s wish to probe the Obama administration’s ‘unmasking’ practices. Now Barr is undermining mail-in ballots, threatening the credibility of November’s elections.”
6-11-20	Sanctions for ICC. Mr. Trump signed an order authorizing new economic and visa sanctions against prosecutors and officers of the International Criminal Court, after that body had approved investigations of alleged crimes by U.S. service members and intelligence officers in Afghanistan.<sup>136</sup> The ICC is intended as a court of last resort, that seeks to try war crimes if the accused’s country of citizenship declines to do so. As reported above in this Chronology, Mr. Trump had already granted clemency to accused U.S. war criminals. Under multiple administrations, the U.S. had never agreed to submit to the ICC’s jurisdiction; still, this was a new thumb in the ICC’s eye, by a president who appeared to delight in humiliating and disempowering international institutions.	14

(A separate section of Addendum 30)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13 and 15 as defined in CSD’s Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic have moved rapidly. CSD’s observations below that have been recorded as of a given date may have been superseded, or may yet be superseded, on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD’s concerns about the Trump administration’s coronavirus response are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that have recurred, that news media have reported anew, and that, as of the date of this Addendum, have continued to threaten lives – day after day.

At Mr. Trump’s April 21 news briefing, he said that the U.S. was experiencing one of the lowest coronavirus mortality rates in the world. In truth, the U.S. rate was the 33rd highest in the world, out of 134 analyzed by researchers.<sup>137</sup>

On April 22, The Washington Post recapped recent episodes of Mr. Trump’s attempts to make his top public health officials rescind their medical observations that didn’t suit his propaganda. Beginning on April 12, Dr. Anthony Fauci, the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases and the government’s top epidemiologist, had told CNN that had the government begun its coronavirus mitigation efforts earlier, “you could have saved lives. Obviously, no one is going to deny that.” He also said that he had experienced “a lot of pushback about shutting things down back then.” The next day, appearing at Mr. Trump’s daily televised briefing, he attempted to downplay those statements, although without denying their accuracy. On April 21, CDC director Dr. Robert Redfield had been quoted in a Post interview to the effect that a simultaneous flu and coronavirus outbreak in the coming fall and winter “will actually be even more difficult than the one we just went through.” He also had told The Post that calls and protests to “liberate” states from stay-at-home orders – as Mr. Trump himself had tweeted – were “not helpful.” The next day, Mr. Trump tweeted that Redfield had been totally misquoted by the media; and at the daily briefing, Redfield too downplayed but didn’t deny. The Post also noted that during the briefings, in the aggregate, Mr. Trump had spoken four times as long as his two top public health officials, Drs. Fauci and Dr. Deborah Birx, combined.<sup>138</sup>

Similarly, as recorded in the first section of this Addendum, on April 22 media reported that Dr. Rick Bright, a top vaccine expert at the Department of Health and Human Services, had been demoted – according to Dr. Bright, for his having contested Mr. Trump’s promotion of the antimalarial drug hydroxychloroquine as a miracle prophylaxis for Covid-19.<sup>139</sup>

On April 22, in an apparent attempt to keep blood off his hands, Mr. Trump criticized the governor of Georgia’s controversial April 20 order allowing parts of that state’s economy to re-open as “too soon” – even though he and Vice President Mike Pence had been urging governors to issue just such orders.<sup>140</sup> The plans of other Republican governors to shortly begin opening remained in place, but they reportedly grew confused as to how to stay on Mr. Trump's good side.<sup>141</sup> Within a week, Mr. Trump denied that he had criticized the Georgia governor, and he had become once again a full-throated cheerleader for states choosing to relax social distancing and to open their economies – contrary to federal guidelines that Mr. Trump himself had originally embraced, and contrary to the continuing, expressed views of his top public health officials.<sup>142</sup>

At Mr. Trump's April 23 news conference, he suggested that light therapy and injections of disinfectant might cure the Covid-19 disease. Dr. Birx, seated nearby, appeared to wince. Later that day when a CNN television commentator quizzed another physician who was serving on Mr. Trump's coronavirus task force about the efficacy and safety of those courses of treatment, the physician appeared uncomfortable and declined to respond candidly. Through the following day, criticism of Mr. Trump's suggestions erupted nationwide, as public health officials contended with a flood of telephone calls from individuals asking about the efficacy of those suggestions. The Food and Drug Administration, health officials in several states, and a major disinfectant manufacturer quickly cautioned that disinfectants are toxic and should not be administered internally to treat Covid-19.<sup>143</sup> The FDA also cautioned on April 24 against the use of the anti-malarial drug hydroxychloroquine to treat or prevent Covid-19 – a course that Mr. Trump had been recommending for several weeks – in that it had proven (thus far) to be useless or even harmful if applied to the coronavirus.<sup>144</sup>

On April 23, The New York Times reported on what had come to be Mr. Trump's daily rhythm during the coronavirus crisis: largely isolated, watching hours of television in the morning and evening. The Times wrote: "The daily White House coronavirus task force briefing is the one portion of the day that Mr. Trump looks forward to .... [H]e views them [the briefings] as prime-time shows that are the best substitute for the rallies he can no longer attend but craves. Mr. Trump rarely attends the task force meetings that precede the briefings, and he typically does not prepare before he steps in front of the cameras. He is often seeing the final version of the day's main talking points that aides have prepared for him for the first time ... . He hastily plows through them, usually in a monotone, in order to get to the question-and-answer bullying session with reporters that he relishes."<sup>145</sup> On April 26, a Times columnist characterized Mr. Trump's briefings more starkly: "He'll destroy what he must so long as he gets to rule over the wreckage. ... [W]hat he is: a tone-deaf showman who regards everything, even a mountain of corpses, as a stage."<sup>146</sup>

Also on April 23, The Times reported that for the first time in nearly a century, the rest of the world was not looking to the U.S. for leadership in a time of global crisis.<sup>147</sup> On April 27, The Post reported similarly.<sup>148</sup>

On April 25, as the Trump administration boycotted a virtual meeting of the World Health Organization in which wealthy nations pledged to share their coronavirus research with poor ones, The Post reported that the administration was actively working to undermine the organization – well beyond Mr. Trump's recent cut-off of funding – as a means for scapegoating it and exonerating Mr. Trump relative to the destruction sown by the pandemic in the U.S.<sup>149</sup> (See CSD's entry of April 14 in the Coronavirus section of Addendum 29.) On May 4, the administration declined to attend a global fundraising event to develop coronavirus vaccines and treatments for worldwide use. Except for Mr. Trump, all of the leaders of the G7 countries participated.<sup>150</sup> On May 29, Mr. Trump announced that the U.S. would be withdrawing from the WHO – in the middle of the pandemic – with potentially catastrophic health consequences not only for other countries but for the U.S. His rationale, based on no known evidence, was that the WHO had conspired with the Chinese government to mask the initial outbreak of the disease in China. His announcement sparked shock within the U.S. public health community. His authority to unilaterally terminate America’s participation in the organization was also questioned domestically.<sup>151</sup>

Reportedly, Mr. Trump’s political advisors had grown increasingly alarmed at his rambling and incompetent press briefing appearances, and they had advised him to cut back on them. On April 25, Mr. Trump tweeted that he might do that, despite his “record ratings,” because of the hostility and inaccuracy of the “Lamestream Media” in reporting on the briefings.<sup>152</sup> And on that day, for the first time in weeks, he forewent the daily briefing.

An April 26 analysis by The Post revealed that in his 35 televised coronavirus briefings to that point, Mr. Trump had spoken for more than 28 hours, seizing 60% of the speakers’ total time; also that, in the past three weeks alone, he had spoken for 13 hours, during which he had spent two hours attacking his adversaries and 45 minutes praising himself and his administration, but only 4-1/2 minutes expressing empathy for the victims of the pandemic. In a quarter of his presentations, he had made false or misleading statements.<sup>153</sup>

Similarly, an April 26 analysis by The Times of the 260,000 words that Mr. Trump had spoken during his coronavirus press briefings demonstrated “striking patterns and repetitions in the messages he has conveyed, revealing a display of presidential hubris and self-pity unlike anything historians say they have seen before. By far the most recurring utterances ... are self-congratulations, roughly 600 of them, which are often predicated on exaggerations and [at least 130] falsehoods. ... While other presidents treated moments of crisis as an opportunity to bring the nation together, Mr. Trump, bereft of his signature campaign rallies, has used the evening television appearances as a branding exercise to promote himself. ... He has regularly used hyperbole to try to cast his leadership as historic in scope, even placing himself in the pantheon of presidents like Lincoln and Roosevelt who led the nation through some of its darkest moments. ... And he has mentioned the coronavirus’s staggering toll — nearly 50,000 Americans dead as of April 26, and hundreds of thousands of others sick — only fleetingly. ... Viewed simply as a pattern of Mr. Trump’s speech, the self-aggrandizement is singular for an American leader. But his approach is even more extraordinary because he is taking credit and demanding affirmation while he asks people to look beyond themselves and bear considerable hardship to help slow the spread of the virus.” After weeks of apparent empathy deficit, the report continued, Mr. Trump at last, in his prepared remarks, had begun to praise health care workers and the American spirit of resilience. “But his laments about the virus’s economic toll — the damage it has caused ‘probably the best economy in the history of the world’ — are far more common than remarks about the human toll.”<sup>154</sup>

On April 27, The Post reported that U.S. intelligence agencies had issued dire warnings about the coronavirus in more than a dozen classified briefings prepared for Mr. Trump in January and February, months during which he had continued to downplay the threat. The warnings had included revelations that China was suppressing information about the danger of the virus – revelations that Mr. Trump would later deny having known at the time.<sup>155</sup>

Mr. Trump quickly resumed his press conferences. On April 27 he blamed China for the pandemic, and he characterized his administration’s response as “incredible.” When asked about a recent spike in Americans ingesting disinfectants, he responded, “I can’t imagine why.” When asked whether he would take responsibility for that spike, he said he would not.<sup>156</sup>

Also on April 27, Mr. Trump tweeted that he questioned providing federal coronavirus aid to state governments because the states that needed it (he claimed) were primarily led by inept Democratic governors. But a bi-partisan letter from the National Governors Association had expressed the need for federal aid. And a score of individual Republican governors had recently urged increased aid.<sup>157</sup> On April 28, Mr. Trump went further, threatening to cut coronavirus aid to states in which sanctuary cities were located.<sup>158</sup>

On April 28, Vice President Pence toured the Mayo Clinic without wearing a face mask – contrary to hospital rules, and sending a reckless message to the nation’s television viewers.<sup>159</sup> Pence’s wife later denied that he had known about the rules; and a journalist who then contradicted her on Twitter was banned from traveling with him until he apologized.<sup>160</sup> On May 3, Pence acknowledged that he had known the hospital rules and that he should have abided by them.<sup>161</sup>

At his April 28 press briefing, Mr. Trump repeated and amplified his previous falsehoods about the level of testing for the coronavirus that U.S. medical professionals had performed to date and would be able to perform in the immediate future. Among other things, he falsely said that 5 million tests per day could soon be performed.<sup>162</sup> The next day, after a senior health official in his administration said that that was preposterous, Mr. Trump claimed to have never said it.<sup>163</sup>

On April 28 and 29, media reported that recipients of $1200-per-person stimulus payments, as mandated by the recently enacted, coronavirus driven economic stimulus legislation known as the CARES Act, were receiving campaign-style letters signed by Mr. Trump explaining the payments. The statute indeed required that explanatory letters be sent, but not campaign-style letters, and not under Mr. Trump’s signature.<sup>164</sup> Also on April 29, The Post reported on growing objections to Mr. Trump’s name appearing on the stimulus checks that were being mailed to recipients in hard copy – including on grounds that that extraordinary practice violated the Hatch Act.<sup>165</sup> (The Hatch Act forbids most government staff – including those dispensing checks – from participating in election campaigns. The Trump administration had repeatedly violated the Hatch Act over the last three years, as reported above in this Chronology.)

On April 29, as the U.S. economy shrank by 5% due to state ordered, coronavirus driven shutdowns, U.S. coronavirus cases surpassed 1,000,000 (a third of the world’s total), and U.S. deaths topped 60,000 – more than the Vietnam War’s battlefield deaths – Mr. Trump allowed the CDC’s national social distancing guidelines to expire. He thereby shifted the responsibility for social distancing to governors, and he expressly encouraged states to re-open for business amid the inconsistent national patchwork of decision-making. As he had done some weeks earlier, he now again expressed confidence that the pandemic would quickly abate, contrary to the views of his public health advisors. He expressed hopes that he would conduct “massive” campaign rallies before long, and without social distancing. He also began running his victory lap: he told a business group, “We did all the right moves. If we didn’t do what we did, you would have had a million people die, maybe more, maybe two million people die.” On the same day, his son-in-law Jared Kushner falsely told Fox News, “We’ve achieved all the different milestones that are needed ... [T]his is a great success story.”<sup>166</sup>

Much as Mr. Trump had denied the continuing threat of the pandemic and his responsibility for any aspect of the destruction it had wrought, he appeared largely to deny its human dimension. On April 30, a reporter for The Times wrote: “As the death toll from the coronavirus over eight weeks surpasses the total American military casualties in eight years of major combat in Vietnam, Mr. Trump has led no national mourning. In his daily news conferences, he makes only perfunctory references to those who have died as he stiffly reads opening remarks, exhibiting more emotion when grieving his lost economic record than his lost constituents. Empathy has never been considered one of Mr. Trump’s political assets. He views public displays of sadness as weakness and has made a point of stressing resolve, even at the risk of overlooking the deep pain afflicting so much of the country. His favorite words in his televised appearances of recent weeks are ‘powerful’ and ‘strong.’ He talks of ‘incredible’ days ahead without dwelling on the miserable days of now. He plans fireworks while Americans plan funerals.” The reporter went on to starkly contrast that performance with the empathy and grief shown by Presidents Lincoln, Roosevelt, Reagan, Clinton, Bush 43 and Obama at times of national tragedy.<sup>167</sup>

At his press conference on April 30, Mr. Trump blamed the Obama administration for the faulty coronavirus test kits that his administration had inherited. But in truth, the test kits had been created only in 2019, under the Trump administration, when the disease had first appeared.<sup>168</sup> Consistent with his growing efforts to scapegoat China for the pandemic and to demand reparation payments, on that day he also claimed that he possessed secret information linking a prominent Chinese laboratory – one that had studied bat-borne diseases – to the origin or escape of the virus, but that he was not allowed to discuss the details. He went so far as to suggest that China might have released the virus intentionally.<sup>169</sup> In CSD’s view, that was a radically irresponsible and demagogic tease, even if true. But Mr. Trump appeared to want to make it true: The Times reported that he was tasking American spies with “proving” Chinese fault.<sup>170</sup>

For the second time, on April 30, armed protesters assembled at Michigan’s capitol building to demand that the state’s economy re-open. As before, Confederate flags appeared, as did Nazi swastikas and nooses. On May 1, Mr. Trump again expressed his support, tweeting that the protesters were “very good people, but they are angry.” On May 3, Dr. Birx expressed to Fox News that she found the absence of social distancing at the protests appalling.<sup>171</sup>

On May 1, the White House confirmed that it would block Dr. Fauci from testifying before the Democratic-controlled House, even while permitting him to testify before the Republican-controlled Senate, as Congress prepared to return to Washington the following week.<sup>172</sup> On May 12, Dr. Fauci did testify before the Senate by remote video from his self-imposed quarantine. As stark evidence of the politicization of science, Democratic senators in the committee room wore face masks, while Republican senators mostly didn’t. Dr. Fauci said that states that were reopening too soon would set back the medical and economic recovery of the country, that schools re-opening too soon would pose serious risks to children, and that deaths from the coronavirus were likely being under-counted. He also contradicted Mr. Trump on numerous scientific points. (Dr. Redfield, the CDC's director whom the White House had also blocked from testifying before the House, made similar statements to the Senate.)<sup>173</sup> For Dr. Fauci's statements, Fox News commentators who were allied with Mr. Trump attacked Dr. Fauci mercilessly, calling him "flawed," a "buffoon" and a potential "dictator."<sup>174</sup> For Dr. Fauci's statements about school children in particular, Mr. Trump found them "unacceptable," falsely stating that the disease had had "very little impact on young people. I think you should absolutely open the schools."<sup>175</sup> (In truth, not only were children known to be able to carry the disease and transmit it to adults, but some had indeed become ill; and on May 14 the CDC specifically warned of an extremely dangerous, coronavirus-linked syndrome that was befalling children.<sup>176</sup>) After the hearings, Dr. Fauci was generally sidelined from Mr. Trump's televised coronavirus briefings.

On May 1, Mr. Trump tweeted that CNN and MSNBC were operating as "Chinese puppets" and the "Enemy of the People" – promoting China so that they could do business there, despite its deception about the early spread of the coronavirus within its borders. But in truth, Mr. Trump himself had repeatedly praised China's response to the disease for several months before landing on that country as one of his principal coronavirus scapegoats.<sup>177</sup>

As reported in the first section of this Addendum in the April 22 + entry, on May 1, after business hours on a Friday evening, the White House announced that Mr. Trump would nominate a new inspector general for the Department of Health and Human Services. The appointee would effectively replace Christi Grimm, HHS's deputy inspector general, who in April had angered Mr. Trump by her report about equipment shortages and testing delays at hospitals amid the coronavirus pandemic.<sup>178</sup>

On May 2, a columnist for The Times quoted a journalist who had prominently covered pandemic risks, to the effect that the Trump administration had now silenced the CDC on the topic of the coronavirus. Staff were demoralized, they feared speaking to the press, and their counterparts around the world no longer called them for advice. On May 6, the quoted journalist appeared on MSNBC and repeated the charges.<sup>179</sup> On May 7, the Associated Press reported that the administration had squelched a detailed guide for local government leaders' use in re-opening the economy that the CDC had been on the verge of releasing, telling the CDC that the guide "would never see the light of day."<sup>180</sup> Politico and The Times then substantially confirmed that report.<sup>181</sup> The Associated Press then reported on May 9 that the decision to kill the guide had come from political appointees at the top levels of the White House, not scientific or public health staff.<sup>182</sup> On May 14, the CDC released a greatly shortened guidance – six illustrated, one-page checklists – which, among other things, omitted social distancing guidance for churches, which were institutions that Mr. Trump had long seen as populated with his supporters.<sup>183</sup> On May 23, at the direction of the White House, the CDC took down from the web its cautions that singing in church choirs and sharing wine cups especially threaten the spread of the virus.<sup>184</sup>

On May 3, at a televised town hall about the coronavirus that was conducted by Fox News at the foot of Abraham Lincoln's statue at the Lincoln Memorial, Mr. Trump claimed – off-topic – that he had "done more than any other president in the history of our country." He said that he had saved the entire airline industry, 30 million jobs and millions of lives by shutting down “the greatest economy that the world has ever seen” (even though, in truth, he had been dragged kicking and screaming into the shut-down – and had never actually ordered it). He berated his predecessors in the presidency as having been “foolish” and “stupid” relative to pandemic preparedness. He also claimed that a coronavirus vaccine would be ready by the end of 2020, and (as often before) that hydroxychloroquine should be used to prevent or treat Covid-19 – even though his top public health officials had denied all of that.<sup>185</sup> However dramatic the setting, and however much Mr. Trump had long sought to compare himself favorably with President Lincoln, the interview was riddled with boasting, self-pity and falsehoods – not a style for which Lincoln was known. The interview also had required a waiver from the Department of the Interior, in that visitors to the memorial were otherwise banned due to the pandemic. In issuing the waiver, David Bernhardt, the ethically challenged Secretary of the Interior, wrote: “Given the extraordinary crisis that the American people have endured, and the need for the president to exercise a core governmental function to address the nation about an ongoing public-health crisis, I am exercising my authority to facilitate the opportunity for the president to conduct this address within the Lincoln Memorial.”<sup>186</sup> (CSD struggles with the logic.)

On May 3, responding to a recent call by President George W. Bush for unity in the face of the pandemic, Mr. Trump – who despised the Bush family – complained via Twitter that his predecessor had not spoken up against Mr. Trump’s 2020 impeachment, “the greatest Hoax in American history!”<sup>187</sup> (So much for unity.)

Also on May 3, as part of the Trump administration’s efforts to scapegoat China for the pandemic, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo told Fox News that “enormous evidence” demonstrated and the “best experts” believed that the coronavirus had been invented in a Chinese laboratory – despite statements by U.S. intelligence services to the contrary.<sup>188</sup>

On May 4, CNN sent a cease-and-desist letter to Mr. Trump’s election campaign, objecting to the campaign’s fraudulent abuse of CNN’s footage relative to its covering of the pandemic. Specifically, the campaign had spliced together two CNN segments: an acknowledgement by CNN’s Wolf Blitzer and Dr. Sanjay Gupta that federal social distancing guidelines may have helped save up to two million lives, and an extraneous video depicting Mr. Trump’s China travel ban. But the reference to social distancing was omitted, such that the combined footage appeared to portray Blitzer and Gupta as crediting the China ban for the saving of lives – a claim with which CNN did not agree.<sup>189</sup>

On May 5, Mr. Trump told reporters that Democrats wanted his coronavirus response to fail so that they could win the November elections. He said, “They, frankly, want our situation to be unsuccessful, which means death, which means death.”<sup>190</sup>

Also on May 5, Mr. Trump visited a Honeywell plant where face masks were being manufactured. All of the workers wore masks, and a sign said that everyone must wear a mask. Consistent with his practice, Mr. Trump did not wear a mask.<sup>191</sup>

In an ABC News interview on May 5, Mr. Trump (yet again) falsely said that ample testing resources were available to all Americans; he dismissed new projections of coronavirus deaths;

he said (contrary to the views of his public health officials) that the pandemic would pass even if a vaccine was not developed; and he made clear that he was willing to sacrifice American lives to the disease in order to stoke the economy by easing the lock-down.<sup>192</sup> In addition, having previously blamed President Obama for failing to hold sufficient medical safety equipment in the national emergency stockpile (on May 6 he would say it yet again, this time that “the cupboard was bare”), he told ABC that he himself hadn’t restocked over the previous three years because Democrats had distracted him by their various “hoaxes” – Russian election interference, his withholding of military aid for Ukraine, and his impeachment.<sup>193</sup>

On May 5, Mr. Trump and administration officials said that they were planning to wind down Mr. Trump’s coronavirus task force, even though the pandemic was still raging and American deaths continued to soar. Their expressed reasoning: that the task force had largely achieved its mission, and that the pandemic was winding down. The Times, though, saw other motives: the task force’s dysfunction; Mr. Trump’s desire to place more of his coronavirus response in the hands of his son-in-law Jared Kushner and his economic advisors and less in the hands of science experts; and his desire, for electoral purposes, to advance messaging about rebuilding the economy without being hamstrung by contemporaneous, negative news and projections from public health officials.<sup>194</sup> Other observers saw an additional reelection gambit afoot: that Mr. Trump wished to shift responsibility to the country’s state and city governments, so that he could blame them for further catastrophe.<sup>195</sup> CSD, for its part, speculated that the creation and the publicization of the task force had itself initially been a dodge – to deflect blame for the country’s suffering from Mr. Trump to Pence and to other administration officials; that Mr. Trump had first seized the reins of the daily television briefings only serendipitously, and without forethought, when he saw in them an opportunity for a more affirmative media and reelection play; that viewers (particularly swing voters) had now tired of the briefings and of Mr. Trump’s outlandish behavior during them; that his next reelection moves would take some other grotesque turn; and that without the briefings the administration’s public health response would proceed apace, for better or worse, albeit more quietly. Conceivably, some of Mr. Trump’s goals in ending the task force threatened a backlash, because his plan shortly collapsed. On May 6 he announced that the task force would continue to operate – although with an emphasis on economic recovery – because he had received so many phone calls in which he had learned how “popular” the task force was. He said nothing about whether he had found the scientific or policy advice of the task force to be helpful.<sup>196</sup>

The Times reported on May 5 that a volunteer medical procurement squad assembled by Kushner had proven colossally inept and ineffective. Even its networking for effective procurement insights among Republican political allies to whom Kushner had directed the volunteers – at risk of cronyism and other corruption – had proven futile.<sup>197</sup>

At a televised White House event honoring National Nurses Day on May 6, Mr. Trump slammed the president of the American Association of Nurse Practitioners for her on-camera statement that access to PPE was still sporadic. Rather than acknowledging the shortages or sympathizing with practitioners experiencing them, he snapped back, “Sporadic for you, but not sporadic for a lot of other people.”<sup>198</sup>

In remarks before reporters, on May 6 Mr. Trump expressed a concern that more testing for the coronavirus would only reveal more infections and therefore increase the dismal numbers. “In a way, by doing all this testing we make ourselves look bad,” he said.<sup>199</sup>

Also on May 6, Politico reported that even as Mr. Trump was proclaiming complete success in furnishing health care providers with ventilators, tests kits and masks, his own health and emergency management officials were privately warning that states were still experiencing shortages. And even as he was allowing his national stay-at-home guidelines to expire, top health officials were warning that a high death toll would likely ensue.<sup>200</sup>

On May 7, The Post recapped (as described above in this Addendum) what was becoming a concerted cover-up of the threats to public health that lay in the pandemic. Its reporters wrote: “[Mr. Trump’s] administration has sidelined or replaced officials not seen as loyal, rebuffed congressional requests for testimony, dismissed jarring statistics and models, praised states for reopening without meeting White House guidelines and, briefly, pushed to disband a task force created to combat the virus and communicate about the public health crisis.”<sup>201</sup>

On May 8, after meeting for an hour with Republican governors – during which time no one wore a mask or practiced social distancing – Mr. Trump again told reporters that the coronavirus could disappear even without the development of a vaccine, and that testing wasn’t necessary – contrary to the views of seemingly all credible public health officials.<sup>202</sup>

On May 9, The Times reported that in forming his views questioning the lethality of the coronavirus, Mr. Trump was not relying on the advice of scientists, but was instead directly feeding on anti-science conspiracy theories that were being advanced by climate science deniers, anti-vaccine extremists, QAnon activists, talk show hosts, and other right-wing agitators.<sup>203</sup>

On May 9, after two White House staff members tested positive for Covid-19, three leading members of the coronavirus task force voluntarily entered self-quarantine: infectious disease head Dr. Fauci, CDC head Dr. Redfield, and FDA head Stephen Hahn. Mr. Trump nevertheless conducted a meeting with top generals, at which no one wore a face mask.<sup>204</sup> For his part, Pence directed food company executives to remove their masks at a meeting with him.<sup>205</sup> But in recent days the White House had indeed ramped up testing for the officials who worked there, even while denying that Americans across the country needed large scale testing.<sup>206</sup>

On May 10, Mr. Trump cheerily tweeted to his tens of millions of followers that his Los Angeles golf club was reopening for business – thus at once dishonoring the (by then) nearly 80,000 coronavirus deaths in the U.S., effectively diminishing his own advisors’ calls for social distancing, and shamelessly using his presidency to promote his private business interests.<sup>207</sup>

At his May 11 coronavirus news conference, Mr. Trump spoke before a stand of four closely grouped American flags and a pair of posters that read, “America Leads the World in Testing.” He proceeded to boast at length about what he claimed was his administration’s exceptional response to the pandemic, particularly with regard to the deployment of testing equipment and tests. He went so far as to falsely declare victory in achieving his nationwide testing goals, and he repeated yet again his false statement that anyone who wanted to be tested for the coronavirus could be tested. While making much of the high volume of testing here, he continued to ignore the facts that many countries had substantially higher rates of testing per capita, that his delay in rolling out testing had likely contributed to the massive death toll here, and that public health experts widely insisted that far more testing was needed before economies could safely open. He questionably boasted that, in his coronavirus response, he had achieved the country's best federal-state cooperation in a long time. He falsely said that coronavirus cases were declining across the country (in nine states they were increasing). While acknowledging that he had ordered White House staff to wear face masks and praising the volume of testing he claimed to have achieved, he expressly equivocated about the value of both of those measures. (He himself continued not to wear a mask.) He projected a record-breaking economy in 2021; and in that regard he characterized the coming months as "a transition to greatness," while warning that if Democrats were to regain power in the November elections they would "mess it up" by "doubling, tripling, quadrupling taxes." Also in campaign style, and having nothing to do with the pandemic, he boasted about his progress in constructing his Mexican border wall, limiting undocumented immigration, and bolstering the country's military forces. He faulted previous presidents for having allowed China to take advantage of the U.S. For good measure, he repeated his Twitter allegation of the previous day that President Obama had committed an unspecified but horrific crime – seemingly involving the latter's initiation of an investigation of Russia's attempts to influence the 2016 election. Ultimately, Mr. Trump stormed out of the press session when challenged by a pair of female reporters with respect to his coronavirus response.<sup>208</sup>

As several Pennsylvania counties threatened to disobey Governor Tom Wolf's order to remain closed, Mr. Trump encouraged their revolt, even though he had repeatedly and expressly insisted that governors make such decisions for their states. On May 11 he tweeted, "The great people of Pennsylvania want their freedom now, and they are fully aware of what that entails." In a similar vein, on May 12 members of an armed militia stood outside a barbershop in Michigan that had re-opened contrary to that state's shut-down order, with a view to confronting any police that might have arrived to enforce the order. They were wearing Trump sweatshirts and Trump cowboy hats and waving Trump flags.<sup>209</sup> On May 13, The Times reported that similar episodes of armed vigilantes protecting businesses that were opening illegally had occurred across Texas.<sup>210</sup> On May 14, some protesters at Michigan's capitol carried guns, one had an ax, and one held a figure of the (Democratic) governor dangling from a noose. On May 14, at a protest in Commack (Long Island), New York, amid the Trump campaign banners and the mask-less protesters was a sign that read, "Hang Fauci. Hang [Bill] Gates. Open all our states."<sup>211</sup> On May 15, a Michigan resident threatened to kill the governor for her shut-down orders. On May 16, reacting to a viral video of the Long Island episode in which protesters were filmed insulting and bullying a reporter, Mr. Trump called the video "fake news"; but the next day he said that the protesters were "great people," and he said of the video's popularity that "People can't get enough of this."<sup>212</sup> On May 25, an anti-lockdown protester in Kentucky hung the Democratic governor in effigy from a tree outside the state capitol, with a sign that read "Sic semper tyrannis" – the imprecation that John Wilkes Booth had shouted while leaping to the stage in Ford's Theater after fatally shooting President Lincoln.<sup>213</sup> On May 27, Mr. Trump tweeted a "thank you" to a group of New Mexico protesters who had urged defiance of their state's lockdown law, and whose leader had said that "the only good Democrat is a dead Democrat" and who had otherwise threatened violent civil insurrection.<sup>214</sup>

On May 14, Mr. Trump appeared at a face mask manufacturing company in Allentown, Pennsylvania and conducted a press event there, with a campaign-style ambience. While company executives wore face masks, he did not. He also complained that testing for the coronavirus was “overrated,” and that calls for greater testing, which were being advanced by the medical community, Democrats and governors, were motivated by a desire to discredit him. (A strict testing regime nevertheless had recently been imposed at the White House, due to the acknowledged need to protect staff members there.) He said that the high incidence of known infections in the U.S. was attributable to a high testing rate, implying that it could be fairer to himself politically if the number of infections wasn’t known. (In truth the testing rate per capita in the U.S. remained lower than several or many other countries.)<sup>215</sup>

Also on May 14, Dr. Rick Bright, the demoted HHS vaccine researcher and whistleblower, testified before a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee. He said that because of the Trump administration’s inaction in the face of the pandemic “lives were lost”; that healthcare workers still lacked adequate protective equipment; and that the administration had improperly and dangerously pushed to flood the market with hydroxychloroquine as an off-label treatment or prophylaxis for the disease.<sup>216</sup>

On May 15, Mr. Trump lauded the effectiveness of a new, rapid-results coronavirus test that was being administered to White House staff and visitors – even after the FDA had reported that its reliability was highly questionable.<sup>217</sup> He also repeated his fallacious assertion that the pandemic could disappear even without a vaccine.<sup>218</sup>

On May 18, Mr. Trump announced cavalierly that for over a week he had been taking the antimalarial drug hydroxychloroquine as prophylaxis for the virus – a course of action contrary to the FDA’s public advice and the cautions of many prominent public health officials.<sup>219</sup> His announcement drew widespread criticism, including from a Fox News commentator, which prompted him to tweet about Fox, “Looking for a new outlet!” (by which he presumably meant a more slavishly loyal propaganda arm for his presidency). The next day he defended his taking of the drug, claiming that a Department of Veterans Affairs report that had showed grim results for the drug’s use was “false” and a “Trump enemy statement” designed to foil him.<sup>220</sup> On May 21, The Times recapped and refuted in depth Mr. Trump’s mischaracterization of the Veterans Affairs study; his recent, erroneous claim that large numbers of front line health workers were taking the drug; and his recent denial of the FDA’s warning about use of the drug.<sup>221</sup> On May 22, media reported yet another study demonstrating the mortal dangers of administering hydroxychloroquine to Covid-19 patients.<sup>222</sup>

On May 19, Mr. Trump actually boasted about the U.S. having the world’s largest number of coronavirus cases. He said, “When we have a lot of cases, I don’t look at that as a bad thing. I look at that in a certain respect as being a good thing because it means our testing is much better. So, if we were testing a million people instead of 14 million people, we would have far fewer cases, right? So, I view it as a badge of honor. Really, it’s a badge of honor. It’s a great tribute to the testing and a lot of the work that the professionals have done.” Of course, Mr. Trump had slow-walked the testing roll-out; and the U.S. ranked 38th in the world’s level of testing per capita.<sup>223</sup>

On May 20, The Post reported that two-thirds of front-line coronavirus healthcare workers said that they still lacked sufficient face masks.<sup>224</sup>

On May 21, as reported above in the first section of this Addendum, Mr. Trump toured the Ford Motor Co. plant in Ypsilanti, Michigan without wearing a face mask – in defiance of company rules and the (Democratic) governor’s social distancing orders.<sup>225</sup> The Post reported: “The president’s trips [to industrial plants in recent days] ... have taken on clear campaign overtones as he pushes for states to move beyond the pandemic and restart their economies despite continuing public health concerns and the rising death toll. Supporters have lined the streets to greet his motorcade as they hold American flags and Trump campaign signs, disregarding social distancing rules and outnumbering a smaller set of protesters.”<sup>226</sup>

Although CSD considers hypothetical criticisms and comparative international critiques of the Trump administration’s coronavirus response to be both subjective and premature, we note a March 21 Politico analysis which, with graphics, indicated the U.S. thus far as performing in the lowest quartile of combined economic and public health outcomes among the world’s countries.<sup>227</sup> We also note a recent modeling study released by researchers at Columbia University that was publicized by The Times on May 20, and that indicated that the slow U.S. response had cost tens of thousands of lives.<sup>228</sup> (Mr. Trump countered that “Columbia is a liberal, disgraceful institution ... playing right to their little group of people that tell them what to do.”<sup>229</sup>)

On May 22, presumably attempting to impress his supporters within faith communities, Mr. Trump said that if governors wouldn’t allow all places of worship to re-open, he would override them – something he lacked the authority to do. But Dr. Birx, promptly advised that places of worship not reopen; and Mr. Trump’s press secretary acknowledged that any reopening was for governors to decide. (Mr. Trump had spent weeks trying to deflect reopening decisions to the governors; then weeks urging them to reopen; and now, through nearly unbelievable meanness and stupidity, seeking to split Americans’ response to the coronavirus along sectarian lines. Many if not most American clergy nevertheless appeared to have been encouraging social distancing and suspending or otherwise limiting their usual services and rituals.)<sup>230</sup>

On May 28, media reported that the White House would not release its traditional summer economic projections, because they would be alarming, relative to the expected impact of the pandemic. Both liberal and conservative critics objected.<sup>231</sup> CSD too found the withholding of data when politically convenient to be alarming – the sort of thing that occurs in the world’s most repressive societies.

On June 1, Dr. Fauci said that the coronavirus task force was now meeting rarely, and that he himself no longer met often with Mr. Trump. As the country sped toward re-opening at Mr. Trump’s urging, Dr. Fauci also voiced his concerns about widely reported scenes of Americans commingling in public places without regard to social distancing guidelines.<sup>232</sup>

On June 5, at a press conference Mr. Trump had convened to celebrate the release of better than expected unemployment figures in the face of the coronavirus, he falsely claimed that the country was “largely through” the pandemic. Seats for reporters were spaced more closely together than had been the recent White House practice, in defiance of social distancing guidelines, as though the pandemic had been conquered – even while reported infections and deaths continued to mount daily, and infection rates rose rapidly in many parts of the country.<sup>233</sup>

The Times reported on June 7 that despite the Trump administration (including Secretary of State Mike Pompeo) having boasted about U.S. largesse in delivering emergency coronavirus assistance funding to struggling countries overseas, very little of the congressionally authorized funds had actually been sent.<sup>234</sup>

On June 10, Politico provided an updated overview of some of the more public aspects of the federal coronavirus response, as states barreled toward reopening their economies, and as Mr. Trump seemed bent on ignoring that the pandemic was still raging: daily briefings by the White House task force had been suspended for over a month; the task force now met twice a week rather than daily; Dr. Fauci and other top public health experts were largely silenced from participating in television briefings and congressional hearings; Mr. Trump was preparing to resume his campaign rallies; and he claimed that the virus was nearly vanquished. At the same time, more than 100,000 Americans were contracting the disease every week, and up to 1,000 were dying from it daily.<sup>235</sup>

Media reported on June 11 that the Trump reelection campaign's website promoting Mr. Trump's upcoming rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma – his first since the pandemic had struck deeply in the U.S. – contained a warning that attendees could contract the coronavirus there, as well as a disclaimer (possibly not legally enforceable) that if they did, they couldn't sue the campaign or its affiliates (including, implicitly, Mr. Trump himself). The rally was expected to be packed shoulder to shoulder, but the advertisement mentioned nothing about either social distancing or face masks. One report found the warning and disclaimer to be at odds with Mr. Trump's continuing claims that the pandemic was under control; that is, as though it was under control unless it would cost Mr. Trump money.<sup>236</sup> To CSD, the solicitation appeared to be an invitation to death; and yet another instance of Mr. Trump grasping voraciously, denying all responsibility, and being willing to leave a path of destruction in his wake, blithely.

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 31 – July 22, 2020

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

The current Addendum appears in two parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular chronology. The second part, beginning on p. 41, chronicles events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic.

Date	Episode	Category
6-11-20 +	George Floyd protests. On June 11, as protests sparked by the killing of George Floyd by Minneapolis police continued across the nation for the 17th day, Mr. Trump reacted to widespread, bi-partisan calls for police reform by saying that only a very few “bad apples” among the police had been committing acts of brutality. On June 16, he made similar comments when, under pressure, but flanked by a cordon of police officers, he signed an order encouraging (but not requiring) police departments to improve training and bar chokeholds in most circumstances. He also praised the police effusively, and he said that only they stand between America and anarchy. Although some of his statements had merit, in the round they were consistent with his long years of categorical support for the police, and his occasional, explicit encouragement that police brutalize suspects. 6-11-20 +	[Continued.] A New York Times reporter, however, contrasted that outlook with Mr. Trump’s repeated and fervent complaints against law enforcement authorities when the subjects of enforcement proceedings were himself and his associates (such as Roger Stone, Michael Flynn, Carter Page and Paul Manafort). In those cases, he had repeatedly called the authorities such things as “bad people,” “crooked people,” “human scum,” “dishonest slime bags” and “dirty cops.” The reporter also contrasted Mr. Trump’s pro-police outlook to his demand that those who had investigated him – such as James Comey, Andrew McCabe and Peter Strzok – be prosecuted. (See above in this Chronology for details.) The reporter wrote: “He has been in the cross hairs of so many investigations over so many accusations over so many years that he has adopted the resentment and persecution complex of a serial defendant. He explains away all of the scrutiny as the nefarious plotting of unscrupulous authorities, whether it be the F.B.I., various federal prosecutors, the New York attorney general, the New York local prosecutor or others.”<sup>1</sup> In the following days, media increasingly reported on a phenomenon that had recently appeared in connection with the racial justice protests: violent provocations on the part of the far-right movement known as Boogaloo. Mr. Trump and his Attorney General William Barr had been claiming without evidence that the protests were being led in part by the far-left movement known as antifa. And their claims had spurred a growing and delusional hysteria in towns and smaller cities across America about the threat posed by antifa. But no one from antifa had been arrested in connection with the protests or the urban looting. And Mr. Trump and Barr had not acknowledged the violent actions and intentions of the far right, which according to some observers dwarfed those of the far left.<sup>2</sup> After investigation, on June 22 The Post confirmed that although Mr. Trump had by then blamed antifa at least 20 times for protest-related violence, there had still been no protest-related arrests of self-identified antifa adherents, and no other evidence that antifa was involved.<sup>3</sup> On June 17, Mr. Trump falsely told Fox News that, in response to the protests, presidential contender Joe Biden would abolish police departments nationwide if he were elected.<sup>4</sup> [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11
------------------	--	--------------------------

6-11-20 +	[Continued.] On June 18, in an online interview with his son and campaign surrogate Donald Jr., Mr. Trump said that if he were to lose his bid for reelection in November, the economy would collapse, law enforcement would disappear, and the “whole country will be Minneapolis” (referring to the brief spate of looting there after the killing of Floyd).<sup>5</sup> Also on June 18, Mr. Trump tweeted two doctored and highly misleading campaign videos, portraying the news media as exaggerating racism and thus inflaming the current, broad anti-racism movement.<sup>6</sup> On June 19, ahead of a June 20 reelection rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma, Mr. Trump tweeted: “Any protesters, anarchists, agitators, looters or lowlifes who are going to Oklahoma please understand, you will not be treated like you have been in New York, Seattle, or Minneapolis. It will be a much different scene!”<sup>7</sup> He thus lumped peaceful protesters together with anarchists and looters (as CSD members had recently heard Trump supporters do during several casual conversations in their neighborhoods). Whether in his tweet Mr. Trump was also threatening mass arrests, police brutality or vigilante violence was not clear; but the aroma was. Later in the day he repeated the characterization of the protests to a reporter from Axios, claiming that anarchists, agitators, looters and protesters were “all together.”<sup>8</sup> Not incidentally, as media and Black activists had been publicizing, in 1921 Tulsa had seen one of the most violent white attacks on Black citizens in American history, when up to several hundred Blacks were killed and their relatively prosperous community burnt to the ground.<sup>9</sup> Also not incidentally, Mr. Trump’s campaign had belatedly rescheduled the rally from its original date of June 19, or Juneteenth, the date that many Blacks celebrate the anniversary of their final emancipation from slavery in 1865. Mr. Trump had not been aware of Juneteenth, and he had rescheduled the rally only under pressure from the Black community for dishonoring the holiday; but he now claimed to have voluntarily called the holiday to the nation’s attention for the benefit of the Black community.<sup>10</sup> CSD’s report on the Tulsa rally itself appears at our June 20 entry, below. [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11
------------------	---	--------------------------

6-11-20 +	[Continued.] On June 22, Rudy Giuliani, Mr. Trump’s personal attorney, told Fox News that the Black Lives Matter movement – newly empowered and much more popularly accepted since the killing of George Floyd – wanted to “destroy” the U.S. government, “do away with our system of courts” and “take your property away and give it to other people.”<sup>11</sup> On June 23, Mr. Trump re-tweeted two videos showing individual Black men assaulting white people, coupled with messages decrying the absence of any ensuing protests. The videos did not depict any obviously protest-related events, or any organized Black violence; they simply depicted Black men as violent, lawless, and a threat to white society; and they implied that protests against violence targeting Blacks was unfair to whites.<sup>12</sup> Also on June 23, Mr. Trump tweeted that he would order that anyone toppling Confederate (or other historical) statues be tried and sentenced to up to 10 years in prison. The threat was hollow: local police and prosecutors already had the authority to punish vandalism, and Mr. Trump lacked the authority to direct them to do more.<sup>13</sup> Nevertheless, on June 26, Mr. Trump directed Barr to prioritize the federal prosecution of those who damage federal monuments.<sup>14</sup> (CSD does not defend vandalism; but we find abominable Mr. Trump’s demagoguery in claiming to prioritize this area of law enforcement, as among all the many areas of far more serious criminal activity.) On June 26, The Post reported on Mr. Trump’s one-sided support for the police versus the racial justice protesters during the preceding ten days. The Post summarized recent events as follows: “Over the past week, President Trump has signed an executive order to protect public monuments and statues from vandalism. He accused a Black Lives Matter leader of committing ‘treason.’ He threatened a federal crackdown on protesters and vowed ‘retribution’ against vandals, whom he labeled ‘terrorists.’ And he praised a version of New York City’s ‘stop-and-frisk’ policing strategy that was phased out years ago. [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11
------------------	--	--------------------------

6-11-20 +	[Continued.] “Since signing an executive action on police changes on June 16 in the Rose Garden, Trump has shifted almost exclusively to ‘law-and-order’ rhetoric — while dropping almost any pretense of personally addressing the widespread public anger over police brutality that has sparked nationwide demonstrations. ... “Over the past 11 days, Trump has lashed out against demonstrators repeatedly, and he changed a photo on his Twitter profile to one of him posing with 33 uniformed police officers in front of Air Force One. Ahead of a campaign rally in Tulsa last weekend, he suggested in a tweet that ‘Any protesters, anarchists, agitators, looters or lowlifes’ would be treated more strictly in the Republican-led city than in New York, Seattle or Minneapolis, jurisdictions run by Democrats. ... “And after police thwarted an attempt to topple the statue of Andrew Jackson in Lafayette Square next to the White House last Monday, Trump declared that ‘numerous people are in jail and going to jail today.’ He also said he had authorized 10-year prison terms for “these vandals and these hoodlums and these anarchists and these agitators.”<sup>15</sup> On July 1, in reaction to an order by the mayor of New York City to paint the slogan “Black Lives Matter” in large yellow letters on Fifth Avenue – in the block that runs past Trump Tower – Mr. Trump called the slogan a “symbol of hate” that would “denigrate this luxury Avenue” and the city police.<sup>16</sup> Also on July 1, the FBI reported that gun sales had soared to record levels. “Civil unrest, rioting, looting and calls to defund police are unquestionably motivating factors of why this trend is increasing,” said a gun industry spokesperson.<sup>17</sup> On July 5, a Southeastern Pennsylvania newspaper reported that many of the gun buyers in the state feared an invasion of their (often rural) communities by protesters.<sup>18</sup> CSD sees Mr. Trump as having stoked those delusional fears. On July 2, the White House released a promotional video containing the notorious photo of Mr. Trump lifting the Bible before the church in Lafayette Square that had just been forcibly cleared of peaceful protesters.<sup>19</sup> It was a thumb in the eye of the racial justice movement, and of Mr. Trump’s critics generally. It was also a reminder that Mr. Trump would never admit to past error. [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11
------------------	--	--------------------------

6-11-20 +	[Continued.] On July 3 and 4, at events at Mt. Rushmore and the National Mall in Washington, D.C., Mr. Trump launched merciless, demagogic attacks on the racial justice movement – calling it an attempt to destroy America – and he proclaimed his support for the Confederate flag and statues. (For detail on the two events, see CSD’s report of July 3-4, below in this Addendum.) On July 6, Mr. Trump gratuitously tweeted attacks on NASCAR for banning the display of the Confederate flag, on a NASCAR driver for mistakenly claiming that a noose had been placed in his stall to intimidate him, and on sports franchises that – in response to the still avalanching racial justice movement – were considering dropping team names that dishonored Native Americans.<sup>20</sup> On July 7, The Times reported that, on 66 occasions since the killing of George Floyd, drivers had plowed their vehicles into protesters.<sup>21</sup> On approximately July 16, reports began accumulating of anonymous, armed federal agents – unidentifiable as to either name or federal agency, and often driving unmarked vehicles – abducting and sometimes injuring racial justice protesters in Portland, Oregon. The likely agencies appeared to include Customs and Border Patrol and the U.S. Marshals Service, whose units had not been invited by either the mayor or the governor and instead had been asked to leave. On July 17, Oregon’s Department of Justice sued the federal agencies for civil rights abuses.<sup>22</sup> The Department of Homeland Security on July 20 nevertheless announced that it would shortly be sending federal agents to Chicago; and Mr. Trump threatened to send federal forces to New York, Detroit, Baltimore and Philadelphia as well – all Democratic-controlled cities, and none of them experiencing any sustained civil disorder. He said, “This is worse than anything anyone’s ever seen. And you know what? If Biden got in, that would be true for the country. The whole country would go to hell.”<sup>23</sup> Critics widely pointed to the deployment of anonymous and unaccountable security agents as a tactic often used by authoritarian regimes overseas, and they feared a lawless and ruthless federal power play in the cities.<sup>24</sup> CSD saw in the deployments primarily a different abuse – the demagogic grandstanding of a “big man” (Mr. Trump) in an already fraught election year. [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11
------------------	---	--------------------------

6-11-20 +	[Continued.] On July 17, Defense Secretary Mark Esper – acceding to the demands of U.S. troops and/or much of the country’s general population following the killing of George Floyd – banned the display of the Confederate flag at American military installations. But he took pains not to actually name that flag in his order: instead, he listed flags that could be displayed, rather than ones that couldn’t, and the permitted list didn’t include the Confederate flag. He reportedly took that approach so as to avoid the wrath of Mr. Trump, who had continued to publicly defend the display of the Confederate flag.<sup>25</sup> In a Fox News interview on July 19, Mr. Trump reiterated his support for flying the Confederate flag and the naming of U.S. military bases after Confederate figures. “I don’t care what the military says,” he stated. As to the bases, he mockingly asked, “We’re going to name [them] after the Reverend Al Sharpton?”<sup>26</sup> The Times reported on July 21 that the Trump campaign was now widely distributing television advertisements featuring exaggerated and incendiary footage of violent episodes associated with the racial justice protests in American cities, and linking those episodes to his electoral opponent Joe Biden.<sup>27</sup> Some observers speculated that the violent protests in Portland had actually increased in response to the insertion of federal forces there. Among others,<sup>28</sup> CSD speculated that Mr. Trump had actually hoped for that outcome, and for the opportunity to visually advertise his “law and order” response to it. To be sure, he had rarely before taken actions to benefit American cities.	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11

6-13-20	For the cadets. Mr. Trump addressed the West Point graduating class, after having controversially ordered the cadets back to campus from coronavirus home leave for the sole purpose of having them listen to him speak before television cameras. The returning cadets had had to endure a 14-day quarantine before the event, and, almost surrealistically, during the ceremony they sat on the parade grounds at a safe distance from one another and with no audience. As they listened (or didn't), Mr. Trump boasted about his military achievements, often falsely. The New York Times described some of his exaggerated claims: the size of his defense budgets, his success in defeating the Islamic State, his withdrawal from foreign wars. He said nothing about the very recent near-rebellion of his top military aides – Defense Secretary Mark Esper and Joint Chiefs of Staff chair Mike Milley – over his attempts to manipulate them and to deploy the military in response to the ongoing racial justice protests. Mr. Trump, as is well-known, had avoided military service in his youth. What the capable young Army officers at West Point made of it all wasn't reported.<sup>29</sup>	7, 9, 11
6-14-20 +	The purge: ever deeper, including into the Pentagon. On June 14, Axios reported that Johnny McEntee – who had been fired as Mr. Trump's body man because of his gambling debts and then re-hired to direct the Presidential Personnel Office – was ignoring and even defying cabinet-level officials: by unilaterally reaching into their agencies to purge officials who were seen as insufficiently devoted to Mr. Trump, and to replace them with reliable loyalists.<sup>30</sup> In the days following, news of actual and anticipated purges at the Pentagon emerged.<sup>31</sup> Elaine McCusker, who had previously questioned the withholding of military aid to Ukraine, and had then been denied an expected promotion to comptroller, now resigned altogether.<sup>32</sup> Kathryn Wheelbarger, who had been in line for a senior promotion in intelligence, was now found by the White House to be insufficiently loyal to Mr. Trump.<sup>33</sup> Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman, who had been a key impeachment witness against Mr. Trump after having participated in Mr. Trump's extortionate phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, now seemed at risk of being passed over for a routine promotion in rank.<sup>34</sup> [Continued below.]	17 (9, 11)

6-14-20 +	[Continued.] Current and former Pentagon officials expressed concern that the purges could operate to cripple institutional memory, leave gaps in crucial staffing, chill independent thinking, dissuade talent from working there, and in general politicize the military.<sup>35</sup> On June 25, The Washington Post and The New York Times both reported on additional purges at the Pentagon, reaching deep into middle management to secure loyalty toward Mr. Trump.<sup>36</sup> On July 17, Politico reported similarly, noting that the new appointments, combined with ongoing vacancies in posts that required congressional assent, had resulted in empowering a cadre of often under-experienced loyalists while skirting congressional scrutiny altogether.<sup>37</sup> On July 15, Politico reported, more broadly, that McEntee’s office was now concertedly interrogating hundreds of health officials and other political appointees to determine whether they were sufficiently loyal to Mr. Trump.<sup>38</sup>	17 (9, 11)
6-15-20 +	Gutting asylum. The Department of Homeland Security and the Department of Justice issued a proposed rule which, through dozens of changes in existing law, would materially reduce the availability of asylum in the U.S., including by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Denying asylum to all migrants who had passed through several countries before arriving here (i.e., not only those passing through third countries and then Mexico, for whom the administration had already barred asylum).</li> <li>• Denying asylum to applicants if they couldn’t prove that persecutory laws and policies in their home countries would be applied to them personally (e.g., they could now have to actually be harmed before they could flee and claim asylum here).</li> <li>• Similarly, denying asylum claims based only on harassment, threats and short-term detention in home countries (e.g., they could have to have actually been tortured or shot before claiming asylum here).</li> <li>• Denying the availability of asylum to applicants who had committed a range of technical errors in their applications or their conduct here.</li> <li>• Redefining the very purpose of the asylum system: going forward, as protecting American “resources and citizens” while (only incidentally and skeptically) “aiding those in true need of protection from harm.”</li> </ul> [Continued below.]	6, 14

6-15-20 +	[Continued.] Immigration rights defenders expressed shock at what they perceived as the virtual elimination of asylum in America, and the abandonment of international refugee law. Some said that if the rule were enacted as-is, almost the only people who could fairly hope for asylum would be those who had been grievously persecuted for traditional political or religious reasons in their home countries, who would fly directly to the U.S. from their home countries, and who would be represented by capable counsel immediately upon their arrival here.<sup>39</sup> In an extraordinary condemnation, on July 9 the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees wrote: “The United States has for decades been a global leader in the field of refugee protection, on which the lives and freedom of many depend - providing access to asylum on its territory, resettlement places for extremely vulnerable refugees hosted elsewhere, and as the largest humanitarian donor to refugee programmes around the world. “However, the changes contained in the pending regulation, combined with separate restrictions enacted in recent years, would mean that many people fleeing persecution would be unable to request, or obtain, protection in the United States. “The obligation to provide a safe haven to those fleeing armed conflict, violence or persecution reflects fundamental values rooted in many legal traditions, and is a core aspect of modern international law. We have urged our interlocutors in the government of the United States—and in all governments around the world--to keep this in mind as they decide what policy decisions are appropriate. The timeless beacons of human compassion and moral duty have always been the guiding lights of the U.S. asylum system. At UNHCR, we deeply value our longstanding partnership with the government and the people of the United States. As always, we remain ready to offer the technical expertise we have acquired around the world to support the United States in finding solutions to the challenges it faces today in maintaining an asylum system that is safe, fair and humane.”<sup>40</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 14
------------------	---	--------------

6-15-20 +	[Continued.] In addition to the substance of the proposed asylum rule, the administration gave the public only 30 days in which to comment on the proposal, contrary to the usual 60 days – presumably in an effort to railroad the rule through.	6, 14
6-15-20 +	Bolton tells. On June 15, Mr. Trump threatened to prosecute former national security adviser John Bolton if he were to proceed with the imminent publication of his book about his time in the White House. Mr. Trump implausibly claimed that every conversation he had had with Bolton was classified.<sup>41</sup> On June 16 and again on June 17, the Justice Department sued Bolton, to stop the publication.<sup>42</sup> It was Mr. Trump’s and Attorney General William Barr’s latest deployment of the DOJ’s power to protect and benefit Mr. Trump personally.<sup>43</sup> (See a broad listing of Barr’s complicit actions in CSD’s entry of June 10, above in this Chronology.) On June 17, media nevertheless reported on the contents of an advance copy of the book. Bolton’s general characterizations of Mr. Trump were already well known; but coming from a White House insider they bore added significance; many specifics were new; and they still had shock value. Among other things, Bolton had written that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump pleaded with Chinese President Xi Jinping to help him win reelection in the U.S. – much as he had pressured Ukraine’s president to do.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump encouraged Xi to build mass internment camps for members of China’s Uighur Muslim minority, contrary to all human rights principles.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump did indeed demand a “quid pro quo” from Ukraine’s President Volodymyr Zelensky, conditioning the release of U.S. military assistance on Zelensky publicizing an investigation of Mr. Trump’s electoral opponent, Joe Biden. The Democratic impeachment narrative was largely accurate.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump was an “erratic” and “stunningly uninformed” commander in chief, fixated on pervasive conspiracy theories and relying on his instincts as a reality television showman.</li> <li>• Many foreign leaders, such as Russian President Vladimir Putin, were “happy to take advantage of the U.S. president and attempt to manipulate him, ... often through simplistic appeals to his various obsessions.” [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

6-15-20 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump was consistently opposed to American policy directed at discouraging Russian aggression and sanctioning Putin. “Putin had to be laughing uproariously at what he had gotten away with.” Bolton wrote.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump promised Turkish President Recep Erdogan that he would appoint federal prosecutors who would favor a Turkish company under investigation for violating Iranian sanctions.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump had been on the verge of quitting NATO, and he had to be walked back by Bolton and others.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump didn’t know that Finland was not a part of Russia and that the UK was a nuclear power, until he was informed during his presidency.</li> <li>• Intelligence briefings with Mr. Trump were a waste of time, in that he did all the talking.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump once said that American journalists who declined to reveal their sources should be jailed and executed.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump repeatedly badgered Barr to prosecute former Secretary of State John Kerry for talking with Iran.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump’s chief of staff John Kelly, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and other senior advisors were disgusted and/or frustrated with him.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump and his top advisers regularly attempted to undermine one another, lied to one another, and maneuvered to gain advantage. Mr. Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner, for example, was continually seen as meddling in others’ portfolios.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump once issued a wild statement defending Saudi Arabia’s assassination of The Washington Post’s journalist Jamal Khashoggi to distract from negative news about his daughter Ivanka’s use of a private email account for conducting government business.</li> <li>• For Mr. Trump, “obstruction of justice was a way of life.”</li> <li>• Mr. Trump couldn’t tell the difference between his personal interests and the country’s interests. He made no significant decision that was not intended to advance his prospects for reelection.<sup>44</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
-----------	--	-----------------------------

6-15-20 +	[Continued.] In publicizing his book after those reports, Bolton told ABC News that Mr. Trump was “not fit for office,” that his only guiding principle was his reelection, and that Putin felt he could “play him like a fiddle.”<sup>45</sup> Mr. Trump’s immediate response: calling Bolton a liar, a “boring fool,” a “wacko” and a “dope.” Democrats and mainstream Republicans had themselves long reviled Bolton as obstreperous, overbearing, egocentric, self-righteous and dangerously hawkish in his views on national security issues. Democrats also considered him to have cynically refused to testify about Mr. Trump during the House impeachment hearings so as to protect the anticipated profits from his forthcoming book. But Bolton was not particularly known as a liar. And observers noted the extraordinary churn among Mr. Trump’s top officials despite his boastful proclamations that he hired only the best talent, as well as his extraordinary public spitting contests with top aides after their woeful departures. For example, he had also termed many of his other former senior officials who had been forced out or who had quit in disgust as “dopes”: Defense Secretary James Mattis, chief of staff John Kelly, national security advisor H. R. McMaster, and Attorney General Jeff Sessions.<sup>46</sup> On June 20, a federal judge refused to stop the distribution of Bolton’s book, in part because distribution had already begun. Mr. Trump nevertheless claimed victory (in that the judge also criticized Bolton’s decision to tell all, in contravention of an agreement in place for governmental pre-review of the book).<sup>47</sup> Also on June 20, Mr. Trump tweeted that Bolton “will have bombs dropped on him.” Acting Secretary of Homeland Security Chad Wolf said that Mr. Trump had been joking. But observers noted that had a private citizen made that statement, he or she likely would have been investigated.<sup>48</sup> On June 23, Mr. Trump told Fox News that Bolton should be imprisoned.<sup>49</sup>	1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14
------------------	---	------------------------------------

6-15-20 +	Bailing from VOA. On June 15, the top two executives of Voice of America resigned, after conservative activist Michael Pack – Mr. Trump’s nominee to head VOA’s parent, the U.S. Agency for Global Media – was approved by Senate Republicans to head the respected international broadcast organization. On June 17, Pack fired the heads of at least three media outlets that he had now come to oversee, and he replaced their boards with allies.<sup>50</sup> VOA had been established during World War II to counter Nazi propaganda overseas; it had continued its anti-authoritarian mission through the Cold War; since then it had repeatedly and reciprocally criticized China; and it was followed by 250 million people worldwide, many of them seeking relief from the dishonest propaganda of their own authoritarian governments. But although its charter mandates that its editorial policy be objective and non-partisan, Mr. Trump had been bashing it for its content that displeased him – particularly its failure to have sufficiently demonized China (his erstwhile ally and now his scapegoat) for that country’s handling of the coronavirus pandemic in its early stages. In April he had said, "If you heard what's coming out of the Voice of America, it's disgusting. What – things they say are disgusting toward our country. And Michael Pack would get in and do a great job."<sup>51</sup> If VOA were to become a propaganda arm for Mr. Trump, it would violate its core mission, abuse taxpayer funds to advance his political fortunes, discredit America internationally, and conceivably lose some or much of its audience.<sup>52</sup> It would also discredit America’s advocacy for international press freedom and could facilitate media suppression overseas, as cautioned by Freedom House.<sup>53</sup> See also CSD’s reports of November 26, 2018 and April 10, 2020 (coronavirus section), above in this Chronology, on Mr. Trump’s campaign against VOA.	1, 9
6-15-20 +	If we hide it, it won’t exist. On June 15, Mr. Trump repeated his remarkable statement that if the U.S. did less testing for coronavirus infections, few or no new cases would exist. The statement prompted a Washington Post columnist on June 16 to recite some of the many other ways in which Mr. Trump had sought to make problems disappear by suppressing (or trying to suppress) data about them: [Continued below.]	7, 8, 9

6-18-20 +	Don’t let them vote! On June 18, Mr. Trump told Politico that mail-in voting was the biggest threat to his reelection, and that the election’s outcome could turn on his campaign’s multi-million-dollar legal effort to block voting expansion. He also refused to say whether he would accept the results of the election if he were to lose.<sup>55</sup> [Continued below.]	4, 7, 9

6-18-20 +	[Continued.] On June 21, Attorney General William Barr told Fox News that foreign countries could flood the U.S. electoral system with fraudulent ballots. On June 22, Mr. Trump tweeted that the election was already rigged against him by way of mail-in voting, constituting “THE SCANDAL OF OUR TIMES!” Observers feared that with that claim he could be paving the way to contest an electoral loss in November.<sup>56</sup> On June 24, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had made 60 false claims about mail-in balloting since April, and that five times he had explicitly accused Democrats of “rigging” the election through mail-in voting. The Times also reported that, seemingly in response to the spread of his false conspiracy theory, some culture warriors were burning absentee ballot applications that the states had sent them.<sup>57</sup> An observer wrote in The Washington Post on July 26 that instead of striving energetically to protect the integrity of the upcoming November election, Barr was already subverting it, in four ways. “He’s letting off the hook those who contributed to interference in the last election [by dropping charges against Michael Flynn]; he’s undermining confidence in the government’s ability to protect the coming election [by investigating those who had investigated Russia’s 2016 interference]; he’s signaling to bad actors that helping President Trump win will garner them special treatment under the law [by reducing Roger Stone’s sentence; and by firing U.S. Attorney Geoffrey Berman, who had investigated and prosecuted Mr. Trump’s associates who had sought to criminally influence our elections]; and he’s spreading disinformation about the potential for voter fraud [by disparaging mail-in voting].”<sup>58</sup>	4, 7, 9
6-18-20 +	DACA survives. On June 18, the Supreme Court temporarily voided the Trump administration’s 2017 order to terminate President Obama’s Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program. That program had been protecting from deportation hundreds of thousands of undocumented immigrants – mostly Hispanics – who had been brought here by their parents as children. The Court’s reasoning: that the administration hadn’t given sufficient consideration to important implications of the termination when ordering it, but that it (the administration) could re-do the order and try again.<sup>59</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 9, 10

6-18-20 +	[Continued.] Immigrant rights groups saw the Court’s decision as a major win. From CSD’s perspective, the decision highlighted Mr. Trump’s high-handed and capricious exercise of executive authority; his frequent, abusive and costly attempts to bleed the judicial system by litigating to protect that exercise; and his race-based (as opposed to reason-based) anti-immigration policies. On June 19, Mr. Trump promised to reissue the termination order in a manner that would meet the Supreme Court’s stated requirements. He also claimed, as he had already done through repeated and mysterious double-speak, that he would provide for the DACA beneficiaries better than DACA itself had done, and better than Democrats continued to intend through DACA.<sup>60</sup> He also raged at the Supreme Court, in a manner considered unseemly for presidents before this one.<sup>61</sup>	6, 9, 10
6-19-20	Sue them all! Reacting to the Justice Department’s lawsuit to prevent the publication of former national security advisor John Bolton’s memoir (see CSD’s entry of June 15 +, above), a Washington Post columnist detailed Mr. Trump’s many lawsuits or threats of lawsuits against his critics. Few or none of those actions or threats had held water. The columnist began by noting Mr. Trump’s having threatened only days earlier to sue his niece for writing a book in which she recalled his merciless treatment of some of his family members. He then noted Mr. Trump’s recent threat to sue CNN over its opinion poll that had shown him deeply trailing his electoral opponent Joe Biden (a phenomenon subsequently validated by other polls). He had also recently threatened to sue Facebook for alleged political bias against him. The columnist continued: “Trump’s campaign has sued The Post, the New York Times and CNN, and Trump has threatened to sue Nancy Pelosi, Adam Schiff, Robert Mueller and ‘everyone all over the place’ over the Russia probe. [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11

6-19-20	[Continued.] “Lately he’s been threatening to sue TV stations and a liberal group over ads criticizing his pandemic response. Trump has even threatened to sue China over the coronavirus, and his attorney general, Bill Barr, has threatened to take action against states and municipalities whose pandemic-mitigation orders are too strict. Trump retweeted his son’s proposal that former Trump adviser Michael Flynn, ‘sue the FBI and it’s (sic) corrupt actors for all they’re worth.’ Trump proposed that Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh sue those who accused him of sexual misconduct, and he said somebody should sue the CIA whistleblower’s ‘ass off.’ ... “Since 2015, Trump, his business or the Republican Party have sued or threatened to sue MSNBC, NBC, the Associated Press, the Daily Beast, Univision, an anti-Trump T-shirt maker, authors Michael Wolff and David Cay Johnston, Texas Sen. Ted Cruz (R), former Ohio governor John Kasich (R), a Jeb Bush supporter, a super PAC, the Republican Party, sanctuary cities, former aide Steve Bannon, former Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid, the U.S. Golf Association, a 92-year-old widow in Scotland, the women who alleged he sexually assaulted them, the co-author of his own memoir, the Club for Growth, the Culinary Workers Union, the National Hispanic Media Coalition, the organizer of a ‘Dump Trump’ campaign, the city of Minneapolis, and an artist who painted a nude of him. “Before that, he sued or threatened to sue the Los Angeles Times, USA Today, a Chicago Tribune architecture critic, Bill Maher, the now-deceased rapper Mac Miller, the Village Voice, ABC and the BBC, a random Twitter user, a woman critical of Trump University, a critic of his golf courses, a Miss USA contestant, Rosie O’Donnell, the Obama Justice Department, and the Onion.” CSD views Mr. Trump’s routine, meritless lawsuits and threats of lawsuits as essentially extortionate – intended to intimidate and drain the finances of his critics – and the actual lawsuits as potentially sanctionable by courts as frivolous and abusive of the judicial system.	9, 10, 11

6-19-20 +	Barr dismisses prosecutor. On June 19, Attorney General William Barr announced that Geoffrey Berman, the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York, was resigning. Berman was investigating or prosecuting (or had already investigated or prosecuted) many individuals and enterprises tied to Mr. Trump: his current personal attorney Rudy Giuliani, for campaign contributions and for working in Ukraine to help Mr. Trump’s campaign; Lev Parnas and Igor Furman, Giuliani’s collaborators in the Ukraine scandal; Michael Cohen, Mr. Trump’s personal attorney, for campaign finance violations benefitting Mr. Trump (and in which Mr. Trump had been an active participant); Mr. Trump’s inaugural committee, for unlawful foreign contributions; a Turkish bank for which, according to former national security advisor John Bolton’s about-to-be-released memoir, Mr. Trump had promised Turkey’s autocratic leader Recep Erdogan he would intervene. Berman also was reportedly investigating Deutsche Bank in its capacity as the Trump Organization’s largest lender. Barr said in his statement that Mr. Trump had nominated as Berman’s replacement Jay Clayton, a corporate lawyer who had once represented Deutsche Bank. At the time of the announcement, Clayton headed the Securities and Exchange Commission. He had sometimes golfed with Mr. Trump. But he had no prosecutorial or litigation experience, and no work experience with the S.D.N.Y. – the ordinary requisites for becoming the U.S. attorney there. Berman promptly said that he had no intention of resigning until the Senate confirmed his successor. On June 20, Barr fired him. Barr said he was acting on Mr. Trump’s request. Mr. Trump said that it was all on Barr. Presumably to avoid media attention, Barr’s initial announcement had occurred late on a Friday, as had many recent firings of inspectors general by the administration (see CSD’s entries of April 22 + and May 15 +).<sup>62</sup> It had also coincided with the run-up to Mr. Trump’s controversial campaign rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma that Saturday; and Barr may have seen that rally as likely to obscure the sordid dismissal in the news.<sup>63</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 12, 15, 16
------------------	--	----------------------

6-19-20 +	[Continued.] Indeed, Barr seemed to CSD to now be pulling out all stops to advance Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign. He also seemed to be bent on protecting Mr. Trump from personal liability, in that the end of his presidency would mark the end of his presidential immunity from prosecution. In those regards, see CSD’s entry of June 15 +, above, on Barr’s efforts to block the distribution of John Bolton’s memoir; and the broad listing of Barr’s efforts to facilitate Mr. Trump’s authoritarian designs in our entry of June 10 in the preceding Addendum. As if establishing a template for Barr’s firing of Berman, Mr. Trump himself had fired James Comey as FBI director because of Comey’s refusal to stop the Russia investigations.<sup>64</sup> Berman’s firing reportedly caused morale among DOJ line prosecutors to plunge even further, in the face of the continuing politicization of the department.<sup>65</sup> On June 25, The New York Times reported that Barr had previously attempted to intervene in the prosecution of Cohen, a new revelation.<sup>66</sup>	9, 12, 15, 16
6-20-20	In Oklahoma. Mr. Trump held his first rally since the coronavirus lockdowns had begun. The venue was Tulsa, Oklahoma. Controversy had preceded the event: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Attendees would not be required to wear face masks.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump himself would not be wearing a mask.</li> <li>• As an indoor rally, it would almost certainly result in the spread of the coronavirus.</li> <li>• Even as the racial justice movement continued to sweep the country, the Tulsa venue had been selected and maintained notwithstanding its implicit connection to racial injustice. Tulsa had been the site of the massacre of up to several hundred Black people in 1921, one of the worst episodes of anti-Black violence in American history.</li> <li>• Equally oblivious to the racial justice movement, the date for the event had originally been set for the previous evening, Juneteenth – the holiday celebrated by many Black Americans commemorating the anniversary of the final emancipation of slaves in 1865. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	1, 6, 7, 9, 11

6-20-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• At the rally, Mr. Trump was expected to stoke racial and cultural hatreds at a time of enormous national division in those areas.</li> </ul> As to that last item, Mr. Trump did not disappoint. He said nothing about Juneteenth, the 1921 massacre or the killing of George Floyd. He offered no words of comfort to families who had lost loved ones to the coronavirus. He made no attempt at delivering unifying remarks. Rather, his lengthy speech was an exercise in fomentation, an incitement to anger and fear. He disparaged the wearing of face masks to protect against the pandemic; he railed at “radical protesters” and “violent” and “radical extremists,” strongly implying that all of the protesters were violent and radical; he sketched a scenario in which a woman could be raped by a “tough hombre” (a Hispanic?) in her home if Democrats were to defund the police; he raged about a flag-burning at one of the protests, and vowed to make such acts punishable by imprisonment (he couldn’t: the Supreme Court had found flag-burning to be protected speech decades before); he attacked NFL players who knelt to protest police brutality; he singled out several Black congresswomen of color for special disdain; and he defended at length the Confederate statues that some protesters and other advocates were seeking to have removed from public spaces. As for the statues, he said, in a manner that for CSD was reminiscent of old-style segregationist demagoguery: “The unhinged left-wing mob is trying to vandalize our history, desecrate our monuments, our beautiful monuments. Tear down our statues and punish, cancel and persecute anyone who does not conform to their demands for absolute and total control. We’re not conforming, that’s why we’re here, actually. This cruel campaign of censorship and exclusion violates everything we hold dear as Americans. They want to demolish our heritage so they can impose their new oppressive regime in its place. . . . [Then the rape fantasy scenario.] So if you want to save ... that beautiful heritage of ours [that is, Confederate statues and unsoiled white women], we have a great heritage. We’re a great country. You are so lucky I’m president, that’s all I can tell you.” [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 9, 11
----------------	---	-----------------------

6-20-20	[Continued.] On other matters, Mr. Trump boasted and preened. He said that he alone had saved the country from hundreds of thousands of coronavirus deaths (even though he had actually resisted the entire public health effort), and that he had colossally advanced racial justice (which was likewise delusional). For good measure, seeking to scapegoat China for the pandemic and to not leave any racist sentiment unstated, he referred to Covid-19 as the “kung flu.” He also raged at the media – among other things insisting for over 15 minutes that the press had falsely characterized what had seemed to be his physically impaired gait when descending a ramp at the West Point graduation, and his holding of a water glass there with two hands. The audience, nevertheless, seemed enraptured. Some chanted, “Lock her up!” (still, about Hillary Clinton). Some wore Confederate flags. Some carried signs in support of the right-wing conspiracy theory movement, QAnon. Others denied to a reporter that the coronavirus even existed. Civilians carrying military-style rifles and pistols wandered among the crowd.<sup>67</sup> All that was missing were torches and pitchforks. As for the election itself, Mr. Trump said, “If the Democrats gain power, then the rioters will be in charge and no one will be safe and no one will have control. Joe Biden is not the leader of his party. Joe Biden is a helpless puppet of the radical left.”<sup>68</sup>	1, 6, 7, 9, 11
6-22-20	Obama’s “treason.” In an interview with the Christian Broadcasting Network, Mr. Trump accused President Obama of having committed “treason.”<sup>69</sup> Treason is commonly defined as a betrayal of or an attempt to overthrow one’s own government. Mr. Trump had frequently accused others of treason – for investigating him and for charging him with crimes and other offenses during his presidency – but never before had he accused one of his predecessors in office. His accusation now, for which he had no evidence, and which he had launched often before without calling it “treason”: that President Obama had spied on his campaign prior to the 2016 election. How that could have amounted to “treason” when Mr. Trump did not then even hold office was unclear.	7, 9, 11

6-22-20	New visa restrictions. Mr. Trump ordered a new, temporary round of restrictions on the issuance of work visas to foreigners, citing the coronavirus pandemic as grounds for protecting American jobs. The order filled some of the holes in his earlier, failed attempt to restrict the visas (see CSD’s entry of April 22, above in this Chronology). Because its effect could be to cripple scientific, technological and medical innovation, business leaders and research universities were aghast. The likely intention was to keep Asians and other non-whites from American shores, based on Mr. Trump’s many other undertakings in that direction since his election; or simply to facilitate Mr. Trump’s reelection by portions of the public susceptible to his racist demagoguery.<sup>70</sup>	6
6-23-20 +	Stone sentencing, explained. Aaron Zelinsky, a prosecutor who had withdrawn from the Roger Stone case in February after DOJ leaders had announced their recommendation for a lighter sentence for Stone than the line prosecutors (including Zelinsky) had advanced, said that he would shortly testify before the House Judiciary Committee. His forthcoming testimony: that the line prosecutors had been pressured by DOJ to be lenient on Stone for political reasons. Stone was Mr. Trump’s long-standing friend and political advisor. Zelinsky’s accusation was stunning. (See CSD’s entry of February 11 + above in this Chronology, for the details of DOJ’s interference in the Stone affair as they had transpired.) Contemporaneously, another prosecutor, John Elias, said that he would testify that the DOJ had initiated two anti-trust investigations for political reasons. One of the investigations had been brought against a marijuana company merger because Attorney General William Barr opposed marijuana use. The other had been brought against several car manufacturers because they had agreed to adopt California’s tough auto emissions standards in defiance of Mr. Trump’s laissez-faire environmental agenda.<sup>71</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 16

6-23-20 +	[Continued.] On June 24 all of that testimony did occur. At least one Democratic witness, a former deputy attorney general who had been appointed by President Bush 41, characterized Barr as broadly corrupt in his politicization of the DOJ. The scene in Congress was reportedly as polarized as the impeachment hearings had been, replete with shouting matches between Democratic and Republican representatives. Jim Jordan (R-OH), one of Mr. Trump’s most ferocious and cynical defenders in the impeachment proceedings, said that Barr “is doing the Lord’s work,” and that it was the Obama DOJ that had been corrupt. Also remarkable was that Zelinsky and Elias were willing and eager to testify, and thus to test Barr’s retaliatory wrath, even though they were still actively working at the DOJ.<sup>72</sup>	2, 9, 16
6-23-20	Packing the census office. The Trump administration named two high-level political appointees to help oversee the ongoing decennial census. Reportedly they had no pertinent skills and no particular job descriptions – the positions were created specifically for them. Observers feared that their mandate could be, in an unprecedented manner, to manipulate otherwise scientifically assembled census results for political purposes, consistent with Mr. Trump’s campaign earlier in his presidency to suppress minority participation in the census (see above in this Chronology, and the 7-21-20 entry below).<sup>73</sup>	8, 9
6-23-20 +	Whose human rights? The New York Times reported that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo’s panel on human rights, created in July 2019, was moving toward releasing a controversial report in early July 2020. In that report, the panel and he were expected to redefine “human rights” along the lines of his own religion, evangelical Christianity, and away from long-standing international norms. Among other things, the panel’s report was expected to elevate religious freedom above other human rights, and to downplay (or to eliminate from the definition of human rights altogether) certain gender and reproductive rights, in favor of someone’s idea of God-given, “natural law.” Critics charged that, by cherry-picking only certain human rights for recognition, the panel could encourage non-democratic countries to do the same (that is, more than they were already doing) and to dismiss U.S. advocacy for human rights as hypocritical.<sup>74</sup> [Continued below.]	17 (1, 6, 9, 14)

6-23-20 +	[Continued.] The panel had been controversial since its inception. In 2019 hundreds of human rights organizations, faith leaders, foreign policy experts and civil liberties groups had objected to its creation. It was staffed largely by conservative academics, and the objections had included that the uniformity of views defied federal law governing such panels.<sup>75</sup> On July 16, Pompeo announced the issuance of the panel’s report, and he confirmed its anticipated content. In the same breath he accused racial justice protesters of attacking “the American way of life,” and the New York Times of supporting Marxist ideology.<sup>76</sup> (CSD reported on the efforts of the Trump administration to favor evangelical notions of human rights and religious freedom in our entry of June 29, 2018. But we intentionally had not reported on Pompeo’s panel at the time he created it in 2019; we had wanted to wait to see its actual output before condemning it – which we now do.)	17 (1, 6, 9, 14)
6-23-20	In Arizona. Mr. Trump triumphantly visited a section of his “new” border wall in Arizona, almost all of it actually replacement of dilapidated existing wall. There he elicited (and possibly had solicited) effusive praise from hand-picked border and immigration officials for his hard-line stance on immigration issues. He then held a campaign rally for a group of college students at a Phoenix megachurch. There the cheering indoor crowd was tightly packed and largely mask-less, as was Mr. Trump himself – even though coronavirus cases in that state were experiencing a record surge, even though a recent ordinance required masks, and even though the (Democratic) mayor had pleaded that attendees be required to wear them. In his address Mr. Trump falsely said that the coronavirus was “going away.” He again referred to it xenophobically as the “kung flu.” And he charged that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi had danced “in the streets of Chinatown” after he had imposed a ban on in-bound China travel with a view to stemming the spread of the virus. (She had not danced; she had walked amid a crowd to demonstrate support for, and the safety of, the ethnic commercial district at a time when Mr. Trump was vilifying China.) [Continued below.]	1, 4, 6, 7, 9, 11

6-23-20	[Continued.] Mr. Trump’s themes that evening included his defense of Confederate statues, his threats against those who would remove them, and his condemnation of racial justice protesters. Seeming to seek to stir ethnic and cultural division, he characterized Democrats as intolerant and “totalitarian”; he falsely said that they wanted to let non-citizens vote; he said, “They hate our history, they hate our values, and they hate everything we prize as Americans”; and he said, “The left-wing mob is trying to demolish our heritage, so they can replace it with a new oppressive regime that they alone control.” In a shout-out to the wolf-pack-like insecurities and resentments of adolescents (of all ages), he thundered, “Our people are stronger and our people are smarter and we are the elite.” Similarly for the ears of the pack-like, and betraying his own fixation on physical appearances, he urged the students toward a sort of exclusive fraternity/sorority fantasy when, comparing them to Democrats, he cried, “You’re smarter. You’re better looking. You have a better future.” (Indeed, in the news photos, the crowd looked almost entirely white – as if that was his idea of “better looking.”) He also denounced mail-in voting. Seemingly preparing the nation for him challenging a loss at the polls in November, he said, “This will be, in my opinion, the most corrupt election in the history of our country.” He also flogged the mainstream press.<sup>77</sup>	1, 4, 6, 7, 9, 11
6-24-20	No problem with Poland. After meeting at the White House with Polish President Andrzej Duda, Mr. Trump praised his “vigilant efforts to uphold the rule of law.” But Duda was widely seen in Europe and the U.S. as increasingly authoritarian. Contrary to presidential custom, Mr. Trump also effectively endorsed Duda in the latter’s quest for reelection, and he said, “I have a very good personal relationship with the president.” Duda had earlier proposed to host a base for U.S. troops in Poland and to name it “Fort Trump.”<sup>78</sup>	9, 11, 12

6-26-20	Still killing Obamacare ... and people. The Trump administration continued its crusade to destroy the Affordable Care Act (“Obamacare”), by filing a brief with the Supreme Court in support of litigation brought by a coalition of Republican attorneys general to nullify the statute in its entirety. The move came amid the coronavirus pandemic, when millions of Americans were looking to that program to help themselves and their families stay alive and healthy.<sup>79</sup> As before, CSD does not take a position with respect to the ACA – only against Mr. Trump’s reckless and vengeful effort to eliminate it, seemingly out of spite for President Obama, while not having an alternative insurance program in place.<sup>80</sup>	11
6-26-20	Stealing for the wall. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that Mr. Trump’s theft of $2.5 billion in congressionally appropriated military funds for use in constructing his border wall was unconstitutional.<sup>81</sup>	9
6-26-20 +	Bounties for American troops. The New York Times reported on June 26 that U.S. intelligence had learned in March that Russian military intelligence had secretly offered bounties to Taliban-linked militants to kill American troops in Afghanistan.<sup>82</sup> CNN then observed that, since that discovery, Mr. Trump had made no public statement about it, but instead had invited Russia to rejoin the G-7, and – to Russia’s advantage – had announced the removal of 9,000 U.S. troops from Germany.<sup>83</sup> On June 28, The Washington Post reported that the bounties were believed to have resulted in several American deaths.<sup>84</sup> On June 29, reports appeared that Mr. Trump had received written briefings on the Russian bounties as far back as early 2019 – which would establish that he had engaged in many more pro-Russia activities than noted above since having first learned of the bounties.<sup>85</sup> As outrage swelled across party lines, Mr. Trump denied having ever been briefed on the matter, and he called the entire affair a “Fake News Media Hoax.” The mainstream media, in turn, speculated that Mr. Trump had not read the written intelligence briefs on the matter when they had been placed before him; that he had read them but ignored them; and/or that his senior-most intelligence and security advisers had been too intimidated by him to bring him negative reports about Russia.<sup>86</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 12

6-28-20, 6-29-20	The tweeting disease. On June 28, Mr. Trump retweeted a video of one of his Florida supporters shouting “White Power!”<sup>88</sup> Heedless of the instant public blow-back, the next day he posted a video of a white Missouri couple brandishing guns in front of their home as peaceful racial justice protesters passed.<sup>89</sup>	5, 6
6-30-20	Unfit, by acclaim. Writing for CNN, legendary Watergate reporter Carl Bernstein reported that numerous White House and intelligence officials had described to him their concerns about Mr. Trump’s telephone calls with various heads of state. The U.S. officials had said that Mr. Trump was “so consistently unprepared for discussion of serious issues, so often outplayed in his conversations with powerful leaders like Russian President Vladimir Putin and Turkish President Recep Erdogan, and so abusive to leaders of America’s principal allies, that the calls helped convince some senior US officials -- including his former secretaries of state and defense, two national security advisers and his longest-serving chief of staff -- that the President himself posed a danger to the national security of the United States.” Bernstein wrote that the calls caused national security advisers H.R. McMaster and John Bolton, Defense Secretary James Mattis, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, and White House chief of staff John Kelly, among others, to conclude that Mr. Trump was often "delusional" when speaking with his international counterparts. According to Bernstein, “there was little evidence that the President became more skillful or competent in his telephone conversations with most heads of state over time. Rather, he continued to believe that he could either charm, jawbone or bully almost any foreign leader into capitulating to his will, and often pursued goals more attuned to his own agenda than what many of his senior advisers considered the national interest.” [Continued below.]	10, 11, 12, 13, 14

6-30-20	[Continued.] Mr. Trump’s servility toward Putin, and Erdogan’s access to Mr. Trump at will, were particularly shocking to the U.S. officials; and together with his ignorance of Middle Eastern history and his disregard for American and humanitarian interests, his inexplicable deference to them resulted in his giving away Syria to Russia and Turkey. Equally alarming for the officials was his regular bullying and demeaning of British Prime Minister Theresa May and German Chancellor Angela Merkel in “near-sadistic” diatribes; the “whippings” he delivered to French President Emanuel Macron, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, and Australian Prime Minister Scott Morrison; his fixation on America’s allies as “ripping [him personally] off”; his consistent boasting of his wealth, genius and accomplishments; and his consistent disparagement of Presidents Bush and Obama. Bernstein wrote: “The insidious effect of the conversations comes from Trump’s tone, his raging outbursts at allies while fawning over authoritarian strongmen, his ignorance of history and lack of preparation as much as it does from the troubling substance. ... Two sources compared many of the President’s conversations with foreign leaders to Trump’s recent press ‘briefings’ on the coronavirus pandemic: free form, fact-deficient stream-of-consciousness ramblings, full of fantasy and off-the-wall pronouncements based on his intuitions, guesswork, the opinions of Fox News TV hosts and social media misinformation.” Mr. Trump would rarely read his briefing materials before meetings, wrote Bernstein. But he would sometimes include his daughter Ivanka and his son-in-law Jared Kushner in the meetings, after which they would praise his performance while knowledgeable officials had blanched at it. One U.S. official said, “It was like the United States had disappeared. It was always ‘Just me’.”<sup>90</sup> Bernstein’s report made no particular waves in the media. CSD concluded that revelations about Mr. Trump’s depravity had long ago become so routine as to barely merit a yawn. We nevertheless commend the article to our readers, for the sake of the historical record.	10, 11, 12, 13, 14

7-3-20, 7-4-20	On the Fourth. At an Independence Day event on July 3, and at taxpayer expense, Mr. Trump conducted what was effectively a campaign event at Mt. Rushmore, South Dakota. An estimated 3700 people attended. He arrived with pomp. Military planes flew overhead. With the sculptures of past presidents towering in the background, and deploying his demagogic rhetoric to its utmost, he denounced the racial justice movement sparked by the recent killing of George Floyd by police in Minnesota, including the movement to remove Confederate statues from public spaces. He said, “Our nation is witnessing a merciless campaign to wipe out our history, defame our heroes, erase our values and indoctrinate our children. ... Angry mobs are trying to tear down statues of our founders, deface our most sacred memorials and unleash a wave of violent crime in our cities.” He called out the “left-wing mob,” “violent mayhem,” “far-left fascism,” the “totalitarianism” of the protesters, and an “attack on our liberty.” He said, “This left-wing cultural revolution is designed to overthrow the American revolution.” He said of participants in the racial justice movement, “They think the American people are weak and soft and submissive. But no, the American people are strong and proud, and they will not allow our country and all of its values, history and culture to be taken from them.” He warned that “angry mobs” sought to “unleash a wave of violent crime in our cities.” He also warned, “Their goal is not a better America; their goal is the end of America.” He said that the protesters were “driving people from their jobs, shaming dissenters and demanding total submission from anyone who disagrees.” He vowed that Mount Rushmore “will never be desecrated. These heroes will never be disgraced. Their legacy will never, ever be destroyed. Their achievements will never be forgotten. And this monument will stand forever as an eternal tribute to our forefathers and our freedom.” He intoned, “We will not be tyrannized, we will not be demeaned, and we will not be intimidated by bad, evil people.” [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11
---------------------------	---	----------------------------------

7-3-20, 7-4-20	[Continued.] Mr. Trump made no mention of the victims of police violence, and he offered no bridge to concerns of African Americans or the protesters. Instead, he promised to imprison statutory vandals for up to ten years. He railed at athletes who had knelt to protest racial injustice. He promised to keep building his border wall, to defend the 2nd Amendment, and to put “America first.” The crowd stood and applauded, while chanting, “USA! USA!” and “Four more years!” On another topic (or its absence): amid a record-breaking surge in coronavirus infections nationally, Mr. Trump barely mentioned the pandemic, which had so far killed more than 126,000 Americans. He did not wear a mask, nor did most of the members of his audience (who also did not socially distance). After he spoke, the sky was lit with majestic fireworks – which Mr. Trump had ordered despite (and likely because of) environmentalists’ concerns about wildfires.<sup>91</sup> On July 4, Mr. Trump reprised that performance, now at the National Mall in Washington, D.C. – defying the entreaties of the District’s government not to hold the event due to coronavirus fears. Again, thousands of people attended. As at Mt. Rushmore, there were fireworks, a military flyover, few face masks and no obvious social distancing. And as before, taxpayers funded the event, even though it was effectively a campaign rally. Mr. Trump said, “American heroes defeated the Nazis, dethroned the fascists, toppled the communists, saved American values, upheld American principles and chased down the terrorists to the very ends of the earth. We are now in the process of defeating the radical left, the Marxists, the anarchists, the agitators, the looters and people who in many instances have absolutely no clue what they are doing.” He said that the racial justice protesters “want us to be ashamed of who we are, [they’re] not interested in justice or healing. Their goal is demolition. Of the media, he said: “The more you lie, the more you slander ... the more we will work hard to tell the truth, and we will win.” [Continued below.]	1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11
---------------------------	--	----------------------------------

7-3-20, 7-4-20	[Continued.] To the crowd’s cheers, Mr. Trump blamed China for initiating the coronavirus pandemic. Citing made-up statistical data, he trivialized the medical risk posed by the disease (claiming that 99% of cases were “totally harmless”), and he stated without evidence that the U.S. would have an effective treatment or vaccine “long before the end of the year.”<sup>92</sup> Such were Mr. Trump’s odes to America’s independence, to our founding fathers, and to our spirit of reason, liberty and equality. After having defined Mexicans, Muslims and the Washington “swamp” in his 2016 presidential campaign as America’s mortal enemies, and after having done the same with Central Americans during the 2018 midterm campaign, he was now so defining millions of regular citizens – in a pointed effort to divide the country, and somehow through that to remain in power.<sup>93</sup> As if to foreshadow that theme, earlier in the day Trump supporters on motorcycles and the Proud Boys (a far-right hate group) had gathered on the Mall and the city’s streets menacingly.<sup>94</sup>	1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11
7-6-20	Finished with Fox? Not likely. Mr. Trump tweeted that viewers should no longer watch Fox News because the network had reported a survey showing him trailing Joe Biden in the current presidential election campaign. He also tweeted a claim that 96% of Republicans approved of his performance, in contradiction of actual polling numbers, and without identifying the source of his figure.<sup>95</sup>	1, 7, 11
7-7-20	QAnon: the conspiracy lives. Media Matters reported that Mr. Trump had retweeted posts by QAnon-inspired Twitter accounts at least 185 times during his presidency. QAnon is a movement founded on a conspiracy theory that abjures “deep state” control of the government, and that sees Mr. Trump as the deep state’s nemesis. During his presidency, QAnon adherents had provoked multiple acts of violence across the county, and the FBI had identified it as a potential source of domestic terrorism.<sup>96</sup>	7, 9

7-8-20	Vindman retires. Lt. Colonel Alexander Vindman announced that he would be retiring from the Army, owing to “bullying, intimidation and retaliation” by the Trump administration.<sup>97</sup> During and after testifying against Mr. Trump in the latter’s impeachment proceedings, Vindman had been harassed and professionally sidelined. More recently, continuing through the week of Vindman’s retirement, Mr. Trump had been seen as opposing his promotion to full colonel (see CSD’s entry of June 14 + above), and as pressuring the Pentagon to not recommend him for promotion – threats that had brought wide media attention. Only Mr. Trump himself could actually effect the promotion. With the news of Vindman’s retirement came news that Defense Secretary Mark Esper had in fact recommended his promotion to Mr. Trump.<sup>98</sup> But also came news that senior Army officials had told Vindman that he would no longer be deployable in his area of expertise, which included Ukraine, and that he could be punished by being placed in some “rehabilitative assignment” – e.g., in a role that could be geographically remote, physically uncomfortable, pointless, and/or humiliating. Vindman appeared to have fore seen that even had he received his promotion, his effectiveness in the Army would continue to be hampered, and his life there would continue to be miserable.<sup>99</sup> Once again, Mr. Trump had wreaked vengeance, emasculated the military, and made a mockery of the rule of law.	9, 11
7-9-20	Gagging Cohen. Mr. Trump’s former personal lawyer and fixer Michael Cohen was returned to federal prison from coronavirus home furlough for refusing to agree to not publish his memoir until after the November 2020 election. Cohen was serving time for helping Mr. Trump hide several extra-marital affairs so as to facilitate Mr. Trump’s 2016 election. He had been writing his book in prison, then at home, but now he was placed in solitary confinement and deprived of even a computer. The episode came on the heels of failed efforts by Mr. Trump and his family, respectively, to stop the publication of tell-all books written by former national security advisor John Bolton and Mr. Trump’s niece Mary Trump.<sup>100</sup> If Cohen was to be believed, it was difficult for CSD to imagine any legal theory that would justify the denial of his constitutional right to publish, given that the denial was intended to last only until the 2020 election.	9

7-9-20 +	The records. The Supreme Court ruled 7-2 that Mr. Trump must honor a New York State subpoena to produce his tax returns and other financial records in connection with the state’s investigation of possible financial crimes that he may have committed prior to becoming president. But notwithstanding the split ruling, the Justices unanimously agreed that, pursuant to established legal precedent, his claim for immunity from investigation for private acts committed before he was president was preposterous. The Court remanded the case to a lower court for further procedural arguments; and thus Mr. Trump, through his time-tested practice of beating every legal case to death, succeeded in postponing the final outcome until after the upcoming November election.<sup>101</sup> Mr. Trump claimed victory in the matter. He nevertheless reacted with a semi-coherent Twitter tirade about the decision, to the effect that he was being persecuted, and that some or all Democrats were criminals.<sup>102</sup> On July 15, he confirmed that he would continue fighting the subpoena in court.<sup>103</sup> Mr. Trump was the first recent president to refuse to disclose his tax returns during his campaign and after his election. When campaigning he had promised to do so; then he had reneged; then he had stonewalled, and he continued to stonewall, even as the allegations about his illegal personal dealings had flowered.	9
7-10-20	Stone is free. On a Friday night and thus out of the media’s glare, Mr. Trump commuted the sentence of convicted felon Roger Stone. Stone was his long-time friend and political advisor, and a self-professed “dirty trickster” who had gotten his start with and who still idolized Richard Nixon. Mr. Trump – who had been campaigning for reelection on the theme of “law and order” – had now continued his practice (detailed above in this Chronology) of granting clemency to criminals out of personal affinity with them or for political gain. The New York Times now attributed such motives to 31 of Mr. Trump’s 36 grants of clemency.<sup>104</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 9, 11, 16

7-10-20	[Continued.] Stone, who from all accounts was one of the most shameless, ruthless and dishonest men on earth, had lived the life of a libertine and had even threatened the life of his trial judge. He had been convicted of thwarting congressional and FBI investigations – actions he appeared to have taken to protect Mr. Trump from exposure relative to Russian interference in the 2016 election. He had subsequently made public statements to the effect that he would never turn on Mr. Trump, and that he expected clemency in return. After the commutation, observers concluded that that expectation (or transaction) had indeed been fulfilled: by Mr. Trump’s order, he had escaped jail time altogether, as well as probation and the fine that had been assessed against him.<sup>105</sup> For the avoidance of doubt: Mr. Trump commuted the sentence of a principal enabler of his own treachery, to reward him for remaining silent. Critics called the commutation – committed in broad daylight – one of the most corrupt episodes in modern American history.<sup>106</sup> In justifying the commutation, the White House issued a statement that bore the appearance of Mr. Trump’s hand, “Roger Stone is a victim of the Russia Hoax that the Left and its allies in the media perpetuated for years in an attempt to undermine the Trump Presidency.”<sup>107</sup> (See also CSD’s entry of February 11 in this Chronology, above. In an unprecedented move, Attorney General William Barr had intervened in the Stone case at that time so as to reduce Stone’s sentence – seemingly to please Mr. Trump.)	2, 9, 11, 16
7-10-20	The dictator of education. Mr. Trump tweeted that he had directed the Treasury Department to reexamine the tax-exempt status and funding of universities and school systems if they “indoctrinate” children with “propaganda.”<sup>108</sup> (He had previously directed that churches be allowed to retain their tax-exempt status despite propagating political views.) Mr. Trump meanwhile had demanded that public schools re-open in the fall notwithstanding the raging coronavirus pandemic, yet he had refused to issue guidelines for how schools should re-open safely. His was a flamboyant demand for the ears of his supporters, but an utter abrogation of responsibility for what action was needed.	9

7-10-20 +	My DHS. On July 10, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump was deploying Department of Homeland Security personnel to surveil cities experiencing civil disorder in connection with racial justice protests and to guard statues from being vandalized. Some 2,000 of the agency’s security personnel, including Coast Guard and Border Patrol staff, were now designated to guard federal property from the “lawlessness sweeping our nation.” DHS had been created after the September 11 attacks to respond to threats such as foreign terrorism and natural disasters and to administer immigration laws. But Mr. Trump had deployed much of the department’s resources to building his border wall. And he now appeared to be using it to showcase his profile as a “law and order” strongman – while diverting agency resources from such essential tasks as fighting the coronavirus pandemic, responding to hurricanes, and safeguarding elections from foreign hackers.<sup>109</sup> As reported above (June 10 +) in the entry addressing Mr. Trump’s response to the racial justice movement, in the following week security agents deployed by DHS and other federal agencies but masking their identities were found to be arresting and sometimes injuring racial justice protesters in Portland, Oregon. The units had not been invited by either the mayor or the governor, who instead had asked them to leave. Critics pointed to the deployment of anonymous and unaccountable security agents as a tactic often used by authoritarian regimes overseas. On July 17, Oregon’s Department of Justice sued the federal agencies for civil rights abuses.<sup>110</sup>	6, 9, 11
7-11-20	The press briefings devolve. In a guest column in The Washington Post, the president of the White House Correspondents’ Association – a veteran ABC News reporter who was currently covering the White House – characterized the press briefings then being conducted by press secretary Kayleigh McEnany as dysfunctional. He wrote that the press secretary’s job, funded by taxpayers, is to inform the press about the administration’s actions and plans, but that McEnany was now beginning and ending briefings with purely political rants, and in between was dodging reporters’ questions while obfuscating Mr. Trump’s intentions and deeds. All press secretaries, of course, have been partisans and spin artists; but the columnist saw McEnany as dropping any pretense to factual utility.<sup>111</sup>	17 (1, 7)

7-13-20	Fact Checker surpasses 20,000. The Washington Post’s Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now made over 20,000 false or misleading statements during his presidency, with an average of 23 per day over the past 14 months. False or misleading claims about the coronavirus pandemic approached 1,000. The Post wrote: “The notion that Trump would exceed 20,000 claims before he finished his term appeared ludicrous when The Fact Checker started this project during the president’s first 100 days in office. In that time, Trump averaged fewer than five claims a day, which would have added up to about 7,000 claims in a four-year presidential term. But the tsunami of untruths just keeps looming larger and larger.”<sup>112</sup>	7, 8
7-14-20	Ranting in the Garden. In an ostensible press conference about China held in the Rose Garden that media reported as a de facto campaign rally, Mr. Trump shocked the reporters and befouled that venue by ranting for nearly an hour against his electoral opponent Joe Biden and other targets. The Washington Post called the event “a stunning display of partisanship in an exquisitely manicured setting that presidents have traditionally considered off-limits for direct and extended political attacks.”<sup>113</sup> The diatribe was also a feast of falsehoods, including that Biden and Democrats wanted to destroy the suburbs, ban windows in buildings, abolish immigration detention, incentivize child smuggling, abolish police departments, abolish prisons, defund the military, “demolish the U.S. economy,” “kill American energy,” provide “government health care for all illegal aliens,” and allow terrorists to “blow up our cities”; that Biden was soft on China and had “the most extreme platform of any major party nominee by far in American history”; that mail-in voting would ensure “tremendous fraud”; that his own border wall was nearly completed; that the U.S. had almost the lowest Covid-19 mortality rate in the world; and that the U.S. case count was high only because so many people were being tested.<sup>114</sup>	6, 7, 8, 9, 11

7-14-20 +	Good for Goya. Mr. Trump (on July 15) and his daughter and senior advisor Ivanka (on July 14) posted photographs of themselves, separately, displaying and baldly advertising Goya food products. The postings followed popular calls for the boycott of Goya foods after Goya’s CEO had praised Mr. Trump in the Rose Garden on July 10. “We’re all truly blessed .... to have a leader like President Trump,” the executive had gratuitously and obsequiously declared. The executive’s praise of Mr. Trump represented a continuation of Mr. Trump’s pattern of arranging for prominent figures to fawn over him before cameras. His shilling of Goya products represented a continuation of his pattern of promoting private businesses that supported him politically while disparaging businesses that didn’t. The new episode – advertising Goya – violated federal ethics rules that expressly forbid using government positions to endorse products; it interfered with free enterprise (by advantaging Goya over its competitors); and it effectively amounted to a pay-off to a political crony.<sup>115</sup> A New York Times report placed the episode within the context of Mr. Trump’s ongoing defiance of ethical norms and laws. The Office of Special Counsel had found 13 Trump officials to have violated the Hatch Act (political campaigning in the course of government duties), but none had been disciplined. Since Mr. Trump’s impeachment acquittal, he had increasingly given campaign-style speeches during tax-payer funded and nominally official appearances. And, far contrary to custom, White House aides now talked freely and frequently about political strategies while on the premises.<sup>116</sup>	9, 11, 16

7-16-20	The death of the suburbs. At a purportedly official event at the White House addressing deregulation, Mr. Trump – possibly reacting to the erosion of his electoral support in the suburbs, and dog-whistling racial animus as though he were a small-time bigot still living in the 1960s – falsely said: “The Democrats in D.C. have been and want to ... abolish our beautiful and successful suburbs by placing far-left Washington bureaucrats in charge of local zoning decisions. They are absolutely determined to eliminate single-family zoning, destroy the value of houses and communities already built, just as they have in Minneapolis and other locations that you read about today. Your home will go down in value, and crime rates will rapidly rise. ... What will be the end result is you will totally destroy the beautiful suburbs. Suburbia will be no longer as we know it. So they wanted to defund and abolish your police and law enforcement while at the same time destroying our great suburbs. The suburb destruction will end with us.”<sup>117</sup>	6, 7, 9
7-18-20	Pay me. Media reported that Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign had paid his Florida resort Mar-a-Lago $380,000 in March and April to host a two-day event for donors.<sup>118</sup>	11, 15
7-19-20	President for life. Mr. Trump told a Fox News interviewer that he would not commit to leaving the White House if he lost the upcoming November election. (He had said that before – see CSD’s entry of June 18 +, above.) He also said that Fox’s polls showing Joe Biden ahead of him in the race were “fake.”<sup>119</sup> (He had said that about an earlier and similar Fox poll as well – see CSD’s entry of July 6, above.)	1, 7, 9, 11
7-21-20	No citizenship? – No vote, no census. Since early in the coronavirus crisis, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, a unit of the Department of Homeland Security, had slowed down or shut down various public services, including the processing of citizenship applications. USA Today now reported that some 315,000 immigrants who had virtually completed the requirements for becoming U.S. citizens could lose their ability to vote in the November election, for want of having taken their final citizenship interviews.<sup>120</sup> CSD, which follows immigration matters closely, suspects that the slow-down was specifically intended to favor Mr. Trump and his party at the polls. [Continued below.]	9

7-21-20	[Continued.] Also on July 21, Mr. Trump signed an order that the census count exclude undocumented immigrants. How that order would be implemented was unclear, in that the census forms themselves didn't contain a question about citizenship. But the intent was clear: omitting non-citizens from the census would result in primarily Democratic states receiving less federal assistance, and in shifting several congressional and Electoral College seats from Democratic states to Republican states. Mr. Trump had earlier sought to include a "citizenship question" in the survey, as a means to frighten away Hispanics – even citizens and legal immigrants – from participating in the census; but the Supreme Court had rejected that (see above in this Chronology). Critics now asserted that his new order defied longstanding census policy, lower court rulings that non-citizens be included in the census, and the Constitution's plain language that all "persons" must be counted. Immigrant rights organizations promptly threatened litigation.<sup>121</sup>	9
7-21-20	Come over to my place? The New York Times reported that in 2018, under pressure from Mr. Trump, the U.S. ambassador to the U.K. had asked the British government to steer the British Open golf tournament to Mr. Trump's Turnberry golf resort in Scotland. (Mr. Trump's previously reported efforts to steer profitable domestic and international traffic to his properties, on the strength of his presidency, were legion.)<sup>122</sup>	11, 15

(A separate section of Addendum 31)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13 and 15 as defined in CSD’s Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic have moved rapidly. CSD’s observations below that have been recorded as of a given date may have been superseded, or may yet be superseded, on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD’s concerns about the Trump administration’s coronavirus response are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that have recurred, that news media have reported anew, and that, as of the date of this Addendum, have continued to threaten lives – day after day.

On June 11, the Trump administration said that it would not reveal the identities of the recipients of Paycheck Protection Program loans – low interest, forgivable loans intended to help small businesses weather the coronavirus pandemic, which to that date had totaled more than $500 million – even though business loans under other federal programs had typically been made public. Critics in both parties, as well as oversight officials within the government, quickly saw the potential for graft and other abuse of the funds; and by June 15 the House had opened an investigation.<sup>123</sup> On June 19, under pressure, the administration abruptly reversed and said it would disclose most of the loan data.<sup>124</sup> Nevertheless, on June 25, the Government Accountability Office cited the Small Business administration for lacking safeguards and resisting oversight in administering the loans, stating that fraud and misuse of loan proceeds were likely.<sup>125</sup> On July 17, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin suggested that all PPP loans under $150,000 be forgiven outright – that is, without the borrowers having to prove the proper use of the funds – which again stirred bi-partisan concerns about the prospect of widespread fraud.<sup>126</sup>

On June 15, the Food and Drug Administration pulled its emergency approval of the anti-malarial drug hydroxychloroquine for preventing or treating Covid-19. The earlier approval had seemingly materialized through direct or indirect pressure from Mr. Trump, who had announced that he himself was using the drug as a prophylactic – even though clinicians had been skeptical of the safety and efficacy of the drug from the outset. The FDA had now determined that the drug was neither safe nor effective relative to Covid-19.

Also on June 15, Vice President Mike Pence “encouraged” a group of governors to downplay the recent spike in coronavirus diagnoses in over 20 states by blaming that spike on increased testing for the disease – a proposition that public health experts contested. He also falsely claimed that the coronavirus was in retreat in Oklahoma – where Mr. Trump was planning a dangerous, jam-packed, indoor reelection rally in Tulsa over the pleas not to do so by city officials – when the precise opposite was true: cases in Oklahoma were rising.<sup>127</sup> On June 16, Pence made similar claims in an op-ed in The Wall Street Journal, as he praised the administration's "success" in containing the disease and blamed the media for stoking panic about a coming "second wave" of the pandemic.<sup>128</sup> Pence had held numerous public meetings in recent days without wearing a mask, and he was filmed addressing in person the Trump reelection campaign's staff – none of whom were wearing masks.<sup>129</sup> Critics quickly called out Pence's disingenuous and perilous conduct.<sup>130</sup>

On June 16, Dr. Anthony Fauci, the government's top epidemiologist, told NPR that he hadn't spoken with Mr. Trump in two weeks – and then only about vaccine development, not about containing the pandemic.<sup>131</sup> On June 19, Mr. Trump publicly rebuked Fauci for suggesting that professional football games be canceled in the fall to stem the tide of the pandemic. "Tony Fauci has nothing to do with NFL Football," he said.<sup>132</sup>

Also on June 19, in the run-up to the Tulsa campaign rally, Mr. Trump refused to caution that attendees wear face masks – insisting instead that it was a matter of their personal choice, notwithstanding federal guidelines firmly calling for the wearing of masks. He said that he himself wouldn't be wearing a mask, because "I don't feel that I'm in danger. I've met a lot ... of people, and so far here I sit." (He did not note that everyone who meets with him is tested for Covid-19 beforehand.)<sup>133</sup>

At the Tulsa rally, indeed few attendees wore masks, even though they were offered masks as they entered. One attendee told a reporter that he had taken a mask when it was offered then had thrown it in the trash. Remarkably, Mr. Trump's campaign staff directed that thousands of cautionary social distancing stickers be removed from the audience seating, so that the crowd would appear denser on television cameras. Just as remarkably, in his speech, Mr. Trump thundered, "I told my people, 'Slow the testing down, please,' so that the numbers of infections wouldn't become known. Mr. Trump had previously expressed his displeasure that testing revealed the extent of the pandemic. But his statement in Tulsa that he had actually directed that testing be slowed – callous, ignorant, reckless, counterproductive, and contrary to the advice of his own public health officials – shocked observers. Multiple high-ranking White House officials quickly said that Mr. Trump had merely been joking – much as Mr. Trump had often before claimed to have been joking after being pilloried for one of his outlandish comments, and just as an aide said that Mr. Trump had been joking that very day after Mr. Trump had tweeted that John Bolton should be "bombed" for releasing his tell-all book (see CSD's entry of June 15 +, above, in the first part of this Addendum). But if it was a joke, it was a sick one. As noted above, every person coming into contact with Mr. Trump was being tested for Covid-19 beforehand; and Mr. Trump's dismissal of the value of testing for the general population suggested that only his life was worth protecting. Ironically, eight members of Mr. Trump's Tulsa advance team, including at least two Secret Service agents, tested positive for the disease. Whether Mr. Trump felt that they should not have been tested was not immediately reported. That they may have already spread the disease in Tulsa appeared possible, if not probable. But Mr. Trump was reportedly furious that their infections had been revealed to the press.<sup>134</sup>

(See also CSD's reports on the run-up to the Tulsa rally and on the rally itself at June 11 + and June 20 in the first portion of this Addendum.)

In the days after the Tulsa rally, Mr. Trump repeated multiple times his desire that the U.S. do less testing, even as Dr. Fauci and other top public health officials told the House Energy and Commerce Committee that testing was increasing. But as to whether Mr. Trump had been kidding about that matter in his Tulsa address, he said, “I don’t kid.”<sup>135</sup>

On June 22, The Washington Post reported that public health officials in many states had been threatened and verbally attacked by anti-lockdown partisans, forcing many to quit their positions.<sup>136</sup> The Times reported similarly.<sup>137</sup> That evening, a highly dedicated and accomplished Asian American public health official who had been appearing frequently during CNN television’s coronavirus coverage revealed that she too had received many insults in connection with her television and other public appearances, including being called a “bat-eater” and being told to go back to her country. She said that her Asian American colleagues, also frontline medical providers, had been spat upon for their ethnicity. She added that leaders of other countries were stepping up to defend their Asian citizens, but that Mr. Trump instead was inflaming the hatred.<sup>138</sup>

Also on June 22, columnists from The Post and The New York Times reported that the U.S. had now distinguished itself among developed countries both by American leadership’s denial of epidemiological science and by the current, resultant high rate of coronavirus infections here. Not only had some countries minimized infections altogether, but since the disease had rampaged through Europe it had now materially abated there; while in the U.S., particularly in Sunbelt states that had been quick to ease their lockdowns (almost all of them Republican), it was surging.<sup>139</sup> Along similar lines, The Post reported that developed countries that were currently experiencing regional spikes in infections were locking down those regions again, while U.S. regional spikes, at Mr. Trump’s urging, were being met only with further re-openings.<sup>140</sup> On June 23, The Times reported that the European Union was preparing to bar U.S. visitors, due to the high infection rates here.<sup>141</sup> On June 24, another Times columnist wrote that “the rest of the world is watching aghast,” with one American global health expert working overseas saying, “Those of us abroad are watching in horror, disbelief and pity.” On June 30, the EU effected its ban on American travelers.<sup>142</sup> On July 3, the UK announced that its citizens could travel to and return from some 59 countries without submitting to a 14-day quarantine, but that the U.S. was not one of them.<sup>143</sup> (CSD struggles to reconcile those reports with Mr. Trump’s campaign slogan, “Make America Great Again!”)

On June 23, a CNN television commentator noted that Dr. Fauci, Dr Birx and the government’s other top public health professionals were no longer appearing on that network, and that that was not the network’s decision.<sup>144</sup>

Also on June 23, as reported in the first section of this Addendum, Mr. Trump held a campaign rally for college students at a megachurch in Phoenix, Arizona. There the cheering indoor crowd was tightly packed and largely mask-less, as was Mr. Trump himself – even though coronavirus cases in that state were experiencing a record surge, even though a recent ordinance required masks, and even though the (Democratic) mayor had pleaded that attendees wear them. In Mr. Trump’s address he falsely said that the coronavirus was “going away”; he referred to it xenophobically as the “kung flu” (as he had done at a rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma on June 20); and he falsely said that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi had danced “in the streets of Chinatown” after he had imposed a ban on in-bound travel from China with a view to stemming the spread of the virus.<sup>145</sup> But despite his assurances that all would be well, the students – like the Tulsa attendees – were required to sign a waiver of Covid-19 claims against the church and various other entities and their affiliates (including Mr. Trump).<sup>146</sup>

On June 24, Dr. Fauci (National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases), Dr. Robert Redfield (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention), Dr. Stephen Hahn (Food and Drug Administration) and Dr. Brett Giroir (Department of Health and Human Services) testified before the House Energy and Commerce Committee. They contradicted Mr. Trump’s claims that the pandemic was fading. They said that Mr. Trump had not directed them to slow down testing; that testing would actually increase; and that the country was endangered by the too-rapid reopening of various states that were now experiencing coronavirus surges. Fauci and Redford also said that they had not been consulted before Mr. Trump had announced that the U.S. planned to withdraw from the World Health Organization, and that that withdrawal would be problematic.<sup>147</sup>

On June 26, as the number of confirmed coronavirus infections hit a new daily record – over 40,000 – Vice President Pence claimed “remarkable progress” in fighting the disease, even while acknowledging that confirmed cases were rising “precipitously” in several southern states. At the first public press briefing by the coronavirus task force in nearly two months, he also said that “all 50 states and territories across the country are opening up, and safely and responsibly” – which was false, in that some of the re-openings had been neither safe nor responsible, and some of the reopened states were beginning to lock down again. He also said that the administration had “flattened the curve,” which was no longer true. He did not wear a mask at the event, and he declined to recommend that people wear masks in public. The public health officials appearing with him wore masks, and they issued far more distressing statements about the continuing spread of the pandemic. Unlike at the many previous public task force briefings, Mr. Trump was absent.<sup>148</sup> Instead, an hour afterwards, he crowed to an industry group about the country’s (highly questionable) economic recovery, made no mention of the mounting cases, and assured that everything was well.<sup>149</sup>

On June 28, as cases soared in Texas, Pence attended a lengthy religious service at a megachurch in Dallas, featuring a large choir that did not wear masks or socially distance. The congregation didn’t socially distance either, and half of the 2200 attendees didn’t wear masks.<sup>150</sup>

On July 1, Mr. Trump told a Fox Business interviewer that he thought the coronavirus will “just disappear” – a fable he had advanced before.<sup>151</sup> On July 2, as daily infections continued to reach new highs (now over 56,000) and new cases were increasing in 41 states, he said from a White House podium that “putting out the fires” was “working out well”; that the U.S. was “getting it under control”; and, praising himself, that he’d “done a historic thing” by having saved “millions of lives” and by now opening up the country “far faster than anybody thought even possible and more successfully.” Boasting of his pandemic response as a matter of personal machismo, he said, “A lot of people would have wilted. We didn’t wilt. Our country didn’t wilt.”<sup>152</sup> On the same day, Dr. Fauci said of the country’s response to the pandemic, “I think it’s pretty obvious that we are not going in the right direction.”<sup>153</sup>

Over the Independence Day weekend, some 80% of fireworks displays across the country had been canceled due to social distancing concerns.<sup>154</sup> But as reported above in the first section of this Addendum, on July 3 Mr. Trump held a campaign-style event at Mt. Rushmore, replete with fireworks and a military fly-over. Amid a record-breaking surge in coronavirus infections nationally – including 53,000 new cases diagnosed that day – he barely mentioned the pandemic. He did not wear a mask, nor did most of the members of his audience (who also did not socially distance).<sup>155</sup> On July 4, speaking at the National Mall in Washington, D.C., Mr. Trump blamed China for initiating the coronavirus pandemic; he cited made-up statistics trivializing the medical risks posed by the virus; and he stated without evidence that the U.S. would have an effective treatment or vaccine “long before the end of the year.”<sup>156</sup>

As the daily number of U.S. cases continued to surge – far eclipsing the daily number of new infections in Europe<sup>157</sup> – shortfalls in testing capacity continued to plague cities here, long lines at drive-through testing facilities continued,<sup>158</sup> and shortages of personal protective equipment again loomed.<sup>159</sup> Yet Mr. Trump still had declined to issue a national plan to respond to the pandemic. A columnist for the Times attributed the following phenomena at least in part to him: “I don’t think any other advanced country (but are we still an advanced country?) has a comparable number of people who respond with rage when asked to wear a mask in a supermarket. There definitely isn’t any other advanced country where demonstrators against public health measures would wave guns around and invade state capitols. And the Republican Party is more or less unique among major Western political parties in its hostility to science in general.”<sup>160</sup>

On July 6, Mr. Trump tweeted, “The Mortality Rate for the China Virus in the U.S. is just about the LOWEST IN THE WORLD,” then “We now have the lowest Fatality (Mortality) Rate in the World.” In fact the U.S. at that time had the sixth highest mortality rate of the 20 countries that had made the mortality statistic available.<sup>161</sup>

On July 7, as Mr. Trump said that the U.S. was in a “good place” with the pandemic,<sup>162</sup> some 350 public health organizations, advocacy groups and local health authorities delivered a letter to HHS Secretary Alex Azar urging that the CDC be re-empowered to lead the nation’s coronavirus response, and that that response be de-politicized.<sup>163</sup>

Also on July 7, Mr. Trump formally notified the World Health Organization that the U.S. would withdraw from it in 2021, to the considerable distress of U.S. health officials.<sup>164</sup>

On July 8, Mr. Trump said that he would cut federal funding of public schools if they declined to open in the fall due to the pandemic – even though he lacked the legal authority to do that. He complained that his own public health officials’ safety guidelines in regard to public schools were impractical and too expensive.<sup>165</sup> (Federal school funding, by design, is disproportionately directed toward poor school districts.<sup>166</sup> Whether that had been a factor in Mr. Trump’s threat was unknown.)

Also on July 8, CNN reported that Mr. Trump was now in open public dispute with his coronavirus task force, and that he had not met with the unit in months.<sup>167</sup>

As of July 8, coronavirus cases were rising in 40 states, and they were hitting record peaks in 13 of them.<sup>168</sup> Most of Florida's ICU beds were in use, and other Sunbelt states were reaching their limits as well.<sup>169</sup>

On July 9, Mr. Trump told Fox News that Dr. Fauci had “made a lot of mistakes.” At that point Mr. Trump had not spoken to Fauci for a month, and Fauci had not actually briefed Mr. Trump for two months. The two men disagreed mightily on the threat that the coronavirus continued to pose and the measures to be taken against that threat. In addition, according to The Post, “Trump is also galleyed by Fauci's approval ratings. A recent [May 2020 CNN poll] showed that 67 percent of voters trusted Fauci for information on the coronavirus, compared with 26 percent who trusted Trump.”<sup>170</sup> On July 12, CNN reported that Mr. Trump and Fauci were no longer on speaking terms; and that because Fauci was not seen as looking after Mr. Trump's interests, the White House was actively undertaking to discredit Fauci in the eyes of the public, including by conducting opposition research on him for use in government propaganda.<sup>171</sup> The Times and the Post also reported that disparagement campaign.<sup>172</sup> On July 14, Mr. Trump's trade chief Peter Navarro wrote in a USA Today op-ed that Fauci had been consistently wrong in his science;<sup>173</sup> but after massive blow-back on the part of both the public and the medical community,<sup>174</sup> Mr. Trump threw Navarro under the bus.<sup>175</sup> Trump allies Dan Scavino and Stephen Moore (right-wing political figures with no scientific or medical training) had nevertheless joined in the campaign; by July 15, 52% of Republican voters no longer trusted Fauci; and, as of July 18, the unprecedented conflagration between the White House and the country's public health community was reportedly impeding the nation's response to the pandemic.<sup>176</sup> Mr. Trump couldn't fire Fauci, who was a career civil servant; but Fauci's continuing service to the nation appeared to turn ever more on his personal fortitude.

On July 10, The Post reported that Mr. Trump, and now Navarro, were pressing the FDA to promote hydroxychloroquine as a treatment for Covid-19 – contrary to the views of the administration's public health scientists, and seemingly for the sole purpose of proving that Mr. Trump had not erred in touting the drug prematurely.<sup>177</sup> (See CSD's June 15 entry, above, regarding the FDA's having pulled its emergency approval of the drug.)

Also on July 10, Politico reported that Mr. Trump's campaign staff were being discouraged from and mocked for wearing face masks and for socially distancing on the job – even though numerous campaign associates had been diagnosed with Covid-19.<sup>178</sup>

On July 13, Mr. Trump re-tweeted a baseless accusation that “everyone is lying” about the pandemic's risks: “the CDC, Media, Democrats, our Doctors.”<sup>179</sup>

On July 14, media reported that the White House had directed that hospitals report their data about Covid-19 treatment – available ICU beds, patients on ventilators, stockpiles of PPE – to the Department of Health and Human Services rather than to the CDC. Many hospitals were outraged; and critics feared that HHS, which was more politically aligned with Mr. Trump, would manipulate or hide the data.<sup>180</sup> When the CDC's reporting system was then suddenly disabled in connection with the change-over, havoc ensued, and the outcry – including by the National Governors Association and by other federal health departments – forced the government to restore it on July 16.<sup>181</sup>

Also on July 16, a daily U.S. record was set for newly diagnosed Covid-19 infections, at over 70,000.<sup>182</sup> Florida’s tally alone far exceeded that of the European Union, which was vastly more populous.<sup>183</sup>

On July 17, Politico reported that the White House was blocking CDC officials from testifying before the House Education and Labor Committee. As the pandemic continued to rage, Mr. Trump had been demanding that public schools re-open in the fall, while disparaging the agonized pleas of many teachers and parents to the contrary – and while delaying the issuance of guidelines for re-opening the schools safely, as school districts raced to plan for the now fast-approaching academic year.<sup>184</sup> For CSD, Mr. Trump’s demand – that school systems across the entire country obey him – flew in the face of his refusal to guide governors on how to respond to the pandemic more generally. That is to say, he was eager to cross the states when directing an “open” but not a “close,” and not even mask-wearing or social distancing. His coronavirus battle-cry seemed to be for a “whether,” not for a “how” – for a slogan, not a solution.

Also on July 17, The Times reported that while face masks were now being widely worn in the U.S., particularly in more populous regions, the single biggest determinant of mask wearing was not location but political affiliation, with Republicans wearing masks at a far lower rate than Democrats.<sup>185</sup> Separately, The Times reported that while 65% of Americans trusted Dr. Fauci on the pandemic, only 39% of Republicans did.<sup>186</sup> CSD continued to marvel at how Mr. Trump had come to suffocate the credibility of science among his supporters; and/or how they had come to suffocate it within him – in a non-virtuous circle.

In a Fox News interview on July 18, Mr. Trump doubled-down on his earlier false statement that the U.S. had one of the lowest Covid-19 mortality rates in the world, by presenting a heavily and preposterously doctored statistical chart that omitted all the bad news. In the same interview, he said for at least the third time that one day the coronavirus will just “disappear,” and he claimed that he had been right about the pandemic “probably more than anybody else.” He also repeated his false claims that anyone who wanted to get a test for the disease could get one, and that increased testing was the only reason that reported cases were growing in the U.S. He also found an opportunity to call Dr. Fauci “a little bit of an alarmist.”<sup>187</sup>

But except among the Republican grass-roots, Fauci remained popular. In defending and honoring him, on July 19 a columnist for The Times succinctly portrayed what she referred to as the new, “ultimate odd couple”: “the doctor and the president. One is a champion of truth and facts. The other is a master of deceit and denial. One is highly disciplined, working 18-hour days. The other can’t be bothered to do his homework and golfs instead. One is driven by science and the public good. The other is a public menace, driven by greed and ego. One is a Washington institution. The other was sent here to destroy Washington institutions. One is incorruptible. The other corrupts.”<sup>188</sup>

Notwithstanding Mr. Trump’s recent call for fewer Covid-19 tests to be administered to the public, on July 21 the White House acknowledged that he himself was now being tested up to “multiple times per day.” In any event, testing opportunities remained scarce for many Americans; and – possibly worse – the delivery of their test results was commonly delayed by many days, thus often rendering their tests almost meaningless.<sup>189</sup>

On July 21, Mr. Trump delivered his first coronavirus task force briefing since April. No public health professionals spoke at the appearance. He at last urged (but did not mandate) the wearing of face masks, and he acknowledged that the pandemic would get worse in the U.S. before it got better. But he did not provide any actual update on the spread of the virus or his plans to quell it. Instead, he reiterated his statement that someday the disease would “just disappear” – contrary to the broad consensus of scientists. He also repeated his falsehood that the U.S. has “done much better than most” countries in containing the virus, when in fact the U.S. had performed far worse than most of the industrialized world. He also continued to refer to the disease as the “China virus.”<sup>190</sup>

Addendum 32 – September 11, 2020

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

The current Addendum appears in four parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular chronology. The second part, beginning on p. 37, chronicles the Republican National Convention, at which Mr. Trump was nominated to run for a second term. The third part, beginning on p. 47, chronicles events surrounding Mr. Trump's efforts to suppress voting and discredit the results of the upcoming November 2020 election. The fourth part, beginning on p. 52, chronicles events surrounding Mr. Trump's response to the coronavirus pandemic.

Date	Episode	Category
7-22-20 +	Racial justice protests. On July 22, Mr. Trump announced that he was sending several hundred security agents from a variety of federal agencies to fight street crime and gang violence in a number of Democratic-controlled cities. The move in itself was not unusual; but the political motivation and messaging in an election year was – as was Mr. Trump's intentional conflation of the street crime and gang maneuver with his hardline security response to racial justice protests in Portland, Oregon. <sup>1</sup> [ Continued below. ]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 17 (3, 5, 6, 7, 9)

7-22-20 +	[Continued.] On July 25, Politico reported on what had become Mr. Trump’s leading campaign theme, now supported in his campaign advertisements by incendiary video imagery from Portland: violent urban protests, which in truth, at that point, remained rare.<sup>2</sup> (Paradoxically, from all appearances Mr. Trump had come to detest cities and the welfare of their inhabitants, except as stage sets for his authoritarian rhetoric. For example, on August 18, he shared a tweet about “Democrat cities”: “Let them rot.”<sup>3</sup>) Also on July 25, The New York Times reported that the Portland protests – which had been waning before federal agents had arrived, then had reignited seemingly because of the federal presence – were now directed as much against the federals as toward the ideal of racial justice. In addition, as reported, some observers saw the federals as exceeding their lawful deployment in protecting the Portland federal courthouse by venturing blocks from there to confront the protesters: violently, gratuitously, provocatively, and illegally.<sup>4</sup> Also on July 25, after federal agents appeared in Seattle, violent confrontations recurred there, as well as in several other cities – many or all of them now seemingly sparked by the federal clampdown.<sup>5</sup> (For the avoidance of doubt, CSD condemns violent protest tactics as well as provocations and overreactions on the part of local and federal security forces, not to mention Mr. Trump. We particularly condemn violent protesters for their colossal stupidity at a time when Americans were preparing to vote on whether our country would survive as a democracy.) On July 29, The Washington Post published a run-down on the appearance of gun-carrying conservatives at many public events in recent months. They purported to stand against the racial justice movement, urban violence in connection with racial justice protests, coronavirus restrictions, and/or constraints on gun ownership. The news: these were not radical, anti-government militias; rather, they were pro-government supporters of local law enforcement agents and Mr. Trump. (Armed, anti-government militias had also been active, coming from their usual rural venues into cities and towns, and appearing at hundreds of events in 2020.)<sup>6</sup> [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 17 (3, 5, 6, 7, 9)
------------------	---	--

7-22-20 +	[Continued.] Also on July 29, the United Nations Human Rights Committee (a respected body of international law experts, to be distinguished from the highly political and often provocative Human Rights Council) challenged Mr. Trump’s tactics in seeking to quell racial justice protests.<sup>7</sup> On August 9, Attorney General William Barr – one of Mr. Trump’s chief enablers in his radical assault on American democracy – told Fox News that liberals were intent on “tearing down the system” and that the Black Lives Matter movement was “a revolutionary group that is interested in some form of socialism, communism. They’re essentially Bolsheviks.” He also accused the Democratic Party of being “a secular religion, ... a substitute for a religion,” and the media of ignoring antifa violence.<sup>8</sup> Media reported on August 18 that the White couple that had been notoriously filmed brandishing guns at peaceful protesters as the protesters had passed their home in St. Louis, Missouri on June 28 would speak at the Republican National Convention in late August. The couple had been criminally charged for the firearms episode. At the convention, the Republican Party would nominate Mr. Trump to run for his second elected term.<sup>9</sup> Kenosha. On August 23, a White policeman in Kenosha, Wisconsin, at close range, fired seven shots at the back of Jacob Blake, an unarmed and non-threatening Black man, hitting him four times and paralyzing him in front of his children. Peaceful and violent protests followed.<sup>10</sup> On August 25, a teenage admirer of Mr. Trump killed two unarmed social justice protesters in that city with a military-style assault rifle that he had brought to the venue illegally from his home in Illinois. (He then attempted to surrender to police, who did not arrest him.) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Although Mr. Trump had been voluble in condemning social justice protesters that week, including in his incendiary acceptance speech at the Republican National Convention, for days he refused to comment on the Kenosha killings. But Mr. Trump’s son, Donald Jr., tweeted a message in support of the killer.<sup>11</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 17 (3, 5, 6, 7, 9)
------------------	--	--

7-22-20 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Finally, on August 31, Mr. Trump spoke. He suggested that the teenage extremist had been acting in self-defense. He also said that his administration was “looking at it” and had the matter “under investigation” – as though he had jurisdiction to intervene in Wisconsin’s state justice system (he did not) and to introduce the self-defense argument there (he did not).<sup>12</sup> For CSD, all of that not only defied the facts of the case and the law of the land, but it had the potential to encourage even more vigilantism and extra-judicial killings, such as dictators worldwide had long included in their political arsenals.</li><li>• But seemingly intent on pouring fuel on the fire, on September 1 Mr. Trump, his attorney General William Barr and other retainers flew to Kenosha – on a campaign style trip, at taxpayer expense, and unwanted by the governor and the mayor. There he met with and praised law enforcement officials, viewed the property damage caused by violent protesters, scoured those committing the violence (“anarchists,” “looters,” “rioters” and “agitators”), slammed Democrats for what he claimed to be their weak response to the violence, included almost no Black people in his televised community meeting, dismissed any discussion of police brutality, and silenced a local pastor from speaking about racial injustice. He did not console the families of the shooting victims, did not meet separately with Black community leaders, did not mention the deaths of the two men at the hands of the teenage extremist, and did not even utter the name of Jacob Blake – whose shooting had precipitated the violence to begin with.<sup>13</sup></li><li>• On September 2, without proof, Barr told CNN’s Wolf Blitzer that Blake had been armed when he was shot.<sup>14</sup></li></ul> [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 17 (3, 5, 6, 7, 9)
------------------	---	--

7-22-20 +	[Continued.] On August 29, Trump supporters riding in a caravan of some 600 vehicles drove through Portland. Some shot peaceful protesters with paintballs and pellet guns. Someone believed to be a right-wing demonstrator and Trump supporter was shot dead by someone believed to be a far-left antifa proponent. The following day, on Twitter, Mr. Trump praised the caravan riders as “GREAT PATRIOTS!”<sup>15</sup> On August 31, Mr. Trump told a Fox News interviewer that the social justice protesters in Portland were violent and the counter-protesters peaceful; and at a press conference he said that the paintball guns had been for self-defense. (CSD wondered how would he know that.)<sup>16</sup> Many observers maintained that Mr. Trump was actually stoking the violence on both sides with a view to helping himself win reelection.<sup>17</sup> One observer noted that Benito Mussolini rose to power as Italy’s Fascist dictator after encouraging violence between left and right factions, then claiming that only he could save the country.<sup>18</sup> On August 30, Mr. Trump re-tweeted a video that recorded a Black man assaulting a White woman on the New York City subway and that blamed Black Lives Matter and antifa. But in fact the man was not associated with either ideology.<sup>19</sup> On August 31, Mr. Trump told a Fox News interviewer that Portland had been burning “for decades.” (It had not been; it had frequently been cited as one of the most “livable cities in America.”) He said that unnamed people in “dark shadows” were pulling the strings behind both the social justice protests and his electoral opponent Joe Biden. He also said that “thugs wearing dark uniforms” had crowded into an airplane to fly to Washington to disrupt the Republican National Convention. The following day he elaborated: that the people on the plane were “the looters, the anarchists, the rioters, people that obviously were looking for trouble.” Neither he nor anyone in the White House was able to evidence or clarify the new heap of conspiracy theories.<sup>20</sup> [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 17 (3, 5, 6, 7, 9)
------------------	---	--

7-22-20 +	[Continued.] On September 1, The Times reported that although Barr and the acting Secretary of Homeland Security Chad Wolf had recently threatened to arrest Black Lives Matter leaders, the administration’s undertaking to investigate right-wing extremists – identified by Department of Homeland Security analysts a year before as the biggest domestic terror threat – had stalled.<sup>21</sup> (On September 4, Politico reported that DHS was preparing a release that would confirm that right-wing extremists continued to pose the paramount domestic terror threat. Politico’s information came from a leak.<sup>22</sup> CSD speculates that the leak may have been in reaction to The Times’ reporting.) On September 2, Mr. Trump issued a memorandum requiring federal agencies to review, and to consider withholding, all grants to U.S. cities “that are permitting anarchy, violence and destruction.” He made clear that the memorandum would pertain only to Democratic-led cities, which the memorandum characterized as “anarchist jurisdictions.” The memorandum also directed the agencies to determine how Mr. Trump, legally, could supersede congressional legislation that already provided for the current funding. Observers said that any attempt to cut the grants would be unlawful, that the memorandum was a political stunt, and that any cuts would not survive the litigation that the affected cities would likely bring. The memorandum made no mention of the social justice issues that had sparked the civil disorder, or ways in which the federal government could act to mitigate that disorder – either short-term or longer term – other than through stronger policing efforts.<sup>23</sup> On September 3, the city of Rochester, New York released a video showing that, in March, officers had asphyxiated Daniel Prude, a Black criminal suspect. Fresh protests, some of them violent, arose in that city, as unrest continued elsewhere.<sup>24</sup> On September 4, in a move that appeared intended to intersect with the country’s continuing upheavals around social justice, the Trump administration issued a memorandum calling for the curtailment of racial sensitivity training sessions within the federal workplace that had begun under President Obama.<sup>25</sup> [Continued below.]	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 17 (3, 5, 6, 7, 9)
------------------	--	--

7-22-20 +	[Continued.] On September 7, more than 1,000 supporters of Mr. Trump – many of them armed with rifles, pistols, knives and clubs – drove in a convoy of trucks, tractors, cars and motorcycles from Salem, Oregon to the suburbs of Portland. There they demonstrated and at one point assaulted social justice protesters. Participants included members of the White nationalist group Proud Boys and adherents of the QAnon conspiracy theory.<sup>26</sup> At a news conference on September 7, Mr. Trumped said that local police should seek “retribution” against protesters who throw objects at them.	3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 17 (3, 5, 6, 7, 9)
7-23-20	More pardons, please. Mr. Trump told Fox News that he might pardon individuals who had been convicted or who had pleaded guilty as a result of Robert Mueller’s Russia investigation. The beneficiaries presumably could include campaign figures Michael Flynn, George Papadopoulos and Paul Manafort, as well as Roger Stone, whose punishment Mr. Trump had recently commuted.<sup>27</sup> His possible motives: vanity and revenge (doubling down on his profession of his own innocence); and/or corruption (purchasing the clemency candidates’ continuing silence about his own wrongdoings with respect to Russia).	9
7-23-20 +	Cohen goes home. On July 23, a federal judge ordered the release from prison of Michael Cohen, Mr. Trump’s former personal attorney and fixer. Cohen was serving time for having helped Mr. Trump evade campaign finance laws in connection with paying off several of Mr. Trump’s mistresses, and related charges. He had been granted home furlough due to the coronavirus, but had then been re-detained when he had refused to agree not to publish his harsh memoir about Mr. Trump before the November election. The judge found that re-detention to have been political, retaliatory, and unprecedented.<sup>28</sup> On July 30, the government conceded the larger point – that it would not seek to prevent Cohen from speaking, writing or publishing.<sup>29</sup> On September 8, Cohen released the book, which damned Mr. Trump for his criminality, his racism, his dishonesty, his quest for Russian help in his 2016 election, and his base character generally.<sup>30</sup>	17 (9)

7-23-20	DHS retaliation. The Department of Homeland Security admitted in court that in February it had improperly punished New York by barring that state’s residents from enjoying speedy airport check-ins under the Trusted Traveler Program. The agency’s justification at the time had been that New York was the only state that wouldn’t cooperate with federal immigration officials about issuing drivers’ licenses to undocumented migrants. DHS now admitted that that had been untrue – other states also didn’t cooperate, and they had not been similarly restricted at airports. Punishing New York residents had instead been pure political vengeance, for the decision of that state to grant licenses to the undocumented.<sup>31</sup> The revelation of the lie prompted New York political figures to accuse top DHS officials of criminal conduct.<sup>32</sup>	17 (9)
7-24-20	Drones for sale. The Trump administration announced that it would sell large armed drones to Middle Eastern dictatorships – in violation of an international accord that banned sales of such weapons.<sup>33</sup>	12, 14
7-24-20	The local campaigns. The New York Times reported that, in addition to purveying nationally-themed falsehoods (such as those pertaining to the coronavirus pandemic), Mr. Trump was campaigning for reelection by way of locally- and regionally-themed falsehoods and exaggerations. In particular, he was routinely taking unilateral credit for sector-specific economic bounty that in truth did not currently exist, that had existed before his presidency, that previous administrations had also succeeded in, or that Democrats had equally championed. Examples included his claims for having “rescued” lobstering in Maine, ethanol and car production in the Midwest, commercial fishing in Michigan, energy in Louisiana and Texas, National Guard facilities in New Hampshire, shipbuilding in Wisconsin, and transportation projects in multiple swing states.<sup>36</sup>	7

7-24-20 +	DACA Contempt. On July 24, the Justice Department acknowledged that it was dithering in restoring the DACA program after the Supreme Court had ordered it restored in June. The program saves from deportation Hispanic migrants who had been brought to the U.S. as children; Mr. Trump had suspended it in 2017. A federal court now was contemplating a hearing as to whether to hold the department in contempt.<sup>37</sup> On July 28, the Homeland Security Department affirmatively announced that it would no longer accept new applicants to the DACA program – in direct violation of the Supreme Court’s order.<sup>38</sup>	6, 9
7-27-20	My FBI building. A new coronavirus relief bill proposed by Senate Republicans included – to the expressed surprise and puzzlement of leading Republican senators – a $1.75 billion authorization to build a new FBI headquarters at the site of the present headquarters, one block from the Trump International Hotel in Washington. As reported by CSD in 2017, Mr. Trump had sought to scuttle well-developed plans to move the headquarters to the suburbs, so that the current building, if demolished, wouldn’t be replaced by a hotel that would compete with his own. Apparently, he was still seeking that.<sup>39</sup>	11, 15
7-27-20, 7-28-20	Barr defends, bristles. Testifying defiantly on July 28 at a contentious House Judiciary Committee hearing, Attorney General William Barr defended his recent interventions in the criminal cases of Mr. Trump’s advisors Michael Flynn and Roger Stone. He defended the recent re-detention of Mr. Trump’s former attorney Michael Cohen after Cohen had refused to not publish his memoir. He defended the recent dismissal of the prosecutor who had been investigating Mr. Trump’s current attorney Rudy Giuliani. He defended the armed, right-wing protesters who had invaded the Michigan Capitol and called for the killing of the governor. He also railed against the “bogus ‘Russiagate’ scandal”; and contrary to Justice Department protocols, he refused to not release shortly before the November 2020 election his upcoming report on the origins of the 2016 probe of the Trump campaign – a report that was expected to (politically) demonize the probe and its Democratic supporters. [Continued below.]	17 (4, 7, 9)

7-27-20, 7-28-20	[Continued.] Barr also exaggerated the incidence and damage of urban rioting in the wake of George Floyd’s death, and he promised to continue to send federal agents, uninvited, to quell urban unrest. He falsely denied that the protesters in Lafayette Square had been gassed. He warned (without evidence) that voting by mail could give rise to material electoral fraud. He falsely blamed President Obama for the poor epidemic testing system that had been in place when the coronavirus struck, three years after Obama’s term. And he expressly denied that he was Mr. Trump’s lickspittle; yet he defended, as “superb,” Mr. Trump’s disastrous handling of the coronavirus pandemic.<sup>40</sup> On the previous day, Norman Eisen – a nationally prominent ethics expert, writing in the Washington Post – had reminded the nation of Barr’s many acts of complicity in Mr. Trump’s authoritarian conduct.<sup>41</sup> On August 1, now reinforced by Barr’s testimony, Eisen reminded in Politico to similar effect, charging that Barr had turned the Justice Department into “the president’s personal law firm.”<sup>42</sup> In this Chronology, CSD has amply covered Barr’s offenses; and we commend Eisen’s two pieces to our readers.	17 (4, 7, 9)
7-28-20	Pay my family. An election watchdog organization reported that a contractor for Mr. Trump’s campaign was secretly, and therefore illegally, paying two of Mr. Trump’s relatives hundreds of thousands of dollars for unspecified services: Kimberly Guilfoyle (son Donald Jr.’s girlfriend) and Lara Trump (son Eric Trump’s wife).<sup>43</sup>	7 (9,11, 15)
7-28-20 +	My census. On July 28, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump was seeking to speed up, or to truncate, the completion of the decennial census, at a time when almost 40% of the population – disproportionately the poor, the young, and people of color – had not yet been counted. Census experts feared that the count could become drastically inaccurate. Mr. Trump’s likely motives: by shortening the count and excluding the referenced groups, not only would Democratic apportionment in Congress and the Electoral College be reduced, but Mr. Trump would be empowered to facilitate the apportionment during his current term of office. On Aug. 3, media reported that Mr. Trump had now done it: had ordered the census collection period to be cut short by a month, ending on September 30.<sup>44</sup> Critics called it a bald and unprecedented attempt to skew the census for political purposes.<sup>45</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 8, 9

7-28-20 +	[Continued.] On August 6, The Times reported that the Census Bureau was exploring unlawful ways to estimate uncouncted and undocumented residents for purposes of skewing political apportionment in favor of Republicans; and that that skewing was consistent with the openly stated interest of Mr. Trump’s recent political appointees to the bureau in effecting it.<sup>46</sup> (See above in this Chronology for Mr. Trump’s repeated efforts to corrupt the census for personal political gain.) On August 17, media reported that the Trump administration had added a third political appointee in the top ranks of the Census Bureau. The appointee was championed by voter suppression enthusiasts. Bureau staff reportedly feared the corruption of their statistical findings to benefit Republicans in the allocation of congressional seats among states.<sup>47</sup> (For reports on the two previous political appointments, see CSD’s entry of June 23, above.) A Times report of August 24 indicated that – beset by technological, staffing and coronavirus impediments, the census was barreling toward an undercount (particularly of poor, minority and immigrant households) so vast that its results might not even merit being released.<sup>48</sup>	6, 8, 9
7-29-20 +	Keeping it White. On July 29, Mr. Trump directed his administration to stop enforcing certain fair housing standards, then he tweeted a nakedly racist boast such as no other recent president – even one committed to deregulation generally – would have done: “I am happy to inform all of the people living their Suburban Lifestyle Dream that you will no longer be bothered or financially hurt by having low income housing built in your neighborhood. . . . Your housing prices will go up based on the market, and crime will go down. I have rescinded the Obama-Biden AFFH Rule. Enjoy!”<sup>49</sup> On August 12, Mr. Trump tweeted: “The ‘suburban housewife’ will be voting for me. They want safety &amp; are thrilled that I ended the long running program where low income housing would invade their neighborhood. Biden would reinstall it, in a bigger form, with Corey Booker in charge!”<sup>50</sup> (Corey Booker, the senator from New Jersey, is Black.) [Continued below.]	6, 9

7-29-20 +	[Continued.] A New York Times analysis compared Mr. Trump’s demagogic use of racism, point for point, to that of George Wallace, the segregationist governor and presidential candidate from Alabama who had inflamed the nation in the 1960s and 1970s – an era that most Americans had thought was long gone.<sup>51</sup>	6, 9
7-30-20 +	Even in death. Three former presidents delivered moving eulogies at a memorial service for the late civil rights icon and Georgia Congressman John Lewis. Mr. Trump had declined to attend – as he had declined to attend the memorial services for Senator John McCain, former first lady Barbara Bush, and Maryland Congressman Elijah Cummings, all of whom he had considered to be his adversaries. But he would not have been comfortable at the Lewis service anyway: unusually, he had no relationships with any of his predecessors – who, at the service, all spoke to themes denouncing hatred and division that directly implicated him.<sup>52</sup> When asked by an Axios reporter in an interview that aired on August 3 how he thought history would remember Lewis, Mr. Trump responded, using figures of speech that he commonly deployed to dismiss a person’s significance: “I don’t know. I don’t know John Lewis. He chose not to come to my inauguration. I never met John Lewis, actually, I don’t believe.” As the reporter pressed his question, Mr. Trump said, about Lewis having skipped the inauguration, “Nobody has done more for Black Americans than I have. He should have come. I think he made a big mistake.”<sup>53</sup>	6, 11
7-31-20 +	Russia, Russia, Russia. On July 31, a New York Times analysis recapped Mr. Trump’s inexplicable docility and deference toward Russia in recent weeks: foregoing public criticism of Russia for funding bounties on U.S. troops in Afghanistan; attempting to deflect ongoing Russian election interference efforts by demonizing China; and, on July 29, through Defense Secretary Mark Esper, confirming that he would be removing a third of America’s troops in Germany – to NATO’s chagrin and to Russia’s great delight.<sup>54</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 12, 14

7-31-20 +	[Continued.] Also on July 31, after receiving a highly-classified counterintelligence briefing in which the Trump administration reluctantly conceded that Russia was trying to interfere in the upcoming November election through a disinformation campaign for the benefit of Mr. Trump. House Democratic leaders accused the administration of hiding that finding from the public.<sup>55</sup> On August 7, the administration made some of the information public, although falsely implying that a preference by China for Joe Biden’s candidacy was equivalent to Russia’s active intervention on behalf of Mr. Trump’s.<sup>56</sup> In response to the revelation that Russia again was aiding his election, Mr. Trump preposterously said, “I think that the last person Russia wants to see in office is Donald Trump because nobody’s been tougher on Russia than I have, ever.”<sup>57</sup> On August 5, media reported that one element of the Russian disinformation effort consisted of a pro-Russian Ukrainian lawmaker named Andriy Derkach feeding conspiracy theories tarring Biden to Republican Senators Chuck Grassley and Ron Johnson – Mr. Trump’s allies who were investigating Biden and who seemed headed toward dropping a bombshell report about Biden shortly before the election.<sup>58</sup> [Continued below.] [Continued.] On August 7, MSNBC reported that Mr. Trump had spoken to Russian President Vladimir Putin eight times so far in 2020, compared to four times in all of 2019. The content of the discussions was not known.<sup>59</sup> On August 16, Mr. Trump retweeted a misleading audio recording of presidential contender Joe Biden that had been provided by a pro-Russian propagandist as part of what the U.S. intelligence community had identified as the Russian disinformation campaign. That is, Mr. Trump once again knowingly accepted and sought to capitalize on Russian meddling in a U.S. election.<sup>60</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 12, 14

7-31-20 +	[Continued.] On August 18, the Senate Intelligence Committee issued its final, bipartisan report on the 2016 election, in which it concluded that Russia had used Mr. Trump’s campaign chief Paul Manafort to help Mr. Trump win; that Manafort had been a “grave counterintelligence threat” and had conspired with Russia; that Manafort’s Russian contact during that period was an outright spy, and Manafort an asset; and that Russian President Vladimir Putin had personally directed at least some of the election interference.<sup>61</sup> In addition, the committee reported that it had referred Mr. Trump’s son Donald Jr., his son-in-law Jared Kushner, his former advisor Steven Bannon, and two others to federal prosecutors for investigation, on suspicion that they had lied to the committee during its own earlier investigation; but no investigation of those men had ensued from that referral.<sup>62</sup> The committee also revealed correspondence from Mr. Trump to Putin pre-dating the 2016 presidential campaign that established Mr. Trump’s longstanding and sometimes explicit admiration for the Russian autocrat.<sup>63</sup> The committee further revealed that Mr. Trump’s advisor and Nixon-era dirty trickster Roger Stone had affirmatively coordinated the public release by Wikileaks of embarrassing emails stolen by Russia from the Democratic National Committee so as to distract from the release of the Access Hollywood tapes in which Mr. Trump had boasted about sexually assaulting women.<sup>64</sup> The reason the committee had been able to gain that intelligence but that special prosecutor Robert Mueller had not: the Trump administration had refused it to Mueller.<sup>65</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 12, 14

7-31-20 +	[Continued.] On August 29, National Intelligence Director John Ratcliffe, recently a staunch Trump partisan and facilitator in Congress, announced that his office would no longer brief congressional leaders in person on foreign efforts at interfering with the upcoming American election. Given Ratcliffe’s ignoble history and the administration’s many other efforts at suppressing that intelligence, congressional leaders smelled a cover-up. The next day, Ratcliffe told Fox News that “China is using a massive and sophisticated influence campaign that dwarfs anything that any other country is doing” relative to the upcoming American election. The statement was false. According to other intelligence officials, Russia’s interference was far more direct and extensive – including its seeding of American officials and American social media with anti-Biden disinformation, about which Ratcliffe was silent.<sup>66</sup> On August 30, The Times reported that in 2017 Rod Rosenstein, then deputy attorney general, had forbidden Mueller from investigating Mr. Trump’s decades-long personal business ties with Russia. Believing that those ties posed a deep national security threat, FBI counter-intelligence officials had begun the investigation, but within days Rosenstein stopped it. Only much later did the FBI’s then acting director Andrew McCabe learn that Mueller wouldn’t be covering the matter. He told The Times that had he known, he would have resumed the investigation.<sup>67</sup> On September 2, ABC news reported that the Department of Homeland Security had withheld from law enforcement officials a July intelligence bulletin that Russia was falsely contaminating social media reports that Biden’s mental health was poor.<sup>68</sup> On September 2, Attorney General William Barr falsely told CNN’s Wolf Blitzer that Russia had not yet begun interfering in the 2020 presidential election.<sup>69</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 12, 14

7-31-20 +	[Continued.] Also on September 2, German doctors determined that Aleksei Navalny, the leading figure in Russia’s anti-corruption protest movement, had been poisoned with a military-grade toxin. Navalny had taken sick some weeks previous. He ultimately had been evacuated for treatment in Germany, where he lay in critical condition in a medically induced coma. Leaders of the world’s democracies now charged the Kremlin with the crime and protested. Mr. Trump and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, however, were silent. On September 4, when asked about Navalny by reporters, Mr. Trump answered, “We haven’t had any proof yet [that the Kremlin had directed the poisoning], but we will take a look. It is interesting that everyone’s always mentioning Russia... but I think probably China at this point is a nation you should be talking about much more so than Russia.”<sup>70</sup> Mr. Trump likewise remained silent as European leaders objected to the rigging of the recent presidential election in Belarus, a dictatorship supported by Russia.<sup>71</sup> Possibly stung by accusations of a cover-up, in a bulletin delivered to state and local officials on September 4, DHS explicitly confirmed that Russia, through social media and other media outlets, was spreading charges that U.S. mail-in voting would be prone to fraud – thus “amplifying” the very same charges on that subject that Mr. Trump, Barr and other administration officials had been spreading.<sup>72</sup> On September 9, the House Intelligence Committee released a whistleblower complaint filed by Brian Murphy, a former top intelligence official at the Department of Homeland Security. Murphy had alleged that senior DHS staff, including acting Secretary Chad Wolf and his predecessor Kirstjen Nielsen, had directed him from March 2018 through August 2020 to minimize in his reports the agency’s findings on Russian election interference and white supremacist threats, while maximizing threats from China, Iran, domestic anarchists and antifa. Murphy was eventually demoted for “making the president look bad.”<sup>73</sup> Thomas Bossert, Mr. Trump’s first homeland security advisor, said, “If that whistle-blower report is true, the people responsible are violating their oath of office.”<sup>74</sup> [Continued below.]	7, 9, 12, 14
------------------	---	---------------------

7-31-20 +	[Continued.] On September 10, the Treasury Department imposed sanctions on Andriy Derkach for interfering with the upcoming American elections. Derkach was the pro-Russian Ukrainian lawmaker who had been feeding anti-Biden propaganda to Mr. Trump, his personal attorney Rudi Giuliani, and Senate Republicans who were leading a corruption investigation of Biden.<sup>75</sup> (See also the August 5 episode above within this entry, “Russia, Russia, Russia,” for further detail on the Derkach-Senate connection.) Within hours after the announcement of the new sanctions – imposed by his own administration – Mr. Trump peculiarly said at a campaign rally, “What about China? What about other countries? It’s always Russia, Russia, Russia.”<sup>76</sup> Also on September 10, media reported that Microsoft had identified efforts by the same Russian governmental group that had hacked Hillary Clinton’s campaign in 2016 to now be hacking Biden’s campaign. China too was attempting to hack the Biden campaign and had largely left Trump affiliates alone – thus appearing to discredit the Trump administration’s claim that China preferred Biden. The findings of Microsoft and other security analysts also confirmed that Russia was the most sophisticated and dangerous outside actor in the current election – thus further discrediting the Trump administration’s efforts to downplay Russia’s preeminence. (Microsoft had also identified efforts by China, Iran and Russia to hack a range of political consultants, academics, advocacy groups and other organizations – some of them Republican – and it had reported that the hacking activity was intensifying as the election approached. Altogether, the revelations were far more detailed than any that had been made public by the Trump administration.)<sup>77</sup>	7, 9, 12, 14

7-31-20	In Florida. At a campaign rally attended by local sheriffs in Tampa, Florida, Mr. Trump served up his usual boasts about his performance as president, as well as his usual, gratuitous mockery of his adversaries Nancy Pelosi (“crazy”), Joe Biden (on the verge of senility), and the four freshman congresswomen of color known as The Squad (“real beauties”). He also claimed that he was “doing well” in the “battle against the China virus” in Florida, even as confirmed coronavirus cases and deaths were soaring there. Far more chillingly, however, Mr. Trump ranted at length about assaults on security forces by “anarchists” in other parts of the country. He expanded on that theme in gruesome detail. To strong applause, he implied that if such assaults were to occur in Florida, the sheriffs should and would respond brutally to the provocations.<sup>78</sup> As he proclaimed his “big love affair [with] law enforcement,” CSD was reminded of his earlier profession of love for North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un; his hushed-up, extra-marital flings with pornography stars Stormy Daniels and Karen McDougal; and his history as a sexual predator, having allegedly assaulted more than 20 women in years past. We of course don’t equate any of those indecencies with one another – American law enforcement, in particular, is wholly essential, largely honorable and frequently heroic. But we are struck, yet again, by Mr. Trump’s unorthodox ardors; his unquenchable, lascivious appetites more generally; and, at the end of the day, his promiscuity.	6, 7, 9, 11
7-31-20	Pompeo smears again. The Democratic-controlled House Foreign Affairs Committee was forced to subpoena the State Department in order to obtain the same documents that State had willingly given Senate Republicans in their scheme, not yet unveiled, to smear presidential contender Joe Biden shortly before the upcoming election. The documents pertained to Biden’s diplomacy with Ukraine when he was vice president.<sup>79</sup> Secretary of State Mike Pompeo had previously been derelict, if not complicit, in Mr. Trump’s vicious smearing of Marie Yovanovitch when she was the ambassador to Ukraine, for not joining in the campaign to smear Biden and his son Hunter. For extorting the president of Ukraine in connection with that campaign, Mr. Trump was ultimately impeached. (See above in this Chronology.)	17 (9)

8-3-20	With Axios. HBO aired a 40-minute interview that Mr. Trump had given to an Axios reporter and that featured his ignorance, illogic and narcissism. In it: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He maintained that mail-in voting would give rise to widespread fraud (but he was unable to explain why).</li> <li>• He produced statistical charts that he claimed proved that the U.S. was excelling in its coronavirus response (but he was unable to counter the reporter’s rebuttals).</li> <li>• He maintained that experts agreed with him that coronavirus testing was excessive (but he was unable to tell the reporter who the experts were).</li> <li>• He blamed President Obama for not having bequeathed him a coronavirus test (but his predecessor had left office three years prior to the onset of the pandemic).</li> <li>• He claimed that the virus was under control (but a thousand Americans were dying daily).</li> <li>• He claimed to have not seen any intelligence to the effect that Russians were paying bounties to the Taliban to kill Americans (but that intelligence had inundated the news, and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo had upbraided Russia’s foreign minister for that activity in mid-July<sup>80</sup>).</li> <li>• He again sent well wishes to Ghislaine Maxwell, his late friend Jeffrey Epstein’s girlfriend who had recently been arrested for sex trafficking of minors (contrast to his urgings that his many political adversaries be sent to jail).</li> <li>• He dismissed the significance of the late civil rights leader John Lewis (see CSD’s entry of July 30 +, above).<sup>81</sup></li> </ul>	6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12
8-4-20 +	My country (as in, it’s mine). On August 4, a Washington Post columnist noted that in recent days Mr. Trump had repeatedly and cavalierly claimed to possess sweeping executive powers that he possibly or definitely did not: to unilaterally cut payroll taxes and stop tenant evictions in order to mitigate the economic effects of the coronavirus pandemic; to ban the Chinese social media app TikTok and to extract a portion of any sales proceeds that an American company might pay to purchase the app; and to ban mail-in voting nationwide in the face of the pandemic.<sup>82</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 10, 11

8-4-20 +	[Continued.] On August 8, Mr. Trump actually did some of that, in a sudden, flamboyant effort seemingly intended to make himself appear responsive to the pandemic: he ordered a delay in the collection of payroll taxes for some workers, the payment of a $400 weekly benefit to the unemployed ($100 to be funded by states), the halting of some tenant evictions, and the consideration of possible student loan forgiveness by federal agencies. He pledged prompt implementation. But critics asserted that some of those items were the prerogatives of Congress and thus likely to be challenged in court; and that all of them amounted to smoke and mirrors – grandstanding moves that had fundamental economic and logical flaws and that would not be widely effected or effective. Widespread confusion and uncertainty among businesses and unemployed workers ensued; some state governments feared bankruptcy from the unemployment order; and some scenarios issuing from the payroll tax cut risked breaking the finances of affected workers, while ignoring the plight of the unemployed. One prominent economist, citing what he said was the unanimous opinion of his colleagues, wrote: “[A] payroll tax cut is the hydroxychloroquine of economic policy. It’s a quack remedy that somehow caught Trump’s eye, which he won’t give up because sycophants keep telling him he’s infallible. There may be some ulterior motives — this move might end up undermining the finances of Social Security and Medicare — but that’s all secondary. Basically this is a tantrum from a president temperamentally incapable of owning up to his own mistakes. ... This would be a really good time for presidential leadership. But what we have instead is a pitchman hawking miracle cures at his country club. ... [Mr. Trump] really is completely out of his depth, with no understanding of either the epidemiological or the economic reality we face. At a moment of crisis America is cursed with a president who is incompetent, deeply ignorant, yet so personally insecure that he surrounds himself with people who tell him he’s a universal genius.”<sup>83</sup> CSD professes no expertise in economics. But we pass on the concerns because they were so widespread.	9, 10, 11

8-4-20 +	The end of Roman Catholicism in the United States. On August 4, Mr. Trump told a Catholic cable news outlet that Democrats “want to put the Church out of business” by restricting worship services during the coronavirus pandemic. He also warned that a Democratic administration under his opponent Joe Biden would “take all of [Catholics’] rights away.”<sup>84</sup> Both Biden and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi were practicing Catholics. On August 6, at an address to supporters in Cleveland, Ohio, Mr. Trump continued. He said that a Biden administration would “[t]ake away your guns, take away your Second Amendment. No religion, no anything. Hurt the Bible. Hurt God. He’s against God. He’s against guns.” The event was disguised as official White House business, and was funded by taxpayers.<sup>85</sup> Mr. Trump’s own spiritual and ethical commitments, if any, remained a mystery.	7, 8, 9
8-5-20 +	My nomination announcement, from my White House. On August 5, Mr. Trump proposed accepting the forthcoming Republican Party nomination in a televised address from the White House. No incumbent president had ever done that (President Franklin D. Roosevelt had done it by radio in 1940), and critics of both parties said that the stunt would be illegal – using official government property and employees to promote a campaign.<sup>86</sup> Huffington Post followed with an extensive and stunning recitation of Mr. Trump’s routine use of taxpayer-funded platforms and trips to denounce Democrats and his electoral opponent Joe Biden.<sup>87</sup> On August 10, Mr. Trump said that he might accept the nomination at the Gettysburg Battlefield – another federal property, staffed by other federal employees, and thus equally illegal.<sup>88</sup> On August 17, he announced his decision: he would accept the nomination from the White House.<sup>89</sup> The Republican National Committee had already applied to the National Park Service for a permit to launch fireworks near the Washington Monument at the conclusion of his acceptance speech.<sup>90</sup>	9, 11

8-7-20	Never before. Mr. Trump announced that he was considering ordering insurers to cover pre-existing medical conditions, which he said “has never been done before.” Mr. Trump lacked the authority to issue such an order. Equally outrageous: coverage of pre-existing conditions was already an essential component of the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare) – an existing law benefiting millions of Americans that Mr. Trump had already ruthlessly hamstrung and was still trying to destroy, out of spite for President Obama. His current efforts in that vein included a lawsuit that was pending before the Supreme Court.<sup>91</sup>	7, 9, 11
8-8-20	My Mount Rushmore. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had asked the governor of South Dakota how he could have his face sculpted on Mt. Rushmore, and that she had encouraged him in that venture as recently as July 2020 in her hopes of being named to replace Mike Pence as the vice-presidential candidate at the upcoming Republican National Convention.<sup>92</sup>	9, 11, 16
8-11-20	Interviewing, for the sheer joy of it. In a pair of lengthy morning radio interviews, Mr. Trump falsely stated that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• U.S.-developed coronavirus vaccines were almost ready for deployment.</li> <li>• He had been much tougher on Russia than President Obama had been.</li> <li>• The Obama administration had spied on him in a vast bureaucratic conspiracy.</li> <li>• If Joe Biden were to win the presidency in November, China would “own the United States.”<sup>93</sup></li> </ul> In a Fox News television interview that evening, Mr. Trump said little about the pandemic or about Biden’s announcement shortly before that Kamala Harris would be his vice-presidential running-mate, but instead rambled for 20 minutes attacking: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Wind energy.</li> <li>• The awarding of Pulitzer Prizes to his adversaries.</li> <li>• His impeachment.</li> <li>• Hillary Clinton.</li> <li>• Mail-in voting (alleging that Russia and China would be intercepting mailed ballots).</li> <li>• Hispanic gang members.</li> </ul>	7, 8

8-12-20 +	In praise of extremists. On August 12, after Marjorie Taylor Greene won a Georgia Republican primary election for a seat in the House of Representatives, Mr. Trump praised her as a “future Republican Star.” Greene was a racist and a QAnon conspiracy theory enthusiast whom most other leading Republicans had denounced. She had once warned that the world is controlled by a “global cabal of Satan-worshipping pedophiles.” A core QAnon precept is that a Jewish conspiracy seeks to enslave Americans. QAnon is also anti-Catholic. Referring to House Speaker Nancy Pelosi at her victory party speech, Greene promised to “kick that bitch out of Congress.” (Pelosi is a practicing Roman Catholic.)<sup>94</sup> On August 18, after Laura Loomer won a Florida Republican primary election for a seat in the House, Mr. Trump tweeted his congratulations. Loomer, age 27, is an anti-Muslim extremist, who has been barred from numerous social media platforms and even conservative Republican events.<sup>95</sup> Asked by reporters about QAnon on August 19, Mr. Trump praised QAnon followers for their patriotism, for their support of him, and (seemingly) for their policy positions.<sup>96</sup> This occurred even as Facebook was removing 790 QAnon groups from its site and more than 10,000 Instagram accounts related to QAnon, due to the movement’s perceived potential to incite violence. Facebook, Reddit and YouTube had already been removing QAnon content. The group had been linked to over a dozen violent incidents over the past year.<sup>97</sup> On August 23, Mr. Trump’s chief of staff, Mark Meadows, told Fox News that he recently had had to Google QAnon to learn what it was, and that he had no problem with the ideology/organization. (The FBI had recently labeled the group a domestic terror threat.)<sup>98</sup>	17 (5, 6, 7)
8-13-20	Birtherism II. Within days after Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden announced that Kamala Harris would be his vice-presidential running mate, Mr. Trump and his campaign preposterously voiced suspicions that Harris was not an American citizen and thus couldn’t qualify for the office. (Harris’s parents were non-citizens when she was born; but she was born in Oakland, California, and thus was clearly a citizen.) [Continued below.]	4, 6, 9

8-13-20	[Continued.] Mr. Trump had launched his political career by arguing volubly for years that President Obama wasn't born in the U.S., and thus couldn't sit as president. <sup>99</sup>	4, 6, 9
8-13-20	Kanye West: spoiler. On July 4, the popular but controversial rapper, designer, billionaire and Trump supporter Kanye West had announced that he was running for president. West had no political experience, and no coherent platform. In the weeks following, many reports surfaced that Republicans were helping him get onto state ballots for the November election, with a view to drawing Black votes away from Mr. Trump's electoral opponent, Joe Biden (West is Black). On August 8 or 9, West met privately with Jared Kushner, Mr. Trump's son-in-law and senior advisor. On August 13, NPR collected and published state-by-state reports of the Republican assistance.<sup>100</sup> No previous presidential candidate's party was known to have supported an electoral spoiler. CSD saw in the escapade a radical corruption of the electoral process, at a minimum, and conceivably some manner of electoral or campaign finance fraud.	9
8-17-20	In Minnesota. Campaigning in Mankato, Minnesota, Mr. Trump called electoral opponent Joe Biden a "puppet of left-wing extremists trying to erase our borders, eliminate our police, indoctrinate our children, vilify our heroes, take away our energy." He said that a Biden victory would "replace American freedom with left-wing fascism."<sup>101</sup> Campaigning in Oshkosh, Minnesota, Mr. Trump said, "We are going to win four more years. And then after that, we'll go for another four years because they spied on my campaign. We should get a redo of four years."<sup>102</sup>	6, 9
8-18-20	The biggest scandal in history. In a rambling Twitter response to Michelle Obama's criticisms of him during the virtual Democratic National Convention, Mr. Trump boasted hyperbolically about his record, blasted the Obama administration, then falsely concluded: "The ObamaBiden Administration was the most corrupt in history, including the fact that they got caught SPYING ON MY CAMPAIGN, the biggest political scandal in the history of our Country. It's called Treason."<sup>103</sup>	7, 9, 11

8-18-20	In Arizona. Speaking to supporters in Yuma, Arizona, Mr. Trump accurately boasted about his many anti-immigration achievements; falsely claimed success in building his border wall (only 300 miles of replacement barrier had been installed, and at the expense of taxpayers, not Mexico); repeated his incendiary 2015 trope that he was defending Americans from “murderers” and “rapists” who were crossing the border from Mexico; and falsely accused his electoral opponent Joe Biden of wanting to turn dangerous criminal aliens loose on American streets.<sup>104</sup>	6, 7, 9
8-19-20	Goodyear boycott. Mr. Trump urged his Twitter followers to boycott Goodyear tires, because Goodyear had mounted an employee training program in which it had said that attire containing messages supporting minority and gender rights was acceptable in the workplace, but that attire bearing contrary messages and Trump campaign messages was not.<sup>105</sup> As reported previously in this Chronology, Mr. Trump had often called on the public, and had otherwise sought, to punish private enterprises that he believed did not support his agenda.	6, 9
8-20-20	In Pennsylvania. Hours before Joe Biden accepted the Democratic nomination for the presidency, Mr. Trump entertained his own supporters in a small Pennsylvania town near Biden’s birthplace with a cascade of lies about Biden: that Biden was “a puppet of the radical-left movement that seeks to destroy the American way of life”; that Biden had “abandoned” his home town of Scranton when, as a child, he and his family had moved elsewhere; that Biden had promised to raise working people’s taxes by $4 trillion, would “take away your guns,” would “give free health care to illegal aliens,” would “close down charter schools,” and would end 670,000 fracking-related jobs – all contrary to Biden’s actual positions. “Imagine the mayhem coming to your town,” Mr. Trump said, referring to recent but isolated episodes of urban violence in protest of racial injustice. He also boasted preposterously that he had “done a great job” in fighting the coronavirus pandemic. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9

8-20-20	[Continued.] At the same event, Mr. Trump ranted about vice presidential candidate Kamala Harris, as a California prosecutor, having released into rehabilitation an undocumented Hispanic drug dealer who then went on to commit another crime.<sup>106</sup> He also repeated his false claims that the only way Democrats could win the election would be by fraud; that President Obama had spied on him during the 2016 campaign; that New Zealand was experiencing a “massive breakout” of the coronavirus (outlandishly implying that the still tiny numbers of fatalities in New Zealand vindicated the tens of thousands of deaths in the U.S.); that he had nearly beaten the pandemic here; and that he had opposed the war in Iraq before it began.<sup>107</sup>	6, 7, 9
8-20-20 +	Bannon, Broidy, Falwell and Graham. On August 20, Stephen Bannon was arrested on suspicion of financial fraud in connection with operating a non-profit that had solicited donations from gullible Trump supporters to advance the construction of Mr. Trump’s border wall. Bannon, a White supremacist, for a time had been Mr. Trump’s 2016 campaign manager, then a senior White House advisor. Bannon also claimed to have been communicating with Mr. Trump in recent months, long after their public separation. Mr. Trump’s other two campaign managers – Corey Lewandowski and Paul Manafort – had likewise been charged with felonies during or after their service to Mr. Trump, and Manafort was sentenced to prison. When asked about Bannon the following day, Mr. Trump falsely minimized his involvement with him, as he had falsely minimized his involvement after other associates had been charged with crimes: Michael Flynn, Paul Manafort, Michael Cohen, George Papadopoulos, Roger Stone, Lev Parnas and Igor Fruman.<sup>108</sup> On September 1, The Washington Post reported that Elliott Broidy was under investigation for illegally lobbying for foreign clients.<sup>109</sup> In 2017, Broidy had been named one of four lead fundraisers for the Republican National Committee under Mr. Trump. Since then the three others had also been implicated in scandals: Michael Cohen (Mr. Trump’s attorney, for campaign finance violations), Steven Wynn (fellow casino owner, for sexual predation) and Louis DeJoy (postmaster general, for mail-in voting sabotage).<sup>110</sup> [Continued below.]	7, Bad company

8-20-20 +	[Continued.] Two of Mr. Trump’s most prominent religious supporters and self-identified friends had also drawn scrutiny during that period. On August 25, Jerry Falwell was ousted as the head of the evangelical Christian institution Liberty University following a sex scandal and concerns about possible financial improprieties.<sup>111</sup> And after Franklin Graham delivered a highly partisan and sectarian prayer for Mr. Trump at the Republican National Convention on August 27, some 11,000 Christians petitioned to oust him from his post as CEO of the prominent, tax-exempt, nominally non-partisan Christian relief organization Samaritan’s Purse.<sup>112</sup> (Afterwards Graham defended himself, claiming that the prayer was non-partisan, but reaffirming his full-throated support for Mr. Trump.<sup>113</sup>)	7, Bad company
8-26-20	Nepotism. Amid ceaseless, bitter accusations by Donald Trump Jr., his girlfriend Kimberly Guilfoyle and other reelection campaign officials that the career of Joe Biden’s son Hunter had benefited from nepotism, media reported that taxpayers had spent over $64,000 in Secret Service costs for Donald Jr. and Guilfoyle to vacation in Paris in 2018. Further rank nepotism: not only did Mr. Trump employ three of his children as top executives at his company, but his daughter Ivanka and her husband Jared Kushner were serving as top White House advisors, and Guilfoyle and son Eric’s wife Lara were being paid as top-level campaign aides.<sup>114</sup>	11
8-27-20. 9-5-20	Pay me (more). On August 27, The Washington Post reported that taxpayers so far had spent over $900,000 at Mr. Trump’s hotels and resorts, the majority of it supporting his 270 visits to those properties. Those expenditures had included the housing of Secret Service details and other members of his large entourage. Payments to Mr. Trump’s company for some 37 Republican group events at the properties accounted for an additional $3.8 million.<sup>115</sup> On September 5, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had drawn over $58 million from his campaign donors’ funds to cover his personal legal and compliance costs – a figure that The Times said was far greater than that of any of his predecessors (for example, five times President Obama’s drawings from campaign funds).<sup>116</sup>	11, 15

8-28-20	Contempt in the Cabinet. The House Foreign Affairs Committee launched contempt proceedings against Secretary of State Mike Pompeo for his repeated refusal to cooperate with the committee’s investigations: first the impeachment inquiry; and more recently his furnishing documents only to Senate Republicans in their politically charged probe of Mr. Trump’s electoral opponent Joe Biden, notwithstanding a congressional subpoena. (See also CSD’s July 31 entry above, “Pompeo smears again.”) The House had already held Attorney General William Barr and Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross in criminal contempt for their refusals to comply with subpoenas related to the 2020 census. The House Judiciary Committee had also held Barr in contempt for refusing to comply with a subpoena for the documents underlying special counsel Robert Mueller’s final report. But none of those contempt citations were enforceable, and none of their targets had displayed the slightest remorse for their improprieties.<sup>117</sup>	17 (9)
8-31-20	Dark shadows. Mr. Trump told a Fox News interviewer that unnamed people in “dark shadows” were pulling the strings behind both the social justice protests and his electoral opponent Joe Biden.<sup>118</sup>	6, 7, 9
9-1-20	Melania’s emails. A tell-all book by a former friend reported that Mr. Trump’s wife Melania had regularly used a private email account while living at the White House. She thus joined the long list of Trump White House figures who had illegally done that, including daughter Ivanka, son-in-law Jared Kushner, and Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross. Mr. Trump had furiously tarred his 2016 electoral opponent Hillary Clinton for doing the same, eliciting “Lock her up!” chants at his rallies.<sup>119</sup>	17 (9, 11)
9-1-20 +	The other guy’s health. On September 1, for the second time in recent days, Mr. Trump suggested, without evidence, that his electoral opponent Joe Biden had taken performance enhancement drugs prior to his primary election debates, and he challenged Biden to take drug tests before their own scheduled debates for the general election.<sup>120</sup> On September 5, he said it yet again, to a Fox News interviewer.<sup>121</sup>  [Continued below.]	7, 8, 9

9-1-20 +	[Continued.] At a campaign rally in Latrobe, Pennsylvania on September 3, Mr. Trump mocked Biden for wearing a mask at public appearances. "Have you ever seen a man who likes a mask as much as him?" he said. "It gives him a feeling of security. If I were a psychiatrist, I'd say this guy has got some big issues."<sup>122</sup> Also on September 3, Mr. Trump's campaign posted ads on Facebook that featured manipulated photographs making Biden look much older than he was, together with Mr. Trump's nickname for Biden, "Sleepy Joe."<sup>123</sup> It was the latest of many falsehoods and dirty tricks being perpetrated by the campaign, some described above in this Chronology. Mr. Trump thus appeared to be punching back "ten times harder," as he had professed to always do when challenged – in this case relative to media scrutiny of his own health. He had continued to deny that he had any health issues of his own, despite having had a mysterious emergency visit to Walter Reed Hospital in November 2019, having struggled to walk and hold a glass of water at the West Point commencement exercises in May, and having admitted in July to taking mental acuity tests. He now appeared to be upset about renewed scrutiny of the Walter Reed event.<sup>124</sup>	7, 8, 9
9-2-20	Barr fibs a lot. Attorney General William Barr falsely told CNN's Wolf Blitzer that Russia had not yet begun interfering in the 2020 presidential election; that Jacob Blake (who is Black) was armed when he was repeatedly shot in the back by a White policeman in Kenosha, Wisconsin; and that mail-in voting was prone to massive fraud. To that last point, Barr pointed in particular to a federal indictment in Texas where a man had fraudulently submitted 1700 ballots. But shortly afterwards the Justice Department acknowledged that Barr had misspoken; that, following investigation, there had been no indictment and no wrongdoing alleged in the matter.<sup>125</sup>	17 (7, 9)

9-2-20, 9-3-20	Please vote twice. On two successive days, Mr. Trump urged his supporters to vote twice – first by mail, then in person – as a means of ensuring that their votes would be counted.<sup>126</sup> Whether he was serious about the ask, and whether he understood that if his supporters would vote twice it would be just as felonious as if Democrats would vote multiple times (as he long had been alleging Democrats planned to do), was unknowable. But it seemed likely that at least some of his followers would now attempt to double-vote. An array of federal and state election officials (all Democrats) denounced Mr. Trump’s ask, and they threatened prosecution for those who would vote twice.<sup>127</sup>	9, 10
9-3-20	DeVos vs. the Hatch Act. Mr. Trump’s Education Secretary Betsy DeVos called his electoral opponent Joe Biden “shameful” in a Fox News interview – a possible violation of the Hatch Act, which forbids government officials from campaigning.<sup>128</sup>	17 (9)
9-3-20 +	Disparaging fallen heroes. On September 3, The Atlantic magazine reported on numerous instances earlier in Mr. Trump’s presidency when he had privately disparaged armed forces members who had served in American wars – including those who had been wounded and killed, and those who lay in Arlington National Cemetery – as “suckers” and “losers.”<sup>129</sup> He then falsely denied the report, calling it a “hoax” and another “witch hunt.”<sup>130</sup> But the report was subsequently corroborated by multiple news outlets – among them Fox News, whose reporter Mr. Trump then publicly called upon Fox to fire.<sup>131</sup> He also called The Atlantic’s editor a “slimeball”; and he urged his supporters to harass the widow of Apple founder Steve Jobs, who was a major investor in The Atlantic.<sup>132</sup> Many commentators found the new reports credible, in large part because Mr. Trump had a long history of disparaging military service,<sup>133</sup> and because he had fraudulently avoided the draft during the Vietnam War. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 11

9-3-20 +	[Continued.] Even top military officers now declined to defend him. On September 7, seemingly in reaction to that, Mr. Trump said that unnamed Pentagon officials didn't like him because "they want to do nothing but fight wars so that all of those wonderful companies that make the bombs and make the planes and make everything else stay happy."<sup>134</sup> (But Mr. Trump himself had long boasted about having beefed up the military for potential battle, and he had often threatened war against Iran, North Korea and other countries. In addition, his own top defense appointees had close ties to military contractors; and, according to Politico, he had made the purchase, public display and foreign sales of military hardware a major priority of his administration.<sup>135</sup>) Except for Mr. Trump's false denial of the statements attributed to him by The Atlantic and the other news organs, the events had occurred in the past, prior to the start of this Chronology. And CSD has no category for undemocratic behavior consisting of abject selfishness, meanness, hypocrisy, cowardice and unpatriotic sentiment. We nevertheless include the episode here because it raised a national uproar.<sup>136</sup>	1, 7, 11
9-7-20	German Nazis for Trump. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had become a hero for Germany's neo-Nazis, ultranationalists and QAnon conspiracy theorists – groups that the German government had determined to constitute the gravest current threats to German democracy.<sup>137</sup>	9
9-8-20	Barr rides again. Attorney General William Barr intervened on behalf of Mr. Trump in a private lawsuit being brought by one of the more than 20 women who had accused the latter of sexual assault. E. Jean Carroll was suing Mr. Trump for defaming her after she had come forward in 2019 to allege that he had raped her years previously and after he then had publicly responded to the charge by disparaging her physical appearance and claiming that she was lying. Barr now filed a motion in federal court seeking to move Carroll's claim from a New York state court to a New York federal court, where the Justice Department would defend it. Barr's grounds for the motion: that Mr. Trump's allegedly defamatory statements had been uttered within the scope of his duties as president of the United States, and thus that the defendant in the case should be the U.S. government, not Mr. Trump. [Continued below.]	2, 9, 11

9-8-20	[Continued.] If the Justice Department were to succeed in taking over the defense in federal court, it would argue that, by statute, federal employees (here, Mr. Trump) are immune from claims arising from their employment; and American taxpayers would pay for Mr. Trump’s legal fees and any award of damages to Carroll that might eventuate. Mr. Trump had already been delaying the state court case, and the Justice Department filed its new motion on the very day when production of discovery items – including a sample of Mr. Trump’s DNA that Carroll believed would match residues on her dress from the date of the alleged rape – had been due in court. Observers widely excoriated the move as amounting to a typical abuse of the court system by Mr. Trump; but otherwise as an unprecedented expropriation of the Justice Department by a president for personal legal services; and the first time that the Justice Department had concluded that calling a rape accuser a liar fell within a president’s official duties.<sup>138</sup> The Washington Post’s editorial board wrote: “Trying to construe the president’s self-serving words about a purely private matter as official acts conflates the person of the president with the nation’s government. That is what occurs in dictatorships, not democracies.”<sup>139</sup>	2, 9, 11
9-8-20	The great environmentalist. Mr. Trump said in Florida that he was “a great environmentalist” and “the No. 1 environmental president since Teddy Roosevelt.” The occasion was a speech extending a moratorium on offshore drilling that he himself had previously sought to end. He said nothing about his having promised to exit the Paris Agreement on climate change; called climate change a “hoax” and removed it from a list of national security threats; moved to repeal approximately 100 environmental regulations, including many relating to air and water pollution; and otherwise savaged 50 years’ worth of environmental protections. But he did say that his electoral opponent Joe Biden – an actual advocate for the environment – would leave the environment “permanently injured.” “The left’s agenda isn’t about protecting the environment,” he said. “It’s about punishing America.” Characterized as an official presidential event, the campaign trip and the speech were paid for by taxpayers.<sup>140</sup>	7, 8, 9, 11
9-8-20	In North Carolina. At a rally in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Mr. Trump: [Continued below.]	6, 7, 9

9-8-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Addressed a crowd of several thousand who were nearly all mask-less and crowded together, in defiance of the state’s coronavirus requirements.<sup>141</sup></li> <li>• Promised a coronavirus vaccine “very, very soon,” but charged that it was his electoral rival Joe Biden and Biden’s running-mate Kamala Harris who were the ones politicizing the issue (by their casting doubt on the prospect of an early and safe vaccine).<sup>142</sup></li> <li>• Declared that Biden had long conspired with China to outsource American jobs and “is a globalist sellout who spent his career laying waste to American communities.”<sup>143</sup></li> <li>• Mocked the foreign-sounding name of Harris, a woman of color and daughter of immigrants; preposterously said that she was “further left than crazy Bernie [Sanders]”; and said that her election would be “an insult to our country” – eliciting jeers from the audience.<sup>144</sup></li> <li>• Accused North Carolina’s Democratic governor of imposing coronavirus restrictions on the state so as to hurt Mr. Trump’s re-election campaign.<sup>145</sup></li> <li>• Insisted (still) that Mexico would pay for his border wall – now (vaguely) by way of the U.S. establishing toll booths at the border or taxing U.S.-based workers’ remittances to their families in Mexico.<sup>146</sup></li> </ul>	6, 7, 9
9-9-20	Woodward’s book. Media reported that veteran journalist Bob Woodward, of Watergate reporting fame, had written in a soon-to-be released book – based materially on some 18 recorded interviews with Mr. Trump – that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump’s National Security Advisor Robert O’Brien had told him (Mr. Trump) in early February that the coronavirus posed the greatest national security threat of his presidency. Mr. Trump then told Woodward, still in February, that he knew that the disease was highly contagious, airborne and far more deadly than the flu, but that he had deliberately misled the public about that so as to prevent “panic.” [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

9-9-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ From that, observers widely concluded that Mr. Trump had not been merely thick-headed and cavalier about the threat borne by the disease during that period; rather, that he had repeatedly lied about the threat. They noted that he had also disparaged mask-wearing, contradicted his top scientists, convened medically dangerous campaign rallies, and ridiculed truth-tellers – all at a time when he knew that that could heighten the risk to Americans’ health. Woodward’s Watergate partner Carl Bernstein called it “the ultimate felony, to throw away lives.”<sup>147</sup></li> <li>○ As for wishing to avoid “panic,” Mr. Trump’s entire reelection campaign in recent months had come to center on creating White people’s panic around social justice protests. The coronavirus “panic” that he had sought to avoid appeared to refer to the stock market, rather than to public health. The common thread: instill panic when that would benefit him in his reelection; cover up threats when that would benefit him.<sup>148</sup></li> <li>● Dr. Anthony Fauci, the country’s chief immunologist, said relative to the pandemic that Mr. Trump’s “attention span is like a minus number,” and that “his sole purpose is to get reelected.”</li> <li>● Mr. Trump told Woodward that he (himself) had “built” a secret weapons system that dwarfed our traditional nuclear arsenal – a boastful revelation that appeared to have been either inaccurate or top secret; and if truly secret, that Russia and China may not have known about, but that might now encourage them to investigate.<sup>149</sup></li> <li>● Former Defense Secretary Jim Mattis and former Director of National Intelligence Daniel Coats had found Mr. Trump to be dangerous, amoral, unfit, and unable to distinguish his own lies from the truth. Mattis would go to church to pray that Mr. Trump wouldn’t capriciously start a war. He had considered Mr. Trump’s directive to precipitously remove U.S. troops from Syria to be “felony stupid,” at which point he had resigned. He said that by dividing Americans and abandoning our allies, Mr. Trump was showing our enemies “how to destroy America.” Coats strongly suspected that Russian President Vladimir Putin “had something” on Mr. Trump (seemingly fodder for blackmail). 9-9-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump boasted to Woodward about the flattering letters that he had received from North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un. He considered Kim brilliant, and former President Obama not smart. He told Woodward that Kim thought that President Obama was “an asshole.”</li> <li>• Mr. Trump made clear that one of his main goals was to undo President Obama’s accomplishments, and he boasted, “Ninety percent of the things he’s done, I’ve taken apart.”</li> <li>• Mr. Trump once told an advisor that “my fucking generals are a bunch of pussies. 9-10-20	In Michigan. At a campaign rally in Freeland, Michigan, Mr. Trump addressed a generally White, mask-less, shoulder-to-shoulder crowd of approximately 5,000. His campaign purported to skirt the state’s 100-person coronavirus limitation on outdoor events by characterizing the rally as a “protest,” which as such would be exempt from the law. In his remarks, Mr. Trump frequently spoke about “they” and “them” doing dastardly things to “you” and to “us,” without identifying who “they” and “them” were; but the implication that “they” operated a monstrous, dictatorial conspiracy was plain. He otherwise boasted, lied and defamed Democrats incessantly. By way of example: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He warmly praised North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un and Russian strong-man Vladimir Putin, and said, “Getting along with foreign powers is not a bad thing.” (He said nothing about his hostile relations with many of America’s traditional allies.)</li> <li>• He said that he had succeeded in his earlier brinksmanship with North Korea because no war had eventuated. (He did not acknowledge that he himself had precipitated the crisis, and that no war had threatened before his presidency.) [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	6, 7, 9, 11

9-10-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• He said that he deserved a Nobel Peace Prize more than President Obama had deserved his – even as cities in his own country were being wracked by civil disorder that he had helped to foment.</li> <li>• He said that the president of Iraq had praised him for single-handedly defeating ISIS, and had called him “sir.”</li> <li>• He said, preposterously, that Biden had “launched a public campaign against the vaccine.”</li> <li>• Brutally mischaracterizing comparative international statistics, he said that under his leadership the U.S. had “done the best job of any major country,” when in fact the opposite was true.</li> <li>• He perversely defended his having downplayed the coronavirus threat in February – purportedly so as not to create panic – by comparing his public rhetoric to Prime Minister Winston Churchill’s stalwart but blunt rooftop addresses during the Battle of Britain, and to President Franklin D. Roosevelt’s declaration, mid-Depression, that “The only thing we have to fear is fear itself.”</li> <li>• He shrilly and delusionally warned, “If Biden wins, China wins. If Biden wins, the mob wins. If Biden wins the rioters, anarchists, arsonists and flag burners win.” (So much for not instilling panic.)</li> <li>• He accused Biden of “Lying about his lifetime of cold-hearted globalist betrayal.”</li> <li>• He called Biden “the worst presidential candidate in the history of presidential politics.”</li> <li>• He said that Biden would “demolish the auto industry, “destroy your Social Security,” eliminate health insurance coverage for pre-existing conditions, end school choice, and eviscerate the 2nd Amendment – all fabrications.</li> <li>• He made wildly misleading remarks about his own revitalization of the auto industry.</li> <li>• He said, “We will restore patriotic education – and you know what I mean by that.” CSD did not know what he meant, but we imagined it to involve teaching children of all ages that he was their infallible leader, among other anti-democratic precepts.<sup>151</sup></li> </ul>	6, 7, 9, 11

The Republican National Convention
(A separate section of Addendum 32)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 6, 7, 9, 11 and 17 (6, 7, 9, 11) as defined in CSD’s Statement of Principles.

Airing from August 24 through August 27, the televised portions of the four-day Republican National Convention struck many as dystopian. They were an exercise on the part of Mr. Trump and his supporters in smugness, falsehood, hypocrisy, fear-mongering, national division, and the promotion and acceptance of him as the country’s rightfully authoritarian and legally immune leader.

- Breaking with long tradition, the Republican Party declined to put forth a platform at the convention, instead announcing that it would simply support whatever Mr. Trump might decide to do from time to time. That is to say, the party abandoned any pretense to substantive principle, in favor of a capricious autocracy.<sup>152</sup>
- Breaking with another long tradition, Mr. Trump spoke on each of the four nights of the convention, not just the last night, confirming the party’s embrace of a personality cult.
- The ratification of Mr. Trump’s nepotism was completed. Trump family members constituted six of the 12 “key speakers” on the program. Ivanka Trump – Mr. Trump’s daughter, his senior White House advisor, and a woman of no known accomplishment or policy expertise – was identified in the convention program as “The Honorable.”<sup>153</sup>
- On August 24, the first night of the convention, at least four featured speakers unleashed a new Red Scare redolent of the 1950s, warning that a Democratic win would lead to apocalyptic socialism and/or dictatorship. Some warned of criminals rampaging in the streets. Some did both. By way of example, Kimberley Guilfoyle, a top campaign official and Donald Trump Jr.’s girlfriend, said from the podium, “They want to destroy this country and everything that we have fought for and hold dear. They want to steal your liberty, your freedom. They want to control what you see and think and believe, so they can control how you live. They want to enslave you to the weak, dependent, liberal, victim ideology, to the point that you will not recognize this country or yourself.” Republican Congressman Matt Gaetz said that Democrats “disarm you, empty the prisons, lock you in your home, and invite MS-13 to live next door.” New York’s Republican Party chairman said, “We have crime ravaging our streets. That is what America will see if a Biden-Harris regime runs our country.” Trump Jr. himself said that Biden “wants to bring in more illegal immigrants to take jobs from American citizens,” and that Democrats were “attacking the very principles on which our nation was founded: freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of religion, the rule of law.” Other speakers attested to Mr. Trump’s empathic heart and good character.<sup>154</sup>

- Speakers and a video portrayed Mr. Trump as a decisive leader in combatting the coronavirus, and Democrats as do-nothings.<sup>155</sup> The New York Times described that theme as “an alternate reality: one in which the nation was not nearing 180,000 deaths from the coronavirus; in which Mr. Trump had not consistently ignored serious warnings about the disease; in which the president had not spent much of his term appealing openly to xenophobia and racial animus; and in which someone other than Mr. Trump had presided over an economy that began crumbling in the spring.”<sup>156</sup> Observers believed that that alternative reality, including as to the pandemic, pervaded and corrupted the next three evenings as well.
- As for the coronavirus specifically, Mr. Trump said, “We did the exact right thing. We saved millions.” A columnist from The Times interpreted: “He has moved seamlessly from the fantasy that the virus would ‘go away,’ as he has said some 31 times, to the fantasy that he has already dispatched it.”<sup>157</sup>
- Mr. Trump himself said of Democrats, “They want no guns. They want no oil and gas. And they want no God.” When (jokingly or not) he suggested that he could be president for several more terms (in defiance of the Constitution), the crowd chanted “Twelve more years!”<sup>158</sup>
- One speaker said, “[T]his fact is now clear: Trump is the bodyguard of Western civilization.”<sup>159</sup> (For CSD, it was unclear what Mr. Trump’s connection to Western civilization was, other than – in one commentator’s opinion – that he was White, which likely was the speaker’s point.<sup>160</sup>)
- Two wealthy personal injury lawyers – a married couple who on June 28 had notoriously drawn their guns on peaceful racial justice marchers passing their mansion in St Louis, Missouri – spoke and were hailed as heroes. They warned of Democrats’ anti-segregation policies: “No matter where you live, your family will not be safe in the radical Democrats’ America.”<sup>161</sup>
- The Washington Post counted 19 false or misleading statements made from the podium on the first night of the convention.<sup>162</sup> The New York Times reported that news networks were struggling with whether or how to fact-check the profusion of outright falsehoods in real time.<sup>163</sup>
- After the first evening, a CNN commentator said that if Democrats had performed these types of convention stunts, “Republicans would be rioting.”<sup>164</sup>
- On August 25, the invocation for the second night of the convention was delivered by a woman who called upon Jesus to deliver “strategies” to Mr. Trump from heaven and to “overthrow any enemies that stand against us so that we will be victorious in this next season.”<sup>165</sup>
- While on an official diplomatic mission to Jerusalem but somehow purporting to speak “as a private citizen,” Secretary of State Mike Pompeo addressed the convention by way of a pre-recorded video, touting what he considered to be Mr. Trump's foreign policy successes, with a sweeping view of Jerusalem's Old City in the background. In doing so, he defied long-standing custom for secretaries of state to abstain from convention appearances; State Department rules; and possibly the Hatch Act. House Democrats promptly announced their intention to investigate.<sup>166</sup> (A partial list of Pompeo's other illegal and unethical activities as secretary of state – covered earlier in this Chronology – appears at the link at this end note.<sup>167</sup>)

- Establishing another “first” for a convention, Mr. Trump – from within the White House – pardoned a convicted bank robber who had been born again in prison. Attending the ceremony was the former FBI agent who had arrested the man and who now claimed to be his best friend. The FBI agent was White. The felon, who was Black, spoke reverently about both God and law enforcement.<sup>168</sup> The likely facilitation of the event by federal employees amounted to a violation of the Hatch Act. Mr. Trump signed the pardon with a Sharpie, for which the camera zoomed in on his hand. CSD saw in that moment Mr. Trump hitting a trifecta: pandering to Blacks, Christians and law enforcement officials in a single, deft and illegal blow.
- In yet another “first,” Mr. Trump and acting Homeland Security Secretary Chad Wolf, at the White House, presided over the naturalization of five recent, highly-educated immigrants from developing countries.<sup>169</sup> The spectacle was consistent with Mr. Trump's convention theme of illegally using the White House as a political prop and its staff as campaign facilitators. It was also consistent with his theme of seeking to exclude less pedigreed immigrants, a policy which, in fairness, was in force within some other developed democracies. But it was inconsistent with his having slowed down (and for a time shut down) naturalizations during the coronavirus pandemic, thereby frustrating the hopes of several hundred thousand new arrivals who wished to vote – many possibly against him – in the November election.<sup>170</sup>
- Two additional speakers ensured that the motif of corruption would color the convention proceedings. Former Florida attorney general Pamela Bondi falsely railed at Biden's “corruption” in Ukraine and elsewhere, after having herself in 2013 dropped a fraud investigation of Trump University in apparent exchange for an illegal $25,000 campaign contribution from the Trump Foundation. (At the convention, she was silent about Mr. Trump's own massive, multiform and ongoing corruption.) And Mr. Trump's son Eric – who was leading the Trump Organization during his father's presidency – spoke of his dad's greatness. Eric Trump and the organization were being investigated by the New York attorney general for bank and tax fraud, and were being sued for receiving unconstitutional emolument payments from foreign governments and domestic political interests at their hotels and resorts.<sup>171</sup>
- One anti-abortion speaker described the abortion process in gruesome detail. She was on record as stating that only heads of households should vote in elections, and/or that husbands should determine their wives' votes.<sup>172</sup> (CSD does not take a position on reproductive issues; but we denounce both demagoguery and attacks on anyone's right to vote.)

- The overall theme of the convention’s second night appeared to have been, cynically, to portray Mr. Trump as a friend to and champion of women, immigrants and people of color.<sup>173</sup> Consistent with that theme, and to close out the evening’s celebration of lawlessness and hypocrisy, First Lady Melania Trump addressed the convention – extraordinarily – from the Rose Garden at the White House. She was the only speaker to acknowledge the country’s many Covid-19 deaths, but the crowd there was mostly maskless. She criticized the Democratic National Convention for its negative attacks on her husband, but not the Republican National Convention’s negative attacks on Biden.<sup>174</sup>
- The Post counted 19 more false and misleading statements at the podium, equal to the tally for the first night of the convention.<sup>175</sup>
- On August 26, Mr. Trump’s chief of staff Mark Meadows said that “nobody outside of the Beltway really cares” about cabinet officials such as Pompeo and Wolf possibly violating the Hatch Act by speaking at the convention.<sup>176</sup> (On August 22, The Times had reported that some of Mr. Trump’s aides were privately scoffing at the Hatch Act and claiming to take pride in violating its regulations.<sup>177</sup> But The Post reported on August 28 that rank and file federal employees had been routinely disciplined for far lesser Hatch Act violations than Mr. Trump’s top appointees had committed, and it provided a spate of recent examples. Among other things, the Office of Special Counsel had warned, disciplined or otherwise taken action with respect to some 211 such employees during the first three years of Mr. Trump’s term; but the nine high-level Trump appointees targeted by that office had “thumbed their nose at the law.”<sup>178</sup>)
- Opening the third night of the convention on August 26, South Dakota Governor Kristi Noem said that America’s “founding principles are under attack” and declared: “Democrat-run cities across this country are being overrun by violent mobs. The violence is rampant. There’s looting, chaos, destruction and murder. People that can afford to flee have fled. But the people that can’t — good, hard-working Americans — are left to fend for themselves.”<sup>179</sup> The absence of looting in South Dakota did not figure into her remarks.
- One columnist characterized the third night of the convention overall as “a version of alternative facts, a bubble containing a phony reality where President Donald Trump is a champion of women’s equality, a protector of health care benefits, a defender of pre-existing conditions coverage, and a man of immeasurable compassion.”<sup>180</sup> Details follow.
- Much of the evening’s content addressed the Black American experience. Several Black football players offered testimonials, including relative to the general pre-pandemic job growth that had happened to benefit Blacks as well as others. Otherwise, speaker after speaker denounced ongoing racial justice protests as being conducted by “radical mobs.”<sup>181</sup>
- The production also emphasized women’s empowerment, including by honoring the 100th anniversary of women’s suffrage and by featuring female employees and relatives who attested to Mr. Trump's kindly heart. Little was said about any policy moves Mr. Trump had made expressly for the benefit of women, and nothing was said about his history of sexually assaulting women.<sup>182</sup>

- Seeming to take (without evidence or analysis) the long view of our country's centuries-long saga, speakers characterized the Biden-Harris ticket as the most pro-abortion in history, the most anti-police in history, the most hostile to farmers in history, and Mr. Trump as the best everything in history.<sup>183</sup>
- Tennessee Senator Marsha Blackburn said, referring to coronavirus measures, "If the Democrats had their way, they would keep you locked in your house until you become dependent on the government for everything. That sounds a lot like Communist China to me — maybe that's why Joe Biden is so soft on them." She blamed the Chinese communist regime for "unleash[ing]" the coronavirus on the world, and said that China would prefer that Biden win the election. She said that Democrats were trying to "cancel" law enforcement and the military.<sup>184</sup>
- A former college football coach said that Biden was a Catholic "in name only" because of his pro-choice stance. Other speakers bashed the Democrats for having impeached Mr. Trump, and for (Democratic) demagoguery.<sup>185</sup>
- Vice President Mike Pence, speaking from Fort McHenry in Maryland – where "The Star-Spangled Banner" had been written during the War of 1812, and where his use of federal property and personnel in an election campaign likely violated the Hatch Act – hailed the administration's performance in everything. As to its pandemic response, without citing evidence, he said that it was stellar and that he foresaw a "miracle" vaccine appearing by the end of the year. He said that Biden was "a cheerleader for Communist China," a "Trojan horse for a radical left," and the true pessimist in the campaign versus the optimistic Mr. Trump. Pence also denounced "violence and chaos," "rioting and looting," and "tearing down statues" – blaming social justice protesters for the murder of a policeman in Oakland that had actually been committed by a right-wing extremist. He said, "The hard truth is, you won't be safe in Biden's America."<sup>186</sup>
- On the final night of the convention, August 27, Franklin Graham delivered an invocation in which he thanked God for Mr. Trump and Pence, and for the last four years (only four) of bounty. Appealing to Jesus, he made it an exclusively Christian prayer.<sup>187</sup>
- Appearing by video, Senator Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said: 'Today's Democrat party doesn't want to improve life for middle America. They prefer that all of us ... keep quiet and let them decide how we should live our lives. They want to tell you when you can go to work, when your kid can go to school. They want to tax your job out of existence and then send you a government check for unemployment. They want to tell you what kind of car you can drive, what sources of information are credible, and even how many hamburgers you can eat. They want to defund the police and take away your Second Amendment rights. They want free healthcare for illegal immigrants yet they offer no protection at all for unborn Americans. They want to pack the Supreme Court with liberals intent on eroding our constitutional rights. ... Like President Trump, we won't be bullied by a liberal media intent on destroying America's institutions."<sup>188</sup>

- In a video, several public housing tenants of color bashed New York City's Mayor Bill DiBlasio. A day after the convention, The Times reported that the segment had been orchestrated and filmed by Lynne Patton, the Trump-appointed head of federal housing programs for New York, and that she had tricked some of the tenants into appearing – an exercise in perfidy and Hatch Act contempt. Several of the tenants, who had not known that the video would be edited down to a few sound bites and shown to the nation at the convention, now claimed to dislike Mr. Trump and to be enraged. Patton, who had worked as an event planner for Mr. Trump prior to his presidency and who had had no background in housing before assuming her current position, had previously been cited for other Hatch Act violations.<sup>189</sup>
- Several speakers prepared the national audience for the appearance of the “greatest president in American history.”<sup>190</sup>
- Mr. Trump's personal attorney, Rudi Giuliani – who had led an illegal effort in Ukraine to smear Biden in 2019 and who was under investigation for illegal lobbying on behalf of foreign clients – ranted about the Black Lives Matter movement and civil unrest in a handful of American cities. He accused Democrats of starting and fomenting that unrest.<sup>191</sup>
- At last, in sovereign fashion, lit with floodlights and festooned with large campaign banners and a long rank of American flags, Mr. Trump and his wife Melania descended from the White House portico onto the South Lawn. The scene was redolent of their descent on an escalator in one of Mr. Trump's gilded buildings in New York to announce his presidential campaign in 2015. At the podium and then throughout his acceptance speech, the couple were greeted by the ovations of some 1500 adoring subjects, who were jammed together and mostly mask-less notwithstanding the raging coronavirus pandemic, and few of whom had been tested for the disease in advance of entering the grounds. The supporters appeared to be moved by, and moved toward – Mr. Trump's (by turns) boastful, vengeful, mocking and platitudinous remarks that followed. That desecration of the White House mortified ethics experts. The disdain for coronavirus precautions mortified health experts.<sup>192</sup>
- For 70 minutes – one of the longest acceptance speeches on record – Mr. Trump held forth. He deployed the by now customary tropes, including that Biden and Democrats would destroy the country with their socialist agenda, that they would eliminate manufacturing and energy jobs, and that they embraced violent social justice protesters. He even hinted that Biden was a sexual predator (when it was Mr. Trump himself who had had earned that stigma). He railed against immigrants, including fully vetted and lawfully admitted refugees. He swore that a Democratic victory would ravage the suburbs and the right to own guns. He overstated many of his achievements and made grandiose promises, including with respect to his coronavirus response and the construction of his border wall. He accused Biden of taking positions that Biden hadn't.<sup>193</sup> He uttered not a word about Black lives ruined by gratuitous police violence or other injustice, even as new episodes of that syndrome were seizing the headlines.

CNN's fact-checker counted 21 false or misleading statements. The list is mind-numbing, and it appears at the link at this end note.<sup>194</sup> The Washington Post counted 25.<sup>195</sup> CSD counted more. Below is a sampling of some of Mr. Trump's most incendiary, demagogic, vicious and/or outlandishly false remarks, in sequence, drawn from NPR's transcript (within which NPR's substantive commentary is annotated).<sup>196</sup>

These are the words of the president of the United States.

"This election will decide whether we save the American dream or whether we allow a socialist agenda to demolish our cherished destiny."

"Your vote will decide whether we protect law-abiding Americans or whether we give free rein to violent anarchists and agitators and criminals who threaten our citizens."

"[T]his election will decide whether we will defend the American way of life or whether we will allow a radical movement to completely dismantle and destroy it."

"In the Left's backward view, they do not see America as the most free, just and exceptional nation on earth. Instead, they see a wicked nation that must be punished for its sins."

"Our opponents say that redemption for you can only come from giving power to them. This is a tired anthem spoken by every repressive movement throughout history. But in this country, we don't look to career politicians for salvation. In America, we don't turn to government to restore our souls; we put our faith in almighty God."

"Joe Biden is not a savior of America's soul; he is the destroyer of America's jobs, and if given the chance he will be the destroyer of American greatness."

"Joe Biden spent his entire career outsourcing their dreams and the dreams of American workers, offshoring their jobs, opening their borders and sending their sons and daughters to fight in endless foreign wars, wars that never ended. Four years ago I ran for president because I could not watch this betrayal of our country any longer."

"Within three short years, we built the strongest economy in the history of the world."

"We took the toughest, boldest, strongest and hardest-hitting action against China in American history by far."

"We ended catch-and-release, stopped asylum fraud. Took down human traffickers who prey on women and children. And we have deported 20,000 gang members and 500,000 criminal aliens."

“We have already built 300 miles of border wall, and we are adding 10 new miles every single week. The wall will soon be complete.” [The 300 miles was replacement construction, not new construction. The wall was nowhere near complete.]

“We are joined this evening by members of the Border Patrol Union representing our country’s courageous border agents. Thank you very much for being here. Thank you. Brave, brave people. You see, this country loves our law enforcement. They do.”

“And I say very modestly that I have done more for the African-American community than any president since Abraham Lincoln, our first Republican president.”

“Biden’s record is a shameful roll call of the most catastrophic betrayals and blunders in our lifetime.”

“That’s why China supports Joe Biden and desperately wants him to win. I can tell you that, upon very good information. China would own our country if Joe Biden got elected.”

“And when the China virus hit, we launched the largest national mobilization since World War II.”

“The cost of the Biden [coronavirus] shutdown would be measured in increased drug overdoses, depression, alcohol addiction, suicides, heart attacks, economic devastation, job loss and much more. Joe Biden’s plan is not a solution to the virus, but, rather, it’s a surrender to the virus.” [Democrats had accused Mr. Trump of just such a surrender.]

“To save as many lives as possible, we are focusing on the science, the facts and the data.” [Mr. Trump had fought relentlessly against science, facts and data during throughout the pandemic.]

“He [Biden] has pledged a $4 trillion tax hike on almost all American families, which will totally collapse our rapidly improving economy.” [Most of Biden’s proposed taxes would fall on the wealthy.]

“Biden has promised to abolish the production of American oil, coal, shale and natural gas, laying waste to the economies of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Texas, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Colorado, and New Mexico, destroying those states. Absolutely destroying those states, and others.” [Untrue.]

Joe Biden recently raised his hand on the debate stage and promised, here give away [sic] -- he was going to give it away, your healthcare dollars to illegal immigrants, which is going to bring healthmassive [sic] number of immigrants into our country. Massive numbers will pour into our country in order to get all of the goodies that they want to get, education, healthcare, everything. He also supports deadly sanctuary cities that protect criminal aliens. He promised to end national security travel bans from Jihadist nations, and he pledged to increase refugee admissions by 700 percent. This is in the manifesto.”

“During the Democrat Convention, the words ‘under God’ were removed from the Pledge of Allegiance, not once, but twice. We will never do that.” [Mostly untrue.]

“If the left gains power they will demolish the suburbs, confiscate your guns and appoint justices who will wipe away your Second Amendment and other constitutional freedoms.”

“Biden is a trojan horse for socialism.” [Biden is a moderate.]

“Make no mistake, if you give power to Joe Biden, the radical left will defund police departments all across America. They will pass federal legislation to reduce law enforcement nationwide. They will make every city look like Democrat-run Portland, Oregon. No one will be safe in Biden’s America. My administration will always stand with the men and women of law enforcement.”

“[W]e must never allow mob rule. In the strongest possible terms the Republican party condemns the rioting, looting, arson and violence we have seen in Democrat-run cities all, like Kenosha, Minneapolis, Portland, Chicago and New York, many others, Democrat-run. There’s violence and danger in the streets of many Democrat-run cities throughout America. This problem could easily be fixed if they wanted to. Just call, we’re ready to go in. We’ll take care of your problem in a matter of hours.”

“At least 13 members of Joe Biden’s campaign staff donated to a fund to bail out vandals, arsonists, anarchists, looters and rioters from jail.”

“If the Democrat Party wants to stand with anarchists, agitators, rioters, looters and flag burners, that is up to them. But I, as your president, will not be a part of it. The Republican Party will remain the voice of the patriotic heroes who keep America safe and salute the American flag.”

“If the Radical Left takes power, they will apply their disastrous policies to every city, town and suburb in America. Just imagine if the so-called peaceful demonstrators in the streets were in charge of every lever of power in the U.S. government, just think of that.”

“Always remember they’re coming after me because I am fighting for you.”

“And remember this, they spied on my campaign and they got caught.” [They didn’t, and they didn’t.]

“The far Left wants to coerce you into saying what you know to be false and scare you out of saying what you know to be true.”

[Of the White House:] “The fact is we’re here and they’re not.”

“We will always and very strongly protect patients with pre-existing conditions.” [He had continuously, even through the days of the convention, opposed that.]

A columnist for The Times seized on some of the many ironies in Mr. Trump’s fear-mongering about the rioters: that he vowed to protect law and order, despite his own disregard for the Hatch Act and the criminal convictions or guilty pleas of eight of his 2016 campaign associates; that he warned of civil violence that would flower under a Biden presidency, when the current civil violence was flowering under his own; that right-wing extremists had killed hundreds of Americans in recent years, while left-wing extremists to that date* had killed none; and that his promise to protect our citizenry from devastation appeared to exclude taking climate change and the coronavirus pandemic seriously.<sup>197</sup>

- Mr. Trump’s speech was promptly followed by a massive display of fireworks, launched at the Washington monument. Some of the pyrotechnics spelled “Trump 2020” in the sky, as though Mr. Trump were putting his name on a building he owned.<sup>198</sup>
- Following the fireworks, an elegantly dressed American tenor positioned in the portico sang a number of Christian pieces in Italian. From below, Mr. Trump and his family gazed reverently. (For CSD, the pandering was matched only by the faux-aristocratic and faux-religious pretention.) Then the tenor sang a number of American patriotic songs.<sup>199</sup>

The November 2020 Election
(A separate section of Addendum 32)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 4, 6, 7, 9 and 16 as defined in CSD’s Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the efforts of the Trump administration to suppress voting in and to discredit any unfavorable results of the upcoming November 2020 election have moved rapidly. CSD’s observations below that have been recorded as of a given date may have been superseded, or may yet be superseded, on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD’s concerns about the attempts by the Trump administration to corrupt and discredit the election are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that have recurred, that news media have reported anew, and that, as of the date of this Addendum, have continued to threaten our democracy – day after day.

On July 30 – the same day as the late voting rights champion Elijah Cummings was being memorialized by other presidents – Mr. Trump tweeted: “With Universal Mail-In Voting ... 2020 will be the most INACCURATE & FRAUDULENT Election in history. ... Delay the Election until people can properly, securely and safely vote???”

The tweet was telling. It reflected Mr. Trump’s acknowledgement that in-person voting risked spreading the coronavirus; that the pandemic was not under control; that he feared losing in the November election; and that, nevertheless, he wished to remain in office indefinitely. No previous president had sought to delay a November election; even Presidents Lincoln and Roosevelt, during wartime, had rejected the idea.

In any event, delaying the election would require an act of Congress, and so it would not occur. The tweet was seen, instead, as part of Mr. Trump’s campaign to preemptively discredit the election results so that he could contest them after the fact. Indeed, he had claimed voter fraud after he had lost the 2016 primary elections in each of Virginia, New Hampshire, California and Iowa, as well as the popular vote in the general election.<sup>200</sup> The Washington Post reported that now, amid the coronavirus, he had attacked mail-in voting nearly 70 times since late March. But even as top congressional Republicans distanced themselves from his new tweet, Mr. Trump doubled-down by pinning it to the top of his Twitter feed.<sup>201</sup>

In fact Mr. Trump appeared to be preparing to have it both ways: not just to discredit adverse election results after the fact, but to logistically impede mail-in voting before the fact. Also on July 30, The Washington Post reported that a recent order issued in the name of cost-cutting by Postmaster General Louis DeJoy – a Trump appointee and major campaign donor with no postal experience – was operating to slow down mail delivery. As a consequence, postal workers and customers had begun expressing grave concerns about the reliability of mail-in voting.<sup>202</sup> CSD drew from the report that DeJoy had the logistical ability to deliberately (if unlawfully) slow delivery at selected locales – e.g., blue electoral districts within purple states. But even a more general slow-down was seen as having the potential to dissuade citizens from voting by mail – and thus, amid the coronavirus pandemic, from voting at all.

A New York Times analysis on July 31 cited similar concerns on the part of state voting officials of both parties. The Times also noted that:

- DeJoy owned shares in the postal service’s biggest competitor, UPS.
- The service’s board of governors had become politicized by the Trump administration.
- In March, Mr. Trump had personally caused the postal service to spend $28 million to send postcards – advising on coronavirus prophylaxis and featuring his own name, campaign-style – to some 130 million households.<sup>203</sup> (Some CSD members had received them.)

On July 30, Mr. Trump went stratospheric in his attacks, falsely claiming that states were already sending “hundreds of millions” of mail-in ballots to even non-citizens. The allegations as to both the number of ballots being sent and their being sent to non-registered voters were untrue.<sup>204</sup>

On July 31, speaking to police groups at the White House, Mr. Trump reiterated his fear of mail-in voting, adding, “This will be catastrophic for our nation. You’ll see it. I’m always right about things like this. I guess I must be, or I wouldn’t be sitting here.”<sup>205</sup> Observers saw Mr. Trump’s discrediting of the election process – the core mechanism of democracy – as threatening many voters’ belief in democracy itself.<sup>206</sup>

But oddly, on the same day as the White House tirade, Mr. Trump actually urged people to vote by absentee ballot – which he himself had done in Florida and New York, and which in many or most states would involve the same process as the broad “no-excuse,” coronavirus-driven balloting against which he had been railing.<sup>207</sup> And on August 4, he tweeted that mail-in voting in Florida was safe<sup>208</sup> – reportedly because Republican governors and advisors had begun to convince him that depressing the mail-in vote could actually undermine Republican candidates there, himself included.<sup>209</sup>

On August 7, in yet another recent Friday Night Massacre on the part of the Trump administration (that is, hidden on a Friday evening from the weekday news cycle), DeJoy announced a sweeping restructuring of the mail service, including the reassignment or removal of 23 top postal executives overseeing day-to-day operations while centralizing power in himself – reportedly ripping out decades of institutional postal knowledge. He also announced that the service would freeze hiring and seek voluntary early retirements. All of this was occurring in the run-up to the November election – potentially one of the most critical moments in the service’s history. One Democrat in Congress accused DeJoy of “deliberate sabotage.”<sup>210</sup>

On August 11, the Postal Service informed some states that they could need to triple the cost of the postage they pay for distributing mail-in ballots in order to enjoy first-class delivery speed.<sup>211</sup>

Mr. Trump said on August 12, then again on August 13, that he would block any emergency funding for the Postal Service specifically so that it could not mail out ballots. He also said that he would block election aid to states for the same reason. That is, he explicitly acknowledged seeking to sabotage the service, for what were widely seen as partisan and personal political reasons.<sup>212</sup>

Media began reporting on August 13 that the Postal Service was removing mail sorting machines around the country. CNN put the number of such machines at 700. The Postal Service put the number at 671, and said that most of them were in high population areas.<sup>213</sup>

On August 14, The Washington Post reported that the Postal Service had advised 46 states that it couldn't guarantee timely delivery of mail-in ballots.<sup>214</sup>

Faced with public panic, congressional Democratic outrage, a scheduled congressional hearing, a congressional demand that the service's board of governors remove him, an inspector general investigation, a lawsuit brought by voters, and the threat of state lawsuits over the prospect of intentional mail delays – not to mention new revelations about his financial conflicts of interest – on August 17 DeJoy announced that he was suspending his operational changes (such as removing sorting machines and collection boxes) and that he would pay postal workers overtime during the election period as needed. But he did not say whether he would replace equipment that he had already removed, some of which he had ordered destroyed.<sup>215</sup>

At a campaign speech to supporters in Oshkosh, Wisconsin on August 17, Mr. Trump said that “the only way we're going to lose this election is if the election is rigged.”<sup>216</sup>

On August 18, Mr. Trump said that mail-in voting could cause so many problems that the election might have to be re-done – even though no mechanism or authority for re-doing a nationwide election exists.<sup>217</sup>

On August 18, the attorneys general of 14 states sued the Postal Service.<sup>218</sup>

On August 19, The New York Times reported that mail delays had already occurred in several states, resulting in rent checks, prescription medicines, and primary election mail-in ballots not being timely delivered.<sup>219</sup> Business deliveries and Social Security checks also reportedly were experiencing late delivery.

On August 19, Mr. Trump's press secretary confirmed that Mr. Trump might not accept the outcome of the election if he were to lose.<sup>220</sup>

On August 21, Mr. Trump said that he would send law enforcement officials and U.S. attorneys to polling places around the country to protect against voter fraud. He had no authority to do so, but his threat had the potential to encourage local authorities to appear (or to threaten to appear) at the polls and thus to intimidate Democratic voters, as had occurred and then been outlawed in some previous elections.<sup>221</sup>

On August 21, DeJoy told a congressional committee that he would not reverse his removal of mail sorting machines or any of his other recent operational changes.<sup>222</sup>

On the same day, the attorneys general of six more states, led by Pennsylvania, filed a second lawsuit.<sup>223</sup>

On August 23, Mr. Trump tweeted that "Mail Drop Boxes ... are a voter security disaster [that] make it possible for a person to vote multiple times." He also tweeted, "They are not Covid sanitized." Continuing its recent efforts to flag Mr. Trump's fraudulent statements challenging election integrity, Twitter slapped a warning label on the tweet.<sup>224</sup>

On August 24, three more states sued the Postal Service.<sup>225</sup>

On August 24, DeJoy testified before the House Oversight Committee. Then and in the days following, he promised to produce documents that would illuminate his motives and decision-making around his operational changes.<sup>226</sup> But he then declined that production, prompting the committee to threaten a subpoena.<sup>227</sup>

On August 24, speaking during the Republican National Convention in Charlotte, North Carolina, Mr. Trump said, "They're trying to steal the election from Republicans. Just like they did it last time, with spying."<sup>228</sup>

Politico reported on August 26 that Donald Trump Jr. was sending robocalls across the country urging people to cast absentee ballots. The functional and security distinctions between traditional absentee ballots and the universal mail-in ballots that Mr. Trump had been railing against continued to be elusive.<sup>229</sup>

Huffington Post reported on August 31 that Robert "Mike" Duncan, the chairman of the Board of Governors of the Postal Service, was contemporaneously serving as a director of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell's $130 million super PAC known as the Senate Leadership Fund. HuffPost continued: "Duncan previously served as general counsel and then chair of the Republican National Committee from 2002 to 2009, when the committee and its state counterparts supervised an unprecedented escalation of voter disenfranchisement efforts in swing states. One of the tactics was manipulating mail-in votes. Duncan was also listed earlier this year as a director of American Crossroads, a super PAC that's backing Trump in the 2020 election, according to CNBC. Duncan, from Republican McConnell's home state of Kentucky, was handpicked for his role by Trump. His board of governors in turn named Louis DeJoy, a prominent contributor to the Trump campaign, as postmaster general in June. Most members of the Postal Service's board of governors have numerous ties to the Republican Party as well as to Trump's associates and administration ..."<sup>230</sup>

On September 2, Barr told CNN, without evidence, that mail-in voting could be tainted by massive fraud.<sup>231</sup>

On September 6, The Post reported that DeJoy – bent on rising within the Republican Party – for a decade had pressured employees of his North Carolina business to make contributions to Republican campaigns, including by attending fundraisers at his gated mansion, and that he had then reimbursed them with bonuses. The conduct as alleged was criminal, and the (Democratic-led) House Oversight Committee promptly began an investigation.<sup>232</sup>

On September 9, two Democratic senators issued a report to the effect that DeJoy's actions had caused significant and dangerous delays in the delivery of prescription drugs to Postal Service customers.<sup>233</sup>

The Coronavirus Pandemic
(A separate section of Addendum 32)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13 and 15 as defined in CSD’s Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic have moved rapidly. CSD’s observations below that have been recorded as of a given date may have been superseded, or may yet be superseded, on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD’s concerns about the Trump administration’s coronavirus response are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that have recurred, that news media have reported anew, and that, as of the date of this Addendum, have continued to threaten lives – day after day.

On July 16, Mr. Trump’s Secretary of Education, Betsy DeVos, argued that all schools should open in the fall because children are “stoppers” – that is, that they stop the spread of the coronavirus. The claim was false.<sup>234</sup>

On July 23, having resumed his long-scuttled televised coronavirus briefings for a second straight day, Mr. Trump blamed the exploding rate of infections on protests against racial injustice, summer holiday celebrations, young people frequenting bars, and immigrants arriving from Mexico. Public health experts, by contrast, blamed it on the rush in several states to re-open their economies – a dynamic that Mr. Trump had fomented.<sup>235</sup> They also blamed it on Mr. Trump’s denial (until the past few days) of the pandemic’s force and trajectory; his mockery and politicization (until the past few days) of mask-wearing and social distancing; his (continuing) refusal to deploy a nationwide containment strategy; and his (continuing) campaign against testing coupled with his failure to establish a robust testing infrastructure.<sup>236</sup>

Also on July 23, the country’s chief epidemiologist and Mr. Trump’s coronavirus nemesis, Dr. Anthony Fauci, said in an interview aired on CNN that he and his family were receiving “serious” personal threats, requiring them to have extra security.<sup>237</sup> On August 5, he revealed that he had had to hire security professionals to protect his family. (He had had to have security for himself since April.)<sup>238</sup>

On July 23, hours before Dr. Fauci threw the first pitch of the 2020 Major League baseball season between the Washington Nationals and the New York Yankees, Mr. Trump announced that he was going to throw the first pitch at a Yankees game in August. The announcement took both the White House and the Yankees by surprise, and was reportedly intended to annoy and upstage Fauci.<sup>239</sup>

On July 24, Mr. Trump’s press secretary said that Mr. Trump had always supported the wearing of face-masks – an untruth of stupendous proportions.<sup>240</sup>

On July 27, Mr. Trump and his son Donald Jr. each retweeted a video in which a faith healer with a history of wildly eccentric views (space alien DNA, demon sperm) proclaimed the efficacy of hydroxychloroquine as a treatment for Covid-19.<sup>241</sup> The FDA and numerous other credible sources had resolved weeks previously that that drug had no such efficacy, and some medical studies had indicated that it could be dangerous; but Mr. Trump still would not admit that his early promotion of the drug had been baseless.<sup>242</sup> As punishment for the retweets, Twitter partially suspended Donald Jr.'s account.<sup>243</sup> That day Mr. Trump also retweeted a claim that Dr. Fauci had repeatedly misled the American public, including by denying the efficacy of hydroxychloroquine; that is, while endorsing the faith healer Mr. Trump disparaged Fauci.<sup>244</sup> The following day, he denied having sent that retweet, and – astonishingly – he said that he had no idea what Fauci thought about hydroxychloroquine. He also quipped that he deserved but was being denied the same high approval ratings that Fauci was receiving, because “nobody likes me.”<sup>245</sup>

Attending a fundraising event for the energy industry on July 29 at an oil rig in Texas, Mr. Trump and other mask-less attendees were photographed in close proximity to one another.<sup>246</sup>

At a news briefing on July 30, Mr. Trump reacted to the country's uncontrolled pandemic spread and its record-breaking economic decline by blaming China for the “China virus,” falsely stating that schoolchildren were immune from the disease (and thus that all schools should open), and condemning mail-in voting.<sup>247</sup>

Testifying before Congress on July 31, Mr. Trump's top coronavirus advisor Adm. Brett Giroir acknowledged that prompt testing and test results were simply not available to most Americans – many months after Mr. Trump had proclaimed, repeatedly, that anyone who wanted a test could promptly get one.<sup>248</sup> In fact one of CSD's members in Southeastern Pennsylvania who felt he may have been exposed to the virus in late July was unable to get a test.

At the same congressional hearing, Dr. Fauci testified that the U.S. had seen more Covid-19 cases than Europe because the U.S. had failed to timely and sufficiently close its economy. On August 1, by way of Twitter, Mr. Trump angrily and imbecilically responded to Fauci: “Wrong! We have more cases because we have tested far more than any other country, 60,000,000. If we tested less, there would be less cases.”<sup>249</sup>

On August 2, after being criticized by House Speaker Nancy Pelosi for being too sanguine about the country's coronavirus prospects, Dr. Deborah Birx, the coordinator of the White House's coronavirus task force, took a measure to protect her reputation. She told CNN, darkly, that infections were entering a different phase, and were “extraordinarily widespread.” On August 3, Mr. Trump publicly criticized Birx for the first time, tweeting, “In order to counter Nancy, Deborah took the bait & hit us. Pathetic!”<sup>250</sup>

On August 4, seven governors announced that, in the absence of action by the Trump administration, they were banding together to attempt to develop a solution for the woefully protracted time it was taking for Covid-19 test results to be delivered.<sup>251</sup>

At an August 4 news conference, Mr. Trump falsely claimed that New York and New Jersey were responsible for the nation's high coronavirus statistics, and he yet again falsely stated that a rise in testing was causing the rise in cases. On the same day, The Washington Post recapped a series of recent statements by Mr. Trump in which he had falsely declared that the U.S. was outperforming other countries in their coronavirus responses, and boasted about his own response (or non-response) – which in fact had led to the U.S., with 4% of the world's population, experiencing 25% of its coronavirus infections and deaths to that date.<sup>252</sup>

On August 5, for the first time, Facebook blocked a Trump campaign announcement – for falsely and dangerously stating that children are “almost immune” to Covid-19. Twitter also blocked a campaign tweet that contained a video of the ad.<sup>253</sup>

At a White House press briefing on August 5, Mr. Trump said of the coronavirus pandemic, as he had said often before, “It's going away, it will go away, things go away, absolutely. No question in my mind, sooner rather than later.”<sup>254</sup>

At an indoor gathering at his Bedminster, New Jersey golf club on August 7, Mr. Trump hosted his club members, coming in off the links, who were shoulder-to-shoulder and mask-less – in defiance of state law. He entered the room to the strains of “Hail to the Chief.” In addressing the group, he repeated his counter-factual tropes that the rampant surge in Covid-19 cases was merely the result of increase testing, and that the coronavirus would someday just “disappear.”<sup>255</sup>

On August 8, Mr. Trump issued a spate of orders intended to shore up the economy in the face of the pandemic. The orders were widely criticized as rash, likely ineffective, possibly counter-productive, and possibly illegal. See above CSD's entry within the main section of this Chronology at August 4 +, “My Country.”

Dr. Scott Atlas. On August 10, Mr. Trump publicly introduced Dr. Scott Atlas at the daily coronavirus briefing. Atlas, a prominent physician, conservative political consultant, and now a medical advisor to Mr. Trump, supported Mr. Trump in many of his non-scientific views about the pandemic. He thus was seen as offering a counterpoint to the science and the concerns as advanced by Dr. Fauci, Dr. Birx and others, even though he had no experience in public health, immunology or infectious diseases.<sup>256</sup> Among other things, Atlas reportedly advocated for allowing the virus to run its course within the American population until “herd immunity” was achieved – at the cost (critics estimated) of possibly a million lives.<sup>257</sup>

- Atlas's support for that strategy was confirmed on August 31 by The Post, which reported that public health officials were aghast: the strategy had failed in Sweden; and if it were implemented here, millions (plural) of American deaths could ensue.<sup>258</sup>

- On September 2, The Times reported that Atlas also discredited the use of face masks and doubted that children could spread the disease; and that he had had words with the CDC's director Dr. Richard Redfield and Dr. Birx.<sup>259</sup>

- As to herd immunity, CSD wondered whether Atlas himself would be willing to intentionally undergo infection in order to advance the well-being of the herd.

On August 12, Mr. Trump said that Democratic governors were ordering people to stay at home – “in prisons” – in order to make him look bad.<sup>260</sup>

On August 14, just hours after Mr. Trump had boasted about having procured large amounts of masks, gowns and ventilators, the FDA reported continuing widespread shortages of those items and testing supplies.<sup>261</sup>

On August 17, in an effort to establish that the U.S. was battling the coronavirus more effectively than other countries, Mr. Trump told supporters at a rally in Minnesota, “You’ve seen what’s going on in New Zealand? Big surge in New Zealand. It’s terrible. We don’t want that.” New Zealand, which had nearly eliminated the disease on its shores, had reported nine new cases on August 17, and a cumulative death count of only 22. By contrast, the U.S. was reporting approximately 50,000 new cases and 1,000 deaths per day, and over 170,000 cumulative deaths.<sup>262</sup>

On August 22, Mr. Trump accused his own FDA and the “Deep State” of slow-walking the development of a coronavirus vaccine as a means to harm him politically. He also tweeted his continuing support for hydroxychloroquine as a prophylaxis or cure.<sup>263</sup>

At an August 23 news conference, Mr. Trump and several of his top health officials, including FDA Commissioner Stephen Hahn, announced the emergency approval of convalescent blood plasma for hospitalized Covid-19 patients, stating that its deployment would have reduced deaths by 35 percent. Scientists around the country found the statistic bewildering and grossly misrepresented. No randomized trials had yet occurred. Some speculation arose as to whether the FDA had acquiesced to the announcement due to Mr. Trump’s accusation the previous day that the FDA was slow-walking.<sup>264</sup> On the following day, Hahn apologized for overstating the effectiveness of the treatment.<sup>265</sup> On September 1, in a remarkable release, the NIH trashed the FDA’s emergency approval of convalescent plasma, finding the data to be insufficient.<sup>266</sup> The dust-up was reminiscent of Mr. Trump’s hydroxychloroquine fiasco.

Reportedly under orders from the White House, on August 24 the CDC stopped its recommendations that symptomless people who had been exposed to the virus be tested. The CDC was still estimating that 40 percent of those who tested positive for Covid-19 had no symptoms but could be highly infectious and spread it to other people. But the unit now said that it would be up to state and local officials whether to advise symptomless people to be tested. Dr. Fauci, other scientists and several governors quickly expressed their deep concerns. Fauci had been under anesthesia for minor surgery when the decision had been made. Contradicting Mr. Trump’s early assurances that everyone who wanted a test could get a test, the CDC’s chief, Dr. Redfield, now ambiguously said, “Everyone who wants a test does not necessarily need a test,” causing confusion and consternation among the nation’s doctors and health officials.<sup>267</sup> Philadelphia, Pennsylvania and New Jersey officials expressly rejected the new guidelines.<sup>268</sup>

During the four days of the Republican National Convention (August 24-27), the presenters spoke little about the pandemic, and when they did, they appeared to treat it as a thing of the past. In fact over 4,000 Americans died from Covid-19 during those four days – more than the number who had died in the 9/11 terrorist attacks. The number of U.S. deaths during the convention exceeded the number of new infections in Canada.<sup>269</sup>

On August 28, The Post reported that dozens of Secret Service officers traveling with Mr. Trump in campaign-style events had been sickened by the virus or quarantined due to contacts with infected people. Yet Mr. Trump was continuing to hold large public gatherings, without masks or social distancing.<sup>270</sup>

On August 30, Mr. Trump retweeted a post by a QAnon follower that falsely claimed that the CDC had “quietly” revised its tally of Covid-19 deaths down to 9,000 because most victims had actually died of other diseases. Twitter promptly deleted the tweet for its inaccuracy. On September 1, Dr. Fauci debunked the claim, explaining that even if patients had experienced co-morbidities, the procuring cause of their deaths had truly been the virus, and that pandemic deaths in the U.S. now exceeded 180,000.<sup>271</sup>

On September 1, at a community meeting in Kenosha, Wisconsin to discuss the civil violence associated with social justice protests there, Mr. Trump directed everyone in the room to remove their masks.<sup>272</sup>

Also on September 1, The Post reported that the Trump administration had declined to join a global effort to develop, manufacture and equitably distribute a coronavirus vaccine, in part because of the involvement in the effort on the part of the World Health Organization, an organization that the administration had sought to undermine. Another motive was that the administration believed that the U.S. would be the first to develop a vaccine, in which case it would wish to hoard it from other countries. According to The Post, one consequence of the move could be that if another country were the first to develop a vaccine, it might not become available to Americans. Another possible consequence was that even if many Americans were to be inoculated by an American vaccine, contacts with un-vaccinated foreigners, whether here or abroad, could revive the spread of the virus within the U.S. A third potential problem: leaving the rest of the world to struggle with the pandemic while the U.S. was vaccinated could still disrupt the U.S. economy, as global supply chains sputtered.<sup>273</sup>

At a campaign rally in Latrobe, Pennsylvania on September 3, at which most supporters appeared to be mask-less and not socially distant, Mr. Trump (also mask-less) mocked his electoral opponent Joe Biden for wearing a mask at public appearances. "Have you ever seen a man who likes a mask as much as him?" Mr. Trump said. "It gives him a feeling of security. If I were a psychiatrist, I'd say this guy has got some big issues."<sup>274</sup>

On September 4, Mr. Trump said that a vaccine would “probably” be available in October – shortly after his own chief vaccine official, drug manufacturers and Dr. Fauci had said that that was highly improbable.<sup>275</sup>

Politico reported on September 8 that USAID was about to shutter its coronavirus task force – which had been aiding foreign countries in their fight against the disease – due to perceived inefficiencies and internal discord. That development followed the cessation of the White House’s regular news conferences focused on the pandemic, and the sidelining of the interagency coronavirus task force and its leading scientists, Drs. Fauci and Birx – developments that had seemed afoot and that now were confirmed by Politico.<sup>276</sup>

On September 7, at a White House news conference, Mr. Trump predicted that the development of a coronavirus vaccine was imminent, and that it could be available before the November election. The next day, nine major American pharmaceutical manufacturers – reacting to public fears that Mr. Trump was going to press them to deploy a vaccine before it was proven safe and effective and possibly even before the election – took the unprecedented step of joining in a pledge that they would not seek FDA approval for a vaccine before completing rigorous clinical trials.<sup>277</sup> (At the same news conference, Mr. Trump had demanded that Biden and his running-mate Kamala Harris “immediately apologize for [their] reckless anti-vaccine rhetoric” – that is, for their having expressed the same concerns as the public and the manufacturers about a premature, politically-driven release of a vaccine.<sup>278</sup>)

As described above in the first section of this Addendum, on September 8, at a rally in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Mr. Trump addressed a crowd of several thousand who were nearly all mask-less and crowded together – in defiance of the state’s coronavirus requirements.<sup>279</sup> He promised a coronavirus vaccine “very, very soon,” and he charged that Biden and Harris were disparaging the vaccine’s rapid development for political purposes.<sup>280</sup>

Also as described above in the first section of this Addendum, on September 9, media reported on a book to be released shortly by veteran Watergate journalist Bob Woodward that revealed Mr. Trump’s early awareness of the extraordinary dangers posed to the American public by the coronavirus. Mr. Trump’s National Security Advisor Robert O’Brien had told Mr. Trump in early February that the virus posed the greatest national security threat of his presidency. Mr. Trump then told Woodward, still in February, that he knew that the disease was highly contagious, airborne and far more deadly than the flu, but that he had deliberately misled the public about that so as to prevent “panic.” From that, observers widely concluded that Mr. Trump had not been merely thick-headed and cavalier about the threat borne by the disease; rather, that he had repeatedly lied about the threat. They noted that he had also disparaged mask-wearing, contradicted his top scientists, convened medically dangerous campaign rallies, and ridiculed truth-tellers – all at a time when he knew that that could heighten the risk to Americans’ health. Woodward’s Watergate partner Carl Bernstein called it “the ultimate felony, to throw away lives.”<sup>281</sup>

Columnists for The Post wrote on September 9 and September 10 that Mr. Trump’s continuing projections of an early roll-out of a vaccine (even by Election Day!) and his ceaseless public pressuring of scientists was backfiring. Most Americans who were polled now expressed fear that a rushed vaccine could be a dangerous one and politically tainted; they expressed reluctance to be inoculated under those circumstances; and thus the pandemic could continue to rage, even after a roll-out. Vaccine manufacturers too were alarmed – that Mr. Trump’s pressure could undermine the public’s trust in their products, and thus their sales.<sup>282</sup>

On September 10, extraordinarily, a group of top FDA officials vowed in a USA Today column to not allow political pressure relative to the coronavirus to corrupt science, safety or their agency's independence and credibility. Dr. Stephen Hahn, the FDA's commissioner, praised the column.<sup>283</sup>

On September 10, Giroir acknowledged that symptomless people should indeed be tested for Covid-19 – contrary to the CDC's August 24 policy shift described above.<sup>284</sup>

On September 10, Mr. Trump told reporters that the country was “rounding the final turn” of the pandemic. On September 11, Dr. Fauci told MSNBC's Andrea Mitchell, “I'm sorry but I have to disagree with that,” as he noted the current rate of 1,000 deaths daily, and the potential for a resurgence of the disease in the fall.<sup>285</sup>

CITIZENS FOR A STRONG DEMOCRACY

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 33 – October 17, 2020

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

The current Addendum appears in three parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular chronology. The second part, beginning on p. 42, chronicles events surrounding Mr. Trump's efforts to suppress voting and discredit the results of the upcoming November 2020 election. The third part, beginning on p. 49, chronicles events surrounding Mr. Trump's response to the coronavirus pandemic.

Date	Episode	Category
9-12-20	Insurrection: Stone and friend. On September 12, Fox News broadcast an interview with Mr. Trump in which he said that if he won the upcoming election and massive protests ensued, he would "put them down very quickly.... "We have the power to do that if we want. Look, it's called insurrection. We just send in and we, we do it very easy. I mean, it's very easy. ... [I]f we had to, we'd do that and put it down within minutes, within minutes." He also said that Nevada's governor was rigging the election against him. [Continued below.]	3, 4, 7, 9, 17 (3, 4, 7, 9)

9-12-20	[Continued.] On the same day, Roger Stone called for Mr. Trump to declare martial law and seize dictatorial power if he lost the election, and to arrest the Clintons, Facebook’s Mark Zuckerberg, Apple’s Tim Cook and others. He also called for the federal government to arrest the staff of The Daily Beast for fomenting protests, to confiscate and not count Nevada’s ballots on Election Day, and to immediately arrest Mr. Trump’s former secretary of defense, James Mattis.<sup>1</sup> Stone, who proudly claimed to have been a dirty trickster for former President Richard Nixon, was Mr. Trump’s longtime friend and advisor. He had been convicted on seven felony counts in connection with his and Russia’s interference with the 2016 election, but he had never turned on Mr. Trump. As a reward, in February, Attorney General William Barr had recommended that his sentence be reduced (it then was); and in July Mr. Trump had commuted his sentence altogether. Stone remained a high profile figure whose voice on the above topics could resonate with some Americans, including with Mr. Trump himself.	3, 4, 7, 9, 17 (3, 4, 7, 9)
9-12-20, 9-13-20	In Nevada, Mr. Trump held a campaign rally on the tarmac at an airport in Minden, Nevada. It was attended by some 5,000 people (Mr. Trump claimed 25,000), nearly all maskless and non-distanced – despite the state’s coronavirus ban on gatherings in excess of 50 people, and despite Mr. Trump’s last large rally, in Tulsa, Oklahoma in June, having likely caused a surge in Covid-19 cases there.<sup>2</sup> From the podium, Mr. Trump called his opponent Joe Biden “a pathetic human being” for allowing a Democratic campaign ad to denounce Mr. Trump’s recently revealed disparagement of fallen American troops, and he threatened in retaliation to become “really vicious” toward Biden in the remaining weeks of the campaign. He warned that vice-presidential candidate Kamala Harris (a woman of color) would control a Biden presidency and would shortly become president. He encouraged a “Lock her up!” chant about his 2016 electoral opponent Hillary Clinton – his supporters’ perennial favorite – and he explicitly said that Clinton “should be in jail.” He said that Nevada’s Democratic governor was trying to “rig the election” against him, by restricting rally venues due to the coronavirus pandemic and by encouraging mail-in voting. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 9

9-12-20, 9-13-20	[Continued.] Mr. Trump also said that if he were to win reelection in 2020, he would “negotiate” for a (constitutionally-barred) third term in 2024, claiming that he was “probably entitled to another four” years based on “the way we were treated.” (He had previously made similar statements.)<sup>3</sup> The next day, at an even more medically perilous indoor rally in Henderson, Nevada – his first since Tulsa – Mr. Trump again defied the state’s 50-person limitation. There, reprising the previous day’s chant about Clinton, he incited the crowd to a new chant – “Lock him up!” – in response to his fact-free, frequent and now repeated claim that former President Obama had directed intelligence officials to spy on Mr. Trump’s 2016 campaign. (The Clinton chant pertained to her having used a private email server while secretary of state. Mr. Trump’s wife and daughter, subsequently installed in the White House, had likewise used private servers for government business. On the topic of crime and punishment, seven of his key campaign associates had been arrested since the 2016 election.)<sup>4</sup>	6, 7, 8, 9
9-13-20 +	Pompeo dines, campaigns. On September 13, Politico reported that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo was resuming his secretive, private “Madison Dinners” at the State Department that had been paused during the coronavirus pandemic. Their purpose nominally was to inform American leaders outside of government about Pompeo’s diplomatic endeavors. But in reality, the events seemed intended to cultivate potential political donors and influential conservative voices relative to Pompeo’s future political ambitions – at government expense, and now heedless of coronavirus risks to department staff. Pompeo was already under congressional investigation for self-dealing.<sup>5</sup> On September 24, ABC News reported that Pompeo had just delivered a poorly disguised campaign speech on behalf of Mr. Trump in Wisconsin – his fourth such speech in September alone. The Hatch Act forbids cabinet members from campaigning, and previous secretaries of state had eschewed that type of activity.<sup>6</sup> On September 30, the Vatican denied Pompeo’s request to meet with the Pope, on grounds that Pompeo was trying to drag the Catholic Church into the U.S. presidential election by denouncing the Vatican’s relations with China.<sup>7</sup>	17 (9, 15, 16)

9-14-20	The science of wildfires. At a roundtable discussion of the record-breaking wildfires then ripping through California, Mr. Trump questioned scientists’ widespread conclusion that climate change was a contributing cause, and he assured that the weather would get cooler.<sup>8</sup>	8
9-15-20 +	Laughing at us. On September 15, the Pew Research Center released the results of a poll conducted in 13 industrialized countries, revealing that world opinion of the U.S. had plummeted under the Trump presidency, especially (but not exclusively) due to Mr. Trump’s mishandling of the coronavirus pandemic. Foreign regard for the public health efforts of the World Health Organization and China – Mr. Trump’s pandemic scapegoats – was far higher. The poll also revealed that Mr. Trump was less trusted than any other global leader, including China’s President Xi Jinping and Russia’s President Vladimir Putin.<sup>9</sup> The outcome was particularly ironic in that Mr. Trump had campaigned in 2016 on the claim that the world was laughing at the U.S., and that he would un-do that. On September 25, The New York Times reported that citizens in countries around the world were now widely pitying the U.S., due to Mr. Trump’s head-in-the-sand approach to the pandemic and his expressed intention to contest an electoral loss. Comparisons to poor, corrupt, authoritarian countries were cited. The Times wrote: “The diminution of the United States’ global image began before the pandemic, as Trump administration officials snubbed international accords and embraced an America First policy. Now, though, its reputation seems to be in free-fall.”<sup>10</sup>	8, 13
9-15-20	Disinformation: Biden, Kushner, QAnon and Blitzer. Mr. Trump re-tweeted a video that had been manipulated so as to falsely show his electoral rival Joe Biden listening to an anti-police song.<sup>11</sup> He also re-tweeted a photo that falsely portrayed Biden as a pedophile. [Continued below.]	7, 9

9-15-20	[Continued.] To the second of those charges, during a prime-time interview with Jared Kushner that followed, CNN anchor Wolf Blitzer noted the connection between the pedophilia charge and the conspiracy theory – adopted by Mr. Trump’s now proliferating QAnon supporters – that falsely holds that many top Democrats are promoting and exploiting pedophilia in their attempts to take over the world. Blitzer asked Kushner to relay to his “father-in-law” that the re-tweet had been “disgusting” – a word that Blitzer used three times to characterize it. Kushner promised that he would do that, but he noted that Mr. Trump’s tweets reflect how he truly sees things. In what seemed like a personal rebuke of Kushner, Blitzer then noted to him that QAnon is anti-Semitic.<sup>12</sup> Kushner’s paternal grandparents as well as Blitzer’s parents had survived the Holocaust. Blitzer’s parents had been interned at Auschwitz.<sup>13</sup> (Two recent summaries of QAnon’s wild tenets appear at the links at this end note.<sup>14</sup> More than two dozen QAnon adherents were now running for Congress.<sup>15</sup> But despite QAnon’s madness, Mr. Trump had praised its followers’ patriotism and welcomed them as supporters – see CSD’s entry of August 12 + in this Chronology.) On the same day, Mr. Trump told Fox News that he thought Biden had taken performance-enhancing drugs during his primary campaign debates, and he called for Biden to submit to drug tests before the two men’s upcoming general election debates. This was at least the third time that Mr. Trump had publicly leveled that charge and demand. Biden responded by calling Mr. Trump “a fool.” (See also CSD’s entry of September 1 + regarding Mr. Trump’s drug allegations and drug test demand.)<sup>16</sup> In the same Fox News interview, Mr. Trump said that any Biden victory in November would necessarily have turned on voting fraud – that there were no lawful circumstances under which Biden could possibly win. Mr. Trump had now been making that claim repeatedly.<sup>17</sup>	7, 9

9-15-20 +	Bolton’s book. On September 15, Politico reported that the Justice Department was investigating whether former National Security Advisor John Bolton had revealed classified information in his recently published tell-all book that Mr. Trump had sought to gag.<sup>18</sup> On September 23, a former intelligence official’s lawyer told a court (the court that had allowed the publication of the book but that was continuing to consider possible civil penalties for Bolton) that Bolton had not published classified information; rather, that the White House had extraordinarily, wrongly and politically hijacked the book’s vetting and had blocked Bolton, during Mr. Trump’s impeachment, from revealing to Congress his knowledge of the events that were the subject of the impeachment.<sup>19</sup>	9
9-16-20	Denying, against evidence. A Washington Post columnist listed a number of statements that Mr. Trump had earlier made, that had been captured in the public record (often on audio or video), and that he now denied having ever uttered. Contrary to the record, he now denied: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• That he had publicly downplayed the coronavirus threat at a time when he fully understood its severity.</li> <li>• That he had praised Chinese President Xi Jinping for the latter’s coronavirus response.</li> <li>• That he had called the late Senator John McCain a “loser” for having been captured and tortured in Vietnam.</li> <li>• That he had sought to dismantle insurance coverage for pre-existing medical conditions under the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare).</li> <li>• That he had announced that a coronavirus vaccine would be ready for distribution by Election Day.</li> </ul> Additional denials of his known statements were listed as well. As the columnist noted, veteran Watergate reporter Bob Woodward – author of a newly released book about Mr. Trump, based in part on 18 interviews that Woodward had had with him – had recently told CNN’s Anderson Cooper, “I don’t know, to be honest, whether he’s got it straight in his head what is real and what is unreal.”<sup>20</sup>	7

9-16-20	Let’s kill Princeton. Federal officials announced an investigation of Princeton University on grounds of racial discrimination, based on recent statements by the university’s president supporting the racial justice movement and acknowledging historic and continuing racism there. The investigation was pure theater, intended to poke a distinguished institution bearing a long racial justice record by branding it as hypocritical. Ironically, Mr. Trump had recently taken the opposite stand: he had publicly objected to Princeton having announced the removal of President Woodrow Wilson’s name from several campus entities because of Wilson’s racist record. Indeed, more in keeping with his own true colors, Mr. Trump had been deploying his Departments of Education and Justice in investigating leading universities with a view to un-doing their affirmative action admissions practices. But Mr. Trump’s crusade against “elite” universities was far broader than that. His administration had threatened to defund them and revoke their tax-exempt status due to their often liberal classroom content; had begun investigating their (but not his own) receipts from foreign governments; and had urged them (but not well-endowed conservative religious universities) to forego federal coronavirus relief funds on grounds of the universities’ wealth.<sup>21</sup> That crusade coincided with his long-standing campaign against coastal “elites” generally – cravenly pandering to and encouraging the resentments of many of his populist supporters, particularly now, during election season. (Observers had long reported on Mr. Trump’s own lifelong resentment about feeling disdained by people whom he had perceived to be far more decorous, ethical and informed than himself.)	6, 9, 11
9-16-20	War crimes in Yemen? Congressional Democrats and the New York Times charged that the State Department was covering up its own concerns that the U.S. was risking accusations of committing war crimes. For the past five years, the U.S. had been selling munitions to Saudi Arabia and the U.A.E. with full knowledge that the munitions were being used to kill large numbers of civilians in Yemen.<sup>22</sup>	14, 17 (7)

9-16-20	Barr’s double-think. Mr. Trump’s Attorney General William Barr, speaking to a conservative audience: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Said that he enjoyed absolute authority to second-guess and supersede his subordinate, career prosecutors, because they were less experienced than he and sometimes acted politically when prosecuting targets. (But many of them were quite experienced; Barr himself, a bureaucrat, was not; and Barr was the one who had acted politically on multiple occasions, including when intervening, extraordinarily, in the Roger Stone and Michael Flynn cases.)</li> <li>• Criticized television pundits for speculating, extra-judicially, as to whether administration officials had committed crimes. (But he said nothing about Mr. Trump’s repeated, baseless, extra-judicial accusations that his adversaries, such as Hillary Clinton, James Comey and Andrew McCabe, had acted criminally.)</li> <li>• Said that Mr. Trump’s opponents were making the U.S. resemble authoritarian countries in Eastern Europe. (But it was Mr. Trump who was the authoritarian, and who had repeatedly expressed friendship toward those regimes and admiration for their leaders.)</li> <li>• Criticized coronavirus lockdowns on the following grounds: “All this nonsense about how something is dictated by science is nonsense [sic].”</li> <li>• Alleged that Black Lives Matter advocates “aren’t interested in Black lives. They’re interested in props, a small number of Blacks who are killed by police during conflicts with police – usually less than a dozen a year – who they can use as props to achieve a much broader political agenda.” (Police had killed 250 Black Americans in 2019. As the country’s chief law enforcement officer, his error was astonishing.)<sup>23</sup></li> </ul> Barr also took the occasion to warn, extraordinarily, that any attempt at a nationwide lockdown due to the pandemic would amount to “the greatest intrusion on civil liberties” in history “other than slavery” – a senseless and offensive comparison that prompted colossal blowback from critics. In a separate interview, Barr had recently said that a Biden victory would cause the country to become “irrevocably committed to the socialist path” – a remarkable statement for an attorney general, not only for its inaccuracy and its rank partisanship, but for its incendiary nature.<sup>24</sup>	17 (1, 2, 3, 7, 8, 9)
----------------	---	------------------------------

9-17-20	A Patriotic Education. Mr. Trump announced the formation of a commission to promote “patriotic education” and a “pro-American curriculum” in schools. His stated goal was to counter the progressive call to teach students more deeply about racial wrongdoings in American history, which he characterized as “child abuse.”<sup>25</sup> In truth, the federal government has no say in school curricula. Rather, CSD saw in the action a thinly veiled project to pander to racist voters and to tar his progressive critics as unpatriotic. More generally, with grave concern, we envisioned his education ideal to involve instilling in children loyalty to him and to his political agenda, if he were to win a second term. Such a top-down agenda of teaching “patriotism” was the stuff of the Soviet Union and Nazi Germany in years past, and of North Korea, Eritrea and other autocracies in the present day.	6, 9
9-17-20	Harris: the fear. Politico reported that a major theme of Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign had come to be his fearmongering over the prospect of Kamala Harris – Joe Biden’s running mate – becoming president “through the back door” should Biden win the election but then fail to complete his term for health reasons. Mr. Trump had just said at a rally in Wisconsin that a Harris presidency “would rip our country apart.” Harris is a woman of color.<sup>26</sup>	6, 9
9-17-20 +	Russia, Russia, Russia – in the 2020 election. As FBI Director Christopher Wray told the House Homeland Security Committee of Russia’s continuing campaign to denigrate Democratic presidential contender Joe Biden, on September 17, acting Homeland Security Secretary Chad Wolf failed to attend the session, in defiance of the committee’s subpoena. The committee appeared to have been poised to ask Wolf about attempts by DHS – recently alleged by a whistleblower – to cover up Russia’s anti-Biden interference, among other perceived irregularities within the department.<sup>27</sup> [Continued below.]	12, 17 (9, 12)

9-17-20 +	[Continued.] Shortly after Wray’s testimony, Mr. Trump tweeted, “But Chris, you don’t see any activity from China, even though it is a FAR greater threat than Russia, Russia, Russia. They will both, plus others, be able to interfere in our 2020 Election with our totally vulnerable Unsolicited (Counterfeit?) Ballot Scam.”<sup>28</sup> Mr. Trump did not present any evidence to justify his charges. But on September 18, he indicated to reporters that he would consider firing Wray for his testimony.<sup>29</sup> On September 22, The Washington Post, then The New York Times, reported on a leaked, top-secret assessment by the CIA, memorialized on August 31, that Russian President Vladimir Putin probably was personally directing the disinformation campaign against Biden; that that campaign also supported Mr. Trump and was fueling American discord; and that the Russian operations targeted Congress, lobbyists and U.S. media organizations as their audiences. The Trump administration had been hiding all of this from the public.<sup>30</sup> Also on September 22, The Times reported that Russian trolls spreading disinformation about the upcoming U.S. election had come principally to quoting Mr. Trump himself, especially about the dangers of mail-in voting. U.S. government officials privately said that Mr. Trump was feeding many of the disinformation campaigns that they themselves were struggling to halt. A new public governmental alert reported the types of Russian disinformation afoot, but not that Mr. Trump himself was both purveying it himself and inspiring the Russians to pile on.<sup>31</sup> On September 23, Politico reported that the CIA had now made it harder for intelligence about Russia to reach the White House, for unknown reasons.<sup>32</sup>	12, 17 (9, 12)
9-18-20	In Minnesota. At a rally in Bemidji, Minnesota, Mr. Trump: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Said, in reference to the large Somali refugee population in Minneapolis, that his Democratic rival Joe Biden would "turn Minnesota into a refugee camp," and he bragged about deporting Somali nationals. 9-18-20 +	RBG dies; quick replacement planned. Within hours after the September 18 death of Ruth Bader Ginsburg – the storied, liberal Supreme Court justice – Republican senators, and later Mr. Trump, vowed to replace her with a conservative Republican justice, and prior to the November 3 election. Although lawful on its face, that move would represent the fastest contested nomination and confirmation in the Supreme Court’s modern history. It would also defy the Republican-controlled Senate’s previous refusal to even consider President Obama’s nomination of moderate Merrick Garland for a seat on the court in 2016, on the Senate’s wholly manufactured grounds that a president should not be allowed to appoint a justice during the last year of his or her term. [Continued below.]	4, 7, 9, 17 (8, 9)

9-18-20 +	[Continued.] Upon winning the 2016 election, Mr. Trump had appointed Neil Gorsuch, a conservative Republican, to take Garland’s seat; he had subsequently appointed conservative Brett Kavanaugh to take retiring Justice Anthony Kennedy’s seat; and his now likely appointment of a conservative to take Ginsburg’s seat would represent his third Supreme Court appointment. A virtually impenetrable 6-3 Republican majority on the Court, procured in bad faith and empowered for a generation, now appeared imminent.<sup>36</sup> Ginsburg’s dying wish, as expressed to her family, had been that her replacement not be selected until after the November 2020 presidential election, and by the winner of that election. On September 21, Mr. Trump publicly speculated that Democratic congressional leaders had manufactured that wish and then attributed it to Ginsburg.<sup>37</sup> On September 22, Mr. Trump made plain to reporters that he wanted Ginsburg’s successor installed before the election so that the Court would rule in his favor in the event of a contested election. He said, “We need nine justices. You need that with the unsolicited millions of ballots that [Democratic governors are] sending [to all their registered voters]. It’s a scam. It’s a hoax. Everybody knows that, and the Democrats know it better than anybody else. So you’re going to need nine justices up there. I think it’s going to be very important because what they’re doing is a hoax with the ballots.”<sup>38</sup> Mr. Trump doubled-down on September 23. With respect to the election-related litigation that he anticipated in November, he said, “I think this will end up in the Supreme Court, and I think it’s very important to have nine justices.”  At that point observers took as a given that Mr. Trump was planning to seek court orders, as well as action by Republican-controlled state governments in swing states, to forbid the counting of mailed-in votes after Election Day, for fear that late-counted votes would favor his opponent Joe Biden.<sup>39</sup> On September 25, Mr. Trump made known that he would nominate Amy Coney Barrett to replace Ginsburg. Barrett’s judicial views appeared to be reliably conservative, except for one radical item: she had frequently written that the Court could perfunctorily (as opposed to extraordinarily) overrule past Court precedent.<sup>40</sup> [Continued below.]	4, 7, 9, 17 (8, 9)

9-18-20 +	[Continued.] Within minutes after Mr. Trump formally nominated Barrett on September 26, the Trump campaign began selling T-shirts featuring her likeness and the phrase “Notorious A.C.B.” The phrase was a take-off on and a rebuttal to the phrase “the notorious RBG” that Ginsburg’s fans in recent years had applied to Ginsburg as she rose to the ranks of a culture hero for her life-long commitment to women’s rights.<sup>41</sup> Possibly never before that expropriation of the nickname had the ideological differences between two Supreme Court justices been so exploited by a presidential campaign, placed in opposition to one another at a popular level, or deployed retributively. At Barrett’s Senate confirmation hearing on October 12-14, she declined to opine as to whether the president can unilaterally move an election date, whether voter intimidation is illegal, or whether human-caused climate change is real. (She had previously acknowledged family ties to the oil industry.) Whether her evasions reflected her actual uncertainty on those matters was unknown.<sup>42</sup>	4, 7, 9, 17 (8, 9)
9-19-20	My worthy opponent. At a rally in Fayetteville, North Carolina, Mr. Trump said that his opponent Joe Biden was “the dumbest of all candidates,” and “the worst candidate in the history of presidential politics.” Reciting his now standard claim that Biden had used and would continue to use performance enhancing drugs during political debates, Mr. Trump said that “they gave him a big fat shot in the ass... and for two hours, he is better than ever before.”<sup>43</sup>	7, 9, 11
9-19-20 +	Voter intimidation. On September 19, a group of chanting Trump supporters physically crowded and attempted to intimidate early voters in Fairfax, Virginia.<sup>44</sup> On September 29, a group of Republicans attempted to monitor – and seemingly to intimidate voters at – an early voting site in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, contrary to a local law that disallowed monitoring at such sites. During that evening’s presidential debate, Mr. Trump cited the Philadelphia episode as proof of Democratic election fraud.<sup>45</sup> On September 30, Philadelphia’s mayor said he was preparing for a concerted intimidation campaign by Republicans on Election Day.<sup>46</sup> [Continued below.]	4, 5, 7, 9

9-19-20 +	[Continued.] The New York Times reported on October 7 that election and law enforcement authorities across the country were widely fearful of, but preparing for, episodes of intimidation and violence on Election Day. <sup>47</sup>	4, 5, 7, 9
9-21-20	Pay me (again). Huffington Post reported that despite experiencing a shortage in funds during the last several months, Mr. Trump’s campaign and the Republican National Committee had spent an additional $251,409 at Trump properties during that period, bringing their total payments to Mr. Trump to over $7,200,000 since January 2017. <sup>48</sup>	15
9-21-20 +	Anarchist jurisdictions. On September 21, Mr. Trump and the Justice Department branded Manhattan, New York; Portland, Oregon; and Seattle, Washington as “anarchist jurisdictions” that risked losing federal funding because they had not sufficiently suppressed violent activities that had accompanied recent, peaceful racial justice protests. All three cities were in solidly Democratic-voting states. But the designations did not extend to swing states such as Wisconsin and Minnesota that had also experienced violent protests; the branded cities had hardly submitted to anarchy; and Mr. Trump lacked the authority to withhold the funds. Critics thus regarded the “anarchist” designations as baseless and empty but dangerous demagoguery.<sup>49</sup> On October 15, the Transportation Department (headed by Elaine Chao, the wife of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell) said that it would bar the named “anarchist jurisdictions” from participating in a new coronavirus safety grant program.<sup>50</sup>	3, 9
9-22-20	In Pennsylvania (again). Campaigning at an airport in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Mr. Trump was greeted by thousands of supporters, tightly packed and mask-less. <sup>51</sup> There he launched a racist diatribe against Minnesota Congresswoman Ilhan Omar for her criticisms of him and for her Somali origin. “ How is your country doing? ” he asked her rhetorically. <sup>52</sup> He also again mocked MSNBC anchor Ali Velshi for an incident at a peaceful racial justice rally in Minneapolis, Minnesota: “ They’d grab one guy — ‘I’m a reporter. I’m a reporter.’ They threw him aside like he was a little bag of popcorn. Honestly ... when you see it, it’s actually a beautiful sight. ” <sup>53</sup>	1, 3, 5, 6, 9

9-22-20	Going for the Green. The New York Times reported that some Republicans were supporting the campaign of Green Party presidential candidate Howie Hawkins in an effort to cut into Democratic Joe Biden’s bid for election. Like Republican efforts to promote the candidacy of hip-hop billionaire Kanye West to similar effect, the gambit smacked of fraud and of campaign finance violations.<sup>54</sup> (See also CSD’s entry of August 13, above, regarding West.)	17 (9)
9-23-20	Ukraine smear, revisited. The Senate’s Republican-controlled Homeland Security and Finance Committees issued their long-threatened report on the alleged corrupt activities of presidential contender Joe Biden and his son Hunter in Ukraine. It was built on the same allegations against the Bidens that Mr. Trump had asked Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelinsky to expose in 2019 in exchange for receiving military aid that Congress had already legislated, thus giving rise to Mr. Trump’s impeachment. The Senate’s report had long been seen as being timed to coincide with and to influence the upcoming U.S. election. But U.S. media and officials had previously debunked the charges against the Bidens; and now the committees themselves acknowledged that they were unable to prove them. The Trump campaign nevertheless cherry-picked and inflated the committees’ findings, pointing to “explosive new revelations” about “stunning levels of corruption and breathtaking breaches of America’s national security.” Democrats countered, that the allegations were false; that they were based on disinformation provided by Russian operatives; that the committees had wrongly used U.S. taxpayer dollars to promote that disinformation and Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign; and that the undertaking had been a waste and abuse of the committees’ resources at a time when Russian election interference and the coronavirus pandemic posed far more urgent security threats.<sup>55</sup> The committees did not investigate or address whether Mr. Trump himself had acted corruptly or jeopardized U.S. security in extorting Zelinsky or in encouraging Mr. Trump’s attorney Rudy Giuliani and Giuliani’s unsavory colleagues to dig up dirt on the Bidens in Ukraine. But as the House of Representatives had determined when impeaching Mr. Trump, Mr. Trump had indeed engaged in such corruption.	17 (7, 9, 12)

9-23-20	Abraham Lincoln and me. When asked by a reporter to comment on the highly controversial decision of a Louisville, Kentucky grand jury not to bring homicide charges against a trio of White police officers who had shot and killed Breonna Taylor (who was Black) in her apartment in March, Mr. Trump answered only: “My message is that I love the Black community, and I’ve done more for the Black community than any other president, and I say, with a possible exception of Abraham Lincoln ....”<sup>56</sup>	6, 7, 11
9-24-20	My health care plan. After years of vilifying and trying to destroy the Affordable Care Act (“Obamacare”) while promising ever more frequently to launch a replacement program, Mr. Trump signed a series of executive orders that he claimed represented his bold and comprehensive “vision” for that replacement. After signing, he said, “This is affirmed, signed, and done, so we can put that to rest.” The vision included guaranteeing insurance coverage for people with preexisting medical conditions, as the ACA already provided. Otherwise, in the new orders, Mr. Trump now appeared largely to acquiesce to the continuation of the ACA. Observers wrote that the orders and “vision” articulated nothing – no details, no practical mechanisms to address the extraordinarily complex realities of national healthcare issues; rather, that they amounted only to hollow hype during an election campaign. Mr. Trump also announced that he would shortly be sending $200 prescription payment cards to Medicare participants. No details about the administration of, the recipient pool for, or the funding for the cards were made available. Some critics observed that the cards would not make a dent in high prescription drug pricing, the taming of which Mr. Trump had long promised. Others questioned whether Mr. Trump even had the lawful authority to issue the cards. Pharmaceutical companies were in the dark. Altogether, critics – and even the top lawyer at the Department of Health and Human Services – saw the promise of the cards, made shortly before the November election, as a bribe to seniors to induce them to vote for Mr. Trump.<sup>57</sup>	7, 9

9-24-20 +	My census (again). On September 24, a federal judge in California ordered that the decennial census be continued through October 31 so as to gather sufficient responses from hard-to-reach respondents and thereby to enhance the accuracy of the survey.<sup>58</sup> On September 28, Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross defied the order, stating by Twitter that the field work would end on October 5.<sup>59</sup> On October 1, the court castigated the government for its defiance, and it clarified and reaffirmed the order.<sup>60</sup> On October 2, the Census Bureau acceded to the order.<sup>61</sup> But the count remained rushed and suspect. As of October 12, analysts believed that, for the first time, the White House would manipulate it in secret so as to increase Republican seats in Congress and state legislatures.<sup>62</sup> The Ninth Circuit Court of appeals had affirmed the district court’s ruling. But on October 13, the Supreme Court overruled the circuit court, thus allowing the Commerce Department to end the census count immediately – that is, before its October 31 completion date. The likely outcome would be an undercounting of young people, minorities and immigrants, and a resultant electoral windfall for Republicans.<sup>63</sup>	8, 9
9-24-20 +	VOA trouble. On September 24, Michael Pack skipped a subpoenaed appearance before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, angering both Democrats and Republicans. Pack was Mr. Trump’s new man at the U.S. Agency for Global Media, which oversees Voice of America and similar U.S. media institutions. He had been firing top managers with an apparent view to politicizing the content of their respective media operations. Critics believed that that politicization would jeopardize the objectivity and reputation of their output – and thus the reputation of the U.S., as well as pro-democracy efforts abroad.<sup>64</sup> (See CSD’s entry of June 15 + in this Chronology, above.) On September 30, six senior officials in the agency filed a whistleblower complaint, alleging that they had been removed from their posts in retaliation for raising concerns about Pack’s politicization efforts.<sup>65</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 9

9-24-20 +	[Continued.] On October 4, NPR reported that two of Pack’s new, top political appointees had illegally investigated one of the agency’s most prominent journalists – VOA’s White House bureau chief – on their suspicions of him being anti-Trump.<sup>66</sup>	1, 9
9-25-20 +	He won’t leave the land. On September 25, a federal judge in Montana removed William Perry Pendley as Mr. Trump’s fifth acting director of the Bureau of Land Management, ruling that Pendley had served unlawfully for 424 days. The judge found a raft of administrative foul-ups in Pendley’s appointment, including Mr. Trump’s own withdrawal of Pendley’s nomination for the permanent director’s post following revelations that Pendley was a climate science denier. On October 10, Pendley said he would refuse to vacate his post, pending an appeal by the Interior Department. (Environmentalists had long viewed Pendley as averse to the spirit and mandate of the bureau’s land management mission, and dedicated instead to selling off extraction rights to industrial interests.)<sup>67</sup>	17 (9)
9-25-20 +	DOJ drips. On September 25, and in advance of the upcoming presidential election but for no other obvious purpose, the Justice Department disclosed drips of information that purportedly demonstrated the illegitimacy of Robert Mueller’s long-closed investigation of Russian election interference. For example, one FBI agent was now reported to have memorialized his observation that prosecutors were out to “get Trump.” Also, a key source of allegations against Mr. Trump was now reported to have previously been investigated as a possible Russian agent. Similarly, on September 29, Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe – formerly one of Mr. Trump’s fiercest allies in Congress – declassified a previously discredited and still thoroughly unproven Russian intelligence allegation: that, in 2016, Hillary Clinton had personally approved an effort to tie Mr. Trump to Russian President Vladimir Putin and the hacking of the Democratic National Committee’s emails. Former intelligence officials blanched at Ratcliffe’s incendiary and irresponsible move – publicly releasing unverified intelligence from a foreign adversary and in advance of an election. On October 7, Ratcliffe released additional classified material to the Justice Department, with a view to aiding the latter in its investigation of Mr. Trump’s political enemies. [Continued below.]	17 (9, 12)

9-25-20 +	[Continued.] All of the above disclosures appeared to be a warm-up, or possibly a substitute, for what had been expected to be the imminent release of a comprehensive, hyper-partisan and demagogic “investigation of the investigators” (Mr. Trump’s whipping boys) by U.S. Attorney John Durham, as commissioned by Attorney General William Barr in May 2019.<sup>68</sup> But just as disturbingly, the disclosures seemed to be fodder for Mr. Trump’s reelection campaign, which he almost instantly did deploy in that regard. Politico compared the disclosures to the Justice Department’s recent, extraordinary and inappropriate publicity around a non-existent incident of ballot-tampering in rural Pennsylvania (see CSD’s September 24 entry in the second section of this Addendum, “The November 2020 Election,” below), and around Barr’s recent repeated warnings of imminent, massive voter fraud.<sup>69</sup> In all of this, Politico viewed Barr, through his own and his department’s actions, as working hand-in-glove with Mr. Trump on the campaign, a phenomenon last seen in Richard Nixon’s Attorney General John Mitchell – who went to jail.<sup>70</sup>	17 (9, 12)
9-26-20	In Pennsylvania (yet again). Mr. Trump held an airport rally in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, which a few thousand supporters, mostly mask-less, attended. (Mr. Trump claimed that there were “17,000 or 18,000.”) He began by boasting about his nomination, only hours earlier, of conservative jurist Amy Coney Barrett to a seat on the Supreme Court, claiming that “She will defend your God-given rights and freedoms”; warning that should Democrats win the election their nominees would be “handpicked by socialists”; and whipping the crowd into chants of support (“Fill that seat!”). Then, in what struck CSD as an unremitting torrent of cruelty, invective, braggadocio and falsehood – also to thunderous cheers – he railed in the usual ways. 9-27-20	The tax returns. The New York Times reported that it had obtained more than 20 years of the federal income tax returns of Mr. Trump and his businesses, long after he had reneged on making them public following his 2016 campaign promise to do so. All other presidents since Richard Nixon had perfunctorily released their returns. As an excuse for hiding his, Mr. Trump continued to falsely claim that he was barred from releasing them because he was under IRS audit. In addition, with the support of his captive Justice Department, he was currently contesting before the Supreme Court whether he had to produce the returns in connection with a New York State investigation of his finances. The returns covered tax years through 2018, including personal tax years through 2017. Elements of the returns appeared to belie that Mr. Trump was successful, that he was patriotic, and that he was honest. They revealed poor business performance, negligible income tax payments, questionable tax deductions, widespread conflicts of interest, and massive personal debt. The Times summarized: “The tax returns that Mr. Trump has long fought to keep private tell a story fundamentally different from the one he has sold to the American public. His reports to the I.R.S. portray a businessman who takes in hundreds of millions of dollars a year yet racks up chronic losses that he aggressively employs to avoid paying taxes. Indeed, his financial condition when he announced his run for president in 2015 lends some credence to the notion that his long-shot campaign was at least in part a gambit to reanimate the marketability of his name. ... The picture that perhaps emerges most starkly from the mountain of figures and tax schedules prepared by Mr. Trump’s accountants is of a businessman-president in a tightening financial vise. ... Now his tax records make clear that he is facing a battery of threats to his business and his own financial well-being.” The returns seen by The Times revealed that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• In ten of the pertinent years, Mr. Trump had paid no federal taxes whatever; and he paid only $750 in another two years, even while paying taxes to foreign governments. (During one such year, he had lambasted President Obama for paying only $162,000 in taxes.)</li> <li>• During the first two years of his presidency, he earned several million dollars in Turkey and the Philippines, countries whose dictators he had coddled as president.</li> <li>• Multiple other conflicts of interest and instances of political cronyism appeared.</li> <li>• He aggressively deducted as business expenses some $165,000 for his and his daughter Ivanka’s hair styling.</li> <li>• His businesses inexplicably paid Ivanka nearly $750 thousand in “consulting fees” at a time when she was already receiving compensation for her regular business duties. Mr. Trump took the consulting fees as tax deductions, when they more likely represented potentially taxable gifts.</li> <li>• Other questionable business tax deductions included property taxes for a personal recreational mansion in New York state, personal travel expenses, and personal legal defense costs.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump’s charitable contributions were minimal, and they consisted mostly of granting conservation easements near his properties that would benefit him personally. ----------------	--	---------------------

9-27-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Most of his businesses appeared to be doing poorly, year after year – even the Trump International Hotel in Washington, D.C. and the Doral golf resort in Miami, Florida, despite significant revenues that had been accruing there from the patronage of foreign and domestic political interests during his presidency. (Business at Mar-a-Lago, Mr. Trump’s “winter White House” in Palm Beach, Florida, however, had boomed since his election. That too had become a haunt of political allies and petitioners.) In many years, Mr. Trump reportedly lost more money than nearly any other individual American taxpayer.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump appeared to be personally liable for $421 million in debt that would come due largely within the next four years.</li> <li>• He was under IRS audit with respect to a particular tax refund he had aggressively claimed and received. For that he could owe the government $100 million in restitution, interest and penalties.<sup>73</sup></li> </ul> On several prior occasions, including during a debate with presidential contender Hillary Clinton in 2016, Mr. Trump had boasted about his tax avoidance skills.<sup>74</sup> And the American tax system does allow taxpayers to creatively, and sometimes even aggressively, interpret the law to their own advantage. It does not, however, allow for blatant dishonesty or disregard of the law, which amount to tax fraud. As for dishonesty, in 2018 Mr. Trump’s public financial disclosures indicated that he had earned at least $435 million, when his tax filings indicated a $47 million loss.<sup>75</sup> He presumably could try to explain that disparity based on legitimate (if aggressive) accounting principles; nevertheless, for CSD, the disparity suggested a similarity to the ongoing New York State investigation of his having fraudulently inflated his property values when dealing with banks while deflating them for tax purposes.<sup>76</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 15, 16
----------------	--	---------------------

9-27-20	[Continued.] Also notable: Mr. Trump appeared to have squandered the entire $427 million that he had earned from “The Apprentice” television reality show on poor investments in golf clubs. The Times compared that outcome to his having earlier squandered his secret but ample inheritance from his father – an inheritance that had been juiced by highly questionable, intra-family tax avoidance schemes – on casinos that subsequently went bankrupt.<sup>77</sup> That is, Mr. Trump’s business skills seemed stronger in talking, entertaining and tricking than in investing, developing or otherwise creating actual value. CSD sees in that phenomenon a parallel to his performance as president. From that pattern, some observers also saw Mr. Trump’s 2016 run for the presidency (which he later admitted he had never expected to win, and possibly had never wanted to win) as a repeat of his launching “The Apprentice”: a way to re-build his brand, through pure talk and theater, so as to recover from his massive losses in more traditional businesses.<sup>78</sup> As of the Times’ reporting, Mr. Trump’s tax returns had not yet been filed for 2020, the year of the coronavirus pandemic. But as The Washington Post noted, Mr. Trump’s hotels and resorts had likely suffered from the coronavirus pandemic in 2020 as had the broader travel and hospitality industries – thus likely putting even greater financial pressure on him.<sup>79</sup> CSD and other observers have speculated that one motive for Mr. Trump’s aggressive efforts to re-open the economy, however unsafely, had and has been to protect his own businesses. He had had, however, one area of recent business success, also according to The Post: during Mr. Trump’s presidency, the U.S. government had paid his properties over $1 million in connection with his having visited them over 270 times and brought security detachments to lodge there with him.<sup>80</sup> Mr. Trump quickly claimed that The Times’ report was “fake news,” and the Trump Organization said that it was mostly false; but they did not say in which respects.<sup>81</sup> [Continued below.]	1, 7, 15, 16
----------------	---	---------------------

9-27-20	[Continued.] Critics warned that Mr. Trump’s massive personal debt and the unknown identities of his creditors – possibly foreign – raised national security concerns. People with large personal debts are ordinarily not granted security clearances. The Post, however, went further in its reporting: “Security teams at U.S. spy agencies are constantly scouring employee records for signs of potential compromise: daunting levels of debt, troubling overseas entanglements, hidden streams of income, and a penchant for secrecy or deceit to avoid exposure. President Trump would check nearly every box of this risk profile based on [his tax returns] ... that former intelligence officials and security experts said raise profound questions about whether he should be trusted to safeguard U.S. secrets and interests. ... “Officials said the tax records seem to reflect other Trump traits that would probably trouble counterintelligence experts. They cited the disorganized structure of his companies, seeming contempt for the tax code, discrepancies in his valuations of assets, and potentially illegal practice of paying consulting fees to family members,” all of which would commonly mark a person as untrustworthy from a national security perspective.<sup>82</sup> The Post published op-ed commentary to similar effect on October 11.<sup>83</sup> CSD does not purport to judge whether Mr. Trump’s tax reporting practices were aggressive relative to industry norms, let alone illegal; nor whether the extent of his personal debt truly placed him in financial jeopardy, given the seemingly substantial assets that he could sell in order to cover that debt, if necessary; nor whether the tax losses he had reported truly indicated that his businesses had not been profitable. Rather, our larger concerns remained: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• That he had and has not been willing to share his tax returns and other financial information with the public, contrary to presidential custom and contrary to his own promises – suggesting that he had and has something even darker to hide; [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	1, 7, 15, 16
----------------	---	---------------------

9-27-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• That throughout his presidency he had established himself with nearly half the population as being properly immune to legal scrutiny and to norms of honest dealings, such that even the new tax revelations would not tarnish him politically; and</li> <li>• That he had crippled our country’s ability to advocate credibly against corruption and democracy abroad.<sup>84</sup></li> </ul>	1, 7, 15, 16
9-28/29-20	Conspiracy forever! Astonishingly, the Trump campaign ran a digital advertisement disparaging Democrats for wanting to silence conspiracy theorists.<sup>85</sup>	17 (7, 9)
9-29-20 +	The first debate. In his first debate with electoral opponent Joe Biden, on September 29, Mr. Trump generated what CNN’s lead news commentators afterwards called a “shit show,” a “complete disaster,” and “an embarrassment for the United States.” With a facial expression suggesting defiance, brutality, imperiousness and rage – chin jutting forward in the style of Il Duce (Italy’s fascist dictator Benito Mussolini) – Mr. Trump savaged the forum with unremitting falsehoods, interruptions, impetuosity, non sequiturs, personal insults, self-absorption and ignorance. From all appearances, his performance was intentionally disruptive and anarchical. Ordinarily a gentleman, an exasperated Biden called Mr. Trump a “fool,” a “clown,” a “liar,” a “racist,” “Putin’s puppy,” and “the worst president America has ever had”; and at one point, Biden felt compelled to tell him to “shut up.” Domestic observers saw the debate as an insult to the American people. Overseas observers saw the further decline and disgrace of our country under the current presidency. [Continued below.]	4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11

9-29-20 +	[Continued.] The style, content and level of falsehood within Mr. Trump’s debate arguments were nearly identical to those of his tweets and his rally performances. The style was grotesque rudeness. The details of the content appear in the links at the end notes for this entry. The falsehoods arose in connection with such topics as climate change, the causes of forest fires, Mr. Trump’s economic performance, President Obama’s economic performance, Mr. Trump’s coronavirus response, President Obama’s swine flu response, Mr. Trump’s federal income taxes, Biden’s son Hunter’s business dealings, the FBI’s investigations of the 2016 Trump campaign, the integrity of mail-in voting, the candidates’ respective health care plans, prescription drug prices, violent extremism in the U.S., and Biden’s policy positions. There were also these shocking declarations, before 73,000,000 viewers: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Even when pressed by the moderator, Mr. Trump refused to denounce white supremacists and right-wing extremists. His message for the violent hate group known as the Proud Boys, in particular: “Stand back and stand by.” Social media instantly lit up with messages from the far right, celebrating that clear articulation of his support for them.</li> <li>• Mr. Trump assured that Democrats would try to steal the election, and he ominously called for large numbers of supporters to stand watch at voting locations.</li> <li>• Even when pressed by the moderator, Mr. Trump refused to agree to accept the results of an electoral loss, or to promise a peaceful transition of power to Biden. Rather, he promised to take any loss to the courts, Congress or the streets, forewarning, “This is not going to end well.”<sup>86</sup></li> </ul> The next day, Mr. Trump claimed to not know who the Proud Boys were, as he had previously claimed to not know who his supporter David Duke (former head of the Ku Klux Klan) was.<sup>87</sup> For their part, the Proud Boys reported a membership spike, and they began selling T-shirts and bumper stickers bearing the words “Stand back and stand by.”<sup>88</sup> Also that day, The Washington Post reported that many state election officials were alarmed by Mr. Trump’s call for election observers, fearing a wave of intimidation and violence.<sup>89</sup> [Continued below.]	4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11
------------------	---	----------------------------------

9-29-20 +	[Continued.] The Post also reported a social media campaign falsely alleging that Biden, during the debate, had been wearing a radio receiver and was in ill health.<sup>90</sup> Resisting broad calls to change the format of the next debates following the fiasco that he had induced, Mr. Trump claimed that he had “easily won” the first debate – even though a wide array of polls indicated that he had disgraced himself and that Biden had prevailed.<sup>91</sup> A New York Times columnist wrote, “If Vladimir Putin, Xi Jinping and Al Qaeda worked together, I don’t know that they could damage the United States as deeply — unraveling our social fabric, destroying our norms, devastating our global image — as Trump has. And we still have two more presidential debates.”<sup>92</sup> Other observers as well characterized Mr. Trump’s performance as a blow to democracy and an empowerment of our country’s authoritarian adversaries.<sup>93</sup> On October 1, following a storm of outrage over his Proud Boys remarks, Mr. Trump called in to a Fox radio show and denounced the group.<sup>94</sup> But on the same day his political advisors attacked the members of the Commission on Presidential Debates by name for considering format changes that would rein in his wild antics.<sup>95</sup>	4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11
9-30-20	Refugees, stay home. Mr. Trump cut the annual ceiling on U.S. refugee admissions from 18,000 to 15,000, representing yet another record low. (President Obama had set the floor for admissions at 110,000.) Refugees – as distinguished from asylum seekers – are rigorously vetted overseas by the United Nations, the State Department and the Department of Homeland Security pursuant to strict medical and security criteria before they are brought to the U.S. for resettlement here. But Mr. Trump had been railing against even refugees during his campaign, warning falsely that they included Islamic terrorists, and accurately that opponent Joe Biden wanted to raise the number of admissions by a large multiple. (He had meanwhile virtually ended all asylum applications by those unvetted migrants seeking to cross by land at the Mexican border.)<sup>96</sup> [Continued below.]	6, 7, 14

9-30-20	[Continued.] Mr. Trump set the new, reduced refugee ceiling only hours after attacking refugees at a rally in Duluth, Minnesota. There he again spewed hatred toward Somali-American Congresswoman Ilhan Omar, causing his supporters to chant, “Lock her up!”, and he warned that “Biden will turn Minnesota into a refugee camp.”<sup>97</sup>	6, 7, 14
10-1-20	To the hungry: Here’s some food. Vote for me. Politico reported that the Agriculture Department had begun mandating that millions of boxes of surplus food being distributed to needy families include a letter from Mr. Trump claiming credit for the program.<sup>98</sup> The development compared to Mr. Trump’s recent promise to distribute $200 in prescription payment cards to Medicare recipients, in what some – including the top lawyer at the Department of Health and Human Services – viewed as a pre-election bribe. (See CSD’s September 24 entry, above, regarding health care.) It also compared to the mass distribution by the Postal Service in March of postcards bearing coronavirus cautions, Mr. Trump’s name, and the White House logo – at a $28 million cost to taxpayers (for which, as of September 14, the government had not yet reimbursed the struggling Postal Service).<sup>99</sup> In the view of CSD, that recurring pattern of attributing popular governmental programs to Mr. Trump’s personal beneficence, and inserting that messaging directly into people’s homes, smacked of attempts to foster a personality cult and leader worship such as authoritarian regimes overseas commonly deploy. It also struck us as direct governmental interference in the upcoming election. A news analysis by Politico reached similar conclusions.<sup>100</sup>	9, 11

10-1-20	My National Guard, protecting my election. The Washington Post reported that when Mr. Trump had asked states to send National Guard troops to bolster the Washington, D.C. National Guard in May and June following the police killing of George Floyd, the units were furnished almost exclusively by Republican governors; Democrats largely objected to the exercise and declined to participate. Military historians said that the result was unprecedented: some 98% of the 3800 arriving troops had come from red states. The exercise, in effect, thus contained elements of a political war by partisan federal troops mustered against the president’s perceived domestic enemies. The implication: with the participation of compliant Republican governors, Mr. Trump could mobilize red state Guards again, but more strategically, and more massively – for example, in the event of civil disturbances provoked by Mr. Trump contesting the results of the upcoming election.<sup>101</sup>	9
10-2-20	In your face. CNN reported that ICE had recently placed in Pennsylvania at least six outdoor “WANTED” billboards featuring the faces and crimes (such as “assault”) of immigration violators who had been arrested or convicted then lawfully released by state law enforcement officials. It was an unprecedented governmental move to demonize individual suspects and to terrify the population, with no apparent purpose except to influence the results of the upcoming election in that critical battleground state – and using taxpayer dollars to do that.<sup>102</sup>	6, 9
10-2-20	My sweetheart. Pro Publica reported that the federal government, through its mortgage guaranty agency known as Freddy Mac, had guaranteed massive, near-record real estate loans to the family companies of presidential son-in-law Jared Kushner, and at unusually favorable terms, despite those companies’ records of under-performance as borrowers. The guarantees operated to lower the companies’ interest rates, and they placed the risk of default on taxpayers.<sup>103</sup>	11, 17 (15)

10-6-20, 10-7-20	Arrest them, already. On the evening of October 6 and into October 7, Mr. Trump – not obviously chastened or enlightened in any way by his recent brush with Covid-19 (see the section of this Addendum below titled “The Coronavirus Pandemic,” and the subsection within that titled “The president contracts Covid-19”) – fired off 40 angry tweets within half an hour, and then more as the day progressed. In them, he attacked special prosecutor Robert Mueller, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, the FBI, the CIA, the media, and the voter fraud that he alleged was being perpetrated against him by Democrats. He also finally and forthrightly demanded that his Justice Department arrest and imprison President Obama and Joe Biden for allegedly spying on him during his 2016 campaign, and Hillary Clinton for her email practices as secretary of state.<sup>104</sup>	7, 9, 11
10-7-20 +	Afghanistan draw-down. On October 7, with no warning to the Pentagon, the White House said that it would shortly and abruptly bring almost all U.S. troops home from Afghanistan. On October 11, Joint Chiefs Chairman General Mark Milley said that that was nonsense.<sup>105</sup> National security experts were appalled by the blatant electioneering.<sup>106</sup>	10, 13
10-8-20	Canceling the debate. The Commission on Presidential Debates determined that the next scheduled debate between Mr. Trump and his rival Joe Biden – in town hall format set for October 15 – would be held virtually, so that Mr. Trump wouldn’t infect anyone with the coronavirus. He had recently been hospitalized with the disease, and he was suspected of having cavalierly infected others and of continuing to do so. (See the section of this Addendum below titled “The Coronavirus Pandemic,” and the subsection within that titled “The president contracts Covid-19.”) Mr. Trump now promptly declined to participate in the event, telling Fox News in a hoarse voice, “I’m not going to waste my time on a virtual debate.”<sup>107</sup> His withdrawal was somewhat reminiscent of his abrupt cancellation of a Republican primary debate in March 2016, when he saw that he was the front runner. But now, running well behind Biden in the polls, his motivations were likely different: a fear of performing poorly in his weakened condition (although he had denied any weakness); and a further insult to the very institution of orderly presidential elections and debates (see CSD’s entry of September 29 + regarding the first Trump-Biden debate).	7, 9, 11

10-8-20	Chickens coming home to roost. The Office of Special Counsel reprimanded Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue for violating the Hatch Act by having held a pep rally for Mr. Trump’s candidacy at an official department event in North Carolina in August. He was ordered to reimburse taxpayers for the cost of his attendance at the event. Purdue had also recently drawn criticism for doling out massive amounts of aid to farmers in advance of the election, in politically driven allocations.<sup>108</sup>	17 (9)
10-8-20	Targeting Whitmer. On October 8, media reported that the FBI had foiled a plot by right-wing militia members to kidnap and/or kill Michigan’s Democratic governor, Gretchen Whitmer, before the November 3 election. On April 17 Mr. Trump had tweeted that his followers should “LIBERATE MICHIGAN” from her coronavirus lock-down measures. Michigan’s attorney general now called out Mr. Trump for inciting violence.<sup>109</sup> Mr. Trump did not condemn the conspirators, but he promptly bashed Whitmer for “complaining.”<sup>110</sup> On October 12, an FBI agent testified in the court that was addressing the Michigan crime that in June, anti-government paramilitary groups had discussed kidnapping Virginia’s Democratic governor as well.<sup>111</sup>	5
10-8-20	Unhinged, on Fox. Facing sinking polls while recovering (or not) from his Covid-19 infection, Mr. Trump went on a tear in a telephone interview with Fox Business – his first extended interview after having fallen ill. He raged about Hillary Clinton’s emails (still). He again called upon his attorney general William Barr to indict Joe Biden and President Obama for spying on him during his 2016 election campaign – “the greatest political crime in the history of our country” (which in truth hadn’t happened at all). He warned of “Democrat”-engineered voter fraud in the upcoming November election. He said that Biden was “not mentally capable of being president.” He also said that Biden’s running mate, Kamala Harris, was “totally unlikeable,” a “monster” and a “communist,” who wanted to “open up the borders to allow killers and murderers and rapists to pour into our country,” and that “everything she said [in the previous night’s televised debate] is a lie.” [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 9, 11

10-8-20	[Continued.] As for the coronavirus pandemic, Mr. Trump claimed that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• China was to blame for inflicting that “curse” upon the U.S.</li> <li>• Recovered Covid-19 patients were thereafter immune to the disease (not established by science).</li> <li>• He could have easily recovered from the infection without any medical treatment (delusional).</li> <li>• His own medications had amounted to a “cure” (untrue, according to scientists; they were therapeutics; possibly, to an extent, they were mere palliatives; and even their therapeutic effect on him was unclear).</li> <li>• “99.9%” of Covid-19 victims perfunctorily recover (obscenely untrue; by then there had been more than 211,000 deaths in the U.S.; many who had survived had experienced agonizing suffering; and many survivors were still suffering long term pain and debility).</li> <li>• He was not currently contagious (nearly impossible, and not founded on any medical report).</li> <li>• He would now quickly distribute one of his drugs, the experimental Regeneron, to everyone for free (improbable; it was unproven, in short supply, and would require FDA approval).</li> <li>• He may have been infected by Gold Star families with whom he had recently met, who he said had physically approached him in worshipful adoration – hugging and kissing him – and whom, out of compassion, he had refused to turn away.<sup>112</sup></li> </ul>	6, 7, 8, 9, 11
10-9-20	Unhinged, on Limbaugh. Mr. Trump again publicly pressured Barr to expose and punish Democrats relative to the earlier investigation by the Justice Department of his 2016 campaign – now in a lengthy interview with the incendiary radio bigot and conspiracy theorist Rush Limbaugh, to whom Mr. Trump had awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in April.<sup>113</sup>	9, 11

10-9-20	Pompeo vs. Clinton. After having been publicly badgered by Mr. Trump to release the improperly stored emails of former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, the current secretary, Mike Pompeo, promised to release them before Election Day. The New York Times reported: “Neither Mr. Trump nor Mr. Pompeo explained why they would release the emails now, in the final weeks of a hotly contested presidential campaign, given that they could have done so at any point in the past four years. Nor did they explain why they would seek to prove that Mrs. Clinton was too casual with emails containing classified information by releasing emails containing classified information.”<sup>114</sup> The Times subsequently wrote, of this episode and of Mr. Trump’s call on October 8 for his attorney general to prosecute President Obama and Joe Biden: “Mr. Trump has long demanded — quite publicly, often on Twitter — that his most senior cabinet members use the power of their office to pursue political enemies. But his appeals this week, as he trailed badly in the polls and was desperate to turn the national conversation away from the coronavirus, were so blatant that one had to look to authoritarian nations to make comparisons. He took a step even Richard M. Nixon avoided in his most desperate days: openly ordering direct, immediate government action against specific opponents, timed to serve his re-election campaign.”<sup>115</sup>	9, 11
10-10-20	From the balcony. Mr. Trump made his first post-hospital campaign appearance, from a balcony at the White House. The audience consisted largely of individuals who had been mustered from a nearby convention for young, conservative businesspeople of color. The event again violated the longstanding tradition of a president not blatantly campaigning from the White House. (Mr. Trump had accepted his nomination from the White House in August, by video.) It also violated CDC guidelines regarding coronavirus containment, as had the September 26 super-spreader event in the Rose Garden at which Amy Coney Barrett’s Supreme Court nomination had been celebrated and many public figures appear to have become infected. [Continued below.]	6, 7, 8, 9

10-10-20	[Continued.] Now addressing the crowd – several hundred cheering and flag-waving supporters who were closely packed and often mask-less – Mr. Trump claimed that the pandemic was “disappearing,” even as cases and deaths were rising. He also blamed the “China virus” for the country’s affliction, warned that Democrats were “communists,” and pledged that law enforcement officers would “swamp” his enemies at the upcoming “rigged” election. Mr. Trump also repeated some of his routine falsehoods – that he had done more for the Black community than any President since Abraham Lincoln, that he had developed a health insurance plan that would ensure coverage for pre-existing conditions, and that his opponent Joe Biden supported the sporadic violence that had attended racial justice protests in several American cities.<sup>116</sup> Not incidentally, Mr. Trump’s appearance on the balcony was heralded by the United States Marine Band. That use of military resources for a campaign event was illegal.<sup>117</sup>	6, 7, 8, 9
10-10-20	Pay me (even more). The New York Times reported that more than 200 companies, special interest groups and foreign governments had received government contracts and other political favors from the Trump administration contemporaneously with and seemingly in exchange for their having patronized Mr. Trump’s golf, hotel and other businesses. The Times’ analysis was based in part on its review of Mr. Trump’s tax returns that it had obtained.<sup>118</sup> (See CSD’s entry of September 27, above, regarding The Times’ initial analysis of those returns.)	9, 11, 15
10-10-20 +	Fauci, Milley and Esper expropriated. Continuing its wholesale evisceration of the truth, on October 10 the Trump campaign released a television advertisement that included a video clip of Dr. Anthony Fauci, the esteemed epidemiologist, seeming to praise Mr. Trump’s handling of the pandemic. The first irony lay in Mr. Trump’s having totally sidelined Fauci from his coronavirus task force in recent months, because of their strong disagreements on science and policy. Worse, in the original video clip, Fauci had been praising everyone except Mr. Trump; the clip was taken out of context, and was grossly deceptive.<sup>119</sup> Fauci publicly objected, and he cautioned the Trump campaign to keep him out of future ads.<sup>120</sup> [Continued below.]	17 (7)

10-10-20 +	[Continued.] On October 12, media reported that the Trump campaign was running an ad that featured a photograph of Mr. Trump meeting with Joint Chiefs Chairman General Mark Milley and Defense Secretary Mark Esper, in violation of standing Defense Department policy with regard to political campaigns. <sup>121</sup>	17 (7)
10-12-20, 10-13-20	In Florida and Pennsylvania: lying loudly and a lot. In his first large campaign rallies after his hospitalization for Covid-19, Mr. Trump addressed his crowded and largely mask-less supporters in Sanford, Florida on October 12 and Johnstown, Pennsylvania on October 13. There he counterfactually said that, if elected, Joe Biden would eliminate health insurance coverage for pre-existing conditions; outlaw private health insurance; eliminate U.S. borders; ban charter schools; destroy [white] suburbs; dismantle police departments; quadruple individual income taxes; and impose on the country a comprehensive and crippling coronavirus lockdown. He also baselessly charged that Biden had “abandoned Scranton,” in that as a child his family had relocated to Delaware when his father had found a job there. He falsely and extensively implied that Biden was physically and mentally feeble. He said that the U.S. was “rounding the turn on the pandemic,” when in truth new cases and hospitalizations were surging. He falsely said that Mexico was paying for his border wall, that he had sent the National Guard to Minnesota to quell riots there, that CNN habitually turned off its cameras when he was criticizing the news outlet, and much more. In addition, dubiously, Mr. Trump said that he was “immune” from the coronavirus and no longer contagious, such that he could kiss every man and woman in the audience without transmitting the disease.<sup>122</sup>	1, 6, 7, 8, 9
10-13-20	DOJ backs Melania. The Department of Justice sued the author of a tell-all book about first lady Melania Trump for breaching a confidentiality agreement that the author had entered into when first offering volunteer services to Melania in connection with her White House duties. Unlike in the case of the DOJ’s suit against former national security advisor John Bolton, the DOJ did not now allege that the author had released any classified information.<sup>123</sup> Rather, for CSD, the department appeared to be expending federal resources, for the personal benefit of the Trump family, in litigating what was effectively a private contract dispute.	11

10-13-20	“Nyet” to drop boxes. The New York Times reported on efforts by Republican actors around the country to ban or limit the use of ballot drop-boxes, with a view to suppressing Democratic votes in the upcoming election. (Some states had recently sought to expand the use of drop boxes so as to facilitate safe voting amid the coronavirus pandemic.) Meanwhile, peculiarly, but with the encouragement of Mr. Trump, California’s Republican Party was setting up its own drop boxes to encourage voting in Republican districts.<sup>124</sup>	17 (4)
10-13-20 +	Another probe dies; Giuliani tries again. Concluding a months-long probe, U.S. Attorney John Bash, on behalf of the Justice Department, determined that the Obama administration’s “unmasking” of the names of Michael Flynn and other targets of national security investigations – so that selected officials could understand the nature and gravity of those investigations – had been routine and not improper.<sup>125</sup> The termination of that probe compared to the recent termination of the Senate Intelligence Committee’s investigation of the activities in Ukraine of Joe and Hunter Biden – there too, without any finding of wrong-doing (see CSD’s entry of September 23 above). Contrast to the department’s still ongoing “investigation of the [allegedly Democratic] investigators” within law enforcement agencies being conducted by U.S. Attorney John Durham (see CSD’s entry of September 25 +). All of those undertakings – based on conspiracy theories and devoid of factual or legal foundation – had been devised to discredit and punish Democrats for their own earlier support of investigations of Mr. Trump and his associates: first, special counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation of the Trump campaign’s complicity with Russian interference in the 2016 election; and second, the investigation and impeachment of Mr. Trump due to his extortionate withholding of congressionally mandated and life-saving military assistance to Ukraine when seeking Ukraine’s help in denouncing the Bidens. [Continued below.]	17 (7, 9)

10-13-20 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump and his allies had referred to the probes loudly and often, for political gain. But days prior to the “unmasking” report, Barr had told some Republicans not to expect the Durham report before the November election. And when the “unmasking” probe fizzled, Barr made no formal announcement. For his part, Mr. Trump told a reporter that he was “not happy” with Barr and might not reappoint him as attorney general if he (Mr. Trump) were to be reelected. He said, of Barr, “It’s very disappointing. And I’ll tell him to his face.” Also: “It’s ridiculous. It’s a disgrace .... I think it’s really a horrible thing that they’re allowed to get away .... I think it’s too bad, they’re guilty as hell.”<sup>126</sup> On October 14, The New York Post published emails about Hunter Biden that had been furnished by Mr. Trump’s personal attorney Rudy Giuliani and one of his 2016 campaign chiefs, Stephen Bannon. The emails purportedly exposed corrupt activities on the part of Hunter and his father Joe, and they had reportedly been retrieved by a computer repairman from Hunter’s hard drive. Giuliani had long prospected for such material in Ukraine, ultimately helping to precipitate Mr. Trump’s impeachment; he had long trafficked in anti-Biden disinformation drawn from Russian intelligence figures; he had long predicted a bombshell news release at election time; through all of this, his reputation had descended to that of a farcical rascal; and he was currently under federal investigation in connection with a fraud case. Bannon, once a leading Trump strategist and one of Mr. Trump’s original sources of xenophobic and demagogic provocation, was now under indictment for federal money-laundering and fraud charges. The Washington Post’s reporters found the latest revelations about the Bidens to be attempts to influence the upcoming election, but otherwise old news, substantively insignificant, and (thus far) forensically unreliable. The Post shortly also reported on new revelations about the Kremlin’s efforts in prior periods to feed Giuliani disinformation.<sup>127</sup> Mr. Trump nevertheless touted the new claims at a rally in Des Moines, Iowa that evening.<sup>128</sup> Fox News piled on, despite the many seeming irregularities and inconsistencies in the story.<sup>129</sup>	17 (7, 9)

10-14-20 +	QAnon and me. On October 14, media reported on several new QAnon-supported conspiracy theories that Mr. Trump had recently re-tweeted in the midst of election season: that President Obama and his then vice president Joe Biden had arranged to kill a team of Navy Seals; and that the Seals’ elimination of Osama bin Laden in 2011 had been a hoax staged by President Obama in collaboration with the Iranian regime, and that bin Laden could still be alive.<sup>130</sup> Confronted the next evening on the above falsehoods and on his seeming symbiosis with QAnon by the moderator of a televised pre-election town hall, Mr. Trump claimed to not know anything about QAnon except for its laudatory opposition to pedophilia. (In truth, Mr. Trump could not possibly have escaped awareness of QAnon, what with the ample coverage of it in the news, its growing presence at his rallies, and the FBI’s cautions about its dangers. For their part, QAnon’s supporters appeared to do nothing to actually combat pedophilia – they only ludicrously charged Democrats with committing it.) Mr. Trump then said, “I’ll tell you what I do know about. I know about antifa and I know about the radical left.”<sup>131</sup> QAnon followers rejoiced.<sup>132</sup>	7, 9
10-15-20	A death squad? At a campaign rally in Greenville, North Carolina, Mr. Trump boasted about law enforcement officers having hunted down and killed an antifa adherent named Michael Forest Reinoehl on September 3. Reinoehl was suspected of having murdered a pro-Trump, right-wing protester in Portland, Oregon on August 29. But both The New York Times and The Washington Post had reported on the assertion of witnesses that the officers might not have attempted to arrest Reinoehl before shooting him, and that Reinoehl had not posed a danger to them; that is, that the killing of Reinoehl may have amounted to an extra-judicial execution, as occurs in dictatorships around the world. Appearing to celebrate that in Greenville, Mr. Trump said: “We sent in the U.S. marshals, took 15 minutes and it was over. They knew who he was, they didn’t want to arrest him, and 15 minutes, that ended.”<sup>133</sup> CSD does not defend Reinoehl, who appeared to have had a history of bad actions, and who may well have committed the murder for which he was suspected. Nor do we venture to determine whether the officers assassinated him. But we are outraged that Mr. Trump appeared to believe that they did, and that he praised them for that.	9

10-16-20	Stonewalling. The Washington Post reported that the State Department had refused to provide it, prior to the November 3 election, with records about the department’s spending at Trump-owned properties – in defiance of the department’s obligation to do so under the Freedom of Information Act, The Post’s lawsuit seeking to enforce the Act, and the department’s subsequent promise to provide the records. The General Services Administration had likewise refused to provide records to The Post – including records that might show whether the Trump International Hotel in Washington was in arrears in its rent owing to the GSA under its lease of the Old Post Office Building.<sup>134</sup>	9, 15
10-16-20	Another prosecutor blasts Barr. A third sitting federal prosecutor publicly denounced Attorney General William Barr for politicizing the Justice Department – in this case, among other things, for trying to swing the upcoming president election to Mr. Trump. Based in San Diego, California, the prosecutor accused Barr of “slavish obedience to Donald Trump’s will” and a determination “to turn our democracy into an autocracy.” Such denunciations of the department by sitting prosecutors were rare, if not unprecedented.<sup>135</sup>	17 (9)

The November 2020 Election
(A separate section of Addendum 33)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 4, 6, 7, 9 and 16 as defined in CSD’s Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the efforts of the Trump administration to suppress voting in and to discredit any unfavorable results of the upcoming November 2020 election have moved rapidly. CSD’s observations below that have been recorded as of a given date may have been superseded, or may yet be superseded, on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD’s concerns about the attempts by the Trump administration to corrupt and discredit the election are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that have recurred, that news media have reported anew, and that, as of the date of this Addendum, have continued to threaten our democracy, day after day.

On September 12, after the U.S. Postal Service had refused a request by the Colorado secretary of state to desist from mailing postcards to Colorado residents that contained confusing and misleading information about their mail-in voting rights, a federal judge temporarily enjoined the mailings.<sup>136</sup>

On September 15, Mr. Trump told Fox News that a victory by his electoral rival Joe Biden in November would necessarily have turned on voting fraud – that there were no lawful circumstances under which Biden could possibly win. Mr. Trump had now been charging that repeatedly.<sup>137</sup>

A federal judge in Washington state on September 17 temporarily enjoined the Postal Service’s operational changes that were slowing down the mail, stating that Mr. Trump and Postmaster General Louis DeJoy were “involved in a politically motivated attack on the efficiency of the Postal Service” that could disrupt the 2020 election. The judge said that the “attack on the Postal Service is likely to irreparably harm the states’ ability to administer the 2020 general election,” creating “a substantial possibility that many voters will be disenfranchised and the states may not be able to effectively, timely, accurately determine election outcomes.” The injunction had nationwide effect.<sup>138</sup> On September 21, a federal judge in New York went further, ordering DeJoy to reverse his recent operational changes, to take affirmative measures to prioritize election mail, and to quickly restore on-time delivery.<sup>139</sup> On September 28, two more federal judges – in Washington, D.C. and Pennsylvania – enjoined the service cuts.<sup>140</sup> But as of October 1, DeJoy’s operational changes were still in effect in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania – a blue city in a purple state that was widely seen as critical to the election’s outcome – causing unprecedented delays in mail delivery there.<sup>141</sup>

At a rally in Fayetteville, North Carolina on September 19, Mr. Trump said that he was “counting on the federal court system” to terminate the tabulation of ballots shortly after the polls closed in the upcoming presidential election, and thus to disregard late-counted mail-in ballots – contrary to state voting laws – which he believed would favor Biden. He contemporaneously was rushing to nominate a Supreme Court justice to replace Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who had died the previous day, with a view to achieving an overwhelming (6-3) Republican majority within the Court by election day. Critics alleged that he sought to use the Supreme Court to steal the election.<sup>142</sup> Indeed, as described more fully in the first section of this Addendum, on September 22 Mr. Trump told reporters that he needed to install a new Supreme Court justice to replace Ginsburg before the election so as to ensure that the Court would rule in his favor on the fraudulent Democratic election activities that he was predicting.<sup>143</sup>

Also as reported in the first section of this Addendum, on September 23 Mr. Trump reiterated that he needed to have a new justice in place so as to win the election-related litigation that he anticipated in November. At that point some observers took as a given that Mr. Trump was planning to seek court orders, as well as action by Republican-controlled state governments in swing states, to forbid the counting of votes after Election Day, for fear that late-counted votes would favor Biden.<sup>144</sup>

When asked on September 23 whether he would commit to a peaceful transfer of power should he lose the election, Mr. Trump responded: “Well, we’re going to have to see what happens. You know that I’ve been complaining very strongly about the ballots and the ballots are a disaster.” Pressed further, he said: “We’ll want to have — get rid of the ballots and you’ll have a very — we’ll have a very peaceful — there won’t be a transfer, frankly, there’ll be a continuation.”<sup>145</sup>

On September 24, Mr. Trump suggested on Fox News Radio that he would not accept any election outcome except as ruled on by the Supreme Court. Several of Mr. Trump’s prominent supporters in the Senate appeared to back him on that.<sup>146</sup>

Also on September 24, FBI director Christopher Wray told a congressional committee that there was no evidence of coordinated or massive voter fraud in the coming election. Mr. Trump’s chief of staff Mark Meadows shortly said that Wray was incompetent and mistaken.<sup>147</sup>

Also on September 24, a U.S. attorney publicized that he was investigating the discovery of nine mailed-in military ballots, most marked as voting for Mr. Trump, that were found in the trash in a rural Pennsylvania county. It was highly unusual for the Justice Department to publicize an ongoing investigation, and unprecedented in a voting fraud case to identify the candidate who had been voted for. Before that publicity but after being personally briefed on the matter by his attorney general William Barr, Mr. Trump had told reporters about the episode and had alleged a Democratic conspiracy, while misstating facts and acknowledging that he didn’t know the details. The Trump campaign also promptly seized upon the episode to allege that the ballots had been intentionally discarded and that Democrats were “trying to steal the election.” Mr. Trump made similar statements the following day. But the U.S. attorney soon determined that at least part of the problem appeared to have been bureaucratic – performed by a temporary, part-time contractor, without the knowledge of the local election authorities. The county itself was Republican-controlled, and the county election officials did not allege voter fraud. Through all of this, the number of ballots involved was trivial, compared to Pennsylvania’s expected voting total of approximately 6 million; and thus the attention given to the matter by Barr, Mr. Trump, the U.S. attorney and the Trump campaign struck some legal experts as extraordinarily disproportionate.<sup>148</sup> On September 30, Pennsylvania’s top election officials announced that no fraud appeared to have occurred, only the bungling on the part of the temporary worker.<sup>149</sup>

At a rally in Newport News, Virginia on September 25, Mr. Trump told the crowd, “We’re not going to lose this except if they cheat.” He also said that if he loses, “We’re not going to stand for it.”<sup>150</sup>

Also on September 25, The New York Times reported that senior military and Defense Department leaders were gravely concerned that Mr. Trump might order them into the streets to quell civil unrest in connection with the election, as he had threatened to do during the early days of the now-ongoing racial justice protests. Some of those leaders were reportedly prepared to be insubordinate or to resign under those circumstances.<sup>151</sup>

At a rally at the Harrisburg, Pennsylvania airport on September 26, as recorded above in the first section of this Addendum, Mr. Trump charged that Democrats were rigging the election; repeated his recent, false claim that a rigging episode had been uncovered in rural Pennsylvania; roared that “the only way they can win in Pennsylvania is to cheat on the ballots”; and urged his supporters to go to the polls to report on Democrats “dumping” and “flushing” things.<sup>152</sup>

During the first televised presidential debate of the campaign, on September 29, Mr. Trump told 73,000,000 viewers that the election would be rigged, and he called for an “army” of his supporters to observe polling places.<sup>153</sup> (See CSD’s September 29 report on the debate in the first section of this Addendum.)

On October 1, Mr. Trump’s former national security adviser, General H.R. McMaster, told MSNBC that Mr. Trump was “aiding and abetting” Russian President Vladimir Putin’s efforts to sow doubt about the integrity of the American electoral system.<sup>154</sup>

Advancing its full-court press against Pennsylvania’s voting mechanisms, on October 1 Mr. Trump’s campaign sued to overturn the state’s law barring poll watchers from its satellite mail-in registration and voting sites. The suit shortly followed Mr. Trump’s public denunciation of the enforcement of that law in Philadelphia against a group of Republican gate-crashers, who had not been registered as poll watchers anyway. Pennsylvania was seen by both parties as an essential battleground state. Indeed, observers were coming to fear that Pennsylvania could be especially vulnerable to legal chaos and even civil disturbance on and after Election Day. Other recent and ongoing Republican efforts to corrupt the election in Pennsylvania included the following:

- Mr. Trump’s reckless and false but very public accusation that absentee votes in a rural county had been fraudulently discarded, together with the associated, wrongful publicity of that episode by the U.S. attorney there.
- The Republican-controlled legislature’s attempt at a whipsaw: refusing to allow mailed-in ballots to be counted early, yet preparing to challenge mailed-in ballots that might not be counted quickly after the polls close on Election Day – including by way of an investigatory panel newly approved for that purpose by a legislative committee.

(Publicly pilloried, the Republicans dropped the investigatory panel gambit on October 9.)

- A slow-down in mail service in Philadelphia recently effected by Postmaster General Louis DeJoy.
- Litigation brought before federal courts by Pennsylvania Republicans:
  - A suit brought before the U.S. Supreme Court to strike down a recent Pennsylvania Supreme Court decision allowing mailed-in ballots to be counted for three days after Election Day.
  - A separate suit before a federal district court to strike down a recent Pennsylvania Supreme Court decision (a) allowing the use of drop boxes for mailed-in ballots, (b) not requiring mailed-in signatures to match signatures on voter registration records, and (c) barring non-resident poll-watchers at polling places (e.g., barring rural Pennsylvania Republicans from intimidating minority voters in Democratic Philadelphia and Pittsburgh). (The district court dismissed that action on October 10, but the Republicans planned to appeal to the federal circuit court. Facing Republican resistance, the state’s Democratic secretary of state meanwhile asked the state supreme court to confirm her guidance to county officials that they not bar ballots on grounds of signature discrepancies.)<sup>155</sup>

On October 2, The Washington Post reported that the Justice Department was establishing a command center at FBI headquarters to deal with a significantly higher than usual possibility of civil unrest, cyberattacks, voter fraud and voter intimidation in connection with the upcoming election.<sup>156</sup>

At his televised vice-presidential debate with Kamala Harris on October 7, Vice President Mike Pence warned viewers that universal mail-in voting “will create massive opportunities for voter fraud,” and he refused to commit to a peaceful transfer of power should he and Mr. Trump lose the election.<sup>157</sup>

At a televised town hall on October 15, Mr. Trump said in a reference to mail-in voting, “When I see thousands of ballots dumped in a garbage can and they happen to have my name on it? I’m not happy about it.” Nothing remotely like that had happened. The closest episode involved seven military ballots – submitted through the ordinary absentee voting mechanism for service members, and erroneously discarded by a temporary electoral office contractor in Luzerne County, Pennsylvania.<sup>158</sup>

Summary of Efforts to Steal the Election

In the run-up to the November 3, 2020 election, CSD has distilled from this Chronology the following partial list of methods for corrupting the upcoming election that mainstream journalists had found Mr. Trump – and some other Republicans, for their and his benefit – to have already implemented (or, where noted by an asterisk [*] below, to be contemplating). Even if not all of those methods in the end will have been materially deployed, we consider their multiplicity to be breathtaking, and deserving of broad public condemnation.

1. Disqualifying whole categories of voters in some Republican-controlled swing states (e.g., Florida, Georgia and Texas).
2. Drastically purging voting rolls in some Republican-controlled swing states (e.g., Georgia).
3. *Broadly rejecting in-person and mailed-in votes on technicalities.
4. *Intimidating voters at the polls by way of the appearance of threatening Republican volunteers, including military veterans. (Starting in 1981, the Republican Party had been under a court order forbidding it from doing that. But the order expired in 2018.)
5. *Intimidating voters by sending federal or state law enforcement officials to the polls in Democratic precincts. (Mr. Trump had threatened to send the federals, and he had encouraged states to send the others. This could materialize especially if Mr. Trump or his supporters were to provoke riots to achieve that end.)
6. Discouraging some voters from voting altogether, by claiming that mail-in voting – broadly expanded this year due to the coronavirus pandemic -- will illegally tarnish the election.
7. *Causing the Postal Service to slow down mailed-in ballots (or possibly all mail) from Democratic precincts in purple states, or more generally.
8. Closing polling places in Democratic precincts in purple states, attempting to limit the availability of ballot drop boxes, or otherwise causing long lines to occur at polling places so as to discourage voting (e.g., in Pennsylvania, Texas and Georgia).
9. Litigating and legislating who has the right to vote, how voting will be conducted, and during what periods mailed-in ballots will be counted – all with a view to reducing Democratic voting and vote count.
10. *Claiming voter fraud shortly after the election (including pursuant to late-arriving mailed-in ballots), such that Republican state legislators could purport to seize from voters the right to name presidential electors for their respective states. Mr. Trump had been vocally and repeatedly predicting that fraud. He had said that he expected the matter to be resolved by the Supreme Court; and he had extraordinarily rushed to fill the vacancy created by the death of liberal justice

Ruth Bader Ginsburg with his own appointee before the election – expressly seeking to secure a Republican super-majority on the Court for the purpose of ruling on mailed-in ballots and other election issues.

11. Spreading – and allowing and even encouraging Russians to spread – scandalous misinformation about Biden and about the integrity of the upcoming American election; downplaying or denying the existence of the Russian efforts.

12. Announcing some sort of law enforcement action or finding against Democrats in connection with Mr. Trump’s epochal Russia and Ukraine scandals. (Two Republican-controlled Senate committees fulfilled their long-threatened “September surprise” by reporting on their investigation of Joe and Hunter Biden relative to Hunter’s prior dealings in Ukraine. Those committees came up with nothing that had not already been aired and discredited in the course of Mr. Trump’s impeachment proceedings. A Justice Department probe into “unmasking” the identities of Michael Flynn and other national security risks for the eyes of Obama-era officials also ended with no findings of wrongdoing. Attorney General William Barr, however, was continuing to push ahead with his own investigation of Robert Mueller’s investigation of numerous Trump campaign figures’ complicity with Russian interference in the 2016 election, searching for anti-Trump wrong-doing within federal law enforcement agencies.)

13. Attempting through court action to block from publication tell-all books about Mr. Trump by John Bolton and Mary Trump.

14. Attempting, effectively, to bribe voters -- e.g., by way of Mr. Trump’s announcement that he would send $200 prescription payment cards to millions of Medicare recipients shortly before the election, and his ordering the Agriculture Department to place letters with his signature inside boxes of surplus food being distributed to needy families (again, at the peak of election season).

15. Using federal facilities such as the White House and Ft. McHenry to hold campaign events; repeatedly and blatantly campaigning in the course of official presidential duties, at taxpayer expense; and allowing cabinet members and other administration officials to campaign in the course of their duties, in defiance of the Hatch Act.

16. Secretly supporting third-party candidates (rapper Kanye West and Green Party candidate Howie Hawkins), who could cut into the Biden vote in several battleground states.

17. Under cover of the coronavirus pandemic, curtailing federal naturalization proceedings for immigrants, such that they had been deprived of citizenship and the right to vote in the upcoming election.

18. Withholding most of the federal funding sought by states to deal with their extraordinary needs in administering elections during the coronavirus pandemic.

19. In general, and monumentally, lying to voters about Mr. Trump’s presidential achievements (including, potentially, by falsely claiming to have a safe coronavirus vaccine ready for roll-out prior to or shortly after the election); about what he would deliver for voters in the future; about Biden's character, health and policy positions; and about the threats posed by "radical socialists," "anarchists," "rioters" and "looters" in an America governed by Democrats.

The Coronavirus Pandemic
(A separate section of Addendum 33)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13 and 15 as defined in CSD's Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic have moved rapidly. CSD's observations below that have been recorded as of a given date may have been superseded, or may yet be superseded, on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD's concerns about the Trump administration's coronavirus response are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that have recurred, that news media have reported anew, and that, as of the date of this Addendum, have continued to threaten lives, day after day.

On September 9, dozens of doctors and researchers at Stanford University's Department of Medicine, in an open letter posted on the school's website, denounced Scott Atlas – their former colleague, a renowned radiologist but a man with no experience in public health or immunology, and now Mr. Trump's most public advisor on the pandemic who was discouraging mask-wearing and social distancing – as a dangerous quack in his current role.<sup>159</sup>

On September 11, Politico reported (and The New York Times subsequently corroborated) that the CDC's politically appointed communications aides had been operating since the spring to water down and to make more positive the agency's public advice about the spread and the threats of the coronavirus. The efforts were being led by Michael Caputo, a Roger Stone acolyte and former Trump campaign official with no medical or scientific background, whom Mr. Trump had appointed in April as the spokesperson for the Department of Health and Human Services. Among other things, Caputo had begun a $250 million media project to extol Mr. Trump's handling of the pandemic. In one instance, a CDC report on the uselessness of hydroxychloroquine – Mr. Trump's favorite snake oil – had been suppressed for a month. Caputo's response to the broader allegations: "Our intention is to make sure that evidence, science-based data drives policy through this pandemic—not ulterior deep state motives in the bowels of CDC."<sup>160</sup> How Caputo would be able to identify science-based data, even if he were not a hyper-partisan Trump acolyte, was unclear. But he did very much want his views to be heard. On September 13, he posted a video on his personal Facebook page in which he claimed that career government scientists were engaging in "sedition" in their handling of the pandemic and that left-wing hit squads were preparing for armed insurrection after the election. He urged his followers, "If you carry guns, buy ammunition, ladies and gentlemen, because it's going to be hard to get.” He went on to acknowledge, astonishingly, that both his physical and mental health were unsound.<sup>161</sup> On September 16, HHS announced that Caputo was taking a medical leave.<sup>162</sup> But Politico – in now further detailing Caputo’s efforts to install uninformed partisan operatives and to denigrate science at HHS – questioned whether his departure would restore either the agency’s credibility or its public commitment to science-based policy.<sup>163</sup> On September 25, Politico reported that Caputo’s coronavirus pre-election propaganda campaign – now priced out at $300 million in taxpayer dollars, at the expense of other public health programs – was proceeding, replete with video appearances by a number of pop culture celebrities.<sup>164</sup>

At two Trump campaign rallies in Nevada (September 12 and 13) and at the signing of a Middle East peace treaty at the White House (September 15), most attendees did not wear face masks or practice social distancing. (See also CSD’s entry of September 12 and 13 above, “In Nevada.”)<sup>165</sup>

On September 16, CDC director Dr. Robert Redfield testified under oath before Congress that face masks provided more assurance of protection from the coronavirus than the forthcoming vaccine would, and that a vaccine wouldn’t be widely distributed until mid-2021. Mr. Trump then told reporters that he had spoken with (that is, presumably, he had upbraided) Redfield, and that Redfield had erred in both of those statements; rather, Mr. Trump now said, masks were unreliable and a vaccine would be rolled out in 2020. On the same day, Mr. Trump told a television reporter that he himself had made no errors in his handling of the pandemic; rather, that he had done “a great job.” (The U.S. continued to have the world’s highest death toll and one of the highest per-capita death rates among industrialized nations.)<sup>166</sup>

On September 16, Mr. Trump blamed “blue states” (those with Democratic governors) for the country’s high number of coronavirus infections. He said, “If you take the blue states out, we’re at a level that I don’t think anybody in the world would be at.” He said nothing about the high numbers of infections and deaths in Republican-controlled states.<sup>167</sup> His remarks, in any event, suggested that he felt that he was the president of, and responsible for, the health of only half of the country.<sup>168</sup>

Also on September 16, as reported in the first section of this Addendum, Mr. Trump’s attorney general William Barr said that any attempt at a nationwide lockdown due to the pandemic would amount to “the greatest intrusion on civil liberties” in history “other than slavery.”<sup>169</sup> Critics called the statement incendiary, inaccurate, demagogic, and a cynical attempt to color scientific conclusions with partisanship so as to enable Mr. Trump to win the upcoming election.<sup>170</sup>

A survey released by the Pew Research Center on September 17 revealed that 78% of Americans were concerned that the Trump administration could be unsafely rushing approvals of a coronavirus vaccine. Almost half of Americans said that they would not get vaccinated if the vaccine were to be rolled out as of the date of the survey, many because of that skepticism.<sup>171</sup> Observers remarked that if the skepticism were to continue when a vaccine were finally rolled out, widespread vaccinations could falter, the pandemic could continue, and untold thousands could sicken and die.

On September 18, the CDC officially reversed its recent guidance that symptomless people who had had contact with coronavirus carriers needn't themselves be tested for Covid-19. The reversal came several weeks following revelations that the guidance had been politically rather than scientifically informed.<sup>172</sup> See CDC's August 24 entry within the Coronavirus Pandemic section of the preceding Addendum.

Also on September 18, the White House blocked FDA Commissioner Stephen Hahn from testifying to a House committee about his agency's pandemic response.<sup>173</sup>

On September 21, Mr. Trump yet again said that a vaccine could be ready and even widely distributed by the end of October, notwithstanding his own advisors' projections to the contrary.<sup>174</sup> He also said, falsely and flippantly, that the virus sickens mainly elderly people with "heart problems and other problems" (implying that they were disposable) and that nobody under 18 was vulnerable to serious injury from the illness (contradicting both data and his own previous statements). Asked to rate his performance in handling the pandemic as the U.S. death toll neared 200,000, he yet again gave himself a top grade – "A-plus," for a "phenomenal job" – reprising the perfect score he had given himself in March.<sup>175</sup>

The Washington Post reported on September 22 that a $1 billion fund that Congress had given the Pentagon in March to build up the country's supplies of medical equipment to fight the pandemic was diverted by the Pentagon for such things as jet engine parts, body armor and dress uniforms. The diversion was not only illegal but life-threatening.<sup>176</sup> A (Democratic) committee in the House promptly launched an investigation.<sup>177</sup>

Campaigning at an airport in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania on September 22, Mr. Trump was greeted by thousands of supporters, tightly packed and largely mask-less, contrary to the public health guidance issued by that state's governor. In his speech, Mr. Trump mocked Biden for wearing a mask. On September 26, defying an explicit request from the governor, Mr. Trump held a rally at the airport in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, again for a tightly packed and largely mask-less crowd.<sup>178</sup>

On September 23, Mr. Trump threatened to override the FDA if it were to release tougher standards for authorizing the distribution of a Covid-19 vaccine. He said that such a move by the FDA would be "political."<sup>179</sup> In truth, for a president – a non-scientist, let alone someone antagonistic toward science – to override the FDA's scientists would be extraordinarily political, and unprecedented.<sup>180</sup> Public health experts expressed grave concern.<sup>181</sup>

As of September 23, testing for asymptomatic individuals was still not widely available to the public. (It was available to Mr. Trump and others in and around the White House.) Meanwhile, the coronavirus continued to spread in a manner that impeded commerce, employment, education, and medical protection.<sup>182</sup>

By way of Twitter, on September 25, Mr. Trump seemed to threaten to withhold vaccine shipments to New York because that state's governor, Andrew Cuomo, had said that he mistrusted the safety of any vaccine that the government would release.<sup>183</sup>

On September 22, the White House overruled the CDC by re-allowing cruise ships to sail after October 31.<sup>184</sup>

At the first televised debate between Mr. Trump and Joe Biden on September 29, Mr. Trump mocked Biden for having frequently worn a mask at public events.<sup>185</sup> Mr. Trump's wife, his children and some other guests of his sat in the audience mask-less, defying the rules of the event, and prompting the event's moderator, Chris Wallace of Fox News, to express outrage afterwards.<sup>186</sup>

On October 1, The Times reported on a Cornell University statistical study that found that comments by and about Mr. Trump represented the single largest driver of coronavirus misinformation in the English language.<sup>187</sup>

The president contracts Covid-19.

Early in the morning of October 2, Mr. Trump revealed that he and his wife Melania had tested positive for Covid-19, and that they would be entering quarantine at the White House. Because he had rarely worn a mask or practiced social distancing, a considerable number of his aides and other associates now saw themselves to be at risk for having contracted the disease. News stories were ablaze with new uncertainties around upcoming presidential campaigning and debates, the outcome of the election, continuity and succession scenarios, and national security.<sup>188</sup> That evening Mr. Trump was flown to Walter Reed National Military Center for treatment.

The Post reported: “The U.S. president is hospitalized with a virus he refused to treat as a grave threat, in the final weeks of an election whose results he will not pledge to accept, as the nation confronts a struggling economy, an unyielding pandemic and racial unrest. The combination of these crises has plunged the United States into a vortex of potential vulnerability that national security experts said is probably without precedent. Consumed by its own difficulties, the country is in a poor position to respond to provocations by adversaries, advance its foreign policy interests with support from allies, or serve as a credible model of functioning democracy, former senior national security officials said.”<sup>189</sup>

The obvious implication of Mr. Trump's illness was that he had fallen victim to his own denial of the virulence of the disease and to his refusal on most occasions to wear a face mask and to practice social distancing. Some of his grassroots faithful, however, drew different faith-based lessons: that because even the deity of the president had taken ill, no mere mortal could reasonably hope to protect themselves, and thus mask wearing, social distancing and commercial restrictions were useless (the Trump campaign said that as well); that Mr. Trump would quickly recover because of his super-human strength; that he had knowingly, bravely and patriotically risked his health and ultimately sacrificed himself by continuing throughout the pandemic to campaign and to govern; that he was not in danger because few people in reality were; that his enemies had intentionally infected him; and that (as viewed by QAnon) his entire illness was a hoax that he had engineered as part of a grand plan to arrest Hillary Clinton.<sup>190</sup> On October 4, a large, noisy and mainly mask-less crowd of the faithful articulated some of those views and demonstrated their support outside of the hospital.<sup>191</sup>

Now also reporting infections were numerous public figures who had attended Mr. Trump's ceremony in the Rose Garden on September 26, at which he had celebrated his nominee for the Supreme Court, Amy Coney Barrett. The crowd had been packed and largely mask-less. Those infected included former senior advisor Kellyanne Conway, Republican Senators Thom Tillis and Mike Lee, Trump campaign manager Bill Stepien, Republican National Committee Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel, top political advisor Chris Christie, top White House aide Hope Hicks, Mr. Trump's body man Nick Luna, and press secretary Kayleigh McEnany.<sup>192</sup> Media compiled chilling analyses of the many additional prominent figures and others with whom Mr. Trump was known to have had close contact during the week before he discovered his infection.<sup>193</sup> Media also publicized the possibility of virus transmission at a fundraising event that Mr. Trump had held at his Bedminster, New Jersey golf club only hours before his diagnosis; and only days later did the White House provide New Jersey officials with a list of potential victims at that event.<sup>194</sup> Even Joe Biden seemed to be at risk of having been infected by Mr. Trump at their September 29 debate.<sup>195</sup> Mainstream news outlets raised a continuing stream of questions about when Mr. Trump knew or should have known that he might have been carrying the virus – generally concurring that he had been aware of the risk prior to the Bedminster event.<sup>196</sup>

Revelations by the White House and by Mr. Trump's attending physicians concerning Mr. Trump's medical condition were sanguine, vague, contradictory and – as Mr. Trump's personal physician shortly was forced by media to acknowledge – misleading.<sup>197</sup> White House aides released a photo of Mr. Trump “hard at work” in the hospital and signing an important piece of paper (which was blank).<sup>198</sup> Even after the White House on October 3 had released a video of a pale (not orange) Mr. Trump, in the hospital, proclaiming his upbeat outlook and associating his coronavirus conduct with that of “great leaders,” some credible observers suspected a cover-up of a graver condition, and wondered whether Mr. Trump's capacity to lead the nation – including by handling the nuclear codes – had been diminished.<sup>199</sup>

Yet determined to project strength – both in general and for the sake of the upcoming election – on October 4 Mr. Trump made the unprecedented move of leaving the hospital for a photo op. Rashly risking his health, he took his armored SUV on a surprise motorcade through the streets around the hospital. From his seat inside the vehicle, he waved to throngs of supporters. But the windows were closed – designed to be hermetically sealed against gas attacks – thus also risking the health of the Secret Service agents within and generating widespread criticism among agents, doctors and the media.<sup>200</sup>

As of that evening, congressional leaders had not been briefed on the status of Mr. Trump's health.<sup>201</sup>

Based on continuing revelations of new infections of people encircling Mr. Trump, the White House had become the leading coronavirus hotspot in Washington.<sup>202</sup>

On the evening of October 5, Mr. Trump tweeted from the hospital: “Don't be afraid of Covid. We have developed, under the Trump administration, some really great drugs & knowledge. I feel better than I did 20 years ago!” Having demanded that his doctors release him, and despite the apparent risk to national security, he then returned to the White House. In a carefully orchestrated and nationally televised display in which his orange make-up had reappeared, he debarked from the Marine One helicopter, crossed the lawn, ascended the steps to a White House balcony (newly bedecked with flags), removed his mask, posed stolidly, attempted to hide his difficulty in breathing (although even before his infection he may have puffed when ascending a staircase), then gave a long military salute to the helicopter as it departed. He then entered the building, where he was spotted re-doing the video footage for effect. He ultimately tweeted the video, in which he said, remarkably, "We're going back. We're going back to work. We're gonna be out front. As your leader I had to do that. I knew there's danger to it but I had to do it. I stood out front. I led. Nobody that's a leader would not do what I did. I know there's a risk, there's a danger. That's OK. And now I'm better, and maybe I'm immune? I don't know. But don't let it dominate your lives. Get out there, be careful." Whether he was speaking specifically of the risk to himself, to his White House staff, or to the nation was unclear – but he plainly had determined that they all were worth risking.

Two of Mr. Trump's staunch supporters in Congress burnished his uber-macho stunts by shortly tweeting, respectively, "President Trump won't have to recover from COVID. COVID will have to recover from President Trump. #MAGA," and "COVID stood NO chance against @realDonaldTrump!" A for-profit vendor began selling $100 commemorative coins proclaiming "PRESIDENT DONALD J. TRUMP DEFEATS COVID."

During the course of that pageantry, Mr. Trump's doctors reported all the good news about his condition, but – citing privacy grounds – not the complete news. They appeared almost certainly to be spinning the truth and hiding the worst, as well as hiding the risks associated with administering to him a combination of medicines that individually could cause psychotropic reactions and that together had never before been tested for interactions.

Also, as of the evening of October 5, the White House reportedly was not tracing the social contacts of those who had attended the super-spreader event for Amy Coney Barrett in the Rose Garden on September 26. It had also largely cut the CDC – the country's preeminent repository of contact tracing expertise – out of the tracing and notification process.

Altogether, the foregoing series of episodes shocked many, in these respects:

- Mr. Trump had staged another Il Duce visual spectacle, projecting power and even omnipotence from the balcony, Mussolini-style. His visual message: The disease is about me; and through great courage and sacrifice I have conquered it, in warrior fashion. (Mr. Trump had avoided military service during the Vietnam War.)
- Re-entering the White House without a mask when he was still contagious, he knowingly and recklessly placed the entire staff there – butlers, housekeepers, cooks, Secret Service, policy officials – at significant risk. Already a dozen staffers had contracted the virus, some possibly from him; and from each staffer who had contracted or who might yet contract the virus, the disease could spread to dozens, hundreds or thousands of others.
- His text and video seemed dismissive of the risk posed by the coronavirus to the general population, which did not have access to the extraordinary and expensive treatment he had received, including the experimental drugs that seemed to have benefited him.
- He did not thank God, or his doctors, or his good fortune for his survival.

- He did not acknowledge how sick he likely continued to be, and his potential for a relapse and long weeks and months of after-effects.
- He did not acknowledge how his own reckless behavior had likely been responsible for sickening him.
- He had no words of support for others who were suffering or who had suffered from the disease or from the loss of loved ones. (By then, some 210,000 Americans had succumbed.) If anything, he seemed to suggest that he was simply stronger than they were.
- The deception about Mr. Trump's true condition was ongoing, as was the cover-up as to when he suspected/knew he was contagious vis-à-vis when he had interacted with others.

To the understanding of CSD, some previous presidents as well had hidden (and had directed the hiding of) their respective ailments; but not in the last 40 years, when greater transparency had generally come to be expected of political figures; not in the middle of an election campaign; not relative to a pandemic that was ripping the lungs out of the nation and the executive response to which had become possibly the single greatest issue in that campaign; and not on the part of a president whose every breathing moment in office had been directed to disseminating falsehoods and to otherwise corrupting the mechanisms of democracy.

In sum, the entire performance appeared to be about Mr. Trump's manliness, his authority, and his reelection by those who welcomed authority – not about the health of the American people (even those who welcomed authority).

Reportedly, while in the hospital, Mr. Trump had been watching Fox News non-stop.<sup>203</sup>

On October 6, seemingly buoyed by his release from the hospital, Mr. Trump posted on Facebook and Twitter that Covid-19 was “in most populations far less lethal than the flu.” Facebook promptly removed the posting, and Twitter hid it under a public interest notice, pursuant to the respective policies of those social media platforms restricting misinformation about the pandemic that could lead to physical harm.<sup>204</sup>

On October 7, Mr. Trump reportedly met with top aides in the Oval Office, despite his being contagious, and thus in defiance of CDC guidelines.<sup>205</sup>

Also on that day, Mr. Trump released a video, recorded outside at the White House, in which he spoke loudly without a mask in the direction of his presumably vulnerable videographers. In his message, he claimed that his having contracted the disease was a “blessing from God,” in that his recovery had demonstrated the effectiveness of the medications that he had taken. He called one of those medications, Regeneron, a “miracle” and “cure” – but it was a therapeutic, not a cure, and its efficacy was still far from proven.<sup>206</sup> (Even Regeneron's CEO publicly stated that Mr. Trump's case had established nothing about the drug's efficacy.<sup>207</sup>) In sum, remarkably, Mr. Trump had sought to turn the rampant and perilous coronavirus infestations at the White House and the Pentagon, the perceived national security crisis,<sup>208</sup> and the cost to taxpayers of treating Mr. Trump's self-inflicted illness, into a blessing.

As reported above in the first section of this Addendum, on October 8 the Commission on Presidential Debates determined that the next scheduled debate between Mr. Trump and Joe Biden – in town hall format and set for October 14 – would be held virtually, so that Mr. Trump wouldn't infect anyone else. Mr. Trump promptly refused to participate, saying "I'm not going to waste my time on a virtual debate."<sup>209</sup>

Also as reported above, on October 8 Mr. Trump gave Fox News his first extended interview since having fallen ill. In it, he blamed China for inflicting the "curse" of the coronavirus upon the U.S. He also blithely claimed that "99.9%" of Covid-19 victims recover (although by then there were more than 211,000 dead in the U.S.; many who had survived had experienced agonizing suffering; and many survivors were still suffering long term debilities); that recovered Covid-19 patients were thereafter immune to the disease (not scientifically established); that his own medications had amounted to a "cure" (untrue); that he could have easily recovered from the infection without any medical treatment (delusional); that he was not currently contagious (still delusional); and that he would now quickly distribute one of his drugs, the experimental Regeneron, to everyone for free (but it was unproven, in short supply, and would require FDA approval). He also claimed that he may have been infected by Gold Star families with whom he had recently met, who he said had physically approached him in worshipful adoration, and whom, out of compassion, he had refused to turn away.<sup>210</sup>

Also on October 8, Mr. Trump's White House physician released a brief memorandum stating (dubiously, given the utter lack of transparency) that Mr. Trump had completed his therapy for Covid-19 and could resume his campaign on October 10.<sup>211</sup> But because reporters had not seen Mr. Trump in days, they could not judge for themselves how fit for action he might be. A CNN reporter compared the black-out on the health of America's leader to what happens in "Russia or North Korea," and offered that "we're on the dark side of the moon."<sup>212</sup>

As of October 8, the White House outbreak had infected at least 20 victims. The Times detailed how lax preventive measures had fueled the spread among top officials, with damning photographs that identified carriers mingling with others without protection.<sup>213</sup> Recent reports had characterized the White House staff as hollowed-out and fearful.<sup>214</sup>

As reported in the first section of this Addendum, on October 10 Mr. Trump made his first post-hospital campaign appearance – orange, and reading from a script from a balcony at the White House. The event again violated the longstanding tradition of a president not blatantly campaigning from the White House. (Mr. Trump had accepted his nomination from the White House in August.) It also violated CDC guidelines regarding the coronavirus, as had the September 26 super-spreader event in the Rose Garden at which Amy Coney Barrett's Supreme Court nomination had been celebrated and many public figures appear to have become infected. Now addressing several hundred cheering and flag-waving supporters who were closely packed, mostly young and often mask-less, Mr. Trump claimed that the pandemic was "disappearing," even as cases and deaths were rising. He also blamed the "China virus" for the country's affliction, warned that Democrats were "communists," and pledged that law enforcement officers would "swamp" his enemies at the upcoming "rigged" election. Hours later, the White House released a memo from Mr. Trump's doctor saying that he was no longer contagious, but not otherwise detailing his condition or his history of transmissibility.<sup>215</sup>

On October 11, Mr. Trump reiterated to Fox News that he was no longer contagious, but he again provided no details. He added that he had a “protective glow” and was “immune.”<sup>216</sup> In fact he offered no evidence that he was immune; and scientists were not yet certain whether Covid-19 survivors in general achieved immunity, or if so, to what extent and for how long.<sup>217</sup>

On October 12, in Sanford, Florida, Mr. Trump held his first full-blown campaign rally since falling ill. He said, dubiously, “Now they say I’m immune . . . I feel so powerful.”<sup>218</sup> The next day, at a rally in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, he said the same thing.<sup>219</sup>

On October 5, The Times reported that the White House was blocking strict new federal guidelines for the emergency release of a coronavirus vaccine that would likely result in no vaccine being released before Election Day.<sup>220</sup> On October 6 – possibly due to the negative publicity – the block was lifted.<sup>221</sup>

On October 6, media reported that nine of the country’s highest-ranking generals, including the entire Joint Chiefs of Staff, were in quarantine due to their exposure to a Coast Guard admiral who had attended the Amy Coney Barrett ceremony at the Rose Garden on September 26.<sup>222</sup> Some observers characterized the development as a national security crisis.<sup>223</sup>

Also on October 6, Vice President Mike Pence challenged a new requirement by the Commission on Presidential Debates that he and his opponent Kamala Harris be surrounded by plexiglass barriers during their upcoming October 7 face-off. He said that Harris was welcome to her plexiglass, but that he would forego it. The commission’s requirement had been imposed after Mr. Trump – diagnosed with Covid-19 on October 2 – was seen as having risked transmitting the virus during the course of his September 29 debate with Joe Biden, including to Biden himself.<sup>224</sup> Presumably Pence feared that the plexiglass would highlight for the national debate audience the raging pandemic at a time when the Trump administration was still selfishly, recklessly and cynically trying to minimize it. In any event, within hours Pence reversed, and he agreed to the barriers.<sup>225</sup> (Possibly he had come to recognize how selfish, reckless and cynical he would have appeared if Harris had plexiglass but he didn’t.)

On October 7, the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine issued the first political endorsement in its 208-year history. Citing Mr. Trump’s defiance of science and public health and the many Covid-19 deaths caused by what it termed his “incompetence,” its editorial board unanimously called for American voters to remove him from office. The editorial board of the 175-year-old Scientific American magazine had done likewise in September.<sup>226</sup>

On October 9, media reported that the White House had blocked a CDC order requiring the wearing of masks on airplanes, buses, subways and trains, and in airports, stations and depots.<sup>227</sup> The following day, The Times reported on the many other instances during the pandemic in which the Trump administration had successfully caused the CDC to act politically rather than scientifically (many of those instances are covered in this Chronology): clearing Pence’s recent debate appearance, revising guidelines on school reopenings, allowing cruise ships to sail, editing weekly mortality reports, editing testing guidelines, and muzzling CDC scientists from speaking publicly. Seen at risk were not only the nation's health but the world's health, the reputation of the CDC, and the willingness of scientists to work there.<sup>228</sup>

As reported above in the first section of this Addendum, on October 10 the Trump campaign released a television advertisement that included a video clip of Dr. Anthony Fauci seeming to praise Mr. Trump's handling of the pandemic. The first irony lay in Mr. Trump's having totally sidelined Fauci from his coronavirus task force in recent months, because of their strong disagreements on science and policy. Worse, in the original video clip, Fauci had been praising everyone on the task force except Mr. Trump; the clip was taken out of context, and was grossly deceptive.<sup>229</sup> Fauci publicly objected, accused the Trump campaign of "harassing" him, called for the campaign to take down the ad, and cautioned it to keep him out of future ads.<sup>230</sup> On October 13, Mr. Trump ridiculed Fauci's judgment by way of Twitter, thereby further betraying the implication within the advertisement that the two men were aligned.<sup>231</sup>

On October 12, the Senate Judiciary Committee began its rushed, pre-election public hearings on Mr. Trump's nomination of Amy Coney Barrett to the Supreme Court. Two of the committee's Republican members who were leading the charge – Lindsay Graham and Chuck Grassley – had refused to be tested for Covid-19. A third, Mike Lee, was still recovering from the disease, and he declined to wear a mask during the proceedings.<sup>232</sup>

At a campaign rally in Greenville, North Carolina on October 15, Mr. Trump ridiculed Dr. Fauci for having changed his views about face masks in the early months of the pandemic. He continued: "But he's a nice guy so I keep him around, right? We'll keep him around. He's a Democrat. Everybody knows that. He's [New York Governor Andrew] Cuomo's friend. Cuomo did the worst job of any governor in the United States [in handling the pandemic]."<sup>233</sup> In a video recording of the event, the crowd could be heard jeering Fauci.<sup>234</sup> In truth, Fauci was known to be scrupulously apolitical, and not registered with any political party.<sup>235</sup>

During a televised, pre-election town hall on October 15, as Covid-19 cases were rising in much of the country, Mr. Trump said of the pandemic, "We're coming around the corner." He also said, without evidence, "Vaccines are coming soon." He professed doubt about the effectiveness of face masks against the disease. He also repeatedly dodged questions about when he had been tested for the disease, and whether he had been tested prior to his September 29 debate with Joe Biden, as had been required.<sup>236</sup>

On October 16, more than 1,000 current and former CDC epidemic intelligence officers signed an open letter decrying the "ominous politicization" of the agency throughout the coronavirus pandemic.<sup>237</sup>

CITIZENS FOR A STRONG DEMOCRACY

SPECIFIC CONCERNS

Addendum 34 – March 13, 2021

This addendum appends CSD's Specific Concerns originally dated March 20, 2017, and a series of numbered Addenda to that document that had followed, by adding pertinent events and news reporting that have arisen or have been identified since the date of the last Addendum. The numbers in the right-hand column refer to the enumerated categories of anti-democratic behavior listed in CSD's Statement of Principles dated March 20, 2017.

THIS IS THE FINAL ADDENDUM TO THE CHRONOLOGY

The current Addendum appears in three parts. The first part consists of CSD's regular Chronology, ending with President Biden's inauguration on January 20, 2021. The second part, beginning on p. 40, chronicles events surrounding Mr. Trump's efforts to suppress voting in and to discredit the results of the November 2020 election, including his incitement to insurrection on January 6, and his impeachment for that and related actions. The third part, beginning on p. 86, chronicles events surrounding Mr. Trump's response to the coronavirus pandemic.

Date	Episode	Category
10-16-20 +	Lock 'em all up. At a campaign rally in Macon, Georgia on October 16, Mr. Trump cited a recent article in the New York Post that purported to reveal new details of what he had long claimed were corrupt activities in Ukraine on the part of his electoral opponent Joe Biden and Biden's son Hunter. Those details were unsubstantiated and suspect, and the Republican-controlled Senate had recently exonerated both Bidens of any illegal activity. [ Continued below. ]	5, 9, 11

10-16-20 +	[Continued.] Mr. Trump nevertheless incited the crowd, by calling, “Lock up the Bidens. Lock up Hillary,” and the crowd in turn chanted “Lock him up!” about Biden. “The Biden family is a criminal enterprise,” Mr. Trump said. It was the first time that he had called for Biden to be imprisoned.<sup>1</sup> The next evening, at a rally in Muskegon, Michigan, Mr. Trump berated Michigan’s Democratic governor Gretchen Whitmer for her partisanship and accused her of plotting election fraud. By way of Twitter, he had previously called for Michiganders to ‘LIBERATE MICHIGAN!’ from her, because of the coronavirus restrictions that she had placed on the Michigan economy, and he now repeated that theme at the rally. In reference to Whitmer, the crowd responded by chanting, “Lock her up!”, and Mr. Trump acquiesced. That he had presided over the Michigan episode was particularly shocking in that the FBI had recently foiled a right-wing plot to kidnap and murder Whitmer, and Mr. Trump had never condemned that plot.<sup>2</sup> (A chilling training video that had been produced by the conspirators and then recently introduced in criminal court proceedings against them can be accessed from the link at this end note.<sup>3</sup>) Whitmer and Biden thus joined Hillary Clinton and President Obama in the pantheon of Mr. Trump’s adversaries whom he had called to be imprisoned. As the chants in Michigan continued, he said, “Lock ‘em all up.”<sup>4</sup> At a rally in Lansing, Michigan on October 27, Mr. Trump – in a single breath – took credit, through his Justice Department, for having rescued Whitmer from a lynching, then questioned whether she had truly been at risk, then upbraided her for her ingratitude. Again the crowd chanted, “Lock her up!”<sup>5</sup> On October 28, The Washington Post reported that not only Whitmer but many others – epidemiologist Dr. Anthony Fauci, Congressman and former impeachment manager Adam Schiff, CBS interviewer Lesley Stahl, the four freshman Democratic congresswomen of color known as “The Squad,” and the whistle-blower who had first called out Mr. Trump’s extortionate phone call with Ukraine’s president – had experienced serious threats to their lives following Mr. Trump’s condemnations of them. The Post wrote: [Continued below.]	5, 9, 11
-------------------	--	-----------------

10-16-20 +	[Continued.] “Over the past year, public servants across the country have faced similar ordeals. The targets encompass nearly every category of government service: mayors, governors and members of Congress, as well as officials Trump has turned against within his own administration. “The dynamic appears to be without precedent: government agencies taking extraordinary measures to protect their people from strains of seething hostility stoked by a sitting president. ... “[M]ore than any predecessor, Trump has fomented mob-like anger at perceived adversaries throughout his presidency. Though his exhortations generally stop short of explicitly promoting violence, his words have been echoed in hundreds of menacing online messages. And he has consistently resisted entreaties to disavow or discourage violence.”<sup>6</sup> CSD continues to observe that despite Mr. Trump’s incessant characterization of himself as the “law and order” president, his fealty to the law is highly selective: urging prosecution of and punishment for his personal enemies, but carte blanche law-breaking for his friends and supporters.	5, 9, 11
10-17-20 +	MY judges crush THEIR voting rights. The New York Times reported on October 17 that over 350 court cases concerning voting rights – a massive amount – had arisen in 2020, relating primarily to expanded mail-in voting in the face of the coronavirus pandemic. In at least eight major cases, Republican federal appellate judges – many of them appointed by Mr. Trump – had overturned district court rulings that had favored voting rights. A study had found that Mr. Trump’s appointees had ruled against voting rights in 85% of the cases that they had heard. In effect, Mr. Trump’s appointees thus were both debilitating democracy and helping his re-election campaign. Major cases on the subject of mail-in voting for the imminent election remained pending.<sup>7</sup> [Continued below.]	2, 17 (4, 9)

10-17-20 +	[Continued.] On October 31, The Washington Post reported similarly. For example: “In a Texas case, three judges nominated by Trump unanimously upheld the Republican governor’s limit of one ballot drop-off location per county that state officials say is necessary to prevent voter fraud. In Georgia, a pair of Trump nominees reinstated an Election Day deadline for mail-in ballots to be counted at the urging of GOP officials. In a Wisconsin case that reached the Supreme Court this week, a Trump nominee was part of the two-judge majority at the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit that rejected an extension of the deadline for receiving mail ballots in the battleground state. And a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit ruled Thursday night that a Republican lawmaker and GOP activist could challenge Minnesota’s plan to count ballots that arrive after Election Day.”<sup>8</sup>	2, 17 (4, 9)
10-19-20	Bribe me. At a campaign rally in Prescott, Arizona, Mr. Trump boasted that, if he wished, he could extract millions of dollars in campaign contributions from any major oil or Wall Street company in exchange for a promise of political favors. That would be illegal. It compared to the “quid pro quo” that he had offered the president of Ukraine when attempting to extort from him political dirt on Joe Biden – for which action the House had impeached him.<sup>9</sup>	9, 10
10-19-20	The Havana Syndrome – in Moscow and Guangzhou. The New York Times reported that U.S. diplomatic and intelligence officials in Moscow and Guangzhou in recent years had experienced sudden, mysterious, long-lasting, debilitating neurological injuries similar to those that the U.S. had considered to be purposeful attacks when they had arisen in Havana in 2016 and 2017. The U.S. had retaliated against Cuba diplomatically. But, according to The Times, the State Department had been covering up the events in Russia and China for fear of alienating those countries.	17 (12)

10-19-20 +	The new Russia trick. On October 19, more than 50 former senior intelligence officials signed an open letter opining that the unverified Hunter Biden emails and other laptop content recently furnished to The New York Post by Mr. Trump’s lawyer Rudy Giuliani and heralded by the tabloid as evidencing Joe Biden’s corruption likely amounted to Russian disinformation that was intended to help Mr. Trump win re-election. (See CSD’s entry of October 13 + for the details of The New York Post’s story.) Indeed, the FBI was reportedly investigating that possibility.<sup>10</sup> Mr. Trump nevertheless said at a campaign rally in Prescott, Arizona that Joe Biden belonged in jail for that activity, and that he was unhappy with his attorney general William Barr for not having procured that outcome. During a Fox News interview on October 20, Mr. Trump called upon Barr to immediately launch an investigation – that is, prior to the November 3 election.<sup>11</sup> (Why Mr. Trump wouldn’t simply tell Barr all of that in private conversation was unknowable. Possibly he sought to bring public opinion to bear on Barr’s performance of his law enforcement duties. But he had indeed often before communicated with his ranking officials through public statements – whether directing them on major matters of policy or firing them.) Even some conservative news media that were gunning for Joe Biden, nevertheless, had stayed away from Hunter’s laptop – apparently, because there was nothing there.<sup>12</sup> The Wall Street Journal expressly found Joe Biden to have been faultless.<sup>13</sup>	9, 17 (7, 9, 12)
10-20-20	Banking on China. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had spent a decade trying to do business in China and now continued to maintain a bank account there – all of which had been revealed in his recently uncovered tax returns, and none of which he had reported in his public financial disclosures. Mr. Trump had meanwhile been disparaging his electoral opponent Joe Biden as being “soft” on China and corrupted by his son Hunter’s business dealings in that country.<sup>14</sup>	12, 15

10-20-20 +	Hatching until the end. On October 20, The Daily Beast reported that several of Mr. Trump’s cabinet secretaries had been traveling to states to support Republican candidates there in the run-ups to their respective elections – at taxpayer expense, and in likely violation of the Hatch Act: Veterans Affairs Secretary Robert Wilkie, Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue, Interior Secretary David Bernhardt, and Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette.<sup>15</sup> On October 27, the same publication reported that Mr. Trump’s press secretary Kayleigh McEnany had joined his campaign staff. That was a blatant Hatch Act violation.<sup>16</sup> On October 29, a Democratic senator released a report stating that 14 Trump administration officials had been found to have violated the statute a total of 54 times, and that at least 22 administration officials were then under investigation for almost 100 more violations. The director of a prominent watchdog organization said that although occasional Hatch Act violations had preceded Mr. Trump’s presidency, “the wholesale co-opting of the federal government to keep a president in power ... is something that we have never even approached before.”<sup>17</sup> The New York Times reported on November 2 that Mr. Trump’s secretary of state, his national security advisor and DHS officials had effectively been making campaign presentations for him in swing states. The Times called it part of “a sustained effort by the president, members of his cabinet and top aides to use the powers of incumbency in ways that go far beyond [Mr. Trump’s] predecessors, harnessing the levers of government power and the authority of Mr. Trump’s office to help him stay there.” The Times continued, “Other presidents have embraced the perks of incumbency to their advantage. But no other modern president of either party has so brazenly directed government action toward his own benefit by so many agencies and departments” – citing dozens of examples that CSD has reported earlier in this Chronology.<sup>18</sup> On November 3, Election Day, the Trump campaign set up a command center in the White House, plainly in violation of the Hatch Act on the part of any White House staffers who participated. Within days after that, the Office of Special Counsel launched an investigation.<sup>19</sup>[Continued below.]	17 (9)
-------------------	---	---------------

10-20-20 +	[Continued.] On December 7, the Office of Special Counsel reported that it had found Peter Navarro, Mr. Trump’s top economic advisor and loyalist, to have repeatedly violated the Hatch Act during the recent election campaign by publicly disparaging Joe Biden. <sup>20</sup>	17 (9)
10-21-20	“Nyet” to civil service. Mr. Trump signed an executive order re-classifying many merit-based civil service positions as appointive positions. He thus granted himself the right to replace tens or hundreds of thousands of non-partisan civil servants with his hand-picked political commissars, or to threaten them with firing if they failed to toe his political line. <sup>21</sup>	9
10-21-20. 10-22-20	More purges threatened. On October 21, The Washington Post reported that Mr. Trump was actively considering firing Attorney General William Barr and FBI Director Christopher Wray for not having announced an investigation or indictment of Mr. Trump’s electoral opponent Joe Biden prior to the November 3 election. <sup>22</sup>  On October 22, Politico reported that Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar was openly plotting to oust FDA chief Stephen Hahn for insisting on stringent standards for the approval of any coronavirus vaccine. <sup>23</sup>	8, 9
10-22-20	The second debate. At the second and final presidential debate before the election, Mr. Trump partly adhered to his advisors’ advice to be somewhat less offensive toward his opponent Joe Biden and the moderator than at the first. He nevertheless built his presentation around falsehoods, demagoguery, self-pity and rage-filled attempts at character assassination. Examples included: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Fulminating baselessly, incoherently and at great length that Biden, two of his brothers and his son Hunter had received millions of dollars in corrupt payments from foreign sources, and that Biden had grown wealthy from such corruption.</li> <li>• Improbably excusing his own non-payment of federal income taxes, while complaining that the IRS had been “unfair” to him.</li> <li>• Warning that a stock market crash and an unprecedented depression would follow a Biden victory. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	6, 7, 9, 12

10-22-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Claiming falsely and illogically that Biden planned to outlaw private health insurance and completely socialize health care while destroying Social Security and Medicare.</li> <li>• Asserting (as he had often done recently) that Biden had abandoned Scranton, Pennsylvania – that is, when at age ten he and his family had moved to Delaware.</li> <li>• Blaming Democrats for releasing “murderers” and “rapists” into the population from immigration detention; falsely claiming that few released detainees reappeared in immigration court for their asylum hearings; loudly and falsely insinuating that his Democratic predecessors were the ones who had placed migrant children in cages, while falsely arguing that he had stopped routine family separations rather than initiating them; and proclaiming that the more than 500 migrant children whom he had separated from their parents and who remained separated to that day were being treated well by their captors.</li> <li>• Boasting that he had done more for Black Americans than any other president – with the possible exception of Abraham Lincoln – and that he was “the least racist person in this room.” (The moderator was a Black woman.)</li> <li>• Crowing that he had a better relationship with North Korean dictator and butcher Kim Jong Un than Biden and President Obama had had, while falsely claiming to have averted a nuclear war with North Korea that he himself had seemingly almost started.</li> <li>• Preposterously maintaining (as he had often done before) that he had saved two million American lives from the coronavirus; falsely denying that he had suggested that the disease be treated with injections of bleach; falsely accusing House Speaker Nancy Pelosi of a slow response to the outbreak; falsely denying that he was at odds with the country’s chief epidemiologist Dr. Anthony Fauci, while calling out Fauci for Fauci’s early errors in addressing the disease (since corrected by Fauci himself); and falsely assuring that the pandemic was in retreat (even as cases, hospitalizations and deaths continued to surge). [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	6, 7, 9, 12
-----------------	---	--------------------

10-22-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Falsely asserting that “there’s been nobody tougher than me on Russia.”</li> <li>• Falsely claiming that, through tariffs that he had imposed, China (rather than American consumers and taxpayers) was subsidizing American farmers.</li> <li>• Falsely claiming that he had achieved energy independence for the U.S.</li> <li>• Claiming that special counsel Robert Mueller had gone through his taxes (radically false: Mr. Trump had hidden them) and had found no wrongdoing in connection with Russian interference in the 2016 election (radically false: Mueller had indicted several of Mr. Trump’s campaign associates and numerous Russians, and he had laid out an extensive case that Mr. Trump himself had unlawfully obstructed the investigation).</li> <li>• Falsely claiming that Biden backed progressive Democrats’ expensive “Green New Deal” proposal.</li> <li>• Materially over-stating Biden’s opposition to fracking (Biden had only proposed to ban fracking on federal lands).</li> <li>• Falsely boasting about his fundraising prowess in comparison to Biden’s (Biden’s campaign had far out-distanced him).<sup>24</sup></li> </ul>	6, 7, 9, 12
10-22-20	The Fact Checker. The Washington Post’s Fact Checker reported that Mr. Trump had now made over 22,000 false or misleading claims while in office, at a recent pace of more than 50 per day. The reporters confessed that they were no longer able to keep up with the tally.<sup>25</sup>	7
10-23-20	In Florida. Campaigning in The Villages, Florida – a city-sized and largely Republican retirement community – Mr. Trump said of vice-presidential candidate Kamala Harris, "We're not going to have a socialist president, especially a female socialist president, we're not gonna' have it, we're not gonna' put up with it." He also criticized (still) his predecessor in office, emphasizing the middle name of “Barack Hussein Obama.” Some photographs of the seniors in attendance showed them largely mask-less and crowded together, notwithstanding their susceptibility to the coronavirus.<sup>26</sup>	6, 9

10-25-20 +	Brawls. On October 25, a physical brawl between pro- and anti-Trump partisans erupted in Times Square, New York. Similar pre-election brawls had been reported at various spots around the country.<sup>27</sup> On October 31, The Washington Post reported on the vandalism of political signage occurring nationwide, and the harassment of voters merely on account of their party affiliations, as well as their fears for their physical safety.<sup>28</sup> One CSD member, living in an otherwise serene Philadelphia suburb, had his election lawn signs stolen repeatedly during that period. Although partisans of both parties had acted badly, the preponderance of the attacks appeared to have come from Trump zealots. In any event, the level of intolerance and intimidation around the election process seemed unprecedented for those CSD members whose election experiences had spanned the seven decades since World War II. We flatly attribute that development to Mr. Trump’s provocative behavior during his presidency. On the positive side, and far more pervasively, a record number of Americans appeared to be voting ahead of, or to be planning to vote at, the November 3 presidential election. Nevertheless, far from urging a peaceful contest on Election Day, at a rally in Bucks County, Pennsylvania on October 31 Mr. Trump predicted “bedlam”<sup>29</sup> – just as pro-Kremlin news organizations in Russia were predicting for the U.S.<sup>30</sup> News reports at the turn of the month indicated widespread fears – on the part of voters, state governments and urban police departments – of intimidation and violence on and after Election Day.<sup>31</sup>	5
10-26-20	In Pennsylvania (once more). At a rally in Allentown, Pennsylvania, Mr. Trump threatened to withhold federal assistance to that state because (he claimed) its Democratic governor had impeded the scheduling of rallies there on grounds of coronavirus restrictions.<sup>32</sup> What was wrong with this picture? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Mr. Trump held three rallies in Pennsylvania that day – in Allentown, Lititz and Martinsburg – without apparent impediment. [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	8, 9, 11

10-26-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The governor’s office said that it had impeded nothing – it had only advised the campaign of the state’s social distancing restrictions earlier in the year, and had had no contact with the campaign since then.<sup>33</sup></li> <li>• Mr. Trump’s threat was illegal, punitive and extortionate – to capriciously withhold taxpayers’ funds from states governed by his political adversaries, as he had been threatening to do with respect to “anarchist jurisdictions” generally and California with respect to its wildfire emergency. He had long appeared to view taxpayers’ money as his own money, and the federal government as an instrument for rewarding his friends and punishing his enemies – an outlook that he had regularly used to terrorize governors, federal officials and members of Congress.<sup>34</sup></li> <li>• The threat was also of a kind with his withholding of military assistance from Ukraine unless that country’s president were to perform political favors for him – an act for which Mr. Trump had been impeached.</li> <li>• CSD was unclear how threatening Pennsylvanians to withhold federal funding from their state would appeal to them politically; but in the seething, reasonless, vengeance-driven world of Mr. Trump and his supporters, apparently there was a way.</li> </ul> At all three rallies, Mr. Trump claimed that the coronavirus pandemic was ending – even as recorded cases, hospitalizations and deaths continued to surge nationally.<sup>35</sup>	8, 9, 11
10-26-20	VOA under siege. Michael Pack – the head of the U.S. Agency for Global Media and its subsidiary broadcasters including Voice of America – announced that he was “rescinding” the organization’s firewall between Mr. Trump’s hyper-partisan commissars such as himself and the broadcasters’ newsrooms. That is, as he continued to cause the agency’s news content to propagandize to Mr. Trump’s personal benefit, he more generally continued to lead the agency in the very direction of authoritarianism that its mandate called for it to oppose in nations overseas. CSD had previously reported on Pack’s swift, step-by-step politicization of the agency since his appointment in June. Huffington Post now updated and extensively recapped the reporting on Pack’s authoritarian efforts.<sup>36</sup>	17 (1, 9)

10-26-20	Mask-less and fact-less. ABC News reported that at rallies in New Hampshire and North Carolina over the two previous days, Mr. Trump had repeated many of his usual falsehoods, such as: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• That the U.S. was “rounding the turn” in defeating the coronavirus pandemic, and that “our numbers are incredible.” (Across the country, the disease continued to surge, and some ICUs were overflowing.)</li> <li>• “Mexico is paying for the [border] wall.” (The claim was baseless.)</li> <li>• “We passed VA Choice,” the statute that enables veterans to obtain private medical care at government expense. (President Obama had passed the statute.)</li> <li>• Russians paid Joe Biden $3.5 million. (Not even remotely true. A Russian woman invested that sum in an enterprise that had some attenuated connection to Biden’s son Hunter.)</li> <li>• Mr. Trump banned travel from China in the early days of the pandemic. (He restricted travel, but did not ban it. And during that period he allowed travel from Europe, which caused the great East Coast infection.)</li> <li>• Nevada “wanted to” not require verification of voter signatures on mailed-in ballots. (Totally false.)</li> <li>• “The biggest risk we have [in the upcoming election] are the fake ballots.” (There was no indication that either fake ballots or any other massive voter fraud was afoot.)</li> <li>• Mr. Trump had forced Japan to open five new auto factories in Michigan. (There were no new factories announced or planned.)</li> <li>• “Obama gave [Iran] $150 billion.” The money belonged to Iran.</li> <li>• “You got the biggest tax cut in the history of our country. I got it for you.” (False; it was the 12th biggest cut, as a portion of the total economy.)<sup>37</sup></li> </ul> On the same day, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had made 131 false or inaccurate statements within 90 minutes at a recent rally in Wisconsin.<sup>38</sup>	7, 8, 9

10-26-20 +	But all the dictators love me! Mr. Trump boasted at a rally that Chinese President Xi Jin-ping, Russian President Vladimir Putin and North Korean President Kim Jong-un – all ruthless, authoritarian adversaries of the U.S. – would prefer to deal with him than with his electoral opponent Joe Biden. Observers found it remarkable that an American president would be proud of such a circumstance. Speaking in Orlando the following day, President Obama responded appositely: "Just yesterday, he said that Putin of Russia, Xi of China, and Kim Jong Un of North Korea want him to win. We know! We know because you've been giving them whatever they want for the last four years! Of course they want you to win! That's not a good thing. You shouldn't brag about the fact that some of our greatest adversaries think they'd be better off with you in office. Of course they do."<sup>39</sup> On October 28, The Washington Post described the electoral endorsements that Mr. Trump had received from the authoritarian leaders of Hungary, Brazil and the Philippines, most of whom Mr. Trump had spoken about warmly.<sup>40</sup>	12
10-26-20 +	Philadelphia shooting. Philadelphia police shot and killed Walter Wallace, a mentally ill Black man who was wielding a knife outside his family's home, after his mother had called 911 for an emergency psychological intervention. Peaceful protests, rioting and an investigation by the city ensued. Joe Biden and Democrats denounced both the killing and the rioting. The next day, at a rally in Wisconsin, Mr. Trump said, "Last night Philadelphia was torn up by Biden-supporting radicals. 30 police officers, Philadelphia police officers they were injured, some badly. Biden stands with the rioters and I stand with the heroes of law enforcement." He repeated those charges the next day.<sup>41</sup>	6, 7, 9
10-27-20	Prosecutors speak out. Twenty former U.S. attorneys – all of them Republicans – issued an open letter in which they charged that Mr. Trump was "a threat to the rule of law in our country" and should be replaced. They were referring to his having politicized the Justice Department and having commandeered it to serve his personal ends. Defiant and utterly deaf to the issue, the Trump campaign responded that it was Mr. Trump, not his electoral adversary Joe Biden, who was enjoying the support of police officers and their unions for his support of the rule of law.<sup>42</sup>	9

10-27-20	Pay me, and pay me more. The Washington Post’s investigators reported that Mr. Trump had traveled to his hotels and resorts more than 280 times since taking office. In connection with that travel and with lavish entertainment events at his properties, the government had paid Mr. Trump’s company at least $2.5 million, and his campaign and fundraising committee had paid an additional $5.6 million out of their respective donors’ contributions. The Post arrived at those numbers through its own efforts; Mr. Trump and his company had not been forthcoming about them, and much of the pertinent data remained hidden. <sup>43</sup>	15
10-27-20	No room for science at NOAA. Media reported that Mr. Trump’s political commissar at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration – one of the government’s leading scientific agencies, and one tasked with monitoring climate change – had fired its chief scientists for directing staff to follow science rather than politics. (NOAA was the agency that had run afoul of Mr. Trump for contradicting his false statements about the path of Hurricane Dorian in 2019.) <sup>44</sup>	8, 9
10-27-20 +	The martial arts. At a rally in Bullhead City, Arizona on October 27, Mr. Trump quoted the president of the Ultimate Fighting Championship to the effect that if Mr. Trump’s electoral opponent Joe Biden were in a fight, “one gentle touch to the face and he’s down.” <sup>45</sup> (Mr. Trump enjoyed the support of many of the UFC’s mixed martial arts fighters, who felt a fierce kinship with the candidate, based on his unalloyed belligerence. <sup>46</sup> )  At a rally in Opa-locka, Florida on November 1, Mr. Trump again claimed that Biden was physically frail, and that he could easily whip him. The crowd chanted “ Kick his ass! ” <sup>47</sup>	5, 11
10-28-20	Child trafficking. Stephen Miller – Mr. Trump’s speech writer and anti-immigration policy whisperer – told reporters that if Joe Biden were elected president, Biden “would incentivize child smuggling and child trafficking on an epic global scale.” The baseless statement paralleled and likely bolstered the QAnon conspiracy theory that Democrats are child sex traffickers. Miller also preposterously said that the Trump administration had kept immigrant families together. <sup>48</sup>	17 (7, 9)

10-29-20	Help for Turkey. The New York Times, in new reporting, detailed the extraordinary and illegal steps that Mr. Trump and his attorney general William Barr had taken in 2019, at the urging of Turkey’s authoritarian president Recep Erdogan, to limit the prosecution of Halkbank, a state-owned Turkish Bank suspected of violating U.S. sanctions law by funneling billions of dollars of gold and cash to Iran. Erdogan had close connections with the bank; Mr. Trump coveted a friendship with Erdogan; and thus Mr. Trump appeared to have opted to serve Erdogan rather than honor either U.S. law or his own vocally hardline policies against Iran.<sup>49</sup>	12
10-30-20	Viral on social media. The New York Times tracked how three exemplary claims about (non-existent) Democratic and left-wing election interference, all consistent with Mr. Trump’s outlook, had spread on social media: ballot harvesting, ballot destruction and plans for Election Day violence.<sup>50</sup>	17 (7)
10-30-20 +	Caravans. On October 30, a convoy of Trump supporters, many of them armed, ambushed and blocked the passage of a Joe Biden campaign bus traveling from San Antonio to Austin, Texas, causing the campaign event to be canceled.<sup>51</sup> At a rally in Pennsylvania the next day, Mr. Trump cheered the convoy and multiplied its actual size by a large factor (“hundreds” of pro-Trump vehicles, he said).<sup>52</sup> The FBI nevertheless began investigating the event, prompting Mr. Trump to condemn the FBI for that at his rallies over the next several days.<sup>53</sup> On November 1, pro-Trump caravans blocked several major arteries around New York City.<sup>54</sup> Another pro-Trump caravan and associated violence were reported in Richmond, Virginia that day.<sup>55</sup>	17 (3, 5)
11-3-20	The enemy: America. As polls opened for voting in an election destined to shape the country’s future, Mr. Trump told Fox News that the U.S. itself was more “difficult to deal with” than America’s international adversaries.<sup>56</sup>	11

11-4-20	QAnon to Congress. Two (of many) QAnon adherents running for Congress prevailed in their election campaigns: Marjorie Taylor Greene of Georgia and Lauren Boebert of Colorado. QAnon had become notorious for demonizing Democrats, promoting anti-Semitism, and purveying wide-ranging, preposterous conspiracy theories.	17 (6, 7, 9)
11-4-20	Out of the Paris Agreement. As the results of the November 3 reelection were still pending, the U.S. formally exited the Paris climate accord, at Mr. Trump’s wish, and as he had earlier announced.<sup>57</sup>	8, 13
11-7-20, 11-13-20	Biden wins. On November 7, all major television networks determined that Joe Biden had defeated Mr. Trump in the November 3 presidential election. Mr. Trump promptly and falsely claimed that the vote count was fraudulent, and that he would litigate up to the Supreme Court. Details of that claim, and of its progress for months afterward, appear in the second section of this Addendum, “The November 2020 Election: Voter Suppression, False Claims of Election Fraud, Incitement to Insurrection,” beginning on p. 40. On November 13, all major networks projected that president-elect Biden had defeated Mr. Trump by 306 electoral votes to Mr. Trump’s 232 – the exact figures by which Mr. Trump had defeated Hillary Clinton in 2016, and which he had many times touted as a “landslide.”	4
11-9-20	Whither the security records? On November 9, Politico reported that national security secrets from the Trump presidency were at risk of disappearing upon the departure of his administration – contrary to law, and to the grave peril of the country. For example, Mr. Trump was known to routinely shred his own documents; whether records existed of his calls with foreign adversaries was unknown; and his son-in-law and senior advisor Jared Kushner was known to use a private, encrypted email service through which he could permanently destroy his messages.<sup>58</sup> On December 5, The Washington Post reported that four historical and watchdog organizations, alarmed, had sued Mr. Trump to enjoin the destruction of the records.<sup>59</sup>	9

11-9-20 +	Purging. Mr. Trump fired his defense secretary, Mark Esper, by way of a tweet. Esper's departure had been rumored to have been in the making for some time – he had been known to have already prepared his resignation letter – but Mr. Trump chose to surprise and humiliate him instead. The Pentagon and the Joint Chiefs of Staff likewise had not been forewarned of Esper's dismissal. Mr. Trump named Christopher Miller as acting defense secretary – theretofore a mid-level official, the fourth person to lead the Pentagon during Mr. Trump's four-year tenure, and a man largely unknown to many senior Pentagon officials. Firing by Twitter seemed to have become Mr. Trump's preferred method of execution. It embodied both his sadism and his cowardice.<sup>60</sup> (Mr. Trump had fired his first secretary of state Rex Tillerson, and possibly others, by tweet.<sup>61</sup>) Esper had irritated Mr. Trump by publicly expressing regret for having accompanied Mr. Trump on his photo op in Lafayette Square in the midst of a racial justice protest there; by defying Mr. Trump's threat to use active-duty troops to quell the nationwide protests; by approving the promotion of Lt. Colonel Alex Vindman, who had testified against Mr. Trump during the latter's impeachment proceedings; by barring Confederate flags on military bases; and by pushing back against Mr. Trump's wishes to precipitously withdraw all U.S. troops from Afghanistan. Critics blasted Esper's dismissal as spiteful on the part of Mr. Trump, and as potentially destabilizing during the transition to a Biden administration. Some feared that Mr. Trump could direct Miller to recklessly accelerate the draw-down of troops from Afghanistan and Iraq, initiate rash military operations in Iran, or even deploy active duty troops for domestic law enforcement operations – actions that virtually the entire top military command opposed.<sup>62</sup> On the following day, three more top Pentagon aides were purged and replaced, including two under-secretaries of defense (for policy and intelligence, respectively), such that the number 1, 3 and 4 positions were suddenly filled by Trump loyalists. The replacements included a controversial racist and conspiracy peddler, and an incendiary pro-Trump ex-congressional staffer. Observers considered some or all of the replacements to be unqualified, and the sudden loss of their predecessors' experience to be alarming.<sup>63</sup> [Continued below.]	8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 16
-----------	---	----------------------

11-9-20 +	[Continued.] That wholesale ransacking of top Pentagon officials was unprecedented,<sup>64</sup> and it had no durably functional purpose for the few remaining months of Mr. Trump’s presidency. But the mayhem, insult and discontinuity seemed significant. Observers foresaw in the events the very faint but conceivable possibility that Mr. Trump could seek to retain his office under orders given to the military by a Pentagon that he now more tightly controlled.<sup>65</sup> Other purges of persons whom Mr. Trump considered to be insufficiently loyal had immediately followed the election as well: Michael Kuperberg was removed as executive director of the U.S. Global Change Research Program, which produces the National Climate Assessment; and Neil Chaterjee was removed as head of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Both moves were seen as Mr. Trump taking a parting shot at climate science. A climate science skeptic was named to replace Kuperberg.<sup>66</sup> On November 12, two top officials at the Department of Homeland Security were also purged.<sup>67</sup> On November 16, Mr. Trump directed an accelerated draw-down of troops in Afghanistan and Iraq. Republican lawmakers objected. Miller praised the move, and assured its execution.<sup>68</sup> November 17, Mr. Trump fired Chris Krebs by way of Twitter. Krebs had been the director of the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency at DHS, and the government’s most senior cybersecurity official tasked with protecting the November election. Krebs was purged for disputing Mr. Trump’s baseless claims that President-elect Biden had stolen the election. The elimination of Krebs threatened American cyber-security.<sup>69</sup> See p. 48 of this Addendum, below, for further details.	8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 16
------------------	---	---------------------------------

11-12-20	The Golden Goose. In his preoccupation and fury about having lost the election, Mr. Trump was reported to have largely stopped performing the duties of president. Since the television networks had announced Joe Biden’s victory on November 7, Mr. Trump had remained silent about the accelerating coronavirus pandemic, the death of six American service members during a peacekeeping mission in Egypt, and a tropical storm and severe flooding in Florida. Instead, as reported by the media on November 12, he had been absorbed in seething, expostulating, purging his agencies, railing against his enemies, commanding his party to contest the election, and playing golf at one of his resorts. But – angered at Fox News for its having reported accurately on the election tally – he did find time to tweet this: “[Fox’s] daytime ratings have completely collapsed. Weekend daytime even WORSE. Very sad to watch this happen, but they forgot what made them successful, what got them there. They forgot the Golden Goose.”<sup>70</sup>	1, 7, 9, 11
11-21-20 +	Sabotaging Biden. The New York Times reported on November 21 that Mr. Trump, out of vengeance and without precedent, was going to extraordinary lengths to hobble the in-coming Biden administration with last-minute orders and appointments that could be difficult to un-do. The efforts went well beyond Mr. Trump denying the legitimacy of the Biden victory and refusing to engage with the Biden transition team (see pp. 38, 45, 46, 49, 51, 52, 56, 58, 89 and 90 of this Addendum, below, regarding the refusal to transition). The Times wrote: “[T]op officials are racing against the clock to withdraw troops from Afghanistan, secure oil drilling leases in Alaska, punish China, carry out executions and thwart any plans Mr. Biden might have to reestablish the Iran nuclear deal. ... “At a wide range of departments and agencies, Mr. Trump’s political appointees ... are filling vacancies on scientific panels, pushing to complete rules that weaken environmental standards, nominating judges and rushing their confirmations through the Senate, and trying to eliminate health care regulations that have been in place for years. [Continued below.]	10, 11, 13

11-21-20 +	[Continued.] “In the latest instance, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin declined to extend key emergency lending programs that the Federal Reserve had been using to help keep credit flowing to businesses, state and local governments and other parts of the financial system. He also moved to claw back much of the money that supports them, hindering Mr. Biden’s ability to use the central bank’s vast powers to cushion the economic fallout from the virus.”<sup>71</sup> Beginning around December 3, Mr. Trump was again reported to be engaging in a blizzard of controversial last-minute executive actions prior to leaving the White House – seemingly not only to leave his scent on as many bushes as possible but to spite and to hamstring the incoming Biden administration. Actions included the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Selling oil leases in pristine and once protected Arctic waters.<sup>72</sup></li> <li>• Selling mining and energy leases in the Southwest and the East.<sup>73</sup></li> <li>• Executing federal felons, after a 17-year hiatus.<sup>74</sup></li> <li>• Firing the Defense Business Board – a Pentagon advisory panel – and installing a rump board (including unqualified campaign loyalists Corey Lewandowski and David Bossie).<sup>75</sup></li> <li>• Replacing members of the Defense Policy Board – a separate Pentagon advisory panel – with Trump loyalists such as Newt Gingrich.<sup>76</sup></li> <li>• Ordering all U.S. troops out of Somalia.<sup>77</sup></li> <li>• Ending five cultural programs with and blocking certain cotton imports from China.<sup>78</sup></li> <li>• Making the standard citizenship test at least twice as hard for applicants to pass.<sup>79</sup></li> <li>• Allowing or encouraging Attorney General William Barr to appoint a special counsel to investigate the (allegedly anti-Trump) government investigators of the 2016 election.<sup>80</sup></li> <li>• Through a proposed rule, burdening the incoming Department of Health and Human Services with a massive and potentially paralyzing regulatory review project.<sup>81</sup></li> <li>• Finalizing a regulation that virtually eliminated the opportunity for political asylum in the U.S., contrary to international law.<sup>82</sup></li> <li>• Rolling back water-saving standards for showerheads and other devices.<sup>83</sup> [Continued below.]</li> </ul>	10, 11, 13

11-21-20 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Appointing a former Republican political operative – one who had served as the uber-partisan congressman Devin Nunes’s counsel on the House Intelligence Committee – as the National Security Agency’s top lawyer, and in a protected civil service position. 11-21-20 +	[Continued.] Most recent presidents likewise had finalized a spate of “midnight regulations” in the last months of their tenure.<sup>101</sup> But The Washington Post observed: “The whirlwind of [Trump administration] activities has bucked tradition of past presidents who have deferred on major policy actions during the lame-duck period, and in some cases, the moves could make it procedurally or politically challenging for Biden to fulfill campaign pledges to unwind the Trump team’s actions.”<sup>102</sup> CSD observes that it was as though Mr. Trump had resolved to defecate on the Resolute desk on his way out the door.	10, 11, 13
11-21-20, 11-22-20	G-20? Less interesting than me. As the Group of 20 industrialized nations met virtually on November 21, Mr. Trump tweeted accusations about U.S. election fraud throughout the opening session. At the next session, on the coronavirus pandemic, he boasted about American power and its development of vaccines, then left early to play golf.<sup>103</sup> The next day, at the session on climate change, he ignored his having shattered pollution protections in the U.S. and his withdrawal from the Paris climate accords, instead faulting that accord for “trying to kill the American economy” and calling his record on the environment “historic.” At one point he told the other leaders that he would be with them “for a long time,” even though most of them had already congratulated President-elect Biden on his victory.<sup>104</sup>	7, 8, 11, 13
11-22-20	An eerie silence. The Washington Post wrote that, since the November 3 election, Mr. Trump had been uncharacteristically silent: “[G]one are blustery speeches and stemwinder White House news conferences ... . Gone are lengthy call-in sessions with favored Fox anchors ... . Gone, too, are regular White House jousting matches with the press, impromptu Oval Office appearances with random guests or any pretense of being interested in many of the duties of the job. In the 19 days since the election, 12 have included no events on the president’s schedule. He has appeared at public events four times and has played golf at his own Virginia course six times. He has taken no questions from reporters. Since Election Day, he has spoken 8,143 words over 18 days through [November 21] ... . On average in 2020, he spoke 8,398 words daily ... .”<sup>105</sup>	11

11-22-20	Open skies, closed. The U.S. formally withdrew from the Treaty on Open Skies, a pact designed to avoid accidental nuclear war by allowing mutual reconnaissance flights by the 34 nations party, including Russia. Mr. Trump had announced his intention to withdraw six months prior to that. President-elect Biden had urged that the treaty not be abandoned, and he would now be faced with picking up the pieces.<sup>106</sup> Evidencing the senseless and perilous act of vengeance and sabotage – one that could wipe out the world’s population – MSNBC reported that the Trump administration had already ordered for the specialized aircraft the U.S. was using in its flights to be destroyed.<sup>107</sup>	11, 14
11-24-20	My stock market. Mr. Trump videotaped, for posterity, an announcement that the stock market had just reached a record high, an event for which he congratulated himself.<sup>108</sup> He did not mention that the ebullient market had risen nearly 10% in the three weeks since his electoral defeat.<sup>109</sup>	11
11-25-20	Flynn is pardoned. Mr. Trump pardoned the felon Michael Flynn, his first and short-lived national security advisor. As reported above in this Chronology, Flynn had pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI about his contacts with Russian figures during the transition period following the 2016 presidential election. He had also seemingly violated the Logan Act, which criminalizes negotiations by unauthorized individuals with foreign adversaries; and he had compromised national security, by secretly promising Russia indulgences under Mr. Trump if Russia avoided contesting the sanctions levied by the Obama administration in retaliation for Russia’s interference in the 2016 election. Flynn had later tried to withdraw his plea; and Mr. Trump’s attorney general William Barr, scandalously, had attempted to drop the DOJ’s prosecution of him altogether. Mr. Trump had long been expected to pardon Flynn at some point – whether through personal affinity, vengeance against the FBI, protection against potential testimony by Flynn that could implicate Mr. Trump, or all of the above. He had beatified Flynn as a patriot and a victim, and had whipped his supporters into that article of faith. Finally, as was his custom in issuing pardons, Mr. Trump forewent the usual Justice Department recommendations and procedures for granting clemency, instead flying solo and announcing the pardon by tweet. The corruption implicit in Flynn’s pardon was unbounded.<sup>110</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 11, 17 (9)

11-25-20	[Continued.] Flynn’s attorney, Sydney Powell, was the same attorney who, together with Rudi Giuliani on November 19, had advanced other-worldly conspiracy theories alleging that Democrats had stolen the 2020 election from Mr. Trump, and whom Mr. Trump, under pressure for that, had fired on November 22.<sup>111</sup> (See also pp. 56, 57, 58, 69 and 93 of this Addendum below for discussions about Powell.) Mr. Trump had now issued 44 pardons during his presidency – nearly all of them for his personal political benefit, also as described above in this Chronology.<sup>112</sup>	9, 11, 17 (9)
12-02-20	Family pardons, also? Media reported that Mr. Trump had recently been discussing with advisors whether he might preemptively pardon his scandal-prone lawyer Rudy Giuliani; his three children who had been active in advancing his corrupt presidency; and his son-in-law, Jared Kushner. Pre-emptive pardons are those that issue before a scoundrel has been formally charged with a crime.<sup>113</sup>	11
12-07-20	The great Medal of Freedom heist. In a White House ceremony, Mr. Trump awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Olympic wrestler and Trump campaign supporter Dan Gable. That brought the count of medal recipients to 17, with 12 of them being people prominently aligned with Mr. Trump politically. Previous presidents had not awarded the medal in that fashion.<sup>114</sup> (See also CSD’s entry of January 3 +, below, for the awarding of additional medals.)	11, 16
12-08-20 +	Transition sabotage; ongoing seizure of VOA. After long and dangerous delays on the part of the Trump administration, transition discussions with the incoming Biden administration had begun. But on December 8, The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump had inserted his political loyalists within those otherwise largely technical discussions, resulting in a chilling of essential information exchanges.<sup>115</sup> [Continued below.]	9, 16. 17 (9)

12-08-20 +	[Continued.] And at least one agency was still refusing to transition altogether – the U.S. Agency for Global Media, parent of Voice of America and other information outlets. Those outlets had long been international showpieces of objective reporting and American press freedom, intended to inspire freedom, and particularly press freedom, abroad. But Michael Pack, Mr. Trump’s political appointee who was under a court order not to wreck the agency and turn it into a political mouthpiece for Mr. Trump, was defying all requests for staff interviews with the Biden team.<sup>116</sup> Not incidentally, on December 8, Pack terminated another top VOA official on seemingly political grounds.<sup>117</sup> The incoming Biden administration indicated its intention to remove Pack and his appointed allies. But on December 30, NPR reported that those allies were seeking to lock in their positions by way of multi-year employment contracts – over the objections of staff, who compared their power grab to those that occur in the very dictatorships that they were tasked with opposing.<sup>118</sup> (See CSD’s entry of October 26 above, and earlier in this Chronology, for further detail on Pack.)	9, 16, 17 (9)
12-10-20	Another inspector general goes. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo removed his third inspector general, acting I.G. Matthew Klimow, this time for charging that the controversial, government-funded travels of Pompeo’s wife had not been authorized by the State Department.<sup>119</sup>	17 (9, 11, 15)
12-10-20 +	Hunter investigation(s). On December 10, the Justice Department revealed that it was actively investigating President-elect Biden’s son Hunter for possible tax and money laundering violations. To its credit, the department had abided by standard procedures of not publicizing the investigation during the run-up to the recent presidential election.<sup>120</sup> And conceivably the investigation was legitimate. But the investigation had been launched by Attorney General William Barr for apparently political reasons; it was stoked by information supplied by Mr. Trump’s unreliable attack-dog Rudy Giuliani; and it appeared likely intended to embarrass and hamstring the new Biden administration. (The Republican Senate had already investigated Hunter, and had come up with nothing illegal on Hunter’s part and nothing damaging to his father.)<sup>121</sup>	17 (9,11)

12-14-20	Barr out, Rosen in. Promptly after the Electoral College confirmed Mr. Trump’s loss of the presidency, Mr. Trump announced that his attorney general William Barr had resigned, effective December 23. Barr’s imminent departure had been rumored for at least several weeks. The resignation was set out in a letter that was signed by Barr and that praised Mr. Trump lavishly on all manner of topics, in the style of a campaign speech. The letter thus appeared to have been drafted by Mr. Trump and his other loyalists rather than Barr – a corrupt but mostly decorous and buttoned-down attorney.<sup>122</sup> Barr had run afoul of Mr. Trump for several apparent reasons: refusing to publicize the Justice Department’s investigation of President-elect Biden’s son Hunter prior to the election; resisting Mr. Trump’s pressure to appoint a special counsel to investigate Hunter; failing to deliver, prior to the election, an investigatory outcome as to whether the Mueller investigation of the 2016 election had been wrongfully opened; and declaring that no material fraud had tainted the 2020 election. Observers speculated as to whether Barr had truly resigned or whether he had been fired; also whether, by departing or intentionally precipitating his departure, he was attempting to avoid being tainted by Mr. Trump’s expected spate of forthcoming pardons of friends and political allies. But he plainly had been seeking to distance himself from Mr. Trump’s then rapidly mounting efforts to deny the election results, for the sake of either principle or his own (Barr’s) reputation. At the link at this endnote, The Times revisited Barr’s history as Mr. Trump’s slavish sycophant, all as previously reported in this Chronology.<sup>123</sup> A columnist in The Post did likewise.<sup>124</sup> Barr’s deputy attorney general, Jeffrey Rosen, was expected to be named acting attorney general upon Barr’s departure. Rosen had previously been a colleague of Barr’s at a private corporate law firm, and he had no prosecutorial experience. As Barr’s deputy at the Justice Department, Rosen was known to have participated in many of its actions that had reeked of authoritarianism: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Saving Mr. Trump’s campaign chairman Paul Manafort, extraordinarily, from imprisonment on grisly Rikers Island, New York, between federal and state criminal proceedings. 12-14-20	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Participating in the department’s unusual effort to reduce the prison sentence of Mr. Trump’s friend, the convicted felon Roger Stone.</li> <li>• Leading the government’s lawsuit to gag the publication of former national security advisor John Bolton’s tell-all book.</li> <li>• Supporting the government’s efforts to charge anti-racism protesters with sedition.</li> <li>• Attempting to quash the Ukraine whistleblower’s complaint (which had nevertheless eventuated in Mr. Trump’s impeachment).</li> <li>• Quashing the prosecution of Mr. Trump’s corrupt interior secretary, Ryan Zinke.</li> <li>• Possibly seeking to indict former FBI director Andrew McCabe.</li> </ul> Whether Rosen would capitulate to Mr. Trump in the latter’s anticipated final month of democracy-wrecking, or whether Rosen instead would also attempt to salvage some shred of his reputation, remained to be seen.<sup>125</sup> (CSD’s note: Rosen eventually appeared to have made it to the end of the term without further scandal.)	9, 17 (2, 3, 6, 9, 16)
12-15-20	Ambassadorships for sale. The New York Times reported that 43% of Mr. Trump’s foreign ambassadors had been campaign contributors. The typical figure for the previous four presidents had been around 30%.<sup>126</sup>	16
12-17-20 +	The Russia hack. On December 17, media reported that Mr. Trump had remained silent about, and seemingly uninterested in, a massive, recently publicized, espionage-driven cyber-attack on numerous private cyber-security companies and federal agencies, including the State Department, the Treasury Department, the Commerce Department, the Defense Department, the Homeland Security Department and the National Nuclear Security Administration. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo had initially said that the attack was routine, trivial and likely the work of China; but he was soon proven mistaken. The intelligence community quickly concluded that the suspected attacker was Russia. Mr. Trump’s years of kowtowing to that power had thus seemingly won the U.S. nothing. [Continued below.]	1, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13

12-17-20 +	[Continued.] The extent of the attacks was not fully known; they were expected to take months to clean up; the attacks were ongoing; and potentially thousands of companies were exposed. The country’s utility infrastructure was exposed as well. DHS called the attack “a grave risk” to federal and state governments and the private sector. The New York Times characterized it as “one of the greatest intelligence failures of modern times.”<sup>127</sup> Republican and Democratic members of Congress expressed outrage at Mr. Trump’s silence.<sup>128</sup> That silence paralleled his silence about the massive surge in coronavirus infections, hospitalizations and deaths sweeping the country. For six weeks, from all indications, he had been absorbed in falsely alleging that the presidential election had been stolen from him (see the second section of this Addendum, below), to the dereliction of most other duties.<sup>129</sup> On December 18, in an interview with a conservative radio host, Pompeo acknowledged in passing that Russia was the likely aggressor. That is, he had still not made a formal, forceful declaration. But Mr. Trump soon did. The next morning, he finally tweeted: that “the Fake News Media” had overstated the attack, that the aggressor may have been China, that the attack may have compromised the recent presidential election, and that “everything is well under control.”<sup>130</sup>	1, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13
12-22-20 +	The great clemency caper. Mr. Trump embarked on a spate of grants of clemency – to Mueller investigation convicts, war criminals, corrupt politicians, and family. In several tranches.<sup>131</sup> On December 22, he granted 15 pardons and five commutations. The beneficiaries included: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• George Papadopoulos and Alex Van der Zwaan, who had pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI in connection with the Mueller investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election.</li> <li>• Former Congressmen Duncan Hunter (R-CA, guilty of campaign finance violations) and Chris Collins (R-NY, guilty of securities fraud) – both early supporters of Mr. Trump’s 2016 presidential candidacy.</li> </ul> [Continued below.]	4, 9, 10, 11, 14

12-22-20 +	[Continued.] <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Former Congressman Steve Stockman (R-TX, guilty of campaign finance violations).</li> <li>• Two former Border Patrol agents who had shot a marijuana smuggler in the back while he was attempting to cross the Mexican border into Texas.</li> <li>• Four former U.S. military contractors who had killed 14 unarmed Iraqi civilians (including children) and had wounded 17 others in 2007, at the time a highly notorious war crime, and who had been employed then as mercenaries by Blackwater Worldwide, a company owned by Mr. Trump’s supporter Erik Prince (who was also the brother of his Education Secretary, Betsy DeVos).</li> </ul> The clemency was granted in response to a flood of requests from members of Congress, lobbyists, lawyers, and Trump supporters, and earlier adulation of some of the recipients by right-wing news outlets such as Fox News. Observers viewed some of the grants as reflecting an effort by Mr. Trump to, variously, (a) advance an internationally lawless ethno-nationalist ethic, (b) corruptly reward supporters, (c) undercut the Mueller investigation, (d) flaunt his critics, (e) express and vindicate his own grievances as a repeat victim of criminal accusations, (f) experience a sense of agency in the face of his electoral loss, (g) play God, and/or (h) show that he could – that is, do as he wished and get away with it. The actions followed Mr. Trump’s recent pardon of ally and felon Michael Flynn and his recent commutation of the sentence of ally and felon Roger Stone. Mr. Trump now promised additional pardons before the end of his term. He had not “drained the swamp,” but rather had infested it.<sup>132</sup> Media now reported that Mr. Trump had granted clemency 45 times prior to that date – 88% of them to political allies, and almost all of them for political purposes. The new grants resulted in 60 out of 65 grants having gone to petitioners who had personal ties with Mr. Trump or had helped him politically. Few of the grants appeared to have gone through the Justice Department’s review process, or to have met the requirements that the beneficiaries express penitence. Most had the effect of encouraging the commission of crimes, and even crimes against humanity, by rewarding presidential soul-mates. Most further disgraced the U.S. in the eyes of the world.<sup>133</sup> [Continued below.]	4, 9, 10, 11, 14
-------------------	--	-------------------------

12-22-20 +	[Continued.] On December 23, Mr. Trump issued another fusillade of clemency actions, now pardoning 26 people and commuting the sentences of three others. The new pardon beneficiaries included: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Paul Manafort, Mr. Trump’s one-time campaign director and Russia conspirer, convicted of financial fraud related to his consulting work in Ukraine.</li> <li>• Roger Stone, Mr. Trump’s long-time friend, advisor, and self-professed dirty trickster, convicted of lying to Congress, whose punishment Mr. Trump had only recently commuted.</li> <li>• Charles Kushner, father of Mr. Trump’s son-in-law Jared, who had pleaded guilty in 2004 to tax fraud, campaign finance crimes and witness tampering, and who had become a major Trump campaign donor.</li> <li>• Margaret Hunter, wife of Duncan, who had pleaded guilty in connection with her husband’s offenses.</li> <li>• Several others whose cases had been advanced by Mr. Trump’s political supporters or were connected to Republican politics.</li> <li>• Two law enforcement officers convicted of sadistic attacks on suspects.</li> </ul> Both Manafort and Stone had long been expected to receive full pardons, in exchange for their having refused to testify against Mr. Trump relative to his likely participation in the 2016 Russian election scheme. Both convicts were pardoned notwithstanding their defiance of the judicial system and poor behavior during and after their convictions – witness tampering and lying to the court on the part of Manafort, and making threatening social media remarks on the part of Stone. Altogether, counting Manafort, Stone, Papadopoulos, Flynn and Van der Zwaan, Mr. Trump had now pardoned five people convicted of crimes in connection with the Mueller investigation. Not pardoned were Trump associates and Mueller convicts Michael Cohen and Rick Gates, who had fully cooperated with the investigation. Several observers characterized Mr. Trump’s protection of his corrupt but loyal associates as proof of current and prior acts of obstruction of justice. Others compared that behavior to a mob boss rewarding underlings for adherence to a code of silence.<sup>134</sup> [Continued below.]	4, 9, 10, 11, 14
-------------------	---	-------------------------

12-22-20 +	[Continued.] On December 23, the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights denounced the pardon of the Blackwater contractors as granting what amounted to “impunity for gross human rights violations and serious violations of international humanitarian law.”<sup>135</sup> On December 30, the U.N. working group on the use of mercenaries said that the pardons violated U.S. obligations under international law and undermined human rights globally.<sup>136</sup> Ten days after Mr. Trump pardoned Stone, Stone re-activated his “Stop the Steal” website, which he had originally launched ahead of the 2016 election to falsely allege Democratic voter fraud. The re-launch fomented the 2020 version of that conspiracy theory, and it solicited funds for “security” needs relative to the upcoming January 6 protest that would turn into the storming of the Capitol (see the second part of this Addendum, below).<sup>137</sup>	4, 9, 10, 11, 14
12-23-20	Vetoing; golfing and grifting, to the end. Mr. Trump sowed congressional chaos by vetoing a mega, bi-partisan defense spending bill, because it included a provision to rename military installations commemorating Confederate leaders; limited his ability to withdraw troops from several countries; limited his ability to shift military construction funds to his border wall; and didn’t contain an unrelated provision that would have enabled him to sue social media companies for defaming him. No president ever before had vetoed a defense spending bill, let alone on such self-serving grounds. Among other provisions, the bill provided for increased pay for service members and an enhanced cybersecurity program; and thus, in sum, he had acted to defund the military, for his personal political gain.<sup>138</sup> Contemporaneously, and sowing additional chaos, Mr. Trump threatened to veto a mega, bi-partisan Covid-19 relief and stimulus bill, while asserting his own last-minute demand to increase the size of relief checks for individuals from $600 to $2000. Not only the checks but unemployment benefits and small business loans thus came into immediate jeopardy. He had previously supported the bill, and his own Treasury Secretary, Steven Mnuchin, had championed the lower amount of the checks; so his sudden monkey wrench reportedly surprised even White House aides. [Continued below.]	6, 10, 11

12-23-20	[Continued.] Failure of the bill would result also in imminently shutting down the government for want of a spending package. With that would come the furloughing of thousands of employees and the halting of countless federal programs – all in the middle of a pandemic. Mr. Trump’s 11th-hour obstructionism was viewed by some as a petulant and deranged effort to remain visible, relevant – and suspenseful, in the style of his history in reality television – as his term neared its end. It was viewed by others as an attempt to create major crises, then to dramatically solve them, if need be by backing down – all as he had sometimes done before, including in his dealings with North Korea.<sup>139</sup> But otherwise Mr. Trump had continued to sulk, to tweet about electoral fraud, and to hunker down, out of sight. He had had no public meetings, and had taken no questions from reporters in many days.<sup>140</sup> Promptly after leaving Congress and the country dangling on the above three matters – as well as on the raging pandemic and the Russian computer hack that had compromised multiple federal agencies – he fled to Mar-A-Lago. There he embarked on the 31st golf trip of his presidency at that venue, and his 289th golf outing altogether, at a cumulative cost to taxpayers of $151.5 million. Huffington Post wrote: “The $151.5 million total means that Trump has now spent the equivalent of 379 years of presidential salary — which he and his supporters frequently boast that he does not take — playing golf.”<sup>141</sup> At length, on the evening of December 27, Mr. Trump signed the Covid-19 stimulus and government spending bill – without the changes he had demanded – while issuing an angry statement to the effect that Congress had forsaken the American people and that only he had sought to save them.<sup>142</sup> On December 28, the House voted overwhelmingly to override Mr. Trump’s veto of the defense bill.<sup>143</sup> On January 1, the Senate joined the House in that action, and the defense bill became law.<sup>144</sup>	6, 10, 11

12-27-20	No: even more grifting. Huffington Post reported that Mr. Trump’s businesses had cumulatively collected $10.5 million from his and his party’s political activities during his presidency, most of it sourced from small campaign donors. A member of the watchdog organization CREW said, “If you’re a hammer, everything looks like a nail. If you’re Donald Trump, everything looks like a chance to make money.”<sup>145</sup> Mr. Trump’s leadership PAC, post-election, had also collected several hundred million dollars for him to spend liberally for his personal benefit. (See pp. 52, 57, 83 and 84 in this Addendum below.)	11, 15
12-30-20	The post-truth society. A Reuters/Ipsos poll revealed that 40% of American respondents believed that the coronavirus had been made in a laboratory in China; that one-third of respondents (and two-thirds of Republicans) believed that voter fraud had helped Joe Biden win the 2020 election; that 39% believed that a deep state was working to undermine Mr. Trump’s presidency; and that 17% believed that "a group of Satan-worshipping elites who run a child sex ring are trying to control our politics and media" — the false allegation at the heart of the QAnon movement. Fewer than half of Republicans said they accepted the outcome of the election. The clamor on those topics by Mr. Trump and his conservative media supporters appeared to have been responsible for the delusions.<sup>146</sup>	8
1-3-21 +	The Final Medals of Freedom. Media reported on January 3 that Mr. Trump was planning imminently to bestow Presidential Medals of Freedom – the country’s highest civilian honor – upon two of his most truculent and deceitful congressional defenders, Devin Nunes (R-CA) and Jim Jordan (R-OH) – thereby debasing the integrity of the award for all time. Among other affronts to American decency, both had bullied and lied their way through defending Mr. Trump in the impeachment proceedings, and Jordan was now taking a leading role in denying the legitimacy of Joe Biden’s election.<sup>147</sup> On January 4, Nunes got his medal.<sup>148</sup>  [Continued below.]	11

1-3-21 +	[Continued.] On January 7, one day after the assault on the Capitol that Mr. Trump had incited, he awarded medals of Freedom to three well-known golfers – important figures in his cultural and commercial world. Indeed, one of the three owned a villa at the Trump National Doral golf resort in Miami. On January 11, he awarded the medal to Jordan. (On the same day, New England Patriots coach Bill Belichick declined an offer of the medal, citing his unhappiness with the grotesquely unpatriotic storming of the Capitol, as described below in this Addendum.) The Medal of Freedom had been created by President Kennedy to recognize individuals “who have made especially meritorious contributions to the security or national interests of the United States, to world peace, or to cultural or other significant public or private endeavors.” Mr. Trump had now awarded 24 medals: seven to golfers, 14 to sports figures overall, and seven or eight to political cronies – including the viciously divisive and mendacious broadcaster Rush Limbaugh.<sup>149</sup> (See also CSD’s entries of November 10, 2018, May 5, 2019 and December 7, 2020, regarding Mr. Trump’s previous awards of the medal.)	11
1-4-21	The Fact Checker. Far behind in its tally, The Washington Post’s Fact Checker reported on January 4 that, as president, Mr. Trump had made 29,508 false or misleading statements through November 5. He had lied almost 4,000 times in October alone, and on a single day – November 2 – he had lied 504 times.<sup>150</sup>	7
1-5-21	Pentagon worried. The Washington Post reported that Pentagon leaders were bracing for renewed presidential attempts to deploy the military to help Mr. Trump retain power after having lost the election.<sup>151</sup>	9
1-5-21	Pennsylvania legislature melts. Matching (and possibly inspired by) the Republican mood in Congress, Pennsylvania’s Republican legislators disrupted a legislative session and temporarily unseated the presiding Democratic officer (the lieutenant governor) because they objected to his seating of a Democrat whose recent electoral victory had been close.<sup>152</sup>	17 (9)

1-6-21	Scotland: Stay away. Amid rumors that Mr. Trump was expecting to fly to one of his Scottish golf clubs prior to, and instead of attending, President-elect Biden’s inauguration, Scotland’s leader announced that Mr. Trump would not be welcome in Scotland, and that his travel there to play golf would violate Scotland’s strict Covid-19 in-bound travel ban.<sup>153</sup>	11
1-5-21 1-6-21	The Georgia election. Voters in Georgia’s two furiously contested senatorial run-off elections chose two Democrats, John Ossoff and Raphael Warnock, despite Mr. Trump having campaigned (slightly) for their Republican opponents. Their election gave Democrats control of the Senate. Mr. Trump thus became the first president since 1932 to lose reelection, the House and the Senate.<sup>154</sup>	No specific violation; just things falling apart
1-12-21	The end, at the wall. Mr. Trump paid his final visit as president to his beloved wall at the Mexican border. At Alamo, Texas, he boasted about the project and exaggerated its effectiveness. In truth, only 47 miles of new (as opposed to replacement) barrier had been built, and the project had been beset by cost overruns, waste, land and environmental litigation, and functional ineffectiveness (it had proven fairly easy to breach using ordinary hand tools). One observer wrote, “Trump, however, considers the wall a triumph and signed his name on a plaque affixed to the metal strips before rattling off a familiar list of lies and misleading statistics. He took credit for the 2020 drop in border apprehensions without mentioning that overall crossings fell by half under pandemic lockdowns. He heralded statistics on seizures of illicit drugs, failing to point out that 90% of those take place at ports of entry that have nothing to do with the wall. “He lauded his offensive against what he called ‘asylum fraud,’ despite the fact that his government closed asylum on the U.S.-Mexico border in violation of international law, rather than assess and hear cases. He also repeated unsubstantiated claims that migrants live off U.S. welfare and that Middle East terrorists come over the southern border — an assertion that his own counterterrorist officials have repeatedly debunked.”<sup>155</sup>	6, 7, 11

1-13-21	National security vacuum. On January 13, the acting director of ICE, Jonathan Fahey, resigned after only two weeks of service.<sup>156</sup> His replacement would become the fourth leader of ICE in four months. He thus joined the parade of high-level federal departures that had followed the siege of the Capitol on January 6, and that were continuing, as the end of Mr. Trump’s term approached. On January 14, Politico reported in detail on the breathtaking number of vacancies in senior leadership positions at the Departments of Defense, Homeland Security and Justice, from cabinet-level on down. Even the acting agency chiefs had been on the job for only days or weeks. Between all of that and Mr. Trump’s own disengagement, there was “a leadership vacuum unlike anything in modern U.S. history” – even as security officials viewed the U.S. as entering its most dangerous period since 9/11.<sup>157</sup> On January 14, The Washington Post reported similarly.<sup>158</sup>	No specific violation; just things falling apart
1-17-21	The pardon trade. The New York Times reported that Mr. Trump’s allies were collecting huge sums from convicted felons in payment for lobbying Mr. Trump to pardon them.<sup>159</sup>	9, 16
1-18-21	The 1776 Report. On Martin Luther King, Jr.’s birthday, the presidential 1776 Commission issued its final report, calling for a revamping of historical education in American schools. The New York Times characterized the taxpayer-funded report as “a sweeping attack on liberal thought and activism that calls for a ‘patriotic education,’ [that] defends America’s founding against charges that it was tainted by slavery and [that] likens progressivism to fascism.” The commission’s members included no historians – only conservative politicians, activists and intellectuals from other fields – and the report contained no scholarly footnotes. The Times noted that Mr. Trump had concocted the plan during election season, having never before shown an interest in either history or education.<sup>160</sup> Real historians instantly pounced.<sup>161</sup>	6, 7
1-19-21	Dossiers at VOA. The Washington Post reported that Michael Pack, the Trump-appointed leader of Voice of America’s parent corporation and its chief political commissar, had spent $2,000,000 compiling dossiers on the political views of VOA staff.<sup>162</sup>	17 (1, 9)

1-19-21	The poll at the end of the line. According to a new NPR poll, Mr. Trump was finishing his term with a 38% approval rating, one of his worst. (He had never exceeded 44% in that poll.) But 80% of Republicans still approved of his performance. Both approval and disapproval votes were measured as unusually “intense” – that is, with data subjects either adoring or detesting the man. Democrats polled 30% more interest in receiving a coronavirus vaccine inoculation than Republicans.<sup>163</sup> A new CNN poll gave Mr. Trump a 34% approval rating. A new Pew poll gave him 29%.<sup>164</sup> The low ratings were likely attributable in large measure to the siege on the Capitol that he had incited on January 6.	No specific violation; just things falling apart
1-19-21	No cabinet. MSNBC reported that President-elect Biden would take office the following day with none of his cabinet appointees having been approved by Congress, due to procedural delays caused by Republicans. Vacancies included the Secretaries of State, Defense and Homeland Security – those needed to attend to national security, at a perilous moment for the country.<sup>165</sup>	No specific violation; just things falling apart
1-19-21	The farewell speech. Mr. Trump released a video containing his farewell speech – an exercise in boasting, exaggeration, falsehood and insincere platitudes. He acknowledged none of the wreckage he had caused, whether relative to the coronavirus, democracy, national unity or otherwise.<sup>166</sup> He did not acknowledge President-elect Biden by name, nor had he met with his successor. He would not attend the January 20 inauguration. He and his wife would not participate in the usual ceremonial welcome of the incoming president and first lady to the White House.	11
1-20-21	Pentagon stonewalls transition. Politico reported that, under the direction of Mr. Trump’s political commissars, the Pentagon had refused to cooperate with President-elect Biden’s transition team through the very end of the Trump administration. The stonewalling was unprecedented. In some areas, the resulting risk to national security appeared to be material.<sup>167</sup>	9

1-20-21	The final pardons. Just after midnight – that is, at the outset of Mr. Trump’s last day in office – the White House announced Mr. Trump’s final acts of clemency. They included a pardon granted to his former campaign chief, the white supremacist Stephen Bannon, who had been charged with defrauding Mr. Trump’s own supporters in connection with charitable fundraising. Numerous other cronies (or friends of cronies), celebrities, white collar grifters and Republican politicians also received pardons or commutations, as well as some non-violent drug offenders – 143 in all. Prosecutors who had spent years winning convictions called some of the non-drug-related pardons a “kick in the teeth.” One ethics expert said, “Even Nixon didn’t pardon his cronies on the way out.” But the announcement put to rest the long-standing speculation that Mr. Trump would seek to pardon himself, his family members and his attorneys, all of which he had reportedly considered, up until the last minute, but had rejected.<sup>168</sup>	9, 16

1-20-21	A peaceful transfer of power. Following a week sequestered within the White House, with no public appearances, Mr. Trump bade farewell to the building, vaguely promised to return, and took a helicopter to Joint Base Andrews. At the air base, without recent precedent, he walked down a red carpet and received a 21-gun salute from a battery of Army cannon. Republican Congressional leadership snubbed the event. At approximately 9:00 a.m., he boarded Air Force One and departed for Mar-a-Lago in Florida – his final flight as president. While the plane taxied away, speakers blasted a recording of Frank Sinatra’s “My Way.”<sup>169</sup> (As noted above on p. 11 of this Chronology, Mr. Trump and his wife Melania had led the dance floor at his 2017 inaugural celebration to that rendition of “My Way.”<sup>170</sup>) Mr. Trump left office detested by many Americans, revered by almost as many, and derided as a laughingstock by most of the Western world – if not most of the entire world. According to The Washington Post’s Fact Checker, he had made 30,573 false or misleading statements while in office, nearly half of them in his final year.<sup>171</sup> At 12:00 noon, under a cold sky, Joe Biden was sworn in as the 46th president of the United States. Kamala Harris was sworn in as vice president. 25,000 National Guard troops protected them, the Capitol complex, and our country.	7, 11

The November 2020 Election:
Voter Suppression, False Claims of Election Fraud, Incitement to Insurrection

(This is a separate section of Addendum 34. It represents a continuation of similarly titled sections of Addenda 32 and 33, addressing Mr. Trump’s efforts at voter suppression and his false claims of election fraud.)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 4, 6, 7, 9 and 16 as defined in CSD’s Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the efforts of Mr. Trump, his administration and his allies to suppress voting in, to discredit unfavorable results of, and ultimately to overturn the November 2020 election moved rapidly. CSD’s observations below that were recorded as of a given date may have been superseded on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD’s concerns about the attempts by Mr. Trump, his administration and his allies to corrupt, discredit and reverse the election are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that recurred, that news media reported anew, and that continued to threaten our democracy through the end of Mr. Trump’s term in office, and beyond.

On October 25, Reuters reported that only 59% of Trump supporters would accept the legitimacy of a Joe Biden electoral victory, and only 57% of Biden supporters would accept the legitimacy of a Trump victory.<sup>172</sup> A recent Washington Post survey had generated similar results.<sup>173</sup>

The Post reported on October 27 that it was too late for voters to rely on the Postal Service to timely deliver their mail-in ballots, as a result of the Postal Service’s pre-election operational cutbacks and despite successful Democratic-led court actions to correct those cut-backs.<sup>174</sup> On October 28, NPR reported similarly, adding that election officials in some states were expressly advising voters not to use the mail, due to its potential unreliability.<sup>175</sup> Politico reported that even the Postal Service concurred. Delivery delays in Philadelphia – the blue stronghold within purple Pennsylvania – were reportedly skyrocketing.<sup>176</sup> But Republicans continued to ask the U.S. Supreme Court to prohibit state courts from counting ballots received after election day due to the coronavirus-driven mailings.<sup>177</sup> Between the Trump administration’s slow-down in mail delivery and Republicans’ litigation to truncate the counting of mailed-in ballots, voters who mailed their ballots stood to be disenfranchised in some states should their ballots arrive late.

A Post columnist on October 28 and a pair of Politico reporters on October 29 wrote that Mr. Trump’s principal hope for an electoral victory appeared to lie in suppressing votes – through litigation, intimidation at the polls by poll watchers, excluding felons from voting rolls (Florida), limiting drop box sites (Texas), and otherwise. Politico wrote: “Never before in modern presidential politics has a candidate been so reliant on wide-scale efforts to depress the vote as Trump.” A former Republican chair of the Federal Election Commission said, “What we have seen this year which is completely unprecedented ... is a concerted national Republican effort across the country in every one of the states that has had a legal battle to make it harder for citizens to vote.”<sup>178</sup>

On October 29, The New York Times reported on three ways in which Mr. Trump’s supporters were attempting to suppress voting in Pennsylvania: legislating to prohibit the processing of absentee votes before Election Day; suing to disallow the counting of ballots arriving after Election Day; and intimidating early voters at drop boxes and other voting facilities.<sup>179</sup> On October 30, Huffington Post reported similarly.<sup>180</sup> (See CSD’s previous coverage of these and other abuses in Pennsylvania in the October 1 entry within the second section of Addendum 33 to this Chronology, titled “The November 2020 Election.”)

On October 30, The Post reported on Republican efforts in Nevada, Texas, Minnesota and Pennsylvania to cause courts to void massive numbers of voted ballots after the November 3 election, on grounds of potential fraud, despite the absence of evidence of actual fraud.<sup>181</sup> The Post also reported that, in Florida, on technical grounds, election officials were challenging the early ballots of young and minority voters at twice the rates that they were challenging others’.<sup>182</sup>

On October 30, The Post reported that on-time delivery of mailed-in ballots to election offices in swing states and some minority-rich urban areas was far below the national average. Some 28 states would not accept ballots arriving after Election Day, and tens of thousands of ballots were thus at risk of being invalidated.<sup>183</sup> As of November 2, according to The Times, delivery problems remained in such swing states as Pennsylvania and Michigan.<sup>184</sup> On November 3, Election Day, a federal judge in the District of Columbia ordered the Postal Service to immediately sweep facilities in a number of swing states – including facilities in Philadelphia and Central Pennsylvania – to identify ballots and send them out for delivery. Hundreds of thousands of ballots that had been received by the Service had not been sent out for delivery. But the Justice Department defied the court order, on grounds that the Service was doing fine with its own procedures.<sup>185</sup> On November 4, The Post reported that almost 7% of ballots in the Postal Service’s sorting facilities on Election Day had not been processed in time for submission to election officials, thus potentially disenfranchising tens of thousands of voters – including in closely-fought battleground states.<sup>186</sup>

Also on October 30, Mr. Trump preemptively blamed the U.S. Supreme Court for an election defeat that he might suffer, should it fail to protect him in contested voting cases that might come before the Court. He was referring in part to the Court’s decision on October 28 to at least temporarily let stand the Pennsylvania Supreme Court’s ruling allowing mail-in ballots arriving within three days after Election Day to be counted. He also warned the sitting Republican justices on the Court that by allowing a Biden win they would be inviting Biden to pack the Court and thus to dilute their power.<sup>187</sup> At a rally in Reading, Pennsylvania on October 31, he again slammed the Court for jeopardizing his re-election.<sup>188</sup> He did the same at a rally in Hickory, North Carolina on November 1.<sup>189</sup> On November 2, the eve of the election, by way of Twitter he again disparaged the Court while predicting and even inviting street violence: “The Supreme Court decision on voting in Pennsylvania is a VERY dangerous one. It will allow rampant and unchecked cheating and will undermine our entire systems [sic] of laws. It will also induce violence in the streets. Something must be done!"<sup>190</sup> Here was a man who until then had publicly sought to place his re-election in the hands of the Court (not the people), and who still apparently sought to do so, yet who could not abide the possibility that the Court might not heel to his wishes. He simply demanded to retain his office – regardless of law or the popular will.

Further to Mr. Trump's continuing reliance on salvation by the judiciary, in connection with a rally in Charlotte, North Carolina on November 1 he told reporters, "We're going to go in the night of, as soon as that election is over, we're going in with our lawyers." That is, he assured that he would litigate the election's outcome, even before he had any grounds for doing so – even before he knew whether, where, when or how voter fraud might have occurred – and Republican lawyers reportedly were preparing for that litigation.<sup>191</sup> (Mr. Trump had variously and imprecisely laid out his argument on multiple occasions: that no mailed-in ballots arriving after election day should be counted; that military ballots might be exempted from that argument; that no ballots whatever should be counted after Election Day, even though such counting had been occurring routinely across the country for decades.<sup>192</sup>) On November 2, The Atlantic reported that Democratic lawyers had already prepared their own pleadings: not only in anticipation of such court challenges, but in anticipation of the possibility that Mr. Trump could effectively launch a coup to disrupt the election – such as by ordering federal authorities to seize ballots or block polling places.<sup>193</sup>

By November 2, many urban storefronts were boarding up their windows, and a tall fence was being built around the White House.<sup>194</sup> National Guard units in numerous states were being readied for deployment.<sup>195</sup> A report in Politico compared Mr. Trump's promise to contest the election and the very real potential for election-related violence to recent failed elections in several developing countries, where exactly those things had transpired, to the shame, suffering and despair of those countries.<sup>196</sup> At that moment, CSD believed that – regardless of whether any of those events would actually come to pass in the U.S. – the fact that they were even conceivable threatened the idea of America at its core.

On Election Day, November 3, the Trump campaign falsely tweeted that Republican poll watchers were being denied access to the polls "all over" Philadelphia; that Democrats were being allowed to unlawfully place campaign signs within polling places there; and that a Democrat was caught "stuffing" a ballot box. The tweets built on Mr. Trump's previous, baseless claims that Philadelphia Democrats would cheat in the election. Twitter flagged the tweets as deceptive. The campaign was now expected to use false and/or one-off episodes such as those to discredit the entire election process in heavily Democratic Philadelphia.<sup>197</sup>

Repeating a seemingly separate argument, on Election Day Mr. Trump said that Americans "should be entitled to know who won on November 3."<sup>198</sup> That is, as before, he seemingly wanted the vote count to stop and nationwide reporting to be complete at midnight on Election Day. There was no legal, logical, or precedential basis for that argument: vote count reporting had often proceeded well into the day following Election Day, and sometimes beyond.

Also on Election Day, The Post reported that an estimated 10 million automated, spam telephone calls in recent days had advised voters to stay home.<sup>199</sup>

Contrary to the fears of many, and despite a number of episodes sparked by Trump loyalists and White supremacists, as Election Day came to a close widespread disturbances and irregularities at polling places had not been immediately reported.<sup>200</sup> National Guard and other federal troops had not been deployed. But as had been widely anticipated, election results in many states, and the overall total of projected Electoral College votes, were not known by the end of the day – seemingly not due to counting glitches and irregularities, but due to the extended processing time required for mail-in ballots.

In the early morning hours of November 4, in nationally televised comments to his mask-less supporters at the White House, Mr. Trump informally declared victory in the November 3 presidential election, even while having thus far fallen far short of a projected majority of Electoral College votes. Without explanation or evidence, he charged Democrats with “fraud on the American public,” and he called for the vote count to stop – even as to ballots that had been cast in person on Election Day but were not yet counted. He also announced that he would bring election fraud claims before the Supreme Court.<sup>201</sup> Every major television network, including Fox News, called him out for his recklessness and his falsehoods.<sup>202</sup>

It was not the first time that Mr. Trump had raised accusations of election fraud. He had done it in 2012 (after President Obama was re-elected), in 2016 (after Senator Ted Cruz had defeated him in the Iowa caucuses) and again in 2016 (after Hillary Clinton had defeated him in the popular vote for the presidency).<sup>203</sup>

By mid-day on November 4, Republican lawyers had begun filing lawsuits in various states, including to halt vote-counting in Pennsylvania (counting that the U.S. Supreme Court had twice already allowed to proceed); to halt vote-counting in Michigan; to seek a recount in Wisconsin; and to alter the handling of ballots in Georgia. Republicans also announced half a dozen other lawsuits in Pennsylvania, and several in Nevada.<sup>204</sup> Messages declaring that Biden was stealing the election flooded Spanish-language social media in Florida.<sup>205</sup> Republican protesters made a scene at a vote-counting office in Detroit.<sup>206</sup> Late that night (Eastern time), scores of Republicans, some of them armed, made a commotion outside a vote-counting office in Arizona as well.<sup>207</sup> (It was notable that, to that point and beyond, Biden supporters did not mount any vote-counting protests, even in battleground states where the outcome was not yet known.)

Fox News commentators avidly fanned the flames.<sup>208</sup> Also on November 4, Mr. Trump’s lawyer Rudy Giuliani and his son and surrogate Eric Trump held a press conference outside of Philadelphia, alleging cheating by Democrats in that city. “Do you think we’re stupid? Do you think we’re fools?” Giuliani asked. A reporter for the Philadelphia Inquirer called their claims “false and at times almost incoherent.” CNN detailed their myriad falsehoods.<sup>209</sup>

On the morning of November 5, while the vote-counting continued and the outcome of the election was still too close to call, Mr. Trump tweeted, “STOP THE COUNT!” Critics were not only outraged but puzzled, in that Mr. Trump was ahead but losing in some battleground states but behind and gaining in others, such that either stopping the count categorically might well injure him, or he meant that, on principle, stopping the count should be applied to states selectively, depending on his fortunes there at a given moment.<sup>210</sup>

Later that day, Richard Grenell, at a gratuitous news conference in Nevada, advanced the fraud charges, claiming that Nevada was counting thousands of illegitimate ballots and that Republicans were being barred from observing the ballot-counting there. In truth many Republicans were observing the counting, and when a reporter pressed Grenell for evidence to support his claim, he refused to respond.<sup>211</sup> Grenell was a fierce Trump partisan, and Mr. Trump's former (and reportedly unqualified) acting Director of National Intelligence – a position tasked with protecting American democracy.

That evening, Mr. Trump held a press conference at the White House, during which he charged – much more pointedly and extensively than before, and falsely citing what he claimed was massive evidence – that the election was being stolen from him. He then walked away from the podium without taking questions. It was his most direct and explicit attack yet on American democracy. Critics called it “a gift to America’s adversaries.”<sup>212</sup> Most television networks cut away from the spectacle as soon as Mr. Trump began lying. CNN did not; but its real-time analysts – hard-bitten and utterly professional journalists who commented immediately afterwards – seemed shaken.<sup>213</sup>

The online fact checkers at CNN and USA Today soon refuted the many grotesque falsehoods in Mr. Trump's presentation.<sup>214</sup> But leading Republicans in Congress stood by his claims.<sup>215</sup> And his supporters – through right-wing media and internet trolls and with the help of professionals – had begun what both Politico and The Times concluded was a coordinated disinformation campaign to support those claims and to subvert the election.<sup>216</sup> The leading commentators at Fox News joined in the claims.<sup>217</sup>

Many Trump voters appeared to be buying them. On the evening of November 5, after Mr. Trump's address, Philadelphia police arrested two armed men from Virginia who appeared to be Trump and QAnon supporters and who were moving to attack the facility where Philadelphia ballots were still being counted.<sup>218</sup> Armed right-wing protesters again menaced vote counters in Arizona.<sup>219</sup> A Los Angeles Trump supporter was arrested for threatening a mass shooting.<sup>220</sup> Some prominent Trump surrogates called for the Justice Department to intervene, for Democratic poll workers to be arrested, and for Republican legislatures in Wisconsin and Pennsylvania to overturn the popular vote.<sup>221</sup> Some pro-Trump social media groups called for civil war.<sup>222</sup>

On November 6, Mr. Trump and his campaign's counsel repeated the fraud allegations.<sup>223</sup>

But as of that date, Republican litigation had come to nothing. Several frivolous and statistically trivial cases were quickly dismissed.<sup>224</sup> In Pennsylvania, the Republican Party asked the U.S. Supreme Court to stop the counting of votes received after Election Day, even though Pennsylvania law required that they be counted, and even though the Court had already twice denied that request. The party also asked the Court to confirm the (Democratic) Pennsylvania Secretary of State's directive to county election boards that they segregate mailed-in ballots arriving after Election Day, and the Court promptly did so – even though only a negligible number of “late-arriving” ballots appeared to have been received anyway.<sup>225</sup>

On November 7, Giuliani conducted another foolish press conference, now in the parking lot of a shabby industrial site outside of Philadelphia. He decried the alleged fraud by way of wild and unsupported claims – a performance for which he was widely mocked. He was also mocked for having conducted the event at a business called Four Seasons Total Landscaping – seemingly an erroneous attempt to convene at the upscale Four Seasons Hotel in downtown Philadelphia. Adjacent to the landscaping company was a porn shop, and across the street was a crematorium.<sup>226</sup>

But in the midst of that event, at 11:24 a.m., news organizations began reporting that Biden had won Pennsylvania, and thus sufficient electoral votes to win the presidency. Soon all major outlets joined in the call. Biden had also bested Mr. Trump so far by over 4 million popular votes.<sup>227</sup>

Mr. Trump had been defeated. But he continued to deny the loss. That afternoon, as Biden supporters celebrated in the streets of major cities and foreign leaders rejoiced (except for those from autocracies such as Russia, Brazil and Saudi Arabia),<sup>228</sup> Mr. Trump tweeted that he (Mr. Trump) had won the election.<sup>229</sup> At “Stop the Steal” rallies, Trump supporters protested at state capitols around the country, sometimes by the thousands, and often armed.<sup>230</sup> For example, some 2,000 gathered in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, many of them members of right-wing extremist groups, and many of them carrying weapons.<sup>231</sup>

That evening President-elect Biden delivered a national unity address – ordinarily a perfunctory message, but remarkable at that moment in history.<sup>232</sup> Leading Republican voices put out no such early calls. Indeed, on November 8 Mr. Trump continued to deny that he had lost, the Republican uproar continued, and Philadelphia’s bi-partisan election officials reported receiving death threats.<sup>233</sup> As of November 9, a Politico poll had found that 70% of Republicans believed that the election was being stolen; the Republican Party had continued and expanded its litigation; ten Republican state attorneys general had joined with amicus filings in the pending Pennsylvania litigation; only four Republican senators had congratulated the president-elect; several others – including Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell – instead were stoking the litigation; and Mr. Trump continued to tweet baseless claims of fraud.<sup>234</sup>

As though channeling the Republican Party, Russian and Chinese leaders had themselves withheld congratulations for the president-elect, and their state-controlled media continued to mock the American electoral system for the disarray that had flowered. (China mocked Trump; while Russia charged the Democrats with election fraud, and spread a rumor that Biden was readying Gulag-type camps for Trump supporters. China’s congratulations finally arrived on November 13.)<sup>235</sup>

On November 8, media reported that the administrator of the General Services Administration, Emily Murphy, had declined to authorize and fund federal agencies to begin transitioning the administration from Mr. Trump to President-elect Biden, pending the outcome of (meritless) Republican voter fraud litigation – that is, while Mr. Trump was denying that he had lost the election. The GSA had typically authorized transition operations and spending within hours after television networks had called presidential elections. A delayed transition was now seen as having the potential to significantly hamstring national security, the fight against the coronavirus, and the functioning of the government generally. (Presumably under pressure, Murphy – whose reputation for probity was otherwise good – had previously accommodated Mr. Trump by refusing to enforce the constitutional bar on Mr. Trump receiving payments from foreign governments through his lease of the GSA’s building to the Trump International Hotel in Washington. She had also accommodated him by stalling the long-planned move of the FBI’s headquarters to a suburban site, which would have freed up the current site for the potential construction there of a hotel that would compete with Mr. Trump’s.)<sup>236</sup> On November 9, the White House expressly barred senior agency leaders across the government from cooperating with the Biden transition team.<sup>237</sup>

Disturbingly, on November 9, both The Post and The Times characterized the transition standstill as sorely jeopardizing national security, and all for the sake of Mr. Trump’s ego. The president-elect was being denied a full Secret Service detail. He was not receiving daily briefings from national intelligence agencies. And the Trump administration was defying the earlier recommendation of the 9/11 Commission that – to avoid a repeat of the 2000 national security disaster – “the outgoing administration should provide the president-elect, as soon as possible after election day, with a classified, compartmented list that catalogues specific, operational threats to national security; major military or cover operations; and pending decisions on the possible use of force.”<sup>238</sup> Following the post-election purging of four top Pentagon officials (see CSD’s entry of November 9 + in the first part of this Addendum), the security risks lying in the stalled transition were seen as worsening.<sup>239</sup> On November 12, a group of more than 150 former national security officials appointed by presidents of both parties sent an open letter to the GSA warning of those risks.<sup>240</sup> On the same day, a former Coast Guard commandant accused the Trump administration of failing to “provide for the common defense” and “promote the general welfare,” as mandated by the Constitution.<sup>241</sup> Several Republican senators called for at least the security briefings to be shared with the president-elect.<sup>242</sup> On November 13, Mr. Trump’s former chief of staff and retired general John Kelly issued a statement decrying the threat to the nation’s security and health as potentially catastrophic.<sup>243</sup>

On November 9, Attorney General William Barr authorized U.S. attorneys to investigate credible and material instances of election fraud – a sharp departure from the Justice Department’s 40-year policy of staying out of pending election processes. Blindsided, the department career official responsible for enforcing those investigations promptly resigned his post in alarm. (Whether Barr truly intended to mount investigations, or instead sought merely to placate a raging Mr. Trump and keep his own job for the balance the term, was unclear.)<sup>244</sup>

On November 10, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo told reporters in response to a question about transitioning to a Biden administration, “There will be a smooth transition to a second Trump administration.”<sup>245</sup> He may or may not have been speaking tongue-in-cheek; but in either case, it was a shocking statement by the chief spokesperson for America’s democratization efforts abroad. The Post quoted ten recent statements by Pompeo’s department calling for fair elections and peaceful transfers of power overseas.<sup>246</sup> State Department diplomats reacted with furor and disgust, for Pompeo’s now having directly undermined their work.<sup>247</sup>

Michael Abramowitz, the president of Freedom House – a leading non-partisan NGO that tracks democracy around the world – told The Times: “What we have seen in the last week from the president more closely resembles the tactics of the kind of authoritarian leaders we follow. I never would have imagined seeing something like this in America."<sup>248</sup> A subsequent analysis by The Times concluded the same, adding that a new reputation for the American system of governance, and a new American model for defying democratic elections, had appeared for the world to see – phenomena that now could never be erased.<sup>249</sup> One prominent historian called Mr. Trump's denial of President-elect Biden's victory an assault on American democracy comparable only to the secession of Southern states after Lincoln's election.<sup>250</sup>

Pennsylvania Republican politicians (including members of Congress) grew louder in alleging election fraud – even though the same cast ballots had generated broad congressional, legislative and other Republican wins in elections across the commonwealth. As of November 11, Republicans had filed at least 15 legal challenges there. The Republican controlled legislature vowed to conduct hearings. Media provocateurs nationwide focused on Pennsylvania.<sup>251</sup> But Republican election fraud cases across the country, for want of evidence, were being thrown out right and left by patently annoyed judges.<sup>252</sup> As of November 11, six pre-election and seven post-election lawsuits on Mr. Trump's behalf had been dismissed.<sup>253</sup> As of November 13, nearly all cases had been tossed, and several of the attorneys mounting the cases had resigned.<sup>254</sup> Sixteen assistant U.S. attorneys tasked with prosecuting election fraud said there was none, and they denounced the litigation campaign.<sup>255</sup> Even Wall Street appeared to have accepted and to have welcomed the fact of a Biden presidency, as stocks had risen 8% since Election Day.

By November 12, as Mr. Trump continued to tweet his fraud allegations, media were reporting that Republican state governments and various Republican U.S. senators were acknowledging his loss, even while (in the case of the senators) indulging the continuing litigation and vote recounts. Mainstream media discounted the likelihood of a legalistically contrived coup d'état on the part of Republican actors. But they continued to speculate about the possibility of such a coup<sup>256</sup> – a remarkable development for Americans who had spent their lives believing that our democracy was sacrosanct and impregnable.

On November 13, Mr. Trump continued to tweet that he had won.<sup>257</sup>

On November 14, mask-less pro-Trump demonstrators took to the streets in Washington, DC to denounce what Mr. Trump had convinced them was a stolen election. He had lost, but they believed he had won. Their ranks included white nationalists, conspiracy theorists and far-right activists from across the country, such as the Proud Boys. They also included more ordinary voters, who appeared from their reported comments to be in thrall of Mr. Trump's personality cult. It was a terrifying and other-worldly spectacle of mass delusion and rage – and one in which Mr. Trump appeared to exult. Driving past, he greeted and thrilled his supporters from inside his limousine. Then he went to his club in Virginia to play golf. His spokesperson Kayleigh McEnany tweeted a claim that the demonstrators numbered a million – many times the actual count, which credible news reports said was in the thousands or tens of thousands. (Her tweet recalled Mr. Trump's own inflated claims as to the crowd size at his inauguration four years previous, claims that his then press secretary had parroted, to the press secretary's eternal chagrin.) Skirmishes with counter-demonstrators ensued, particularly in the evening. Mr. Trump fanned the flames, tweeting, "ANTIFA SCUM ran for the hills today when they tried attacking the people at the Trump Rally, because those people aggressively fought back. Antifa waited until tonight, when 99% were gone, to attack innocent #MAGA People. DC Police, get going – do your job and don't hold back!!!”<sup>258</sup>

Also on November 14, Mr. Trump denounced Georgia's Republican secretary of state, Brad Raffensperger, for not having delivered to him an electoral win in that state. He claimed that Raffensperger and the state's Republican governor were conspiring with Democrats to steal the election in Georgia. Raffensperger was in the process of conducting a scrupulous re-count of the close voting there, in a race that major television networks had all called for President-elect Biden. Most of Georgia's Republican power structure were also denouncing Raffensperger. That included the state's two U.S. senators who were facing their own run-off races against Democratic challengers in January under Raffensperger's electoral watch, and who now demanded his resignation. None of those people had offered any evidence of fraud; they only alleged fraud, apparently because they just wanted and felt entitled to win.<sup>259</sup> Raffensperger meanwhile was receiving multiple and mounting death threats.<sup>260</sup> On November 16, Raffensperger accused South Carolina's Republican U.S. senator and Trump stalwart Lindsay Graham of pressuring him to find a way to throw out legal ballots.<sup>261</sup>

The Post reported on November 15 that several administration officials had been granted leave to work with pro-Trump organizations in attempting to prove that the voting outcome was fraudulent.<sup>262</sup>

The Times reported on November 16 that Mr. Trump had attacked the integrity of the election on Twitter over 330 times since Election Day.<sup>263</sup>

A Politico opinion poll, reported by that outlet on November 17, found that 27% of Republicans believed that Mr. Trump should never concede the election to President-elect Biden, “no matter what” the final counting of votes and the related litigation were to produce.<sup>264</sup> That is to say, they wished for the American presidency to be held by Mr. Trump, even if he weren't re-elected.

On the evening of November 17, Mr. Trump fired Chris Krebs by way of Twitter. Krebs had been the director of the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency at DHS. Although a political appointee of Mr. Trump, he had been highly regarded in his role as the government's most senior cyber-security official tasked with protecting the November election. In recent days he had denounced rumors and allegations of voter fraud; his agency had called the election the most secure in American history; and he had told associates that he was expecting to be fired for that. His final undoing arose from a tweet he had posted that day, debunking a particular conspiracy theory that the election results had been manipulated by a computer system. Critics said that the sudden purge of Krebs not only discredited our democracy, but – by way of his sudden absence – jeopardized our national security in the precarious months going forward.<sup>265</sup> But Krebs continued to confirm the integrity of the election in a “60 Minutes” interview, prompting death threats against him. Indeed, on November 30 a Trump campaign attorney called him an “idiot” and a “moron,” fuming, “He should be drawn and quartered. Taken out at dawn and shot.”<sup>266</sup> Writing a column in The Post, Krebs responded to the threat of torture and execution, and held firm.<sup>267</sup>

Also that evening, two Republican members of the four-member vote canvassing panel for the county in which Detroit, Michigan sits refused to certify the county's vote count, alleging what appeared to be trivial numbers of irregular votes. Their action threatened to disenfranchise the state's largest pocket of blue (and Black) voters, and to throw the state's electoral votes to Mr. Trump. It followed their personal campaigns on social media to discredit the election. A local and national uproar ensued. Within three hours they retracted their refusal, and a unanimous certification ensued.<sup>268</sup> But after Mr. Trump personally called one of the Republican panelists, both Republicans formally sought to rescind their votes to certify – which was legally impossible.<sup>269</sup>

As of November 18, Mr. Trump's Republican supporters had continued to lose almost all of their court challenges to the election count, but they also continued to mount more. Over thirty separate lawsuits had been filed across six states. Republican politicians who had demanded “proof” beyond proof of Mr. Trump's culpability in the impeachment proceedings now shrugged at the utter absence of proof to support his fraud claims. As reported by The Times, Giuliani and former House Speaker Newt Gingrich had made blanket attacks against cities with large Black populations like Atlanta, Detroit and Philadelphia, painting those places in evidence-free tirades as too corrupt to be trusted to hold honest elections. (It was one of the baldest acts of attempting to suppress the Black vote since the Jim Crow days in the South.)

And at last, with the resignations of expert election lawyers, Giuliani had taken over the nationwide litigation campaign, directing or encouraging lawsuits and/or recounts in Arizona, Nevada, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin. On that day, the 18th, he personally appeared in a federal court in Pennsylvania – his first federal courtroom appearance as counsel in 28 years. Critics said that his arguments there were outlandish (one called them a “wild conspiracy rant” alleging a concerted, nationwide Democratic fraud); that he was confused and uninformed (he forgot which judge he was addressing); that his requests for relief were preposterous (including for voiding the entire Pennsylvania election); and that he had generally made a fool of himself – yet again. On November 19, at a press conference, he and several other attorneys performed similarly, with rambling and fact-less allegations of a centrally-planned Democratic conspiracy and a “communist” plot to rig voting machines. Named conspirators included the Clinton Foundation, China, Cuba, George Soros, the long-dead Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez, and antifa. The conspiracy presumably also included large numbers of others whose collaboration would have been needed to make it work: thousands of poll workers, many hundreds of election judges, dozens of state electoral authorities, several dozen courts, millions of voters, and many Republicans among all of the foregoing. It was fantasy.

But critics also said that winning the various state cases was neither legally possible nor the Trump-Giuliani objective; rather, that their goal was to stall and frustrate the certification of the election by state authorities, so as to (a) enable Republican legislatures to ignore the popular vote and choose Electoral College delegates in Mr. Trump's favor; (b) discredit President-elect Biden's victory and fire up Mr. Trump's base for purposes of the latter's post-presidential afterlife; or even, to CSD's mind, (c) foil the president-elect's transition efforts out of spite, even at the cost of national security and urgent pandemic response.<sup>270</sup> A reporter for The Post wrote, “Judging by his actions, Trump appears to have a motive other than overturning the election. He is determined to cripple Biden’s presidency even before it becomes official. No defeated president has ever undertaken such an audacious and anti-democratic act.”<sup>271</sup>

Some Republican leaders assured that eventually reality would set in for Mr. Trump, even as he sundered principle after principle of American democracy.<sup>272</sup> But according to numerous polls released on November 18 and in the ensuing weeks, large majorities of Republicans continued to believe that Democrats had rigged the election and stolen a victory from Mr. Trump.<sup>273</sup> Mr. Trump’s successor thus could enter office with a third of the electorate convinced that his presidency was illegitimate.<sup>274</sup>

Also on that day, Arizona’s top election official, a Democrat, was reported to have been receiving violent threats.<sup>275</sup>

CNN’s fact-checker reported that Mr. Trump’s falsehoods had reached a new level, in which virtually nothing he was saying publicly was true.<sup>276</sup>

Observers characterized Mr. Trump’s behavior in the weeks since the election as solipsistic and dysfunctional: watching television in the White House (when not playing golf), ignoring the coronavirus pandemic as it surged to record levels, proliferating claims of voter fraud through scores of angry tweets, flailing and failing at changing the election results, firing officials whom he deemed disloyal, directing agencies to set regulatory fires for the president-elect to put out, refusing to hand off the government to the president-elect, and generally absorbing himself full time in trying to overthrow our democratic system – but little else.<sup>277</sup>

Having failed in his attempts to cause Detroit’s Republican canvassing panel to decline to certify the vote for their county, and having failed in Michigan courts to invalidate the vote, Mr. Trump now embarked on an even more brazen and mind-bending move, one unparalleled in American history. He turned to the Michigan legislature, to press it to usurp the popular vote (which President-elect Biden had won) and hand the state’s electoral votes to himself. Responding to Mr. Trump’s telephone call, the two Republican majority leaders of the state’s bicameral legislature met with him in the White House on November 20. Critics viewed the very idea of the meeting as a naked attempt to subvert the American election from the inside, and conceivably by means of bribery.<sup>278</sup> (After the meeting, the two legislators appeared to have resisted the pressure.<sup>279</sup>)

On November 21, the NAACP Legal Defense Fund sued Mr. Trump and his campaign for openly attempting to disenfranchise Black voters in Michigan – through their pressure on state and local officials – in defiance of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.<sup>280</sup>

As of November 20, Mr. Trump and his allies had won only one (inconsequential) lawsuit, and they had lost 32. The Times reported that the legal claims had not only been delusional, fact-free and anti-democratic, but had often been argued with a level of chaos and unprofessionalism uncommon in American courtroom proceedings. “Mr. Trump’s campaign keeps getting routed in case after case. Challenges keep getting tossed out by exasperated judges. Entire legal teams have quit en masse. Claims better suited to random Twitter feeds (or the president’s) have been laughed out of court after court.”<sup>281</sup> The Post speculated that competent lawyers had fled from

Mr. Trump on ethical grounds, being unwilling to violate their sworn professional duties by lying or bringing frivolous cases – actions that could net them fines or disbarment.<sup>282</sup>

On November 21, a conservative Republican judge at a federal district court in Pennsylvania, ruling on the case that Giuliani had embarrassingly argued there on November 18 in an effort to block the certification of Pennsylvania’s election results, found the case meritless. In a scathing opinion, the judge dismissed the case “with prejudice” – meaning that Mr. Trump and the other plaintiffs could not re-plead it before that same court, a humiliating outcome.<sup>283</sup> But the plaintiffs promptly appealed the case to the federal Third Circuit, a step above the trial court.<sup>284</sup>

As the legal case for overturning the election was collapsing, on November 22 the White House began defending its refusal to transition to the incoming Biden administration on grounds of utterly false claims that President Obama had declined to properly transition to Mr. Trump.<sup>285</sup>

A series of setbacks for Mr. Trump then ensued.

- On the evening of November 22, Watergate reporter Carl Bernstein tweeted the names of 21 sitting Republican senators who had privately expressed their loathing for Mr. Trump, and Bernstein called them out for their cowardice in having failed to go public.<sup>286</sup>
- On November 23, over 100 former Republican members of Congress and former national security officials who had served under Republican presidents issued a letter demanding that Mr. Trump stop intimidating state election authorities, concede the election, and allow for an orderly transition to the incoming Biden administration. They wrote that Mr. Trump’s recalcitrance was posing “a serious threat to America’s democratic process and to our national security.”<sup>287</sup>
- Also on November 23, the Michigan state election canvassing board certified President-elect Biden’s victory, despite one its two Republican members refusing to do so, contrary to law. Many Pennsylvania counties certified President-elect Biden’s victory as well. Those events followed the certification of the Biden victory by Georgia several days earlier.<sup>288</sup>
- Mr. Trump’s billionaire friend, advisor and supporter Steven Schwarzman told CNN on November 23 that it was time for the country to “move on.” That followed by a day a statement by Mr. Trump’s advisor and supporter, former New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, calling Mr. Trump’s legal team “a national embarrassment.” Several Republican senators had also publicly called on Mr. Trump to concede.<sup>289</sup>
- More than 160 prominent corporate CEOs wrote that Mr. Trump should accept the election results and begin the presidential transition.<sup>290</sup>
- The Pennsylvania Supreme Court refused to void thousands of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh mail-in ballots that had technical errors on their outer envelopes but showed no evidence of fraud.<sup>291</sup>

In the early evening of November 23 – almost three weeks after the election, and 16 days after television networks had projected the result – the director of the GSA authorized the transition from the Trump administration to the Biden administration to proceed. Mr. Trump approved that action by way of Twitter, even while promising to continue his fight to overturn the election results.<sup>292</sup> The transition then did proceed; except that, as of December 4, the Pentagon was refusing to allow members of the Biden transition team access to intelligence agencies under the Pentagon's control, such as the National Security Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency.<sup>293</sup> Within a day after media publicized that refusal, the Pentagon relented.<sup>294</sup>

On November 24, two battleground states whose elections Mr. Trump had been contesting – Nevada and Pennsylvania – certified the Biden win, joining Georgia and Michigan in that regard.<sup>295</sup> But Mr. Trump continued to allege election fraud – including by Twitter, and including at a fevered, rump, telephonic “hearing” before Pennsylvania’s Republican legislators on November 25 – and his lawyers continued to plot his attempts to overturn battleground state certifications.<sup>296</sup> On Thanksgiving Day, November 26, Mr. Trump hosted a dozen Republican Pennsylvania legislators at the White House, with a view to pressing them to seize the state’s electoral vote determination, as he had tried unsuccessfully with Michigan Republicans a week previous.<sup>297</sup>

Also on Thanksgiving day, Mr. Trump called Raffensperger “an enemy of the people.” As of December 1, he was continuing his bitter attacks on Raffensperger and on Georgia’s Republican governor for failing to rig that state’s presidential vote count in his favor.<sup>298</sup>

On November 27, three Republican judges at the Third Circuit threw out Mr. Trump’s appeal of the Pennsylvania district court case, with expressed disdain.<sup>299</sup> On November 28, a unanimous, bi-partisan Pennsylvania Supreme Court dismissed yet another baseless Trump lawsuit, “with prejudice.”<sup>300</sup>

On November 29, Mr. Trump gave his first post-election interview, on Fox. He held forth for nearly an hour, slinging baseless allegations of voter fraud, now even implying that the FBI and the Justice Department might be among the culprits.<sup>301</sup>

On November 30, media reported that Mr. Trump had raised over $150 million in political donations since Election Day, based on his allegations of election fraud. The funds derived largely from small-dollar donors. The fundraising appeals emphasized that donations would be used for Mr. Trump’s legal challenges to the election results. Only the fine print revealed that they were mostly destined for his leadership PAC, through which he could liberally use the money for other, broader political purposes – including, it appeared, even paying himself and his family. That itself had the aroma of fraud – tricking donors into sending him money for his personal gain, while trashing the American democratic system in the process.<sup>302</sup> As of December 3, the revenues had risen to $207 million.<sup>303</sup> The figure later reached $255 million.<sup>304</sup> As Mr. Trump exhausted his legal challenges to the Biden victory, and as two run-off elections for control of the U.S. Senate loomed in Georgia, the appeals for donations changed to indicate that the funds would be used for Republican campaigns in those races. But as of December 18, the PAC did not appear to have contributed to the Georgia campaigns.<sup>305</sup>

Newsweek reported on December 1 that social media were aflame with threats of civil war and other violence against Democrats should Mr. Trump be unseated.<sup>306</sup> The recently pardoned felon Michael Flynn retweeted a call for Mr. Trump to declare martial law and schedule a new election.<sup>307</sup> On December 17, Flynn repeated his suggestion that martial law could be imposed and a new, military-run election could be held.<sup>308</sup>

Also on December 1, Mr. Trump threatened to veto a pending bi-partisan military policy bill if Congress would not include in that bill a measure stripping social media platforms of their statutory immunity from libel claims. His motivation: during the 2020 election campaign, and throughout the post-election period, several prominent platforms – in the interest of truth, democracy and civil peace – had been flagging for their viewers some of his most false and incendiary messages as lies.<sup>309</sup>

On December 2, Mr. Trump released a video on Facebook in which – flanked by flags and fitted with other presidential trappings – he ranted for 46 minutes on how the election was being stolen from him. The video contained no new information or accusation, and no truth. Mr. Trump called it “the most important speech I’ve ever made.” It was indeed a video document that might live forever in infamy. The importance he assigned it was also consistent with his recent Twitter behavior: since Election Day he had tweeted 800 times, almost entirely about election fraud. Republican leaders across the country were now declining to comment.<sup>310</sup>

On December 3, the Justice Department blocked a White House aide from returning to its premises after having pressured DOJ staffers there for sensitive information about election fraud.<sup>311</sup>

Also on December 3, The Times reported that senior and rank-and-file election officials all over the country were being threatened with violence by Trump partisans. Republican leaders had declined to comment.<sup>312</sup>

The Times also reported that most House and Senate Republicans continued to refuse to acknowledge publicly that President-elect Biden had won the election.<sup>313</sup> More precisely, The Post reported that as of December 5, only 27 Republican members of the House and the Senate – out of 249 – had been willing to publicly acknowledge to The Post that President-elect Biden had defeated Mr. Trump.<sup>314</sup>

Having by now brought approximately 50 election fraud cases and having won only one of them, Mr. Trump and his allies lost another six on December 4, yet continued to file new ones.<sup>315</sup> Several of the judges denying relief had been conservative Republicans, and several had even been appointed by Mr. Trump himself. Judges seemed to be foregoing their ability to sanction the plaintiffs and their attorneys for bringing meritless litigation largely – a reporter speculated – out of concern that imposing sanctions could inflame their decisions politically and generate even more litigation (that is, around the sanctions themselves).<sup>316</sup>

In Pennsylvania, on December 4, the Republican controlled legislature refused to overturn the state’s popular vote by naming its own pro-Trump electors. Giuliani tweeted that the legislators were shameful and dishonest. Another of Mr. Trump’s attorneys, Jenna Ellis – as disingenuous and unqualified on election matters as Giuliani<sup>317</sup> – called the legislators “liars,” “cowards” and “traitors.” That move did seem to have an effect. Just hours later, some 75 of those legislators, including the speaker and the majority leader of the Pennsylvania House, urged that Pennsylvania’s congressional delegation challenge the election results when Congress would be called upon to certify the election on January 6.<sup>318</sup> Indeed, as reported by The Post on December

8, Mr. Trump had twice in recent days called the Pennsylvania speaker to urge that the legislature reverse his loss in the state, having repeatedly lost his pleas to that effect in court.<sup>319</sup>

On December 5, Mr. Trump asked Georgia’s Republican governor, Brian Kemp, by telephone, to pressure the state’s Republican legislature to appoint its own delegates to the Electoral College and thus to overturn President-elect Biden’s popular vote win. Kemp refused.<sup>320</sup> Arriving in Georgia shortly after that call, Mr. Trump held his first rally since losing the November 3 election. He was ostensibly campaigning for two Republican candidates in that state’s U.S. Senate run-off elections (one of whom had campaigned with a QAnon adherent, and the other under scrutiny for insider stock trading). But his speech was primarily a tirade about how the presidential election had been stolen from him.<sup>321</sup>

Armed protestors gathered at the home of Michigan’s Democratic secretary of state on December 5, accusing her of failing to stop the theft of the election from Mr. Trump. They shouted obscenities and chanted in bullhorns as she was installing Christmas decorations with her four-year-old son.<sup>322</sup> On December 7, USA Today reported that members of the Michigan legislature were receiving death threats for not throwing the election to Mr. Trump. One such member was a Black Democrat from Detroit who had received lynching threats.<sup>323</sup> All of those episodes followed the earlier plan by right-wing extremists to kidnap and execute Michigan’s Democratic governor Gretchen Whitmer, on grounds of her imposition of coronavirus restrictions, which the FBI had foiled less than two months previous (see the October 16 + entry above in this Addendum). All of the malfactors had been acting on rage that had been stoked by Mr. Trump; and none had been condemned by him.

On December 7, the Arizona Republican Party suggested to its Twitter followers that they give their lives – specifically, that they “die” in revolt – over the election fraud issue.<sup>324</sup>

Also on December 7, a Texas congressman suggested that his state secede from the Union over the contested election.<sup>325</sup> On December 10, the extremist radio commentator Rush Limbaugh floated the idea that all red states should secede.<sup>326</sup> On December 11, the leader of the Texas Republican Party also hinted at seceding.<sup>327</sup> Politico reported on December 21 that calls for secession – however indefinite, idiotic and impracticable – were gaining ground. The writer noted that those calls appeared to be grounded on “values” (whatever that meant, other than a possible belief in an ethno-nationalistic dictatorship, i.e., fascism) and “cultural differences” (understood, except that urban Texans were likely more culturally aligned with urban Pennsylvanians than with rural Texans). The writer noted that the secessionists probably preferred “nullification” over actual secession – a concept tested in the early 19th century that could now involve states simply defying federal law, a matter on which courts would then rule, but still of grave concern.<sup>328</sup>

On December 8, The Times recapped the many personal threats that Trump supporters had levelled against election officials in Michigan, Georgia, Arizona, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania – all battleground states that Mr. Trump had lost.<sup>329</sup>

Mr. Trump tweeted on December 6 that Giuliani had contracted Covid-19. Giuliani had been traveling around the country for weeks – buffoonish and mask-less – as he had mounted unsuccessful legal challenges to Mr. Trump’s electoral loss on baseless grounds of fraud.<sup>330</sup>

On December 8, the Republican attorney general of Texas, Ken Paxton, sued Pennsylvania, Georgia, Wisconsin and Michigan in the U.S. Supreme Court to invalidate their presidential election results. (Paxton was under indictment for securities fraud;<sup>331</sup> and his senior staff in the attorney general’s office was seeking his investigation for bribery.<sup>332</sup> Observers suspected that, in bringing the lawsuit, he may have been angling for a presidential pardon.<sup>333</sup>) Paxton’s argument was that those states had wrongly enacted or allowed election law changes that facilitated voting in the face of the coronavirus. Observers found the suit to be unprecedented, cynical, and without a prayer of succeeding.<sup>334</sup> Yet on December 9, Mr. Trump intervened in the suit in his personal capacity as a presidential candidate, and the attorneys general of 17 Republican states joined in supporting the suit too.<sup>335</sup> On December 10, Mr. Trump hosted a number of the attorneys general at the White House.<sup>336</sup> Also on December 10, some 106 Republican members of the House leant their support to Paxton’s suit; and by December 11, that number had grown to 126 (out of 196 House Republicans), including House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy. That is, well over half the House Republicans – many of whom had long worshipped at the altar of states’ rights – now were asking the U.S. Supreme Court to invalidate the election laws and the elections of selected states where they disliked the electoral outcome, and to disenfranchise all 20 million of those states’ voters.<sup>337</sup> On the evening of December 11, the Supreme Court dismissed the case due to lack of standing – that is, lack of a right for the plaintiff states to even place the issue before the Court. Apparently seven of the nine Justices, including Mr. Trump’s three appointees, agreed with that outcome; and the other two said they would have denied the plaintiffs’ claims in any event.<sup>338</sup> By way of Twitter, Mr. Trump reacted with outrage – at the seven Justices, at Republican state election officials who had refused to throw him the election, and at his attorney general William Barr for having foregone publicizing his investigation of Hunter Biden during the run-up to the election (see CSD’s entry about that investigation at pp. 26 and 27 above). He pretended that the other two Justices supported his argument. Claiming by Twitter that he had “WON THE ELECTION IN A LANDSLIDE,” Mr. Trump vowed to “fight on!”<sup>339</sup>

Also on December 8, the U.S. Supreme Court, without explanation but seemingly with disdain and unanimity among the Justices, had rejected a last-minute appeal of a Pennsylvania Supreme Court case by a Pennsylvania state legislator. His grounds had been that the Pennsylvania statute expanding mail-in voting, enacted a year ago by the Republican controlled legislature, violated the state’s constitution.<sup>340</sup>

By December 9, Mr. Trump and his allies had lost 51 lawsuits pertaining to the election.<sup>341</sup>

On December 12, thousands of mostly mask-less Trump supporters rallied in Washington to support Mr. Trump’s claims of election fraud. Attendees included pardoned felon Michael Flynn, conspiracy theorist Alex Jones, and 700 members and supporters of the extremist group Proud Boys.<sup>342</sup> Mr. Trump made three passes over the protesters in the Marine One helicopter, cheering them on. In the evening the Proud Boys roamed the streets looking for action, and four people were stabbed and critically injured. Mr. Trump did not comment on that.<sup>343</sup> At a contemporaneous protest in Olympia, Washington, heavily armed opposing groups clashed, and a right-wing extremist shot a counter-protester.<sup>344</sup>

As delegates to the Electoral College were organizing at their respective state capitols on December 14, Michigan’s capitol building and legislature were closed due to threats of violence.<sup>345</sup>

On December 14, the Electoral College voted 306 to 232 to elect Joe Biden to the presidency. The voting was in order, and perfunctory, pursuant to the results of individual state voting as certified by the respective state authorities, and pursuant to the U.S. Constitution. Those were exactly the numbers by which Mr. Trump had defeated Hillary Clinton in 2016, and which at the time he had called a “landslide” – even though he had lost the popular vote to her.<sup>346</sup> (President-elect Biden had defeated Mr. Trump by approximately 7,000,000 popular votes, compared to Clinton’s 3,000,000 margin.)

After the Electoral College vote, Mr. Trump continued to claim that the election was stolen from him.<sup>347</sup> Republican legislators in at least five battleground states that he had lost now undertook to form slates of “alternate electors” to supplant the actual electors, a fantasy concept that is absent from the Constitution.<sup>348</sup>

By that point, Mr. Trump and his allies had lost 60 of their 61 lawsuits contesting the election.<sup>349</sup>

On December 15, Mr. Trump re-tweeted a call for Georgia’s Republican governor and secretary of state to be imprisoned for failing to throw him the election.<sup>350</sup> A Republican state legislator in Virginia and another in North Carolina urged Mr. Trump to declare martial law.<sup>351</sup> After Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell at last recognized the president-elect’s victory, Mr. Trump chastised him on Twitter.<sup>352</sup>

On December 16, Republicans on the Senate’s Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee ranted for hours about the purportedly stolen election, trotting out witnesses to support that spurious claim. At least four Republican senators participated in the savagery.<sup>353</sup>

Politico reported on December 18 on the increasing calls by Trump supporters for him to impose martial law so as to prevent President-elect Biden from taking office.<sup>354</sup>

On December 18, the Pentagon suspended its participation in transition activities for the two-week Christmas holiday period, on grounds that its transition staff was “overwhelmed” by the process. The Biden team objected.<sup>355</sup> On December 28, the president-elect personally accused the Trump administration of continuing to block the transition, particularly on national security issues.<sup>356</sup>

On December 19, Mr. Trump proposed to his advisors at a White House meeting that he appoint Sidney Powell as special White House counsel to investigate voter fraud in the 2020 election. (Attorney General William Barr had declined to appoint special counsel for that purpose to serve within the Justice Department.) Powell was an attorney who had represented the felon Michael Flynn, who was a QAnon supporter, and whose wild post-election conspiracy theories charging voter fraud had been shot down by several courts and had caused even Mr. Trump's campaign to oust her several weeks earlier. Powell, Giuliani, Flynn and others attended the meeting. A Giuliani proposal for the Department of Homeland Security to seize voting machines, and a Flynn proposal for Mr. Trump to declare martial law, were also discussed. The meeting was characterized by shouting, as lawyers accused one another of failing to sufficiently support Mr. Trump in his efforts to overturn the election.<sup>357</sup>

Also on December 19, Mr. Trump urged his Twitter followers to attend a "wild" protest in Washington on January 6, the day that Congress was scheduled to certify the vote of the Electoral College in favor of President-elect Biden.<sup>358</sup> The Proud Boys and other far-right groups soon pledged to attend.<sup>359</sup> Mr. Trump tweeted the call to attend again on December 27, December 30 and January 1. Observers feared violence, such as the Proud Boys had provoked in Washington on December 12, and such as right-wing social media posts were now threatening.<sup>360</sup> The District of Columbia's attorney general feared violence as well.<sup>361</sup>

On December 20, Mr. Trump filed yet another petition with the U.S. Supreme Court, now seeking to overturn three Pennsylvania Supreme Court cases and to allow the state legislature to choose its own slate of electors. Under the law, success seemed impossible. And even if the Pennsylvania outcome were to be flipped, Mr. Trump would still lack sufficient electoral votes to win a second term.<sup>362</sup> A more probable motive in petitioning the Court was to continue firing up the base and advancing its contributions to Mr. Trump's leadership PAC.

Also on December 20, Mr. Trump re-tweeted a video that re-stated many familiar conspiracy theories, all alleging that the election was being stolen from him, plus another: that the coronavirus had been engineered in China, imported to the U.S. and then over-publicized by the mainstream media, all in an effort to make him look bad.<sup>363</sup>

Mr. Trump met with a group of Republican House members at the White House on December 21 to plot a congressional challenge to the recent Electoral College vote when Congress would convene to certify that vote on January 6.<sup>364</sup> The meeting had been convened by Congresswoman-elect Marjorie Taylor Greene (R-GA), the avowed QAnon supporter. As of December 22, Mr. Trump was threatening to "primary" those who didn't participate in the challenge; an internecine dispute had arisen among congressional Republicans on the matter; and Vice President Mike Pence had vowed to fight for Mr. Trump to the finish.<sup>365</sup>

On December 24, shortly after meeting with Pence, Mr. Trump shared a tweet calling for Pence – as the Senate's presiding officer – to force the Senate on January 6 to overturn the vote of the Electoral College (a legal impossibility).<sup>366</sup> On December 27, Louie Gohmert, a Republican congressman from Texas, sued Pence, in a fantastical attempt to force Pence to do that.<sup>367</sup> On January 1, a federal judge in Texas whom Mr. Trump had appointed dismissed Gohmert's case on grounds that the congressman lacked legal standing to bring the suit.<sup>368</sup> Gohmert reacted by calling for street violence.<sup>369</sup> On January 3, Mr. Trump announced that he would attend pertinent protests.<sup>370</sup>

Mr. Trump tweeted on December 26 that the FBI and the Justice Department "should be ashamed" for not pursuing his claims of voter fraud. He also tweeted that the Supreme Court was “totally incompetent and weak” for having failed to overturn the November election results.<sup>371</sup> (He had appointed three of the nine Justices himself, causing conservatives to hold a 6-3 majority on the Court. In the early weeks after the election, he had looked to the Court that he had staffed as an assured accomplice in enabling him to declare victory.)

By December 28, writers at The Post, CNN, Axios and MSNBC had reported with concern on the fears of administration officials that Mr. Trump – now surrounding himself with fringe advisors and conspiracy theorists such as Powell, Giuliani and Flynn – could take radical actions to retain power.<sup>372</sup>

Still maintaining that he had won the election in four swing-states where he had actually lost, Mr. Trump tweeted that Georgia’s Republican governor Brian Kemp should resign, for refusing to overturn that state’s election results.<sup>373</sup>

On December 30, Senator Josh Hawley (R-MO) announced that on January 6 he would challenge the congressional certification of the Electoral College’s award of the election to Joe Biden.<sup>374</sup> On January 2, eleven other Republican senators led by Ted Cruz (R-TX) announced that they would join Hawley.<sup>375</sup> Pence then said that he “welcomed” their effort and the related efforts of two-thirds of all House Republicans.<sup>376</sup> Observers noted that those calls to void the election results were highly selective, hypocritical and puzzling: seeking to overturn only the presidential outcome in the subject states, but not the election of Republicans to Congress in those very states where they claimed that the elections were corrupted.<sup>377</sup> One Republican observer wrote that the “party of Lincoln” had now become the “party of the Confederacy” – at once anti-democratic, racist and seditious – with senators from five formerly slave-holding states on board for the January 6 challenge.<sup>378</sup>

On December 31, Russell Vought, the Director of the Office of Management and the Budget, pointedly refused to allow his agency to proceed with the transition, thus further retarding the new administration’s ability to deal with the economy, the pandemic and national security. (Vought had previously distinguished himself by failing to control the national debt; predicting in February that the pandemic would not harm the economy; and engineering the administration’s orders to turn civil servants into political appointees, to cancel racial sensitivity trainings, and to freeze military aid to Ukraine. In 2016 he had written, “Muslims do not simply have a deficient theology. They do not know God because they have rejected Jesus Christ, his Son, and they stand condemned.”)<sup>379</sup>

On January 1, while alleging “millions of fraudulent votes,” Mr. Trump tweeted that the entire Georgia election process had been “illegal and invalid.” He expressly said that Georgia’s senatorial election, headed for a feverishly contested run-off vote on January 5, was included in that characterization.<sup>380</sup>

On January 2, Mr. Trump was recorded while telling Georgia’s secretary of state Brad Raffensperger to rig the state’s presidential vote count by “finding” 11,780 votes in Mr. Trump’s favor, and while subtly threatening Raffensperger with criminal charges if he refused. It was the 19th call made from the White House to Raffensperger’s office in the past two months in an attempt to arrange a direct conversation between the two men. The latest call was an hour long, and in it Mr. Trump variously cajoled, bullied, flattered, implored and insulted Raffensperger, as he (Mr. Trump) advanced numerous, debunked conspiracy theories about vote tampering. The falsehoods were not new. But the directive and threat to Raffensperger appeared to be not just anti-democratic but subversive and likely illegal – amounting to extortion, the solicitation of voter fraud, and an upending of the entire constitutional plan for democracy. The episode recalled Mr. Trump’s 2019 effort to extort Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky into helping him beat Joe Biden in the then upcoming election – an effort for which Mr. Trump was eventually impeached.<sup>381</sup> Some observers wrote, in all seriousness, that a possible defect in any indictment of Mr. Trump could be that he was so deranged that he hadn’t been aware that he was attempting to rig the election;<sup>382</sup> i.e., not guilty by reason of insanity.

Mr. Trump and his trade advisor Peter Navarro separately said on January 2 that Congress should begin investigating the election fraud claims, and that President-elect Biden’s inauguration could and should be postponed beyond January 20 while Congress did so. (The Constitution mandates a January 20 inauguration, and does not provide for postponements.)<sup>383</sup>

On January 3, in an extraordinary letter published in The Post, all ten living former secretaries of defense warned civilian and military leaders within the Defense Department not to become involved in or to undermine the election results – as though they saw the possibility of a military coup.<sup>384</sup>

Campaigning for Republican run-off senatorial candidates in Georgia on January 4, Mr. Trump mainly raged that the presidential election had been stolen from him, while berating and vowing to defeat any Republicans – such as Georgia’s governor and secretary of state – who failed to support him in that. He also urged Pence to overturn the electoral college vote when it would come before Congress on January 6.<sup>385</sup>

Citing not only the Raffensperger call but many other episodes and patterns, a reporter from The Times wrote on January 4, “President Trump’s relentless effort to overturn the result of the election that he lost has become the most serious stress test of American democracy in generations, one led not by outside revolutionaries intent on bringing down the system but by the very leader charged with defending it. In the 220 years since a defeated John Adams turned over the White House to his rival, firmly establishing the peaceful transfer of authority as a bedrock principle, no sitting president who lost an election has tried to hang onto power by rejecting the Electoral College and subverting the will of the voters — until now. It is a scenario at once utterly unthinkable and yet feared since the beginning of Mr. Trump’s tenure.”<sup>386</sup>

At 1:00 a.m. on January 6 – after Georgia voting results appeared to show that Democrats would regain control of the Senate despite a furious run-off contest and Mr. Trump’s (slight) personal campaigning there – Mr. Trump tweeted that Pence should reject the electoral votes of some states at the forthcoming joint session of Congress.<sup>387</sup> Later that morning, Pence issued a statement declaring that although (unspecified) election irregularities had occurred and state election laws had been violated, he did not have the authority to do that, “So help me God.”<sup>388</sup>

In mid-morning, Mr. Trump addressed protesters gathered at the Ellipse near the White House. He urged that Pence obstruct the Electoral College, and he encouraged the protesters to march to the Capitol and to “show strength.” “We won’t take it anymore,” he said, and he promised he would march with them (he didn’t).<sup>389</sup> Giuliani, also presenting, called for a “trial by combat.”<sup>390</sup> Donald Trump, Jr. – shouting obscenities – vowed to fight faithless Republicans in their future primary elections, threatening “We’re coming for you,” and claiming “This is Donald Trump’s Republican Party!” Urging the protesters on, he said, “You can be a hero, or you can be a zero. And the choice is yours. But we are all watching. The whole world is watching, folks. Choose wisely.” He too did not join the march.<sup>391</sup>

As subsequently reported, dozens of state and local Republican officials attended the rally.<sup>392</sup> A video later appeared in which a group of far-right Oath Keepers was seen as protecting and (seemingly) conspiring with felon Roger Stone – Mr. Trump’s friend and advisor whom he had pardoned just two weeks previous.<sup>393</sup>

At 1:00 that afternoon, the joint session of Congress convened in the House chambers to hear and confirm the Electoral College vote, in the following approximate sequence, as televised by CNN in real time. (All stated times are approximate, and are based on CSD’s own attempts to keep up and keep track.)<sup>394</sup>

- Senators marched across the Capitol to the House.
- House Speaker Nancy Pelosi called the session to order.
- Pence, as president of the Senate, began the Electoral College roll call, in alphabetical order.
- As had been expected, a representative and a senator objected to Arizona’s votes for Joe Biden and Kamala Harris.
- The Senate then repaired back across the Capitol to debate the objection within its own chamber, and the House began a debate in the House chamber.
- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell – heretofore an inveterate Trump apologist and supporter – denounced the undertaking of Mr. Trump and his congressional supporters to reverse the election. He even said that the election had not even been unusually close. He said that overruling the voters, the courts and the states “would damage our republic forever.” He continued, “If this election were overturned by mere allegations from the losing side, our democracy would enter a death spiral. We would never see the whole nation accept an election again.” Regrettably, toward the end of his speech, he savaged the press and the Democratic Party in essentially the same way that Mr. Trump had long done.<sup>395</sup>
- Masses of un-masked, un-distanced pro-Trump protesters moved from the Ellipse toward the Capitol.
- Capitol Police officers, supported by the Washington, D.C. National Guard, protected the building. No one was allowed to leave it, for their own safety.
- At approximately 2:15 p.m., protesters broke through the police line and climbed the Capitol steps. Police did not immediately push back, and did not appear to have been prepared.
- Protesters soon illegally entered the Capitol building. One of them was a member of the West Virginia legislature, who posted a video of his exultant entrance.<sup>396</sup>
- Bomb threats were reported. Congressional staff were instructed to lock down within their respective offices.

- Protesters were filmed moving through Statuary Hall, with a view to stopping the constitutional process of counting Electoral College votes.
- The mayor of Washington, D.C. declared a 6:00 p.m. curfew.
- At around 2:45 p.m. Mr. Trump tweeted that the protesters should be peaceful, but he did not call for them to stand down.
- At 2:48 p.m. an armed stand-off at the front door of the House was reported, and House members of Congress were being evacuated from the legislative chambers. That is, the congressional proceedings had stopped.
- Violence and tear gas were reported within the building. Members of Congress were advised that they might have to use gas masks that had been placed under their seats. Republican as well as Democratic legislators were reportedly frightened. They then appeared to have been evacuated, to undisclosed locations, seemingly within the Capitol complex. Pence also had been evacuated.
- CNN's Wolf Blitzer noted that the entire world – allies and enemies – were watching all of this in real time. (Blitzer was the son of Holocaust survivors. They had been imprisoned in Auschwitz.)
- Still photographs of armed stand-offs were posted on-screen.
- Police – Capitol, Park Service and Washington, D.C. Municipal – acknowledged that they were outnumbered, and they called for reinforcements.
- A photograph of a protester sitting in the seat of the Senate's president (Pence), raising his fist in rage, was posted on-screen.
- At 3:15 p.m., Mr. Trump's daughter and senior advisor Ivanka tweeted that the participants in the rampage were "American Patriots." (She later deleted the tweet.)<sup>397</sup>
- At 3:25 p.m., a live video showed the protesters breaking windows and entering the House side of the Capitol, as well as scuffles with the police below. A woman, later identified as a protester and a QAnon follower,<sup>398</sup> was reported to be in critical condition after having been shot in the chest. (She died later that day.)
- At 3:29 p.m., police were reported to have cleared the Senate side of the Capitol.
- At 3:30 p.m., Maryland and Virginia police forces were filmed as having arrived.
- At 3:39 p.m., the White House tweeted that Mr. Trump had ordered the National Guard to restore order; but Mr. Trump publicly maintained his silence.
- At 3:52 p.m., multiple police officers were reported to have been injured. (The figure later mounted to dozens.)
- At 3:53 p.m., the entire D.C. national guard was reported to have been activated.
- At 3:54 p.m., a still photo of a protester sitting in Pelosi's office and grinning appeared on screen.
- At 3:57 p.m., Pence made a statement urging protesters to leave the Capitol building.
- At 4:06 p.m., President-elect Biden addressed the nation, calling the events an "unprecedented assault" on the country and the rule of law. He called on Mr. Trump likewise to go on national television to fulfill his oath, defend the Constitution, and call for an end to the act of insurrection. Like Blitzer, he said that the world was watching. He called for "decency, respect and honor." He said that democracy is fragile, and called on Americans to work for the common good.
- A CNN reporter inside the Capitol reported that many parts of the building had been vandalized.

- At approximately 4:23 p.m., Mr. Trump released a video calling upon his supporters to go home, even while he alleged in fiery words that the election had been stolen from him by “evil” Democrats. To his supporters, he said, “We love you. You’re very special.”
- CNN called the second Georgia run-off election in favor of the Democratic contender. That victory, once certified, would give control of the entire Congress to the Democrats.
- A reporter asked rhetorically how the U.S. could now purport to insist upon fair elections and peaceful transfers of power in developing countries.
- At 4:59 p.m., riot police began gently removing protesters from the Capitol steps.
- CNN reported that this was the first time that the Capitol had been breached since it had been burned by the British in 1814.
- As night fell, the steps were partly clear, but the police remained far outnumbered.

The following events were reported by live MSNBC television news. (All stated times are approximate. As before, CSD was trying to keep up in real time.)<sup>399</sup>

- At 5:15 p.m., Congresswoman Chrissy Houlahan (D-PA), from a secure place within the Capitol complex, described the experience of being the target of mob violence.
- Video footage taken earlier showed hundreds of rioters within the Capitol, and at least one man carrying a large Confederate flag. In that or other video footage, one man wore a shirt with an image on the front, captioned “Camp Auschwitz.”
- The secretary of homeland security, the acting attorney general, and the acting secretary of defense thus far had all been silent.
- At 5:48 p.m., Tiffany Trump blithely tweeted birthday greetings to her brother Eric.<sup>400</sup>
- At 6:00 p.m., the curfew began, but many protesters were not obeying it.
- As first reported by The Times, suspected bomb scares had occurred earlier in the day at the Democratic and Republican national headquarters.
- The Pentagon was reported to have discussed activating the National Guard with Pence and congressional leaders, but not with Mr. Trump.
- At around 6:10 p.m., Mr. Trump tweeted that the protesters should go home, even though their rage was entirely justified. “These are the things and events that happen when a sacred landslide election victory is so unceremoniously & viciously stripped away from great patriots who have been badly & unfairly treated for so long,” he tweeted. “Go home with love & in peace. Remember this day forever!”<sup>401</sup>

The following events were reported by live CNN television news. (All stated times are approximate.)<sup>402</sup>

- At 6:30 p.m., the acting attorney general Jeffrey Rosen declared the situation “intolerable.”
- Congressman Jason Crow (D-CO) described being locked in the House chamber and having to lie down on the floor for his safety, within the context of having served three tours in Afghanistan and Iraq as an Army Ranger.
- Mr. Trump was reported to be keen that the protests continue. Calls by some Democrats and a few Republicans (including officials from the National Association of Manufacturers) for removing Mr. Trump as unfit to serve under the terms of the 25th Amendment to the Constitution were also reported.

- At 7:10 p.m., Twitter locked Mr. Trump’s account until the morning because of its incendiary content.
- At 7:30 p.m., Stephanie Grisham – Melania Trump’s chief of staff, Mr. Trump’s former press secretary, a persistent anti-democratic enabler and a serial liar – was reported to have resigned, presumably to try to somehow save her reputation.
- As of 7:40 p.m., many of the protesters were still not observing the curfew.
- Journalists were reported to have been threatened and assaulted in the course of the day’s events.
- Former President George W. Bush – silent for years on Mr. Trump’s offenses – decried the “insurrection,” which he called “sickening” and compared to episodes in “banana republics.”
- At 8:00 p.m., the Senate resumed its consideration of the objection to Arizona’s electoral votes. Pence condemned the day’s violence, and McConnell condemned the “failed insurrection.” A debate on whether to overturn the election ensued.
- By 8:35 p.m., a massive police presence had now assembled around the Capitol.
- At about that time, Mr. Trump’s former defense secretary James Mattis released a statement condemning Mr. Trump. “Today’s violent assault on our Capitol, an effort to subjugate American democracy by mob rule, was fomented by Mr. Trump,” Mattis wrote. “His use of the Presidency to destroy trust in our election and to poison our respect for fellow citizens has been enabled by pseudo political leaders whose names will live in infamy as profiles in cowardice.” He wrote that Mr. Trump would “deservedly be left a man without a country.”<sup>403</sup>
- At 9:00 p.m., the House resumed its consideration of the objection to Arizona’s electoral votes.
- At around 10:00 p.m., the Senate voted 93-6 against the Arizona objection. Apparently shaken and chagrined by the attempted insurrection that Mr. Trump had incited that day, and by their own experience in having had to hide under their desks only a few hours earlier, approximately eight senators who had previously expressed support for the objection had now reversed.
- The joint House and Senate session and the role call of states’ electoral votes resumed.
- At 12:15 a.m. on January 7, objections to Pennsylvania’s electors were raised, and the House and Senate once again proceeded to separate sessions.
- At 1:42 a.m., the Senate voted 92-7 against the Pennsylvania objections.
- Two-thirds of House Republicans voted in favor of the Pennsylvania objections. That is, they did exactly what the rioters had wanted them to do. Their number included eight of ten Republicans representing Pennsylvania, plus Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy and Minority Whip Steve Scalise – even though they had all earlier had to flee the chamber for their lives, under threat from fellow Trumpists. (They blamed the rampage not on Mr. Trump but on the alleged theft of the election.)<sup>404</sup>

The rioters had appeared to be largely White and nearly all male. Throughout the afternoon and evening, observers expressed incredulity and concern that the Capitol Police and other security forces had been so unable to protect the building; that some appeared to have had intentionally allowed protesters to enter; and that they had not arrested rioters who had entered. Some observers also speculated that had the rioters been Black, many would have been arrested or shot. (Eventually, in the weeks following the episode, observers widely recognized that the police had been outnumbered and that the large majority of them had acted heroically.)<sup>405</sup>

One defending Black police officer later reported that he had been called a racial slur “a couple of dozen times” during the rampage.<sup>406</sup>

Some of the protesters inside the Capitol were armed with baseball bats, knives, pikes and chemical spray.<sup>407</sup>

Throughout the afternoon and evening of January 6, reports grew that White House staff and advisers were finding Mr. Trump increasingly unstable, even “ranting and raving.” (Reporters included CNN’s Jim Acosta, and The Post’s Phil Rucker appearing on MSNBC.) Reports of Cabinet members (including Secretary of the Treasury Steven Mnuchin and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo) discussing whether to attempt to invoke the 25th Amendment also accumulated.<sup>408</sup> At 10:37 p.m., MSNBC cited reports that Mr. Trump had watched the invasion of the Capitol on television with pleasure.

Contemporaneous protests – many threatening and/or unlawful – occurred at the statehouses in Arizona, Oregon, Texas, Colorado, Kansas, Georgia, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and California.<sup>409</sup>

Reflecting on events of the past several weeks, a columnist for The Post wrote, “Trump’s inept legal challenges amounted to a clownish coup attempt. The Cruz-Hawley scheme amounted to a bloodless coup attempt. And now, Trump has induced his MAGA mob to a violent coup attempt.”<sup>410</sup>

Observers struggled to evaluate to what extent previously loyal Republicans who now were disowning Mr. Trump (a) were sincere in their changes of heart, or simply flowing with the tide for the sake of their future careers; (b) now perceived Mr. Trump to have been inchoately or even actually treacherous since the beginning of his presidential term, as opposed to his having perpetrated his first grievous misdeed on January 6; (c) would be chastened with respect to their party’s broadly anti-democratic behavior in any respect other than the events of January 6; and (d) would mend their ways after Mr. Trump’s departure, even under threat of his vengeance.

Media reported that world leaders had watched the assault in real-time. America’s allies had reacted with shock, dismay and concern; our adversaries with triumph and finger-wagging, and with mockery about the U.S. purporting to lecture other countries for shortcomings in their respective democracies. Many, including Germany’s Angela Merkel and Canada’s Justin Trudeau, laid the blame frankly at the feet of Mr. Trump.<sup>411</sup>

On January 6, some 3,800 Americans died from Covid-19, for a cumulative total of 360,000. Mr. Trump was silent about that.

CNN’s live television reporting continued on January 7 (all times are approximate):

- At 4:00 a.m., in joint session, Pence certified the Electoral College victory of Joe Biden and Kamala Harris.
- Mr. Trump issued a statement: still maintaining that the election was stolen from him, but now, for the first time, pledging an orderly transition of power on January 20. He wrote, “[T]his represents the end of the greatest first term in presidential history ...,” and he vowed to continue his “fight” to Make America Great Again.
- At 7:57 a.m., CNN reported that Mick Mulvaney – Mr. Trump’s former acting chief of staff and now his envoy to Northern Ireland – had resigned, like Grisham, apparently trying to salvage his reputation but without substantive impact. Matt Pottinger, the deputy national security advisor, had also resigned.
- Giuliani condemned the violence that he had helped to incite (having called for “trial by combat” at the pre-riot rally).<sup>412</sup>
- At 8:01 a.m., CNN reported (probably after having reported the same earlier in the morning) that Mr. Trump was furious with Pence. CNN also reported that Cabinet members were now openly discussing invoking the 25th Amendment before Mr. Trump could do further damage to the country.
- At 8:26 a.m., Congressman Jason Crow, the former Army Ranger (see above) and former impeachment manager, told CNN that as he was trying to protect his fellow legislators during the siege of the House chamber, he was contemplating the possibility that he would have to fight his way out with a pen.
- At 8:48 a.m., a CNN reporter who had been speaking with the rioters described them as largely in their 40s and 50s, and absolutely confirmed in their belief that the election was stolen from them.
- At 9:54 a.m., CNN reported on public statements from Russia and Iran gloating about the fragility of American democracy, and it played video clips of the leaders of France and Germany expressing their concerns.
- At 10:16 a.m., CNN reported that four-star General Stephen Townsend, in charge of the U.S. Africa Command, had just told his troops that “our Constitution remains our bedrock, and our system of government is strong, resilient and will prevail.” CNN’s military reporter Barbara Starr interpreted the statement as an implicit acknowledgment of the troops’ concern and an implicit denunciation of Mr. Trump.
- At 10:17 a.m., CNN reported that Ryan Tully, the National Security Council’s director of European and Russian affairs, had resigned.
- At 11:02 a.m., Former Attorney General William Barr, a pro-authoritarian and one of Mr. Trump’s chief enablers who had left the sinking ship only two weeks previously, said that Mr. Trump had betrayed his office and his supporters.
- Adam Kinzinger of Illinois became the first (and only) House Republican to call for Mr. Trump’s removal pursuant to the 25th Amendment.<sup>413</sup>
- At 11:20 a.m., CNN reported that Facebook had indefinitely suspended Mr. Trump’s account.
- At 12:19 p.m., CNN reported that Mr. Trump was isolated, raging, unrepentant, and plotting vengeance against Republicans who had turned on him.
- At 1:18 p.m., Congressman Seth Moulton (D-MA), a four-tour Marine veteran of the Iraq war, said that Democrats had begun drafting new articles of impeachment.

- At 1:38 p.m., Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao resigned. She would now be safe from having to consider invoking the 25th Amendment with the rest of the Cabinet.
- At 2:28 p.m., CNN televised Pelosi's call for Pence and the Cabinet to invoke the 25th Amendment, and her vow to impeach Mr. Trump again if he were not removed pursuant to the amendment.
- At 2:50 p.m., CNN reported that Hawley had distributed a fundraising message during the assault on the Capitol.
- At around 4:30 p.m., Mr. Trump's former chief of staff John Kelly told interviewer Jake Tapper that the 25th Amendment should be invoked.
- At around 7:00 p.m., a Capitol Police officer who had been assaulted during the rampage was reported to have died, bringing the death toll to five: the protester who had been shot by defending security officers, two protesters who had died from non-violent causes, one protester who had been trampled in a surge of the crowd, and now the Capitol Police officer. The officer was the sixth from the force to die in the line of duty since 1952, and the fourth on Capitol grounds. Flags were flown at half-mast at the Capitol in his honor, but (until January 10) not at the White House.<sup>414</sup> Like the other four people who died, the officer was later reported to have been a Trump supporter.<sup>415</sup> Whether the broad affinity between police forces and Mr. Trump now stood to be shaken was not immediately obvious.
- A pipe bomb was reported to have been found on Capitol grounds, in addition to the pipe bombs found at the headquarters of the Republican National Committee and the Democratic National Committee the previous day.
- At around 7:15 p.m., CNN ran a video that the White House had just released, in which Mr. Trump, reading (woodenly and without sincerity) from a teleprompter, condemned the violent rioters, acknowledged that the administration would change, and called for calm, healing, national unity, and a dedication to faith, charity, loyalty and "one national family." But he took no responsibility for having incited the assault; he falsely said that he had immediately called up the National Guard as the rampage began; he did not concede that scores of courts had ruled against him or that he had lost the election; he said that the "only goal" of his scores of failed lawsuits had been "to ensure the integrity of the vote" and to "fight ... to defend American democracy"; and he promised that Trumpism was only beginning. Some of Mr. Trump's social media followers nevertheless scoured him, for having abandoned them in that video statement.<sup>416</sup> Media subsequently reported that as of that evening Mr. Trump had felt that most of the demonstrators were peaceful and that the rioters were being blamed unfairly in light of left wing riots earlier in the year; that he was then still mostly absorbed with his rage against Pence; that he had resisted appearing in the video; but that, under the advice of White House counsel, he had felt forced to do so in an attempt to avoid possible criminal prosecution for the events of January 6.<sup>417</sup>
- Education Secretary Betsy DeVos resigned, citing Mr. Trump's role in the rampage – and like Chao, freeing herself from the call to invoke the 25th amendment.<sup>418</sup>
- The White House fired a State Department official who had tweeted that Mr. Trump was "entirely unfit to remain in office."<sup>419</sup>
- The Wall Street Journal – Mr. Trump's perennial defender – called upon him to resign, for his "impeachable acts."<sup>420</sup>

- A video of a Capitol policeman being brutally stomped appeared widely. Reports of the incidence at the Capitol of weaponry, pipe bombs, Molotov cocktails, calls for a civil war, and clamors for death for Pelosi and Pence proliferated.<sup>421</sup>

By the evening of January 7, a split profile of the rioters had begun to coalesce. On the one hand, many appeared to have been generally witless, some clownishly attired, all filled with intense but turbid social grievances, and devoid of ideology, strategy or understanding.<sup>422</sup> Those who were not violently storming congressional offices and chambers seemed puzzled as to what to do with themselves once they had penetrated the Capitol.<sup>423</sup> A prominent historian later wrote in The Times, “It is hard to think of a comparable insurrectionary moment, when a building of great significance was seized, that involved so much milling around.”<sup>424</sup> Some also seemed naive – happy, for example, to have been filmed for social media, but generally surprised afterwards that they stood to be arrested or fired from their jobs. Afterwards, some boasted about their landmark accomplishment; others felt deflated, that Pence and Trump had betrayed them; yet others invented ever more elaborate conspiracy theories explaining their failure to have brought down the government.<sup>425</sup> In the end, they had not participated in a “coup” in any strategic sense, as when a military officer executes a crisp putsch; rather, they appeared to have simply been sent to the Capitol by Mr. Trump, as a mob.<sup>426</sup>

On the other hand, media promptly characterized some of the rioters as appearing to have had military training, military equipment and a disciplined approach to the job – the apparent fruit of pre-planning; and on January 10 Pelosi alleged that as well.<sup>427</sup> As more details emerged, dozens of people on the FBI’s terrorist watch list were seen as having participated in the rampage, as well as many current and former law enforcement officials.<sup>428</sup> On January 16, The Times reported on extensive fund-raising and mobilization efforts mounted by militias, QAnon followers, Christian radicals and other agitators that had preceded and had pointed zealots toward the violent confrontation at the Capitol.<sup>429</sup> On January 19, The Times reported that the FBI was investigating the Oath Keepers, a right wing militia group, as having plotted the rampage.<sup>430</sup> On January 20, Politico identified the Proud Boys as another FBI target relative to such plotting.<sup>431</sup> On January 30, The Post reported that the FBI had found evidence of a coordinated assault.<sup>432</sup> The Post reported additional evidence, including of planned assassinations, on February 11.<sup>433</sup> In these respects, the final manifestation on January 6 appeared to have been concerted.

So was the rampage at the Capitol truly an attempted “coup?” An “insurrection?” Or just a spontaneous fling by a band of ignoramuses, something akin to a fraternity party gone berserk? Pundits and political experts disagreed among themselves.<sup>434</sup> Statistical analyses eventually emerged.<sup>435</sup> But plainly the event had flowed from a years-long attempt on Mr. Trump’s part to poison the minds of Americans with falsehood and fury; that it followed a months-long effort on his part to subvert the Constitution and the functioning of government so that he could retain power unlawfully; and that all of that had culminated in a violent episode intended to impede the rule of law and to advance a potentially unstoppable, cognitively twisted, jihad-like movement of authoritarianism and white supremacist terror.<sup>436</sup>

A portrait of life in the White House in the initial aftermath emerged as well. Mr. Trump, as noted above, was reportedly dark, raging and isolated, “indignant, unmoored and psychologically fragile.” One of his advisors said, “He is alone. He is mad King George.” Some of his staff were avoiding him. Many wondered whether to leave. None publicly defended his role in inciting the rampage. The Post reported: “People who interacted with Trump said they found him in a fragile and volatile state. ‘A lot of people don’t want to talk to him,’ a senior administration official said. ‘He’s in a terrible mood constantly, and he’s defensive, and everyone knows this was a horrible mistake.’ Trump spent Wednesday afternoon and evening cocooned at the White House and listening only to a small coterie of loyal aides — including [Chief of Staff Mark] Meadows, Deputy Chief of Staff Dan Scavino, personnel director Johnny McEntee and policy adviser Stephen Miller. [Press secretary Kayleigh] McEnany also spent time with the president. Jared Kushner, the president’s son-in-law and senior adviser, was described as disengaged.”<sup>437</sup>

Politico reported on January 11 that Mr. Trump was too isolated and self-absorbed to engage in any governing duties or to mount a forceful defense of his second impeachment which by then had begun to take shape; that most of his lawyers were gone; and that he was spending his days insisting that he had won the election and calling the same sparse number of loyalists for comfort over and over.<sup>438</sup>

CNN reported that, in the wake of the rampage, Republicans had splintered within Congress; but that the base and Mr. Trump’s media allies had remained firmly in his camp, and that the majority of Republican voters who were surveyed blamed President-elect Biden for the rampage.<sup>439</sup> A prominent Republican pollster wrote, “The professionals are running away from a sinking ship, but his own supporters have not abandoned him, and they actually want him to fight on. ... He’s become the voice of God for tens of millions of people, and they will follow him to the ends of the earth and off the cliff.”<sup>440</sup>

CNN also reported that, in the hours following the rampage, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe and national security advisor Robert O’Brien had all received multiple calls from former senior national security officials and the leaders of major corporate national security firms urging them not to resign, for the sake of the country’s security, as Mr. Trump appeared to be “devolving into volatile instability.”<sup>441</sup> Other senior officials were similarly torn between leaving or staying for the sake of stability, and some of those staying were preparing to resist any illegal orders from Mr. Trump.<sup>442</sup>

The New York Daily News reported that several of the rioters had defecated in the Capitol, then tracked their feces through the halls.<sup>443</sup>

On January 8, roughly in this chronology:

- At 9:46 a.m., Mr. Trump tweeted that the 75 million Americans who had voted for him would never be disrespected or treated unfairly. He thus far had said nothing about the five people (including the Capitol Police officer) who had died during the rampage.<sup>444</sup>
- Mr. Trump also tweeted that he would not attend the inauguration of President-elect Biden – making him the first departing president to so refuse since the refusal by the impeached, racist president Andrew Johnson in 1869.<sup>445</sup>
- Pelosi conferred with General Mark Milley, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, about preventing a deranged and desperate Mr. Trump from initiating military actions or a nuclear war.<sup>446</sup>

- At its annual winter meeting, in Florida, the Republican National Committee condemned the rampage but joyfully praised Mr. Trump.<sup>447</sup>
- The first Republican senator, Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, called for Mr. Trump to resign.<sup>448</sup>
- Several members of both parties in Congress condemned Senators Hawley and Cruz for undermining the Constitution and for helping to incite the rampage, with some calling for them to resign.<sup>449</sup>
- Twitter suspended the accounts of Trump allies Flynn and Powell for spreading QAnon conspiracy theories.<sup>450</sup>
- Shortly after 6:00 p.m., Twitter permanently suspended Mr. Trump’s account, due to the risk of “further incitement of violence” – leaving him isolated not only from aides and politicians but from his 88 million Twitter followers.<sup>451</sup> His supporters in Congress and the media subsequently objected to the suspension, expressing more concern for Mr. Trump’s First Amendment rights than for the protection of the rest of the country under the Constitution, and unfazed by the possibility that Mr. Trump could continue to incite violence and insurrection if his Twitter feed were not taken away.<sup>452</sup> Asked if Mr. Trump felt “emasculated” by the loss of his social media platforms, the press secretary of his reelection campaign Hogan Gidley said. “The most masculine person I think to ever hold the White House is the President of the United States.”<sup>453</sup> (Possibly anticipating and channeling Gidley, Mr. Trump had earlier told Pence that if Pence didn’t withhold the Electoral College certification, he would be a “pussy.”<sup>454</sup>)
- The leader of the Southern Baptist Convention’s policy arm publicly asked Mr. Trump to step down.<sup>455</sup>
- At the White House, Mr. Trump privately expressed his regret for having released the January 7 video statement.<sup>456</sup>
- The Post detailed the extensive vandalism and theft committed by the rioters. Among other things, computers and files had been stolen; and historic artwork, historic architectural details and historic furniture had been damaged.<sup>457</sup>
- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, who had lambasted the objections to the Electoral College vote on the floor of the Senate on the day of the rampage, in a memorandum appeared to acknowledge the legitimacy of an impeachment proceeding, although he said it would not occur under his watch.<sup>458</sup> (With the Georgia run-off elections resulting in Democratic control of the Senate, McConnell would soon become the minority leader, and off the hook in that regard.) That is, he refused to oversee a trial of Mr. Trump, even while acknowledging that a trial might properly occur.
- The U.S. surpassed 300,000 daily Covid-19 cases.<sup>459</sup>

Media again reported that Mr. Trump had watched with pleasure on live television as the rioters stormed the Capitol, and had ignored the pleas of his aides to intervene to stop it.<sup>460</sup> Within a minute after the rioters had penetrated the Capitol, Mr. Trump tweeted his outrage at Pence. Two minutes later he called freshman Senator Tommy Tuberville (R-AL) on the floor of the Senate to urge him to delay the certification vote – precisely what the rioters were attempting to accomplish. The call was cut off when Tuberville had to evacuate.<sup>461</sup>

A Republican senator confirmed previous news reports that Mr. Trump had been “delighted” to see the rioters attacking the Capitol and couldn’t understand why his staff didn’t share his enthusiasm. The senator also reported with dismay that while he, other legislators and Pence were at risk for their lives, and while blood was being spilled at the Capitol, Mr. Trump had been rage-tweeting about Pence.<sup>462</sup> Mr. Trump reportedly never inquired about the safety of Pence, even after Pence had been whisked away to a secure location.

Editorial boards of newspapers across the country called for Mr. Trump’s immediate resignation or removal.<sup>463</sup> Contemporaneously, Trumpist social media voices were aflame with plans for renewed and scaled-up violence in Washington and state capitals, now in connection with the January 20 inauguration of President-elect Biden.<sup>464</sup> But, as previously reported, some of Mr. Trump’s followers had now turned on him, accusing him of cowardice for forsaking them after the rampage and for not following through with the insurrection.<sup>465</sup> Other right-wing social media voices, several prominent right-wing radio and television commentators (including Sarah Palin, Laura Ingraham and Lou Dobbs), as well as several Republican members of Congress (including Mo Brooks, Paul Gosar and Matt Gaetz) speculated that radical leftists had orchestrated the rampage.<sup>466</sup>

Media again reported that, during the rampage, journalists had been assaulted and their equipment smashed.<sup>467</sup>

Media published a startling video that captured the rioters first breaking through the police line at the foot of the Capitol’s steps, to the wild shouts of their supporters. The video made apparent that although the police had first resisted, within minutes they had been overwhelmed.<sup>468</sup>

Multiple reports emerged that some of the rioters had been seeking to capture and hang Pence for presiding over the confirmation of the Electoral College vote. (A makeshift gallows had been installed in front of the Capitol.)<sup>469</sup> On January 9, armed protesters at Kentucky’s statehouse railed at McConnell (a Kentucky senator) for not having joined in the objections to that vote, and they took a knee in memory of the QAnon-supporting protestor whom Capitol Police had shot dead.<sup>470</sup>

Media reported that Mr. Trump, in seeking to overturn Georgia’s Electoral College vote in the weeks before the rampage, had not just pressured the secretary of state to “find” votes to help him (as described above). He had also pressured a top Georgia election investigator to “find the fraud;” had pressured the governor to convene a special session of the legislature in hopes of overturning the results; and had caused the U.S. attorney in Atlanta to resign for failing to pursue false voter fraud allegations.<sup>471</sup> (In early March, a recording of the call to the investigator emerged.<sup>472</sup>)

Few Republican leaders now appeared to be sticking to their acutely inflammatory postures that had preceded the rampage. But few expressed regret for their prior complicity with Mr. Trump; those who did proffered excuses, including that Mr. Trump had recently changed for the worse; few joined Democrats in calling for his removal; and none who had raged about election fraud appeared to back down from their claims.<sup>473</sup> Nevertheless, many seemed to be launching new, plaintive calls for “national unity” and “healing,” while arguing that impeachment would be “divisive.”<sup>474</sup> As a case study, Pennsylvania’s Senator Pat Toomey – a man who had occasionally disagreed with Mr. Trump on economic and other policy issues but who had never called the man out for his cruelty, corruption and demagoguery, then who had announced in October that he would not run for reelection – was now quick to go on NBC and CNN to opine that Mr. Trump had “committed impeachable offenses,” and he called upon Mr. Trump to resign. He blamed Republicans for the violence, and blamed Democrats for driving Republicans to violence; but he would not call for impeachment, and he absolved himself of any fault.<sup>475</sup> (In 2017, when Mr. Trump’s anti-democratic behavior was apparent to anyone with two eyes to see it, Toomey and his staff had refused to meet with CSD’s representatives to discuss the matter.)

On January 9, a sixth person died as an apparent consequence of the rampage: a Capitol Police officer who had defended the building. On January 11, his death was reported to be a suicide.<sup>476</sup>

As of January 10, Mr. Trump and Pence had not spoken. Reportedly they finally did speak on January 11.<sup>477</sup> The Post then described blow-by-blow Mr. Trump’s pressuring Pence to overturn the election and his finally turning on Pence – a man who for four years had loyally prostrated himself before the president and his depravities in hopes of someday succeeding him.<sup>478</sup>

On the morning of January 11, House Democrats introduced a resolution calling for Pence to remove Trump by invoking the 25th Amendment. House Republicans blocked that effort, which would have required unanimous consent among House members.<sup>479</sup>

House Democrats then proceeded to introduce an article of impeachment against Mr. Trump, for “incitement of insurrection.” The document cited Mr. Trump’s incitement of the storming of the Capitol with a view to disrupting the certification of Joe Biden’s election, as well as Mr. Trump’s attempt to pressure Georgia’s secretary of state to rig the election there, and Mr. Trump’s repeated false claims that he had rightfully won the election. If the article were to be adopted by a majority of House members, Mr. Trump would become the first president ever to have been impeached twice.<sup>480</sup>

Also on January 11, the FBI warned that armed protests could arise at all 50 state capitols on or before Inauguration Day, January 20.<sup>481</sup>

On the same day, Chad Wolf, the acting secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, resigned. He professed that the reason was that his legitimacy as acting secretary, and the enforceability of his prior orders as acting secretary, had been challenged in court on procedural grounds. But it was only after the storming of the Capitol on January 6 that he appeared to have taken that challenge seriously enough to stand down. In fairness, he had fiercely condemned the rampage after the fact (although not during it), and he had forcefully called upon Mr. Trump to denounce it. But his departure-for-convenience created a massive hole in command relative to ongoing threats of civil disturbances around the presidential election.<sup>482</sup> Wolf was replaced as acting secretary by the administrator of the Federal Emergency Management Agency – the sixth person to head DHS in six years (by far a record).<sup>483</sup>

Also on January 11, Amazon shut down the pro-Trump social media platform Parler by blocking it from Amazon’s cloud computing service. Parler promptly sued.<sup>484</sup>

As of January 11, polls showed a significant minority of Republican voters supporting the storming of the Capitol. Their party at last had firmly discovered in itself a widening rift between those who primarily supported delusional conspiracy theories and those who believed in fact-based, democracy-based policy. With rising rhetoric, the former were now escalating their attacks against Trump critics such as Mitt Romney, Cindy McCain and even the usually deft chameleon Lindsey Graham. Corporations had declared that they were withholding campaign money from Mr. Trump, from Republicans generally, from Republicans who had voted against certifying the election, or from both political parties; and businesses (including the Professional Golfers Association and Deutsche Bank, Mr. Trump's last remaining major lender) were cutting ties with the Trump Organization.<sup>485</sup>

Polls released on January 11 and January 13 revealed that Mr. Trump's approval rating had dropped precipitously since December to a mere 33% or 34%.<sup>486</sup>

On the evening of January 11, new leaders of the Capitol Police warned House Democrats of three specific plots that Trump supporters were now developing for President-elect Biden's inauguration – including one to assassinate many Democrats and some Republicans, so that Republicans could take control of the government. The police and the National Guard were preparing for tens of thousands of armed protesters to appear at the event.<sup>487</sup>

Also on January 11, The Post provided additional detail on Mr. Trump's disinterest and paralysis on January 6 as Republicans trapped in Congress had desperately called him for help, and as he had raptly watched the episode unfolding on television. The Post wrote: "The man who vowed to be a president of law and order failed to enforce the law or restore order. The man who has always seen himself as the protector of uniformed police sat idly by as Capitol Police officers were outnumbered, outmaneuvered, trampled on — and in one case, killed. And the man who had long craved the power of the presidency abdicated many of the responsibilities of the commander in chief."<sup>488</sup>

Also that evening, The Post reported that several Capitol Police officers had been suspended and that more than a dozen others were under investigation for their possible involvement with or inappropriate support for the demonstration. Suspensions and investigations were also occurring within local police departments across the U.S.<sup>489</sup>

On the morning of January 12, Mr. Trump emerged from five and a half days of seclusion to address reporters outside of the White House. He denied having incited violence at the Capitol; said that his impending second impeachment was a continuation of "the greatest witch hunt in the history of politics"; and blamed Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer for the country's perilous anger and division. Then speaking again to reporters before boarding Air Force One at Joint Base Andrews, en route to a photo op at his border wall in Texas, he claimed, delusionally, that "everybody" said his speech at the rally immediately preceding the rampage had been "totally appropriate." He also disparaged "Big Tech," presumably for suspending his social media accounts. Although he expressly said that he wanted "no violence" going forward, his comments were interpreted by some as incendiary.<sup>490</sup>

In Texas, Mr. Trump boasted about the border wall and exaggerated it as an achievement. He also recited his fraudulent scare stories about immigrants – a recitation that one observer felt was recklessly or deliberately inflammatory following the Capitol rampage. He also said that impeachment would be very dangerous for the country – an insinuation that it could elicit a violent response.<sup>491</sup>

Also on January 12, media reported that Amazon and Facebook staff were being cautioned about threats to their safety at the hands of Mr. Trump’s supporters.<sup>492</sup>

The Justice Department revealed that it had charged 70 people with sedition and other crimes in connection with the Capitol rampage, and that it expected to charge hundreds. Many of those who had featured prominently in real-time television videos of the rampage had already been arrested.<sup>493</sup> (As of mid-March, over 300 had been arrested, and at least a hundred more were expected to be.<sup>494</sup>)

Congresswoman Liz Cheney (R-WY), third-ranking Republican in the House, said that she would vote for Mr. Trump’s impeachment. That made three Republicans willing to take that stand. The Joint Chiefs of Staff issued a memo to the entire U.S. military condemning the rampage at the Capitol and confirming that Joe Biden would become their commander in chief on January 20.<sup>495</sup>

(The following reporting was by CNN television news, except where noted otherwise. Times of day, as before, are approximate.)

On January 12, Mr. Trump’s mega campaign contributor Sheldon Adelson died. Mr. Trump promptly extended his condolences to the surviving family. He had not yet sent condolences to the family of the Capitol Police officer who had been killed by the mob on January 6.

At around 11:29 p.m. on January 12, a majority of House members again voted to resolve to ask Pence to invoke the 25th Amendment. Kinzinger was the only Republican joining in the majority.<sup>496</sup> Pence shortly refused the request.

Some 4327 Americans had died from Covid-19 on January 12, a new daily record.<sup>497</sup>

Also on January 12, Alex Azar – Mr. Trump’s characteristically hapless, disingenuous and servile Health and Human Services Secretary – resigned on account of the Capitol rampage. Conveniently, he timed his resignation to be effective January 20, the date on which President-elect Biden was expected to fire him anyway.<sup>498</sup>

On the morning of January 13, the House conducted its debate on whether to impeach Mr. Trump. A prominent Republican theme continued to be a call to “heal” and “unite” by not impeaching.<sup>499</sup> CSD likened that call to a hypothetical call by an unrepentant mob of vigilantes to “heal” and “unite” by not indicting one of its members who had shot someone in the heart. (For four years, culminating on January 6, Mr. Trump had shot our democracy in the heart.) We also likened it to a call by an unrepentant accessory to a rapist who, in the name of peace and unity, urged that the rapist not be tried. (For four years, Mr. Trump had been raping our democracy.)

At approximately 10:30 a.m., the House moved to impeach.

Live video on January 13 displayed the entire grounds of the Capitol as fenced-in and road-blocked, for security reasons. Even foot traffic was restricted. Security was reportedly higher and more visible than at any time since 9-11. Some 20,000 National Guard troops had been called up – far more troops than the U.S. then had in Afghanistan, Iraq, Somalia and Syria combined – to defend against domestic insurrection.<sup>500</sup> Media posted dramatic photos and videos of troops bivouacked inside the Capitol.<sup>501</sup> Plans were announced to shut down much of the District on Inauguration Day – an unprecedented level of shut-down for that city.<sup>502</sup> The Times reported, “Military vehicles and troops in the streets evoked images of Civil War-era Washington.”<sup>503</sup> Governors across the country had also called up the Guard, bracing for violence at their respective capitols, and with little help from and no coordination from Washington.<sup>504</sup> The FBI did, however, urge police chiefs across the country to be on high alert for extremist activity, warning of potential attacks on state capitol buildings, federal buildings, the homes of congressional members and businesses.<sup>505</sup>

One of the organizers of the January 6 rally that had preceded the rampage said that three Republican House members had helped him in his organizing efforts.<sup>506</sup> One Republican member of the House had tweeted the location of Pelosi’s office during the rampage.<sup>507</sup> A Democratic House member said on January 13 that she had seen Republican congressmembers leading people through the Capitol on January 5 in what had appeared to be “reconnaissance for the next day.”<sup>508</sup> Another Democrat, from Southeastern Pennsylvania, later reported having seen an irregular “tour” of the Capitol as well, in violation of Covid-19 rules; and several Democrats reported that the electronic emergency buttons in their offices had mysteriously been disabled prior to the attack.<sup>509</sup> Additional Democrats reported on a particular “tour” led by a particular right-wing congresswoman.<sup>510</sup> Yet another Democratic House member alleged that the rioters had likely been informed about the location of House Democratic leadership offices by Republican House members.<sup>511</sup> House Democratic Whip Jim Clyburn said on January 13 that, since the rampage, he had seen Republican House members trying to bring guns onto the House floor.<sup>512</sup> Huffington Post reported that one Republican House member who had been inciting Mr. Trump’s supporters prior to the rampage had been carrying a gun then, and during the House consideration of the Electoral College vote.<sup>513</sup> On January 12, a group of at least 10 Republicans, in violation of House rules, had skirted the metal detectors when entering the House as a protest to what they claimed were their 2nd Amendment gun rights.<sup>514</sup> On January 13, Pelosi proposed a $10,000 fine for lawmakers who refused to comply with weapons screening rules.<sup>515</sup> The outrage of the Republican offenders grew over the following days.

Still on January 13, before the impeachment vote, a Democratic congressman told MSNBC that many of his Republican colleagues were “paralyzed with fear,” that in his conversations with them the previous evening “a couple of them broke down in tears ... saying that they are afraid for their lives if they vote for impeachment.”<sup>516</sup> (After the impeachment vote, The Daily Beast reported similarly: that “several powerful Republicans on Capitol Hill spent the week whispering to one another that they didn’t want to vote to impeach the president largely because they feared doing so would cause Trump devotees to try to kill their families.”<sup>517</sup> A Democratic congresswoman said the same of Republicans on PBS.<sup>518</sup>)

Debate on the impeachment proceeded. According to one observer, Republicans were utterly unrepentant for their role in having alleged election fraud and in otherwise having stoked the mob on January 6. Their defenses consisted largely of (a) objections to the speed of the proceedings (although they had insisted on speed when denying Democrats the opportunity to field witnesses during the previous year’s impeachment trial in the Senate); (b) “whataboutism” relative to the previous summer’s urban riots (even though there was no allegation that any Democratic figure had incited those riots); and (c) the alleged “divisiveness” of impeachment. That is, little of the initial defense involved claims that Mr. Trump had not incited the rampage.<sup>519</sup>

On the late afternoon of January 13, the House voted to impeach Mr. Trump. It was the first time that Congress had impeached anyone twice, and the most bi-partisan presidential impeachment vote in American history. Ten Republicans joined the Democratic majority.<sup>520</sup> No Republicans had joined in the first vote to impeach Mr. Trump in early 2020.

None of Pennsylvania’s Republicans voted to impeach. Most of them had objected to Pennsylvania’s Electoral College votes, and they now continued to fan Mr. Trump’s flame-out.<sup>521</sup>

McConnell had been signaling since the previous day that he favored impeachment, and possibly conviction; but also that he would not urge other Republican members of Congress how to vote.<sup>522</sup> He was reportedly enraged at Mr. Trump – both for causing him to lose his position as majority leader due to Democratic victories in the two Georgia run-off elections, and for causing a mob to attack “his” Senate while it was in session. But after the impeachment was sealed, McConnell reaffirmed his vow to not allow the trial to occur until sometime after the Biden-Harris inauguration on January 20, at which point – again, by virtue the Georgia victories – Democrats would control the Senate, and McConnell would no longer preside.

The Post reported that Mr. Trump, spending his days watching television and “fulminating,” was ever more isolated in the White House – furious with even his closest advisors for their unwillingness to publicly defend his behavior around the January 6 rampage. He was even tiring of one of his last and greatest loyalists, Giuliani, and was seeking not to pay him for his recent months of advocacy (for which Giuliani had notoriously asked $20,000 per day).<sup>523</sup> Other media as well reported on Mr. Trump’s fury, isolation and functional collapse.<sup>524</sup>

Peter Meijer (R-MI), one of the ten Republicans who had voted to impeach Mr. Trump, revealed that he was wearing body armor to protect himself from Mr. Trump’s supporters.<sup>525</sup>

The Times reported that European populist parties that had until recently embraced Mr. Trump were now backing away from him and condemning the Capitol rampage. They reportedly now felt that populism, under Mr. Trump, had become associated with mob violence and with a leader seeking total authority – recalling for Europe mid-20th century fascism.<sup>526</sup>

The Times also reported that the acting attorney general, the secretary of state, the FBI director and the new acting secretary of homeland security had been publicly silent – a rarity on the occasion of a national security emergency. The Times concluded that they were keeping their heads down so that the press wouldn't ask them to criticize Mr. Trump; that is, fearing that if they answered the press candidly they would be fired and the country would be further destabilized. But as a result, no one at the top of the government was explaining anything or offering any assurances about the national security situation to the American people.<sup>527</sup>

On January 14, a Democratic congressman told NBC that he feared that some gun-carrying, far-right members of Congress could murder him.<sup>528</sup> That evening, another Democratic congressman said the same on CNN television.<sup>529</sup> A third Democratic congressman told CNN the same on January 15.<sup>530</sup>

On January 17, The New Yorker posted a lengthy article containing reporting from within the rampage, plus an accompanying video containing graphic images of the episode. The article also covered assorted protests, riots and other events leading up to the January 6 episode. Many other media outlets subsequently replayed the New Yorker's video. From the article and the audio, it was plain that the participants had been hunting Pence, Pelosi and other lawmakers in the Capitol. Many (variously) shouted Christian, fascistic, homophobic, racist, anti-Semitic, anti-communist, or anti-globalist threats, insults and claims. Several of the mob's leaders had petty criminal backgrounds. Some were ridiculous; all were enraged. Many expressed fervent loyalty to Mr. Trump; several referred to him as their "emperor."<sup>531</sup>

At least five of the participants in the rampage said during and after the episode that by storming the Capitol they were fulfilling Mr. Trump's call to action. On those grounds some publicly asked him to pardon them.<sup>532</sup>

A new CNN poll revealed that many days after the rampage, only 19% of Republicans believed that Joe Biden had won the election.<sup>533</sup> The Times reported that many Republicans, from Giuliani on down, were blaming the rampage on antifa.<sup>534</sup>

Multiple news outlets reported that attendance at the January 6 rally – far from being the spontaneous fruit of individual attendees – had been organized, promoted and funded by a daunting range of small, dark money, extremist, pro-Trump organizations and activists, and that some of Mr. Trump's campaign staff had assisted.<sup>535</sup> The campaign had previously paid nearly $3 million to the pertinent groups and individuals.<sup>536</sup>

On January 18, Pro Publica reported on a cache of 500 videos of the rampage that it had obtained from the extremist social media platform Parler before Parler had taken them down. The reporter remarked on the seeming diversity of the rioters (excepting that they were mostly White): from lunatics to seemingly ordinary people. He wrote: "There undoubtedly were some dangerous organized elements within the mob that attacked the Capitol. But what is scariest about these videos is that they show the damage that can be done by a crowd of unorganized Americans goaded and abetted by the leaders of an organized political party. The radical fringe is a cause for concern. The thousands of regular people whipped into a murderous rage is the real nightmare.”<sup>537</sup> Speaking on CNN, the reporter confirmed that the videos had captured several groups among the rioters holding prayer sessions while inside the Capitol.<sup>538</sup>

Multiple sources reported that, as of January 18, Mr. Trump – still out of sight in the White House and tending to little if any government business – was continuing to tell his aides that he had won the election.<sup>539</sup>

On January 19, The Post reported that 20 of the country’s top 30 corporate PAC donors had cut off those members of Congress who had voted to object to Electoral College results.<sup>540</sup>

On the morning of January 20, Inauguration Day, following a week sequestered within the White House with no public appearances, Mr. Trump bade farewell to the building, vaguely promised to return, and took a helicopter to Joint Base Andrews. He had not spoken to the president-elect since their final public debate.<sup>541</sup> At the air base, without recent precedent, he walked down a red carpet and received a 21-gun salute from a battery of Army cannon. Congressional Republican leadership snubbed the event. At approximately 9:00 a.m., he boarded Air Force One and departed for Mar-a-Lago in Florida – his final flight as president. As the plane taxied away, speakers blasted a recording of Frank Sinatra’s “My Way.”<sup>542</sup> (CSD had reported at p. 11 of this Chronology, on January 20, 2017, that Mr. Trump and his wife Melania had led the dance floor at his inaugural celebration to the same rendition of “My Way.”<sup>543</sup>)

Before a spare, masked and socially distanced crowd, at 12:00 noon on January 20, Joe Biden was sworn in as the 46th president of the United States. Kamala Harris was sworn in as vice president. 25,000 National Guard troops protected them, the Capitol complex, and our country.

The Impeachment Concludes;
The End after the End

The Times reported on January 22 that only one day after Barr had announced his resignation in mid-December, Mr. Trump had begun pressuring his replacement, acting Attorney General Jeffrey Rosen, to file briefs in support of various meritless election fraud claims that Mr. Trump’s allies had brought, and to appoint special counsels to investigate those claims. Rosen had resisted, adhering to Barr’s conclusion that widespread fraud simply had not occurred. Mr. Trump had then sought to replace Rosen with an underling who had been willing and eager to force the Georgia legislature to overturn that state’s presidential election results. Only after all of the department’s top officials threatened to resign did Mr. Trump abandon the plan.<sup>544</sup> The Wall Street Journal subsequently added that Mr. Trump had urged the department to go directly to the U.S. Supreme Court to try to overturn the election results.<sup>545</sup> The various schemes had occurred in parallel with Mr. Trump’s efforts to extort Georgia’s secretary of state into throwing that state’s election results to him. They were thus of a piece with Mr. Trump’s many efforts to subvert the Constitution and overthrow the newly elected American government.

Mr. Trump’s impeachment proceedings continued. Responding to new threats to the lives of members of Congress in anticipation of Mr. Trump’s impeachment trial in the Senate, Capitol

Police and other federal law enforcement officials asked that thousands of National Guard Troops remain deployed in Washington.<sup>546</sup>

On January 24, the Arizona Republican Party censured the state's Republican governor Doug Ducey, its former Republican U.S. senator Jeff Flake, and the late Republican senator John McCain's widow Cindy for refusing to support the overturning of the election.<sup>547</sup>

On January 25, the (Democratic) House impeachment managers walked through the Capitol to the Senate and then presented the article of impeachment to the latter body.<sup>548</sup>

On January 26, the Senate voted 55-45 to reject a Republican motion to dismiss the second impeachment of Mr. Trump. That is, only five Republican senators indicated a willingness to entertain the proceeding. The now minority leader McConnell was among those voting to dismiss.<sup>549</sup> (Only three weeks earlier, on the Senate floor, in the heat of the moment after narrowly escaping the mob's wrath in that very space, he had roundly denounced Mr. Trump; and days later he had hinted that he favored impeachment and conviction. Apparently, his wounds had healed.)

Also on January 26, the Oregon Republican Party announced its position that the January 6 rampage at the Capitol had been engineered by Democrats to discredit Mr. Trump. The party said that the rampage was thus akin to the February 1933 burning of the German Reichstag – a false flag operation, likely engineered by fascists, which had led to Hitler's rise to power – with the Democrats now as the arsonists. The party also compared those Republicans in Congress who had voted to impeach Mr. Trump to the Revolutionary War traitor Benedict Arnold.<sup>550</sup>

On January 27, media reported that a second police officer who had defended the Capitol on January 6 died by suicide. Sixty-five officers had been injured.<sup>551</sup>

The Times reported on January 29 that at least five current members of Congress – all far-right firebrands and Trump supporters – at that time had ties to militias and other extreme right-wing groups: Paul Gosar (R-AZ), Andy Biggs (R-AZ), Lauren Boebert (R-CO), Marjorie Taylor Greene (R-GA), and Matt Gaetz (R-FL).<sup>552</sup>

On February 9, the House impeachment managers crossed the Capitol to the Senate chambers, and Mr. Trump's second impeachment trial commenced. First, they presented a composite video of Mr. Trump's incitement of the rampage. Citing the language of the Constitution and historical precedent, they then contested the Republican claim that a president can not be tried for impeachment after the end of his or her term.<sup>553</sup> Mr. Trump's lawyers defended, including by stoking irrational cultural hatreds and by claiming that his conviction would result in a second civil war.<sup>554</sup> The Senate nevertheless voted 56-44 that the president could be constitutionally tried, with six Republicans joining 50 Democrats.<sup>555</sup> And so the trial proceeded.

(By bipartisan consensus, Mr. Trump's lawyers had performed poorly, even laughably, that day. Unlike in the first impeachment, Mr. Trump had been unable to retain any top-tier legal talent to represent him in the current matter.)

On February 10 and 11, the House impeachment managers made their main substantive case, including by way of a second video, this one showing in breathtaking detail, among other things, how close the rioters had come to seizing the senators that they had sought to harm. Observers, including many Republican members of Congress, praised the managers' intellect, their style, and the power of their presentation. But although some Republican senators seemed to be shaken by the video, by the second day of the presentation many looked to be bored, and others drifted away.<sup>556</sup> At one point three leading Republicans were seen huddling with Mr. Trump's lawyers to talk strategy, an outright violation of their sworn oath to judge him impartially – just as McConnell, then the Senate majority leader, had blatantly conferred with defending counsel during Mr. Trump's first impeachment trial.<sup>557</sup>

One of CNN's regular pro-Trump commentators – a Republican insider who had stopped defending the man after January 6 – posited that, based on his information, if the Senate were to vote in secret, the count would be 90 to 10 in favor of conviction.<sup>558</sup> That is to say, the Senate Republicans who were now against conviction were defending their jobs, not their beliefs.

On February 12, Mr. Trump's attorneys mounted their formal defense, including with their own video that featured angry Democratic politicians and angry rioters of color at previous venues. Counsel argued falsely that the January 6 rioters had acted independently – without Mr. Trump's encouragement – and that some of them had been antifa. They ignored months of Mr. Trump's pre-riot harangues that the election had been rigged and that his supporters needed to act in order to correct that abomination. Altogether, critics viewed the defense as light on law and facts, heavy on falsehood and on cultural and racial grievance. In the end, defense counsel used only a fraction of its allotted time. Some compared their presentation to a Trump rally or press conference.<sup>559</sup>

That evening, CNN reported that, during the siege of the Capitol, the House minority leader had told Mr. Trump by phone that the life of his vice president, Mike Pence, was in danger; that the two men had shouted at each other; and that Mr. Trump had expressed no interest in stopping the rampage.

On February 13, after some controversy, that account was placed in the trial record, and the trial proceeded to its conclusion.

Following closing arguments by counsel, the Senate voted 57 to 43 to convict Mr. Trump. Seven Republicans joined with Democrats in that vote. It was the most bi-partisan vote to impeach a president in American history. Nevertheless, falling short of the necessary 67 votes to convict, the Senate thus had acquitted him.<sup>560</sup> He was now also free to run for president again in 2024.<sup>561</sup>

Mr. Trump thus had effectively fulfilled his 2016 campaign boast: "I could stand in the middle of Fifth Avenue and shoot somebody and I wouldn't lose voters."<sup>562</sup>

The headline of a Post opinion column summarized: "Trump left them to die. 43 Senate Republicans still licked his boots."<sup>563</sup>

Immediately after the vote, McConnell – an inveterate Trump enabler until the January 6 events – explained his vote to acquit on grounds that a former president couldn't be convicted, while otherwise excoriating Mr. Trump on the basis of the Democrats' arguments and suggesting that he could be prosecuted for his crimes. In truth, most legal scholars had concurred that a former president can be convicted; the majority of the Senate had so voted; and it was McConnell, while majority leader, who for months had declined to counter Mr. Trump's claim of a rigged election, and who ultimately had prevented the Senate from voting on the impeachment charges while Mr. Trump was still in office.<sup>564</sup> Critics charged that, following McConnell's reasoning, future presidents could again commit horrendous offenses near the end of their terms, secure in the belief that they could avoid impeachment and conviction.<sup>565</sup>

But based in part on McConnell's speech, and on McConnell's vote to acquit on a procedural technicality, President Biden said that "the substance of the charge" against Mr. Trump did not appear to have been the subject of serious dispute. Mr. Trump, for his part, boasted that he had been exonerated yet again from "the greatest witch hunt in the history of our Country"; that he was the champion of the rule of law and of law enforcement officers; that it was Democrats who rejected the rule of law; and that he would remain politically active. He said nothing about the attack on the Capitol, and he showed no remorse for what he had done.<sup>566</sup>

A legal scholar wrote in Politico: "This acquittal sends at least three dangerous messages to future presidents. First, you can with impunity use every weapon in a relentless effort to overturn the results of a free and fair election. Some of these weapons are more legitimate, such as recounts and lawsuits, than others, such as pressuring state officials, ignoring 62 losses in court and seeking intervention by government officials. The acquittal also shows that a president can incite a violent, armed mob to overtake and ransack the Capitol in order to cut short the constitutionally mandated vote certification without accountability. And third, it is now almost impossible to imagine a presidential offense that would lead to conviction in the Senate."<sup>567</sup>

At the end of the day, CSD believes that the sincerity and eloquence of the House managers' presentations, the foul, shabby and amateurish rebuttals by Mr. Trump's attorneys, and the video record of the entire proceeding will stand for decades, if not centuries, as monuments to justice powerfully asserted and cynically foiled. But whether they will have portended the end of American democracy or the beginning of its resurgence would not be known for some time.

Concluding Observations

The voting results of the November election were telling. President Biden did not win by a popular vote landslide, and Mr. Trump captured most of the states he had captured in 2016. Had a mere 45,000 votes in three swing states gone the other way, he would have achieved an Electoral College tie and Congress would have then chosen him to be president.<sup>568</sup> He prevailed even in many states and counties that had been hardest-hit by the coronavirus.<sup>569</sup> Democrats lost seats in the House of Representatives. In other words, after all of Mr. Trump's depravity during the preceding four years, the popular view of him and his party, statistically speaking, had not changed much; the voting pool on both sides was simply more angry, frightened and energized. To America's shame, and to the disadvantage of democracy everywhere, foreign observers were dismayed that Mr. Trump and his party had defied the election results, and that "Trumpism" itself had not been broadly rejected by the electorate. Government voices in China, Russia and Iran ridiculed the U.S. Whether and how we might hope to “teach” democracy overseas was now ever more in question.<sup>570</sup>

In addition, the massive vote-suppression machinery rolled out by Mr. Trump’s party would remain in place for the next election and a blot on our nation’s history forever. As the ballots were still being counted, a columnist from The Post had re-capped:

- They fought against absentee voting despite the raging pandemic.
- They sabotaged the U.S. Postal Service so mail-in ballots wouldn’t be returned on time.
- Then they filed suit so late-arriving ballots wouldn’t be counted.
- They sued to stop people from returning ballots in a drive-through setting.
- They sued to limit the days of early voting.
- They sued to disqualify ballots if a signature didn’t exactly match the one on file from years earlier.
- They restricted ballot-drop sites to disadvantage large counties full of Democratic voters.
- They purged eligible voters, particularly voters of color, from the rolls, and they imposed ID requirements and restricted voting locations and hours in ways that disproportionately disenfranchise non-Whites.
- They fought to keep ex-felons from getting their voting rights restored.
- They fought to keep Native Americans on reservations from voting.
- They harassed voters returning their ballots by videotaping them.
- They encouraged armed militias to patrol polling places.
- On Election Day, after the U.S. Postal Service, now run by a Republican megadonor, reported on-time delivery rates below 90 percent and disclosed that it could not trace more than 300,000 ballots it had collected, a federal judge ordered the Postal Service to sweep its facilities for “held up” ballots. The Postal Service, represented by Trump Justice Department lawyers, disregarded the court order.”<sup>571</sup>

Indeed, in the weeks following President Biden’s inauguration, Republican controlled statehouses across the country began engineering even further restrictions on voting – all intended to suppress Democratic participation, and all in the name of protecting the integrity of elections against voter fraud.<sup>572</sup> As of March 11, at least 250 laws intended to suppress voting had been proposed, across 43 states.<sup>573</sup>

But there were grounds for Americans to congratulate one another. Record numbers of citizens voted, despite unprecedented efforts by the Republican Party to discourage some of them (mainly Democrats) from doing so. Most voters managed successfully to navigate the coronavirus pandemic, often with the help of new accommodations for their safety and travel created by local communities and election officials. Many put up with long lines at the polls in order to vote, sometimes in challenging weather. The sturdy efforts of postal workers – combined with the orders of several federal judges – resulted in the timely delivery of the vast majority of mailed-in ballots, notwithstanding the suspected efforts of the Postal Service’s political leadership to derail the election.<sup>574</sup> The extraordinary efforts of election officials and poll workers produced a credible counting of both mailed-in and in-person ballots, in the face of intense time pressure and political fever. (On December 16, The Times profiled Philadelphia's lone Republican City Commissioner – one of three city commissioners, whose jobs are to oversee elections. In helping to deliver an honest vote count, he had heroically withstood shrill, public denunciations by Mr. Trump, Giuliani, Lewandowski and others in his party, as well as death threats targeting him and his family.<sup>575</sup>) Polling places avoided major disturbances, and the military stayed away from them. No major computer hacking, misinformation campaign or other interference by foreign actors appeared to have succeeded. A woman of color was elected vice president. Although the fathomless wrongness, wantonness and stupidity of left-wing urban rioters had depressed Democratic wins, enough voters had been able to look past them toward a better American future. Despite the lawlessness of the president and the pre-election puffery of armed right-wing extremists, hundreds of millions of Americans, however unnerved, remained law-abiding.<sup>576</sup>

In addition, after all, Mr. Trump had indeed been defeated, by a margin of 7 million popular votes out of 169 million (51.3% for Joe Biden and 46.8% for Mr. Trump), and by 74 out of 538 electoral votes (56.9% for Biden and 43.1% for Mr. Trump).<sup>577</sup> He had lost despite his advantage as an incumbent, his bully pulpit as president, his diabolical showmanship, and his massive disinformation campaign. By a relatively slim margin, the country had gained an opportunity to re-set its trajectory. President Biden had the potential to govern and to lead the country out of its cultural and political crisis, from the center.

Still, the election results demonstrated that the country hadn't changed much. Although a good number of electoral votes had swung away from Mr. Trump, he and his cruel, indecent and authoritarian behavior continued to command the loyalty of nearly half of the electorate, not to mention the acquiescence of millions of non-voters. Indeed, several million more voters – now fully informed of what he represented, and not particularly hating his opponent (as many had hated Hillary Clinton) – chose him in 2020 than in 2016. In exit interviews, few voters of either party cited the preservation of democracy or the restoration of a social dynamic based on the communication and acceptance of empirical truth as their primary reason for voting as they did.<sup>578</sup> Furious social division seemed likely to persist or even to grow, and the ordinary functioning of Congress likely to continue to stall. Possibly worst of all, a roadmap for the mechanics of stealing future elections had been established.<sup>579</sup>

As for Mr. Trump's future, he seemed unlikely to simply retire to Mar-a-Lago to play golf and hold court. A more active life would probably be more to his liking, and he reportedly needed to hustle in order to satisfy large personal monetary debts. Speculations included the following:

- The real estate business. Mr. Trump's business could become active again in launching new overseas hotel, golf club, office tower and resort development projects or licensing deals, using contacts and favors that he had accumulated while president in countries such as Turkey, Russia, Brazil and Israel where he remained popular. He could even become personally involved in the deal-making. Massive ethical challenges were not expected to restrain him.<sup>580</sup> But his brand – one of his principal assets – seemed to have taken a body blow.<sup>581</sup> Many of his businesses had plummeted in value during his term, particularly during the pandemic; thus his resources for leveraging them into new deals likely plummeted also.<sup>582</sup> And his reputation for deceit, exaggeration, capriciousness and litigation had gained so much exposure that CSD was uncertain whether governments, lenders and other potential partners would be willing to invest in or with him.

- The media business. “The Apprentice” had reportedly been more lucrative and less risky for Mr. Trump than the real estate business. In addition, since becoming president, he had gained a new asset – over 70 million political followers – who could now be turned into cash. His electoral defeat had likely galvanized rather than tamed his appetite for attention, adulation, political power and vengeance. And so he was widely reported to have entertained major media undertakings: to destabilize the Democratic administration and (like the Russians) America’s belief in our own democracy; to promote his loyalists as political candidates across the country; to select the next Republican contenders for the presidency, including possibly himself (see below); to bask in the buzz of media viewers and the press; and of course, to make money.
- Noise and money, without risk (1). Mr. Trump could limit his media activities to lucrative, paid appearances on existing networks, such as Fox. He could also profit from books, command high speaking fees, and charge admission to in-person rallies. In so doing, he could be vocal without tying up the vast energy and cash needed to start a new enterprise.
- Noise and money, without risk (2): In mid-November, several observers had written that Mr. Trump’s post-election litigation appeared to be less about overturning the voting results than about fundraising for other projects. His broad email appeals asked supporters for money to pay lawyers to contest the election; but the fine-print revealed that he would keep most of the receipts for his own newly formed PAC, called Save America – effectively a slush fund that he could use to help himself and political friends in their fight to degrade our democracy, even without the risk and stress of launching a new media business. He seemingly could also tap into the fund to pay his family, his businesses and himself for PAC-related services.<sup>583</sup>
- Litigation defense. As of the end of his term, Mr. Trump was facing a variety of personal lawsuits (for assault, defamation, fraud) and New York State civil and criminal investigations (for tax, insurance and bank fraud).<sup>584</sup> He was already in far greater legal jeopardy than any previous president,<sup>585</sup> and additional claims seemed possible as more data emerged. Going forward, some of his time and energy could be spent in defending those cases. He would defend vigorously, and interminably. CSD doubts that he would go to jail.
- Election, 2024. Mr. Trump could run for president again in 2024. But it was unclear to observers whether he could manage that at the same time as some of the other adventures described above – or whether he would tolerate the significant risk of losing again.<sup>586</sup>
- Treason. During the early days of Mr. Trump’s litigation seeking to undo his electoral loss, several observers raised concerns that after eventually leaving the White House he could choose to share state secrets with foreign powers, including America’s adversaries. He could do that for vengeance, for profit, or (as he had already done in the past) merely to show off.<sup>587</sup> National security officials feared extending to him the usual courtesy of post-presidential intelligence briefings.<sup>588</sup> In any case, CSD speculates (without actual knowledge, but based on the smell of the thing) that Mr. Trump could commit the greatest classified data dumps and the greatest acts of treason in American history.

- In sum. Mr. Trump appeared to have many opportunities before him to continue to draw attention, preen, boast, lie, divide, inflame and sow chaos, all while making money – both by instinct and as a matter of his chosen lifestyle.

In late February 2021, Mr. Trump appeared as the star of the annual (conservative) CPAC convention – raging and unashamed, to the adulation of the attendees. In his address there, he maintained that he had won the election; he railed against immigrants; and he called for electoral vengeance against Republicans (by name) who had voted against him in the course of the second impeachment proceedings. The crowd was reportedly emotional – in its affection for him and in its hatred of his foes.<sup>589</sup> Included in his speech was a solicitation for donations to his Save America PAC – a fund for himself; and millions of dollars, seemingly in small donations, instantly poured in.<sup>590</sup> Indeed, Republican grass roots fund-raising had continued to soar generally;<sup>591</sup> and, his appetite now whetted, shortly after the event Mr. Trump sought to divert all incoming Republican funds to his own PAC.<sup>592</sup>

During the same period, some leading Republicans – in defiance of all law enforcement findings – were continuing to maintain that antifa and other left-wing extremists, rather than right-wing extremists, had stormed the Capitol.<sup>593</sup>

Both McConnell (who on January 6 had virtually called for Mr. Trump’s impeachment) and Georgia’s Governor Brian Kemp (whom Mr. Trump had tried to pressure into rigging Georgia’s electoral votes and whose resignation over that issue Mr. Trump had urged) now said that they would “absolutely” support Mr. Trump in a 2024 reelection campaign.<sup>594</sup>

By March, the siege of the Capitol appeared to the FBI as having given inspiration to other would-be terrorists, and to a likely proliferation of future attacks on both individuals and institutions. The FBI’s director, Christopher Wray, told the Senate Judiciary Committee with considerable alarm that the threat was “metastasizing.”<sup>595</sup> Indeed, credible threats of violence at the hands of Trump supporters caused the House to cancel its March 4 session – to cease the ordinary functioning of the government – in what would have to be considered a victory for terrorism.<sup>596</sup> In mid-March, at enormous dollar cost, the National Guard was ordered to remain deployed at the Capitol.<sup>597</sup>

So regrettably, whatever career options Mr. Trump now were to choose would likely continue to test the viability of our democratic political system – a system which, after several centuries, had proven to be still in its experimental stage.

But Mr. Trump was no longer the principal problem. Much of the country had been infected with a disease – a cult-like and vengeful hysteria at the bottom, varying susceptibilities to transactional acquiescence in the middle, and all led by a cynical and cowardly crowd of politicians at the top – for which no cure or vaccine had yet appeared. The task of motivating Americans toward rescuing our democracy, our community and a common concept of reality itself remained before us. To CSD, as this Chronology came to an end, that task seemed as urgent as ever.

Additional Election-Related Behavior

Beyond Mr. Trump's efforts to suppress voting and to discredit and overturn the election, as described in this second section of the Addendum, see also the following entries in the first section this Addendum that describe other means through which Mr. Trump and his associates had attempted to corrupt the election:

The Coronavirus Pandemic
(A separate section of Addendum 34)

The anti-democratic behaviors chronicled below fall primarily within categories 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13 and 15 as defined in CSD’s Statement of Principles.

The events surrounding the coronavirus pandemic moved rapidly. CSD’s observations below that were recorded as of a given date may have been superseded on subsequent dates.

Readers may find that many of CSD’s concerns about the Trump administration’s coronavirus response are chronicled repeatedly below. But the repetition is neither casual nor rhetorical. Rather, it reflects the persistence of disturbing phenomena that recurred, that news media reported anew, and that continued to threaten lives through the end of Mr. Trump’s term in office, and beyond.

On October 18, Dr. Scott Atlas tweeted that face masks were useless against the spread of the coronavirus. Twitter quickly took down the posting, as false and dangerous.<sup>598</sup> Atlas – who was a radiologist and conservative pundit, not an immunologist or epidemiologist – had come to be the principal medical voice of Mr. Trump’s coronavirus task force. His widespread denunciation by the mainstream medical community is described in CSD’s preceding Addendum.

At a rally in Prescott, Arizona on October 19, Mr. Trump mocked his electoral opponent Joe Biden for heeding the advice of Dr. Fauci, the esteemed epidemiologist whom Mr. Trump had sidelined from the task force. He said of Fauci, “A lot of our people don’t like him ... he’s a promoter.” During a call with campaign staff and reporters that day, Mr. Trump said that “people are tired of hearing Fauci and all these idiots.” He disparaged Fauci as “a disaster” whose advice, if heeded, would have caused up to 800,000 Americans to have died from the coronavirus. The baseless remarks came a day after Fauci, on “Sixty Minutes,” had criticized Mr. Trump’s disdain for face masks. (Also during the rally, Mr. Trump said of the mainstream media, “You turn on CNN. That’s all they cover. Covid, covid, pandemic. Covid, covid, covid . . . They’re trying to talk people out of voting. People aren’t buying it, CNN, you dumb bastards.” The attendees at the rally were crammed shoulder to shoulder, and almost entirely mask-less.)<sup>599</sup>

On October 20, the CDC announced that “excess deaths” in the U.S. from roughly February through September of 2020 had totaled 299,000 – that is, deaths statistically in excess of those in a typical year. Most of the excess deaths had resulted from Covid-19, but many were from other illnesses that were not timely treated because patients at home feared or couldn’t access hospitals due to the pandemic. At least 220,000 Americans were known to have died of Covid-19 so far in 2020, making that disease the country’s third largest killer. Mr. Trump continued to downplay the slaughter.<sup>600</sup>

As recorded in the first section of this Addendum, on October 22, Politico reported that Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar was openly plotting to oust FDA chief Stephen Hahn for insisting on stringent standards for the approval of any coronavirus vaccine.<sup>601</sup>

Media reported on October 24 that Vice President Mike Pence’s chief of staff Marc Short and several other top aides were infected with the coronavirus. Short was one of the administration’s fiercest skeptics of coronavirus restrictions. Defying cautions raised by health experts, Pence refused to suspend his in-person campaign activities. The White House initially sought to conceal the aides’ infections from the public.<sup>602</sup>

At a rally in Waukesha, Wisconsin on October 24, Mr. Trump pushed the false conspiracy theory that hospitals and doctors were inflating the number of coronavirus cases that they were treating so as to make more money. The American Medical Association and National Nurses United (the country’s largest professional association for nurses) promptly refuted the claim.<sup>603</sup> But Mr. Trump repeated the allegation at a rally in Waterford Township, Michigan on October 30.<sup>604</sup> CSD found astonishing that Mr. Trump had insulted medical professionals rather than praising them for their extraordinary efforts during the pandemic. For many months, they had been working through exhaustion and at risk to their own lives in attempting to save Americans – both those Americans who had tried to protect themselves from the pandemic, and those who, like Mr. Trump, and goaded by him, had rashly, narcissistically, insolently and parasitically thought to out-muscle the pandemic, only to be rescued in the end by the very medical community that they had spurned.

At rallies in Pennsylvania, New Hampshire and North Carolina from October 24 through 26, Mr. Trump falsely claimed that the U.S. was “rounding the turn” in defeating the coronavirus.<sup>605</sup>

On October 27, the White House’s science policy office ranked “ending the Covid-19 pandemic” at the top of the list of Mr. Trump’s first-term accomplishments – even as infections were mounting and hospitals filling.<sup>606</sup>

The Washington Post described on October 28 how the White House had consistently refused to assist in routine efforts at contact tracing relative to the several outbreaks of Covid-19 in and around the White House – thus preventing the evaluation of who might yet spread the disease, and how.<sup>607</sup>

A CNN investigation released on October 29 revealed that 82% of the counties that had held mask-less Trump election rallies between mid-August and late September had experienced surges in diagnosed coronavirus cases four weeks after the rallies, and that those surges were anomalous in comparison to neighboring counties.<sup>608</sup> On October 30, Stanford University researchers reached similar conclusions, determining that the rallies had likely led to more than 30,000 Covid-19 cases and 700 deaths.<sup>609</sup>

Also on October 30, the Justice Department filed papers in support of a lawsuit brought by a veterans’ group seeking to overturn Philadelphia’s coronavirus-based ban on large, scheduled events such as rallies and parades.<sup>610</sup>

At a rally in Montoursville, Pennsylvania on October 31, Mr. Trump said that Democrats “do not believe in science,” because they had called for rigorous testing of vaccines before deployment – vaccines that he said were “ready to go,” and were being held back only in an effort to defeat his bid for re-election. But the vaccines were not ready to go.<sup>611</sup> Claiming that Democrats, not he, disbelieved in science was the latest iteration of Mr. Trump's signature stunt of baselessly projecting his own demerits onto the reputations of his enemies.

Also on October 31, Atlas gave an interview to the RT television station. In that interview he disparaged criticisms of the administration's progress in handling the pandemic. Afterwards he (improbably) claimed not to have known that RT was a creature of the Russian government – a fact that was generally well known.<sup>612</sup>

At a rally in Opa-locka, Florida on November 1, Mr. Trump suggested that he might fire Dr. Fauci after the election. Mr. Trump's supporters rejoined with a chant, "Fire Fauci!"<sup>613</sup> The episode followed Fauci's televised caution on October 30 that the country was poorly prepared for what appeared to be a grim, looming winter with the coronavirus – a warning that the White House had promptly disparaged.<sup>614</sup>

A report issued by Dr. Deborah Birx – one of the respected epidemiologists on Mr. Trump's coronavirus task force whom he had sidelined from visibility for months – flatly contradicted his claim that the U.S. was "rounding the turn." She wrote that the worst phase of the outbreak in the U.S. was approaching, and that mask-less events such as Mr. Trump had been conducting were unacceptable.<sup>615</sup>

At the dawn of Election Day on November 3, the U.S. death toll from the pandemic had come to exceed 230,000.<sup>616</sup> The following day brought the largest single daily diagnosis count, at 104,000, with new infections raging across the Midwest.<sup>617</sup> Judging in part from the closeness of the election, the electorate appeared to be split as to whether and how to deal with the pandemic, with nearly half of it – following Mr. Trump's lead – seeming to want to just wish it away.

On November 5, more than 121,000 coronavirus cases were diagnosed.<sup>618</sup>

Also on November 5, Steven Bannon proposed in a podcast that Dr. Fauci be beheaded and his head hoisted on a pike. Bannon was Mr. Trump's former campaign manager and former strategic advisor, and he was currently under federal indictment for fraud.<sup>619</sup>

On November 6, media reported that Mr. Trump's chief of staff Mark Meadows was infected with the coronavirus. Meadows, who had long advanced Mr. Trump's claims downplaying the need for face masks and social distancing, had sought to conceal his condition from the public. Five others in the White House were currently infected.<sup>620</sup> On November 9, Ben Carson – a physician, and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development – tested positive. Both Meadows and Carson, plus a third top administration official who tested positive, had all attended the election night party at the White House on November 3, which observers speculated might have been a super-spreader event comparable to the celebration of Amy Comey Barrett's nomination to the Supreme Court.<sup>621</sup> That speculation advanced on November 11 as several more attendees – including Corey Lewandowski, Mr. Trump's primary election campaign manager – were diagnosed with the disease.<sup>622</sup>

By November 9, 10 million cases had been recorded in the U.S., and public health experts were projecting that the darkest months of the pandemic were imminent. Over 1,000 daily deaths had been recorded recently.<sup>623</sup>

But also on that date, Pfizer announced what tentatively appeared to have been an experimental vaccine breakthrough. Although the FDA had not yet reviewed and cleared the research, financial markets were heartened. Mr. Trump's son Donald Jr. insinuated that Pfizer had withheld its announcement until after the November 3 election for political reasons, but Pfizer rebutted that charge. On November 11, Mr. Trump repeated it, asserting that the "medical deep state" – the FDA – together with Pfizer had intentionally sabotaged his election by delaying the announcement.<sup>624</sup>

On November 10, Atlas publicly called Dr. Fauci a "political animal" for having turned more sanguine on stemming the pandemic after Pfizer announced the tentative success of its vaccine.<sup>625</sup> (Fauci had served with distinction under six presidents of both political parties, and – unlike Atlas – he was reputed to be scrupulously apolitical.)

On November 11, the CDC reported more than 140,000 Covid-19 cases, a one-day record.<sup>626</sup> By November 12, the figure had risen to 151,000, emergency rooms and intensive care units were overflowing and hospital staff nearing exhaustion in some parts of the country, particularly the Midwest.<sup>627</sup> But since television networks had called the election for Joe Biden on November 7, Mr. Trump had been silent about the pandemic, and about virtually everything else – except for the election, which he continued (by way of Twitter) to falsely rage had been stolen from him.<sup>628</sup> To that date he had also forbade his agencies, including his coronavirus team, from participating in the normal presidential transition process with the president-elect's staff.<sup>629</sup> That is, whether through blind rage, utter callousness or otherwise, he was strangling the transition for the nation's pandemic response – jeopardizing untold thousands of lives – as he stewed and fulminated in his electoral defeat.<sup>630</sup>

On November 13, Mr. Trump emerged from his post-election silence to praise the development of the Pfizer vaccine and to take credit for that development. But he threatened to withhold the vaccine from New York State (where he was at odds with the governor, Andrew Cuomo), and he was silent about the skyrocketing of cases and the suffering of affected patients and their families.<sup>631</sup> He had not attended a coronavirus task force meeting in many months. Now absorbed with convincing the nation and the courts that he had won re-election when he patently had lost, he seemed to some observers to have given up on even pretending to govern, and on protecting American lives.<sup>632</sup>

The Post reported on November 13 that 130 Secret Service agents – 10% of the force – were currently infected by the virus or quarantined due to close contacts with co-workers who had been infected. Many of the cases were believed to have arisen from agents accompanying Mr. Trump on his final campaign rallies. A total of 300 agents had had to isolate or quarantine since March.<sup>633</sup>

As Covid-19 cases soared to meteoric levels, particularly in the Midwest, Atlas tweeted that Michigan residents should “rise up” against the state’s Democratic governor to protest additional public health measures that she had recently imposed.<sup>634</sup>

The development of a second promising coronavirus vaccine, this time by Moderna, was announced.<sup>635</sup>

On November 16, The American Hospital Association, the American Medical Association and the American Nurses Association implored the Trump administration to work closely with the Biden transition team relative to the nation’s Covid-19 response.<sup>636</sup>

On November 18, Atlas encouraged Americans to hold large family Thanksgiving gatherings in their homes, contrary to the advice of nearly all public health officials.<sup>637</sup> The White House called some states’ Thanksgiving restrictions on large gatherings “Orwellian.”<sup>638</sup>

As of November 18, the pandemic had killed over 250,000 Americans – more than ten times the number of motor vehicle deaths in a year.<sup>639</sup>

On November 20, Stanford University’s faculty senate condemned Atlas – a faculty member – for spreading disinformation about Covid-19, stating that his behavior was “anathema to our values and belief that we should use knowledge for good.”<sup>640</sup>

In his annual Thanksgiving proclamation, on November 25 Mr. Trump urged Americans to “gather” – in direct conflict with his own public health officials, who were urging that people gather minimally and cautiously, if at all, as the pandemic roared to record levels.<sup>641</sup> The Post reported that foreign observers were watching the U.S. holiday unfold with “dread and disbelief.”<sup>642</sup>

Also on November 25, the U.S. Supreme Court, in a ruling joined by Mr. Trump’s three appointees, forbade New York State from limiting religious gatherings with a view to slowing the spread of the virus.<sup>643</sup>

On November 26, Thanksgiving Day, Mr. Trump said of President-elect Biden, “Don’t let him take credit for the vaccines because the vaccines were me and I pushed people harder than they’ve ever been pushed before. We are rounding the curve.”<sup>644</sup> In fact he had been fretting for weeks about the president-elect taking credit.<sup>645</sup> During a Fox News interview on November 29, in which Mr. Trump falsely asserted that the U.S. was controlling the coronavirus better than other countries, he also falsely asserted that he personally “came up with vaccines.”<sup>646</sup> As for rounding the curve and controlling the pandemic, U.S. infections and deaths were still soaring, nearing 14 million and 275,000, respectively, by November 30.<sup>647</sup>

On November 30, his reputation in tatters, Atlas resigned. In his resignation letter, he “congratulated” Mr. Trump for his “vision.”<sup>648</sup>

On December 2, Mr. Trump released a video on Facebook in which he ranted for 46 minutes on how the election had been stolen from him. Mr. Trump called it “the most important speech I’ve ever made.”<sup>649</sup> He did not mention the coronavirus pandemic except in connection with what he alleged were mail-in voting abuses. Indeed, he had continued to remain almost totally silent about the pandemic since Election Day, except for boasting about the vaccines that he claimed to have developed, and denouncing any credit for that that President-elect Biden might seek to claim. On the same day, Dr. Redfield, the CDC director, said that the coming January through March threatened to be “the most difficult in the public health history of this nation.”<sup>650</sup>

On December 2 and 3, media reported that the White House was planning 20 indoor holiday parties and the State Department was planning others. One State Department event, hosted by Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, had 900 invitees. The District of Columbia had forbidden indoor gatherings in excess of ten people.<sup>651</sup> On December 15, The Post reported that few people had accepted the State Department invitation, out of coronavirus concerns; and that as a consequence, Pompeo had canceled his own appearance.<sup>652</sup>

Mr. Trump tweeted on December 6 that his attorney Rudy Giuliani had contracted Covid-19. Giuliani had been traveling around the country for weeks – buffoonish and mask-less – as he had mounted unsuccessful legal challenges to Mr. Trump’s electoral loss on baseless grounds of fraud.<sup>653</sup> Giuliani had potentially exposed many hundreds of people to the disease.<sup>654</sup> On December 8, media reported that lawyer Jenna Ellis – Giuliani’s equally buffoonish and mask-less colleague – was also infected, and that White House staff were frightened from having interacted with her at a recent holiday party.<sup>655</sup> As of December 7, 40 people in Mr. Trump’s direct orbit had become infected.<sup>656</sup> (Ellis possibly made it 41.)

On December 8, Mr. Trump ordered that U.S.-produced vaccines be distributed first to Americans before other countries. But the vaccine manufacturers already appeared to have had at least preliminary agreements in place to distribute abroad. Reports now emerged that the Trump administration had earlier foregone the opportunity to purchase sufficient doses to treat Americans, and now seemed to be trying to make up for that error. When asked by a reporter for clarification of the new executive order, the chief scientist for the vaccine program appeared confused on video and said that he knew nothing about it.<sup>657</sup>

Also on December 8, Mr. Trump claimed that 15% of Americans had been infected, thus leading the country toward herd immunity, which he said was “terrific.”<sup>658</sup> (On December 9, over 3,000 Americans died from the disease, which was a record, and consistent with the daily trending.<sup>659</sup>)

On December 8, in Idaho, a virtual county health meeting on whether to impose a local mask mandate was prematurely ended due to physical threats being flung at some of the attendees at their homes.<sup>660</sup>

On December 8, Pompeo hosted 200 people at a holiday party at the State Department. On December 9, Mr. Trump hosted a large holiday party at the White House. Many or most of the guests at both events were mask-less, and un-distanced.<sup>661</sup>

On December 10, Giuliani left the hospital, feeling well, and boasting that as a “celebrity” he had received treatments with scarce drugs unavailable to most people. Mr. Trump, his advisor Chris Christie, and Housing Secretary Ben Carson had also received those treatments. Mr. Trump proposed that many other top officials receive preferential priority as well.<sup>662</sup> (CSD can appreciate the commander-in-chief receiving special treatment with a scarce medical resource; but not necessarily every boot-licking sycophant associated with him, including those who had declined to wear face masks before getting sick.)

On December 11, Mr. Trump's chief of staff Mark Meadows told the FDA's director Steven Hahn that Hahn would be terminated if he didn't approve the pending Pfizer vaccine by the end of the day, according to schedule. Hahn complied.<sup>663</sup>

Also on December 11, the Department of Homeland Security held an indoor holiday party, in likely violation of the District of Columbia's numerical attendance restrictions. There the acting secretary Chad Wolf was photographed mask-less and un-distanced.<sup>664</sup>

As reported in the first section of this Addendum, on December 12, thousands of mostly mask-less Trump supporters rallied in Washington, DC to support Mr. Trump's claims of election fraud. Attendees included conservative church groups, pardoned felon Michael Flynn, and 200 members of the extremist group Proud Boys.<sup>665</sup>

Huffington Post reported on December 17 that eight senators (all Republicans) and 37 House members (26 of them Republicans) had tested positive for Covid-19 since March.<sup>666</sup> The report did not indicate how many of the victims were anti-maskers.

On December 19, The Washington Post published a lengthy analysis, based on dozens of interviews, of how Mr. Trump's response to the pandemic had failed the country. The Post wrote: "The catastrophe began with Trump's initial refusal to take seriously the threat of a once-in-a-century pandemic. But, as officials detailed, it has been compounded over time by a host of damaging presidential traits — his skepticism of science, impatience with health restrictions, prioritization of personal politics over public safety, undisciplined communications, chaotic management style, indulgence of conspiracies, proclivity toward magical thinking, allowance of turf wars and flagrant disregard for the well-being of those around him. ... Trump's repeated downplaying of the virus, coupled with his equivocations about masks, created an opening for reckless behavior that contributed to a significant increase in infections and deaths, experts said." The Post also reported that Mr. Trump had given up trying to fight the pandemic after the November election.<sup>667</sup>

On December 21, the House select committee on coronavirus released new documents revealing the extensive efforts of Mr. Trump's political commissars at the CDC to alter or quash the agency's scientific reports on the pandemic.<sup>668</sup>

Also on December 21, armed, far-right protesters opposed to coronavirus restrictions tried to storm an Oregon legislative session and attack police with bear spray and other chemical agents.<sup>669</sup>

The Post reported on December 24 that although Mr. Trump had been crowing about "his" development of coronavirus vaccines, he and his supporters were undermining their deployment. Specifically, he (unlike numerous other national political figures) had declined to be publicly vaccinated and had not vocally promoted the actual use of the vaccines; and some of his followers (including Powell, one of his most outlandish legal advisors) were spreading conspiracy theories about malevolent features of the vaccine program. Mr. Trump's deployment of conspiracy theory thinking generally was also seen as a retardant for vaccine acceptance.<sup>670</sup> (Months later – on March 1 – media reported that Mr. Trump and his wife had been secretly vaccinated in January.<sup>671</sup>)

On December 30, New Hampshire's Republican governor Chris Sununu canceled his planned January 7 outdoor inauguration ceremony, due to armed protesters having aggressively targeted his family and his home after he had issued a mask-wearing order.<sup>672</sup>

In a December 31 year-end review, The New York Times reported in detail how Mr. Trump's response to the pandemic had been driven entirely by strategies that he believed would benefit himself politically. Among other things, he had refused to endorse mask-wearing for fear that his base would resent it, and he had resisted the testing program because he believed that the infection counts discredited him.<sup>673</sup>

Also on December 31, in a tweeted White House video, Mr. Trump boasted that "everybody's calling to thank me" for the "miracle" of Covid-19 vaccines. (The vaccines had been developed by private companies, and, in the case of Pfizer, without the financial assistance of his administration.) The boast came even as Mr. Trump was being raked daily for the painfully slow distribution of the vaccines, for want of earlier logistical planning by his administration. He meanwhile was silent on the toll of the disease, on the suffering of its victims and their families, on December having been the pandemic's most devastating month yet, on his having delayed relief legislation – and silent even on his own silence about any of this since losing the presidential election in early November.<sup>674</sup> (The death toll, now over 345,000, far exceeded the number of American combat deaths in World War II.<sup>675</sup>)

As though for a final send-off to 2020, hundreds of mask-less and distance-less guests flouted local Florida guidelines by attending a gala New Year's Eve party at Mr. Trump's Mar-a-Lago, paying up to $1,000 per head for the privilege. Attendees included three of Mr. Trump's children and Giuliani. (Mr. Trump himself had abruptly changed his plans to attend and had instead flown to Washington.) Photographic accounts of the event featured cleavage, wealth and material excess, at a time of continuing national economic and medical crisis.<sup>676</sup> For CSD, in the visual, the connection between Mr. Trump and the hundreds of millions of Americans in the homeland that for five years he had been purporting to champion was unclear. Possibly that was why he had flown to Washington.

On January 2, Mr. Trump tweeted that the CDC's count of coronavirus casualties was greatly exaggerated. He was quickly contradicted by both Dr. Fauci and Surgeon General Jerome Adams.<sup>677</sup> Mr. Trump responded by Twitter: "Something how Dr. Fauci is revered by the LameStream Media as such a great professional, having done, they say, such an incredible job, yet he works for me and the Trump Administration, and I am in no way given any credit for my work. Gee, could this just be more Fake News?"<sup>678</sup>

On January 6, the day of the storming of the Capitol by a mob that Mr. Trump had incited, some 3,800 Americans died from Covid-19, for a cumulative total of 360,000. Mr. Trump was silent about that.

On January 8, the U.S. surpassed 300,000 daily Covid-19 cases.<sup>679</sup>

On January 11, a Democratic congresswoman announced that she had contracted Covid-19, likely during the lockdown during the siege of the Capitol when she was stranded with nine Republican House members who had refused to wear masks.<sup>680</sup> On January 12, two additional House Democrats announced the same.<sup>681</sup>

Some 4327 Americans died from Covid-19 on January 12, a new record.<sup>682</sup>

As of February 8, The Times had identified 66 sitting members of Congress who had contracted Covid-19, and when they contracted it. More than twice as many Republicans as Democrats had been infected.<sup>683</sup>

An NPR-Marist poll released on March 11 revealed that almost half of Trump voters and almost half of Republican males did not wish to be vaccinated – the largest anti-vax sentiments of any demographic group that was polled.<sup>684</sup> Much of the anti-vax sentiment appeared to turn on the belief that whether to get vaccinated was a matter of liberty, and of personal choice. For CSD, that was incomprehensible: as though it was or should be acceptable, and a matter of personal choice, to not drive on the right side of the road to avoid mayhem.

By the last day of Mr. Trump's presidency, 23,884,299 Americans had contracted Covid-19,<sup>685</sup> and 405,212 had died.<sup>686</sup> As of the date of this Addendum, 530,693 had died.

Many observers believed that Mr. Trump's dithering, denial and obstructionism were responsible for a large portion of those deaths.<sup>687</sup>
